This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google™ books

https://books.google.com

Digitized by Google

PERIODICAL COLLECTION

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PUNCH

LONDON:

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 85, FLEET STREET.

Digitized by Google

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA LIBRARY

BRADBURY, AGNEW & CO. LD., PRINTERS,
LONDON AND TONBRIDGE.

Digitized by Google

THE New Year found PUNCH on his way to India, to join the Prince incog. He halted en route to give a word of counsel to his friend CAVE at Cairo.

"Shall PUNCH come within sight of the Pyramids, and not climb the biggest? On my eyes be it!" cried the KHEDIVE, as he lighted his last cigarette after a snug dinner given to his Great Guest and his new Finance Commissioner—whom he persists in calling "Adullam," because to him, as to that Cave of old, resort those who are in debt and difficulty and discontent.

Straightway an escort of Pashas and Beys, Agas and Effendees, an army of Arabs—horse and man—dragomen and khavasses, cooks and chiboukjees and cafeedjees—was at MR. PUNCH's orders. But with a majestic wave of the hand, at once gracious and unmistakeable, that potentate dismissed the backsheesh-breathing brood.

"When PUNCH visits a poor country, 'tis to make it richer not poorer; and when PUNCH meets a Pyramid, it must be alone!"

So he went, and gazed, and climbed—with no escort of clamorous touts or howling donkey-drivers to mar the solemnity of that great encounter between the mightiest of mirth-makers and the most majestic of monuments.

Unaided, except by the tail of Toby, he climbed the highest of those sepulchral giants, and stood, at last, on the platform that forms its apex—awe-struck, awe-striking, and—save for his faithful Toby, alone!

Morning had not yet broken. The sun was just peeping above the eastern horizon, little expecting on what a guest his eye would fall. Above PUNCH's head still twinkled the stars; below him gleamed the Desert sands through the mist of Nile.

But PUNCH questioned not the Stars of the Future they will not reveal; nor the Sands of the Past they hold buried. His eye followed the opalescent winding of the New Cut—not that which binds the transpontine Roads of Waterloo and Blackfriars, but that which, interpontine, links the roadsteads of Alexandria and Suez—the Canal which LORD PALMERSTON did his best to burke, and M. LESSEPS his better, to plan, preach up, finance, and finish—the Canal which swallowed a great many thousands of Egyptian fellahs' lives, and more thousands of European fellows' capital—the Canal which drained the KHEDIVE's spare cash, and opened a new road to India,—the Canal of Good Hope, vice the Cape of ditto superseded.

"And that," soliloquised PUNCH, "is the Sewer of Sewers"—("Suez," barked TOBY, correctively)—"into which England is about to throw Four Millions of her money—unless Parliament thinks better of it, that is,—which is quite possible!"

"And is Four Millions, or four times four, a penny too much for BRITANNIA to pay for her Indian door-key?" Such was the question that vibrated on PUNCH's tympanum in a thin and thrilling voice, at once foreign and familiar, strangely blending melodious music, cynical mockery, and muffled meaning.

Upon that platform, from which Sixty-Eight Volumes of PUNCH, arm-in-arm with Forty Centuries of Time, were now contemplating the world at their feet, save MR. PUNCH himself, was none of articulate-speaking mortals who could have put the question. Was it PUNCH's thought made audible in the stillness of that weird solitude? Was it the Mummy of

JUN 1934 Allen

315843

Digitized by Google

KING CHEOPS—still sarcophagused in the labyrinthine recesses of the star-y-pointing Pyramid, to mock generations of Egyptologists, past, present, and to come—that had all at once found a tongue within his desiccated jaws? Was it TOBY, suddenly revealed as Anubis, his ancestral Egyptian god, with his bark translated by the genius loci into intelligible oracle?

"Own the coup a master-stroke, worthy of our great forefather MOSES, who first taught Jews the spoiling of Egyptians." They were the same accents, but this time with a dry chuckle making a running bass to their music. And then PUNCH knew it was the voice of the Great Asian Mystery—the utterance of the riddling oracle of Semitic wisdom—the speech of the inscrutable, immutable, unfathomable SPHINX. Yes, they were the great granite lips of the Colossal Head—which reared its impassive brow and stony eye-balls from the waves of the sand-sea far below—that sent forth that mysterious music. And PUNCH braced himself for the encounter; for he knew that the Inexhaustible Fountain of Double Acrostics was about to be let loose upon him, and that, like ŒDIPUS, he must answer aright, or die. But asking questions, especially of the SPHINX, is easier than answering them; so PUNCH determined to put in his cross-fire of interrogatories, before the Great Fountain-head of Mystery could flash forth its riddle.

"You call MOSES your great forefather?"

"Is not the SPHINX of the seed of the SEPHARDIM?"

"Of what tribe?"

"Of the tribe of BENJAMIN."

"Then you are not Egyptian?"

"Neither of the Copts, nor the Fellaheen, nor the Hyksos. I am a Hebrew of the Hebrews—and never felt so proud of my blood as now."

"But how came you to be left behind when the rest of your race emigrated from the Land of Goshen?"

"The tribes had a great deal of money out on good security, and I stayed to look after it. Do you suppose our dealings with Pharaoh's people began and ended with the unredeemed pledges we carried across the Red Sea?"

Here the granite lips curled contemptuously, and a sudden darkness—it might have been the shadow of a cloud, but it had all the effect of a wink—passed across one of the stony eyeballs.

"But this purchase of the KHEDIVE'S Canal Shares?"

"'What is the best investment BRITANNIA can make of Four Millions?' Such was the riddle propounded to LORD DERBY—by me—through one of our people. Of course he couldn't answer it—when was ever Foreign Secretary of English Blood that could? But there was one set over him—a son of my seed—my BENJAMIN. He sent the answer by return of post; and another son of my people, though of the scorned ASHKENAZIM, stood, with the millions ready to draw on at sight. And so the Great Riddle of the SPHINX was answered—and the SPHINX can smile to see that her seed is not degenerate,—that her sons still know, and teach by example, that there are roads which it may be worth wise men's while to pave with gold——"

"And with what is more precious even than gold, O SPHINX!" shouted PUNCH. "Here goes for the first stone of that inestimable pavement!" And with a majestic motion he hurled down to the Desert sands below, from which straightway burst forth a fountain of laughing waters—

Volume Sixty-Nine.

Digitized by Google

Introduction.

VOLUME LXIX.——JULY TO DECEMBER, 1875.

THE DISRAELI CABINET.—1875.

First Lord of the Treasury	Right Hon. B. Disraeli (now Earl of Beaconsfield).
Lord Chancellor	Lord Cairns.
Chancellor of the Exchequer	Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Bart.
Lord President of the Council	Duke of Richmond (now Duke of Richmond and Gordon), K.G.
Lord Privy Seal	Earl of Malmesbury, G.C.B.
Home Office	Right Hon. R. A. Cross.
Foreign Office	Earl of Derby.
Colonial Office	Earl of Carnarvon.
War Secretary	Right Hon. Gathorne Hardy.
Indian Secretary	Marquis of Salisbury.
Admiralty	Right Hon. G. Ward Hunt.
Postmaster-General	Lord John Manners.

POLITICAL SUMMARY.

PAGE PAGE

AMONGST the Parliamentary occurrences which fall within the half year now under review, perhaps the most prominent was the announcement by Mr. Disraeli of the intention of the Government to abandon the Merchant Shipping Bill in favour of the Agricultural Holdings Bill—it not being thought practicable to push both measures through Parliament before the Session closed. Mr. Plimsoll (M.P. for Derby), seeing once more the imminent frustration of his hope of remedying a great wrong—the loss of life at sea through the employment of unseaworthy ships—to the righting of which he had devoted himself with heart and soul for several years past, allowed his generous indignation to overcome his self-control, and was thereby led into a defiance of the rules of the House. Afterwards Mr. Plimsoll apologised for all such terms and expressions as were in transgression of Parliamentary usage, but without withdrawing any statement of facts. One good result arose out of these scenes. A temporary Bill was prepared and brought forward by the President of the Board of Trade. Mr. Plimsoll made known his wish that his own Merchant Shipping Bill should give way to the Government Measure, and, before the Session ended, that piece of temporary legislation, amended and improved in its progress through the Commons, so that finally it "reflected more of the spirit of the Member for Derby than of the Government Bill," became Law.

Accidents to our Navy form the frequent subject of comment and illustration in the ensuing pages. Of these the most serious happened on the First of September. On that day, while the Channel Fleet was cruising off the Coast of Wicklow, two of its large ironclad Men-of-war, the Vanguard and Iron Duke, came into collision in a fog, when the Vanguard was sunk, but happily without loss of life. The Court-Martial which was held on the Captain and Officers of the Vanguard for the loss of their ship, attributed the disaster mainly to the high rate of speed at which the squadron was proceeding during the fog—thereby implying a censure of Vice-Admiral Tarleton, who was in command of the Fleet—dismissed Captain Dawkins from his ship for not having taken the right steps to save the vessel, and reprimanded the other Superior Officers. This finding of the Court was partially reversed by the Lords of the Admiralty, who, in an official minute, signified their opinion that the accident was not owing to an undue rate of speed, and that the Admiral was not to blame on that point. They approved of the sentence passed on the Captain and other Officers of the Vanguard, and, in addition, dismissed from the Iron Duke the Officer of the Watch at the time of the collision. This difference of opinion did not tend to increase public confidence in the management of the Navy.

On the last day of July, a few days before Parliament rose for the Recess, the Admiralty issued "Instructions with reference to the question how far Officers in command of Her Majesty's ships are justified in receiving on board Fugitive Slaves, who, escaping from their Masters, may claim the protection of the British Flag." This was the notorious Fugitive Slave Circular, "an ill-advised document"—to quote the Annual Summary of the Times—"for which the Foreign Office was, perhaps, really responsible. Local disputes and embarrassments had arisen in some foreign ports where the presence of English ships of war offered temptations of escape to Slaves. . . . It was probably expedient to furnish Naval Officers with instructions. . . . but there was no occasion for publicity, nor is it easy to comprehend the motives which induced some indiscreet functionary of the Admiralty or the Foreign Office to provoke a storm of indignation by the issue of an elaborate Circular on Fugitive Slaves. . . . Commanders of the Queen's ships were directed not only to refuse an asylum to Slaves in foreign waters, but to surrender, on their return to port, fugitives who might have come on board on the high seas. The Circular was instantly denounced on independent grounds by two classes of objectors who might, jointly or separately, be considered to include the whole community. It was apparently implied in the Circular that an English Man-of-war was subject to foreign jurisdiction; and the national antipathy to Slavery was flagrantly disregarded."

Digitized by Google

PAGE

Public indignation had its effect. The Government found it necessary first to suspend this unpopular Circular, then to withdraw it, and, finally, at the end of the year, to issue amended instructions of a more satisfactory character.

An insurrection, which broke out in July, in the province of Herzegovina, in European Turkey, adjoining Servia, Montenegro, Bosnia, and on the west Austrian Dalmatia, was the beginning of troubles which led to an act of quasi-bankruptcy on the part of Turkey, and to the revival of the portentous Eastern Question. Local grievances were the origin of the rebellion. The provocation was given by the oppressive conduct of the Mahomedan landowners, following on a deficient harvest. The struggle caused a drain on the Turkish Exchequer (already impoverished) so exhausting, that a collapse of the Empire seemed imminent, to the grave danger of the peace of Europe. But the Great Powers showed themselves sincerely desirous to avert such a perilous crisis, and agreed upon a course of Diplomatic Action, which it was hoped would result in the pacification of the Insurgent districts, still at the close of the year in active revolt.

"To the English Public the chief immediate inconvenience caused by the wretched state into which the affairs of Turkey had fallen, in consequence of the Herzegovinian Insurrection, and her generally disorganised condition, both provincial and central, was her decision, announced early in October, to pay during the next five years half only of the Dividend on her State Debt, by far the largest portion of which was in the books of British Bondholders."—Annual Register. Bonds bearing five per cent. interest were to be given for the other moiety of the Dividend.

Towards the end of November much surprise and interest were aroused by an announcement that the British Government, subject to the approval of Parliament, had bought from the KHEDIVE OF EGYPT, for the sum of £4,000,000, all his shares in the Suez Canal, amounting to about nine-twentieths, or approaching one-half of the entire number. The KHEDIVE had attempted to sell his Shares to a French Financial Company, and on the failure of this negotiation, his offer to transfer them to our Government was immediately accepted.

NOTES.

1 The Common Complaint.—For the case of the GUICOWAR OF BARODA, see "Introduction" to last volume. BARING is the family name of the EARL OF NORTHBROOK, the Viceroy of India. The MARQUIS OF SALISBURY was Secretary of State for India

7 A "Blaze of Triumph!!" (Cartoon).—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 2 (Monday)—"MR. CROSS's Employers and Workmen Bill."

14 Words after Walt Whitman [American Poet].—REV. H. W. BEECHER, the American popular preacher, had been charged by MR. TILTON with criminality with MRS. TILTON. A committee of MR. BEECHER'S congregation reported that the charge was without any foundation, but meanwhile MR. TILTON commenced a civil suit against MR. BEECHER.

15 "Rotten Row on the Embankment."—Refers to the proposed construction of a "Ride" for equestrians on the Thames Embankment.

17 Church Preservation (Cartoon).—See "JOHN'S answer to WILLIAM'S question," p. 15.

21 A City Chair (of Ease).—The reference is to a vacancy in one of the Professorships at Gresham College in the City, the duties of which were not laborious.

22 Canada's Luck.—The EARL OF DUFFERIN was at this time Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada.

26 "Masterly Inactivity."—The progress of Russia in Central Asia was regarded by some with suspicion and alarm. "Masterly inactivity" was a phrase employed to describe LORD LAWRENCE'S policy, when Governor-General of India.

27 Nulli Secundus.—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 24 (Tuesday).—"MR. WHALLEY moved."

29 Position Optional (Cartoon).—The line of action taken both by the Government and the Opposition this Session was open to the charge of being of the "take it easy" character. (Every year at Wimbledon there is a rifle match between the Lords and Commons.)

34 To Let.—SIGNOR SALVINI, the Italian tragic actor, had performed this year at Drury Lane as Othello with marked success.

34 Crede Byron [the Byron Family Motto.]
42 The Byron Statue.
This month (July) a public meeting was held in London (MR. DISRAELI in the Chair), to promote the erection of a statue of LORD BYRON.

42 Sors Shakspeariana.—A. and W. COLLIE, who suspended payment this summer with enormous liabilities, were afterwards brought up at Guildhall on a charge of obtaining large sums of money from the London and Westminster Bank on false pretences. While the case was under investigation, A. COLLIE absconded.

Digitized by Google

PAGE

43 Ireland's Victory.—Ireland was the winner this year in the International Rifle Competition at Wimbledon.

43 Sir R. Phillimore's Judgment. 48 Neck or Nothing. JENKINS v. COOK, was an ecclesiastical suit in the Arches Courts. The plaintiff had been refused the Communion by the defendant, his parish clergyman, on the ground of his disbelief in the personality of the Devil, &c.

44 A Plea for Plimsoll.—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 36 (Thursday)—"MR. DISRAELI rose to announce."

45 Appeal for a Lincolnshire Worthy.—See "Notes" to Vol. 67, p. 181. REV. J. W. KING, whose turf name was "MR. LAUNDE," had since died. Holy Friar was one of his horses.

49 "Doing Penance" (Cartoon). 53 On a Proposed Abandonment. See "Essence of Parliament," p. 36 (Thursday)—"MR. DISRAELI rose to announce;" and p. 47, (Thursday)—"A perceptible marine flavour."

51 A City Mayor's Nest.—There had been an International Banquet, given by the LORD MAYOR, at Guildhall.

59 Pickpockets in the City (Cartoon).—Honduras and other South American Securities had proved a most unfortunate speculation to credulous investors. The Foreign Loans Committee in their Report expressed strong opinions on the unsoundness and deceptiveness of the system adopted in launching the Loans, especially in the creation of fictitious markets on the Stock Exchange.

61 The Bakerian Lecture.—At the recent Croydon Assizes, COLONEL BAKER had been tried before MR. JUSTICE BRETT and convicted of an assault on a young lady in a railway carriage.

81 "Save Me from My Friends!" (Cartoon).—This month (August) the centenary of DANIEL O'CONNELL's birth was celebrated in Ireland. The antagonism between the Ultramontane and Nationalist parties showed itself in Dublin in disorderly proceedings both at the outdoor meeting and at the evening banquet.

86 What the Prince found at Sheffield.—The PRINCE and PRINCESS OF WALES had been visiting Sheffield on the occasion of the opening of a Public Park, the gift of the Mayor (MR. FIRTH) to the town.

88 Motto for Major Dickson.—Refers to a recent election in which MR. AHMED KENEALY (a son of DR. KENEALY) had been an unsuccessful candidate.

91 The Channel Question Solved (Cartoon). 93 Webb Across the Water. CAPTAIN WEBB had swum across the Channel (from Dover to Calais) in 21¾ hours.

95 The Last of the Thames Valley Elephants.—Fossil remains of elephants had been discovered in the Thames Valley.

96 A Rotten Pair.—See these "Notes," p. 42.

101 Permissive Recreation (Cartoon).—The Annual Register describes the Government legislation of the Session as generally "tentative, permissive, not boldly decisive either in prohibition or enactment, in fact, leaving things very much as they were as to all practical results." Hughenden is MR. DISRAELI's country seat in Buckinghamshire, where he was at this time spending his vacation.

PAGE

The Model Man-of-War. Loss and Gain (Cartoon). Who's to Blame? (Cartoon). For the loss of the Vanguard, see "Introduction." 105 111 121

Rarae Natantes.—CAPTAIN WEBB'S great swimming exploit (see pp. 91, 93) had produced many imitations. MISSES BECKWITH and PARKER were both very expert performers in the water. 115

Addendum to "Yankee Doodle."—This refers to MCCLOSKEY, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of New York, the first American Cardinal. He was advanced to that dignity by Pope PIUS IX. 127

In-Solent Behaviour.—Refers to a distressing accident in the Solent—a collision between the QUEEN'S yacht and a private yacht, the Mistletoe, which happened while Her Majesty was crossing from Osborne to Gosport, on her way to Scotland. The Mistletoe was sunk and three lives were lost. Private vessels had been in the practice of approaching too near the Royal Yacht from motives of loyalty or curiosity. 128

The Flag of Freedom (Cartoon). Ward Hunt to his Friend Punch. For the Fugitive Slave Circular, see "Introtion." 131 147

Punch on the Bridge. A Nasty Dose. Refer to plans for widening and as some thought, spoiling, London Bridge. The eminent civil engineer, MR. GREGORY, had been consulted by the Court of Common Council on the subject. 134 143

A Growl from Jack Frost.—Artificial skating rinks were at this time the rage, the dominant fashionable mania. 144

Ravens on the "Railway Jubilee."—See "A Giant's Jubilee," p. 140, and, "The Golden Wedding" (Cartoon), p. 141. 144

Flourish Felstead.—See "Generosity and Grammar School," p. 128. 146

"Bon Voyage!" (Cartoon).—On the 11th of this month (October), the PRINCE OF WALES quitted England on his journey to India. 153

General Shut-up.—See "Another Glory Going," p. 151 161

A Turkish Bath (Cartoon).—For the financial affairs of Turkey, see "Introduction." 165

To the Serapis.—The Serapis was the steamer which conveyed the PRINCE OF WALES from Brindisi to India. 167

Cruel but Compendious Criticism.—One of MR. IRVING'S earliest and greatest successes was in a piece called The Bells. 169

Neptune's Warning (Cartoon).—Illustrates recent disasters of our Ironclads. 177

The New Alderman.—MR. NOTTAGE, of the London Stereoscopic Company, and SIR JOHN BENNETT, the well-known clock and watch maker in Cheapside were rival candidates for the vacant Aldermanship of the Cordwainer Ward in the City of London. MR. NOTTAGE was elected. 181

Our Compliments to the Chasseurs d'Afrique.—A dinner had been given at the Alexandra Palace to the survivors of the heroic "Charge of the Light Brigade," at Balaklava in the Crimean War, on the twenty-first anniversary of that battle. BARON DE GRANCEY of the Chasseurs d'Afrique spoke to the toast of "Our Gallant Allies." A 185 trophy was erected in the Palace, and relics of the engagement were exhibited.

Digitized by Google

PAGE

187 Black Sheep in the City (Cartoon).—The diplomatic representatives in this country of the South American States exposed by the Report of the Foreign Loans Committee, were not invited this year, as usual, to the Guildhall Banquet on Lord Mayor's Day. An invitation was sent to defaulting Turkey (see "Introduction"), but the Turkish Ambassador was not present at the dinner.

189 L'Affaire Darnley.
192 Effects of the Wet Weather. } See "Gentlemen—LORD DARNLEY!" p. 180.

191 Charge of the Light Brigade.
204 Suggested Epitaph. } See these "Notes," p. 185.

199 Settled at Last! (Cartoon).—See "The Wedding of Law and Equity," p. 198. The new High Court of Judicature was opened in Westminster Hall on the 2nd of this month (November).

201 An Omission Supplied.—The reference is to the birth of another Princess, the second child of the DUKE and DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

204 Change of Name.—See "Introduction"—the Vanguard.

209 Disinterested Advisers (Cartoon).—See "Introduction"—Turkey.

213 Change of Name.—Great dissatisfaction was felt by shareholders at the management of the Emma Silver Mine Company, and new Directors had been chosen in the room of the old ones who resigned.

217 The New Judge-Advocate.—MR. G. CAVENDISH BENTINCK had been appointed Judge-Advocate General by MR. DISRAELI.

217 Alter et Idem.—The spires and towers of Oxford—a city very liable to floods—are conspicuous from whatever point it is viewed. SPIERS AND POND are well-known refreshment contractors.

225 My Awful Dad.—The title of a new and successful piece in which CHARLES MATHEWS played the principal part. There were disastrous floods this summer and autumn.

226 Town and Gown.—Refers to some "Town and Gown" disturbances at Cambridge. The Mayor's name was DEATH.

228 Money's Worth for the Money.
238 To a Host of Correspondents.
245 "Mosé in Egitto!!!" (Cartoon). } For Suez Canal, see "Introduction."

230 The St. Leonard's Will Case.—The Will of that great lawyer, LORD ST. LEONARDS (lately deceased), could not be found at his death, although it was well-known that he had prepared one of an elaborate character. The case came before the Court of Probate, and the Judge decided in favour of the acceptance of the provisions of the missing Will as described in evidence by the HON. MISS SUGDEN, the testator's daughter.

PAGE

Fashionable Fixtures for 1876.
A Dream of Unfair Women. } See "Criminal Court Costume," p. 227. 230 252

"Throw Him Over!" (Cartoon).—The man at the wheel is (the late) MR. WARD HUNT, at this time First Lord of the Admiralty. His colleagues are indicated on the left-hand side. The Vanguard and other disasters (see "Introduction") had created a feeling in the minds of many persons that the control of the Navy should be in different hands. 233

What the Cardinal did at Oxford.—CARDINAL MANNING had lately been at Oxford to open a new Roman Catholic church. In early life, before his secession from the Church of England, he was a distinguished member of the University. 236

A Good Move.
Our Krieg's-Spiel (Cartoon). } A scheme for the mobilisation of the army had recently been put forth by the War Office. It was designed to supply deficiencies in the system originated by MR. CARDWELL when Secretary for War. Mobilisation has been defined as "a set of regulations intended to provide for the conversion of the military material of the country into an army as soon as ever it may be required for action." In the Cartoon the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, as Commander-in-Chief, and MR. GATHORNE HARDY, as Secretary for War, are explaining the new scheme to BRITANNIA. 251 257

Christmas à la Mode (Cartoon).—The rage for Rinks for artificial skating (concrete floors for wheel-skates) has already been noticed, see p. 144. 267

A Fytte of Hackney Downs.—A meeting had been held on these Downs to protest against a partial enclosure. The palings which surrounded this inclosure were pulled down by some of those who were present. 271

A Revival.—Refers to the purchase of Suez Canal Shares by England (see "Introduction"), and the view taken of the transaction in Russia. 273

Not to be Wondered At.—See these "Notes," p. 128. 274

The New Year's Look-out (Cartoon).—For the Eastern Question, see "Introduction." 279

Motto, &c.—The RIGHT HON. STEPHEN CAVE, Paymaster-General, had gone from this country on a special mission to Egypt, for the purpose of re-organising its Finance. 284

A Useful Manufacture (Cartoon).—On the 22nd of December, the Goliath—a training ship for poor London street boys—was destroyed by fire in the Thames, off Grays, on the Essex shore. The boys behaved admirably well, and displayed great discipline. 289

Digitized by Google

WHAT IT MAY—BUT LET'S HOPE IT WON'T—COME TO!

(Dedicated, with Mr. Punch's compliments, to the "United Artillerists.")

HOUSE OF COMMONS. JUNE —TH, 187—?

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at four o'clock.

MAJOR SMITH then rose to propose his Motion (of which he had given notice during the previous sitting), that "this Honourable House do immediately form itself into a Committee to consider the present condition of the Woolwich guns." The Honourable and Gallant Member said that it was most advisable that the House should examine the rival plans submitted by those who were in favour of breech-loading, on the one hand, and——

An Honourable Member apologised for interrupting his honourable and gallant friend, but he wished to ask a question of the SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR. ("Hear, hear!") Was it true that the enemy had landed on the previous evening at Dover, as reported in the morning papers? (Cheers.)

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR was understood to request the Honourable Member to give notice of his question in the customary manner.

MAJOR SMITH continued his speech. He said that it was most important that every one should understand the principle of breech-loading artillery.

Another Honourable Member apologised for interrupting the Honourable and Gallant Member, but he wished to ask the HOME SECRETARY a question of some importance. ("Hear, hear!") Was it true that the enemy had that morning occupied Dorking, as reported in the second edition of the Times? (Cheers.)

The HOME SECRETARY was understood to say that he considered that no attention should be paid to reports published in the press.

MAJOR SMITH continued his speech. He said that muzzle-loading had been generally adopted in the Service until attention had been called to the many defects of that system. The matter had often been ventilated in that House. ("Hear, hear!") Hon. Members would remember that the matter had consequently been allowed to remain in statu quo for some time.

A third Honourable Member apologised for interrupting the Honourable and Gallant Member, but he wished to put a question to the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER. ("Hear, hear!") Was there any truth in the report (current in the City) that the enemy had just taken the Bank of England? (Cheers.)

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER was understood to admit that a rumour to that effect had certainly reached the Treasury. The Right Honourable Gentleman begged to add, however, that the report required official confirmation.

MAJOR SMITH continued his speech. He said it was most desirable that this great country (the most powerful in the world) should be prepared to meet any emergency.

At this point, a General of the enemy (who had just entered the House) called the attention of the SPEAKER to the fact that there were not forty Members present.

House Counted Out at twenty minutes past four o'clock.

THE COMMON COMPLAINT.

WESTMINSTER'S Duke and Stratford's FLOWER,*
Gagged steed who cannot speak his pains,
Baroda's GUICOWAR, hurled from power,
One protest urge—'gainst "Bearing-Reins."

Nay, more, when NORTHBROOK'S self finds hard
To brook the chafe of SALISBURY'S chains,
He too, "hoised with his own petard,"
Like those four, kicks at "Bearing-Reins."†

* See this gentleman's unanswerable pamphlet, Bits and Bearing-Reins, now in a Third Edition. Its Author has a quadruple title to Mr. Punch's respect, as the brewer of some of the best beer, and one of the best judges, best riders, and best masters of a horse in England.

† Some would spell the word "Baring."

Last Month's Music.

MR. MECHI, in the Times, tells the Farmers good tidings, which may also be pleasant to SIR MICHAEL COSTA and SIGNOR VIANESI. It has, he says, proved that—

"A dripping June brings all things in tune."

Except, MR. MECHI—of course, except the organ-grinders.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

VEXED, apparently by something in the Public Health Bill (Lords, Monday, June 28), the DUKE OF SOMERSET, who, sober not to say saturnine as he seems, is fond—perhaps by that influence of a name, to which the Greeks ascribed so much—of going head over heels into unexpected attitudes, treated the Government to a "jobation" for harassing legislation in their Artisans' Dwellings, Agricultural Holdings, and Rivers Pollution Bills.

The Duke seems to forget that all these Bills, however they might have been used to harass in days gone by, have had their poison-fangs of compulsion extracted by the cunning hand of the snake-charmer, BEN-DIZZY.

LORD SALISBURY administered some retaliatory pepper, in effect recommending his ducal critic to see more and to say less.

(Commons.) MR. BOURKE promptly and curtly burked MR. BUTLER-JOHNSTONE'S curiosity about Greece. The Government has no information to give on the very disagreeable subject; but has no reason to believe that Greece is more a-broil, or a-bubble, or a-stew, or a-fret—however the normal condition of Greece may best be described—than usual.

MR. CROSS'S Employers and Workmen Bill read a Second Time, to a general chorus of commendation. Never did performer in the Legislative "ground and lofty line" make his bow amid a more brilliant blaze of triumph.

Appreciating the difficulty of getting the Lamb of Labour and the Lion of Capital—or should the brutes and attributes be counter-changed?—to lie down together, and honouring good intentions—particularly when they escape consignment to the paving department "down-stairs,"—Punch is proud to present MR. CROSS his compliments, with a Cartoon.

As artful composers enhance their harmonies by a subtle dash of discord, any risk of mawkishness in this chorus of "Bravo CROSS!" was obviated by the harsh discords and unpleasing sharps of LORD ROBERT MONTAGU, who denounced MR. CROSS as "a captive to the cloven hoof of Capital," bent on beating down wages, and making a slave of the Working-man; defended "rattening" and "picketting," as mere Working-men's counterparts of distraint and Parliamentary "whipping;" and, generally, dragged his coat through the fair in a spirited, though decidedly exaggerated, imitation of the wild Irish boy, challenging such unanimity of disavowal as the House of Commons seldom concedes to even the most full-blown folly.

MR. CROSS really deserves such great credit that Punch is not nice to mark what the House may have given him over and above strict measure.

MESSRS. BURT and MACDONALD, Working-men Members, energetically disclaimed agreement with LORD ROBERT MONTAGUE, and admitted the honest intent, fairness, and general merits of the HOME SECRETARY'S Bill:—

Then,

Irrepressible HUBBARD
The House took to snub hard,
Sinking Fund when he moved to postpone:
Not a seconder there
Could he get, so, sans pair,
MISTER HUBBARD was snuffed out alone!

Tuesday (Lords).—Half-a-dozen Bills were rattled through Committee with a Chifney rush before their Lordships adjourned at twenty-five minutes to six.

(Commons). At two, MR. LOWE—quantum mutatus ab illo, LOWE—brought forward the grievances of the Competition-Wallahs, who "in the cold North (West)'s unhallowed shade" languish under slow promotion and small salaries, while more favoured servants, civil and military, who had never passed the al Sirat of competition, fly over their heads on wings of favour, or from the spring-board of the backstairs. He—even he—the BOB LOWE, whom we knew with such a grim scorn of grievances and grievance-mongers, and such a close grip on JOHN BULL'S purse-strings—suggested pecuniary compensation—what it is to be out of office!—but ended by asking for a Select Committee. The India Office admits there is a grievance, and will urge it on the Indian Government. On this assurance the Right Honourable ROBERT LOWE retired from his unwonted position, and withdrew his Motion and his demand.

LORD ELCHO asked MR. HARDY whether it was the fact that of seven thousand Army Reserve men invited to attend the Summer

Digitized by Google

"MANNERS."

Parlour Maid (to Cook). "I KNOWED THAT MR. SMITH WASN'T NO GENTLEMAN! WHICH HE NEVER RAISED HIS 'AT TO ME WHEN I LET 'IM OUT AT THE 'ALL DOOR JUST NOW!!"

Drills, only twenty had sent an answer. MR. HARDY indignantly denied it. Answers had been received from 114 out of fewer, he was certain, than 7000 to whom summons had been sent, though he couldn't exactly say how many had been asked. But it is pretty clear that—many or few—our paper-reserve, in the field non est inventus. "Mock Reserves," the cynic may say, "suit mock Manœuvres."

In the evening a Count-Out, and no business done.

Wednesday.—An Irish morning's work on MR. BUTT'S Bill for Establishing Irish County Boards.

SIR M. H. BEACH gave a sketch of what such Boards, in the Government opinion, ought to be, and promised a Bill, but not for this Session. After which promise, MR. BUTT, taking a division, was beaten by 182 to 125—many English Liberals being glad to show their approval of a reasonable measure out of that Butt.

Thursday (Lords).—Committee on the Rivers Pollution Bill, now very scientifically relieved of its back-bone:—

"The times have been
That when the brains were out the 'Bill' would die,
And there an end; but now they rise again,
Nerveless and marrowless, their 'musts' turned 'mays,'
To keep us on our stools."

(Commons.) MR. HARDY spoke a good word—not before it was wanted, and not more, Punch quite believes, than is due—on behalf of those armed Apollos of the Knightsbridge Barracks who may be said to make the "six-foot way" over the hearts of the British nursemaid of the Metropolis. Their conduct, MR. HARDY says, is unexceptionable; their officers strict; their houses of call sans reproche. It is not the military—the mounted military, at least—that keep up the blackguard haunts of the neighbourhood. So let our gallant Life and Horse Guardsman—red or blue—ride on, stainless as his own pipe-clayed buckskins in their first hour of wear—

"Sotto l'usbergo dell sentirsi puro."

Or (for the benefit of non-readers of DANTE in the original)—

"Under the corslet of a conscience pure."

As introductory to Supply, on the Education Estimates, LORD ESLINGTON told the pitiful story of MRS. MARKS in full detail—showing how the School-Board officer's zeal had in that case outrun both discretion and humanity, and moving a Resolution. MR. SANDFORD seconded it in a diatribe on School-Boards, in which those Boards were painted blacker than any hung in their own school-rooms.

There is truth enough in MR. SANDFORD'S picture to make those who believe in and hope from, and have striven and still strive for, National Education, wince under the sore sense of means wasted and efforts misdirected.

But bad as the case may be between priggish and pedantic masters and mistresses, over-taught in much that is least necessary and sadly under-taught in most that is most essential, and pupils who cannot even be got to school and kept there long enough to learn anything that will profit them,—it is better than it was; and the Education Department is trying honestly to fulfil its many hard tasks, and to make the best of its many bad bargains. We are improving, however slowly and partially. To this the general testimony seems conclusive.

Friday (Lords).—A talk about the glut of Naval Officers. The DUKE OF SOMERSET put the pinch of the matter pithily—"To have officers enough in war, you must have too many in peace." In fact, it is the necessity felt in other branches besides the Navy of a "great reduction on taking a quantity." The difficulty may be palliated but can't be prevented; and different Boards must be left to deal with it by different schemes.

LORD DUNSANY thought that the success of CAPTAIN WALTER with his Commissionnaire Corps might supply a hint for employment of reduced Naval Officers!—very much reduced, indeed!

(Commons.) The Captain of the Devastation reports her (from Ragusa) "the sweetest ship, between decks, he ever sailed in." And "the ugliest, above them, to look at," he might have added.

Great fun! The Members for Weymouth, Poole, Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, and Southampton all puffing the advantages of their respective boroughs over Dartmouth as the site of a Naval College!

It was quite a lark. The House roared, as each Member, with his tongue in his cheek, paraded the claims of his constituency. Finally, MR. CHILDERS suggested a doubt, which Saturday's Times goes far to deepen into a conviction, whether there is any occasion for a Naval College at all. If the Cadets are not to go afloat till sixteen, why not fix a pass-examination, and leave them to qualify for it where, and as, parents and guardians please.

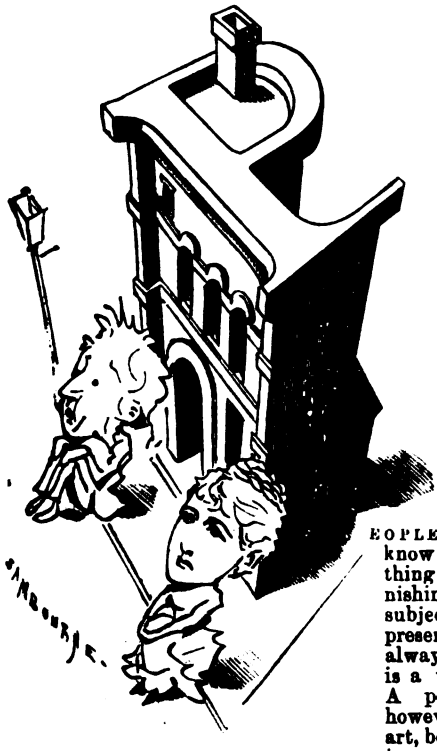
MR. BOURKE (for Foreign Office) declines to produce the instructions on which LORDS COWLEY and CLARENDON signed the Declaration of Paris; and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER does not see his way to interfere with the Civil Service Co-operative Stores, at the demand of the London Shopkeepers.

PHYSIC FOR TIPSY MANIACS.

AMONG the principal members of the deputation, consisting largely of Clergy and Medical Men, who waited the other day upon the HOME SECRETARY with a Memorial inviting the Government to carry out the recommendations of a Select Committee for the control and management of Habitual Drunkards, otherwise called Dipsomaniacs, one gentleman whose name in connection with his errand may appear remarkable was DR. LUSH, M.P. Dipsomania is both the effect of lush, and the cause of craving for more lush. By lush Dipsomania is also curable. Similia similibus—not exactly as the Dipsomaniac, or sot, as we used to say, physics himself o' mornings with the prescription of "a hair of the dog that bit you." But let him only pursue a steady course of intoxicating liquors, taken in infinitesimal quantities and no larger, and lush will certainly cure him. Homœopathy never fails in Dipsomania.

TOAST AND SENTIMENT FOR JULY.

SUCCESS to the Public Worship Bill, now come into operation. May it enforce agreement between their Reverences and their Worships.



WHAT THIS GOVERNMENT MIGHT BE CALLED.—The Permissive Ministry.

Digitized by Google

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

PEOPLE nowadays know simply nothing about furnishing, on which subject, everyone, present company always excepted, is a perfect fool. A perfect fool, however, is, in art, better than an imperfect fool.

Anybody possessing a house, and thoroughly pleased with it, will find fault with everybody else's house. When you take such a prejudiced individual into your dining-room, and show him the window, he will pooh-pooh it. If he does, after showing him the window, show him the door.

Household Decorative Art includes furniture, useful and useless.

Furnishing should be undertaken on the principle of Natural Selection.

Chairs.—The utile in a chair-frame, for example, should be combined with the dulce in the cushioning.

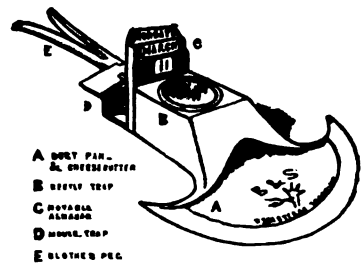
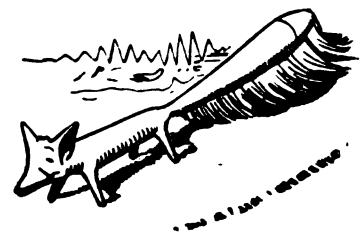
A chair, like an objectionably obtrusive person, is made to be sat upon.

That is the use of a chair. The abuse of a chair is what you say when the leg gives way, or the seat comes out suddenly.

If you are very hungry, you can carve the leg of a chair.



Easy Chair.—This sort of chair is so called from its being anything but easy to find one.



Everyone has his own ideas of comfort.

In a Grammar of Decorative Art, our first hint will, naturally, come under the heading of Article.—There are all sorts of Articles required in a house, from an ornamental, and useful, dust-pan to a grand piano. Do not think that your time will be wasted even in designing a dust-pan and a dust-brush. Pan, remember, was a classical divinity, and this will give you a suggestion. If it won't, we can't help you, except by giving you a design of our own for a Gothic Dust Pan, representing the exterior of a Cathedral, with the Church-yard for the dust; Motto carved on the shovel, Cineres Miserabiles, i.e., Miserable Cinders.

In furnishing there are definite articles (as the one abovementioned) and indefinite articles, as, for instance, anything we haven't mentioned, or are not likely to mention.

An Indefinite Article in our Grammar of Furniture is something that you don't know what on earth it is intended for—whether it's a bootjack, or a coal-scuttle, or an arm-chair, or a poker, or all by turns and nothing long?

Mind, if you can get an indefinite article which shall be equally serviceable as a poker or a gridiron or an arm-chair, or a grand piano, don't part with it on any account, for you have a treasure.

Digitized by Google

The article may be singular, as, for example, something of this sort:—

Or it may be plural, which depends upon what reply you give to the shopman, when he rubs his hands, and inquires, "What's the next article, M'm?"

(To be continued.)

A BAKER ON LIGHT BREAD.

A LITERARY and logical Baker has written the letter below quoted on—

"THE BREAD QUESTION.

"To the Editor of the Hampshire Independent.

"SIR,—Having been a receiver of your valuable paper ever since its commencement, I beg a small space in it be allowed to me for satisfaction to the mind. I saw two letters in your paper of Saturday, the 5th inst., one from a convicted baker, the other (as I suppose) fearing conviction. They were both anonymously signed. I beg to ask why it was so unmanly done? In my opinion it is next to confession of their supposed guilt. A poor bread baker need not be ashamed of his name to withhold it from the public, as I firmly believe they have as honest a face as their convictor. The bakers have not robbed the public."

No. The Bakers have not robbed the Public of a crumb. Only—their apologist proceeds immediately to explain—

"They have deceived their customers by cutting short weight in dough, and lopping off a penny in the (supposed) eight-pound loaf."

Then, he indignantly demands—

"From whence comes the very letter of the law to be brought into action?"

In answer to that question our letter-writer confesses,

"I must say the bakers years gone by acted more like birds of prey to their brother batch for the sake of custom, which has brought a rod about our backs."

But the case is—

"Very different now, we sell bread all alike in price, but the scent has not left us."

Now the Bakers hang together, not, however, some people may think, as they deserve. They only get fined. But "the scent has not left" them. They remain in ill odour.

Next come the following liberal and candid admissions:—

"We all know we are bound by law to sell bread by weight. Had we kept so close to the law as we might have done this contention would never arose. I see but little fault to find with either magistrates or police; they have their duty to perform."

Still the Magistrates do the Bakers some injustice; but in venial ignorance:—

"At Southampton a police-constable stated to the Bench that other Bakers had been visited, and bread on weighing found some over weight. If the reader of the Independent will look in that paper he will see the reply from the Bench, and I can say 'Father, forgive them, they know not what they sayeth, being perfectly unacquainted with the trade.'"

The text pointing the above passage appears to have been quoted from the somewhat hazy reminiscence of a mind, let us hope, unaware rather than regardless of its inaccuracy—and impropriety. Argument succeeds iteration:—

"Suppose if a loaf is short weight, what then? When bread is sixteenpence per gallon it is only half a farthing per ounce—much less, then, now. We all know that bread gets lighter as it gets older. But is the virtue gone? No; it has increased in quality, or why do the people with large families prefer stale bread?"

Here our logician's acuteness fails him a little. Do not people with large families prefer stale bread chiefly because among children its consumption is less than that of new? However, he proceeds:—

"I don't suppose there is a doctor to be found that will recommend new bread to be eaten; it has always been considered injurious to health—but if stale when eaten. it is lighter in weight but improved in quality. Therefore, where is the evil?"

Why, the evil is in not allowing dough enough to the loaf—not applying the knowledge that bread loses weight out of the oven. But the plea that the improved quality of stale bread atones for its short quantity is admirable. So is the concluding peroration:—

"I do think the agitator of this vexed question would do wisely to bend his knees and pray for the safety of his own soul instead of persecuting poor innocent bread bakers. As for bakers being persecuted more than any other trade, we will pass that over with a grin. It would look very unseemly to see the miller's waggon cumbered up with his weights and scales as we poor bakers have been so long. But I see no reason for their exemption; paint us all with one brush. It's the law we have to contend with, and we shall have to abide by it till it is altered. But the agitator may not press the very letter of that law to be carried into execution in this law more than many others. Let him that is without a fault cast the first stone."

A text again—rather closer to the original this time. The Baker to whom we are indebted for the flowers above culled is no anonymous scribe. He signs himself as follows:—

"I am, Sir, &c., JOHN RICHARDS,
A convicted Baker; a bread baker, and seller of bread 39 years, and never served this trick before.

Branstone, I. W."

MR. RICHARDS is evidently himself not a flower that was "born to blush unseen"—if, indeed, to blush at all. He was "never served this trick before." That is, apparently, he was never before during thirty-nine years detected and fined. No doubt he sells excellent bread, and will take care in future to prevent any complaint that there is too little of it.

THE BASER SORT AT BIRMINGHAM.

FROM the subjoined statement it appears that the Electors of Birmingham include a very considerable quantity of what their Right Honourable Member calls the residuum:—

"DR. KENEALY, accompanied by MR. ONSLOW and MR. WHALLEY, went to Birmingham on Saturday, and was received at the railway station by a large crowd. The horses were taken from DR. KENEALY'S carriage, which was then drawn by the people. A meeting was held in the Town Hall in the evening, at which a letter was read from MR. JOHN BRIGHT, stating that he declined to attend. A resolution was passed pledging the meeting to use all legal and constitutional means for the restoration of the convict at Dartmoor to liberty."

Clearly MR. BRIGHT has a great many constituents who would be much more fitly represented by MR. ONSLOW, or MR. WHALLEY, or DR. KENEALY. They showed not so much respect to ORTON'S advocate as self-appreciation by drawing his carriage. For awhile they constituted that vehicle a donkey-chaise.

Osier for Elm.

THAT Earth may to Earth
Turn completely the quicker,
For elm of much worth,
Lay your Earth in cheap wicker.

Thus the living will reap
The amount which they save;
Whilst the dead soundly sleep
In both cradle and grave.

Digitized by Google

A TREAT FOR THE SULTAN.

WE certainly have pretty nearly done our best, or worst, to tire our guest, the SULTAN. From sight to sight we've hurried him in weather fine or wet; by rail and road we've scurried him with speed he won't forget. We have bored him with big dinners and the banging of big guns; we have baited him with deputations, corporations, and the like; and we have brought him forth to balls, when he had rather have gone to bed.

But there is one thing in the way of wearying his Highness, which we have somehow neglectfully omitted. We have not given him an hour's drive in a licensed four-wheeled cab. This would have put a climax on the labours of his visit, and impressed it ineffaceably upon his recollection. The fatigue of being jolted in a shabby old four-wheeler, over a short distance of certain of our streets, would have made him think but lightly of the other ways of weariness wherewith we have afflicted him.

Seeing sights, and being spouted at by prosy deputations, would seem but trifling torments compared to being boxed up in a stuffy old four-wheeler, with rattling doors and windows, and attenuated springs; and after undergoing half-an-hour of such torture, the SULTAN doubtless would resolve to try it on the slave-traders whom he is endeavouring to suppress in Zanzibar. Moreover, it would certainly enhance his admiration of this country, accepting admiration as a synonym for wonder, which the Dictionary permits. Of all the wonders we have shown him, none would surely seem more marvellous than that a people esteemed civilised should content themselves with riding in such barbarous contrivances as are sanctioned by our Legislature; and that a nation who can build a world-defying iron-clad should be incapable of building a comfortable cab.

A LAWN PARTY.—The Upper House of Convocation.

"NOW, OR NEVER!"

(An Allegorical Sketch at Maidenhead.)

EMILY DISTINCTLY REFUSES TO TRUST HERSELF IN THE SAME BOAT WITH FRANK, UNLESS HE CONSENTS TO ROW BOW TO HER STROKE. WHAT IS TO BE DONE? TO YIELD, MIGHT BE A FATAL PRECEDENT FOR THE FUTURE; TO REFUSE, MIGHT BE TO JEOPARDISE THAT FUTURE ALTOGETHER!

FOOD AND FINANCE.

(A Blessing on BUCKMASTER.)

SUCCESS, that is to say, increasing success, to the Training School of Cookery—whose distinguished supporters held their Annual General Meeting the other day at Stafford House — and to BUCKMASTER, its itinerant and excellent Head. This most useful Institution teaches the Noble Art of Cookery in all its branches —the only form of Cookery which it does not teach being that branch of Company-Cookery known as Cookery of Accounts. More power to the great BUCKMASTER, that real benefactor of his species. Till now the only famous man of the name has been a tailor. Henceforth the name should be honoured as one who is not only a lecturer on Cookery, and a cook himself, but a cause of Cookery in others. If that man be a blessing to his kind who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, what honour is due to him who makes many cooks spring up where there were none before. Bless you, BUCKMASTER! May you soon be Master (in Cookery), not only of Bucks, but Beds, and Notts, and Hunts, and Middlesex, in short, of all the counties of England!

The Black Flag of Freedom.

A NUMEROUSLY-ATTENDED Meeting of Master Sweeps, held at the "Lord Hill," Royal Oak Station, Paddington, the other day, resolved to oppose the Chimney Sweepers' Bill, now before Parliament, on the ground of its tyranny. They protest against the idea of every master having to take out a licence to enable him to carry on his business. Such an infliction, it was urged, would be tyrannical, as Master Sweeps would be under the supervision of the police. For "tyrannical" substitute "effectual," and the sequence implied by "as" will appear. The Master Sweeps' objection to LORD SHAFTESBURY'S Bill for the regulation of their Order, only shows that their Sootinesses do not at all like Sweeping Reform.

Digitized by Google

A "BLAZE OF TRIUMPH"!!

(With MR. PUNCH'S Compliments to MR. CROSS.)

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

REGULATIONS FOR WIMBLEDON.

[SPECIAL CIRCULAR.] July 5, 1875.

IELD-MARSHAL PUNCH, Chief Inspector-General of the Auxiliary Forces, &c. &c., acting for himself, and for his able and distinguished colleague, SIR GARNET WOLSELEY, G.C.B., &c. &c. (absent on special service at the Cape of Good Hope), begs to inform the troops under his immediate command, that he has noticed, with much pain, in years gone by, the want of discipline often observable in the Volunteer Encampment, held annually at Wimbledon.

The Field-Marshal would remind Riflemen that (1) the Camp in question should be a School of Instruction, rather than a pic-nic; that (2) for the nonce Volunteers should consider themselves soldiers rather than civilians; and, finally, that (3) England expects (during the first half of July, at any rate) that every man should do his duty.

With a view to insuring uniformity, the Field-Marshal begs that the following regulations may be strictly observed by all taking part in this year's gathering. He may add that experience has taught him that none of the rules published below can be considered unnecessary.

DRESS.

Officers ordered to attend Full Dress Parade, will not appear in white neck-ties, lavender kid gloves, and swallow-tailed coats. A projected visit to the Opera (after the Parade has been dismissed) will not in future be accepted as an excuse for disobeyance of this order.

Non-Commissioned Officers taking part in Battalion Drill should never unfurl their umbrellas without the command of a Brigadier-General.

Head-Dresses known as "Billy-Cook Hats," should not be used (as a rule) during Company drill.

Fancy grey Overcoats (with black velvet collars and cuffs) should not be worn over tweed shooting-jackets and regulation trousers on parade in fine weather.

A Major (in the absence of his Commanding Officer) should never hold a Church Parade in a straw-hat, a sword, and a pair of goloshes.

Kid-Gloves should never be of more than three distinct patterns and colours when worn by Privates belonging to the same Company.

DRILL.

The Order "March at ease" will not be considered, in future, as tantamount to a permission for a Company to ride home on the outside of an omnibus.

Guides should not explain the theory of Billiards or the rules of Lawn-tennis to their Markers during the formation of four-deep square.

Not more than a dozen Privates (to each Company) should speak at once on the call of "Attention!" Constant disregard of this rule will be found to cause some confusion, especially in the performance of brigade movements.

Regimental wags are cautioned against repeating stale jokes in wheeling from column into line. Allusions to "a sad Mess" or "an odd File" will in future be considered an infringement of this regulation.

BANDS.

No Band in future will be permitted to take up its station within a radius of six yards from another Band.

As a rule, Bands practising within ten yards of one another, should select tunes of more or less the same character. For instance, if Band A plays a quadrille, Band B should rehearse the "Lancers;" if B and C commence a polka, Band D may perform a lively waltz; and so on. It may be taken for granted that the Old Hundredth does not altogether agree with the Military March out of Faust. The two tunes should be seldom played at the same time.

In conclusion, FIELD-MARSHAL PUNCH begs to state that he will, during the course of the encampment, pay several visits to Wimbledon, with a view to seeing that the above regulations are properly carried out by Officers commanding regiments and other responsible officials. He trusts that the Volunteers will cheerfully assume the motto "Ready, aye Ready!"

He begs to remind them that he has, from the first, given them his support, that they have never been lacking in zeal, and that they only require discipline to make them the finest soldiers in the world.

He trusts that they will enable him, on this occasion, to submit a highly favourable report of their merits to the master they both serve—the British Public.

By Order (signed) TOBY,
85, Fleet Street, E.C. Dep. Ad.-Gen.

A SONG OF CITY ROSES.

FROM Cashmere's Vale to sultry Chepe,
For Fancy is a flying leap;
But as sweet June, in showers that weep
Her parting, closes,
Grim London shows as gaily drest
As Shiraz at its Summer best,
With Flora holding, East and West,
Her Feast of Roses!

Roses, ripe roses, everywhere
Scent the dull City's dusty air;
Fern-folded buds for Swells are there,
At fancy prices;
And leaf-wrapt "mosses," cheap yet sweet,
The humble luxuries of the street,
Which with piled cherries ripe compete,
And penny ices.

SIR SYBARITE shudders; his are dreams
Of Cheshunt clusters, GUNTER'S creams;
But Bendemeer's bright bowers and streams,
Or groves of Arden,
Are not for all; and there are those
Whose pleasures are a penny rose,
And gorgeous, albeit gratis, Shows
Of Covent Garden!

Welcome, sweet child of June, whose grace
Bids even Mammon yield thee place;
Whose beauty brightens every face
Which bends above it!
Were Punch not Punch, he 'd fain be PAUL,
Or CANT of Colchester. To call
Roseland his own, were surely all
A bard could covet!

Lyons "Rose-Congresses" are things
Which those devised by scheming Kings,
Or BISMARCK, with his seraph wings,
Are put to shame by.
How poor are plots to prop a throne,
Beside the pride of having grown
Some bright new blossom, to be known
Some sweet new name by!

Say "Punch's Own!"—a friendly hint
For PAUL AND SON! Both shape and tint
Should be perfection, the last print
Of FLORA'S finger,
Impressed on perfect petals! Then
Shall the Great Teacher's City den
Be home for HAFIZ, and his pen
O'er love-lays linger!

RECIPE FOR A BONNET À-LA-MODE.

FIRST procure a large-sized shape; then butter it well, so as to adhere firmly to the extreme back of the head. Cover it with silk or some light material, and kick it for a mile, taking care to keep it clean during this process. Then take of flowers, feathers, and ribbon each a quarter of a pound, and mix all well together. Add birds, insects, fern-leaves, or grass, according to taste. (If the butter be not sufficiently adhesive, try tulle strings and cobbler's wax.)

TO PLAY-GOERS.

THE Best and Cheapest Manner of Seeing the Play of "Our Boys."—Go to Lord's Cricket-Ground on the Eton and Harrow Match day.

Digitized by Google

JONES AT HIS YEOMANRY RACES.

PARADE IN THE PADDOCK DURING A SHOWER.

THE END OF THE FAIR.

VANITY Fair will end full soon:
Past is June.
M.P., like the Cuckoo, feels—"In August Go he must."
The Belle of the Season, on marriage who reckoned,
Perchance must wait for Season the second,
And freshen herself with country air,
And hope next year to catch her Lothair.

Business seems to flutter away
With scented hay,
When we've seen in the fields the seeding grass cut,
Driving to Ascot.
Then in the Ministry Herod is King,
And the Innocents perish like—anything.
What have we done? Men answer gaily,
"What we were bidden by DISRAELI."

Well, we have done (and this is a charm)
Not much harm:
Two Clowns in Our Circus, KENEALY and WHALLEY,
Brought their folly.
SIR STAFFORD amused us (many thanks)
With his thimble-rig of the Savings Banks;
And the SULTAN OF ZANZIBAR came to hear
Our talk, with his foe-friend, BARTLE FRERE.

Away to your cosy country-house,
M.P. of nous!
Away to the silent lawns serene,
Maiden-queen!
Papa to his birds and his snug home-farm;
And his beautiful daughter, Child of Charm,
To the fragrant garden and breezy down
That will bring back roses she lost in Town.

Ay, Vanity Fair will soon be out:
Hark, the shout!
The Grand Panjandrum, wondrous man,
Packs his van.
'Twas rather a dreary time for him,
Since a muddle's his fun, and a row's his whim;
As he drives away you may hear him swear,
"We'll have livelier times next Vanity Fair."

"PLACE AUX DAMES!"

MR. PUNCH has received thousands of letters upon the subject of Railway Carriages for Ladies. He is forced (by the exigences of space) to publish only a selection from the many valuable contributions that have been addressed to him at his Office upon this all-absorbing topic of conversation:—

Primrose Cottage.

MISS BRIDGET WALLFLOWER presents her compliments to Mr. Punch, and begs to inform him that, for the last thirty years, she has invariably patronised Ladies' Carriages on her railway journeys. During that time she has never suffered any inconvenience from the rude attentions of the male sex. MISS BRIDGET WALLFLOWER begs to add that, as she is now just twenty-nine years of age, and is considered handsome, she thinks a continuation of the precautions she has hitherto taken absolutely necessary.

The Folly.

DEAR MR. PUNCH,

Of course Ladies' Carriages are a mistake. Who on earth would think of travelling in a compartment containing a parcel of young children and old maids? Besides, they don't allow smoking in them, and I can't get on without my cigarette.

In frantic haste, thine ever,
POLLY RAPID.

Minerva Villa.

MY DEAR SIR,

AFTER mature consideration, I have come to the conclusion that Ladies' Carriages are unnecessary. The education of most women (owing to the barbarous cruelty of man) has been deplorably neglected, and, consequently, female conversation is usually vapid and uninteresting. I confess that I like exchanging ideas with men

Digitized by Google

CHASTISEMENT MADE DIFFICULT.

"I HEAR YOU HAVE BEEN A VERY NAUGHTY BOY, TOMMY! GO IN THE CORNER, DIRECTLY!"

"ALL RIGHT, MAMMA DARLING! WHICH CORNER SHALL IT BE? AND AM I TO TURN MY FACE TO THE WALL, OR TO THE ROOM?"

BURNHAM BEECHES.

(MR. VERNON HEATH, the best of landscape photographers, writes to the Times to announce the fall of "the Monarch," one of the most patriarchal pollards of Burnham Beeches.)

THE Monarch tree we 've sat beneath,
With fun and fizz and peaches,
Has vanished, teste VERNON HEATH,
From glorious Burnham Beeches.

That patriarch of the pollard wood
Stout arms no longer reaches,
Chief of that mighty multitude—
The famous Burnham Beeches.

Beneath it, lady of my heart!
I 've made you pretty speeches,
While you were eating damson-tart,
In shade of Burnham Beeches.

Champagne 's been popped—the question, too—
(We know how Love beseeches)
Ah, what said I, and what said you,
That day, at Burnham Beeches?

I think I quoted LUTTRELL'S lines
(Epigrammatic each is)
When amorous were my designs
On you 'mid Burnham Beeches.

Homeward we drove our four-in-hand,
Just when the owl first screeches:
A moonlit midnight 's very grand
'Neath sombre Burnham Beeches.

You sat beside me on the box:
Alas! experience teaches
That hearts succumb to heavy knocks,
As well as Burnham Beeches.

Your Patriarch, O photographer!
Wide arms no longer reaches:
And SHE is married to a cur—
Confound those Burnham Beeches!

Spread of Evil Example.

(From the Railway Carriage to the Lecture-Room.)

AT a recent Meeting of the Archæological Society (if we may believe the report of a respectable journal) the Company embraced several Ladies!

of talent and experience. It is only fair to say that I have been greatly edified by the remarks of many learned Professors with whom I have travelled during my many railway journeys. I am forced to admit, too, that I have frequently found the conversation of Undergraduates of even one year's standing both pleasing and instructive.

I have the honour to be, my dear Sir,
Your very obedient servant.
HENRIETTA HARVEY-JENNER, M.D., &c., &c.

MY VERY DEAR MR. PUNCH, The Rosary.

I AM quite afraid of writing to you—I am indeed! But I know you are such a nice, kind, dear middle-aged thing, that I really can't help it. (I like a middle-aged man so much. You creatures look better, speak better, and are altogether better at that age than at any other! You artful things, you know you are!) It is so stupid travelling in a Ladies' Carriage. Why, there is no one to talk to, no one to save your gloves when you want to open the door to get out, no one to look after your parcels for you! Don't let them bully us, dear Mr. Punch. They are spiteful old things—take my word for it. I know what women are! O, why did you marry?

Yours most faithfully,
FLORENCE FLIRTAWAY.

DEAR MR. PUNCH, The Shamrock, Dublin.

IT is an Irish girl now who is speaking to you. Mind that, Sir. Why shall we have all this botheration about a miserable Railway Carriage? Surely the gentlemen are not so bad at all, at all. I abhor selfishness, Sir, and can't a young lady (especially an Irish young lady) take as much care of herself as if she were just the Lord Lieutenant himself?

No, if you must have Railway Carriages exclusively for Ladies, why just admit the Gentlemen to them. There 's a way out of the difficulty, anyhow!

Yours sincerely,
KATHLEEN MOLLOY.

A PRETTY KIND OF CURATE.

IN Convocation, the other day, a resolution having been moved approving the Report of the Committee on Rubrics, and opposed by the wiser part of their Reverences:—

"PREBENDARY PERRY also opposed the Motion, as did CANON MILLER. The latter referred to an occurrence reported as having happened at St. Alban's, Holborn, on Sunday, when the officiating curate, pointing to the legal vestment to which he was limited under a recent judgment, called it a 'thing,' and refused to celebrate the Holy Communion in it."

So, on the other hand, some reverend young gentlemen occasionally kiss the vestment they are going to put on. But we are not sure of such clergy's gender. There have been female sailors. May not young ladies in disguise have contrived to enter the Church? Perhaps it was one of these, officiating at St. Alban's, whose tongue bewrayed her:—

"And diskivered her tender sex."

And so she stood confessed as one whose proper wear was petticoats, when, in a fit of vexation at having to wear a vestment she thought ugly, she called it "a thing."

THE CRY OF CONVOCATION.—"Old Clo! Old Clo!"

Digitized by Google

FIXTURES FOR JULY.

EDNESDAY, July 7.—Grand Polo Match on the Thames Embankment between the Houses of Lords and Commons. Judges, the Whips; Umpire, the LORD CHANCELLOR. Prize, a complete set of Hansard.

8. Great International Silkworm Show at the Alexandra Palace.

9. Meeting at Magnificent House, to form a School of Millinery and Dressmaking on the plan of the "School of Cookery."

10. Grand Entertainment at the Mansion House in honour of the Eton and Harrow Elevens.

13. Bazaar in Westminster Hall (by the kind permission of the authorities), in aid of the funds of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Indigent Dervishes in Eastern Countries. To be opened by the LORD MAYOR and Sheriffs in State.

14. Banquet of the Worshipful and Ancient Company of Warming-Pan Makers to the London Vestrymen.

15. Annual Meeting of the Association for Shortening Ladies' Dresses.

17. Cricket-Match at Lord's between the past and present Ministry.

19. Annual Dinner of the Farinaceous Society.

20. Whitebait Dinner at Blackwall to the Shoeblack Brigade.

21. Soirée of the Meteorological Society (weather permitting) on Hampstead Heath.

22. Conversazione of Chinamaniacs at South Kensington Museum.

24. Great Pumpkin Show at the Crystal Palace.

26. Match on the Skating Rink at Prince's between the two Houses of Convocation.

27, and following days. Great Bonnet Show in Goodwood Park.

28. Laying of the Foundation Stone of the new Wing of the Refuge for Reduced Chaperones.

30. Assembly in London of a European Congress to deliberate on the propriety of devising a new set of Quadrille figures.

31. Last great Flower Show of the Season—Wallflowers, Maiden's Blush Roses, Heartsease, Marigolds, Sweet Williams, Forget-me-nots, &c.

MAN TO MAN.

MR. PUNCH,—The natives, not by any means to say the savages, of the Admiralty Islands teach us how entirely to dispense with undertakers. See the letter in the Times about them from on board H.M.S. Challenger. They neither inter nor burn their dead. They bury them—in themselves.

I know this practice is called "Cannibalism;" but that once offensive word has in these days of progress become a mere descriptive noun. Chemically, animal matter is animal matter. The elements of Man do not materially differ from those of Ox, or Sheep, or Pig.

The Admiralty Islanders eat man, although they refuse dog. But so enlightened a people can have no superstitious objection to dog; they have doubtless tried dog, and found dog to be bad, whereas they find man good.

By consigning the remains of the defunct to the interiors of the living, these economical islanders not only incur no funeral expenses, but altogether exempt themselves from the need and the nuisance of cemeteries. They at the same time render their population in a great measure self-sustaining. Science will in due time teach them to utilise, in agriculture, the bones which they cannot crunch, and as yet seem not to know what to do with.

These Anthropophagi are no common Cannibals. They eat, but do not, unless perhaps occasionally, kill their kind. Their Cannibalism, in fact, is next to Vegetarianism in point of gentleness.

Let us talk no more of Cannibalism. Let us call it "Comesture." For my part, I should like to be as useful as I can to those I leave behind me. Accordingly, I prefer Comesture to Cremation, and account "Earth to Earth" an arrangement less philanthropic than "Man to Man." At any rate, I had as lief be eaten as either burnt or basketed.

However, we cannot at present in this island imitate the obsequies of those other islanders. "It is singular that they are totally ignorant of the use of tobacco and spirits." Hence, their flesh is esculent, because pure. We should disagree with one another, dead, worse than we do, living. Before we can be Cannibals we must become Teetotallers. Let LAWSON put that in his pipe, and smoke it, even if he eschew tobacco.

But I have trespassed too far on your valuable space in observations less appropriate now, perhaps, than they would be in the Dead Season. Believe me to be, in every possible respect, yours without prejudice,

VAMPIRUS GYPS, Ph. D.

The Zoo.

LADIES AND BABIES.

LADIES have their will and their won't:
None their caprice disparages.
When we find the wise among them don't
Much like Ladies' Carriages.

There Nurses travel and Babies squall,
And a glance that 's only cursory
Will show that it 's no treat at all
To ride in a Railway Nursery.

Who cares to listen to silly stuff—
Baby-talk—in a railway carriage?
Babies will come quite soon enough
If spoons should end in marriage.

Well, spoons may end so, Lady fair!
'Tis a somewhat troublesome ending:
And you 'll entertain angels unaware,
From the seventh heaven descending.

For the Baby utterly unknown
Is a noisy, troublesome creature;
Though the Baby that 's one's very own
Is a love in its every feature.

The Sex prefers the Carriage wherein
The sexes meet together;
Where a pleasant chat may oft begin
With a word about the weather.

Is there any harm in the brief romance
Of a talk with a courteous stranger?
If he offers Punch, you may see at a glance
There 's not the slightest danger.

That test is sure, my pretty waif;
Your comrade of the minute,
If he loves his Punch, is an escort safe,
For he learns good manners in it!

PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL.

ACCORDING to the Athenæum, "interviewing," as practised by American Journalists, is about to assume a new shape. One of these gentry is on the eve of publishing his experiences of interviews with representatives of the leading London periodicals. He claims to have "interviewed" Mr. Punch and the Editors of "the Daily Telegraph, Church Times, Bell's Life, Standard, Morning Post, Reynolds' Miscellany, Illustrated News, and the Athenæum." Mr. Punch, of course, cannot say what will be published about him on the present occasion, but he thinks that any future interview with an American Journalist may be safely reported as follows:—

American Journalist. Mr. Punch, as you refused me admittance at the front door, you see I have availed myself of the chimney. May I ask you why it is so dirty?

Mr. Punch. Certainly. I have it cleaned three times a week, but that is scarcely sufficient to get rid of the soot caused by the consumption daily of many tons of rejected contributions.

American Journalist. Do you possess a horsewhip, Mr. Punch?

* * * * * *

Mr. Punch. I hope you will now feel that your question is superfluous.

American Journalist. You have certainly given me ample proofs, Mr. Punch, that you do possess a horsewhip. How many feet is your first-floor window from the street, Mr. Punch?

Mr. Punch. Pray, Sir, go and see for yourself!

* * * * * *

The American Journalist having gracefully retired through the window, Mr. Punch returned to his desk.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

PRIESTLY authority in Ireland sets its face against the Dublin Training School for National Teachers. A plan has been suggested for boarding-out Roman Catholic pupil-teachers in houses approved by their clergy. The Government (Lords, Monday, July 5), don't see their way to this, and give various reasons quite wide of the real one, which is no doubt an unwillingness to offend certain sections of their supporters by anything that looks like concession to priestly power in Ireland. "Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind." The Church and the School are at loggerheads, and School goes to the wall.

THE DUKE OF RICHMOND is seriously thinking of striking the "Knowingly" out of his Adulteration Bill. The absurdity of throwing upon the buyer the proof that the seller knows what he is selling has proved too much even for the contentedness of that most contented and Conservative public whose remonstrances reach Richmond. There must be at least ten miles of them!

(Commons.) Levée en masse of the Common Lawyers in the House, against the Constitution of the Intermediate Court of Appeal, botched up by the Government to save the rest of the Judicature Act. "Hawks should na' pike out hawks' een." The Lawyers of both bars ought to imitate the Scotch Members, and wash their legal linen in private. Their fighting powers should be reserved for their cases and their clients.

Let Q.C.s fight to prove black white—
Their briefs are marked thereto:
Let Counsel in the cause-lists fight—
'Tis what they 're paid to do.

But, Lawyers, in the House ne'er let
Your angry passions rise:
Your brace of bars were never meant
To bar each other's rise.

"When thieves fall out," says the proverb, "honest men come by their own." If the disagreement of Lawyers involve the same consequence, there should be every prospect of a satisfactory Court of Intermediate Appeal.

The Judicature Act would have reduced the Judges from eighteen to fifteen. "The Government has been convinced by the communications it has received" that it would be undesirable to lessen the number of judicial nests for the callow brood in bombazine and horsehair who aspire to those calm retreats, built high above the disturbance of political winds, and the catastrophes of parties. So

"Hush-a-bye, Q.C., upon the tree-top!
As the Judges are now so the Judges shall stop!"

The Judicial Committee of Privy Council is not to be starved to furnish forth the new Court of Appeal. That, at least, seems a change for the better. The rules and orders to be made by the Judges under the new Act are not to overrule Common or Statute Law (so likely they would!); but are to be confined to "pleading, practice, and procedure."

Lords (Tuesday).—Public Health Bill (300 clauses) passed through Committee in a jiffey. Punch feels he cannot too much commend the wisdom of their Lordships. Take example, ye contentious Commons! That is the way to deal with a Consolidation Bill. If you would imitate the wisdom of your betters—it would be a shame to call them your Peers—every branch of the Law which has got into Statutory Chaos—and what branch has not?—might have its Chaos reduced to Order by Consolidation preparatory to real amendment only possible when the want to be supplied, or the blunder to be rectified, is clear to the meaner capacities of common lay minds. Of Statute Law, unlike liquids, it may be said it never is clear until consolidated.

(Commons.) Civil Service Estimates. MR. GORST tried to get rid of the examiners of criminal accounts, who have occasionally made the Treasury odious by penny-wisdom leading to miscarriage of justice.

It is to be hoped that this kind of penny-wisdom, in so serious a matter as the conduct of criminal prosecutions, will henceforth be as systematically snubbed as there is reason to fear it has, at times, been systematically encouraged (in common with much other penny-wisdom) at the Treasury.

An hour was devoted to the grievances of THOMAS DUFFY, ex-canteen keeper at the Curragh, turned out by the War Office for selling drink to the military at illegal hours. Who dares say the House of Commons is not the Grand (and petty) Inquest of the Nation? Mighty enough to measure the designs of Russia, it is not too great to weigh the grievances of DUFFY!

What followed (on MR. BAILLIE COCHRANE'S speech, calling attention to the progress of Russia in Central Asia), in these days of military manœuvres, Punch takes the liberty of condensing into a brief dialogue in the camp and barrack style:—

English Sentry (to Russ Outpost, moving towards Affghanistan). Qui va la?

Russ Outpost. Friend!

English Sentry (after looking to Foreign Office and India Office for instructions, and getting none). Pass, Friend—

Sir G. Campbell. And all 's well!

Digitized by Google

"WE'LL NOT CARRY COALS."

SHAKSPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, Act i. Sc. 1.

"'NOT YOUR PLACE, BUT MARY'S, TO TAKE UP THE COALS TO THE NURSERY!' YOU CONSEQUENTIAL LITTLE MONKEY! WHY, YOU COULDN'T GIVE YOURSELF MORE AIRS IF YOU WERE A BUTLER!"

"AH! THOUGH I MAYN'T BE A BUTLER, I 'AVE THE FEELIN'S OF ONE!"

Or, if our readers prefer Æsopian to military apologue, here it is in that way:—

"A Russian setter was drawing cautiously towards an Affghan He-ra A British bull-dog, on the other side of the Hindoo Koosh, lay watching his approaches. 'What shall I do?' he growled at last, looking to his masters.

"'Bark,' said one.

"'Bite,' said another.

"'Lie still in the sun, and do nothing,' said a third.

"The bull-dog's tail quivered—he snarled uneasily, wrinkling his muzzle as if he longed to show his teeth; but, finally, accustomed to wait for the word of command, and not receiving it, laid his heavy head on his fore-paws, and resumed his attitude of unquiet observation.

"Moral.—Activity is not always successful; inactivity may sometimes be masterly. Both are to be judged by the issue. But the most masterly inactivity cannot err in keeping its powder dry."

MR. WHALLEY, attempting to fix the meet for a Grand Jesuit Hunt, was cruelly Counted Out before the smallest of the small hours!

Wednesday.—Was given to MR. TREVELYAN'S Household Franchise (Counties) Bill. Mr. Bright supported it by a petition from sixty thousand members and friends of the Agricultural Labourers' Union. A vote for every householder in county, as in town, say these petitioners, is the keystone of the Arch.

Clearly the time must come, whether the Commons like it or not. But, as clearly, the time is not yet.

The House will some day have to face its dose of County, as it has drained its draught of Borough, residuum. But both the Country and the Commons know that the decoction is likelier to damage than strengthen the Constitution, unless the physic is very carefully re-distributed.

This is the sum and substance of the MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON'S reason for refraining from voting. If the House had been as free to follow its judgment as the Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition, it would have done as he did. As it was, it rejected the Bill by 268 to 166.

Thursday (Lords).—The Friendly Societies Bill (boneless, so no wonder the House makes no bones of it) passed Second Reading with a protest from LORD ABERDARE and LORD MORLEY against the farce of a mock audit, and the want of a real one.

(Commons.) REYNOLDS painted GARRICK between Tragedy and Comedy. Why were not Thursday's anti-Papal interpellations in time for Punch to paint his pendant of "DISRAELI between WADDY and WHALLEY"—WADDY wants to know whether the Government means to protect the Bench and the Public Offices from the POPE. "Just let the POPE put his finger in our pie," says MR. DISRAELI, "and we will take it into serious consideration."

WHALLEY wants to know what more information Government requires as to Jesuit designs than CARDINAL MANNING'S declaration that their mission is to put England's imperial power under the Papal toe?

MR. DISRAELI said if he wanted any information he knew where to go for it.

Very neat. But query the taste, or use, of so snubbing the irrepressible?

The PREMIER submitted to the country the PRINCE OF WALES'S India Bill—a very moderate one—under £150,000 in all: £52,000 for the voyage out and home; £30,000 for rites of hospitality in India, to come out of India's pocket (a pity); and £60,000 personal expenses.

Is this enough to do the thing handsomely? Better not do it at all than do it shabbily. You can't ask twice. MACDONALD, PETER TAYLOR, and BURT declared such votes provoked more disloyalty among Working-men than all the agents of Republicanism. Do England's Working-men speak through these three mouths?

We should be sorry to believe it, for the sake of the Working-men. If it be true, nothing can better show that our masters still want teaching.

MR. HANBURY hoped we were doing our duty—that is, our best—for the suppression of the East African Slave-trade. MR. BOURKE declared we were, and described what this doing amounted to. MR. FORSTER thought our action satisfactory; and Mr. Punch is content to follow MR. FORSTER'S lead in this matter, into which MR. FORSTER throws a hereditary heart.

Another of the many Naval engagements of the Session. BRASSEY against more monster iron-clads, seeing that guns will keep getting bigger, while torpedoes threaten to blow both big guns and big ships into smithereens.

Big BEN tolled his usual funeral-knell, over sea-service, ships, sailors, England, —not quite sure if he should not add, the Sea itself, — all going post haste to the Devil!

MR. E. J. REED would not sit there and hear big iron ships—his children par excellence—run down in this brassy manner.

MR. GOSCHEN didn't see why we should not have a few big ships, if only we had a good many small ones.

"Just my idea!" said MR. WARD-HUNT. "Great and small make up a wall." The proverb holds, afloat as well as ashore, of wooden or iron walls as of stone ones.

Words after Walt. Whitman.

MR. HENRY WARD BEECHER,
What an eloquent preacher!
What a high moral teacher!
In his conduct what feature
Bears out the impeacher
Of that screamer and screecher,—
That sensational, gushing, emotional creature?

Digitized by Google

A DILEMMA.

Party (overcome by the heat of the Weather). "HOY! CAB!"

Driver. "ALL RIGHT, SIR, IF YOU'LL JUST WALK TO THE GATE."

Party. "O, BOTHER! WALKING TO 'GATE!"

Driver. "WELL, SIR, IF YOU CAN'T GET THROUGH, I DON'T SEE HOW I CAN GET OVER!"

THE ROMANESQUE REVIVAL.

HAVING been obliged, by the decision of the Court of Arches, to put out their lights and put off their motley, the clerical performers of St. Alban's, Holborn, on Sunday last, proceeded only half-way with their usual imitation. It terminated, according to the Post, with a short discourse, preached by the REV. J. STANTON. After that, the audience went to attend the conclusion of their Sunday's entertainment at another place:—

"The whole congregation, numbering several hundred persons, the great majority of whom were females, then proceeded through Holborn, over the Viaduct, and by Newgate Street and Cheapside, to the Church of St. Vedast, Foster Lane."

The BISHOP OF LONDON has issued an inhibition forbidding the St. Alban's Clergy to preach in any Church but their own. Instead, therefore, of the Reverend Gentleman above-named, who had been expected to fill the pulpit—

"In the Church of St. Vedast the sermon was preached by the Rector, who said there had never been a revival of religion which had not its confessors, and the revival of these latter days must, he supposed, have its confessors, if not its martyrs."

The revival of religion is one thing; the "revival of these latter days" is another. This revival—the Ritualist dramatic, musical, and spectacular burlesque—the BISHOP OF LONDON is trying to suppress—it being out of the jurisdiction of the LORD CHAMBERLAIN. At some Houses—apparently at St. Vedast's—it is given out for repetition till further notice; indeed, in spite of episcopal notice—the part not only of Confessor, but also of Father Confessor, by Anglican Divines. It is quite certain that they will not, any of them, be called upon to play the Martyr, and not at all likely that, if they were, a single one of them would undertake that arduous character. Ritualist mimes may be ridiculed, but will not be roasted.

The St. Vedast's and St. Alban's Revivalists have no connection whatever with MOODY AND SANKEY. Except that of rivalry.

THE MOST CONTINUOUS BREAK WE KNOW.—Our Housemaid's.

JOHN'S ANSWER TO WILLIAM'S QUESTION!

To all whom it may concern.

"Is the Church of England worth preserving?"—MR. GLADSTONE.

WHAT is the Church? Is it a place
For holy antic and grimace?
A sort of Sunday Opéra-Bouffe,
Performed beneath a Gothic roof?
Parade, with Priest for fugleman?
Burlesque, upon the latest plan,
Of things the most sublime and serious,
Where mummery, veiling the mysterious,
Yields mumbo-motley as result
Of search for an "æsthetic" cult?
Is this the Church, you mean? If so,
JOHN'S Answer's an emphatic "No!"

Is it a stage where bumptious boys
May wrangle over gauds and toys,
Fuming whene'er some scrap of flummery
Is stript from their too florid mummery?
May vent on LUTHER, or on TAIT,
Ecclesiastic Billingsgate?—
Much like an angry housemaid, chidden
For finery that is forbidden;
Who strikes an attitude as martyr
Because her Sunday rig's not smarter.—
Is this the Church you mean? If so,
JOHN'S Answer is a ready "No!"

Is it a "scene" where cleric pride
May be supremely glorified;
And every pretty priestling hope
To play the part of petty Pope,—
Shining in foolish virgins' eyes,
With sacerdotal sanctities;
And gently dazzling, now and then,
Some mooney and molluscous men;
Where, gaily decked in stolen plumes,
'Midst pompous rites and fragrant fumes,
The emptiest daw may masque and mum
Ecclesiastic Fe-Faw-Fum?
Is this poor thing your "Church"? If so
JOHN'S Answer's an explosive—"No!"

Is it a word of Life, or Death?
A Sacerdotal Shibboleth?
A proud abstraction vague and vast
Veiling the tyranny of Caste?
A verbal Fetish, shaped to rule
The flexile fancy of the fool?
A web of forms, traditions, creeds,
Stretched 'twixt the soul and the soul's needs?
Is Church the "Priest's Preserve"? If so,
JOHN'S Answer is—"Preserve it! No!"

INTERESTING IMMIGRATION.

AT a late examination of the National School at Inverary, the Inspector having desired all of the name of Campbell to hold up their hands, not one of the children responded!

Can it be that, since the MACCALLUM MORE—always abreast, if not ahead, of the times, whether in Science, matrimonial alliances, or scorn of snobbish prejudice—put three MACCALLUMS the Less into business, all the CAMPBELLS are coming south for situations in one of the firms of LORD A., B., C. (as the case may be) CAMPBELL & Co.? If so, may they find, what they have a patronymic right to claim, a fair field (campo bello) and lots of favour. If Clansmen are like Chief, they will deserve both.

"Rotten Row on the Embankment."

A RIVER ROW,
A new Horse Show,
A trot on Thames's dry way;
A ladies' ride—
And we 'll bestride
No more "a silent highway."

Digitized by Google

NOT TO BE CONVINCED.

Materfamilias. "JOHN, LOVE, YOU KNOW YOU SAID THERE WAS SURE TO BE 'SOMETHING WRONG' ABOUT DIEPPE, BECAUSE IT WAS FOREIGN, AND ALL THAT. WELL, THERE CAN'T BE ANYTHING WRONG, FOR I WROTE TO THE AGENT, AND I'VE JUST RECEIVED A LETTER FROM HIM, SAYING THERE IS ONLY ONE APARTMENT UN-LET IN THE WHOLE TOWN! DO LET ME TELEGRAPH, AND SECURE IT AT ONCE!"

Chorus. "YES, DO, PAPA! FANCY!—ONLY ONE APARTMENT UN-LET IN THE WHOLE TOWN!"

Paterfamilias (grimly). "'ONLY ONE APARTMENT UN-LET IN THE WHOLE TOWN! THEN THERE'S SURE TO BE SOMETHING WRONG ABOUT THAT APARTMENT!"

CONVOCATION.

(By Our Own Special Reporter.)

PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY.

UPPER HOUSE.

THE only business their Lordships transacted was a discussion on the Report of a Committee appointed to draw up a Special Form of Service for the Use of Missionaries in Foreign Countries. The question before their Lordships was, whether it would not be a more advisable and expeditious course to employ the excised Services of the English Church; for, though there was no further necessity for them in this country, they might be of great spiritual advantage to the various Natives in the process of conversion.

The BISHOP OF BUNGAY observed, that, for example, the service for Saint Charles's Day—he meant for CHARLES THE FIRST'S Day—was really doing nothing now, and might be easily adapted for Missionary enterprise, omitting the political allusions.

The BISHOP OF BULLOCK-SMITHY asked what would be substituted for these allusions? For his part he was for retaining the Service intact. It would be of the greatest benefit to both the Missionaries and their native converts, as it would give them some insight into English history, and so advance the interests of Christianity on the one hand, and of civilisation on the other.

His Grace the PRESIDENT referred to the clock, and took that opportunity of observing that he must now adjourn the debate, having faithfully promised his wife to return to the Palace early, as she had a large garden-party that afternoon, where he hoped all their Lordships would be able to attend.

It was accordingly agreed to postpone the discussion till another day. Their Lordships then adjourned.

LOWER HOUSE.

The Prolocutor took the chair at eleven o'clock.

A number of petitions and gravamina were handed in.

The Ritual Debate.

CANON WEDGEND proposed the following Motion:—

"That the meaning of the Ornaments Rubric of EDWARD THE SIXTH being uncertain, this House recommends that it shall suffice for the Minister to wear a surplice only, and nothing else, or a surplice and a scarf, or a surplice and a scarf and a stole, and the hood of his degree, if he has one; and to these might be added anything else at the wish of the congregation, and with the sanction of the Bishop of the diocese."

The Canon observed that he thought this would place matters on a basis mutually agreeable to all parties. (Applause.)

ARCHDEACON BOULDER failed to see why the Bishop of the diocese should be brought in at all. Bishops only muddled matters, and they could get on much better without their interference. (Applause.)

The ARCHDEACON OF WYSEBOROUGH expressed his firm conviction that something must be done in the present crisis.

The ARCHDEACON OF ADDLEPATE agreed with the last speaker.

CANON DRYLY proposed that there should be only one vestment for everybody—a Cope. The Cope was originally a pluviale, or Roman waterproof. ("Hear, hear!") It was warm in winter, and airy in summer, and it had no more doctrinal signification than his own mackintosh. It was wise policy to provide for a coming storm.

PREBENDARY NOODEL reminded the last speaker that they were discussing "Ornaments," not "Vestments." Vestments were illegal; Ornaments were not. The question was, what were Ornaments? This was evidently a matter of individual taste.

CANON SYDE-SPLYTTER said they were discussing what he would take the liberty to call the "Vested interests" of the Church.

Digitized by Google

CHURCH PRESERVATION.

MR. GLADSTONE. "PLEASE, 'M, IS THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND WORTH PRESERVING?"

BRITANNIA. "WORTH PRESERVING?—DEAR ME, WILLIAM, DON'T YOU KNOW IT'S BEEN IN A PICKLE THIS EVER SO LONG?"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

(Laughter.) For his part, he never could see why anything should mean anything. (Laughter.) He was prepared to Cope with the difficulty. (Laughter.) He did not see why a Clergyman should want to dress himself up as a groom of the Stole (laughter), but it struck him that this House was just going to shut the door carefully after the horse had been stolen. (Great laughter.) If some æsthetically-minded among his clerical brethren liked to give everything a symbolical meaning, he, personally, had no objection. A spade with him meant a spade, and there was an end of the matter. (Laughter.)

DR. SMOOTH agreed with all the preceding speakers. If his own congregation wished him to wear a Cope, he would do so; if not, he would not. As long as we did our duty quietly and unostentatiously it really seemed to him of no importance in what dress that duty was done. ("No, no!") He was sorry to hear that some in that House appeared to differ from him. He could assure them that his motto was to live and let live, and to live peaceably with all men. (Applause.)

The REV. MARTIN CALVIN wanted to know if the House wished to restore Popery with all its rags and mummeries. ("Order!") Yes, he repeated "mummeries." He had only once, thank Heaven, been inside a Romish Church, but that was quite enough for him. ("Oh, oh!") He looked upon the present movement as Jesuitical. "Cope" rhymed with "Pope." If they wanted "Ornaments" of the Church, CRANMER ("Oh, oh!"), RIDLEY, LATIMER, HOOKER, HENRY, and SIMEON, were sufficient ornaments for any Protestant Church. He did not want to return to Babylonish captivity, or bow the knee to Baal. ("Oh, oh!")

PREBENDARY MIDWAY deprecated the tone of the last speaker ("Hear, hear!"), while at the same time he admired his energy, his zeal, and his fidelity to what he considered his duty ("Hear, hear!") in the truly liberal and widely comprehensive Church to which they had the signal happiness to belong. (Applause.) He approved of the scope of CANON WEDGEND'S Motion, but should like to add as a rider that,—

"Whatever Ornaments or Vestments might hereafter be adopted, they might or might not be considered as having any doctrinal signification, according to the bias and taste of each individual."

For his part, he was prepared to wear anything, or everything. His congregation had given him Scarves, Stoles, Copes, and Chasubles, and he wore them indiscriminately, consulting the tastes of the donors. A minority of his congregation wished for the black gown only, and so he gave them a special black-gown service every Sunday. He was sure that, with a little mutual concession—one giving up a doctrine here, an opinion there, and another a vesture, an ornament, and so forth—we should all get on together, and enjoy the blessings of peace, unity, and concord. (Applause.)

ARCHDEACON DOWNRIGHT said, either Vestments were right, or they were wrong. (Great applause.) If right, let us have them. (Applause.) If wrong, let us not have them. (Applause.) That was all.

CANON BURLEIGH said he was past sixty, and didn't want to change his old lamps for new ones. He had been all his life accustomed to a decent worship in his own parish Church, and to the beautifully impressive form used in our ancient Cathedrals. ("Hear, hear!") He now came up to London, and, on his word and honour, on entering one of these new-fangled Churches last Sunday, he absolutely thought that he had got into a Roman Catholic place of worship by mistake. (Laughter.) It was no subject for laughter. He went to join in their common worship, as ordered by the Prayer Book, and he positively was totally unable to understand anything that was going on. He protested against any innovation as most dangerous to both Church and State, and sincerely trusted that what had been good enough for such men as HOOKER, WILSON, and JEREMY TAYLOR, our fathers and grandfathers, might remain in statu quo.

The REV. THOMAS THURIFER said he wished to see the symbolic beauty of the old services restored according, for instance, to the use of Sarum, without raising any doctrinal difficulties. Let Effect come first, and it would be then time enough to inquire into Cause.

The DEAN OF BROAD SANCTUARY would not stop to ask what was the use of Sarum, or what was the use of Convocation. ("Question!") In fact, he would not waste his time in addressing such a set of incapables as he saw around him. ("Order!") The Resolution and Amendments were simply puerile, and the only crumb of consolation was that they were worthless. The aim of most of the speakers reminded him of Mrs. Nickleby's proposal on a trying occasion, when that muddle-headed but kind-hearted lady suggested that "some fair arrangement might be come to with a pudding twice a week or a dumpling which should be very satisfactory and pleasant for all parties." "Which compromise," the Novelist adds, "not exactly meeting the point at issue, nobody took any notice of it." [The Dean then abruptly quitted the House.]

CANON SOFTLY then proposed an Amendment, and a rider, that the words "until otherwise advised" be inserted after "recommends," and the words "and nothing else" and "if he has one" be omitted.

The Resolution, thus amended, was carried with the following rider, that,—

"This House does not hereby give any sanction to any doctrine contrary to what may be ascertained by proper authority in the Prayer Book and Articles; and, further, this House does not intend hereby to pronounce what doctrine is so contained, nor, further, to decide what constitutes the proper authority in such matters."

The Members then heartily congratulated one another on their success, and the Prolocutor pronounced the Benediction.

The House then adjourned.

THE BATTLE OF BAYSWATER.

Our Special Correspondent at the Seat of War telegraphs from the scene of the Summer Manœuvres of 1875.

9 A.M. — The engagement is about to commence. The contending forces are divided into two parties. The Head of the Family (for this occasion only), MR. SMITH, representing the Enemy, and the remainder of the Household Brigade (MRS. SMITH and the Children) representing the Home Forces. It is said that, before muster at breakfast, the Commander of the Home Forces (MRS. SMITH) gave the Enemy a "rough idea" of the scheme of operations. It is supposed that the Infantry require change of air at the sea-side, and that the Enemy is determined upon preventing any march from London.

10 A.M.—The two Forces are drawn up in line in the Breakfast-Room. The Household Brigade have commenced the attack, by throwing out skirmishers (furnished by the Infantry), with the purpose of discovering the intentions of the Enemy. The Head of the Family, much harassed by these attacks, has taken refuge behind the Times newspaper.

11 A.M.—The flank of the Enemy's barricade has been turned by the Infantry, strongly supported by the Commander of the Home Forces.

12 NOON.—The Enemy has taken up a strong position in the Study. His arm-chair entrenchment is being forced by the Commander of the Home Forces, at the head of a company of Whitewashers.

1 P.M.—The Enemy has evacuated the Study, which is now occupied by the Whitewashers.

2 P.M.—The Enemy is preparing to make a last stand in the Dressing Room. He has locked and bolted the doors, and is known to be in possession of much ammunition, in the shape of pens, ink, and paper. The Infantry are engaged on out-post duty on the staircase. The Commander of the Home Forces is waiting for intelligence in the Boudoir.

3 P.M.—The Enemy has been starved out. He has just left the Dressing-Room to make a reconnaissance in the neighbourhood of the Kitchen.

4 P.M.—After an anxious investigation, the Commissariat Department has been proved to have broken down. The Enemy has just received a report from the Cook, informing him that "there is nothing in the house."

5 P.M.—The Enemy has just returned to the Dressing-Room, to find it in the hands of the Home Forces. During the Enemy's foraging expedition an opportunity has been seized to take up the carpet and dismantle the windows. The Enemy's ammunition has been captured, and the Dressing-Room is quite unfit for occupation.

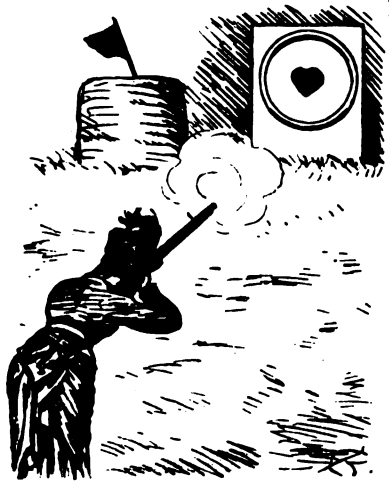
6 P.M.—The Enemy has retreated into the Dressing-Room, where he has been hotly pursued by the Home Forces. Charges are being made with great loss of temper on both sides.

Digitized by Google

7 P.M.—The Home Forces have been strengthened by the arrival of a Reserve Brigade (MR. SMITH's mother-in-law), and a severe engagement is imminent.

8 P.M.—One of the Umpire Staff (a bachelor friend) has arrived, and has directed the Enemy to retire to the Club.

9 P.M.—Recommencement of hostilities. Demonstration of the Commander of the Home Forces strongly supported by the Reserve. Feints, volleys, tears, and grand attack upon the better feelings of the Enemy.



9·30 P.M.—The Enemy is wavering. The last attack of the Home Forces is expected to prove successful.

10 P.M.—Arrival of the Umpire-in-Chief (the Doctor), who, after carefully inspecting the present condition of the Forces of the contending parties, orders the Enemy to retire immediately to Dieppe—the march to commence on the morrow. Triumph of the Commander of the Home Forces.

10·15 P.M.—The Commander of the Home Forces, after declaring peace, has resumed the supreme command. The order to "cease firing" (at first resisted by the Reserve) is now being obeyed on all sides. The Commissariat of the Household Brigade is in magnificent condition. Supplies good and ample.

10·30 P.M.—Commanding Officer's call to supper. End of engagement.

PUNCH AT WIMBLEDON.

OF course, as all the world knows, Mr. Punch looks remarkably well in any and every costume it may please his fancy to assume; but when Mr. Punch wishes to appear to special advantage, he dons his Volunteer uniform. As it would cause great and natural heart-burning were the name of the happy Corps of which LIEUTENANT-COLONEL PUNCH is the Commanding Officer to be divulged, the number of his Regiment shall be carefully concealed. It is enough to say that his uniform, like many other Volunteer uniforms, is rather ornamental than useful. The sleeves of his tunic are covered with the handsomest silver lace—lace which glistens in the sun when there is a sun, and which tarnishes in the rain when the timid civilian unfurls his umbrella. He wears, as a Field Officer, a perfectly useless sabretasch, for the very excellent reason that he has received orders from the Horse Guards to add it to the long list of his accoutrements. On his head he balances a heavy shako, that those who regard him may admire his powers of endurance. His sword is of the regulation length, his high boots are of the regulation tightness, and his spurs are after the regulation pattern. Mounted on his charger, with his holsters containing pocket-pistols loaded to the mouth with Brown Sherry, and his pouch-belt full of the best cigars, he is a man that Mars himself might admire. Nay, more—not only Mars but daughters also.

As Mr. Punch has never missed putting in an annual appearance at Wimbledon, it was not to be expected for a moment that he would neglect to do his duty in July, 1875. Accordingly, on Monday last he presented himself amongst the first of those who claimed the attention of the clerk at the Waterloo Station, and in due time received the necessary voucher franking him to the Camp from the hands of a bowing official. Conscious of the fact that a soldier should always appear "smart" on parade, he refused to enter a smoking carriage. Ladies are charming creatures, but opening doors for them is not an exercise calculated to improve the appearance of regulation buck-skin gloves. A hint to the Guard secured for him a compartment all to himself. It was evidently intended for the use of elderly Generals, as it bore a label suggesting that it was appropriated to the service of aged females. Then in perfect privacy Mr. Punch opened the magic volume that is his greatest solace in times of intense sleeplessness, and began to peruse "Section 10.—Gymnastic Training.—III. Course for Drilled Soldiers."

Having nearly mastered the secrets of the Horse Guards, he found himself, rather suddenly, outside the Station at Wimbledon. A General, of rather genial appearance, had evidently been anticipating his arrival with impatience.

"Ah, here you are at last!" cried the General, inviting Mr. Punch to mount a gaily caparisoned charger.

"Morning, your R.H.," said the man of men, gracefully flinging himself into the saddle. "What is the matter?"

"The matter, indeed! Why, Sir, how do you think we can get to work until you have inspected us?"

"How, indeed!" echoed Mr. Punch. "How are you getting on?"

"Oh, pretty well! I think the regulations you issued last week will be tolerably well observed. I hear that wide-awakes are not to be worn this year on duty, and sentries will mount guard without umbrellas."

"Come," said Mr. Punch, cheerfully; "that 's a great improvement," and the two great men cantered away to the Camp. There was the usual demonstration. The guard turned out, the bugles sounded, and the cheers were deafening.

"Sorry I am obliged to leave you," said the genial General, sorrowfully. "But the fact is, I have a great deal to do just now. I am President of the Association, don't you know, and then I have to look after the Summer Manœuvres over yonder. Ah! I wish you were at the head of the Control."

"Well," said Mr. Punch, modestly. "I think I could help you a little. It shouldn't be such a very difficult matter to feed 10,000 men seventeen miles from Aldershott."

"You have heard of that Mess!"

"It seems to me (to make an old joke) that there was no Mess at all," and Mr. Punch laughed, pleasantly.

"Don't say anything more about it," said the genial General, anxiously. "Take a cigar?"

"Never smoke in uniform, your R.H." replied Mr. Punch. "Besides it is your last—not that that matters much! If what somebody says is true—there must be plenty of weeds at Aldershott!"

The genial General shook his head, and slowly rode away.

Thus the two Generals parted—the Man of the Sword to umpire-in-chief at Aldershott. The Man of the Pen to inspect the Volunteers.

"And so," pondered the pensive Punch, "the Riflemen are smarter this year. They no longer contrive uniforms of peculiar construction. They no longer combine the stern majesty of the military tunic with the graceful outlines of the alpaca umbrella." And Mr. Punch was well pleased. The greatest warrior of the age (amiably dispensing with the chairing that certain enthusiastic votaries of Mars would have forced upon him) wandered slowly through the tented field.

"Ah, the old, old form," murmured Mr. Punch mournfully, as he neared a well-remembered group—a group he had seen in years gone by, a group he will see again, if Ridicule is powerless, and Laughter is in vain. "Every inch a soldier, except a foot of hat!" commented Mr. Punch sorrowfully, as the figure of a stalwart Scot, clothed in the garb of old Gael, plus a "chimney-pot" (according to the regulations laid down by that most eminent firm of cap-contrivers, MESSRS. LINCOLN AND BENNETT, came into view. "Yes, and every foot a civilian, except a few inches of shako!" he added, as he noticed that a gentleman wearing what appeared to be "The Tourist suit as advertised," had donned for the nonce a distinctly military head-dress. "And yet they say that our Volunteers have no notion of discipline and smartness!" and he sighed heavily as he hurried away from a picture which was at once painful and excessively absurd.

"Let me get me to the shooting," he said more cheerfully.

"Well, my man," said he, on his arrival at the targets, to the marker, "and how are we getting on, eh? Outers all right? Ricochets in fine condition? Surely that touched the target?"

Digitized by Google

"No, Sorr," replied the intelligent official—an Irish boy, by the way—"the last hit, Sorr, was a miss, Sorr!"

"Indeed," murmured Mr. Punch, "from the sound I should have taken it for a bull!" Smiling to himself at the quaintness of this merry conceit, the Commander-in-Chief wandered to another part of the ground. The tents were regularly pitched, and their occupants seemed to be in good spirits, and hard at work. Altogether, Mr. Punch was well satisfied with what he saw, and made up his mind to write a favourable report of the Camp and its belongings. Again he approached the shooting grounds of the happy Riflemen, and listened to the sweet music of many bands as the sounds floated past him, borne to the targets on the zephyr wings of summer breezes. It may be seen from the construction of the above sentence that he was rapidly becoming poetical, when he was sternly recalled to prose by the following dialogue—

"Sergeant," whispered a timid voice, "have you seen my Missis about?"

'Seen 'em!" thundered the Sergeant—the poor man was tired and out of temper—"Seen 'em! I believe yer! High, low, right and left, and all over the place!"

"Ah," murmured Mr. Punch, thinking of the fair sex, but not exactly of his "Missis," "why do not the Ladies make Wimbledon one of their rights! How nice it would be if this Camp were occupied by Amazons."

He had scarcely uttered the words when silvery tones sounded in his enchanted ears. He listened, looked, and lo! the prettiest of shakos upon the glossiest of chignons—(See in margin a thumb-nail sketch of the effect).

Cautiously advancing in the wake of this lovely vision, his progress was arrested by a female sentinel—with the prettiest voice—softly whispering, "Who goes there?"

"A friend!" replied Mr. Punch, enthusiastically. "But what do you do here, my dear Madam?"

"Is this not the very place for us, Mr. Punch?" answered the Sentinel, smiling. "Is not Wimbledon in July the Head Quarters of Flirtation?"

Mr. Punch was perfectly charmed. For a few minutes he could not utter a word. On every side he found proofs of female taste. Even the ammunition brown paper had been converted into bonnet peaks.

"Ah, TENNYSON!" he exclaimed. "You are at last outdone. You thought of a College of Women, but I have discovered a Camp of Girls."

"Not all girls, Mr. Punch!" said a stern voice, and to his horror the Great Creature found himself confronted by his better half, wearing the costume of a Major-General. "I will teach you to flirt, Sir."

"My dear," mildly replied the luckless one, "I do not require teaching."

"Let him be tried by Court-Martial," and in a moment Mr. Punch was roughly seized by the collar.

* * * * *

"Tickets, please Sir!" Mr. Punch woke to find himself certainly at Wimbledon, but still with a copy of "The Queen's Regulations" lying open on the cushion beside him.

And this was Mr. Punch's dream of Wimbledon, suggested by memories of the past—he may, perhaps, have something to say about the present of Wimbledon—in the future.

A STOCKBROKER'S SOLILOQUY.

Do you remember, O MATILDA sweet!
When steaks and you began to get so dear,
How everybody thought it very queer
If Man and Wife got bread and cheese to eat,
And now and then a modest pint of beer,
Upon that hum-drum sum, three hundred pounds a-year?

And yet we both were brave enough to marry,
And of "incumbrances" disdained the fear.
Now we have eight: their little boots appear
Enough to make me wish them at Old Harry,
For everything is twenty times as dear,
And I, as yet, but make three thousand pounds a-year

A precious lot of tin it takes to gild a
Life such as ours. Yquem succeedeth beer:
For your old Exmoor you 've to drop a tear,
And drive a pair of dark brown cobs, Matilda!
Happily, on the Stock Exchange, my dear,
'Tis but a step from three to thirty thou. a year.

Make money, somehow! 'Twas my father's fancy:
I've an hereditary taint, that 's clear;
And without coin should feel uncommon queer:
Wherefore I practise City necromancy,
Kill many clients (names do not appear),
In hope to fairly earn my thirty thou. a year

And when I 've got a snug estate in Kent
Or Surrey (London should be somewhere near,
For country life is rather tame, I fear),
Reposing calmly on my cent. per cent.,
Sipping my port, I 'll say, "MATILDA dear!
Did we once live upon three hundred pounds a year?"

A City Chair (of Ease).

THE Gotham Committee will shortly proceed to the election of a Professor of Rhetoric. Respectable mediocrity is essential, but no special qualifications are requisite. Testimonials, however numerous and weighty, are of little value, and will probably not be read. No great power of voice is required, as the previous exertions of the Committee have been successful in limiting the audiences to about six persons. Preference will be given to any one connected with a great City company, or the protégé of an elector.

"What 's in a Name?"

AT the Suffolk Agricultural Show held at Stowmarket June 24th and 25th, the animal (one of MR. SEXTON'S) which took the DUKE OF HAMILTON'S prize as the best boar in the yard was named Dr. Kenealy, as claiming descent from Disturbance and Bombast!

SHADOWS OF DARKNESS.

BISHOPS and others very commonly talk of "shades of thought in the Church." Respecting the dogma symbolised by Ritualist practices, these shades of so-called thought appear to the rational mind's eye shades of nonsense.

Digitized by Google

THE PLACE TO SPEND A HAPPY SUNDAY.

Reprobate. "BRIGHTON BE BLOWED! THISH 'SH MY AQUARIUM! OPEN O' SHUNDAYS, TOO!!"

STEAM V. SUNSHINE.

(A Melibœan Moan elicited by MR. GIBBS'S plan for Haymaking by Artificial Heat.—See "Times" of June 7th.)

ANOTHER old proverb must go to the wall!
"Make hay while the sun shines!"—Pooh! pooh! Not at all!
Since we 're able, they say, in this new-fangled way,
To make it by night just as well as by day;
That Moloch, Machinery, 's destined to master all,
Playing the deuce with the pretty and pastoral.
Could VIRGIL return, it might move him to weeping
To watch our mechanical mowing and reaping;
And now, just to clench practicality's yoke,
They 're cashiering poor Phœbus in favour of coke.
For haymaking 's done, on this precious new plan,
By the aid of an engine, a stove, and a fan!
Alas for Arcadia! The Steam-engine frolics
Where thy swains sang and piped, till our modern bucolics
Are bare of romance—and starved fancy but fibs
When it owns inspiration in MECHI or GIBBS!
The poor picturesque! it is pretty well spent
In its fight with that pitiless tyrant, "Per cent."
Though RUSKIN may rave, and the Muses bemoan,
The steam-sinewed despot will soon reign alone.
O, Jupiter-Pluvius, Clerk of the Weather,
One cannot acquit you of blame altogether;
Did you do your devoir, and Sol stick to his work,
There yet were a chance for the Haymaker's Fork!

Considerate Cousins.

A LARGE number of Americans now in England celebrated their national Declaration of Independence by a fête held on the 5th of July, at the Crystal Palace. Not one of the speakers abused the British. Was it that they recollected that they were in a glass house, and so must not throw stones?

VIVISECTION COMMISSION QUESTIONS.

To what extent do you think the practice of cutting up one's friends prevails in this country?

Under what circumstances do you consider that we are warranted in cutting each other?

What distinction do you draw between cutting a man and cutting a man dead?

Have you known any unpleasant results follow a slashing article?

Can you furnish any trustworthy statistics as to the number of authors who have been cut up within the last seven years?

Have you turned your attention to cutaway coats in connection with the subject of this present investigation?

Have any instances come under your notice of persons who have appeared terribly cut up?

How would you act towards bores? Would you feel the slightest compunction at cutting them short?

Have you ever known any untoward consequences arise from cutting at whist?

You are not required to criminate yourself, but have you ever made short cuts, and, if so, with what results?

What course of conduct should you pursue if you were called upon, at a moment's notice, to divide two Ladies at the dinner-table?

Canada's Luck.

"THE Dominion" can bear its High Governor's Chair
To instal such a strenuous puffer * in,
While 'tis clearest of facts, from his speeches and acts,—
Name apart—it has not got a Duffer in."

* See my LORD DUFFERIN'S glowing and genial praises of the Dominion at the dinner given him by the Canada Company last week.

ADAGE ON THE PUBLIC WORSHIP ACT.—Those who play at Vestments must expect Suits

Digitized by Google

"TOUT VIENT À QUI SAIT ATTENDRE."

SHOUTING HEARD—ENGINE WHISTLES FRANTICALLY—BREAKS APPLIED VIOLENTLY—TRAIN STOPS—ACCIDENT, NO DOUBT—ALARM OF FIRST-CLASS PASSENGERS—STOUT GENT FLIES AT COMMUNICATOR—CHILD SHRIEKS—TERRIFIED LADY CALLS OUT, "HELP! GUARD! WHAT IS IT? LET US OUT!"

Guard. "O, NO FEAR, MISS. ON'Y DRIVER HE JUST SEE A LOT O' FINE MUSHYROONS, MISS, AND WE——HE LIKE 'EM FOR BREAKFAST. ALL RIGHT! AWAY Y' GO!!"

OSTENSIBLE OCCUPATIONS OF JESUITS.

MR. PUNCH, anxious to partially quench MR. WHALLEY's insatiable thirst for useless knowledge, takes leave to offer him the information which the House of Commons cruelly denied him. Mr. Punch, always generous, goes beyond what the Honourable Member asks, and furnishes him with infallible marks by which to distinguish a Jesuit.

Ministers and Ex-Ministers.—It is sad to think that there are many Jesuits in this small class—perhaps there are few exceptions. A pamphlet against the Vatican, a novel whose princely hero is surrounded by Monsignore, a work on Foreign Exchange (the hidden meaning of which phrase is a change to a foreign religion), a Plea for National Holidays, an article in the Contemporary Review, are unfailing marks of Jesuitry.

Members of both Houses.—Too, too many. Their ostensible occupation, which nobody imagines their real one, is to make laws for England. Any Peer who plays Polo is a Jesuit. Any Peer who writes books of travel is a Jesuit. Any M.P. who mentions the Pope, in praise or dispraise, is a Jesuit. Any M.P. who never mentions the Pope is the greatest Jesuit of all.

Novelists.—The author of Never too Late to Mend is a Jesuit, because Jesuits can never be mended. The author of Can we Forgive Her? is a Jesuit, since they never forgive anybody. The author of Cometh up as a Flower is a Jesuit, for they come up like weeds. The author of Sweet and Twenty is a Jesuit, since there are more than twenty of them—by no means sweet. The author of Three Feathers is a Jesuit, because the title of his book has a mystical significance.

Bishops and Clergy.—It is clear that a full catalogue would, in this case, be impossible. No one, perhaps, could supply it but the DEAN OF WESTMINSTER, Honorary Clerical Secretary to the Jesuits of England. But any Clergyman who preaches in a gown, or a surplice, or an alb, or a cope, or a white necktie, or black gloves, or Oxford shoes, or a hunting coat, or cricketing flannels, is assuredly a Jesuit.

As it is impossible to squeeze a Jesuit Directory into one number of Punch, it may be well to conclude by warning MR. WHALLEY that a Jesuit in the family is very dangerous. He should carefully watch the behaviour of his servants on Fridays and fast-days. Any cook who on those days spoils his dinner for the good of his soul, any groom who keeps his horses without oats, any valet who gives him a damp shirt, any maid-servant who declines to see a follower, should be turned out of the house at once. Jesuits, depend upon it.

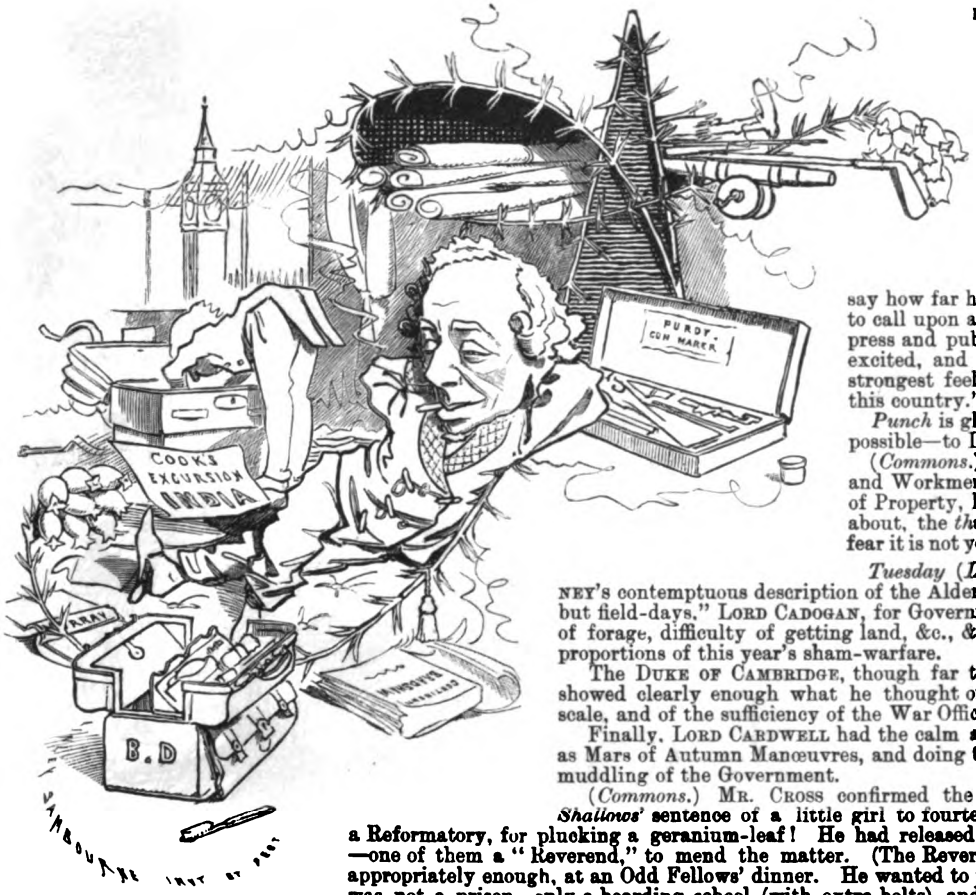
But is not Mr. Punch carrying owls to Athens, or coals to Newcastle? Though descended from a WHALLEY, who was first cousin to JOHN HAMPDEN and OLIVER CROMWELL, is not the junior Member of Peterborough

FATHER SUPERIOR OF THE JESUITS OF ENGLAND?

Those awful words should be printed in blood—in asinine blood, if possible. Will the Doctor submit to the lancet?

St. Swithin, July 15th, 1875.

I'LL remember, I'll remember,
How this Summer fleeted by,
With the warmth of a December
In the middle of July!



New Reading.

(From the First Satire of HORACE, by SUB-LIEUTENANT SORBONES, whose Corps, the Hundred-and-Worst, has been taking part in "The Manœuvres"—which the Militia have been spared.)

"MILES ait, multo jam fractus membra labore, Militia est potior: quid enim? Non curritur- -"

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

ALL relations are, more or less, troublesome. But of all troublesome relations give us Cousins German—(so argued my LORD PENZANCE, Lords, Monday, July 12)—if they are to be allowed to lay down the new principle of international obligation, that every State is bound to frame laws for preserving not only its own internal peace, but the internal peace of all its neighbours.

LORD DERBY hardly thinks COUNT PERPONCHER means to go as far as this; but admits it is not easy to say how far he does go. "For one foreign Court to call upon another, under menaces, to silence its press and public-speaking, was an act which had excited, and he hoped would always excite, the strongest feeling of sympathy and indignation in this country."

Punch is glad to say ditto—as emphatically as possible—to LORD DERBY.

(Commons.) In a fearful fog over the Employers and Workmen, and the Conspiracy and Protection of Property, Bills. The longer the House groped about, the thicker the fog seemed to grow. We fear it is not yet cleared off. (See Friday's Essence.)

Tuesday (Lords).—In answer to LORD WAVENEY's contemptuous description of the Aldershot operations as "not manœuvres, but field-days," LORD CADOGAN, for Government, sung very small, pleading cost of forage, difficulty of getting land, &c., &c., in extenuation of the very petty proportions of this year's sham-warfare.

The DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, though far too well-disciplined to let out loud, showed clearly enough what he thought of the value of operations on a large scale, and of the sufficiency of the War Office reasons for shirking them this year.

Finally, LORD CARDWELL had the calm and congenial satisfaction of posing as Mars of Autumn Manœuvres, and doing the magnanimous over the military muddling of the Government.

(Commons.) MR. CROSS confirmed the incredible story of the Spalding Shallows' sentence of a little girl to fourteen days' in prison and four years in a Reformatory, for plucking a geranium-leaf! He had released the girl, and rebuked the Shallows—one of them a "Reverend," to mend the matter. (The Reverend Gentleman has since explained, appropriately enough, at an Odd Fellows' dinner. He wanted to play Providence. The Reformatory was not a prison—only a boarding-school (with extra bolts), and he really thought the girl would be much better done by there than at home. Spalding evidently rejoices in a "paternal" magistracy.)

MR. SULLIVAN wants a Science and Art Department in Dublin—with Boilers of its own (and a hot Cole of its own, too, MR. SULLIVAN? Surely, there are combustibles enough in Ireland already.) SIR STAFFORD promised that Government would see what could be done. Ireland—to judge by what she has done, unaided—would surely pay, and pay well, for Art-teaching, in results, if not in money. Whatever she has not, Sister Cinderella has a taste.

MR. P. A. TAYLOR wants the publication of the annual returns of crime and punishment in the Navy resumed. The Admiralty object that the return, unexplained, is injurious to discipline, and exposes officers to misconstruction. Is there not a return published of punishments in the Army?

MR. WHALLEY moved for a Select Committee for his great Jesuit Hunt.

"He moved, but nothing followed—the dead air
Was mute and motionless."

No one either seconded or opposed him, and so the matter—commissione infectâ—dropped. What was the Doctor about? WHALLEY is doubtless great, but is there no BIGGAR?

Wednesday (Commons).—Two "Previous Questions" and an Adjournment.

MR. HEYGATE wants cumulative voting in Election of Aldermen by Town-Councillors. Very good as far as it goes. But why not in Elections of Town-Councillors? Opinion on cumulative voting generally wants ripening.

SIR C. DILKE moved a Bill to enforce the Allotment Acts—the last dating from 1873. Doubtful if the Bills, as they are, do not provide sufficient coercive machinery; and, besides, there has not been time to test the working of the last Act.

Adjournment of debate on MR. M'CARTHY's Motion to turn the Irish Public Works Commissioners into Reclaimers of Waste Lands, for selling or letting. Ye gods, and loaves and fishes! what a gigantic vista of land-jobbery—

"Heights piled on heights, and depths in depths withdrawn"—

rises to the dazzled view!

Thursday (Commons.)—The vote for the PRINCE OF WALES's India Bill was fought through the House, with just enough haggling to deprive the appropriation of perfect graciousness.

Everybody, but MR. DISRAELI and MR. GLADSTONE, seems to think the Government has done the thing shabbily. To be sure, the Government ought to know best.

Punch, with MR. FAWCETT, would have preferred that England should have paid every penny of the bill. India has certainly not invited the PRINCE, and is as little in a position to invite him as she is to decline his visit: is certainly not as well able to afford the expense of entertaining him as Canada was. As to the feeling of the Working-men (Punch is a representative Working-man, and knows), nineteenth-twentieths of them—as MR. BURT, with characteristic straight-forwardness, admitted—neither think, nor care a ha'penny about the matter: the other twentieth, including the blatant gentlemen who get up nasty noisy little mobs in Trafalgar Square, and who claim to speak for the Working-men, because they speak, peculiarly, for themselves, oppose the visit and the grant for it—as they oppose everything suggested by their betters, and, in particular, all grants to members of the Royal Family. They have found just enough voice in Parliament to show how thoroughly they stand opposed to general opinion.

SIR WILFRID, for once, was rather forced, than gracious, in his fooling. The only hit of his speech worthy of himself or Punch was the suggestion that, if the PRINCE's trip was to be recommended from the educational stand-point, it should be in the interests rather of Ministers than the PRINCE. For example, what a good thing it would be if the President and Secretary of the Board of Trade could have the opportunity of a voyage to India to learn *some*thing about shipping!

Digitized by Google

A DISCUSSION ON WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

SIR HERCULES FITZANAK ADMITS THAT WOMEN OCCASIONALLY RIVAL MEN IN INTELLECT AND CHARACTER, BUT CONTENDS THAT THEIR INFERIORITY IN STRENGTH AND STATURE WILL PROVE AN INSUPERABLE BAR TO THEIR EVER BEING PLACED ON A FOOTING OF EQUALITY WITH THE STERNER SEX. MISS MILLICENT MILLEFLEURS SAYS NOTHING, BUT THINKS A GREAT DEAL.

MR. BRIGHT'S was the happiest suggestion,—that the PRINCE'S unfailing and unforced courtesy, kindliness, and graciousness might, perhaps, serve as a lesson to Anglo-Indian Officials, in their dealings with the "niggers."

This set up SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL'S back, and brought him on to his legs. Now SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL on his legs with his back up, is an animal so formidable that the House—faint and hungry, and hard on dinner-time,—absolutely howled in horror of the onslaught. They were reduced to submission by the Chairman's stern threat to clear the Bar—and then SIR GEORGE was allowed to clear the House without farther expressions of dismay.

At ten, progress was reported to allow SIR CHARLES DILKE to bring forward his Motion in favour of making our next Leap, not in the dark, but in as much light as inquiry can bring to bear on it. MR. FAWCETT and MR. GOSCHEN supported the Motion. MR. DISRAELI, author of the Ten Minutes' Bill, opposed it. "Anomalies?" Of course. We were a people, as well as Parliament, of Anomalies. Nothing in our political machinery worked so well as Anomalies. He would stand or fall by Anomalies. He declined to be bound by the judgment of any number of Quarterly Reviewers, which of the rival schemes for the representation of Minorities had least practical good sense in it. Only two things. He set his face against equal electoral divisions, and put his foot down on the Boroughs. The Boroughs would last his time. Après nous le déluge. He did not see what could be the good of a Royal Commission to inquire into antediluvial arrangements. That is about the English of the PREMIER'S highly educational, philosophical, and far-sighted discourse, which preceded the rejection of SIR CHARLES'S Motion by 190 to 120.

Friday (Lords). — Another suggestion (from LORD GALLOWAY) that we should pull up CARDWELL'S Army-seed, to see how it is growing. The DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE gave the usual warning—not yet often enough repeated, it would seem—that nothing can be so bad for the Army as constant change, or suggestion of change, which is almost as bad.

(Commons.) In Committee on the Labour Laws Bills. Fog of Tuesday apparently clearing up, but only to settle down again over the Bills at last, thicker than ever. The united wits of MESSRS. CROSS and LOWE have elaborated a new clause—of general application—in lieu of the Criminals Law Amendment Act, 1871 (the Picketing Act). It proposes three months' imprisonment "for intimidation, or serious annoyance, by violence or otherwise, with a view to compel any person to do or abstain from doing anything he has legal right to do or abstain from doing."

Everybody approved of the clause as a whole, and then proceeded to pick holes in every part of it.

It is objected that it would apply to the tradesman with a small account, who pervades MR. BRIEFLESS'S front door or club steps, with a view to the pleasure of an interview with that impecunious gentleman.

It really seems as if, in this Bill, the labours of CROSS, LOWE & Co. have only ended in making vaguer what was too vague already, and in stretching the law which they profess a desire to restrain.

Again, in the Employers and Workmen's Bill, MR. CROSS has succeeded in getting rid of imprisonment, only to bring it in at a further stage, as the remedy of the surety who has to pay damages for the defaulter.

ST. SWITHIN'S tail of fog has apparently invaded the House and the heads of Honourable Members. "Good intention and bad invention" seems the only appropriate description of MR. CROSS'S and the House's labours at these Labour Bills thus far. They might be called the Labour-in-vain Bills. The red-fire for the blaze of triumph (see our last Cartoon but one)—we sorely fear—has been lighted too soon.

The last battle of the Session, (it is to be hoped) over the Judicature Act. Grand triangular duel between those "eminent combatants," SIR W. H. HARCOURT, W. E. GLADSTONE, and SIR H. JAMES. SIR W. HARCOURT says the strength of the Bench is wasted by bad arrangements—that the number of Judges, "has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished." MR. GLADSTONE said the same thing, and sang, to boot, the pæan and dirge of economy—a virtue once dear to statesmen, now (he says) respected and bewailed by himself alone. A fig for efficiency!

SIR H. JAMES, on the other hand, maintains that it is arrears, not Judges, that have increased, are increasing, and ought to be diminished.

Who shall decide when Q.C.'s disagree?

(Evening Sitting.) — Shannon navigation—the old old story. The O'CONNOR DON complains of extravagant plans, and useless expenditure. SIR M. H. BEACH complains, that though the Landlords are very willing to tap the national purse to the tune of hundreds of thousands, they refuse to drain their own pockets of a penny.

MR. BUTT draws the moral that the House of Commons is incapable of dealing with Irish Local affairs.

Mr. Punch is unable to draw any moral.

Digitized by Google

But he sees there never is any spending of money in or for Ireland, but it is sure to lead to a cross-fire of charge and countercharge of plunder, jobbery, and mismanagement, which tempts JOHN BULL to wish he could, with a clean conscience, and a clear balance-sheet, wash his hands of the whole troublesome and dirty business.

DR. LUSH urged the grievances of Army Medical Officers.

MR. HARDY showed a fair readiness to deal fairly with them.

THE PLAINT OF A PIGMY.

PITY me, kind Mr. Punch.

I am a small man, and am troubled by small matters, which to greater men may seem of insignificant account. Just now one of my annoyances is the custom which prevails of Ladies wearing high-heeled shoes, and piling up their hair in the very height of fashion, which at present is an altitude of highly inconvenient extent. Thanks to this, although I really measure fully five feet and four inches and a quarter in my stockings, I appear a perfect pigmy when I venture to a flower-show or other fashionable place of feminine resort.

Although an energetic dancer, I rarely go to balls, for I dislike to dance with partners by whose side I look a dwarf. As for the Academy, all the pictures on the line are utterly eclipsed by the head-dresses in front of me, and I vainly stand on tiptoe to get a passing glance at what I came to see. So too at the Opera I can only catch a glimpse of Amina, or Rosina, or Elsa, or Zerlina, as they flit across the space between the piled-up curls before me. Indeed I seriously think that MESSRS. GYE AND MAPLESON should in charity reserve some few front rows of the Stalls, for the exclusive use and benefit of simple gentlemen of short stature, who are otherwise debarred from a full sight of the stage.

In common fairness, then, I hold that persons of the fair sex, if they would deserve that epithet, should diminish their unfair proportions when they appear in public places, and should abandon the unnatural excrescences of fashion which add so hugely to their height. At present, though in point of mere material fact they are looked up to, they hardly can expect to be held in high regard, at least, by those to whom their presence is so highly inconvenient as it now continually is to

Yours, SAM SHORT.

P.S.—Somebody in SHAKSPEARE somewhere says something about the waves "curling their monstrous heads." Swell Ladies now are like the waves—the swells of the sex—when they are at their toilette and preparing for a party.

DIRT AND DOLLARS.

A Modern Morality (from over the Atlantic).

"TOUCH not pitch!"—an ancient saw!
Time has brought a 'cuter teacher.
Stir it well, then go to law,
(If you 're a sensation preacher)—
Go to law, display the dirt,
Make parade of public laving;
Reputation may be hurt,
But in pence you 'll find a saving.
Easy dupes of holy gush—
Stuff to make old Mawworm blush—
There will press to make a purse
(Sickly cant finds ready scholars)
All your costs to reimburse:
Dread not dirt—it brings the dollars!

"MASTERLY INACTIVITY."

An Apologue.

Ursa. Nice jungle that of yours, good neighbour Lion.
Leo. Humph! Glad you like it!
Ursa. I have ne'er set eye on
A neater. And your hunting-ground 's extensive.
Leo. Yours is not narrow! Not to be offensive,
You 're good at stretching!
Ursa. India Rubber beats
Mere Russia Leather at elastic feats!
Leo. Well, I've no wish to widen my domain;
But let them 'ware who 'd trespass!
Ursa. 'Tis with pain
I mark suspicion in that dexter eye.
Some Gobemouches have been hinting I would try
That foolish game!
Leo. You 'd hardly find it pay.
I look a drowsy brute, at least, by day,
But I have eyes,—and claws;—may seem to bungle,
But mean to be sole master of my jungle.
So, verbum sap.!
Ursa. Now, after all my labours,
Such hints do hurt me! We should be good neighbours.
Leo. Only too near me, please, don't poke your nose,
Or we may jostle.
Ursa. Why, you don't suppose——
Leo. No need for supposition, just at present,—
But among friends some elbow room is pleasant.
Ursa. A "neutral zone" you would perhaps encourage,
Wherein our Cubs might mingle, but not forage?
Leo. Thanks, no; they might get squabbling, and the quarter
Become a chronic kettle for hot water.
A neutral tint sounds safe, yet black and white
Might think the rival tints not balanced quite,
And then!——
Ursa. But is there nothing can be done
To keep the peace between us?
Leo. If each one
Stick to his jungle, we can hardly quarrel;
If not, there 'll be a shindy,—that 's a "moral"!
And, spite of talks and treaties,—by the past
I'm judging,—it must come to that at last.
Ursa. What, fighting?
Leo. No, the alternatives I mention.
But I shall seek no pretext for contention.
I've had enough of fighting in my time.
Ursa. Your calm indifference is quite sublime!
'Tis fine for you, who 've collared all you want,
To cry "No grabbings!"
Leo. Well, I own that 's cant.
Some of my backers talk a deal of bunkum.
I 'd not fie-fie my—friends, we 'll say,—nor funk 'em.
Between crass napping and a chronic scare
I 'd take the middle course. This is my lair,
A crib I've fought for, and intend to keep:
I don't like fidgets, but I 'm not asleep.
I guess I 'm safe, but mean to watch my border,
With one eye open, and my claws in order!

Wimbledon under Water.

DRENCHED by Wednesday's and Thursday's incessant rain last week, the butts on Wimbledon Common must, remarked a donkey, have become water-butts. The continued down-pour of cats and dogs, however, put out no bull's-eyes, and failed to prevent competing riflemen from making sundry. But weather unfavourable to the presence of muslin, even under canvas, precluded the gallant Volunteers almost, if not quite entirely from the possibility of making any of those sheep's-eyes which many and perhaps most of them are prone to cast on every suitable occasion.

Prayer to Ladies with Parasols.

(At the Pig-pens of Agricultural Shows.)

"THE rude four fathers of the ham let sleep."

M.P.'s MOTTO (TOWARDS THE RECESS).—"Fiat justitium,* ruat cœlum." Anglicè, "Adjournment, at any price."

* No, it isn't a misprint. "Justitium" is good Latin for a "cessation from business."

Digitized by Google

SONG ON ST. SWITHUN'S DAY.

(HAWFINCH sings.)

SING St. Swithun,
Pace be with un,
We 've had too good call to say;
Rain a pourun,
Tempests roarun,
All droo-out his live-long day.

Rest and bless un—
I 'd address un,
If so be dead Saints could hear;
Say unto un,
"Doan't 'ee rewun
All the whate, and wutts, and bere.

"Though the apples,
In their chapels
As the Popish Priesties says,
Thee hast christen'd,
Hope thee bissent
Gwiun to souse us varty days.

"Hay and clover
Scarce got over
Carryun droo the showers o' rain—
Ha' compassion;
Spare for thrashun,
Plaze doan't drench and spile the grain.

"Never scatter
From thy water-
Pot no wus than gentle drops.
Doan't upset un;
For to let un
Flood our fields and swamp our crops.

"Turmuts, mangul,
Swedes, thee spangle
Like wi' glitterun dimunds pure.
Flush the roots up,
Plim the fruits up,
Gie 'um what they wants—not moor.

"Safe the golden
Ears, a-holdun
Harvest-whoam in thankful frame
For fine weather,
Altogether,
Then we 'll prize St. Swithun's name.

"Kill the fatted
Pig; wi' platted
Straa whilst all our heads be crowned,
Banquet dish up
Fit for Bishop.
Let the good strong beer goo round."

RIFLES AND TRIFLES.

IT is no uncommon thing at our rural rifle-meetings to see some paltry little prizes "donated" (as our cousins say) by certain of the enterprising tradesmen of the district, who want to see their names paraded in the newspapers. Prizes of this sort are generally fitter for a raffle than a rifle-meeting, for they not infrequently consist of such small articles as a cigar-case, or a corkscrew, or a pair of leather gaiters, or a bottle of old port. With the knowledge that the eyes of all the "constant readers" in the country are upon them and their presents, MR. STITCHER gives a pair of his famed fifteen-shilling trousers, and his neighbour (MR. SCISSARS) presents one of his celebrated patent seamless shirts; while MR. PUFFER perhaps offers a small photographic album, and MR. DUFFER makes the gift of a pair of hobnailed boots.

Everybody knows that prizes such as these are chiefly given as advertisements, and everybody knows, too, that there is a proverb about looking at gift-horses in the mouth. A walk through the prize-tent at Wimbledon this year will show that such advertisements have crept into the Camp, and, for the credit of the one great meeting of the year, it might be well to keep such little things in check. Unless more care be taken in revisal of the prize-list, we may live to see a Bath bun or a penny trumpet presented to be shot for, or perhaps a box of pipe-lights or an ounce of lollipops.

NULLI Secundus—"Seconded by None." (New translation by the Member for Peterborough.)

AN OLD FRIEND WITH A NEW FACE.

(Adapted to the present times.)

One, two,
At the Zoo.
Three, four,
Rifle Corps.
Five, six,
Ritualist tricks.
Seven, eight,
Adulterate.
Nine, ten,
Fast Young Men.
Eleven, twelve,
"Bills" to shelve.
Thirteen, fourteen,
Flirting, courting.
Fifteen, sixteen,
Porci pepsine.
Seventeen, eighteen,
Ladies skating.
Nineteen, twenty,
Humbug—plenty!

THINGS INDIFFERENT.

THERE is common sense in the declaration by the REV. E. H. PLUMPTRE in the Times:—

"I, for one, would hope that there are yet seven thousand men among us who have not bowed the knee to this Baal of passionate partisanship, and who would be equally ready to orientate and wear a chasuble to-morrow, or to adhere to the surplice and the north end, according to the interpretation which LORD PENZANCE may put on these conflicting and scarcely intelligible rubrics."

Sensibly said. Never mind how loudly the Baalites of passionate partisanship, right and left, cry out that this is the language of Mr. Facing-both-ways.

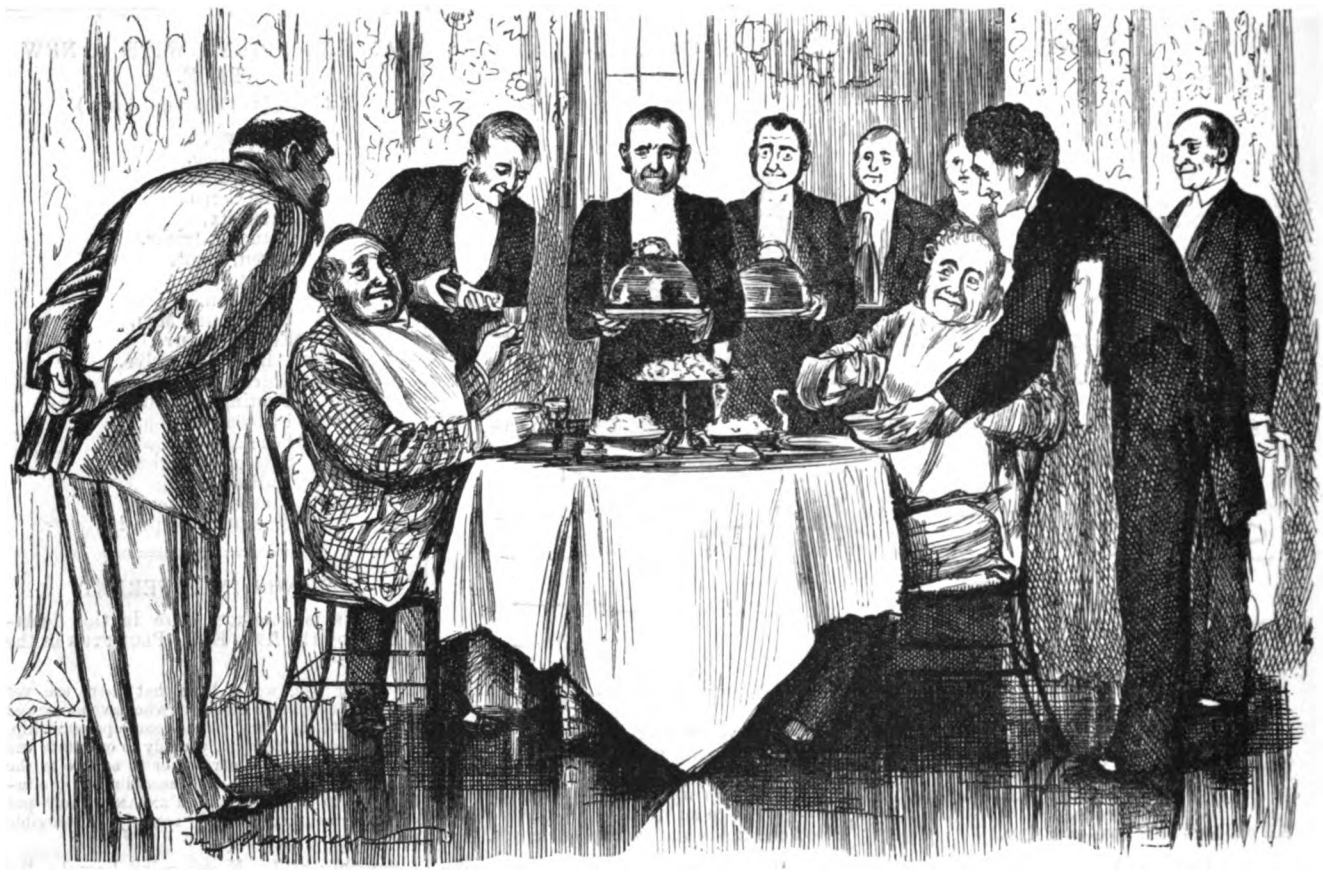
POEM BY A PARIENT.

On "Earth to Earth."

FRIENDLY Societies, afore,
Used to be called a ugly name,
Which now it won't be right no more
As Corfin Clubs to brand the same.

With wickerwork instead of wood
The corfins will be done away.
So much to a Insurer's good
More for to sack, and less to pay.

So, while the Missus rocks the kid,
I smokes my pipe, and bears in view
The cradle will but want a lid
To sarve the t'other purpose too.



RÉUNION IN THE RAIN.

THE Garden Party which was to have been given at Holland House on Wednesday, was postponed till Thursday, when, owing to the still unfavourable weather, it took place in-doors. This information we owe to an Irish correspondent, who adds, that had the Garden-Party at Holland House been given in the garden on either of those days, it would have been entirely a water-party on shore.

MR. GLADSTONE'S AWKWARD QUESTION.

THERE may be different answers to W. E. G.'s question, "Is the Church of England worth preserving?" but one thing is clear—the jars are ready

Digitized by Google

"WHEN THE CAT'S AWAY."

(MRS. WILKINS AND MRS. TOMKINS HAVE DETERMINED TO SPEND THE AUTUMN HOLIDAY, WITH THEIR FAMILIES, AT SOME FASHIONABLE FRENCH WATERING-PLACE. TO SAVE EXPENSE, THEY SEND WILKINS AND TOMKINS OVER FIRST, TO LOOK ABOUT THEM, AND TAKE CHEAP AND SUITABLE LODGINGS. TO SAVE TROUBLE, W. AND T. GO TO THE BEST HOTELS, AND LIVE AT THE RATE OF ABOUT FIVE THOUSAND A-YEAR EACH.)

MINE HOST WISHES TO KNOW "IF THE MESSIEURS ARE CONTENT!"

Wilkins. "'CONTONG!' JE VOO KRWAW, MON GARCONG!"

Tomkins. "'CONTONG!' JUSTE NE LE SOMMES NOUS PAS, VIEUX COQ!"

A "DAGGER-SCENE" OF TO-DAY.

A Dramatic Fragment.

SCENE—Seat beneath an old Cherry-tree in a "careless-ordered Garden." EDWIN and ANGELINA discovered—say, philosophising.

Edwin (pointing to thing of silk and sheen in ANGELINA'S hand)—
"Is this a dagger that——"
Angelina. O spare your breath!
You've scarcely the physique to play Macbeth.
Leave that to MR. IRVING!
Edwin. Hyrcan creature!
Your words at least are lethal. But this feature
In—shall I say your panoply?—does stagger
Your most devoted.
Angelina. Frightened at a dagger?
Edwin. Ahem! Not quite; but what with châtelaines,
And bossy belts, and queerly clanking chains,
You girls are getting mediæval, very,
Not to say Amazonian!
Angelina (proffering fruit). Have a cherry?
Edwin (insinuatingly). Yes, of home-growth!
Angelina (brandishing dagger-sheath). Hold off, audacious man!
Or dread the— — (Draws weapon.)
Edwin. By the powers of Love—a Fan!
Angelina. Ah, what a falling-off!
Edwin. I'm not so sure;
A lunge may be less fatal than a lure.
A well-played fan's a cunning captivator.
You see I've not forgotten my Spectator.
Angelina. Who's he?
Edwin. Why ADDISON.
Angelina. I think, "Eavesdropper"
For that Paul Pry had been a name more proper!
Edwin. Aha! he saw and heard too much! And yet
There did exist the species "Fan-Coquette."
Of course it's now extinct. I make apology
For my excursion into Palæontology.
Angelina. Please, don't be crackjaw!
Edwin. Well, I swear, a fan
Hid in a dagger-sheath's none other than
Mischief in guise of Murder. Fancy CIRCE
Armed cap-à-pie, like JOAN OF ARC!
Angelina. O, mercy!
You're airing all your lore!—and with the sun
At seventy-eight!—I'll doze till you have done.
(Covers her face with fan.)
Edwin (daintily lifting fan). Now for those cherries!
Angelina (starting up, and smiting him sharply). Sir! Upon my word!
Edwin (deprecatingly). I crave your mercy—not your Miséricorde!

"Virtue is its own Reward."

THE Times supplies this excellent illustration of the good old saw:—

LOST, a BROWN BUCKSKIN PURSE, in vicinity of Alliance Bank (Limited), containing £30 gold, &c. The finder will be liberally REWARDED by returning the same to ——, New Cavendish Street, Portland Place.

Digitized by Google

"POSITION OPTIONAL."

(THE COMMONS TEAM. WIMBLEDON, 1875.)

DIZZY. "WHAT POSITION SHALL YOU TAKE?" HARTINGTON. "THE EASIEST!!" DIZZY. "SO SHALL I!!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

AT this point you will generally find in Grammars what is termed an EXERCISE ON THE ARTICLE.

Our instances shall speak for themselves: e.g.—

I ride on a Chair. My Brother dances on the Table. Our Grandmother is rolling on the Hearth-rug. Your Sister is tearing a Window-sash. Tommy is kicking the Door. The Boy is thumping the Piano. The Girl is playing Cricket with the China Ornaments.

And so on.

Of Substantives and Gender in furnishing, we will not treat at present. Perhaps we shan't say anything about them at all. We'll see.

Number.—No Grammar of Decorative Art would be perfect were "Number" left out. There can, in furnishing, be any number of anything. This rule can be best comprehended by the following examples: e.g.—

We bought two hundred and sixty Pokers with brass handles. He bought fifty Stoves and seventy Side-boards. She bought three hundred China Cups, seventy Ornamental Vases, sixty specimens of Wedgewood, and a hundred Louis Quatorze Tables.

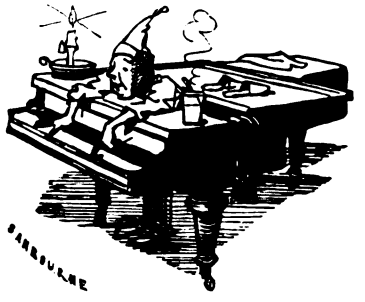
This will give you some idea of Number in Decorative Art. There is also, as in Greek, the dual number. Things go in pairs, as candlesticks, sugar-tongs, &c., and cannot be sold separately.

Of the use of the Adjective and Adverb in Decorative Art not much need be said here. Everything is "O, quite too lovely!" "O, what a little duck of a thing!" "How deliciously frightful!" "How frightfully charming!" "How quite too inexpressibly horribly lovely!"

Adjectives are considerably used by the vendor, as e.g., "That little table there is really beautiful." "You couldn't get so perfect a pair of candlesticks if you were to try everso!" "That lovely escritoire, Ma'am, is a decided bargain at thirty-six guineas," &c., &c.

Possessive Adjectives. — The use of these is evident. You buy a chair and it's yours. This is, by the way, how to make chairs into washing-basins. Do you see? Why, you buy my three chairs, and then my three chairs become ewers.

"Ewer another!" as the sugar-basin said to the washing-basin.



Exercise on the Possessive Adjectives in furniture is simple: e.g.—

Here, jump up! that's my Chair. Get out! that's my Bed. It's thy Table, is it? then thou wilt pay for thine. It's his Piano. I say, those are our Carpets you're beating so cruelly! &c.

Cases.—As for Cases in such a Grammar of Furnishing Decorative Art as this, there are various cases:—Book cases, writing cases, wine cases, spirit cases, music cases, pillow cases, brush cases, cigar cases, glass cases, &c., &c., which we must notice in due order, that is, as you order them, beginning with wine cases—say a case of Pommery très sec. (Addressed here, of course, to the Author of this work.*)

If you would be really original, be guided by me, and never follow precedent for precedent's sake. For instance, if it strikes you that a grand piano would be admirably adapted for a four-post bedstead, do not hesitate to fit the mattress on to the strings, your pillow near the keyboard, space for your hands to pass through on to the notes, and, after a very little practice, your fingers would wander easily and lazily over the octaves, and you could play yourself drowsily to sleep. A banjo upside down would form a first-rate looking-glass for shaving.

If a carpet would, in your opinion, serve better for a blind, have it up, and make a blind of it. If anyone says to you, "You can't make a looking-glass into a feather bed," at once seize the opportunity for trying it. Depend upon it, there are many uses to which glass may be put, at present quite unknown, because hitherto untried. Had the idiot, who laid down the maxim that "there is nothing like leather," been able to prevent anyone from using glass, we should still have been drinking out of the "leather bottel," and decanters would have yet to be invented.

* Opportunity for advertisement. Never were such times! I take the opportunity of informing Upholsterers, House Decorators, &c., that here is a splendid chance for advertisement. Being committed to no one taste in particular, I am open to the best offer, and am prepared to give, in the course of these useful hints, the names and addresses in full, with list of cheapest prices, of all those tradesmen who have the true interests of art in view. My artist will also execute designs for furniture, with the name and address of the maker appended. We, the author and the artist, are willing to take it out in part cash, part furniture, or articles of vertu, and our motto is "Ars longa, but business is business."

P.S.—The Editor takes this opportunity to warn tradesmen against the artist calling at their shops and undertaking to execute designs in this work on his own account for value received. He is unauthorised to do anything without the Editor. Share and share alike.

(To be continued.)

"THE SADDLE ON THE RIGHT HORSE."

PARIS has got an International Exhibition of "Maritime and Fluvial Industries." It includes, in the French Export Department, "a trophy of Saddlery." For a moment we were at sea on reading this piece of information, and at a loss to account for the presence of Saddlery in a Maritime Exhibition; but then we remembered our old friends "the Horse Marines," and understood at once that the trophy must consist of their equipments.

ECCLESIASTICAL MEM.

WHAT the two great Church parties want to do to each other—Turn the Tables.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH AT WIMBLEDON.

ET! Wet!! Wet!!!

"Water—water all around,"

But, happily, we are saved by MR. JENNISON from the horror of the other half of COLERIDGE'S couplet –

"And not a drop to drink."

Yet, in spite of Saint Swithin (a gentleman who, like many another Saint and many another Sinner—is not rain a sin in July?–will go down to look at the Volunteers at Putney), in spite of the cracks of the rifles, the dust or mud of the road, in spite, in fact, of every possible drawback, Mr. Punch decided upon paying a second visit to Wimbledon. Why did he make up his mind to perform a deed so full of devotion to duty, so strikingly characteristic of the virtue of self-sacrifice? Why did he, like a second CURTIUS, throw himself into the gulf—he means the Camp? These questions are easily answered. A few days since he received a letter, through the post, of a very remarkable character. Although the envelope was free from the penny postage-stamp, the emissary of LORD JOHN MANNERS who had carried it to Fleet Street had on this occasion neglected to put in a claim for the customary "tuppens." With some curiosity Mr. Punch opened the letter, and read the following words:—

DEAR PUNCH, W. O., Wednesday Morning.

YOU are the best and kindest of men, and you know it. Look here. I have got an awful lot to do. What with speaking in the House, and acting as Umpire-in-Chief at Aldershot, I really can't attend to Wimbledon. Will you go there? If you do, wake them up a bit. Make 'em "smart," Sir! Ha! ha! I dare say you will make 'em smart! (Must have my joke, you know.) A propos of jokes, wasn't that a bit of fun at Aldershot the other day, when HENRY DE BATHE, you know, got into the town by a back way, when we all expected him to knock at the front door? It amused the foreign attachés immensely. Can't write any more just now, as I am off to Shoeburyness to see some pretty, but rather expensive, fireworks. Don't forget Wimbledon.

Digitized by Google

Yours ever, GEORGE.

Mr. Punch, who is the most amiable of men, at once consented to comply with a request so becomingly expressed, and, without delay, travelled down to the Camp. At Clapham Junction he was invited to change carriages, and found that the Railway Companies, with that forethought for which they are renowned, had prepared a little preliminary puzzle for the Volunteers, evidently with a view to testing their knowledge of military tactics. The tunnel underneath the Station was in the hands of the plasterers; and as all the ordinary directions on the walls had been carefully painted out, it was a matter of chance if you turned up on a platform "right" for Brighton, or got into a train warranted to carry you all the way to Exeter in something less than no time. After an hour spent in a fruitless search for a conveyance bound for Wimbledon, Mr. Punch entered a vacant carriage, and soon found himself safely landed at Putney. The comparative dexterity with which this feat was accomplished, was strongly suggestive of a third-rate conjuring trick performed by a fourth-rate conjuror. However, Mr. Punch did certainly arrive at Putney, and Putney is, as everyone knows, but a step from Wimbledon. Remembering the beauties of the Cedars, and the fashions of the Camp, he begs to add that he found that step was the step that divided the Sublime from the Ridiculous. On his way to the ground the Great Creature was invited to have his portrait "done" by a Photographic Artist, who was "taking off" a gentleman of melancholy appearance, "pour encourager les autres." The offer was refused.

Passing the Camp gate, with its guard of policemen, Mr. Punch found himself in the enclosure. He noticed immediately that, in the majority of cases, the Volunteers, in pitching their tents, had neglected to follow the golden rule of camping out, "When in doubt (of the weather) dig a trench."

With a deep sigh, Mr. Punch gloomily pursued his way. "In spite of the camp flag of the Victoria Rifles, which I see, very appropriately, contains a skull and crossbones," said the Great Man, "I fear the Volunteers will never exactly understand the duties of real soldiers. Stay, what have we here!" he added, as a bold yeoman, in martial array strutted past, with all the majesty of a Lord Mayor, and more than the dignity of a suburban peacock. "Come, this is very fair, indeed," murmured Mr. Punch, approvingly. "Boots, tunic, helmet, and pouch-belt. And now for the side-arms. Ah! as I feared! That fatal, that death-dealing blow—an umbrella!" And Mr. Punch felt very much inclined to weep long and bitterly. Had he no cause for sorrow? Yes, indeed, indeed he had. On all sides the same utter disregard for appearances met his view. Volunteers in wide-awakes of all colours, and of every description, Volunteers in straw hats, Volunteers in "chimney-pots," Volunteers in caps! The same old story—carelessness and lack of discipline turning a magnificent force of patriots into a body of mock marksmen—into an army of sham soldiers!

Walking away from the absurd umbrella-bearer clad in a helmet, Mr. Punch prepared to enter one of the tents. There were beds of flowers on either side of the opening, and in one of the beds stood a board, bearing the inscription "CAPTAIN S. BOUQUET, 443rd Loamshire Rifles—the Soldier's Retreat." "Here, I say," murmured the proprietor, languidly, "you mustn't come in until you have wiped your feet." Mr. Punch left some mud on a cocoa-nut mat, and entered "The Soldier's Retreat." The soldier seemed to have retreated very comfortably. A thick carpet was spread over the boarded floor. On the carpet stood marqueterie tables, easy chairs, and a piano. The atmosphere was suggestive of a perfumer's shop; and the ensemble would have been invaluable to an artist drawing (for a periodical circulating in the kitchen) an illustration to a story of excessively high life. A sketch of the interior of the tent would have done nicely for a picture representing "The Boudoir of the Wicked Duke."

"Rather snug, eh?" said CAPTAIN BOUQUET, "next year I shall have the canvas papered and hung with pictures. Can't do more than that! You must rough it you know, when you get to Wimbledon."

"Enough of this," cried Mr. Punch, "I will have no more of it," and he hastened to the happy shooting fields where small bore men after firing their rifles become (if they can only secure an audience), big bore men, in their explanation of why they did not make a "bull," or wherefore they neglected to score even an outer.

He was particularly pleased with the new positions. They seemed to be both easy and effective.

"Must shoot in uniform," said a stout Rifleman, who seemed to shrink from "trying his size" for certain weighty reasons.

"Very proper regulation, indeed," commented Mr. Punch; and he noticed that one of the competitors (evidently a soldier every inch of him) had complied with this rule by wearing a complete suit of mufti plus a sword-belt attached to an umbrella.

Digitized by Google

"Come," said he, "that is what I call entering into the spirit of the thing! Would that there were more men like that Gallant Rifleman in Wimbledon!"

The wish of Mr. Punch was granted—he noticed before leaving the Camp that there were many more men like the Gallant Rifleman in question.

Clasping Rifle Exercises and Musketry Instructions, Pocket Edition by Authority, fondly to his breast (regardless, it will be seen, of the regulation printed on the cover, ordering him to carry it in his pocket), the Hero of a Hundred Sights continued to notice the shooting. Mr. Punch (easily tired with the monotonous occupation) was about to turn away when he saw his old friend Full Private (very Full Private) BUFFLES preparing to add another "bull" to his fast increasing score. He remembered the Full Private's saying in days gone by, "If you want to make a big figure at the targets, fire on the top of a good meal—never empty, my boy." And here was BUFFLES as large as (after dinner) life preparing to shoot in his accustomed style. His left arm rested on its habitual support, no one who looked at him could doubt it for a moment—BUFFLES was evidently firing on the top of a good meal!

And now Mr. Punch was fairly taken by surprise. The clouds gathered together into a compact mass, and, to his intense astonishment, it began to rain again! Rain at Wimbledon! Who ever heard of such a thing! And then it was that the skill of the tent-pitcher was tested. Those who had dug trenches and had cast their camp on the side of a hill were rewarded for their forethought; those who had done neither of these things soon assumed the appearance of heavily-moistened sponges.

"CAPTAIN S. BOUQUET in "The Soldiers' Retreat," and the rest of the Bandbox Brigade, must be very, very happy!" and Mr. Punch laughed long and heartily.

The First General of his Age now waited for the rain to cease (those who know how long he had to wait will keenly appreciate his self-sacrifice), and hurried to his tent. The sun shone brightly as he made the champagne cup. The birds sang their best, and the crack of the rifle in the distance was pleasant indeed. Mr. Punch sat down near his own tent-pole, and welcomed his guests—Comely Canada, Arch America, and Juvenile Japan. He pledged them with three times three (three cheers for each of them—COCKER), and they were simply delighted. He saw near him, in happy fraternisation, JOHN BULL with his rose, PAT with his shamrock, SAWNEY with his thistle, and YANKEE DOODLE wearing the feather of a Macaroni. Everything was delightful, and Wimbledon never looked so well. And why was this? The question was easily answered. When Mr. Punch looked at Wimbledon for the last time, he was following the fashion, and wearing a pair of glasses. Those glasses (evidently with a view to counteracting the glare of the sun) were stained. The colour of the stain was—couleur de rose!

"CREDE BYRON."

"I desire that my body may be buried in the vault of the garden of Newstead, without any ceremony or burial service whatever, and that no inscription, save my name and age, be written on the tomb or tablet."—BYRON'S Will. (See "Times," July 14.)

WHAT perils posthumous environ
The mighty Poet's radiant fame
Which fools and scoffers sought to shame!
The Churchmen, prejudiced and shabby,
Denied him entrance to the Abbey:
And wherefore so? Because, forsooth,
In Days of Sham he wrote the Truth—
Wrote it with keen, indignant ire,
In letters of eternal fire:
"Crede BYRON!"

When that strong soul began to tire on
Its upward flight, its haughty way,
Into the worlds where song hath sway,
He, thinking of his final rest,
Dreamt of the place he loved the best,
Longed that soft earth should crumble o'er him
Where slept his passionate race before him,
Nothing thereon except his name—
Two syllables of deathless fame:
"Crede BYRON!"

Clay mingled with his strength of iron:
But he was greater far than they
Who dare to call him wholly clay.
If England wishes something done
For her last Age's strongest son,
Be it his statue, calm and grand,
By the first sculptor of the land.
Touch not his homely churchyard stone—
"My Monument my Name alone:"
"Crede BYRON!"

What can we do for Him?

DIVING the other day into the columns of the Times, we happened to fish up this pearl of an advertisement:—

A Gentlemanly BACHELOR, of excellent social position and means, wishes to RESIDE, or become acquainted with any one who will introduce him into Wealthy Society. London, or within 20 miles preferred. Address, &c.

A man who can describe himself in florid terms like these can hardly, one would think, have a deficiency of cheek. Instead of losing time and money in advertisements, why does he not call upon LORD DUDLEY, or the DUKE OF WESTMINSTER, or any other wealthy member of Society, and ask for introductions to their family and friends?

Working-Men's Questions.

WHY do the Workmen (some of them) rage against the proposal to grant £140,000 for defraying the expense of the PRINCE OF WALES'S visit to India? Which of them will contribute more than a mite towards it, except by the consumption of intoxicating liquors?

TO LET, for Next Season, A FIRST-RATE MOOR. Applications to be made to SIGNOR SALVINI, Stage-Door of Theatre Royal Drury Lane.

SPIRITS OVER PROOF.—Printers' Devils.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

ESSION closing in jostle and jar:
A block of growlers
at Temple Bar:
Bills prest forward, and nobody glad
of it:
Bills dropt that earnest men go mad of it;
Hunting with hounds, and running with hare;

The best fight a Cross-fight, everywhere,
Till BENJAMIN'S mess, swelling more and more,
Threatens the Parliament Pot to boil o'er!"

"Facit indignatio versum." Would there were less reason in the rhyme.

Slavery may easily creep in under the guise of apprenticeship. Knowing what horrors have been perpetrated in unregulated Coolie-traffic, under the Portuguese flag above all (Lords, Monday, July 19), we may be glad to learn, from the answer to LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY'S question, that since a Commission reported on that traffic, LORD CARNARVON is not taking the matter coolly, but preparing an ordinance for the better protection in transitu of these ill-used black cattle.

Reaction in favour of Knightsbridge Barracks and the much-maligned Six-foot Guards found a voice through LORD LUCAN and H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief. The soldiers were exemplary. The blackguardly beershops and music-halls in the neighbourhood were the fruit of lax licensing, not of barrack customers. The barracks were not fever-nests, though they were not so sweet as they might be, if proper care and cost had been expended on keeping them in repair. Lastly, strategical considerations pointed to the site; and, as the Duke said, sensibly, the houses had come to the barracks, not the barracks to the houses.

(Commons.) Now the summer exodus is about to begin, the British traveller may be glad to learn, on Foreign Office authority, that passports are not abolished in Austria; that in Italy F. O. is still writing about their abolition; that in France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Germany they have been abolished, but may still come in useful, to prove identity or stave off suspicion.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition wants to know what are the business arrangements for the rest of the Session.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Government not knowing, cannot say. All he knows is, that they mean to go on with Committee on Agricultural Holdings Bill; then with Merchant Shipping Bill (vide the scene of Thursday); then with Land Transfer and Judicature; and then with any little unconsidered trifles there may still be time for whipping up, in the fag end of any odd days or hours that may still be left over.

With that love of labour which distinguishes him, the Marquis congratulated the House on a programme that promised to carry the Session well into September. A general chorus of groan and grumble, in which an undertone from the Government side was distinctly audible.

MR. WHALLEY complained he could not get a Seconder for his inquiry into the Jesuits, so completely had the underhand machinations of the Order paralysed the House itself!

MR. DISRAELI protested against being expected to jump up "in a harum-scarum manner," and doom Measures to death without full consideration. As to the Jesuits, he always understood it was one of the dodges of the Order to keep a lay brother to go about abusing them up-hill and down dale. He left it to the House to draw the inference.

The rest of the night was devoted to talk on the Motion for going into Committee on the Agricultural Holdings Bill, when a great deal of fire was wasted that should have been kept for Committee.

SIR T. ACLAND said the Bill would not do for Devonshire.

MR. ASSHETON that it would not suit Lancashire.

MR. GOLDSMID that it wasn't at all the thing for Kent.

LORD ELCHO condemned it as big with the germs of rank socialism, and looked on it with alarm, not for what it contained, but what it would lead to.

SIR W. HARCOURT approved of it for the very same reasons. Then there was a fight for adjournment, and finally progress was reported before any progress was made.

Punch is really inclined to think better than he did at first of a Bill that partizans and hobby-riders on all sides seem so dissatisfied with. At the same time, he must say nobody seems to want it.

Tuesday (Lords).—The DUKE OF RICHMOND declined to reassure LORD CAMPERDOWN against an indefinite increase of water-rates, pari passu with assessment-valuations. London is to be congratulated on the prospect of unresisted and irresistible "pilling and polling" from both Water Companies and Vestries!

(Commons.) Conspiracy and Protection of Property Bill huddled through Committee, under protest from MR. LOWE that he felt humiliated to be Member of a Parliament that had passed the Bill as it stood. The Bill has been drawn as might be expected of a measure meant to carry out Cross-Purposes. Thus when MR. PLIMSOLL moved to include Seamen in its operation, MR. LOWE had to show him that Sailors were the only persons exempted from the penalties of the Act to which their champion wished to subject them.

In Committee on Agricultural Holdings Bill a long and desultory preliminary fight over SIR G. JENKINSON'S Motion to exempt all holdings held under written agreement. Evident division of opinion in the Government camp; MR. DISRAELI fighting shy. His Party clearly suspicious of the Bill; and, if they could have their way, glad to wash their hands of the business altogether.

MR. HUBBARD, on Local and Imperial Taxation, counted out just after nine. The House tired to death, and MR. HUBBARD, on any of his hobbies, a decidedly heavy-goer.

Wednesday.—The regular hobby-riders protesting, of course, against the cruel discipline of the Count-Out, as administered the night before.

MESSRS. NEWDEGATE, WHALLEY, MONK, P. A. TAYLOR, and MITCHELL-HENRY, very plaintive on the practice—

"They best can paint it who have felt it most."

The House knows better what its time is worth, and how precious is its one weapon against the ever-threatening bore.

MR. M'CARTHY DOWNING moved his Bill to make Irish paupers irremovable home after a year's residence north or south of Tweed. MR. DOWNING wants not only "Ireland for the Irish," but so much of England and Scotland as the Irish pauper stands on. The whole subject of settlement and removal for Scotch and English as well as Irish paupers will have to be considered during the recess; and on this understanding the Bill was thrown out.

Thursday (Lords).—Sale of Food and Drugs Bill passed without the "knowingly," but with a provision that a seller of falsified articles should escape penalty if he could prove he did not know of the falsification. If the Bill as passed is not all it should be, it is at least better than it was—thanks to Her Majesty's Opposition; and so Punch may say of the

Digitized by Google

"CANTAT VACUUS."

Armed Burglar (to Brown, who had pawned his silver Watch and his only Tea-spoon that afternoon to pay the Water-rate). "IF YOU DON'T INSTANTLY GIVE UP ALL YER PLATE AND JEWELRY, I'LL BLOW YER BRAINS OUT!"

Friendly Societies Bill, in which LORD ABERDARE has restored the provision to prevent parents from making profit of their babes' deaths by excessive insurance in burial clubs.

LORD DERBY gave an instructive history of the French folly, by which £800,000 in the shape of bounties is added to the price of refined sugar, but wisely declines to crown that folly by any retaliatory folly on our part in the shape of a duty on French refined sugar.

(Commons). After a long cross fire of question and answer, crowned by an inquiry peculiarly à propos to the present state of Parliamentary business, as to the prospect of the Infanticide Bill, MR. DISRAELI rose to announce the withdrawal of the Merchant Shipping Bill, overlaid by the Agricultural Holdings Bill. What are losses of life to leases for life? The scene which followed is no subject for comic comment. Mr. Punch will only express his deep sympathy with MR. PLIMSOLL, whose indignation at seeing once more dashed from his lips the hope of remedying a great wrong, to the righting of which he has devoted his heart and soul and strength, overcame his self-control, and led him into a fierce defiance of the rules of the House of Commons, for which, in his cooller moments, he will be the readiest to ask pardon. The House behaved well throughout the painful scene. But what does MR. PLIMSOLL mean by being so terribly in earnest?

Friday (Lords).—Angry attack on the Examination turnstile, admitting to Commissions. EARLS HARROWBY, STANHOPE, GREY, and LORD STRATHNAIRN can no more understand the connexion between CHAUCER'S Canterbury Tales and a Commission than LORD DUNDREARY could that between cows and shrimps. A good deal of dirt was flung, by the way, into CHAUCER'S "pure well of English undefiled." H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief and LORD CARDWELL both explained that the examination was meant to test, not military, but general education. As it was found that the best officers came from the Public Schools, the point was to examine in what the Public School taught.

The EARL OF HARROWBY was curious to know in what public school CHAUCER was now read?

LORD GRANVILLE frankly admitted that not one word of English was taught in the public school in which he was.

(Mr. Punch is bound to make the same admission. Things may be better now. If the public school curriculum is to be the guide to the Examiners for Commissions, it seems to Mr. P. that rowing, cricket, football, and hockey ought to be the telling "subjects" for marks in the competitive examinations. And not at all bad ones either. The complaint is that there is too little of that sort of thing in the "exams" as they are; that being conducted by bookworms they are naturally bookwormish, and calculated to bring bookwormish boys to the top. If they sifted out the lads who come to the front by "natural selection" in our public school playing fields, they would give us just the right raw material for soldiers—the JOHN BULL instead of the JOHN CHINAMAN element of England's youth.

The whole subject of competitive examination wants overhauling by the light of common sense. Standing between our public schools and our public service, it ought to be working to the improvement of both. But it may be worked to the advantage of neither, and by and for that pernicious person, the crammer, wholly and solely. Is it? This is what their Lordships want to know. And the country has a right to know too.)

A long and instructive discussion on the Constitution of Natal. That colony, like the rest of the lot, seems in uncommonly capable hands while LORD CARNARVON looks after them. He gave a screed of excellent advice to the Natalians (from the Bishop downwards)—to bury the war-hatchet, and "take up de fiddle and de hoe"—tools of good fellowship and industry.

(Commons). Lengthy, and let us hope, instructive discussion on manures, crops, seeds, chalking, and other points of agricultural chemistry. Pleasant to see how anxious Honourable Members seem, like Honourable Lords before them, to be left free to contract themselves out of this best of all possible bills. If tenants are equally anxious, Mr. Punch is puzzled to think who will not be contracted out of the Bill.

Long argument on the nice question—has MR. MAPLESON got the whip-hand of the Board of Works, or the Board of Works the pull of MR. MAPLESON, in settling the arrangements for the site of the New Opera House? If the end is a model Opera-House, Mr. P. would not consider the matter too curiously. London will be the gainer.

If MR. GREGORY and the Commission whose report he quotes are sound in their conclusion that there are a million of acres in England fit for enclosure and cultivation, he is right in moving that the schemes of the Enclosure Commissioners, embracing 83,000 acres, and now waiting for Parliamentary sanction, ought to be proceeded with. With two provisoes: First, that the Enclosure Commissioners don't play any tricks such as the Office of Woods proposed to play with the New Forest (happily, as we see by the Report of the Select Committee, to be placed beyond further risk of desecration); and, secondly, that for every acre given to the Lord of the Manor a liberal equivalent is secured to the poor whose rights will be ousted by enclosure.

In this connection, MR. FAWCETT is quite right. Before any enclosure schemes are proceeded with, the Enclosure Act ought to be amended, with a view to better provision for the rights of the public and the poor.

THE STUDY AND THE CAMP.

(A Contrast, in Two Letters.)

LETTER I.—The Study. Fancy.

MY DEAR EDITOR,

I WRITE to you because I wish to air my theories, and I do this in spite of my knowledge of the fact that whatever you publish is published to all the world. What of that? I must do something. Accordingly, as I have allowed my sword to rust in its dust-covered scabbard, I am all the more anxious to use to advantage my more natural weapon, the goose-quill. "Honesty is the best policy," and there you have my case in a nut-shell.

I write in my library. I am wearing at this moment an ample dressing-gown and a pair of satin-quilted slippers, and reclining in the easiest of air-cushioned arm-chairs. I enter into these details so that you may understand that my body being perfectly comfortable, I am able to give my mind (such as it is) entirely to the task I have before me.

I wish to prove to you and the world generally that our Army is utterly valueless. I insist upon it that our soldiers are merely children of tender years and no stamina—that their number is as limited as their powers of endurance.

Digitized by Google

You may tell me that the Authorities declare (a declaration not without proof) that the recruits are excellent and numerous, that the Summer Manœuvres are a perfect success, that, in fact, everything I advance is reckless and wrong.

To these assertions I return the unanswerable reply: All these statements may be perfectly correct (I have no doubt they are), but—and here comes my point—I don't think so.

Although I have said above all that I can say upon this subject, and all that I have ever said upon this subject, I would still write a great deal more about it, were it not that I am now going quietly off to sleep. Yours, very dozingly,

S. BOUQUET MUTTONHED,
(General—half-pay).

LETTER II.—The Camp. Fact.

MY DEAR BILL,

I WRITE to you because you asked me to; but I tell you what it is, my boy, we haven't much time for scribbling. No, my lad, what we have got to do is to work; and, though I say it who shouldn't, work we do with as good a will as needs be.

We have had such a time of it at Aldershott! Rain day after day, and march morning after morning; and marching in "heavy order" is no joke. Do you think we minded it, my boy? Don't you make no mistake. Why, we were as cheery as possible, a doing the work of horses, and such like, as if it were the pleasantest thing in the world. Grumble? Not a bit of it! Why, we don't know how to; but I tell you what, my boy, the singing in the camp was something to listen to, and the laughter would have done your heart good if you 'd been there to hear.

And then on the march! Why, the only thing as really was unpopular was the Ambulance Cart. You see it was no manner of use to us. We weren't a going to get into it—not a mother's son of us!

Ah, BILL, they write a deal of nonsense about us. Why, the other day, my lad, as I looked at the old Rag on parade, with "Waterloo" and "Inkerman" and the rest of them a fluttering in the wind, I couldn't help a thinking of the chorus of an old song I heard sung a long time ago. It was something like this:—

"What Old England once has done
Why can't she do again?"

There 's a deal of sense in that chorus, I can tell you. But there—I hear the bugle a calling me back to work. So no more at present from Yours all right, and no mistake,

TOMMY ATKINS,
(Private—full pay).

WISE MEN ON VACCINATION.

ITY the Court of Queen's Bench has sat its last, if it can now no longer puniah Contempt of Court. Can it? This question has been raised by the Wise Men of Keighley.

The Bradford Observer reports a meeting of these Wise Men, to wit the Guardians of Keighley Union, held the other day in the Board-room of the Workhouse. The Sages met to deliberate upon

THE MANDAMUS!

This Writ, issued against the Keighley Guardians, recites, that they have neglected to carry out the Vaccination Act, and commands them forthwith to make their Vaccination Officer do his duty, or to show cause to the contrary. It is signed by LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COCKBURN. The Wise Men's Clerk having presented it to the Wise Men, who in their wisdom object to Vaccination, there ensued a debate which had a most apt sequel. But many wise things were said first.

The Chairman, MR. MILNER, read a number of wise resolutions which he had received. One, from a public meeting at Bingley, denounced the vaccination laws, thanked the Keighley Guardians "for fighting for the freedom of the people," and promised "to support them in every way required." In another, from Middleton, "admiration for and sympathy with the Keighley Guardians were expressed for refusing to be made the ignoble tools of the Local Government Board." Also, the Cheltenham and Gloucester Anti-Compulsory League sent to say, through their Secretary, "that they had contributed to the defence fund." Were not they of the wise of whom it is said that they and their money are soon parted?

A Wise Man, MR. CRABTREE, "asked if the last was from the Magna Charta Association?" This eminently wise question excited "laughter;" and then another Wise Man, MR. JEFFERY, answered, "No, we have nothing to do with that lot." More laughter. The Wise Men laughed at something in which they saw wit—surely not at the suggestion of fellowship with the Magna Charta Association and the "lot" who follow WHALLEY the Wise and KENEALY the Conscientious.

MR. JEFFERY went on dropping pearls of wisdom. The non-prosecution of vaccination defaulters had been practised at that Board for twenty years. The Local Government had only now discovered that it was illegal. The only difference was that previously the majority of the Board had been for prosecutions, and now all the breaches of the law took place when there was a majority that voted against vaccination. Those opposed to prosecutions had been returned to the Board by a majority of one thousand in most cases. The people who so elected them believed that disease was engendered in their children by vaccination, and in some instances the children had been brought to the grave by it:—

"For his part, he could not see that they had done any wrong. There had been some talk about breaking the law, but they had only voted on the question of pro and con., the only difference being that a majority was now opposed to vaccination. He would give the Court of Queen's Bench that answer."

Time was when that answer to the Court of Queen's Bench would have got a rejoinder which the Wise Men might not have liked. Will it yet? The Wise Men will see.

MR. JEFFERY added that:—

"He gave them his ideas in bits and chops, and other gentlemen could put it into shape?"

The Mandamus having now had paid to it all the attention which the Collective Wisdom of Keighley thought it deserved, thus spoke

"The CHAIRMAN (after a pause): Unless any gentleman has anything to move, I'll pass on to the next business."

But a Wise Man, wise otherwise than his colleagues,—

"MR. REDMAN begged the Chairman's pardon. Here they had a Mandamus calling upon them to obey the law, which in this matter was interpreted by the Judges to be absolute, and they had the first opportunity of answering it by showing cause."

In this strain MR. REDMAN proceeded to point out the wisdom which the Wise Men would exercise by treating the Mandamus with some degree of respect, and he proposed a Motion accordingly. This occasioned an argument replete with logic, of which space only allows a specimen. Wise Man JEFFERY having said that "he did not believe it was the law that they could be forced," this dialogue followed:—

"MR. REDMAN. The Judges say so.
"MR. JEFFERY. O, yes, the writ says so, but we don't believe it.
"MR. REDMAN. We had better ask the Law Clerk's opinion.
"MR. JEFFERY. No, no; he has already given his opinion. He stands as a pivot between us, and does fair by both parties. But what this paper says is that we are to show cause.
"MR SEDGWICK. We may do so or not.
"MR. JEFFERY. We are to make a return."

Then the Chairman uttered words of wisdom concerning the communication of diseases by vaccine lymph—wisdom mostly unutterable except to a Board of Guardians. And he said, meaning either the Vaccination Act or the Mandamus—

"He really hoped that they would pass on to the next business, and not take any notice of such a law. He moved that they do so accordingly."

The motion to pass on to the next business having been carried against MR. REDMAN'S amendment by eight to five—

"The Board immediately after arranged to visit the West Riding Lunatic Asylum at Wakefield, on the 27th inst., and to apply for a Magistrate's order for admission."

An appropriate end of their proceedings!

A wise "commencement" was succeeded by "an answerable sequestration." No doubt the Wise Men of Keighley have since visited the Lunatic Asylum. Of course the Magistrate to whom they applied instantly granted them an order for admission. Any medical man would have written them a certificate. The only question is—Have they been let out again?

Digitized by Google

FOR WET WEATHER.

WATERPROOF CLOTHING IS SAID TO BE UNHEALTHY. WHY NOT ADOPT SOME SUCH COSTUME AS THAT DEPICTED ABOVE?

SOMETHING LIKE A LIFE-BOAT.

THUS writes the Times Correspondent on the Exhibition "De l'Industrie Maritime" at Paris:—

"There are said to be two hundred and fifty Exhibitors, but, to tell the truth, not one is ready. When I say not one, I make a mistake, for, as I was passing through the department, a gentleman arrived, having a parcel some four feet long under his arm. He was immediately surrounded by numerous idlers, and, in less than three minutes, he had opened his parcel, and produced a waterproof boat, with oars, seat, and bottom boards, and capable of holding three or four persons. In appearance this portable boat had a certain look of security which augured well for its practical use on the water. It is the invention of the REV. E. L. BERTHON, of Romsey, Hants."

A boat that can be carried under one person's arm and yet can carry three or four persons safely beats BOYTON's swimming-suit hollow. When Punch emigrates, may he have his berth on the ship that carries BERTHON's collapsible boats!—in which lies, as Mr. Punch honestly believes, the solution of the problem—as yet practically awaiting a solver—how to carry boats enough aboard an emigrant or troop-ship to accommodate all the passengers, without hopelessly lumbering the decks.

CONTRIBUTIONS THAT MIGHT BE THANKFULLY RECEIVED.

WE have been inundated with a flood of bad jokes—if possible, in taste worse than the jokes—about Toulouse and the inundations there. The funds for the sufferers by the French floods would be largely increased if our correspondents would send to the Mansion House the amount of their contributions at their own valuation.

Digitized by Google

APPROACHING DISSOLUTION.

(ON THE BABY FARM.)

MRS. BENJAMIN. "'WHY NOT PUT 'EM OUT O' THEIR MISERY?' NO, MRS. 'ARTINGTON, MEM!—WHAT I SAYS IS, LET THE PORE HINNOCENTS LIVE AS LONG AS THEY CAN! THEY 'LL BE TOOK SOON ENOUGH, BLESS 'EM!—WHICH IT 'S WELL BEKNOWN, MEM, BOTH TO YOU AND ME!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

A NOVEL EXHIBITION.

Dog Shows and Donkey Shows, Horse Shows and Hound Shows, Cat Shows and Cattle Shows, have been plentiful of late; and at last by way of novelty the Crystal Palace has been tempting us to go and see a Goat Show. Baby Shows we have beheld, which some may have called Kid Shows; but a Goat Show is a new thing in the way of Exhibitions, and if it be found successful, it will doubtless be succeeded. Perhaps we may ere long be treated to a Bore Show, and this, if got up properly, would we daresay prove attractive. The only fear is lest the Bores, being mostly private persons, would not quite like to be exhibited in public; and though each of them is perfectly well used to make an exhibition of himself, we may doubt if they would wish to be advertised and shown "en masse." The Crystal Palace is quite welcome to our notion of the Show, and we venture to append a catalogue of Bores, who might with great propriety apply to be exhibited.

That the Show would be attended well we entertain no question. Indeed there cannot be a doubt that their friends would all flock thither to see—at a safe distance—such immense Bores as the following:—

The Bore who interrupts your story with irrelevant remarks, and asks, "Well, what happened then?" when you have come to what your emphasis has shown to be the climax.

The Bore who fancies he is gifted with poetic inspiration, and publishes small pieces "for private circulation," and expects to hear them quoted by his friends.

The Bore who takes you by the button-hole when he meets you at the Club, and bothers you to death by asking your opinion on some family affair, which he describes with such prolixity that long before he finishes you have utterly forgotten what he said at starting.

The Bore who falls asleep behind you in the Stalls, and, by his snoring obligato, spoils your hearing of the Opera.

The Bore who, having spent a fortnight in Calcutta, seizes every chance of lugging in allusions to his Indian experience.

The Bore who has the fame of being "such a funny fellow," and thinks himself obliged to sustain his reputation by making silly puns and senseless practical jokes.

The Bore with a big voice who bawls your name out like a toast-master when he sees you in society, and slaps you on the back when he accosts you in the street.

The Bore who always tries to travel with the carriage-windows shut, and kicks up a great row if you insist on opening one of them.

The dyspeptic Bore who takes delight in talking of his ailments, and often ends by making you feel out of health yourself.

The æsthetic Bore who worries you with lectures on fine Art, and tempts you to buy pictures which you think extremely ugly, but which he assures you are "worth their weight in gold"—which, if you were to weigh them, would not come to very much.

The Bore who, somehow or another, always manages to forestall you in telling the good thing which you were told the other day, and which you meant to tell yourself if you could anyhow lead up to it.

The Bore who waltzes at a pace peculiar to himself, and causes endless collisions in his circle of (dance) acquaintance.

The Bore who, if he hears you say that you like music, treats you to a sermon upon Lohengrin and Wagner.

And, finally, the Bore who with some vehemence starts off talking "shop" while you are talking "shop," and you discover, to your horror, that his shop is not your shop!

Sports of Last Week.—Aquatics everywhere.

PARAPLUIE v. PARASOL.

'T was the voice of the Sunshade, I heard her complain,
"I 'm of no use at all, for we' ve nothing but rain!
Bright Sol is deposed by the Demon of Damp,
And I' m put in the shade by that odious Gamp!"

Stout Gingham laughed loud till her ribs seemed to split.
"Aha! Madame Upstart, you 're lowered a bit.
Your flauntings and flirtings with Phœbus are over,
I warned you the God was a changeable lover!
Hoho! but you used to look down upon me,
As the symbol of Dowdiness! Fiddle-de-dee!"
No doubt your supreme self-conceit, Miss, it vexes
To see me the favourite friend of both sexes;
In the sunshine of fortune so upstart and proud,
What a poor thing you are, now you 're "under a cloud!"

THE ASTRONOMER-ROYAL AMONG THE SPECTACLE-MAKERS.

The Honourable Company of Spectacle-Makers gave Sir George Airy a dinner the other day. He in return gave them some good advice, which was—to learn to make Spectacles! "He knew only one capable maker of glasses." This advice, strange to say, was very kindly received; and, after dining last week at the Castle at Richmond, the Spectacle-Makers determined to turn over a new leaf and study their business. Hitherto, evidently, the blind have been making glasses for the blind. But Mr. Punch begs leave to inform his friend the Astronomer-Royal that when his keen sight fails, if anything so improbable should occur, he will ask him for the name and address of that "one capable maker of glasses" already in existence.

Competent judges, if invited to dinner by other Honourable Companies, might give them equally useful and appropriate advice—Cuique in suâ arte credendum est. The best dressed man in England (commonly reputed to be the Master of Her Majesty's Buckhounds) should be banqueted by the Merchant Taylors, that he might give them his opinion as to how many of them can cut a coat properly. The Lorimers should certainly invite the Chairman of the Four-in-Hand Club, who could tell them what he thought of their bits and chains. The Bowstring-Makers could not do better than entertain the Member for Orton, as he draws the long bow with fatal facility. As to Mr. Punch, he reserves himself for the Vintners, who may rely on his being quite as candid and instructive as to the difference between sound and unsound liquor, and the importance of the choice of houses, as affecting your chances of getting one or the other, as Sir George Airy on the qualities and makers of spectacle-glasses. The Vintners' glasses, by the way, have this advantage over the spectacle-makers'—that they make one see double.

New Reading of an Old Rhyme.

(Written under St. Swithin's Wet Blanket.)

Dirty days hath September,
April, June, and November,
And from February until May
The rain it raineth every day.
All the rest have thirty-one,
Without a single gleam of sun;
And if any should have thirty-two,
They 'd be dull and dirty too.

Digitized by Google

"NO FEAR."

Fisherman. "TAKE CARE, DONALD—YOU'LL BE DROWNED!"

Donald. "TROONED!—IN A DUB LIKE THUS! IF I WAS, I'D BE ASHAMED TO SHOW MY FACE IN OBAN AGAIN!"

EPITAPH ON THE INNOCENTS.

"WHOM the Gods love die young"—
"Gone to a better place!"
As the keeper said, when he hung
O'er the dead outang's face!

Sleep, slaughtered Babes, in peace!
From troubles and woes and ills;
Why mourn such blest release?
Rest ye, poor little Bills!

On the tomb of one or two
"Resurgam" we may write;
"Death, Life's gate" passing through,
Again to see the light.

Innocents, pure of wrong!
As doth the name express,
Had your lives been more long,
We might have mourned you less.

A PAIL SHERRY.

IN a newspaper advertisement invalids are invited to try what, in parliamentary language, must be called an intoxicating liquor, being described as:

"KOUMISS, a Real Milk Wine."

Milk Wine may be presumed to have, in a degree, the same properties as those of milk punch, and, in excess, to produce the same effects as those which milk punch produced on Mr. Pickwick. There are beings who will not scruple to suggest that a real milk wine ought to yield genuine cream of the valley; but that kind of cream is not to be obtained from Koumiss. They may, however, some day catch a Tartar, who will inform them that the original Koumiss is obtained from mare's milk; as MR. BRALLAGHAN says, by a curious coincidence. He hopes this Koumiss may prove a hit in the bull's-eye.

Sors Shakspeariana.

(For the London and Westminster Bank, à propos of some recent proceedings.)

"And passion having our best judgment collied, Essays to lead the way."—Othello.

THE BYRON STATUE.

SCENE—No matter where. TIME—No matter what. The Statues are heard speaking in Voices of the Night.

George the Third (Cockspur Street). What—what—what! Another—another—another! They are going to give BYRON a statue. Yes, BYRON a statue. Bad style of fellow, I'm afraid? What, what? Don Juan, you know—naughty—naughty. Eh, eh, eh!

George the Fourth (Charing Cross). And why not, Sir? He added something to the glory of my glorious epoch. Besides, he knew how to dress—not exactly in my style, perhaps, but still deuced effective. By all means let him be rewarded—moderately.

Shakspeare (Leicester Square Fountain). In good time. Thrice a hundred years had passed, e'er this fountain, crowned with my statue, rose to testify to those who listened to the weekly band of Leicester Fields that MASTER WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE was still remembered in the city he loved so well.

George the Third. There—there—there! What—what—what! You literary gentlemen are so jealous! I say, so jealous!

Shakspeare. Jealous!

Milton (Park-Lane Fountain). Jealous!

Prior (Westminster Abbey). Ha, ha, ha! Jealous!

George the Fourth. Don't quarrel, gentlemen, I beg. I am sure literary men are all very well—as long as they don't write memoirs like—h'm—I've no patience with the rascal—or political squibs, like that clever little rascal TOMMY MOORE——

William the Fourth (King William Street, E.C.). Hear, hear, hear! Bravo!

George the Fourth. In fact I always rather liked 'em. There was poor old SHERRY and TICKELL, always sadly out at elbows, both of 'em—but most amusing dogs. But about BYRON. I wonder how they'll turn him out? On foot, of course. He mustn't have a horse. Chargers are reserved for warriors like myself and my gallant comrade WELLINGTON—the twin heroes of Waterloo, you know.

Duke of Wellington (Hyde Park Corner), with a dry chuckle. Ha! ha! ha! You a hero of Waterloo, indeed!

George the Fourth. Come, come, my dear ARTHUR, pray don't begin that sort of thing. You know how it irritates me! Besides, if they give him a horse like mine, he will never be able to ride it. I have taken half a century to grow accustomed to——

George the Third. Yes, yes, yes! Very comical indeed. They gave you no saddle! No saddle—and no stirrups! How do you manage to keep your balance? Eh, eh, eh?

George the Fourth. Sire, you are pleased to be facetious! At any rate, I am not riding a prancing screw; I am not taking off my hat gracefully, in recognition of the indifference of a local crossing-sweeper; I am not wearing a projecting pigtail! No, thank goodness!

George the Third. Eh, eh, eh? What, what, what! Pigtail, indeed! Who wears a wig and a Roman tunic? Pigtail, indeed!

Victory (Waterloo Place). Pray don't quarrel in the presence of a lady, Gentlemen! Look at me!

George the Third. What, what, what! Look at you? Look at you? Eh, eh, eh? I can't. My head's turnod the other way—turned the other way!

Victory. For nearly twenty years I have been standing on the summit of a monument, at the end of Waterloo Place, mournfully offering to passers-by a few quoits, myrtle-wreathed like the sword of HARMODIUS, and no one will take them! Alas, poor Victory!

Viscount Nelson (Trafalgar Square). Shiver my timbers, Madam, but you are out in your reckoning! I read in the newspapers the other day (you know I can see most things from here), that you are not Victory at all! They put you there for Honour.

Victory. Put me here for Honour! Impossible!

George the Third. Yes, yes, yes! They have queer notions now-a-days. But where will they put BYRON? Eh, eh, eh? What, what, what?

Shakspeare. There is room for him at my side.

Milton. Or mine.

George Peabody (behind the Royal Exchange). Or mine—if he have no objection to the City.

Digitized by Google

TRUE DISTINCTION.

Mamma (improving the occasion). "I LIKE YOUR NEW SUIT IMMENSELY, GERALD! BUT YOU MUST RECOLLECT THAT IT 'S NOT THE COAT THAT MAKES THE GENTLEMAN!"

Gerald. "NO, MAMMA! I KNOW IT'S THE HAT!"

A PLAINT TO A SAINT.

DAMP Saint, whom we Protestants even invoke,
Is not this sort of thing a great deal past a joke?
May not the most patient of Jobs complain
Of your far too long protracted rain?
Oh remember, ere past the season's prime is,
That excellent maxim, "Ne quid nimis."
Our climate once could boast to be various,
Now all signs are merged in one—Aquarius.
Monopoly so monotonous misses
Approval of all the signs but Pisces!
Taurus (JOHANNES), at the Camp,
Has been ploughing an ocean of dirt and damp,
And only in damming and trenching been hearty;
Virgo's done out of her garden party;
Leo, his occupation vain,
Shakes more than due-drops from his mane;
Libra feels these superfluous showers
The balance upset of the skyey powers.
So does Punch, and hopes the Zodiac soon
May recover the equilibrium of June.
But for you, chief cause of our complaints,
The wettest blanket of all the Saints,
Our Nature already is far too fond
Of playing NIOBE. Beyond
Her spontaneous tribute to the tearful,
Urge not one already none too cheerful:
Her waterworks need no aid from you:
So drop your water-can,—damp Saint,—do!

AN ELEMENT OF CONFUSION.

FROM a Report just issued by a Committee of the Society of Arts, on the Application of Science and Art to the Street Paving and Street Cleansing of the Metropolis, it appears that the Streets of London lie for those purposes under the divided jurisdiction of some fourteen separate Vestries, who mend their ways indifferently and in vicious independence of each other. Their agency for misrule in the regulation of the thoroughfares the Report denominates the Vestral element. But, inasmuch as parochial maladministration is mainly selfish, ought it not rather to be called, in the aggregate, the Nostral element? Chemically, that element might be styled Bumbleine.

REGIMENTS IN THE RAIN.—BOTH the gallant troops at Aldershott, and Volunteers at Wimbledon, have given their country good earnest of their conduct in the face of an enemy. No doubt they would behave as well under fire as they have been lately behaving under water.

Duke of York (Waterloo Place). Ha, ha, ha! I can't help laughing when I look at you poor devils down there in the fog. What has poor BYRON done that he should be brought down to your level? If they must give him a statue, better give it a lift—well out of sight—like mine.

Viscount Nelson. No, no—must be a Sailor, your Royal Highness, really to like going aloft. I don't believe your Royal Highness is particularly comfortable up there.

Duke of York. Nonsense, my Lord. I consider myself the most fortunate statue in London—no one owes so much—

George the Fourth. Gad, that's true, Bishop!

Duke of York. Hang your wit, GEORGE. How about your own bills?—Owes so much to his situation, I was going to say. I stand here on my capital—

George the Fourth (sotto voce). Your creditors', that is—

Duke of York. Above the smother of the London fog, beyond the fire of contempt, and out of the range of criticism! Which of you, except NELSON, can say as much?

[Morning breaks. Cock crows. Voices of the Night are heard no more.]

HYMN AGAINST HUMBUG.

IN a letter to the Times on the American Revivalists the REV. CHARLES N. EDEINGTON animadverts on "one essential charateristic of MR. MOODY'S teaching," to wit, "his persistent preaching of religion without righteousness." There appears to be a good deal of that religion in America, and perhaps we have not a little amongst ourselves. Let us hope that little has not been increased by the preaching of MR. MOODY. Indeed MR. EDEINGTON, in arguing that it has, adduces a quotation which may be thought to prove the reverse. Speaking of MR. MOODY'S sermons in general, he observes: "The burden of his song is expressed in the Revivalist hymn, which was one of his collection,—

'Doing is a deadly thing;
Doing ends in death.'"

When we consider how many hearers of MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY were retail shop-keepers, too probably in the habit of "knowingly" practising adulteration, and using false weights and measures, we may descry a possibility that the burden of MR. MOODY'S sermon, and MR. SANKEY'S hymn, has impressed with the fatal consequences of "doing" some converts, who, before their conversion, did whomsoever they could, and without any sense that "doing" was otherwise than part of the whole duty of (shop-keeping) man.

Ireland's Victory.

Wimbledon, July 22, 1875.

WE know that Irish bulls have long been famed in Irish story
And Irish bulls'-eyes now may claim their share of Irish glory.

Sir R. Phillimore's Judgment.

(See MRS. JENKINS'S Evidence, in JENKINS v. COOK.)

"LET him say, 'I believe in Old Nick'—and I give in that minute."
——If that's good Christianity, why then—the Devil's in it!

Digitized by Google

"THE JESUITS!"

Officer of Militia. "WELL, SIR, WHO ARE YOU? AND WHAT'S THE MATTER?"

Excited Citizen. "ME? I'M THE BAILIE—THE HEID BAILIE, MON! I CATCHED THIS WEE LADDIE FESHIN' ON THE SAWBATH DAY! 'SAYS HE'S A CAATH'LIC—A ROOMAN CAATH'LIC!! E-H, IT'S JUST DREADFU' TO THINK O'—FESHIN' IN A PROTESTANT LOCH!! AND O' THE SAWBATH! LORD SAVE US!"

SOMETHING LIKE AN EXPEDITION.

(A Circular translated from the Russian.)

THE Russian Government, always anxious to spread the blessings of civilisation in every quarter of the globe, beg to inform the World in general and Great Britain in particular, that the Expedition recently dispatched to Central Asia has been organised merely and entirely with a view to advancing the interests of Science and Art.

The Artillery (when not engaged in action) will seize every opportunity of collecting geological specimens from the breaches made in the fortresses captured on the line of march.

The Engineers will be careful to mark in the maps of the countries through which they may pass all hills, forts, rivers, stockades, and military stations they may find en route, so that the charts may subsequently prove of the utmost utility to the men of science, on whose behalf principally they will have been prepared.

The Infantry will preserve the skeletons of the strange beasts they may shoot down in the course of an engagement, for presentation to the Anatomical Museum at St. Petersburg.

The Cavalry will burn villages that have been built without taste, so that towns of more refined architectural character may be built on their sites.

That Central Asia may be thoroughly examined from a scientific point of view, the country may have to be occupied for an indefinite time. Should this expedition prove successful, a similar experiment will be made in Affghanistan and the other provinces intervening between the Russian frontier.

JUST LIKE 'EM!

ST. SWITHIN'S day was carefully selected this year for the last grand fête at the Royal Botanical Gardens! The band played "Long to rain over us!" with enthusiasm.

A PLEA FOR PLIMSOLL.

WHAT though the passion in him tore away
The dams and dykes of senatorial phrase?
What though the words that spoke his mind outweigh
The weights of Parliamentary dispraise?
What though, brain-wrung by stress of ruth and rage,
And sudden-baffled hope of help, long nursed,
Against all rules of the St. Stephen's stage
Forth in accusing earnest wrath he burst—
Of greed that, ghoul-like, feeds from watery graves,
Of homes and hearts that desolate abide,
Of brave men's lives foredoomed for gain of knaves—
And, so denouncing, flung his charges wide,
And gave his enemies a scoff and boast,
"Lo! you, the Sailors' champion!" Through their sneers,
Still let his bitter cry ring in our ears—
"They drown by hundreds round our England's coast!"

Absit Omen!

MR. PUNCH was rather startled the other day by reading an announcement at a certain Railway Terminus that "during August and September, Excursion Trains will run asunder." It was a relief to be informed by the Traffic Manager that "as under" was intended to be the reading of the latter portion of the announcement.

EMBARRAS DE CHOIX.

OF two pain-killers doctors ask whether
Is better, but patients may say
"How happy could I be with Ether,
Were Chloroform out of the way."

Digitized by Google

"USED TO IT!"

Officer at firing-point (who thinks that it's raining). "Sergeant Mauchline, hadn't you better wear your Great Coat till it's your Turn to Fire!"

Sergeant Mauchline (frae the "Land of Lorne"). "Hoo! No the noo! I'll pit it on when it comes Wat!"

CABMAN EXTRAORDINARY.

It is not always that Virtue is its own reward, and gets no other. At the Middlesex Sessions, the other day, one John Morris, a shoemaker, who had stolen a purse containing £1 10*s.*, the property of George Hardwicke, from his person, was brought to justice. This satisfactory result was owing to the exceptional courage, steadiness, energy, and self-denial—if not honesty—of a certain cabman, badge 5665, living at No. 17, Great Warner Street, Clerkenwell. The offence was committed on the person of an old gentleman taken into 5665's cab. The old gentleman was drunk and incapable. He and the prisoner together were taken into the cab at Cockspur Street, and 5665 was directed to drive them to Moring's Hotel, Dean Street, Soho. Suspecting the old gentleman's companion, 5665 on the way was led to lift the trap on the top of the cab, and peep in, to see what he was about. That, he perceived, was picking the old gentleman's trousers' pocket. Thence the prisoner extracted a purse of gold. He transferred it to the pocket of his own waistcoat. Cabman 5665 called out to the prisoner that he was robbing the man. The prisoner offered him a dollar to pull up short of, or beyond, Moring's Hotel. The Cabman indignantly refused the bribe, and threatened the thief that he would give him in charge. Hereupon, the thief jumped out and bolted—5665 after him, leaving his cab in the street, unattended. When he came up with him, the thief threatened violence if he followed further, and 5665 saying he would do so, struck him a violent blow in the face. The Cabman, showing fight, the thief took to his heels.

"It's no use your attempting to get away," said 5665, "for wherever you go I'll follow you."

He accordingly followed him through several streets about Soho for nearly half-an-hour. At length a policeman was found. What a wonder! The prisoner of course was collared.

In the meanwhile 5665's cab had stood where he left it, taking care of itself. After a long search it was found with the old gentleman safe inside. There is a sweet little cherub that takes care of drunken men and fools. "The prisoner expressed his willingness to go to the station-house, but wished to go there in the cab with the prosecutor." But—

"The cabman appeared to have had considerable acuteness here, for he told the policeman that if he was allowed to go in the cab with the prosecutor alone, there was no doubt that he would put back into his pocket the money he had stolen from him."

No less downy than valiant and true. The thief having been found guilty, the true man received at least some recompense besides that to which virtue is proverbially limited. The Assistant-Judge then ordered him to stand forward, and said that "the Grand Jury by their presentment had expressed their high approbation of his conduct, and of his great energy and skill in apprehending the prisoner." The Judge added that—

"He had much pleasure in endorsing their approval, and should order him to receive a reward of £2, in addition to his ordinary expenses."

Virtue thus, for once in the way, got £2 reward in addition to its own. It remains only to state the name of the gallant, resolute, and honest Cabman, 5665. He is named Samuel Isaacs. There! And we should not be surprised to hear that he had a hooked nose. This is only a surmise; but we mention it in order to take an opportunity of doing all possible justice to hook-nose gentlemen of the name of Isaacs.

Appeal for a Lincolnshire Worthy.

(Once on, now under, the Turf.)

Dear Mr. Punch,

A Church is about to be erected to the memory of the late "Mr. Launde." May I suggest that it should be dedicated to St. Leger, and that the Bishop of the Diocese should lay the foundation-stone during the pilgrimage to the shrine of the Saint at Doncaster during next September. Is an Apology necessary if I ask for subscriptions?

Holy Friar.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

OOR Irish Peers! LORD BEAUCHAMP informed the Lords (Monday, July 26) that HER MAJESTY did not mean to interfere between them and the wicked will of their cruel brethren of the Upper House.

Prince Edward's Island (LORD CARNARVON tells us) was raffled for over here, in lots of 20,000 acres, more than a hundred years ago. The present freeholders of the Island represent the absentee winners of these lots. Naturally enough, the resident tenants have long kicked at paying them rents; and, holding the best cards in the Local Parliament, have at length, after a protracted squabble, forced on the Legislature of the Dominion a Bill for enforcing compulsory sales by the proprietors. The Governor-General thinks it best for all parties to sanction the Bill, which appoints three Commissioners (the one of the Governor-General's appointment being "our" MR. CHILDERS) to assess the compensation prices to be paid the ousted proprietors. LORD DUFFERIN and his nominee may be trusted to make the best terms for the proprietors that the case admits, and to sanction no arrangement glaringly unjust to them. All parties (proprietors included) will be so much the better for the healing of an old raw, that the proprietors and their friends will, probably, be wise not to haggle over the conditions—though they may not get all they think justice. The tenants, probably, don't quite see it as they do.

LORD STRATHEDEN is a pertinacious person, with no sense of humour, who will insist on poking into awkward questions in a way very troublesome to the Foreign Office. At present, he wants to know if LORD DERBY has not been putting the national dignity in his pocket, and knocking under to the three great northern Powers, in re those troublesome Roumanian provinces, with which Austria, Russia, and Germany have concluded commercial treaties, as if they were Sovereign, not suzerain, States. The Porte says the provinces have no right to conclude such treaties without leave of the SULTAN, and LORD DERBY admits as much. Austria, Germany, and Russia do not see the need of the SULTAN'S leave being asked. The Porte says, "Only let the Powers ask leave for the Provinces to conclude such treaties on their own hook, and we will issue a firman to that effect," and begs LORD DERBY to back up the SULTAN in insisting on his right to at least so much show of diplomatic deference. LORD DERBY submits the suggestion to COUNT MÜNSTER, with a friendly "Come, can't you oblige the poor dear SULTAN?" COUNT MÜNSTER, with a masterly inactivity, feels no more bound to favour LORD DERBY with an answer than the SULTAN with a request for a firman, and LORD DERBY, after waiting a week, recommends the Porte to issue a firman, without waiting to be asked for it. The Porte declines, and its Foreign Secretary may be asking LORD DERBY, not without reason, "Call you this backing of your friends?"

But when these very big Powers will have their way, what is left for poor little England (in LORD DERBY'S hands), but to knock under; and after all, this is only a diplomatic snub, and JOHN BULL does not get savage over snubs in diplomacy. He waits till the row begins. Quite time for him to get his blood up when he sees the red rag, or smells powder.

"A stitch in time does not save nine" in Foreign Office correspondence.

Labour Laws Bill read a Second time, after LORD CAIRNS had tried his hand at a final tinkering of the Penal Clause which MR. LOWE and MR. CROSS have so failed to make a good job of.

Query if LORD CAIRNS have not left the quibble-pegs as big as ever.

(Commons.) The undertow of MR. PLIMSOLL'S out-of-doors wave of popularity evidently sweeping the House strong in the direction of Merchant Shipping Legislation.

MR. ROEBUCK moved the Second Reading of MR. PLIMSOLL'S Bill for Thursday.

SIR C. ADDERLEY gave notice of the Government Stop-Gap Bill (hurriedly knocked up to block PLIMSOLL'S) for Wednesday. MR. DILLWYN gave notice of a motion for precedence for MR. PLIMSOLL'S Bill on Thursday.

Savings Bank Bill, Rivers Pollution Bill, Offences Against the Person Bill, sacrificed by their Parliamentary Parents. If only they would not give reasons. But when MR. CROSS talks in a breath of "panic legislation," and the mass of information from Judges, Stipendiaries, Chief Constables, &c., English and Scotch, on which his withdrawn Bill was founded, he is performing LORD CASTLEREAGH'S famous feat of "flying in his own face." Why not manfully confess the truth, that the Bill is a bungle, and better withdrawn?

MR. HARDY, Punch is glad to hear, does not mean to throw on officers and men the cost of making good the damages caused by Summer Manœuvres and St. Swithin together to uniforms and accoutrements.

Then the House plunged into the sea of the Agricultural Holdings Bill; and of the cheerful subject of Manures and the effects thereof, "found no end, in wandering mazes lost," till nearly three in the morning.

Tuesday.—A whiff of the Plimsoll breeze ruffled the smooth waters of the Upper House! LORD CARLINGFORD wigged the Government for their abandonment of the Merchant Shipping Bill, for which they were now about to "do penance" (see Mr. Punch's Cartoon) by what he feared would prove "hasty, wild, and bad" legislation.

MR. DISRAELI'S defence was undertaken by LORD MALMESBURY and LORD CAIRNS—impar congressus.

(Commons.) Morning Sitting devoted to smoothing the way for MR. PLIMSOLL'S apology on Thursday, and to securing the introduction of the Government Stop-Gap Bill to-morrow, in time for some detailed information as to its contents.

In the Evening, the House up to its neck in the dung heap till nearly two.

Wednesday.—After a few hours on Agricultural Holdings Bill, in which an attempt to limit freedom of contract (on motion of MR. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN) was defeated by 178 to 116, SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY—the Whipping-boy of the Government, for its big sin of the Session,—rose to take his punishment meekly, after his manner. Judiciously blinking the fact that, but for the universal voice of popular indignation, the Stop-Gap Bill would never have been heard of, he proceeded to describe its meagre features,—yet harsh as they are meagre. It will authorize the Board of Trade to appoint surveyors, armed with the full powers of the Board to stop ships they have reason to believe unseaworthy, whether from improper loading or otherwise, and will empower one-fourth of a crew to complain of unseaworthiness, without giving security for costs, or the preliminary desertion of any of their number. SIR CHARLES gave statistics strongly corroborating the worst MR. PLIMSOLL has charged against ship-knackers and coffin-ship-owners, and striking away all justification of the Government which abandons a measure called for by malpractices involving such risk and sacrifice of life.

He did not state how many of the detentions of unseaworthy ships by his Board were due to PLIMSOLL'S persistent poking up.

No man need wish to see his worst enemy in a more humiliating position than the Head of Her Majesty's Government has made for himself in this matter. Punch will not aggravate his penance, or embitter his humble-pie. He hates hitting a man when he is down.

MR. GOSCHEN, in tempered terms, pointed the moral of the moment, and complained, as did everybody who spoke with any weight of knowledge, of the insufficiency of the Bill as described.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Reed announced his intention of supplementing its deficiencies, by so much, at least, of Mr. Plimsoll's Bill as prohibits deck-loads and the stowage of grain cargoes in bulk—two of the most common causes of wreck in winter. John Bull and Jack Tar may not be able to get more, but, as the Cheap Jacks say, they "will positively take no less."

Thursday (Lords).—Labour Bills got through at last, with the Lord Chancellor's last touch to that crux of a clause which attempts the definition of offences in the nature of picketting, or rattening.

(Commons.) A perceptible marine flavour pervading the House. Questions as to cases of unseaworthiness flying about. The House artistically wrought up for the appearance of Mr. Plimsoll in the character of apologist, which he performed in a manly and dignified fashion, but with a due reserve, withdrawing and apologising for all such terms and expressions as were in transgression of Parliamentary usage, but not withdrawing any statement of fact.

Mr. Disraeli received the apology, so becomingly offered, in a manner as becoming—and with a graceful (apparent) unconsciousness of the fact that it was the Government's abandonment of the Bill on which Mr. Plimsoll had set his hopes of ameliorating the lot of the merchant seaman that had led to the offence for which, as the representative of the House, he now accepted the offender's apology.

How do the maker and the acceptor of that apology respectively stand at this moment in the estimation of the country?

Mr. Bentinck and Mr. Newdegate expressed themselves not quite so satisfied with the apology as Mr. Disraeli. They wanted a further withdrawal of all charges implicating honourable Members.

Mr. Plimsoll may safely say his charges were never meant to include honourable Members.

Before getting to Agricultural Holdings, Mr. Dillwyn made an ill-advised attempt to force Government to take up Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, and complaining of Government waste of time, laid himself open to a well-planted "counter" from Mr. Disraeli.

The House was drifting into personalities, when Mr. Lewis stopped it by announcing Mr. Plimsoll's wish that his Bill should give place to the Government measure, to which Mr. Reed announced his intention to tack certain of the clauses from Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, for the prohibition of deck-loads and stowage of grain in bulk, and perhaps for a compulsory load line. Then the House plunged once more, with apparent enjoyment, into the marshy waste of the Agricultural Holdings Bill.

Friday (Lords).—The evils of our own old unregulated system of Factory labour are growing up with the growth of the Cotton manufacture in India. Lord Shaftesbury does well to call attention to them. We are glad to hear from Lord Salisbury that Government have their eye on the Indian factories—are aware of the gradual growth of over-work and oppression of Indian innocents, and mean to do their best to put them down. Their difficulty is the native notion that all we do to protect Indian women and children in the cotton factories is a hypocritical sham, meant to mask our determination to sustain Manchester factories against Indian competition.

Sir Joseph Whitworth has not only given £3000 a year to found scholarships in mechanics and the cognate sciences, but wishes to hand over to the nation an estate of that value for their perpetual endowment. He sets as good an example in his way of giving as in his gifts, for he empowers Parliament at any time to overhaul his foundation and bequest. There can be no objection to relaxing the Mortmain Acts for the purposes of this wise and munificent act of public spirit. For this the Lord Chancellor now introduces the necessary Bill.

(Commons). Morning Sitting on the Stop-Gap Shipping Bill. A very practical morning's work, creditable to everybody concerned. Government, by Sir Stafford Northcote, agrees to allow of the discussion—presumably with a view to acceptance—of grain-cargo and deck-load clauses, but objects to doing as much for clauses securing compulsory survey and load-line. Mr. Reed will have a fight for their introduction. Mr. Plimsoll and Mr. Goschen want full discussion, at least, of these clauses. Mr. Disraeli made one of those masterly changes of front which leave us all so proud of the tactician, whatever we may think of the statesman or legislator. By a dexterous twist he gives his penitential sheet the hang of a triumphal robe; and calmly and complacently thanks the public for the roar of execration which has "assisted" the Government to bring in its Stop-Gap Bill!

Now this is is really clever.

Before the House got to Merchant Shipping, a merchant shipper, Mr. Bates, the Member for Plymouth, very properly asked for a Select Committee to inquire into the charge Mr. Plimsoll, by implication, at least, brought against him of being a "ship-knacker."

Mr. Plimsoll's worst fault as a strategist is his readiness to make and endorse specific accusations. It shows his good faith as a man, but gives a powerful handle against him as a Parliamentary tactician. Dirt flung in the House is pretty sure to splash back in the face of the flinger. Better overlook it than stoop for it, in nine cases out of ten.

THE WRONGS OF WOMEN.

Courteous Mr. Punch,

I trust that your known gallantry and gentlemanly interest in the wrongs of Suffering Humanity—or, I might even say, Womanity—will induce you to spare a very tiny little of your valuable space for the insertion of this paragraph, which I read lately in my newspaper:—

"Originally, ladies were eligible to become members of the Order of the Garter. Henry the Eighth decreed that they should no longer enjoy this privilege. Charles the First and George the Second proposed to restore the old arrangement, but the project in both cases was never executed. After they shall have attained the Parliamentary franchise, women may agitate for the restoration of their ancient right to have the Garter bestowed upon the wealthy or well-born of their sex."

I fear extremely that a sneer is latent in these last few words, though wherefore this should be so I am puzzled to imagine. Why should not we poor women have the franchise granted to us, and the Garter also, if we so desire it? Why should honours such as these be reserved for only men, and we who pay our coal bills and our gas and taxes are not so much as suffered to sit upon a Jury?

Hoping somebody in Parliament will be chivalrous enough to take the matter up, and get our ancient rights restored to us, believe me, Mr. Punch, your weekly reader and adorer,

Minerva Cottage, Friday. Sophonisba Smith.

P.S.—That monster Henry the Eighth! I always have detested him and now I'm sure we Ladies all must hate him more ferociously than ever.

THE SERVANTS' COLLEGE.

Mr. Punch rejoices to hear that "the greatest plague of life" has a slight chance of being abated by the establishment of a College for Servants, who will be educated in the most careful way to do justice to their employers—the main idea being that most lucidly stated by the Dean of Saint Patrick's, that it is the chief duty of every Servant to ascertain the full amount of his master's income, and to spend the whole of it on his own department. Having been favoured with an early copy of the subjects with which the courses will commence, Mr. Punch is glad to give to this useful undertaking the advantage of his world-wide publicity.

Class 1. Lady Housekeepers.—"How to manage a Widower with young Children. In three heads: 1, Domestication; 2, Flirtation; 3, Temptation."

Class 2. Cooks.—"How to make the Kitchen-fire too hot for the Missus, and too cool for the Sirloin."

Class 3. Butlers.—"How to substitute Marsala for Madeira, and Vin Ordinaire for Château-Lafitte."

Class 4. Lady's-Maids.—"How to look much prettier than the young ladies when there are visitors in the house."

Class 5. Footmen.—"How to make a fortune out of six feet two in height, and calves nineteen inches round."

Class 6. Men and Wives.—"How to keep their quarrels to themselves, and feed their 'incumbrances' in the neighbourhood."

Class 7. Coachmen and Grooms.—"How to make the corn supplied to the stables more useful than if wasted on dumb animals."

Class 8. Housemaids.—"How to train that noble animal, the harmless necessary cat, to break glass and snap up unconsidered trifles."

It can scarcely be doubted, from this preliminary syllabus of lectures, that the new Institution will do much for the comfort, economy, and refinement of our households.

Digitized by Google

RATHER VAGUE.

"EVA, DID YOU HEAR THAT LADY'S NAME THAT 'S COME TO SEE MAMMA?" "YES. MRS. ABEL."

"I WONDER IF SHE 'S THE MOTHER OF THOSE TWO BOYS MAMMA TOLD US OF. AND ONE OF THEM WAS NAUGHTY, YOU KNOW, AND KILLED HIS BROTHER."

"WHAT NONSENSE, EVA! WHY, THAT HAPPENED EVER SO LONG AGO! IF SHE 'S ANYBODY, SHE MUST BE THEIR GRANDMOTHER!"

NICK OR NOTHING.

[The following lines have been dropped into Mr. Punch's Letter-Box. The signature is partly undecipherable, but, from internal evidence, and a certain unusual odour about the sealing-wax, he conjectures that the missive may have emanated from the personage whom MR. DISRAELI euphemistically called "a peculiar potentate." Mr. Punch prints the communication without further comment.]

MR. PUNCH,

YOU are getting most iconoclastic,
You mannikin mortals, but this is too strong—
A new dose of dogma exceedingly drastic
Such sceptical laxness will call for ere long.
Tradition and Tale you have turned topsy-turvey,
But this last attempt to cut me from your creed
Is far worse than wicked—it 's stupid and scurvy,
Although—please the parsons!—it shall not succeed.

I 've had many flouts in my time, but, like DIZZY,
(Nous autres admire him!) I care not for those;
Saint Dunstan declared he once made himself busy—
Of course the old Mulciber fibbed!—with my nose.
But granting the tongs and the tweak, they were trifles
Compared with this insult from Clifton that comes;
I swear indignation my voice fairly stifles
When I hear myself branded as chief of the Hums!

Ah, JENKINS of Clifton! your future my care is!
You think me—O Lucifer, here is a fall!—
A sort of a swart subterrene Mrs. Harris,
And doubt if there 's "any sich person at all!"
If seeing 's believing—aha!—but no matter,
The parsons plus PHILLIMORE bay on your track,
A victim to clerical chasing and clatter,
Might envy Actæon his peacefuller pack.

I'm safe, for the orthodox can't do without me,
The sine qua non of their Church and their creed,
To serve me would shock them far less than to doubt me,
To Niebuhrise me were destructive indeed.
I 'm the parson's own pet, and these reckless attackers
Of me will find them at their heels double quick,
With the sinners for thralls, and the saintly for backers,
A fico for JENKINS!

Yours gaily,

OLD NICK.

NONAGE AND DOTAGE.

AT the Maidstone Assizes, the other day, a British Jury, on a case of breach of promise of marriage, actually found a verdict for the defendant. But they had no choice. Defendant's Counsel pleaded infancy, and proved his client to be under twenty. The learned gentleman argued "that an infant was only liable for necessaries supplied to him," and that "marriage could not be treated as a necessary"; and JUDGE DENMAN put the question of infancy as the only one to be tried. It is quite clear that a wife cannot be a necessary anyhow for an infant, unless a very forward one, but a nurse may and generally is. Sometimes the defendant in a breach of promise case is an old man in his second childhood, who, if he wants a wife at all, wants her only as a nurse. On behalf of an aged ninny in cases of this description, would it not be advisable to legalise the plea of infancy?

The Situation in Spain.

THE Alphonists, by not cutting off supplies from the Carlists in their retreats, have been said to have given them a modus vivendi. They seem to have rectified that mistake by active measures through which they are giving their adversaries a modus moriendi.

Digitized by Google

"DOING PENANCE."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

A CITY MAYOR'S NEST.

Place—The Guildhall. Time—An hour before the dawn on the 2nd of August, 1875. Gog, the giant of Progress, and Magog, the symbol of Statu Quo, discovered on Guard.

Gog. Well, Brother, I trust you are pleased. I really think the International Demonstration (taken as a whole) has been a great success. Don't you think so too?

Magog. Well, it wasn't so werry bad. It wos wot I call a himmertation—something like that there feed we 'ad when the furreign Suff'rings came Citywards in the beginning of this 'ere new-fangled cent'ry.

Gog. My dear Brother, pray call their Majesties—Sovereigns. Look to your pronunciation, my good fellow, look to your pronunciation.

Magog. I tell yer wot it is—you leave my grammar alone, can't yer! Although you 've taken up with the new style, I tell yer I 'old with the old. At the beginning of this 'ere new-fangled cent'ry we called 'em "Suff'rings."

Gog. My dear fellow, we need not quarrel. I have no doubt (when I take into consideration the crushes at the old City banquets) that "Suffering" was not an inappropriate title.

Magog. An inner—wot? I tell yer what it is, Gog, I don't understand 'alf yer say. You 've grown so werry fine of late years, that there 's no knowing yer! Wot 's come over yer?

Gog. I have merely marched with the Spirit of the Age. There is nothing absurd about an Alderman now-a-days.

Magog. Well, there never was, was there?

Gog. My dear Brother, you have the entrée to the City Library. I will give you a reply by asking a question. Have you ever looked at the back numbers of the periodical published at the Office of the Greatest Sage of this and any other century?

Magog. You mean Mr. Punch. In course I 'ave. Who ain't?

Gog. Pray use the aspirate, my dear Brother. You positively shock me. Your education must have been sadly neglected.

Magog. Neglected indeed! Now I tell you wot it is, don't you begin a chaffing me about my haches, coz I won't stand it.

Gog. I apologise. Let us change the subject. To return, you must have been pleased with the International gathering. It was better, far better, than the banquet given to the Allied Sovereigns, because it was held in the honour of peace. It was a congress of doves.

Magog. Right you are—turtle doves!

Gog. You are pleased to be facetious! But was not the sight most gratifying? Did it not prove that Municipal Government had received a new lease of power and popularity?

Magog. Guver'ment, indeed! A lot of guver'ment we 'ave in the City now-a-days! Why, 'aven't we been obligated to give up almost everythink? Didn't they make us turn Smiffel into a butcher's shop? didn't they meddle and muddle with the Thames? and 'aven't they put down the men in brass? A coming into the City and turning of everythink upside down!

Gog. I am delighted to say that everything that was capable of improvement twenty years ago is now greatly improved. The Lord Mayor of London is no longer the laughing-stock of the whole nation.

Magog. And why shouldn't he be?

Gog. Because he has taken his proper place. He is the National Host, and the Head of Public Philanthropy.

Magog. Fine words butter no parsnips! I like the old style best. Give me the days when the Lord Mayor and the Corporation did nothing but heat and drink and go to sleep in the Justice Room of the Mansion 'Ouse!

Gog. My dear Brother, I fear your tastes are unrefined.

Magog. I s'pose yer means "low." Low, yerself! Who haaks scribblers and hartists, and such like chaps, to dinner nowadays? Yah!

Gog. I rejoice to say that after many years of "black neglect" (I quote from a recent speech of that distinguished novelist Mr. Disraeli), the City has redeemed its reputation by recognising the claim of Genius to share the honours bestowed upon the Soldier and the King.

Magog. Well, if that aint low, I don't know wot is! But it 's too 'ot for rows. Let 's go to Margate awhile nobody 's looking.

Gog. Margate!

Magog. O, don't you be shocked. It 's quite genteel now. Don't yer know as 'ow the Prince took 'is wife (bless 'er sweet face and kind 'eart!) with 'im the other day. Where 'is Ry'l 'Ighness can go, surely you and I can.

Gog. Well, really, I should like a little sea-air. Do you think we could get away without attracting attention to our departure?

Magog. In course we can! Now, then, down yer comes! 'Old 'ard! Get back!—just our luck!—'ere comes a Peeler! We must wait for another hopertoonity!

[We may add that when our parcel was made up, the City Giants were still on guard, and London slept in peace.

A SAINT'S WARNING.

Your Meteorologists may refer the late rains and floods to natural causes, but the truly weather-wise will know what to think when they read the subjoined extract from a Hampshire journal—the Andover Advertiser:—

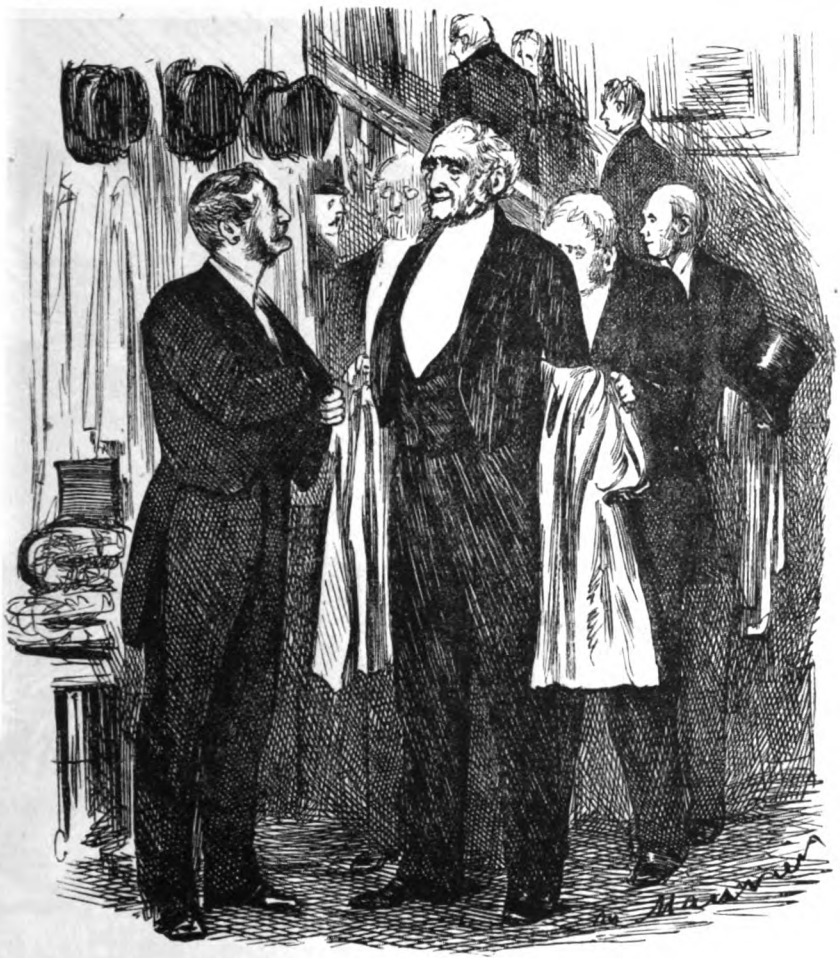
"A startling rumour has lately been current in this county to the effect that the authorities of the Cathedral are about to disturb the repose of St. Swithin, by either removing the slab which is dedicated to him in the Presbytery, or by placing on the top of it the proposed cenotaph of Bishop Sumner."

It may be that this report is unfounded, for the deluge on St. Swithin's Day, and the subsequent floods, have been followed by some fine harvest weather. Or perhaps the authorities of Winchester Cathedral have abandoned a vile intention. But in so far as they are the same as those who, a few years since, turned the bones of Rufus out of his grave, because towards the end of eight centuries they discovered that the tomb over it stood in the way, they are capable of anything. To be sure Swithin as saint had the advantage of Rufus as Sinner. On the other hand, Bishop Sumner has the better of St. Swithin, by his reign of forty years to the Saint's of forty days.

Offence may also have been given to St. Swithin by the sale of Winchester House, and by the enlargement of the new diocese of Rochester, through the diminution of the old one of Winchester, now shorn of Putney, Mortlake, Wimbledon, Richmond, and Kingston-on-Thames. The Saint may have resented this curtailment of his old domains by throwing cold water upon that proceeding. However, his wrath seems to have abated; at least, his waters have. Should the former rekindle, and the latter be renewed, perhaps, with the view of appeasing St. Swithin, devotees at the approaching season, instead of going to Lourdes or Paray-le-Monial, might make a pilgrimage to Winchester. They would be heartily welcomed there by the tradesmen and licensed victuallers.

But as it is an ill wind that blows, so it is bad weather that brings, nobody good. If St. Swithin, as successor to Jupiter Pluvius, is injurious to the farmer, he is gracious to the mycolo-list and mycophagist. If he drowns the hay and wheat, he quickens the mushrooms and toadstools. Among these last, Mr. Punch is told, there is an esculent variety sacred to a Saint—the St. George's agaric,—which comes up on or about St. George's Day. But the Patron Saint of fungi and their eaters at large is clearly St. Swithin. In this connection it is remarkable that the general form of mushrooms is that of an umbrella.

NEW NAVAL MONSTER.



The last new thing in naval architecture is a Russian novelty, the Novgorod, designed by Admiral Popoff, and highly commended in the Times by a no less authority than Mr. E. J. Reed. She carries armour eleven inches thick and guns of twenty-eight tons, goes eight knots an hour, has steamed from Nicolaieff round the south of the Crimea to the Circassian coast, thence back as far as Sebastopol, then on to Odessa, and lastly into the Sea of Azoff, through the Straits of Kertch in a depth of only fourteen feet of water. The Novgorod is described as a "Circular Ironclad." She does rather fast work for a sort of vessel that our old naval heroes would have styled a saucepan and a tub. In another kind of phraseology than the purely nautical, to wit, the horsey, or, so to speak, the horse-marine, she might be said to be "a rum 'un to look at but a good 'un to go," and the Admiralty might as well perhaps consider the possibility that the Novgorod might some day prove an ugly customer.

Digitized by Google

THE END OF THE SUMMER MANŒUVRES.

Digitized by Google

"FOREWARNED, FOREARMED."

Our Reporter (before Public Dinner). "BEG PARDON, MY LORD! BUT COULD YOUR LORDSHIP KINDLY OBLIGE ME BY GIVING ME A HINT AS TO WHAT YOUR LORDSHIP IS GOING TO SAY, IN REPLY TO THE DUKE, WHEN HIS GRACE PROPOSES YOUR LORDSHIP'S HEALTH?"

His Lordship. "HOW CAN I TELL YOU WHAT I'M GOING TO SAY UNTIL I'VE HEARD WHAT THE DUKE SAYS?"

Our Reporter. "O, I CAN OBLIGE YOUR LORDSHIP WITH WHAT HIS GRACE IS GOING TO SAY. I'VE GOT IT ALL IN MY POCKET!" [Produces Manuscript.

REPENTANCE.

(By a Domesticated Stockbroker.)

WELL, here I am, MATILDA,
I've brought you the fish and ice;
It isn't turbot, it's brill, dear,
And I hope that you'll find it nice;

And give me a chair, my poppet,
And something that's cool to drink;
And Eau de Cologne, dear—drop it
On my forehead before I sink;

And open the window wider,
And bring me my slippers, love,
And order a cup of cider,
And lend me your fan, my dove;

And where is the cool silk jacket
I purchased last year for ease?
If it isn't unpacked, unpack it,
And give it me, if you please;

And I think that I'll take a nap, dear,
Or at least just close my eyes,
And bring me my smoking-cap, dear,
And a pillow, and—drat the flies!

For all this blessed day long, love,
I've been toiling in the heat,
And I feel I've been very wrong, love,
As likewise have you, my sweet;

And we'd better make up our minds, pet,
That in future we'll promise not
To complain of the chilling winds, pet,
For to-day it is much too hot.

City Sports.

FOR some years past the all-absorbing amusement east of Temple Bar has been Kite-flying. Fashions will change, however, and this pastime has had to cede the palm lately to some very smart Cricketing,—in which many of the most successful Kite-flyers only came off second-best. Several of them were soon stumped—some experiencing a difficulty in finding their bails after they were bowled over.

On the side of the field, both long and short slips were found at the Banks—by no means their proper places. In some games leg was not square, and in one case he disappeared with the bail. The most effective bowling has been that of a Young hand, who has made several good catches, and seems the only player likely to reap at the same time honour and profit from the late City games.

A BAG OF TRICKS!

PROFESSOR DISRAELI, Wizard of the East, Inventor of the "Asian Mystery," &c., &c., presents his compliments to the Members of both Houses of Parliament and the Public generally, and begs to state that he has recently added the following amusing tricks to his already extensive répertoire of Political Illusions:—

The Magic Mess.

The Professor will take a dozen first-rate Bills (collected haphazard from the ranks of the Ministry), and after allowing them to grow to an extraordinary size, will cause them to vanish, by the waving of a pen, into thin air. In the place of the dozen first-rate Bills will be found a small and unpopular Measure of the Professor's own construction.

The Phantom Paper.

In this trick the Professor will take a popular Bill and destroy it in the presence of the Public. A storm will immediately arise, upon which the Professor will speedily restore the Bill to what (the Public will believe) was its original condition.

The Changeable Order Book.

The Professor will cause the names of a number of Bills to appear on the pages of an Order Book. He will invite the World to get rid of them, and the invitation will not be accepted. Suddenly (when least expected) the page, at the Professor's command, will become a blank.

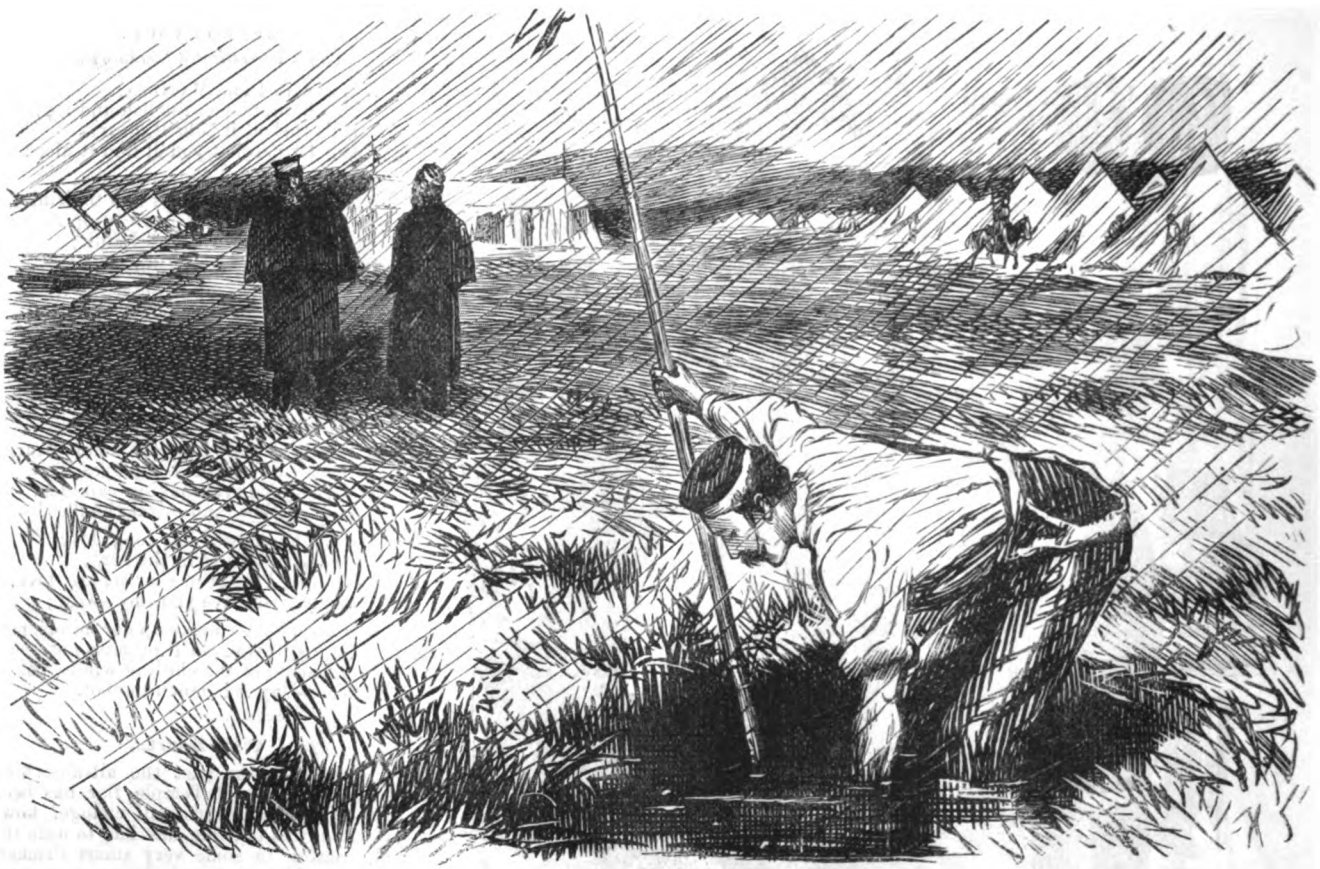
The Perplexed Party.

The Professor will hold up a number of Measures before a Party, and will ask for the colour of the Measures. The reply of the Party will be "black." Immediately the Professor will prove that the Measures are "white," to the astonishment of all beholders.

Sound versus Vapour.

The Professor will take the Queen's Speech and pass it round for inspection. It will be found to contain a large number of promises. By an effort of will, the Professor will change all the promises into smoke.

The Vanishing Majority.



This remarkable feat (in which nearly seventy votes will be made to disappear in the most extraordinary manner) is in active preparation, and will probably be exhibited in the House of Commons shortly after the completion of the Recess.

The Professor pledges himself to perform the last-mentioned feat in a third of the time consumed in its accomplishment by his predecessor, DR. WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE.

On a Proposed Abandonment.

To massacre the Innocents,
We know's a sad affair;
But throwing Sailors overboard
Was more than we could bear.

Digitized by Google

SUMMER DRILLS. ALDERSHOT, 1875.

Inspecting Officer. "AUGH! WHAT THE DEUCE IS THAT MAN—AH—DOING THERE?!"
Captain. "O, HE'S ONLY LOOKING FOR HIS SADDLE, SIR!"

JOHN'S BAD DREAM.

JOHN BULL he sat in the Summer dusk,
And brooded o'er his Times;
The air was sweet with the rose's musk,
And a sea-breeze shook the limes.
But his heart was hot. "I've a precious lot
Of bunglers," murmured he,
Or things better would thrive, 'twixt dead and alive,
On my "Silver Streak of Sea."

"Ha! Ha! Ho! Ho!" JOHN looked, and lo!
A Thing was standing there,
With lantern-jaws, and legs a-bow,
And a tangle of sea-weedy hair.
"Who are you?" quoth JOHN. With a laugh that fell
Like the rattle of dead men's bones,
Quoth the grisly thing, "You should know me well,
For my name is DAVY JONES!

"A partner I in the shipping firm
That is hight 'JOHN BULL & Co.'
I'm the 'Sub-Sea Branch'—'tis the fittest term,
For I manage affairs below!"
"The deuce you do!" cried choleric JOHN.
Said the Spectre, "Don't be rash,
For our little games you must see are one,
And our interests scarce can clash.

"Of tars I have always taken tithe,
But my 'perks' rise cent. per cent.
Since we struck hands. O, my heart is blithe,
And my maw well-nigh content.
Auxiliars brave were the wind and wave,
But to cram my locker full,
Here's ho! for the shrewd 'ship-knacker' knave,
And hurrah! for the rotten hull!

"For they came in hundreds who came in scores,
Your 'Jacks,'"—(JOHN gave a groan)—
"From the 'Coffin-Ships' which leave your shores
Bound for a port well known,
For Death, in the pay of Mammon, is there
On each o'erladen deck.
There are few little specs so safe and square
As an unseaworthy wreck.

"All know BRITANNIA rules the waves,
And her 'hearts of oak' are stout,
And to send them down to watery graves
Is a game that pays all out!
Their deaths fill the black sheep's coffers full:
For me, I pick their bones;
So here's hurrah! for the ship-knacker,
And his partner, DAVY JONES!"

* * * * * *

JOHN BULL awoke from a troubled dream,
And he uttered never a word;
But there was that in his eye's quick gleam
Which showed that his soul was stirred.
And if still his sailors to death are done,
With an eye to greed, or grouse,
MR. BULL will have a very big bone
To pick with a certain House!

Kentish Fire.

(For the Canterbury Week.)

No. 1.

IF you wanted to attract the attention of any two persons in Kent, where would you go to for that purpose?
You would go to beckon 'em (Beckenham).

No. 2.

What song would the Kentish labourer sing in October?
"After the Hop Era's over!"

[Exit swiftly our Kentish Kontributor.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

om Campbell might bid us—
Of Plimsoll and of Bates
Sing the dubious renown
When in personal debates
"Merchant Shipping" settled down.
Reid and Hunt fiercely bandying
Pro and con.;
And Sir Wilfrid hand to hand,
'Gainst Sir Stafford making stand,
While Bentinck, big and bland,
Led them on!

Before getting to such serious business (Commons—Saturday Morning Sitting) as Mr. Plimsoll's imputation and Mr. Bates's refutation, Mr. C. Lewis and the Attorney-General had a small (but troublesome) bone to pick together. The said Smallbone appears to be an old rogue who, by proceedings which Mr. Punch prefers not to characterise in plain—or, rather, ugly—English, having put his brother's widow to heavy costs, for which she had a moral but not a legal claim on him, she was compelled to file a bill in Chancery against him. The result was that Smallbone was ordered by the Court to convey to her certain property which he had "conveyed" to himself, and to pay some £60 of costs. To defeat the claim against him, this amiable old gentleman made not the smallest bones of collusively getting rid of his property, after providing for the costs of the enterprising attorney who had assisted him in his equitable litigation. The upshot was that he found himself committed to prison by the County Court Judge, at the cost of a violation of form, and, through his own stupidity and that of his lawyer, was kept in durance eight months. Admitting the irregularity of the sentence itself, Mr. Punch can only say, "Served him right."

The most enterprising and active attorney in the House, Mr. C. Lewis (M.P. for Londonderry), has brought the case before the House with professional eagerness to avenge violated form, and a natural desire to make the most of his Smallbone. The House saw the last of it, it is to be hoped, on Saturday. Mr. Lewis wants to restrict the County Court Judge's power of committing fraudulent debtors. Suppose, instead, he were to try his hand at a Bill for restricting Attorneys' power of committing themselves, by bringing or defending fraudulent suits?

On Civil Service Estimates, a hawk unnaturally proceeded to pike out hawks' een, Dr. Cameron moving to strike off a grant of £200 towards chairs at Edinburgh and St. Andrew's for teachers.

The Scottish Schoolmaster might well have been abroad, and even aghast, at such a violation of the good old Scottish rule—the simple plan—

"That Scots should get who had the power,
And Scots should keep who can."

Dr. Playfair rebuked Dr. Cameron, but the grant was withdrawn from the Estimate—a Cross having been set against it.

Then came a very different vote—£454,368 for National Education in Ireland. Where the National Exchequer gives £85, local contributers only give £14. Luckily the results of little Paudreen's schooling are better than the "results" of old Pat's payments, though even the best might be better. But John Bull owes Pat a heavy debt for past blundering, oppression, and injustice, and will do wisely to pay it in the shape of education expenses. What Ireland wants are better and more loyal National School-teachers. What Irish National School-teachers want are better houses and better stipends; and we rejoice to know that Government is giving both, though still with too timid a hand. Even pensions to superannuated teachers are in prospect.

If the "results" of Irish National schooling are not as good as could be wished, both countries will find better payment by these "results" than any other that is likely to come of money spent for Pat out of J. B.'s pocket.

And then came regrettable debates in re Bates. The maritime Member for Plymouth, outraged by Mr. Plimsoll's question if he is, or is not, the Mr. Bates who last year figured at a painfully high figure in the Wreck Register, wants a Select Committee to clear himself of the imputation which he feels—and, no doubt, rightly feels—to be implied against him, of shipknacking. As far as classification and insurance returns can clear a man, Mr. Bates has cleared himself, but wants a Select Committee to go into the matter, and bring him out as clean as a man naturally wishes to stand before the House and the country, after the shadow of such an imputation has been flung over him.

Mr. Plimsoll is in too excited and critical a state of health, we are sorry to hear, to be trusted with a "personally-conducted" debate, and Mr. Reed, on whom he leans, contrived to lisp out a "modus apologendi," after much heated question how far Mr. Plimsoll had retracted, how far he was bound to retract, and much collision of words and wit, in which the House took that eager and interested part which it may be trusted to take in a personal question. The late Constructor of the Navy showed all his acknowledged cleverness of construction, and his skill in avoiding misconstruction even by two of its most belligerent Baronets, Sir W. Lawson and Sir C. Dilke, and some of its most amiable officials, as Lord Sandon, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Ward Hunt, and the Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition, besides less minacious outsiders, in the Resolution (accepted nem. con.)—

"That in the opinion of this House, no stain rests upon the character of the Honourable Member for Plymouth, in consequence of the statements made in this House by the Honourable Member for Derby on the 22nd of July."

The House has at least shown its sense by not crowning the waste of Saturday's discussion by the blunder of a Select Commission for an inquiry safe to be more personally conducted than the most tribulatory tour of too many Cooks in which broth was ever spoilt.

Best part of Saturday's morning sitting was consumed in this hot and heady fight. It was announced as a sitting for the dispatch of business. In one sense only business was dispatched—it was very effectually killed by overlaying with Bates and Plimsoll. The only thing on which the House is to be congratulated is for not taking its Bates at his word. It would certainly have been drawn into a trap.

Monday (Lords).—Last stages of a batch of Bills rattled through. Q. b. f. f. q. s. In plain English, good luck to them!

(Commons.) A hard night's work, trying to stop gaps in the Stop-Gap Merchant Shipping Bill. This Bill can only be described as "unseaworthy" when it came into the House, and Punch sorely fears it will hardly deserve to be called seaworthy when it comes out.

Mr. Reed first tried to carry a Resolution, on going into Committee, in favour of a load-line, whether sanctioned or recorded by Government. This was only meant to ventilate the load-line point, and the Resolution was withdrawn when this had been effected. The real fight came in Committee when the House so unmistakably showed its determination to have some load-line, that, after opposition from Sir C.

Digitized by Google

THE ART OF CONVERSATION.

First Party (opening Conversation). "'Ave you 'eard as Jim Bates's Father says he'll give 'im the Sack?"

Second Ditto (after pause). "Whose Father?"

First Ditto. "Why, Jim Bates's!"

Second Ditto (after pause). "Jim Bates's who?"

First Ditto. "Why, Jim Bates's Father!"

Second Ditto (after pause). "Jim Bates's Father! Well, what does he Say?"

First Ditto. "Says he'll give 'im the Sack!"

Second Ditto (after pause). "Give 'im the what?"

First Ditto. "Give him the Sack!"

Second Ditto (after pause). "Give who the Sack?"

First Ditto. "Why, Jim Bates!"

Second Ditto (after long pause). "Ah! I 'eard that the Day before yesterday!"

Addebley, Mr. Disraeli was fain to yield a line to be drawn by the ship-owner, not the Government. Mr. Reed then moved the prohibition of deck-cargoes, but was defeated, after a discussion in which Sir C. Adderley and Sir Stafford Northcote had by no means the best of the argument, by 193 to 130.

John Bull and Jack Tar both would have good reason to be obliged to the House of Lords if they could undo the Commons' work in this matter, though it is to be feared that there is little chance of it at this fag-end of the Session. Probably the majority felt that, as they had overborne the Government on the load-line, and meant to force their hand—Mr. Disraeli calls it "assisting" them—in stowage of grain-cargoes, they thought it only due to their allegiance to throw over Mr. Reed's deck-load clause.

The upshot of the night's work was to stop two of the leaks in the Bill, and to leave the third, and perhaps most dangerous, open. But there is an extra plank or two between poor Jack and death for this winter. Let us hope there will not be quite so many who go down to the (bottom) of the sea in ships as usual.

Tuesday (Lords).—Lord Carnarvon gave a cheery account of the Gold Coast, whose revenue is increasing as it ought to be—pacification going on steadily, and Slave Trade Abolition Ordinances working well. Conflict of jurisdictions between our settlements and the French at the Gambia are the worst dangers!

"Satan finds some mischief still
For idle hands to do."

And when, besides idleness, new rum is cheap, the thermometer at boiling heat, and swamp-fever waving her yellow wings over every un-woolled head within the margin of that White Man's Grave, the Old Gentleman ought to be having a peculiarly lively time of it.

Lord John, who loves to have his dear old fingers in every pie, came forward with a zeal for poor Jack that does honour to his heart, to move an address to Her Majesty to give special directions for every precaution, between this and next Session, to preserve the lives of our sailors from danger of unseaworthy ships.

Luckily, Plimsoll and Parliament together will give Poor Jack something better than such directions to trust to.

"Pretty," as Pepys would say, to see everybody so zealous for Poor Jack all of a sudden!

(Commons.) Sir C. Adderley formally announced Her Majesty's intention to issue a Royal Commission on Copyright. Not before it is wanted. Hitherto, when one hears of Mr. C. Reade's eighteenpence and Archbishop Whately's eleven and twopence (was it?) from the Pactolus opened for British Authors by Canadian law, one cannot feel that, up to this time, whatever else they have got by the sale of their works, they have got such a "Royal Commission."

A long and strong fight—Mr. Shaw Lefevre heading the one force, and Mr. Hunt the other—between the pro and con of competition for Naval Cadetships. Much sense spoken on both sides.

The Government have determined on doing away with Competition for the first step in naval service. There is much to be said against competition as actually conducted, not for Naval Cadetships only, but for Army Commissions and Civil Service Clerkships. It has been conducted, as far as Mr. Punch can learn, so as to strain to the uttermost the case that can be made in its favour. There is nothing that stands in more need of the constant influence of sound sense and the diplomatic discouragement of pedantry and red-tape. But the remedy is not to do away with competition—for that means the re-establishment of jobbery, back-stairs' favour, and personal influence, and the casting back again into the cold shade of unfriended ability, and energy that cannot reach high or low enough for a patron—but the conducting of it with a sensible regard to the demands of the Service, and the actual training, natural strength, and knowledge and reading reasonably to be looked for from boys of the age to be examined.

John Bull should look to this, and neither allow Competitive Examination to be discredited by the pedantry and unwisdom in the misconduct of it, nor the country to be robbed of the unassisted energy and ability to which it should open, and was meant to open, a career.

The Battle of the Guns—already fought once this Session—opened again by Captain Price. He insists on experiments to test our Woolwich "Infants," bigger and lesser, as they would be tested in action—not with violet and iris-powder, but villanous sulphur and saltpetre.

These "Infants" are certainly too dear to be left without very close looking after. Mr. Hunt promised careful, nay, crucial experiment.

Wednesday.—Additional Estimates of £417,000. Dodson may gnaw at the Exchequer file, and welcome, while Sir Stafford is able to announce a rise in Customs, Excise and Stamps large enough not only comfortably to cover the big body of Supplementary Estimates, but to tuck in on each side with a million margin! To be sure, "there's many a slip between the cup and the lip"; and only four months of the twelve are over yet.

Mr. Gladstone once more donned his favourite costume—the dark mantle of Jeremiah, Prophet and Economist—and delivered himself of a wail not only over the wicked extravagance of John Bull's household, but, still more, over John's own light-hearted indifference to it. John absolutely declines to work himself into a wax over any amount of wasted candle-ends and cheese-parings not fully accounted for.

Mr. Gladstone has added another to his famous series of political Triads—"the Three Roads to Ruin of a Government—to increase expenditure, not to reduce debt, and never to impose new taxes."

Digitized by Google

THE ALDERSHOT CAMPAIGN.

Private Sweeny (Highland Regiment). "COLONY BOG, IS IT? THIN BEDAD! I WISH I WAS BACK IN TIPPERARY!"

A WET BIRTHDAY.

THE column of Births, Deaths, and Marriages in the Times, if carefully watched, will often supply food for serious reflection. Perhaps its latest phenomenon is the announcement of a birth, with the special intimation that the interesting little event happened "on the 15th July (St. Swithin's)."

Births on particular days of the year are frequently recorded, and the reason is generally self evident. It is not difficult to understand the degree of parental anxiety that would be felt concerning the future career of a child which had the misfortune to be born on the first of April; and for an infant coming into the world on Michaelmas Day fears might be reasonably entertained lest it should turn out a goose. But what influence St. Swithin can have, either for good or for evil, on the fortunes of a child born on the day appropriated to the rainy Saint in the Calendar, it is not so easy to determine.

The babe, if a boy, might undoubtedly be called Swithin, or possibly Pluvius (like Tertius, Septimus, Octavius, and other appellations of the like description), but such a name would certainly expose the bearer to a good deal of unpleasantness during his schooldays, and it is hard to say what advantage it could be to him at any period of his life. If a girl, the French name, Reine, might perhaps be considered appropriate. (For the contingency of twins we confess we are not provided.) Whatever sex, however, the child born on St. Swithin's may be, it will do well to remember, when of an age to appreciate the moral teachings of poetry, the line in LONGFELLOW which reminds us that and as it grows up into manhood or womanhood, if it proves provident and thrifty, and disposed to put by something against that rainy day which occurs in the lives of most of us with disagreeable frequency, it will have no cause to regret having been born on St. Swithin's, and chronicled in the Times accordingly.

"Into each life some rain must fall;"

N.B.

THE Post contains a favourable notice of the Burney Prize Essay for 1873, lately published. It may be necessary to inform some of our friends in North Britain that the Burney Prize Essay is not a treatise on Cremation.

But was not one of MR. GLADSTONE's late quarrels with his successors precisely on the ground of their making too elaborate arrangements for systematic reduction of the National Debt? And we hardly think JOHN BULL will be easily got to turn on them for not laying on new taxes.

And now—

Supply's back is broken, my outworn M.P.!
The last "spoke" outspoken has rendered you free.

Ministers may go and dine with the LORD MAYOR. "The Session's difficulty is DISRAELI's opportunity." If of late sometimes a little below the mark in Parliamentary flow, he was at high-tide again in post-prandial speech. Was he not in the City? and, in the City, is not a man's "good"ness gauged by the credit he takes—and gets? What is the credit commanded, say, by the COLLIES, or any other and happier Lords of Lombard Street, to that taken "for self and partners" by BENJAMIN, the bold speaker for the great House of DISRAELI & Co.?

Thursday.—DR. KENEALY on COLONEL BAKER—unsavoury comment on an unsavoury case. DR. KENEALY thinks COLONEL BAKER—senteneed to twelve months' imprisonment—has no right to the same remission of hard labour which was granted to DR. KENEALY himself, during his imprisonment of one month, for a cruel assault upon his son, in 1851. MAJOR DICKSON reminded the Doctor of the historical parallel. No one else needed this reminder.

Another leak made good in the Stop-Gap Shipping Bill, thanks to MR. SHAW LEFEVRE. Owners are to be liable to Seamen for casualties due to unseaworthiness of their ships.

How the sea-worthies ought to be rejoicing over these heavy blows and sore discouragements of the sea-unworthies!

Hamlet on Covent Garden Market.

(Adapted to the Circumstances.)

"BREAK, break, my heart, for I must hold my—nose."

[Exit HAMLET, with his pocket-handkerchief up to his nose.

TRULY MARVELLOUS OCCURRENCE.

SPIRITUALIST papers, please copy the subjoined extract from the Cambridge Independent:—

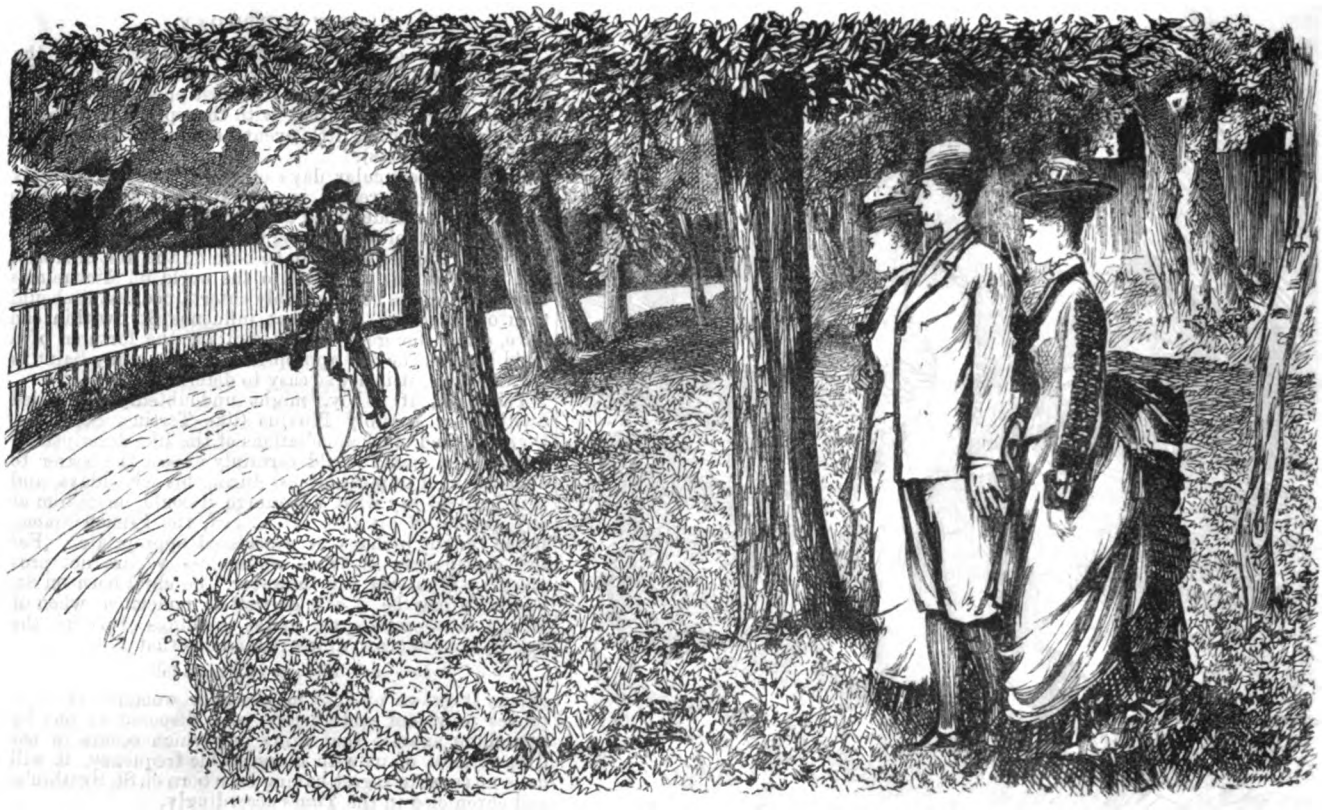
"DEATH FROM DROWNING.—On Saturday evening MR. C. F. JARROLD, Deputy Coroner, held an inquest at the Hazard Arms, Mill Lane, concerning the death of THOMAS SHIPP, of Russell Street, who was drowned on the following night."

Tale marvellous as brief. There is nothing in all old AUBREY's Miscellanies so weird and eerie told as a simple event. Fancy a Coroner and his Jury sitting by anticipation one evening on the body of a man who is to be drowned the next night. What a particularly grim and, at the same time, practical instance of faith in prevision! Eh, DONALD, man, what is there to pattern it in all the annals of Scotch second-sight?

Questionable Announcement.

STUPID persons may be apt to misunderstand the subjoined advertisement in that truly national journal, the Irish Times:—

HARCOURT STREET.



TO BE LET, at 80 guineas per annum, a most desirable HOUSE in the best part of above street, with ample accommodation for a large family, having all modern improvements, and in perfect order.

If old-fashioned as well as stupid, they, perhaps, would like the Irish Times to explain to them what the modern improvements of a family are, especially seeing that order, and more especially order in a large family, is at any rate not one of them.

Spotless Character.

A NOTORIOUS Gentleman, who has been in gaol, is reported to have said that he had left prison, after having served his sentence, without any stain on his character. Very likely. Some characters are of such a colour that they never show the dirt.

Digitized by Google

AN AMBUSCADE.

Captain de Smythe insidiously beguiles the fair Laura and her Sister to a certain secluded Spot where, as he happens to know, his hated rival, Mr. Tomkyns, is in the habit of secretly Practising on the Bicycle. He (Captain de S.) calculates that a mere glimpse of Mr. T., as he wobbles wildly by on that Instrument, will be sufficient to dispel any Illusions that the fair Laura may cherish in her Bosom respecting that worthy Man.

STOCKS FOR THE CITY.

(Song by a Small Capitalist.)

Joint-stock and Loan Prospectus, go,
To light cigars and fires!
No men I trust but those I know;
Doubt all else rogues and liars.
For slender savings though I fain
Would get a trifle more,
Financiers, you conspire in vain
To filch my little store.

O for a Seer who, gazing round,
Could peer all projects through,
Discern the rotten from the sound,
And teach me wisdom true;
How more than three per cent. to gain,
Yet safely to invest,
The highest interest to obtain:
Security the best!

There's nothing but the Nation's Debt
To credit I can dare,
In that alone will caution let
Me purchase any Share.
Ah where, except in risky trade,
My nest-egg could I lay,
Suppose the Debt in full were paid,
Consols wiped clean away?

'Mongst all your Stocks, ye City Men,
Where most you're wont to meet,
You lack a certain Pair to pen
Therein your swindlers' feet.
That, and a Pillory, too, at hand,
In which, like knave of yore,
Your leading rogues were forced to stand,
Might confidence restore.

WILD BEASTS CHEAP.

Mr. Punch observes that, at the sale by auction of Mander's Menagerie, whereas a Gorilla brought a hundred and five guineas, a Russian Bear brought only a sovereign, and an American Wolf twelve shillings and sixpence! Unhappily, he was unaware of the intended sale, or he might have purchased those two quadrupeds to guard his sacred portals against all intruders who plague him with contributions before they have learnt to spell.

Might not Mander's Menagerie sale be followed by an auction at the Menageries of Maunderers? A few lots may easily be set down as inviting purchasers, and any experienced Valuer could approximate to the prices at which they would be knocked down. Here is an extract from the report, by Mr. Punch's own Prophet:—

Lot 1.—A Chimpanzee from Buckinghamshire, with an original trick every evening. (£1000.)

Lot 67.—A Roman Boar from Peterborough, warranted to sing as well as dance. (2¼*d.*)

Lot 99.—An Amphibious Animal from Carliale, hitherto undescribed. (5*s.*)

Lot 201.—A Merman, caught off Greenwich, with an axe in his hand. He was very hard to capture, and was with difficulty prevented from cutting down a large oak in Greenwich Park. (£1666 6*s.* 8*d.*)

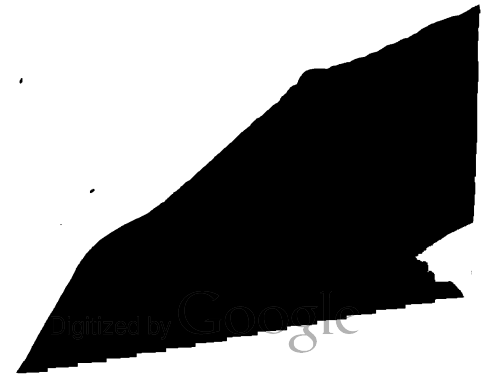
Lot 392.—A bigger Laughing Hyæna than any yet exhibited, from the County Cavan. (11*d.*)

Lot 656.—A Lion, from Stoke-upon-Trent. Very tame. Has been taught to shake his mane when sprinkled with dew. (½*d.*)

The bidding was not brisk, everyone appearing anxious that the Lots should be knocked down. Indeed, the Lots were of the same opinion, as the majority of them knocked themselves down.

SALT WATER FOR SCOUNDRELS.

Nobody can eat water. But when Shipowners send unseaworthy ships afloat, they might at least be compelled to drink their leak.



Digitized by Google

PICKPOCKETS IN THE CITY.

ACCOMMODATION BILL AND FOREIGN-LOANS MO' "DOING BUSINESS."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE SEASON SUMMED UP.

By one of its Slaves.

A season of rushing and struggling to squeeze
And scramble through crowds for the shake of a hand,
Of nine o'clock dinners, and five o'clock teas;
Of wanting a cab when not one 's on the stand.
A season of wishing the Countess of This
Would ask one to dinner and not to a drum;
Of watching at Prince's some very fast Miss,
And feeling quite sure that to grief she will come.

A season of coaxing and scheming to get
Invitations to anything out of the way;
Of swearing that never again you will bet,
And of trying to smile as your money you pay.

A season of polo and poker and balls,
Of wet garden-parties—passed, yawning, in-doors.
A season of making most wearisome calls,
And enduring returns from more wearisome bores.
A season of mirth and success to a few,—
To many a season of failure and pain.
A season of yearning to see something new,
A season of seeking for pleasure in vain.
O Season of Slavery! why do we shrink
From breaking the fetters that bind us to thee?—
Good gracious! it 's time to be off to the Rink!
I promised the Dashes to meet them at three!

HOW THEY FIGHT IN FRANCE.

Letter I.

Monsieur, St. Petersburg, January 1.

I have discovered that, twelve years ago, you were good enough to accuse me of telling an infamous falsehood. I have taken ten years to obtain a copy of the wretched print in which the libel appeared. That miserable periodical you edited twelve years ago, and, if it still exists, you edit it still. You must edit it still, I repeat, because it is too barbarous to be edited by any one less mean, less despicable, less dishonourable than yourself! You hear me! The never-to-be-sufficiently-hated journal is, or was, called Le Gamin de Deux Mondes.

I courteously invite you to explain to me what is the meaning you attach to the words "infamous" and "falsehood."

I may add, for your information, that recently I st[illegible] into the cemetery in which is situated the grave of your [illegible]other. I (the writer of this letter—you understand) danc[illegible]t grave!

Accept, Monsieur, my co[illegible]derations the m[illegible]ed.

Hect[illegible]

[illegible]TTER [illegible]

Monsieur,

Yo[illegible]

mercena[illegible] the words [illegible] You are a ma[illegible] confer upon yo[illegible] of your literar[illegible]

i[illegible] information [illegible]

[illegible] the histor[illegible]

[illegible] denoun[illegible]

your late father and your mother's uncle as poverty-stricken pick-pockets and low-salaried spies!

Accept, Monsieur, my considerations the most distinguished.

Agamemnon de Pommes de Terre.

Letter III.

Monsieur, Leicester Square, May 1.

I hurry to answer your miserable and pretentious communication. As an explanation it is unsatisfactory; as a contribution to periodical literature it is beneath contempt! If you are not in the hands of the Police for having committed petty larceny, I invite you to meet me—to meet me to fight a duel to the death! You hear what I say—to the death!

First, let me inform you, however, that you are a villain, a ruffian, and a vagabond!

My friends, M. le Comte de Foie de Veau, and M. le Chevalier de Vingt-cinq Centimes, will represent me.

Accept, Monsieur, my considerations the most distinguished.

Hector de Vin Ordinaire.

Letter IV.

Bureau of Le Gamin de Deux Mondes, July 1.

Monsieur,

You will see that your weak-minded challenge is accepted at once. I rejoice that spoon-stealing is not punishable with death, for the Law has thus saved you from the guillotine to fall a victim to my vengeance!

It will be no news to you to hear that you are a bully, a card-sharper, and a coward!

My friends, M. le Vicomte Piffpaff-Pouf, and M. le General Boum, will represent me.

Accept, Monsieur, my considerations the most distinguished.

Agamemnon de Pommes de Terre.

Letter V.

Messieurs, Paris, September 1.

We have the honour to declare that we are acting on behalf of our Principal, M. Hector de Vin Ordinaire. Our Principal (claiming his rights as the insulted party) demands to choose weapons, distance, and conditions. He proposes pistols as the weapons; for the distance, three paces; for the conditions, that the pistols be loaded with powder, paper, and bullets.

We await with impatience the reply of your Principal.

Accept, Messieurs, our considerations the most distinguished.

Le Comte de Foie de Veau.
Le Chevalier de Vingt-cinq Centimes.

Letter VI.

Messieurs, Paris, October 1. 2 P.M.

We have the honour to announce that we have hastily submitted your proposal to our Principal. M. Agamemnon de Pommes de Terre hurriedly accepts the weapons, the distance, and a part of the conditions. He will meet your Principal, pistol in hand, at three paces distance. However, although the pistols may be loaded with powder and paper, they must not be loaded with bullets. His honour (which is far dearer to him than life) demands this sacrifice!

The incident must therefore be considered at an end, unless your Principal accepts our Principal's proposition, which is as follows:

The weapons to be rapiers, the distance four feet, and the conditions to be that the rapiers shall have blades at least three feet long.

We await your reply with anxiety.

Accept, Messieurs, our considerations the most distinguished.

Le Vicomte Piffpaff-Pouf.
Le General Boum.

Letter VII.

Messieurs, Paris, October 1. 3 P.M.

We have the honour to announce that we have tardily and regretfully submitted the proposal of your Principal to our Principal. After much and long consideration, our Principal finds that he can [illegible] agree to rapiers and the distance. He objects to the conditions. [illegible] feels that his courage—his reputation as a brave man, demand [illegible] the rapiers, instead of having blades three feet long, should [illegible]ve no blades at all!

Under these circumstances, the incident must be considered at an end.

Accept[illegible]rs, our considerations the most distinguished.

Le Comte de Foie de Veau.
Le Chevalier de Vingt-cinq Centimes.

* * * * *

[illegible]e to say, the incident was at an end!

The Bakerian Lecture.—Justice Brett's Address.

Digitized by Google

A FAMILIAR FOE.

Captain (during a passing Shower in the late Manœuvres). "I WONDER WE DON'T SEE THE ENEMY!"
Rheumatic Major. "ENEMY! EGOD, I FEEL HIM IN BOTH KNEES A'READY!"

SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

Suggested for discussion at the Social Science Congress.

If you invite to your table the Wife of a Dean, and the Niece of an Archbishop, which of them do you hold entitled to precedence?

When the Girls and their Mamma remind you of your promise to let them give a ball, and instead of it you offer them a visit to the Continent, are you justified in mentally reserving to yourself the right to take them to Boulogne one day, and back the next by Calais?

If, when dining at the Club, you chance to come across a dear old friend of yours, whom you have not met for years, do you consider that the meeting may be held as an excuse for your not going home till morning?

When you take down a Lady who is an utter stranger to you, and who replies in monosyllables to everything you say, are you justified, before the joint comes, in leaving her to her fate, and offering your small talk to your left-hand neighbour?

Supposing a young gentleman in the Civil Service earns a salary (less Income-tax) of two hundred pounds a year, to what expenditure per week ought he in prudence to restrict himself in the way of (1) gloves, (2) cigars, and (3) button-hole bouquets?

Is there any prospect of solving the vexed question, whether the Host or Hostess ought to lead the way to dinner?

When you are informed that the Doctor says the children require change of air, and are told with the same breath that Cook desires a holiday, and that your study must be painted, what more proof do you require that the Season is at an end, and that you had better make your mind up to leave Town within a fortnight?

Weighed in the social scale, which is the lighter fib—to say that you are indisposed, or that you are not at home, when your dear friends the BOREINGTONS expressly call to see you?

When you are invited to dine at half-past seven—the at being underlined with considerable emphasis—do you think that punctual eight would really be considered premature for your arrival?

Is it possible for two Ladies of average acquirements to converse with one another for upwards of five minutes without talking of their balls, their babies, or their bonnets?

If you happen to meet your friends the SWELLBOROUGHS in Town in the middle of September, how much credit is attached to the pretexts which you mutually advance for being visible?

Supposing that a Gentleman accompany his Wife upon a round of morning calls, and afterwards is treated to a dinner of cold mutton, to what revenge in the way of dining at his Club is he socially entitled?

Do you consider that an invitation to dine, which has been declined on the plea of a previous engagement, is an equivalent for a dinner which has actually been eaten?

If, while travelling abroad, you chance to stumble on your tailor, to whom you are in debt, is it wise to greet him affably or to endeavour not to see him?

If you are asked to what you know will be a dismal dinner, how many days do you consider you may wait before replying, in the hope that something better may prevent your acceptance?

PARSON AND GRAZIER.

IN giving judgment on Keet v. Smith, SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE explained that, by law, the Churchyard is the Incumbent's freehold—subject to the right of parishioners, or strangers dying in the parish, to simple interment, but no more. He added:—

"Indeed, the Incumbent has the right to pasture animals which do not injure the bodies interred in the Churchyard, and every gravestone, of course, interferes with that pasture."

The Parson is bound to respect existing gravestones. But it appears that, if he stood on his rights, he might refuse to have any more set up, and could, if he chose, devote all the available space in the Churchyard to growing meat. He might then advertise, if he thought it likely to pay, Burial-ground Beef or Churchyard Mutton. The Reverend Gentleman would thus exhibit himself in a twofold capacity of Pastor.

Digitized by Google

"PRIVATES, BUT NOT FULL."

First Driver (after a long Day). "The 'Orse 'rtillery 's a gettin' quite Aristercratic. It don't Dine till Eight o'Clock!!"

Second Driver. "Stroikes me to-morrow the 'Orse 'rtillery 'll be too Aristercratic to Dine at all!!"

THE LORD MAYOR'S DESSERT.

"Mr. Disraeli was somewhat alarmed at the Lord Mayor's intimation that a critical summary of the Session should be part of the dessert at the Mansion House."

Cruel, indeed!
In the Egyptian Hall and famous feed;
Banquet divine,
Most luscious turtle and the iciest wine:
But with your pine
And melon and fantastic sweets, you mix
Crude politics!

For shame, Lord Mayor!
This is a thing no Premier ought to bear:
He 'd fain be witty,
And with his epigrams delight the City.
It is a pity
That you should make him play the old, old tricks
Of politics.

Punch was not there:
But he hath known your classic style, Lord Mayor:
Hesperia's trees
Never produced such delicate fruit as these;
And faith! one sees
That the device of adding politics
Was sour old Nick's.

No loss at all:
Egypt loomed dimly in the Egyptian Hall.
The diner winks
At th' orator who hides the thought he thinks—
The modern Sphinx;
And asks no questions that are like to hurt
About desert.

Punch does not see
Why, if the team of Progress gallops free,
A Premier wise
Need from a sumptuous City banquet rise
T' apologise.
Dull choicest dinner, if dessert must mix
With politics.

COMPARATIVE JUSTICE.

Why reproduce the "Enormous Gooseberry" at this season when you can invent an enormity so much more astounding than that as the one thus reported in the Eastern Morning News?—

"Pulling out a Horse's Tongue.—John Jameson, farm-servant with Mr. Michael Owston, of Harpham, farmer, was charged with pulling out the tongue of a mare, his property. Defendant was working in a field with the mare, which did not please him, in going too fast, as he alleged. He therefore tied the leading-string on a draw-loop round the horse's tongue, and, by jerking the string, completely cut out the poor animal's tongue, which fell to the ground. For this cruel act defendant was committed to the House of Correction, at Beverley, for three months, to hard labour, and the wages in Mr. Owston's hands were to be forfeited."

If a wretch had the heart to pull out a horse's tongue, yet could he have the strength to do it? The idea of such a thing seems absurd, and the story of it a seasonable, but a shocking, if not a too monstrous hoax. However, the above paragraph is published under the head of "Police Intelligence—Driffield Police," which is not the place in a paper for seasonable enormities. It can hardly, therefore, but be horribly true, and Mr. Punch is asked to say if the Reverend Gentleman who has made himself famous on the East Lincolnshire Bench thought fourteen days' imprisonment and four years in a reformatory not too severe a sentence on Sarah Chandler for plucking a flower, what punishment does Mr. Punch suppose that he would have felt bound to award to John Jameson for plucking out a horse's tongue? And does not Mr. Punch think that John Jameson may think himself a lucky fellow that he lives in the East Riding of York, and not in East Lincolnshire? Mr. Punch hardly knows. A Magistrate capable of passing an uncommonly cruel sentence on a child for a peccadillo, might, for aught Mr. Punch knows, have a fellow-feeling for an uncommonly cruel fellow, and perhaps if Mr. Jameson had been had up in East Lincolnshire for pulling a horse's tongue out, then, instead of being punished (as he ought to have been) with the utmost rigour of the law, he might have been let off altogether.

PRODIGIOUS!

This is an attractive advertisement in a Sporting Paper:—

TO NOBLEMEN and GENTLEMEN.—TO BE SOLD (by private arrangement only), a fine FREEHOLD ESTATE, in South Wales, containing upwards of 700 Acres, with a good family Mansion thereon. The Property commands, from the local advantages it possesses, a baronetcy, and a seat in Parliament. First-class Fishing and Shooting. Principals only treated with. Apply, &c.

What are the "local advantages" of the land? Turnips, mangel-wurzel, gooseberries, or what? Do these give the title, namely, for example, Sir Timothy Turnips, Bart., Sir Mangel-Wurzel, Sir Gregory Gooseberry, and so forth? Or do the Fishing and Shooting give the title, as, again, Sir Francis Fish Pheasant, Sir Peter Pike Partridge? And then to be able to "command" a seat in Parliament!! Why, here 's a big chance for Dr. Kenealy and his son Ahmed! The Doctor could be the Baronet, and his son could have a seat in Parliament, next to the Convict-Baronet's advocate, without a struggle. At all events, it is worthy of immediate attention.

Digitized by Google

HAYMAKING IN GLOUCESTERSHIRE, 1875.

"WELL, I CAN'T SAY AS I THINKS THIS YER 'AY 'LL BE GOOD FOR MUCH WHEN WE DO CATCH 'IM!!"

TRIBUTE TO AN AGITATOR.

TO THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN,

THE Irish have been "celebrating" what they call a "Centenary" festival in honour of DANIEL O'CONNELL. It is described as a "tribute to his memory," and a pretty addition it is to the tribute which he used to receive under the name of "Rhint." I have never had any tribute whatever paid me. My "Centenary" occurred in 1862, but nobody then proposed to pay any "tribute" to my memory. Why, then, have the Irish been paying tribute on tribute to DAN O'CONNELL? "O!" they say, "because he was our Great Liberator!" Was I not your Great Liberator, and a Liberator a precious deal Greater than theirs, though, to be sure, people never called me a Big Biggarman? Were not my writings and speeches the original means which in the end liberated you from the borough-mongers? I shall be told that my Centenary has gone by, but that is all the more reason why a tribute which has been long owing to my memory should now be paid. What tribute do I want? Not a statue, which is a tribute only fit for such a fellow as SHAKSPEARE, or such another fellow as BYRON. No; pay me a tribute more durable than a thing made of brass, which will, by-and-by, turn to verdigris. Let your tribute be the publication of a handsome edition of my works, which everybody who has read them acknowledges to be the most useful and best written in the English language. That is the only sort of tribute for me. Pay me that, and, in so doing, you will render an imperishable and everlasting tribute to the memory of Hades, August 7, 1875. WILLIAM COBBETT.

Appropriate Music.

LAST week a dinner was given at the Mansion House in honour of Her Majesty's Ministers. The band of the Coldstream Guards attended. To those jaded Members of the Houses of Parliament who were present, the last piece in the programme must have suggested the most delightful anticipations—it was the galop "Up and Off!"

EASTWARD HO! OR, PITY A POOR PRIEST!

(See MR. MACKONOCHIE'S Letter to the BISHOP OF LONDON.)

THERE were Wise men of old, and they came from the East
To worship. Alas for the latter-day Priest!
For the poor Western Wiseacre, Bishops to gall,
Must turn to the East, or not worship at all:
O, what can he do for a peace-seeking soul,
"With a Surplice alone, Sir,—not even a Stole!"
Since he holds that his holiest rite 's of no worth
If he 's robbed of his vestments, and "stands to the North."
A Philistine laic may laugh at this rumpus
Concerning one point in the Clerical Compass;
But how if the "pastoral care" of the nation
Depends on the practice of "Orientation"?
What hope of preserving the flock from perdition,
Without due regard to the "Eastward position"?
Where to worship aright—so they tell us, at least—
We must stand, like fire-worshippers, facing the East,
Midst rites that are formal, and lights that are garish,
And led, in full dress, by the Priest of the Parish?

"Please the Pigs."

A GOOD HOUSE TO LET, with Accommodation for Pigs.

THIS advertisement is sure to attract a considerable amount of attention. There are too many people living like pigs to whom such an offer of accommodation will be irresistibly tempting. The advertisement may also be regarded in another light, as an interesting example of increasing refinement in the use of the English language. Now-a-days it is evidently thought improper to mention such a vulgar thing as a pig-stye: in its stead we are taught to say "accommodation for pigs."

A NECESSITY FOR SHIPOWNERS.—You must draw the (load) line somewhere.

Digitized by Google

"NOTHING LIKE LEATHER."

Bookseller (to Lanarkshire Country Gentleman who had brought his back Numbers to be bound). "WOULD YOU LIKE THEM DONE IN 'RUSSIA' OR 'MOROCCO,' SIR?"

Old Gentleman. "NA, NEVER MAIND ABOOT ROOSHY OR MOROCCY. I'LL JUST HAE 'EM BOOND IN GLASGY HERE!"

A PRETTY KETTLE OF FISH.

MR. PUNCH has much pleasure in giving the menu of the Ministerial Whitebait Dinner. It will be seen at once that the following Bill of Fare must be authentic. In spite of this, Mr. Punch declines to hold himself responsible for either the broken English or the shattered French of the very interesting document in question.

Potage.

Broth à la Trop de Cuisiniers.

Poissons.

Plim-sol à la Merchants-Shipping-Acte
Place à la Cabinet.
Eels à la tactique du MONSIEUR DISRAELI.
Mull-it à la Session, 1875.
White-bait à l'Expédition de North-Pol.

Entrées.

Calf's-head in torture à la Majorité Conservative.
Bubble and Squeak à la Queen's-speech.
Epigram of Sweetbread à l'explication du Premier.

Rots.

Roasted Beef à la pauvre MONSIEUR JOHN-BULL.
Goose à la Tory Innocent.

Légumes.

Irish Potatoes à l'eau chaude.
Scarlet Runners à la standard-five-foot-one.

Entremet.

Cabinet Pudding à la so-many-thousand-pounds-a-year.

Dessert.

Fruits of the Session à la Château-en-Espagne.

Melody and Memory.

ACCORDING to a report of the Centenary celebration dinner the other day at Dublin, the memory of O'CONNELL was drunk with due solemnity:—

"One of the guests then sang with fine effect 'The Harp that once through Tara's Halls,' with an accompaniment on the harp."

De mortuis nil nisi bonum. But is not the memory of O'CONNELL associated with rather more than Tara, namely, with taradiddles?

MR. PUNCH'S RAILWAY GUIDE.

(Compiled for the Use of Tourists, Excursionists, and others.)

Hints about Ticket Taking.

BEFORE purchasing your ticket, it will be as well to accustom yourself to the manners and modes of address of the Booking Clerks. This task may be easily accomplished by a series of early morning strolls in the celebrated Fish Market, Billingsgate.

Never address a Clerk when he is relating an anecdote to a colleague. If you do, you may very possibly spoil the point of his story, and consequently subject yourself to a not-to-be-unexpected display of official insolence.

If you have to receive any change, you will find a weighing-machine (Troy weights) and a bottle of aquafortis very valuable.

Station Suggestions.

If you are fond of walking upon the platform, be careful to wear india-rubber buffers attached to the toes of your boots. At this season of the year you will find luggage-trucks rather heavily laden.

If you are fond of ladies' society, ask the Guard to put you into a smoking-carriage.

If you wish to save your hat from being sat upon, your coat from being torn, and your legs from being kicked, do not get into a compartment occupied by children come home for the holidays.

Necessary Preparations for the Incidents of Travel.

You should choose a seat in a carriage as near as possible to the engine, to avoid a lingering death.

As an ample amount of luggage is permitted to passengers on English Railways, you should always tie up your coffin with your sticks and umbrellas.

Never forget to insure your life. The trifling outlay will probably be returned a thousand-fold to you, or rather to your heirs, executors, and assigns.

Something about Railway Refreshments.

If you propose to lunch on your journey, a small hand-saw will be found very useful in cutting up fowls and sandwiches.

Never neglect before starting to consult your Doctor as to the best antidote to Railway Refreshment-Room Sherry.

Buns should be well soaked in water before they are eaten by travellers with tender teeth.

If you have determined upon drinking a glass of ale, see that you have time to wait for the next train before you ask that the beverage in question may be served to you. A speaking-trumpet is sometimes useful in attracting the attention of the persons behind the counter—sometimes—not always.

Railway Law.

In the eyes of the law railway travelling is not considered as an attempt to commit suicide. This strange view of the matter has been adopted by all the Coroners' Juries who have sat upon victims to railway accidents. A verdict of "Temporary Insanity" has consequently never yet been recorded in cases of this sort.

Railway Reading.

A short course of gymnastics will be useful as a preparation to reading a large-print novel in a train, an hour and a half late, making up for lost time.

Persons subject to nervous excitement, melancholia, or hysterics, should never attempt to understand Bradshaw.

Mr. Punch's Golden Rule—a Sequel to the Above.

Travellers should as seldom as possible travel by Railway!

AN OLD PROVERB NEWLY APPLIED.

A SPORTING friend has lately had a favourite racer photographed, and wishing to show the animal its likeness, he put the Carte before the Horse.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

FRIDAY, August 6th, begins the last week of the Session. No more Essence of Collective Wisdom till next February! No more burning and shining light from the Clock-tower beacon above, or the benches below. No more displays of dizziness in Office, or drowsiness in Opposition. JOHN BULL and the Times must combine to exist without that pièce de resistance, their "Imperial Parliament," for five months to come.

"Finis coronat opus" says the old saw. But "Opus coronat finem" is the rule of British Parliamentary practice. What week of the Session sees such a marvellous amount of work knocked off as the last? Look at the Lords, and the Bills they have made happy despatch of in these last eight days; the interchange and consideration of amendments between the two Houses; the last shots fired, as the two lines of battle sheered asunder! the Notices of Motion for next Session! to say nothing of such bagatelles as a Review of the Session from the Hartingtonian stand-point and the Disraelitish, the Indian Budget, and a Ministerial Whitebait Dinner.

To come to particulars. The next time LORD ORANMORE (Lords, Friday, August 6th) wants to know the particulars of CARDINAL MANNING'S reception at one of the PRINCE OF WALES'S Chiswick Garden-parties, Punch would recommend him to get an invitation, and see for himself, rather than trust to some unauthorised JENKINS.

(Commons.) Unseaworthy Ships Bill (Stop-gap) read a Third Time, after notice by MR. REED of MR. PLIMSOLL'S intention to move for a Select Committee on Marine Insurance next Session. JOHN BULL may depend upon it, that is where the shoe pinches; and so long as your ship-knacker can recover more than the value of his rotten hulls from the underwriters, he will find means to sail, and sink them, in spite of all the Unseaworthy Shipping Bills and Board of Trade Surveyors with which you can dog his rascally heels.

The report of the Judicature Bill brought up a breeze with it. The Attorneys are beginning to be a power in the House now, and they showed it to-night in a not unreasonable onslaught on some questionable points of Barristers' practice, as

Digitized by Google

AN EVENING'S FISHING (BEHIND THE DISTILLERY AT SLIGO).

First Factory Lad. "Dom'nick, did you get n'er a Bite at all?"
Second Ditto. "Sorra wan, Pat. Only wan small wan!"
First Ditto. "Yerrah! Lave it there, an' come Home. Shure you'll get more than that in Bed!"

the taking retainers in more cases than a man can attend to; the employing of clerks to screw up their masters' fees, and so forth. Barristers' fees, like physicians', once came under the description of "honoraria," the honour of the recipient dispensing with the need of legal bond between employer and employed. Physicians' fees are now recoverable at law. No wonder if, under the influence of such malpractices at the Bar as the above, a feeling is growing up that the sooner Counsels' fees are made matters of common contract—where money paid on the one hand means work done on the other—the better.

With the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill came the Review of the Session—both sides of the shield. Lord Hartington took the black, in discharge of his duty as Head of Her Majesty's Opposition. Could he do less, after the stupendous coolness of that Mansion-House mystification?

"Labour Laws, about the best thing Government had done—but all the good in them picked out of the pigeon-holes, or brains, of the late Administration; Public Health Act, mere draughtsman's work; Artisans' Dwellings Act a big Towns Improvement Bill made general; Friendly Societies Act, great cry and little wool—without security against dishonest, local administration, or provision for trustworthy audit; Unseaworthy Ships Act, a stop-gap, run up in a scare; the Judicature Act, another stop-gap, forced on Government by a mutiny; Agricultural Holdings Act, a law for Landlords and Tenants to contract themselves out of; wasted time of the Session, due not to the factiousness of Opposition, but to the feebleness of Government.

"Summary of the Session:—Public business mismanaged; Parliamentary prestige lowered; Legislation emasculated."

Disraeli, Q.C., contra:

"So much for Opposition's criticism on Government. Opposition having been a nullity, Government cannot criticise Opposition. Our Labour Laws do embody a principle, and we did not find it in our predecessors' pigeon-holes: it is Abolition of Imprisonment for Breach of Civil Contract.

"Our Public Health Act is more than a consolidation. It contains alterations and amendments of the existing law. If our Artisans' Dwellings Act merely invites to Town Improvements, why did you leave us to give the invitation? Besides, millions are waiting to be invested under it. Our Friendly Societies Bill does all that was practicable. Our own Merchant Shipping Bill Opposition amendments forced us to give up, willy-nilly; and we were very glad to get the help of public excitement to save what we have saved out of the wreck of it. Our Judicature Bill is, at least, an improvement upon yours. If the Agricultural Holdings Act does little, you would fain have had us do less; you were always advising us to put it off to another year. If our measures want the element of compulsion, it is because we prefer that of persuasion. If time has been wasted, it has been the fault chiefly of a headless Opposition. If the dignity of the House has been lowered, thank the Members for Stoke and Louth for it—not Her Majesty's Government, or me its head. What case has the Honourable Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition made out? Has he proved that we have done nothing, or that it has done anything?"

Punch, C.J.:

"An unsatisfactory Session. Little to raise the credit of Parliament in the matter of Legislation—a great deal to lower it in the manner. Her Majesty's Government and its Leader, and Her Majesty's Opposition and its Leader, equally below the mark."

With this duello of the Leaders really ends the Session. No Essence is to be extracted from the dregs and driblets of the last few days—devoted in both Houses to Third Readings, and consideration of Commons' Amendments by Lords, and Lords' by Commons.

Only on Monday, when the Session was really over, and the House had dwindled to the faggest of its fag-end, Lord G. Hamilton brought in the Indian Budget. Mr. Fawcett moved a Resolution censuring the Government for this mockery.

Mr. Grant Duff, from his own experience, does not think the House would pay a bit more attention to the Indian Budget if it were brought in in the prime of the Session.

Much depends on its introducer.

Lord G. Hamilton had a pretty good account to render, with the aid, at least, of that very convenient distinction of "ordinary" and "extraordinary" expenditure. Last year's anticipated deficit is likely to end in a modest surplus.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Smollett made a savage onslaught on the Public Works Department, and charged Expenditure on Public Works—his red rag, much after the taurine manner—with his eyes shut.

Save this belated Budget, there is nothing more to note, beyond the happy flight of the House on Friday—the pilgrims to the shrine of Saint Grouse (all but the poor Office-hacks) having sped on their devotions before the formal fall of the curtain.

A GRATEFUL ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

From a Representative Root.

"Our wondrous roots."—Mr. Disraeli at the Mansion House.

Dear Punch,

One may hail without show of servility
A tribute from genius to humble utility;
And Dizzy, that master of phrases and flourishes,
At last does us justice. The tuber which nourishes
Patriots par excellence, begs on behalf of
All roots to acknowledge the compliment. Chaff of Sour critics to carp at his diction as tumid,
And tell us he said that our climate was humid
In sentences pompous and sesquipedalian,
Fit for some dull dithyrambic Deucalion
Telling the tale of his deluge!—these fellows I
Doubt not are moved by professional jealousy.
"Wondrous roots!" 'Tis henceforward a watchword among us.
What poet (save Gwyer, of Penge) has e'er sung us?
Our blessings on Benjamin: Mangel and Swede,
Prime "Regent," poor radish, all hope he'll succeed.
May the "split" Opposition, like rain-beaten corn—
As he phrased it—be "desolate, prostrate, forlorn."
May he dish all his foes, from the gout to Kenealy,
May his critics be mute, may his "murphies" be mealy.
Bulb, tuber, or radix, he has all our suffrages.
(Roots are not radical!) Many a muff rages
Hotly against him, he heeds not their chatter,
Well knowing he 's right in the "root of the matter."
For me, every eye I possess shed a tear
While his eloquent tribute I gloried to hear,
To a much-tried Potato such kindness is balm
For the ills we are heir to in tuber and haulm.
Though blight may beset us, and beetles affright,
While Benjamin blesses us all shall be right.
A fig for the fears I have long been a prey to!
Colorado be blowed! I am Yours,

A Potato.

FASHION-BLINDNESS.

(A Contribution to the Philosophy of Ugliness. By a Social Seer.)

Dear Punch,

The Saturday Review says that—

"Ladies can never see ugliness in a dress, so long as it is made in the height of the reigning fashion."

Why, of course they cannot; and I hold that their inability to do so is a beneficent ordinance of Providence. Free taste and bondage to la mode are simply incompatible. Fashion has not—never has had, and probably never will have—anything directly to do with Beauty. It is here that would-be satirists of the sex shoot beside the mark. Why does a Woman dress? In order to look beautiful? Not at all. Not one woman in a hundred cares a snapped hair-pin for Beauty in itself. Your average she-creature has as little sense of pure loveliness—in dress, at least—as of pure humour or abstract honour. To be in the fashion is the great primary object of the woman who dresses: to attract attention, to eclipse rivals, and to spend money, are strong but subordinate motives.

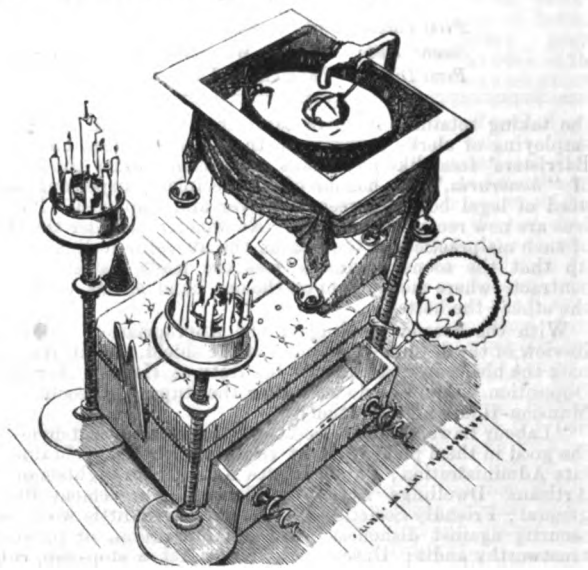
The love of change is perhaps at the bottom of the business. The sphere of mere Beauty is not wide enough to give full play to this feminine craving, and so Woman makes bold incursions into the illimitable realms of Ugliness. But—and here comes in the providential provision I have referred to—she is not conscious of the difference between the two worlds. Some people are afflicted with a disease known as colour-blindness. Well, the great majority of women are what I call "fashion-blind." If they were not so, if they were at all aware what frights—there is no stronger or more awful word in the feminine vocabulary—they make of themselves in their devotion to Fashion, their lives would be a burden to them.

Art and Fashion together are fast forcing on a sort of apotheosis of Ugliness. Our picture galleries, our illustrated books, and our shops and streets, furnish daily multiplying proofs of the truth of this assertion. The Artists—save the mark!—deserve unsparing blame, but the Women are rather to be pitied. They have, for the most part, no real sense of the beautiful or the becoming as such, and that is why all satire or argument addressed to them from this point of view is as futile as paper pellets puffed against a pachyderm, or, more aptly, as a mitrailleuse fired at a mollusc. Belinda buys an unbecoming bonnet. As a natural consequence, Belinda looks a guy, and, probably, courts a cold. But prove to her that it is ugly, demonstrate that it is unhealthy, and the dear creature is smilingly immoveable as Atlas. You miss the point, I repeat. Belinda does not want a becoming or a convenient bonnet, but simply a fashionable one. A Fashionable Fright is to her an absurd self-contradiction in terms. When the Fashion changes, she will freely own that it was monstrous; the spell of Fashion-blindness is no longer upon her with regard to that particular mode at least, and Free Taste has a chance. But Free Taste against Fashion—pooh! 'Tis Lombard Street to a China orange with a vengeance!

Satire has couched many a keen and glittering lance against the Fool-goddess Fashion, but always, and inevitably, in vain. I think I have shown why. Saturday Reviewers, and other pseudo-satirical Mentors, please copy. If Woman care infinitely less for beauty or health than for "the height of the reigning fashion," where is the use of proving to her that the height of the reigning fashion is ugly or injurious? Against Fashion-blindness, as against stupidity, even the Gods fight in vain. Q. E. D.

Yours,

Cancer.



THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By Leonardo Della Robbia de Tudor Westpond Tumpkyns, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

Expense should be no object. My aim is to create a National taste in internal and external House Decoration. My hints, therefore, will be as applicable to the dwellings of the Poor (to which I intend to give considerable attention) as to the mansions of the Rich.

Here, for instance, is a plan for a Bed, and a Bedroom, which can be equally adapted for the poor, the middling, and the very wealthy. Its great merit is its originality and its cheapness.

The Early Italian Style.

Four posts supporting candelabra at the feet and oriental fans at the head.

Pointed hangings, with bells attached, to be set by machinery to tunes and time. These could form a perfect carillon.

Between the posts, at the bed-head, is a suspended circular perforated pan to hold cold water. A string hangs down, which, at a pull from the person in bed, will release the water, and immediately a refreshing douche will be given. This can also be used as a bath by a person above without disturbing the sleeper below.

The pillow forms a writing-desk.

The mattress is easily opened in the centre by pressing a spring, and allows the sleeper to descend suddenly into a full-length bath below, which lies between two chests of clothes-drawers, forming the side supports of the bedstead. The handles of the drawers can be taken out and used as corkscrews and pipe-pickers. The boot-jack fits in naturally at the foot of the bed, so as to be useful whenever you happen to go to bed in your boots.

Digitized by Google

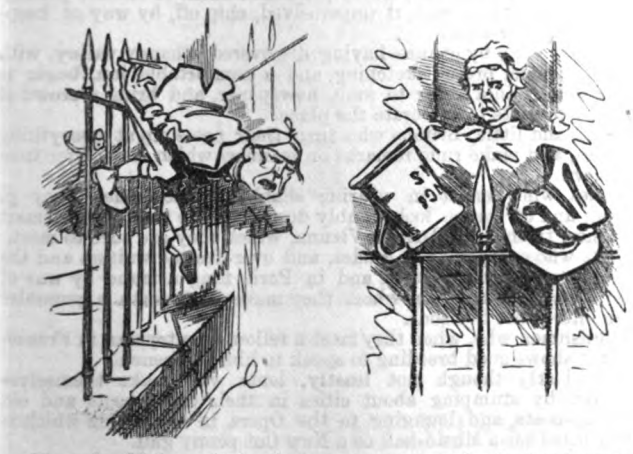
This bed in full operation is admirably adapted to the necessities of a poor family, where economy of space is an object. Thus: One person can sleep in the cistern above; the mattress dividing in the centre (as described above), can open out so as to make two couches, allowing air for a fourth person to sleep in the bath below, while a fifth would find a most comfortable bed in the corkscrew drawer. N.B.—A clock in a mattress is also most useful; it gives the hour, its alarum calls you, and it supplies the ticking.

One great moral principle must never be lost sight of, whether by builder, architect, furnisher, or tenant, and that is,

No matter what your appearance outside may be, as long as you are all right inside.

Can you ever accurately judge of a man's moral worth by his looks? No, no more than you can speculate on the amount he has at his banker's by the cut of his hair, the shape of his coat, or the turn his conversation may take.

When a woman is described as comfortable, she is no longer praised for her beauty. Greek statues are beautiful, but they never look comfortable.



A word, therefore, on Exteriors would not be inappropriate in this place.

No London house can be perfect without iron rails in front. Every London house might be accurately described as within a minute's walk of a line of rails. These ornaments are intended to keep up the good old English maxim that "an Englishman's house is his castle." A castle was fossé'd all round by its moat. The Feudal Baron gave his order to the Architect, finishing with, "And don't forget the moat."

To which the Architect replied, "So mote it be;" a phrase which is still preserved in English Freemasonry.

About an Englishman's Town-house there is no room for this moat; the nearest approach to it, therefore, is an area guarded by strong iron railings.

The spikes of these rails should be formed for use as well as ornament. They should be musical, never flat, but always sharp. The ironmonger should look sharp in putting them up, and they should be of sufficient acuteness to offer a pointed repartee to the insidious burglar.

They should be sufficiently long to serve as hooks for beer-cans, pint pots, and hat-pegs.

They should be ornamental and graceful, so as to suggest to the passing shop-boys, errand-lads, and cabmen the notion of "elegant raillery."

While on the subject of ironwork a few hints may, nay I am sure will, be useful. I mentioned burglars just now. When one of this fraternity is trapped, it will save time, if instead of calling in a policeman (unless you have a pretty housemaid in your employ, in which case you may leave all your doors and windows open, and let the burglars beggar your neighbour—they won't come near you) you send at once for your laundress, who will at once attend, and for a comparatively small sum your freshly caught burglar will soon be heavily ironed.

Modern door-hinges are an utter mistake. Never by any chance use modern door-hinges.* The only place to obtain really useful hinges, and in fact all articles of ironmongery, is Mr. J. Bellows's,† No. 3, Huxter's Rents, Charles Alley, near Gray's Inn Lane.

If a common hinge (I do not mean any one of those manufactured by J. Bellows, of No. 3, Huxter's Rents, Charles Alley, near Gray's Inn Lane, W.C.) gets out of order, and there's a screw loose, so that the hinge hangs down on one side, you will soon find that this state of affairs will be followed by some other great external hinge-awry to the door. (N.B.—This capital joke was made by Mr. Bellows, of the above-mentioned address, who has a ready-made stock always on hand; and when he has a sore throat he always has his hand on his ready-made stock.)

A door once in this condition soon comes to utter grief, or as that eminent disciple of Quentin Matsys, Mr. Bellows, Ironworker, of Huxter's Rents, facetiously puts it, "Sich a door is a dying by hinges."

As by this time the student, for whom I write, must have had a dose of iron, I will proceed to another and no less interesting question.

* I say this emphatically, and most feelingly. Not a single modern-working ironmonger has sent me an advertisement, or entered into satisfactory arrangement with me.

† Except this most respectable tradesman, and just see how it is in my power to puff him. (P.S.—My opinions are still open to a change.)

(To be continued.)

THE GONE GROTTO.

Now the holiday time of the year we have got to;
  Now the husbandmen hasten to garner their grain;
Now the streets should resound with "Remember the Grotto!"
  But of that bore we now can no longer complain.

There was one ragged urchin heard something to mutter,
  Whilst in fingers unwashed he extended a shell;
But so low was the voice of this child of the gutter,
  That his gesture was all that his meaning could tell.

Alas!—though young beggars disturbed meditations,
  When they plagued us and pestered like flies or as gnats,
And dogged us and teased us, till wild execrations
  We broke out in against those importunate brats,

O how glad we should be if once more, at this season,
  We were met with the old cry by each passing child,—
Once again, if occasion afforded it reason,
  And the grotto again in the alley were piled.

Of two things one used ever the other to follow,
  But now of that sequence cessation we mourn;
The return of the oyster and that of the swallow,
  To the mouths of the Million too dear to return.

Ah, we well recollect, in Life's race when we started,
  Then Best Natives were eightpence a dozen, galore,
But now, save as a dream of an era departed,
  We "Remember the Grotto," my tulips, no more.

Digitized by Google

JUMPING AT CONCLUSIONS.

Ethel (much impressed). "O, Miss Grumps, do look! That must be Adam!"

PERSONS WHO OUGHT NOT TO TRAVEL.

Idiots who scrawl their names upon the walls, or else carve their initials on the trees, or rocks, or turf, as a memento of their visit to places of repute.

Snobs who strut and stare about them in the middle of the streets, and crack jokes upon the names which are displayed over the shops, whereof perhaps the owners are sitting underneath.

Persons who not merely quarrel with their bread-and-butter, but find fault with everything they either eat or drink; and though at home they often dine on cold or lukewarm mutton and badly-boiled potatoes, growl and grumble at the choicest cookery abroad.

Men who act upon the principle that "every Englishman is an island," and hardly condescend to answer civilly when addressed with common courtesy at a table-d'hôte.

Women who persist in carrying their lapdogs, which snarl and snap at you without the slightest provocation on your part.

Simpletons who scrawl their names in the hotel books, make nonsensical remarks upon the beauty of the scenery, and express themselves delighted with the "excellent accomodation" (with one "m"), or else astonished at the reasonable charges of "mine host."

Swells who, journeying en prince, and dressing every day for dinner, superciliously stare at men who travel with a knapsack and without a change of coat.

Men who use the tablecloth to clean their knife and fork, between the courses, and cannot sit through dinner without picking their teeth.

Persons who persist in airing their bad French, or still worse German or Italian, in cases where plain English is distinctly understood.

Fools who, when they stray into an unfrequented district, where the sight of British tourists is phenomenal and rare, spend their money recklessly, and tempt the simple natives to be extortionate and grasping to the strangers who come next.

Ladies who hate smoke, and really can't exist without their tea three times a day.

Men who never raise their hats when entering a Café, or take the trouble to conform to common courtesies abroad.

Snobs who, even during service, stare about a Church, and talk in loud tones of the pictures hung around the walls.

Bores who take their shop-talk with them when they travel, and, when you would enjoy a pleasant scene or sunset, bother you to listen to their details of a case.

Ladies, unattached, who cannot stir from home without innumerable packages, which exact les petits soins of all the men they meet.

Roughs who, when they go to see a monument or statue, perhaps of world-wide fame, will, if unperceived, chip off, by way of keepsake, a finger or a toe.

Donkeys who, by chance having discovered a happy valley, with a trout-stream, pretty sketching, and a comfortable inn, begin to bray about it in a letter to some newspaper, and bring a crowd of Cockney tourists to desecrate the place.

Great, and little, Britons who turn their noses up at everything they see, and make rude remarks on manners which may differ from their own.

Ladies who persist in wearing shabby dresses when they go abroad, and of course look doubly dowdy by the side of the smart costumes, fresh from Paris or Vienna, which they are sure to meet.

Dolts who overpay their guides, and over-fee the waiters and the railway guards and porters, and in Paris fling a franc by way of pour boire to a cabman, whom they make henceforth a grumbler when offered his five sous.

Englishmen who, when they meet a fellow-countryman in France, think it shows good breeding to speak to him in French.

And, lastly though not leastly, louts who make themselves abhorred by stumping about cities in their thick boots and old shooting-coats, and lounging to the Opera in a costume which is better fitted for a Music-hall or a New Cut penny gaff.

SUITORS' SUFFERINGS.

As Law is to Rheumatism, so is Equity to Gout. The fusion of Law and Equity may be said to form the counterpart of Rheumatic Gout.

Digitized by Google

"PERMISSIVE" GOVERNMENT.

LORD H. "AFTER ALL'S SAID AND DONE, YOU EXIST ONLY ON SUFFERANCE, YOU KNOW."
RIGHT HONOURABLE D. "'SUFFERANCE,' MY DEAR HARTINGTON!—
'SUFFERANCE IS THE BADGE OF ALL OUR TRIBE'!!!"

Merchant of Venice, Act I., Scene 3.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

WANTED, A LOCUM TENENS.

N.B.—CHILDREN OBJECTED TO.

(Vide "Guardian" passim.)

I want a Locum Tenens, but in vain my hopes I build,
Since I find the quivers clerical so uniformly filled.
Each unencumbered Benedick, each baccalère so bold,
Disdains my locum "tenency"—they call it so!—to hold.

In vain I seek for anchorites. Instead there come, in shoals,
Parents too philoprogenitive, whose children, pretty souls!
So "sadly want a change" that into any place they 'll poke 'em.
I cannot bid such quiverfulls come here tenere locum.

I am not myself a celibate. I 've daughters from their teens
Long since run wild to chignon, polonaise, and crinolines.
They make my parsonage pleasant, the parishioners must feel
The rectory in all details is thoroughly genteel.

Whereas each demon boy from school set free, and Tomboy miss,
Who find in tops and toffee their supremacy of bliss,
Would ruin all its neatness. No; the prospect is too dreary:
Such imps shall never have a chance their locum here tenere.

Still, I must find a substitute; my boy has just come down
From College; and the girls require at least their month in town:
One's wife must see the fashions—still, I 'm forced to bide a wee bit—
O, who, without a family, my locum here tenebit?

I offer easy duty—no Dissenters—landscape fair—
Rectory charming—servants boarded—pony and basket-chair;
And I want a Locum Tenens, single—and, by failure nothing daunted,
Still I state my want, and Echo—sportive Echo—still says, "Wanted!"

THE IMPORTANCE OF BRAINS.

As regards injuries of the nervous system the present day is, probably, much like the past.

"The times have been
That when the brains were out the man would die."

Those times do not appear to have ceased to be. Nobody has ever been known to survive an entire loss of the brain. But, at one of the late meetings of the British Medical Association at Edinburgh, in the course of a discussion of some experiments on the brain of monkeys, Dr. Fletcher said he had known a case "in which a boy had lost two ounces of his brains, and was none the worse of it." He added that "he had watched the career of that boy afterwards, but never found there was any difference in him in any respect after the occurrence, compared with his condition previously." Whereupon:—

"Dr. Lowe asked whether the boy, when he came to manhood, could drink as much alcoholic liquor as other people?

"Dr. Fletcher said that could not be ascertained, as the boy had always been a teetotaller. (Laughter.)"

The Doctors were evidently tickled by the idea that a teetotaller lost nothing of any consequence in losing brains. But that does not quite follow. A boy who had lost two ounces of brain appeared to Dr. Fletcher to be as wise as he was before. He might have had wisdom to lose or he might not. The medical philosophers at Edinburgh, having had their laugh, could have gone on to ask Dr. Fletcher a few questions. Dr. Punch would have proposed these inquiries to Dr. Fletcher: What did you know about the boy's mind previously to his loss of brain? How far did you subsequently test its powers? Did the injury of the brain extend to both hemispheres, or was it confined to one of them? May it not be that as loss of one eye is to sight, so is lesion of one hemisphere of the brain to mind? Or else, then is the brain anything more than mere padding, as little connected with mind as pudding, and of so much less noble use than pudding, that there would be something rather complimentary than otherwise in calling anybody—for instance, a scientific M.D. and physiologist—a pudding-headed fellow?

HOW TO ENJOY A HOLIDAY.

A Social Contrast.

I.—The Wrong Way.

Pater. Here at last! A nice reward for a long and tedious journey!

Mater. Well, you were always complaining in town.

Pater. Broken chairs, rickety table, and a hideous wall-paper!

Mater. Well, I didn't buy the chairs, make the table, or choose the wall-paper. Discontent is your strong point.

Pater. And is likely to remain so. Really, that German band is unbearable!

Mater. My dear, you have no ear for music. Why, you don't even care for my songs! You used to say you liked them once.

Pater. So I did—thirty years ago!

Mater. Before our marriage! And I have survived thirty years!

Pater. Eh? What do you mean by that, Madam?

Mater. Anything you please. But come—dinner 's ready.

Pater. Dinner! The usual thing, I suppose—underdone fish and overdone meat!

Mater. Well, I see that you are determined to make the best of everything, my dear!

Pater. I am glad you think so, my darling!

[And so they sit down to dinner.

II.—The Right Way.

Pater. Here at last! What a charming spot! A fitting sequel to a very pleasant journey!

Mater. And yet you are very fond of town!

Pater. This room reminds me of my own cozy study. Venerable chairs, a strange old table, and a quaintly-designed wall-paper.

Mater. Well, I think if I had had to furnish the house, I should have chosen the same things myself. But had they been ever so ugly, I feel sure that you would have liked them. You know, Sir, that content is your strong point.

Pater. I am sure that I shall find no opportunity of getting any merit (after the fashion of Mark Tapley) for being contented in this pleasant spot. What a capital German band!

Mater. I don't believe that you understand anything about music, Sir. Why, you even pretend that you like my old songs!

Pater. And so I do. Every day I live I like them better and better. And yet I heard them for the first time thirty years ago!

Mater. When we were married! And so I have survived thirty years!

Pater. Eh? What do you mean by that, Madam?

Mater. That I am a living proof that kindness never kills. How happy we have been! But, come—dinner 's ready.

Pater. Dinner! The usual thing, I suppose—a nice piece of fish and a juicy joint. Now, that 's just what I like. So much better than our pretentious London dinners! Not that a London dinner is not very good in its proper place.

Mater. Well, I see that you are determined to make the best of everything, my dear.

Pater. I am glad you think so, my darling!

[And so they sit down to dinner.

DEPARTURES.

The Marquis of Hartington has gone to Brighton to practise elocution (like Demosthenes) on the beach.

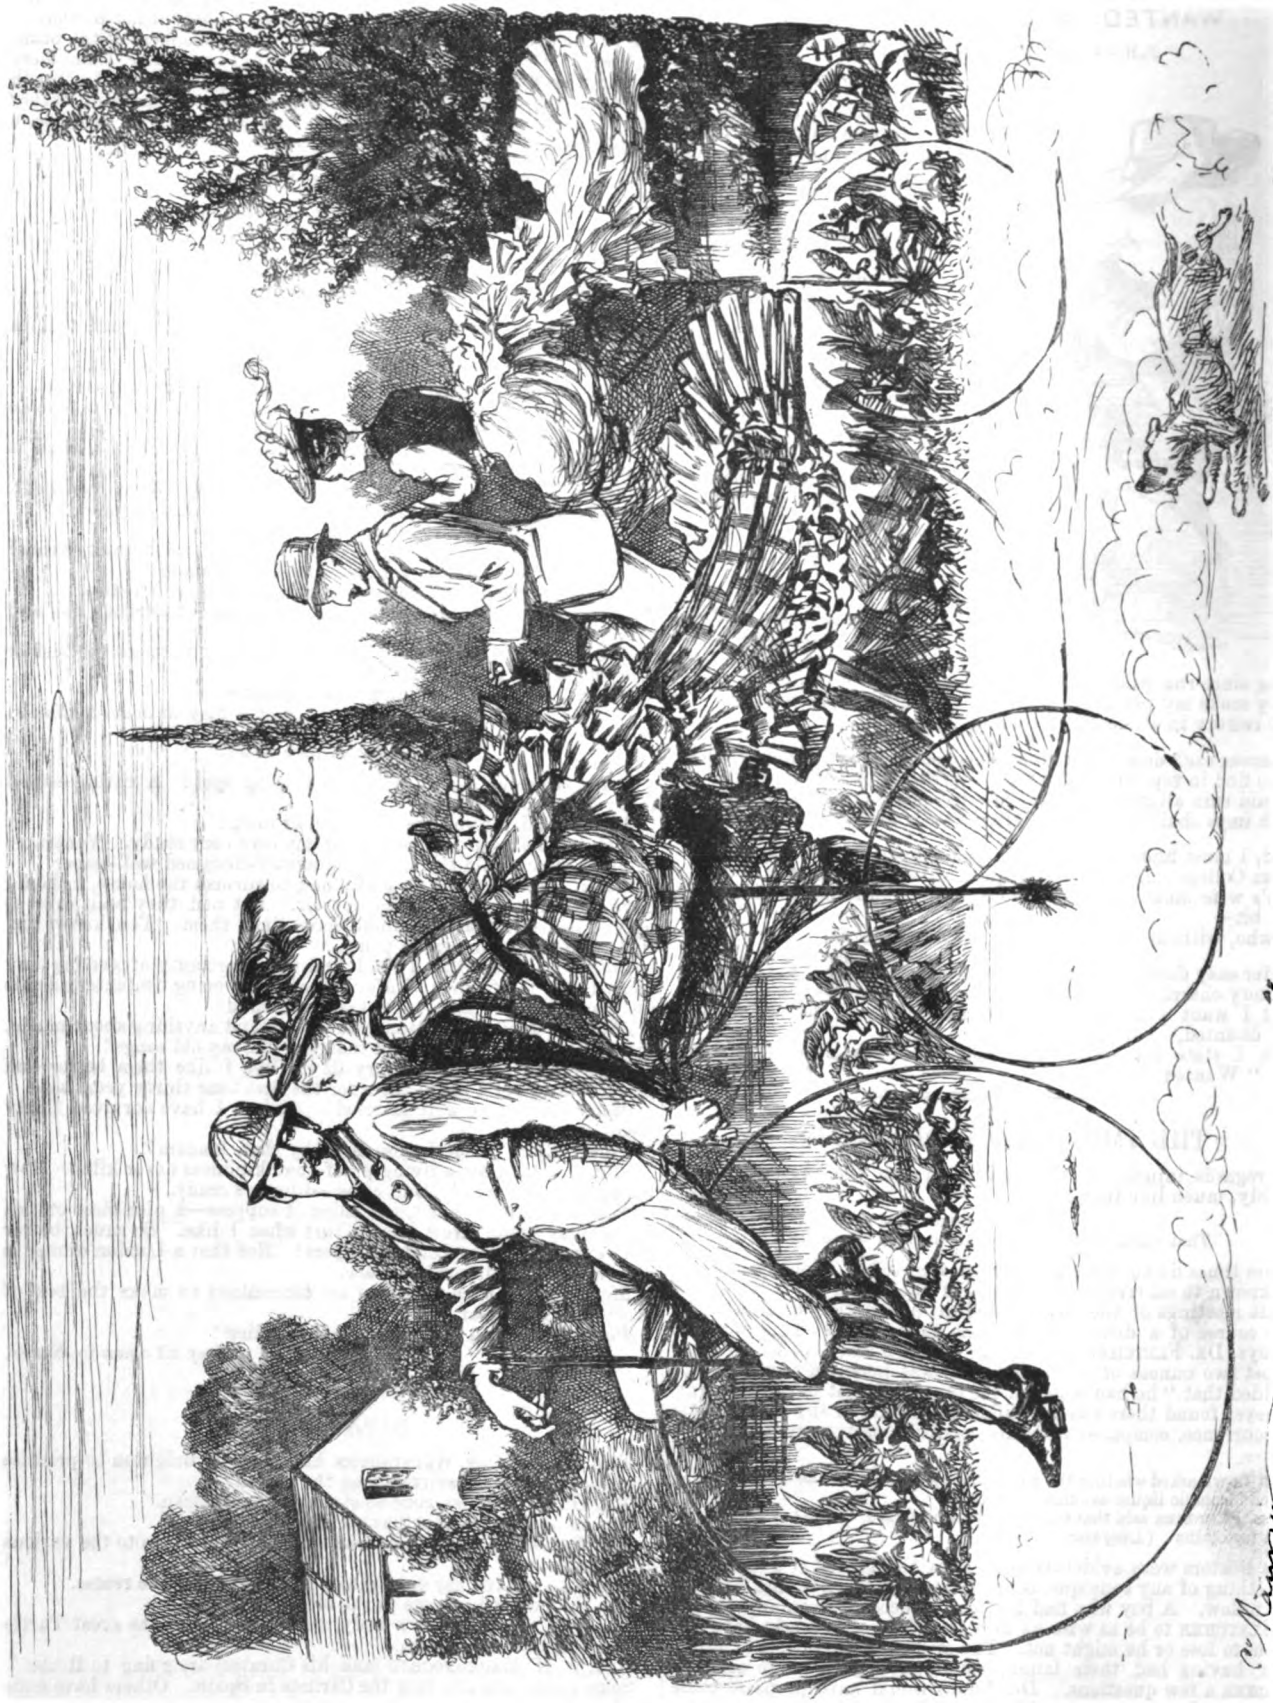
Mr. Gladstone has gone to study in the Vatican.

The Lord Chancellor has gone to Dunrobin.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson has gone on a round of visits to the various Aquariums.

Mr. Newdegate has gone into a Monastery, for the recess.

Mr. Spurgeon has gone to the Mendip Hills.



The City Aldermen, in a body, have gone to see the great Turtle at the Brighton Aquarium.

Rev. A. H. Mackonochie (and his Curates) are going to Rome.

Some people are shooting the Carlists in Spain. Others have gone to shoot the Moors.

Our stout Uncle and Aunt have gone to Broadstairs.

Digitized by Google

THE PILLION-BICYCLE.

Digitized by Google

HARD OF HEARING.

Polite Stranger (in a hurry, thinking he had grazed an Old Gentleman's ankle). "Beg Pardon!"

Old Gentleman. "Eh?"

Polite Stranger (louder). "I beg your Pardon?"

Old Gentleman (unconscious of any hurt). "Why?"

Polite Stranger. "I'm afraid I kicked you——"

Old Gentleman. "Eh?"

Polite Stranger (shouting). "I kicked you."

Old Gentleman (surprised). "Wha' for?"

Polite Stranger. "It was quite by Accident."

Old Gentleman (not catching it). "Eh?—'Beg your Pard——"

Polite Stranger (roaring in his ear). "Accident!"

Old Gentleman (starting). "Bless my Soul! You don't say so! Where? Where? I hope nobody's killed——"

[Polite Stranger rushes off, and loses his Train!

HISTORICAL ACHIEVEMENT.

The Surrey Comet confirms Sir John Lubbock's announcement in the Times. It fears "that the last chapter in the history of Cæsar's Camp has been reached." For—

"Navigators have been employed during the past week levelling the ramparts and foss, which may be ascribed either to the great conqueror or to his brave opponent, Cassivelaunus. The trenches which are said to have seen the first slaughter of Saxons by Saxons, will, if the work of demolition continue, soon cease to exist."

What an exploit will then have been consummated! Its author is covering himself with glory.

The Conservators of Wimbledon Common are said to have offered to purchase the site of Cæsar's Camp at a fair price. It is reported that the proprietor is a Mr. Drax, M.P. A Mr. Drax is M.P. for Wareham. This will be news to most people except the hon. Member's constituents. Very few besides, probably, have ever heard him named. The name of Drax came before the public for the first time when it appeared in connection with the Camp of Cæsar. Now, unless connected wrongfully, it will remain everlastingly celebrated in that connection. It will go down to Posterity as that of the Destroyer of Cæsar's Camp. Drax, in relation to Cæsar, will live with Brutus.

In a nominal list of the House of Commons the Member for Wareham is marked with a "C." That means "Conservative." Yet Cæsar's Camp is destroyed, whereas it might have been spared at a good bargain. This seems to indicate extremely Destructive principles. Apparently, a mistake has been made about the politics of the hon. Member. He has seldom opened his mouth. But his acts speak for him. If the effacement of Cæsar's Camp be one of them, Conservatives—and Liberals, too—will cry, "Confound his politics!"

But the Electors of Wareham—of course Destructives nearly to a man—will boast of their Representative. Better late than never; but now he has done them credit indeed. That is, in case it is really true that he has directed or authorised the improvement of improving Cæsar's Camp off Wimbledon Common. And should he, one of these days, ever stand again for Wareham, the Electors of that evidently thoroughgoing Radical and Destructive borough will some of them, with good reason, shout, "Who destroyed Cæsar's Camp?" whilst others will rend the air, in reply, with roars of "Drax for ever!"

PUNCH TO THE CITY.

Merchants of England, has there come the day
When foulest fraud will make the realm decay,
When, after living a strange sumptuous life,
Each nerve close strung by agonising strife,
'Twill be the fashion of the Merchant Prince
To vanish from the scene, nor ever wince,
Until, poor slave of the Almighty dollar,
The hand of Scotland Yard shall grasp his collar?

The honour of old English trade was knightly;
No man signed bill or note or bond too lightly:
Of many a merchant it could well be told
That, come what might, his simple name was gold,
And, if disaster came, as come it may
To the most prosperous master of his day,
The trader did not stoop to felon tricks,
Nor rascal dodges with fair business mix,
But took his trouble calmly, well aware
No act of his had ever been unfair.

The modern monster speculators stand
On higher level, and are far more grand:
Surely a Newton mercantile was he
Who made a three months' bill a ship at sea,
Built mighty mansions, delicate pavilions,
By help of nonexistent paper millions,
Lived a short, noisy, miserable time,
Then vanished, cowardly, from the scene of crime.

City of London! World-Metropolis!
The question Punch is driven to ask is this:
Can you not check these felons who have made
Men wholly doubtful about honest trade?

We wonder when some mighty bubble's burst;
But take this fact—the City knows it first.
A telegraphic tremour passes through
The centre of Finance, and some one knew
If Rufus forged, or Balbus overdrew.
Now, as the tide of gold flows up and down
From all this universe, by London town,
Punch, censor morum, makes severe demand
For sterner discipline in Money land.
Prevention is a better thing than cure:
Fugitive swindlers may some ills endure,
Yet, picking oakum, they will feel quite vain
That dupes have paid them for much dry champagne.

Great firms we have in London: honour, bright
As the keen rapier of the ancient knight:
But there are rogues, on villany intent,
Who 'd sacrifice their souls for cent. per cent.
Cannot the Princes of the City stand
Between the public and this pirate band,
This crew of rogues who have their glorious day,
Defraud whoever trusts them, run away?
It can be done, so Mr. Punch declares;
Golden the wheat, too numerous are the tares:
No longer to the coinless rogues show pity,
But from dishonest traders purge the City.

"Increase of the Episcopate."—Bishops grown stout.

Digitized by Google

THE LORD WARDEN ON MUSIC.

"Music hath charms," we have all of us heard:
Many a statesman sings like a bird.
One of the pleasantest possible things
Is when GRANVILLE listens while GLADSTONE sings.
Wherefore should not melody's strain
Drive political puzzles out of the brain?
'Tis true the House hath a minstrel wight,
But WHALLEY carols not every night.

Punch agrees with the gallant Earl
That a singer sweet is the English girl:
No need for a COSTA to tell us that—
The man who doubts it is just A flat.
No need for the sculptor MAROCHETTI
To tell us English girls are pretty.

In the land where Venus sprang from the foam,
There 's nothing to touch our girls at home.

Through the world of verse a graceful rover,
The Earl could assure the people of Dover
That Music had the Poets' benison,
From CHAUCER and SHAKSPEARE to BROWNING and TENNYSON.
"Right you are, my noble Earl,"
Says Punch, of poets the perfect pearl;
And he says to the grouse, "Sing a dirge, wild birdie,
We 've stopped Saint Stephen's hurdy-gurdy."

"THE TWO VOICES."

AT a Meeting held last week, at Dover, to promote the establishment of Free Scholarships at the new National Training School for Music, EARL GRANVILLE, who presided, in the course of a capital speech, made the following announcement:—

"The late Prime Minister, he could say from personal and pleasurable experience, had one of the finest musical voices he ever heard, and he believed that MR. GLADSTONE continued to sing to this day. He was happy to add that his own party spirit was not such as would lead him to deny that MR. DISRAELI, though he never had the privilege of hearing him sing, was equally harmonious."

This interesting, and probably by the majority of the people of England, unexpected information touching the vocal powers of the past and present Premier, naturally suggests a few questions, to which we are certain LORD GRANVILLE, with his never-failing courtesy, will return prompt and explicit replies:—

What sort of a voice does MR. GLADSTONE possess—bass, baritone, tenor, or alto?

Who was his singing-master? (The value of this information, as an advertisement, it is needless to point out.)

What are his favourite songs? Homeric ballads? Is "The Pope" to be found in his repertory?

Does he require any pressing to induce him to sing, and what voice-lozenges is he in the habit of using? (Another invaluable advertisement.)

Can he accompany himself?

Nothing seems to have been said about MR. GLADSTONE being an instrumentalist, or the further pertinent question might have been asked—Does he not always play "first fiddle"?

Would it be correct to describe MR. DISRAELI's style of singing as partaking somewhat of a bravura character?

Can his voice ever be said at all to resemble a falsetto?

Does he oblige his party with "The Standard-Bearer" or "Awa', Whigs, awa'!"?

Do both MR. GLADSTONE and MR. DISRAELI continue to give great attention to the "Register"?

Would it be possible to induce MR. GLADSTONE and MR. DISRAELI to take part in a duet together in public—"All's Well," or some other old established favourite—for a charitable purpose?

Is there any probability that MR. DISRAELI will ever "sing small"?

HOW THE RECESS WILL NOT BE SPENT.

BY SIR WILFRID LAWSON, in starting a Brewery and Distillery for the conversion of the Bands of Hope.

By MR. PLIMSOLL, in purchasing venerable vessels for the stock in trade of the Coffin Ship Company (Limited).

By SIR HENRY JAMES, in financing a new Loan for the Government of Honduras.

By MR. ROBERT LOWE, in accepting foreign decorations from the Presidents of South American Republics.

By MR. WHALLEY, "in retreat" chez His Eminence CARDINAL MANNING, with a view to qualifying for the long-expected "Hat."

By DR. KENEALY, in state at Stoke-upon-Trent—his leisure hours (those not devoted to receiving compliments from his constituents) being given up to the education and correction of his family.

By SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE, in congratulating himself upon his forethought in trusting to an abundant harvest for the surplus of next year's Budget.

By LORD HENRY LENNOX, in preparing plans for the new Barracks at Millbank, that it is proposed shall take the place of the military buildings at Knightsbridge.

By SIR THOMAS CHAMBERS, in writing a book of poems in praise of the Directors of the Civil Service Co-operative Stores.

By MR. GLADSTONE, in dignified inactivity far away from the offices of certain Magazines—monthly and quarterly.

By MR. DISRAELI, in pleasant contemplation of the many brilliant successes of the past Session.

And, lastly, the Recess will not be spent by the RIGHT HON. MR. PUNCH in going to sleep. Verb. sap.

ODD FREAK OF FATE.

THE following piece of Shipping Intelligence reads like an invention. But it is a veritable entry on Lloyd's List of August 9:—

"FALMOUTH, 7th Aug., 9 P.M.—The Enrico (Ital. barq.), Guagnino, from Mazagan to this port, for orders, with beans, sunk last night, 20 miles W. of the Lizard, immediately after collision with the SAMUEL PLIMSOLL (ship), from London to Australia. A Falmouth pilot and two of the crew of the Italian barque were drowned; the remainder of the crew landed here by No. 6 pilot cutter."

The contrast between SAMUEL PLIMSOLL (ship) and SAMUEL PLIMSOLL (M.P.) apparent in the casualty above narrated, seems remarkably striking at the present moment. Just while the M.P. is doing his best to save seamen from drowning, the ship sends a vessel to the bottom. Whilst the shipowners (of the baser sort) are running down SAMUEL PLIMSOLL, the SAMUEL PLIMSOLL runs down a ship. So seasonable and unseasonable a coincidence perhaps never was known. Might not our friend, Old AUBREY, have booked it amongst his "fatalities"? He probably would have cited it as an instance of bad luck going with a good name.

Perplexing Passage.

THE Local Correspondent of a morning contemporary concludes his narrative of the particulars of an inquest by saying that:—

"The deceased's relatives had not heard of his death, as he had omitted to write on purpose to surprise them."

This was no case of presentiment. The deceased had been suddenly killed by a simple railway accident. He had tumbled out under the train. If he had committed suicide by throwing himself under it on purpose, then indeed the foregoing statement would be intelligible.

Great Consternation at the West End.

THINK of their exhaustion, their utter prostration! Think of the restoratives they must have required after such unheard-of exertion! Imagine the anxiety of their wives and families, when they were so long past their usual hour of returning home! Picture the amazement of their domestics when they opened the door to them! One night last week the Lords sat until five minutes to eleven!

GEMS OF THE NAVY.

IT is estimated by MR. BRASSEY that unarmoured vessels of the Amethyst type, which would carry fourteen guns and be of three hundred and fifty horse-power, would cost £71,000 So much for Amethysts, even without a setting! These Amethysts are costly jewels.

A BANKERS' CLEARING-HOUSE.—The late House of COLLIE.

Digitized by Google

NEWS FROM BOSHNIA.

HORTLY before six o'clock on the evening of Thursday last an enormous Aerolite fell in a turnip-field in the neighbourhood of the Capital, not fifty yards from a merry pic-nic party. The report made by the fall was so violent that no fewer than sixty-eight highly respectable inhabitants had the drum of the ear nearest to the field where the phenomenon occurred, broken by the concussion. All the Police who could be spared from duty, with the Fire Brigade, were immediately despatched to the spot; but they proved insufficient to surround the hissing stone, which was so deeply imbedded in the earth that a powerful engine from an adjoining ginger-beer manufactory had to be employed before it could be dislodged. When the flames had been extinguished by the Brigade, the aerolite was at once conveyed, gaily decked with ribbons, on a dray drawn by twenty-four horses, to the Opening Meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, where it was received with open arms and boundless enthusiasm. It is sixteen times the size of the famous meteoric stone which fell from the tail of the great Comet in the Archipelago, in 1796; and presents the appearance of a gigantic fossilised plum-pudding, numerous stalagmites of igneous feldspar being distributed over the entire surface.

We have been favoured (writes the deputy Editor of the Boshnian Bedouin) with a private inspection of a most remarkable vegetable production, in the shape of a gigantic Cucumber, which had attained the unusual dimensions of six feet four inches in length, and two feet in girth. It has since been removed, in a covered conveyance, kindly lent for the occasion by a sympathising member of our Vegetarian Society, to the Town Hall for public exhibition; and we are happy to be in a position to state that negotiations have been set on foot with the proprietor of this interesting abnormal growth of the vegetable creation, which there is every reason to believe are likely to result in satisfactory arrangements being concluded for pickling and presenting it, enclosed in a handsome glass jar, to the Museum belonging to the Greengrocers' Company.

At an early hour yesterday morning, a prodigious Mushroom (Munchausenius incredibilis) was gathered in a field adjoining the farmhouse recently in the occupation of the Bailiff of the Right Hon. the Earl of Grassendale. Owing to its amazing size, this fungus had just before afforded ample shelter to an intelligent little fellow, three years and a half old, who, with his attendant, had rambled out before breakfast from the cottage where he was staying to recover from the effects of hooping cough, and been overtaken by a sudden shower of rain. The Mushroom yielded six dozen of excellent ketchup, and has been admirably photographed by our rising young townsman, Mr. Montgomery Cleck.

There is now on view in the shop-window of Mr. Diamond Smith, plumber and glazier, 184, High Street, a hailstone which fell in the storm that burst over this town and neighbourhood on the 30th of last month. The stone is a perfect rhomboid in shape, and measures four inches and a fraction in a diagonal direction from the apex to the base. It was picked up by a poor boy, not a stone's throw from the magnificent range of conservatories Messrs. Wood and Stone are now engaged in erecting for Sir Tavistock Ropsley, Bart., M.P. for the Northern Division of the County.

Medical Monomania.

Mr. Punch has lately received several anti-vaccination pamphlets, which he has known what to do with. These treatises, however, should not have been presented to Mr. Punch. They should have been sent in to a competition for the Colney Hatch Prize Essay. The Prize to be awarded by the most dangerous lunatic in the Asylum.

NOTE BY A COCKNEY NATURALIST.

The common blackbeetles (Scarabæus niger), which so abundantly infest the culinary regions of Cockaigne, are alleged to be agreeable, although profuse, in flavour, provided they be delicately larded before crimping, and then fricasseed or simply fried. Care should specially be taken not to injure their antennæ, which, when crisp with egg and breadcrumbs, exquisitely tickle the palate of the gourmet, and provoke him to the liveliest of gastronomic feats. There lurks in vulgar minds a savage prejudice against these interesting insects, by reason, very likely, of the popular impression that at times they have been manufactured into Soy. But this may be assumed to be mere idle superstition, and Soyer, the great chef, wisely set his face against it, remarking, as he did so, "Honi Soy qui mal y pense."

Among the warblers which abound in the vicinity of the Metropolis, one of the most interesting is the Little Mudlark (Alauda Greenwichiensis), whose plaintive cry may nightly be heard upon the shore of the river, where these little creatures congregate in flocks, and pick up any grub which they may chance to meet with.

Doubts have been entertained by sundry Cockney Naturalists whether the pyramids of oyster-shells, which in the early part of August used to be noticed in the streets, should be regarded as a proof of the migratory habits of the mollusc. That the oyster is a sluggard and objects to leave his bed seems pretty generally admitted; but that he is endowed with the power of locomotion has, fortunately for science, been placed beyond a doubt. Whether oysters shed their shells when they are crossed in love is a point on which the Naturalist is still somewhat in the dark.

The Londoner's Diary.

(For August.)

Monday. — Got up at nine o'clock. Lounged to the Park. No one there. Went to bed at twelve.

Tuesday.—Got up at ten o'clock. Walked to the House of Commons. Closed. Went to bed at eleven.

Wednesday.—Got up at eleven o'clock. Looked in at Prince's. Deserted. Went to bed at ten.

Thursday.—Got up at twelve o'clock. Strolled to the Club. Shut up for repairs. Went to bed at nine.

Friday.—Got up at one o'clock. Stayed at home. Dull. Went to bed at eight.

Saturday.—Got up at five A.M. Went out of Town at six.

Digitized by Google

AUGUST DELIGHTS.

AUGUST! unto thee an ode I must
Build up Pindaric, calling thee august:
Which is more sweet, thy thunder or thy dust?

As on the lawn the soda-water pops,
Into the icy Badminton there drops
The dusky hornet or more lively "wapse."*

As lovely LAURA, in divine repose,
Brightens with wit the stream of talk that flows,
The stinging gnat makes red her Grecian nose.

As on the Thames the happy stream we woo,
And the accompanying naiads too,
Down pours the electric flood—we're all wet through.

At some snug Inn there's refuge from the rain—
The watery nymphs we comfort with Champagne:
But how the deuce shall we get home again?

O August, once thou wert a month of nous,
Bringing repose to jaded Commons' House,
But now, how desperately shy thy grouse!

Thy epicure delights were manifold—
Thy grouse to London poulterers now are sold;
Thy oysters fetch almost their weight in gold.

And the unhappy and perplexed M.P.,
Who cannot choose his way 'twixt D. and G.,
Sultry August, will not welcome thee.

For when will Parties reach their proper level,
And Parliament in wiser guidance revel?—
Meet his Constituents!—better meet the Devil!

* Oldest form. Vide HENSLEIGH WEDGWOOD'S Dictionary.

SOCIETY ABROAD.

AT LUCERNE.

Member of Parliament (ending a long explanation of a pet measure). And, so you see, my dear, by the law of supply and demand, Capital must be benefited without injury to Labour. I hope I make myself clearly understood? Perhaps you might give me your view of the subject. The suggestions of fresh minds are frequently very valuable. I have noticed that you have been pondering over something for the last half hour. You were thinking, perhaps, that greater liberty might be given to the framers of the initial contract?

Mrs. M.P. No, dear. The fact is, I have been considering all the morning which of my dresses I ought to wear to-night at the table d'hôte!

AT INTERLACHEN.

Cockney Tourist (to Perfect Stranger). Must 'ave been a 'ard frost 'ere last night, Sir.

Perfect Stranger (startled). Dear me! Why?

Cockney Tourist. Why, look at the top of that there 'ill, Sir (points to the Jung Frau). Ain't it covered with snow!

AT BADEN-BADEN.

Captain Rook. Yes, my dear Sir, although they have closed the Public Tables, still, if you really want a little amusement, I think I can introduce you to a very good set indeed. Where they play low, you know—only to pass the time.

Young Mr. Pidgeon. O thank you. I should like it very much indeed. But I am giving you a great deal of trouble?

Captain Rook. Not at all!

AT ANTWERP.

Artist (amateur). "The Descent from the Cross." Hem! Not a bad bit of colouring, but out of date, Sir,—out of date!

Artist (professional). You think so! Well, perhaps you are right. Splendid subject—splendid work; but it mightn't have sold now-a-days. In 1875, RUBENS would have painted portraits of fat Mayors and sketches from the nursery.

Artist (amateur). Talking of sketches from the nursery, you should have seen my "Coronation of Henry the Eighth!"—the picture, you know, that they were afraid to accept at the Royal Academy. Afraid, Sir!—that's the word—afraid!

Artist (professional). Quite so!

AT DIEPPE.

Edwin. Awfully jolly here! Awfully jolly band! Awfully jolly waltz! Awfully jolly, isn't it?

Angelina. Quite too awfully nice!

Edwin. Waltz over. Awfully nice moon! Awfully jolly to be a poet, I should think. Say heaps of civil things about the moon, don't you know! Rather jolly, eh? TENNYSON, and that sort of thing, don't you know?

Angelina. Yes, isn't he a perfect love?

Edwin. Yes—great fun. Next dance—square. Awfully stupid things—squares, eh? You're not engaged?

Angelina (archly). Not yet!

Edwin. Then let's sit it out.

AT PARIS.

Professed Linguist. Look here! Moi et un otrer Mossoo—a friend of mine—desirong der go par ler seven o'clock train à Cologne. Si nous leaverong the hotel at six o'clock et ung demy, shall nous catcherong le train all right? Comprenny voo? Voo parly Français, don't you? You understand French, eh?

Polite Frenchman (who speaks the English). I understand the French? Ah yase! Sometimes, Monsieur!

AT BOULOGNE.

Mater. Now, before we leave the hotel for the Folkestone boat, to go home, let us see that we have all our luggage right. Eighteen trunks—mine and the girls', you know. Twelve bonnet-boxes, three dressing-cases, and CHARLEY'S portmanteau, and two hat-boxes. Six folding-chairs, four bundles of rugs, the perambulator, and JANE and Nurse's things. Yes, I think that's all.

Pater. You have forgotten something.

Mater. Dear me! What!

Pater. My carpet-bag!

VERY PALPABLE HITS.

THE divine WILLIAMS makes Oberon, in the Midsummer Night's Dream, refer to an occasion when "certain stars shot madly from their spheres." The Star named in the following statement, which lately appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette, is clearly not such an one:—

"MRS. SCOTT SIDDONS has distinguished herself as a volunteer riflewoman. The Bideford and Torrington Rifle Corps have just obtained a new long range, which was formally opened by MRS. SCOTT SIDDONS on Thursday. In the presence of SIR EDWARD GREEN, the local gentry, and the officers and men of the respective corps, MRS. SIDDONS took a Martini-Henry rifle and fired at the target, making a 'bull's-eye' the first time, and a 'centre' with her second shot. She was loudly cheered, and the Devon volunteers boast that they have now in their county the best marksman and the best markswoman in England."

Thus MRS. SCOTT SIDDONS is seen to be a Star that shoots true; hits the "centre" and the "bull's-eye." Now we perceive that she can hit targets as well as audiences. But hitherto, undoubtedly, her best and most numerous hits are those which she has made in other characters than the part of a Riflewoman.

EARL RUSSELL'S CURRICULUM.

EARL RUSSELL has kindly supplemented his Further Thoughts on Education (see Times of August 19) by some still Further Thoughts in the form of suggestive Examination-Papers. Mr. Punch gives them the benefit of his prodigious publicity:—

Q. Who is the true inventor of proverbs?

A. They have been erroneously attributed to KING SOLOMON and the scarcely less illustrious MR. TUPPER, but their true inventor is EARL RUSSELL.

Q. Who is the heaven-born Admiral of the Channel Fleet?

A. EARL RUSSELL. He is typified in the Union Jack, and also in the famous Jack who had a sweet little cherub sitting up aloft to look after him.

Q. Whom should the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's call in to complete the work of SIR CHRISTOPHER WREN?

Digitized by Google

A. The Statesman who rebuilt the English Constitution—Earl Russell.

Q. Who was the real hero of that delightful romance, Jack the Giant-Killer?

A. The famous destroyer of Tory Ogres, Earl Russell.

Q. Who first succeeded in extracting sunbeams from cucumbers?

A. That erudite Professor in the University of Laputa, Earl Russell.

Q. Who is the sutorial politician who always sticks to his last—his very, very last?

A. The author of the immortal adage, "Rest, and be thankful"—Earl Russell.

Q. Who is the best driver of four-in-hand in the present Coaching Revival?

A. Earl Russell, who only once "upset the coach."

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By Leonardo Della Robbia de Tudor Westpond Tumpkyns, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

Lizabethan Exterior.—This style was invented in the days of the magnificent Betsy Tudor, when jewelled stomachers, hoops, and ruffs were in vogue. The Elizabethan style should be highly patronised by sporting men, as reminding them of the Great English Bet, and of her costume, which was at that period Ruff's guide. She was in her time the Madame Elise who set the fashion, and, by my halidome, gadso, and marry come up, she would have taken off a man's head with the same ease, and enjoyment too, forsooth, with which she was accustomed to take the head off a pot of old ale in the drawing-room of the Palace. "Tap for Tap, and so part fair," was the line which our noble Betsy best appreciated and most applauded, and by "part fair" she meant the top half of the pewter for me, my dear young friend. These considerations are absolutely necessary before entering, however slightly, into an Elizabethan—or as the better educated classes call it, Elizabethian—Mansion. She was a gay young woman was Betsy Tudor, and finally an obstinate old woman—

Sing proh pudor!
Betsy Tudor!

And earned the introduction of Tudor into this distich, which was found scratched with a diamond on one of the panes of the Palace.*

The Tudor or Two-door Style.—This, at first, seems simply to limit itself to a front and back door, an entrance and an exit. This notion gives the idea of quiet and repose, and is, in reality, derived from the word Tudor itself in its original French form—that is the fourth form in which French was taught wherever Edward the Sixth's Grammar was used—which was "Tu dors, thou sleepest." In keeping with this derivation, the Elizabethan houses present such a comfortable snug snoozling appearance, that you feel inclined to come to anchor in a bay-window, and lie down in sweet slumber for the rest of your life, soothed to sleep by the gentle monotonous

* "The Panes of the Palace" are, or have lately been, Old Paynes in the opening, and Harry Paynes as Harlequin in the after part. I never lose an opportunity, nor do I expect that others will. "Panes of the Palace"—why, heavens! what a chance is here offered to the Crystal Palace Company for next Christmas. The idea is evident: the Palace is glass, therefore the Paynes—the Pantomime Paynes—are absolutely indispensable. "No glass building complete without its Paynes!" "No expense has been spared, and all possible Paynes taken to render," &c. The Secretary of the C. P. can obtain further information on this subject by applying straight to me, Leonardo D. Robbia de T. Tumpkyns, Esq., S.A.S., &c, compiler and editor of the present work. N.B.—Mind, the Artist is not authorised by me to call and arrange terms for drawings by way of advertisement in these pages, unless by previous arrangement in writing made unto me, and no such arrangements are genuine without the signature Leonardo D. R. de T. Tumpkyns.

cawing of the rooks, those ancient Christy Minstrels, who never perform out of the nooks and corners of Old England.

The Pointed Style.—This, wherever it occurs, is most objectionable. A pointed style is most difficult to get over.

Still, this sort of architecture has about it a business-like air, resembling an acute-angled nose (the appearance of which in our juvenile ancestors so struck the great and good Pope Gregory), which, to its praise be it spoken, comes to the point at once, and be blowed to it.

It is a style of architecture which has been lucky enough to attract the attention of the artistic Mr. Poynter, who may be called the retriever of mediæval designs.*

The Early Pointed, or Night-Cap style, was much patronised in Bedfordshire, but seldom used elsewhere, as, from time immemorial, Elevation of Bedfordshire Mansion.

it has always "been considered rude to point," and, therefore, "the Pointed" soon came to be considered as the architecture of a rude period. It belongs to a time when the hymn-books, though comparatively unknown, were all noted, and when the music, though of a monotonous character, was all pointed. But one thing is certain, that, however great the objections may be to "the Pointed" style, it is infinitely superior to the "pointless" buildings of the present day. The Architect's motto should be, "Build with an object in view, but don't let the building in view be an object."

Now, after these general remarks, to return to Ornamentation.

* Another chance offered to Artists for advertisement. Regular scale of charges for mentioning name, address, &c.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

A POSER.

Materfamilias. "Algernon, dear, do Explain to the Man! You can do it so much better than I can!"

Paterfamilias. "All right, my Love. (To Attendant.) Ecooty, mon amee—I want you to teach my petty Ongfongs to Swim—aprond a najjy, you know. And look here—you mustn't keep them in the Water more than Fifteen Seconds by the Watch! Par ploo ker kangs Seoongs dong l'o. Comprenny?"

THE CARDINAL'S PROPHECY; or, A VATICAN VISION.

The Cardinal sat (in his brand-new hat), and he dreamed a lugubrious dream:
He heard Europe's battle-drums beating for war, he beheld all her bayonets gleam;
And he says, says he, one may easily see a catastrophe cannot be far;
Seven millions of men, and all armed to the eyes, must portend a most terrible war!

Heigho! it is sad; yet the world is so bad that it calls for this bloody self-scourging,
For which, unaware, all the nations prepare, as directed by Heaven's own urging.
The ill wind of war, which I sniff from afar, shall blow good to the See of St. Peter,
And, 'stablish, I hope, the sole sway of the Pope. Could a Nemesis well be completer?

The rascal apostles of Red Revolution have pulled down the temporal power;
Heaven's justice must seat Humpty-Dumpty again, while his enemies grovel and cower.
But chastisement dire and a scourge as of fire are a sine quâ non for redressing
That hideous wrong, and so armaments strong claim a Cardinal's—sorrowful—blessing!

Threat is not my intent; 'tis a pious lament. I'm exceedingly grieved to foresee it,
But the great Dies Iræ of "Reds" is at hand, 'tis too late they'll discover to flee it.
I plainly perceive that the Counsels of Heaven have settled the term of their tether;
Sear of blood must atone, and the Pope have his own—then we all may be happy together.

Not in Döllinger's fashion,—the mooning schismatic! how dares he to prate about Unity?
Those blundering babblers at Bonn must be shown that they can't shunt the Pope with impunity.
The Sirens of Schism sing vainly of peace, though they warble as sweetly as Patti can,
The only true pan-pipe to marshal the flock of the Church is that played at the Vatican.

On woes men must sup, Messrs. Armstrong and Krupp are preparing the meal most unwittingly;
Big gun and torpedo shall 'stablish our Credo; so Providence fashions it fittingly.
Saltpetre shall fume for St. Peter—an incense unpleasant, but yet an oblation
Supplied unawares by those foes of the Church who are destined to self-immolation.

Steel, powder, and shot, they will soon make it hot for thy spoilers, Infallible Vicar!
On that deluge of blood the Sole Ark of the Faithful shall float to its haven the quicker.
It is sad—that of course!—but if murderous force prove the backer of Church, School, and Nunnery,
No doubt it is true that, from this point of view, there 's a sort of a Gospel in Gunnery.

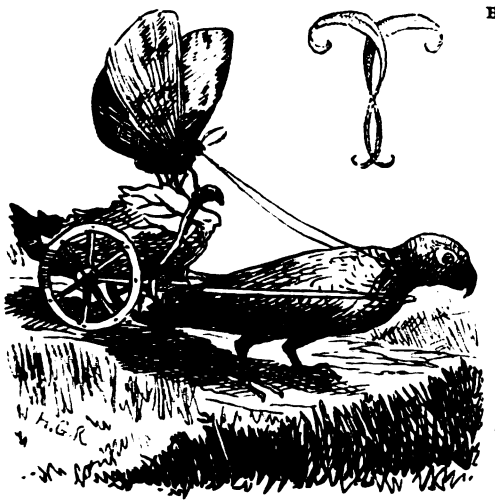
Laus Deo!—yet stop! No, the mask must not drop. I'm a peace-loving man and a pastor.
No firebrand am I, though I see in Fate's sky all the omens of woe and disaster.
The rôle of Cassandra I grieve to assume, and lest any should find it alarming,
I'll put up a pious and fervent petition for—Unity, Peace, and Disarming!

Pun on River Pollution.—Caveat Empt-or.

Digitized by Google

"SAVE ME FROM MY FRIENDS!"

HIBERNIA. "MANY HAPPY RETURNS OF THE DAY T' YE, DAN!"



SHADE OF O'CONNELL. "'HAPPY RETURNS' IS IT, DARLIN'? BEDAD, THE FEWER THE BETTER! LOOK AT 'EM NOW!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

TRIPS FOR TRIPPERS.

(Being a few Seasonable Hints for Vacation Voyageurs.)

THIS is the time of year to be caught tripping. At this season every one who can packs up his traps, goes for his trip, and joins the order of Trappists and Trippists. Mister Indecision stays at home; Mister Decision is off and away.

A Guide, who will give useful and valuable information in a few words, is, just now, most welcome. Everyone wishes to give himself airs — sea airs, of course — and as naturally as one would go to a tallow-chandler's for a candle, so everybody goes to the sea-side for a dip. How many dips go to a pound is a question which the bathing-machine proprietor will decide.

Here is a direct line for the Undecided. Go to Deal. It is really a Dealightful place, Dealicious, in fact quite the beau i-deal of a quiet sea-side place. You need not stop there long; for the Tourist has this advantage over the Leopard, that he can change his spots just as often as he likes. But how go to Deal? Simply thus, and let yourself down easily: leaving the bustle of London at Victoria, go by the sea-coast line past Rochester, famous for—well, ROCHESTER was famous for his jests and poems, from the sale of which he made so much money as enabled him to build Rochester Castle, as "every schoolboy" knows,—past Chatham, famous as being called after the celebrated Premier, who gave his name to that part of the Theatre where he always used to sit, and which to this day bears the name of the Pit,—past Faversham, famous for being the place where the London, Chatham, and Dover Collectors request the pleasure of seeing your tickets,—past Herne Bay, so called as being the favoured spot where Herne the Hunter invariably went for his holiday, out of the hunting season, and when there was nothing doing at Windsor Castle,—past Margate, that is unless you stop at Margate, now celebrated for what the cobblers call the "Awl by the Sea,"—and then to Westgate, where no person fond of tranquillity would think of staying, as it is said to be "such a rising place." Of course there are many objections to a "rising place." At this time of year, the Session being ended, and the House having risen, you don't want to hear of anything or anybody rising: it sounds revolutionary. So take a glance at Westgate (the porters call it "Westkit," which suggests an easy costume of shirt-sleeves and no coats), and pass on, vid Broadstairs, to Ramsgate.

Here pause. Go down to the Sands early, and take a front seat to see the tide come in. You can book this a week in advance. No fees.

The amusements here are—trying your strength, shooting at the Shah (for nuts), hearing the niggers, listening to two bands playing different tunes at the same time, both being a trifle weak in the high notes, but strong in trombones and drums, throwing at the sticks, taking galvanic shocks from a gentleman with a perambulating battery, seeing the entire play of Punch and Judy, and having your likeness taken al fresco with such astonishing results that even your best friends wouldn't recognise your portrait. Then you can see the London Boat come in, and inspect the passengers, making audible remarks on their personal appearance (on every safe occasion, i.e., when the subject is not too big), with observations on the luggage.

Having thus let himself down gently, the visitor may now let himself down another peg (so as not to deprive himself of all his wonted excitement at once), and walk over the cliff (which he will probably do, if he attempts going to Broadstairs from Ramsgate, as there are no railings, or posts, or anything to tumble against) to Pegwell Bay.

Pegwell, or the Well of MARGARET, corrupted into the Well of PEG, and so into Pegwell. The story of MARGARET's grim ghost will be told the tourist by any one whom he may ask for the legend.

Pegwell is the home of the Shrimps. The Pegwellians live on Shrimps, and by Shrimps; that is, they sell Shrimps, and the stranger will buy Shrimps.

It was our luck to enter a Shrimp-seller's shop and hear the following dialogue:

Visitor. Are these Shrimps fresh?

Shrimp-Shopman. Fresh! Bless you, Sir, we can't get 'em fresh enough!

The Aquarium mania has seized on Pegwell, and two men and a boy, with five ladders, a wheelbarrow, and two spades, are hard at work scooping out the sand, and doing whatever they can towards making an Aquarium. The Shrimps object to the innovation.

Walk on, and pass the Coast-guard Station. Here is the place for real sport. A splendid cannon is kept here for sportsmen who come down to pot their own shrimps. A small charge for each shot, which includes the powder.

The visitor may have a talk to the Coast-guardsman on duty, without any extra payment.

The visitor will now return to Ramsgate for the evening, where he can, if inclined for real fun, amuse himself by hiring a small boat and going out with a supply of fireworks. He will sail, or row, towards the Goodwin Sands, and there will send up a rocket. This will be taken as a signal of distress, and will be immediately answered by another rocket from shore. Then out will come the life-boat and its crew, with a steam-tug, perhaps a spare man-of-war or two, and the Harbour and Coast Police Boat, with constables rowing. Now you can send up more rockets, or Catherine wheels, or squibs, or anything, in fact, only, be off as quickly as possible, or the fun of the proceeding may be spoilt. If they catch you, you can say you were only lighting a Roman Candle to go to bed by, or you can deny it altogether, and say, "Please, Sir, it wasn't me; 'twas t'other boy!" and point to any buoy that may happen to be in sight.

Having thus finished a happy day, with real fireworks and real fun, you can (if unprovided with a lodging for the night by the Ramsgate authorities) go ashore, find a cradle in the shipbuilding yard, and go to rest.

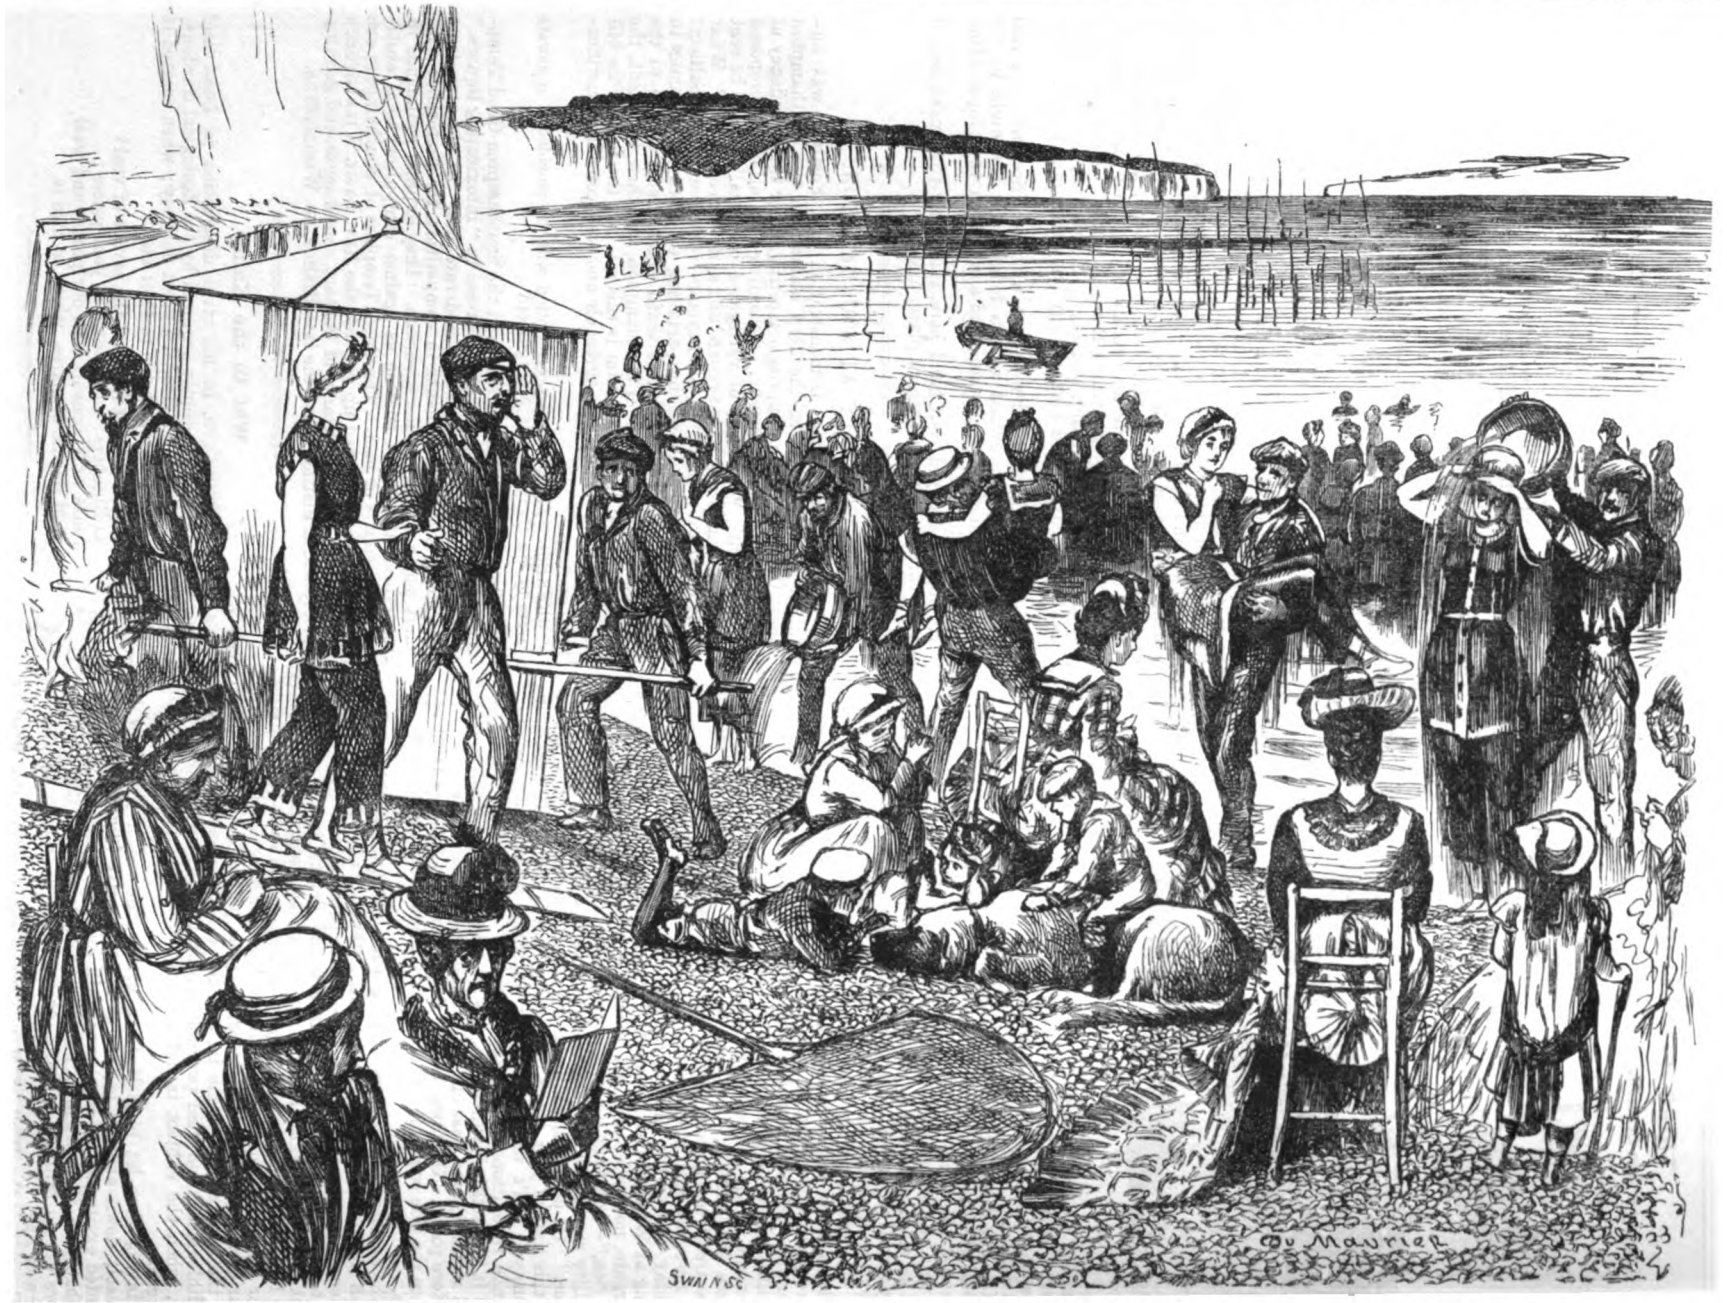
Having thus played your hand here, remember that, next day, it is your turn to Deal. Of which place, anon.

SOBRIETY AT SOUTHAMPTON.

A GRAND Temperance Demonstration and Festival was announced to take place on the 23rd instant, in the Southampton Cricket Ground, and to comprise a meeting under the Presidency of the REV. BASIL WILBERFORCE. According to a bill of the proposed entertainments, "a variety of variegated balloons" were to be sent up, "including 'JOHN BARLEYCORN' and a life-size elephant." What a truly excellent name, JOHN BARLEYCORN, for a Temperance balloon! True temperance is shown by partaking of JOHN BARLEYCORN in moderation. For typifying this truth much credit is due to the "United Good Templars" of Southampton, and their President, the REV. BASIL WILBERFORCE. Nor is this all. At the foot of the bill above referred to stands this agreeable and well-considered notification:—

"REFRESHMENTS of every description will be provided at moderate charges by MR. CLAPHAM, St. Mary Street."

The REV. BASIL WILBERFORCE and the Southampton Good Templars know how to win tipplers from excess in "intoxicating liquors." They proclaim tolerance of their moderate use. At the same time they place those refreshments in competition for preference with others which cheer but not inebriate. They express confidence in ginger-beer and moral suasion as against compulsory total abstinence and spirits or beer. The Good Templars of Southampton are the best that have turned up yet, and the REV. BASIL WILBERFORCE has evinced a filial inheritance of the tact, sound sense, and genuine sobriety which distinguished the late BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.



War to the Knife.

MR. FRANK BUCKLAND, in his vivid description in Land and Water of the Manatee recently acquired by the Zoological Gardens, says that "the flesh is considered a great delicacy; when roasted it has the flavour of pork, with the taste of veal."

THE flavour of pork, and the savour of veal!
O Butchers! come down in your prices;
Or else we'll consult both our pocket and weal,
And import Manatee, which so nice is.

TEST AND TRIAL.—The Spiritualist announces the departure of a DR. TEST for America. This DR. TEST appears not to be the Doctor Test that "Mediums" can never stand.

Digitized by Google

ON THE FRENCH COAST.

Mrs. B. (compassionately). "WHAT TERRIBLE HARD WORK FOR THOSE POOR BATHING-MEN, MR. B.!" Mr. B. (doubtfully). "HUMPH—ER—ER—WELL—A—AHEM!"

Mrs. B. (severely). "PRAY WHAT DO YOU MEAN BY 'HUMPH—ER—ER—WELL—A—AHEM!' MR. B.?" [Mr. B. relapses into discreet silence.

Digitized by Google

THE RUN OF THE HOUSE.

First Flunkey. "Won't you come in, John, and take Something?"

Second Ditto. "Thanks, no; I'll look you up next Week. 'Be on Board-Wages then, you know!"

FOUNTAINS OF WHAT?

Two Fountains bubble in the Square,
Whose pillar, towering nigh,
Hoists Nelson up, as though he were
Stylites, to the sky.

When bubbling in their usual way,
They foam like ginger-beer
Uncorked upon a sultry day
In summer time of year.

To boil, as well as bubble, they
At times, however, seem,
And like a pair of Geysers play,
Emitting clouds of steam.

And, hinting somewhat like the pest
Which River Nile turned rouge,
One day last week each Fountain's crest
Was tinted with gamboge.

Thy Baths and Washhouses are near,
St. Martin: know'st thou why
Those Fountains twain hot springs appear,
And whence their yellow dye?

Tinged, save with rainbows' native hues,
Should fountains ne'er be found,
But cool refreshment still diffuse,
A healthful influence, round.

Most in hot weather ought they not
As crystal pure to gush,
At no time vomit reeking hot
Slops, scourings, suds, and slush?

Sweet Saint, from sordid tricks withhold
Parochial persons mean:
And make those Pumps keep fountains cold
Supplied with water clean.

ANSERINE UTTERANCES.

Several letters have lately been written to the Times respecting the "Brent Goose." Certain effusions of Ritualism, which appear from time to time in the papers, make it proper to state that the Brent Goose (Anser bernicla) does not hail from East Brent.

REVIVAL AT BONN.

What have we heard? A Conference talking theological metaphysics; debating on prepositions, if not diphthongs; the next thing to Homoousion and Homoiousion over again—an actual revival of argument on Athanasius's Creed—"filioque." And all this in hot August, and within sight of the twentieth century!

Something like a conclusion, however, has certainly been come to by Dr. Döllinger's Old Catholics and others at Bonn. There are Old Catholics and Old Catholics, so calling or deeming themselves. Some seceded from the Pope five years, others three centuries, and others eight and more ago.

Dr. Cumming probably considers, if he does not call himself, an Old Catholic. So, perhaps, does Mr. Spurgeon. Yet neither Mr. Spurgeon nor Dr. Cumming attended Dr. Döllinger's Conference. But Canon Liddon was there. So was Dean Howson.

Dr. Döllinger's Old Catholics have taken that title to distinguish themselves from the Roman Catholic body, who swallow the New Dogma. But now there are so many kinds of Catholics, that really the word "Catholic" has ceased to have any particular meaning. Might not all Catholics, except Ultramontanes, just as well call themselves "Protestants"? They are Protestants. Don't they all protest against the pretensions of the Pope and the decrees of what the Pope calls a General Council? Yet most of them, except such Old Catholics as Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Cumming, are offended if you call them Protestants. Why ashamed of their name?

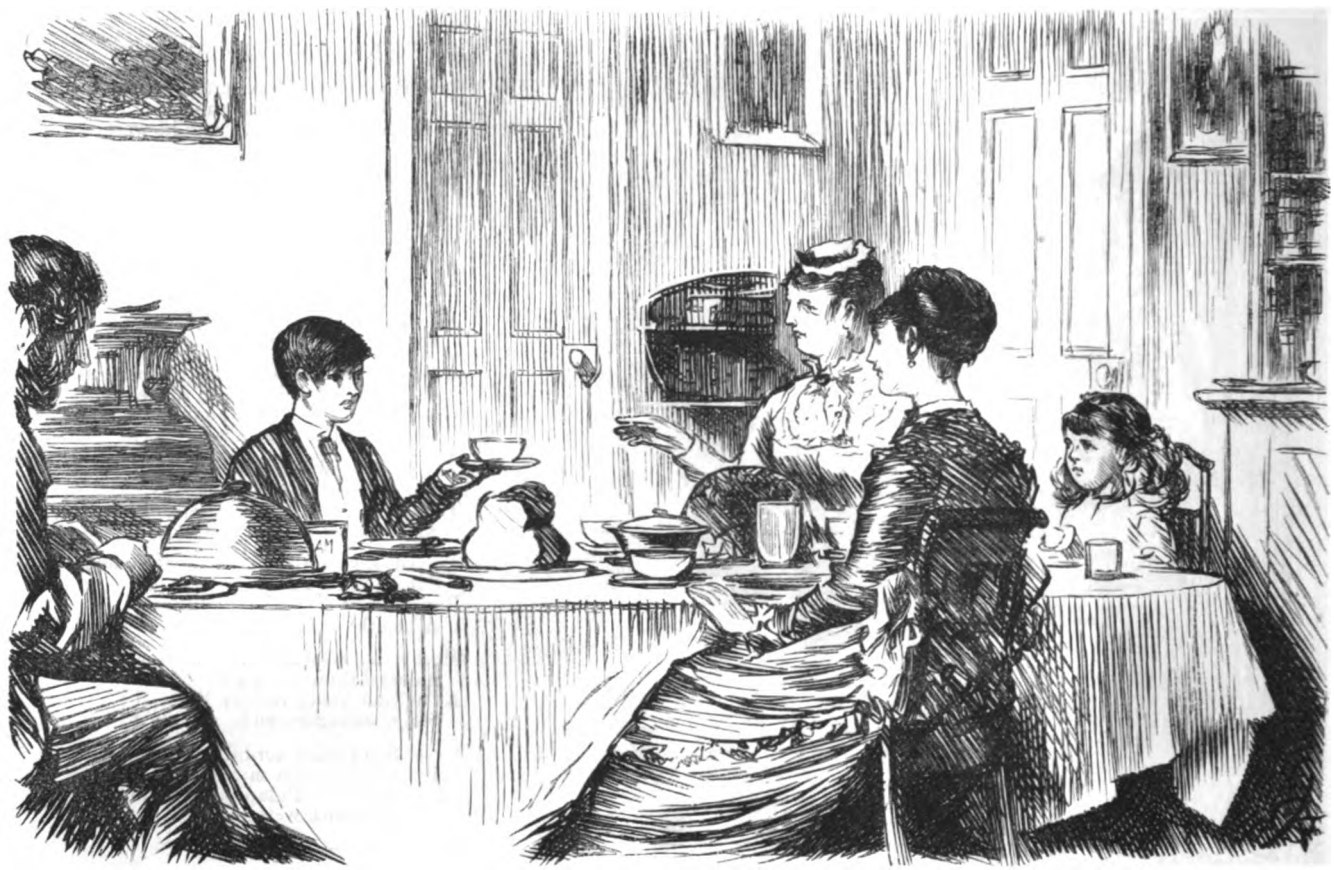
Your Ultramontane, on the other hand, hates to be called a Papist. But he is a Papist. His exact speciality is that he goes the whole Pope. Popery is his distinct creed. Papist and Popery have now, at any rate, become simply definitive, and not opprobrious, expressions. People and things might as well be called by their right names—mightn't they?

In the meantime, let the Old Catholics or New Protestants who have been conferring with other Protestants, or Protestant Catholics, at Bonn, have all due credit for the agreement at which they have, in a measure, arrived. They have agreed upon the adoption of forms of words signifying ideas, if any, which are inconceivable by the human mind—things which, by any reasonable being, no fellow can be expected to understand.

TO A COUPLE OF THAMES NAIADS.

Row, Ladies, row! It will do you good:
Pleasant the stream under Cliefden Wood:
When our skiff with the river drops down again,
Glad will you be of some iced champagne.
O, a boat on the river is doubly dear
When you've nothing to do but adore and steer.

Row, darlings, row! Whether Stroke or Bow
Is sweeter to look at, better to row,
Is a question that plagues not me, as I laze,
And on their graceful movement gaze.
'Tis the happiest hour of the sultry year:
The swift oars twinkle; I smoke and steer.



Row, beauties, row! 'Tis uncommon hot:
I can row stroke, but I'd rather not.
As we meet the sunset's afterglow,
Two absolute angels seem to row;
Wingless they are, so of flight no fear—
Home to dinner I mean to steer.

Canine Sagacity.

"Madame Hazer has had the honour of exhibiting her dog Minos before the Queen and the Royal Family, and Her Majesty was much pleased with the performance."—Court Circular.

"Every dog has his day"—
Yours, Minos, must have been,
When you trotted Osborne way,
And performed before the Queen.

Digitized by Google

"THE WAY WE LIVE NOW."

Mamma (to her Eldest Son). "MY DEAR GEORGE, WHERE ARE YOUR MANNERS? YOU SHOULD ALWAYS SAY 'THANK YOU!' WHEN ANYTHING IS HANDED TO YOU!"

George. "O, BOTHER HAVING TO SAY 'THANKS!' EVERY TIME, MA'! CAN'T A FELLOW HAVE A SEASON-TICKET?"

SUMMER MANŒUVRES.

Second Series.

MRS. FOXE HYMEN will attempt to bring about an engagement between her eldest daughter and the son and heir of SIR CRŒSUS TALLOW, the commercial millionnaire.

The Eldest Daughter of MRS. FOXE HYMEN will enter into a secret correspondence with the Enemy (her Cousin ARTHUR), with a view to counteracting the tactics of her Mother.

MISS FLORENCE FLIRTINGTON will exercise herself in Field Exercises (Croquet and Lawn Tennis), with a view to cutting out her dear friends the GAWKY girls.

Old MRS. TWENTYSTUN will make a descent upon Karlsbad, with a view to inaugurating an improved system of condensation.

MRS. SMITH will attempt, by a forced march on the feelings of her husband, to lure him to the Sea-side. She will be supported by the Infantry, and will advance under cover of the Family Doctor.

MR. SMITH will make a demonstration of business, and hastily retreat (in company with a bachelor friend) to the Continent.

MR. PERCY FLUTTERKITE will communicate with his maiden Aunt in the country, with a view to effecting an advance (pecuniary).

MESSRS. TAG, RAG, and BOBTAIL (late of HER MAJESTY'S principal Gaols) will make a masked march to the Sea-side, with a view to indulging in a course of rifle practice.

Tribute to Correspondents.

PUNCH keeps receiving volley upon volley
Of puns on Collie dogs and MESSIEURS COLLIE.
Wag after wag goes on informing him
That, born web-footed, WEBB was made to swim.
Sense thus extensively with sound combined
Exalts our estimation of our kind.
Cease to pour in your too, too brilliant jokes,
And take a crown of thistles each, ye Mokes.

A PHILOSOPHER AT EIGHTY

(Soliloquy on a late Sultry Day.)

I AM evaporating, like a piece
Of camphor in the sun, or so as wastes
A mass of carbonate of ammonia
Unstoppled, or as though my lard had all
Become transmuted into paraffine,
Which force of heat sublimes. I rise apace
In vapour; am dissolving by degrees,
And mingling with thin air. If this goes on
Much longer, nothing will be left of me
Save earthy salts, besides residual
Phosphate of lime. But if the temperature,
By Fahrenheit now eighty in the shade,
Stand but a little longer, and then fall,
So as to check offgoings at the point
Of just attenuation, then my waist
Will to its normal amplitude return,
And I, who from mine youth have aye grown bigger,
By loss of fat shall have regained my figure.

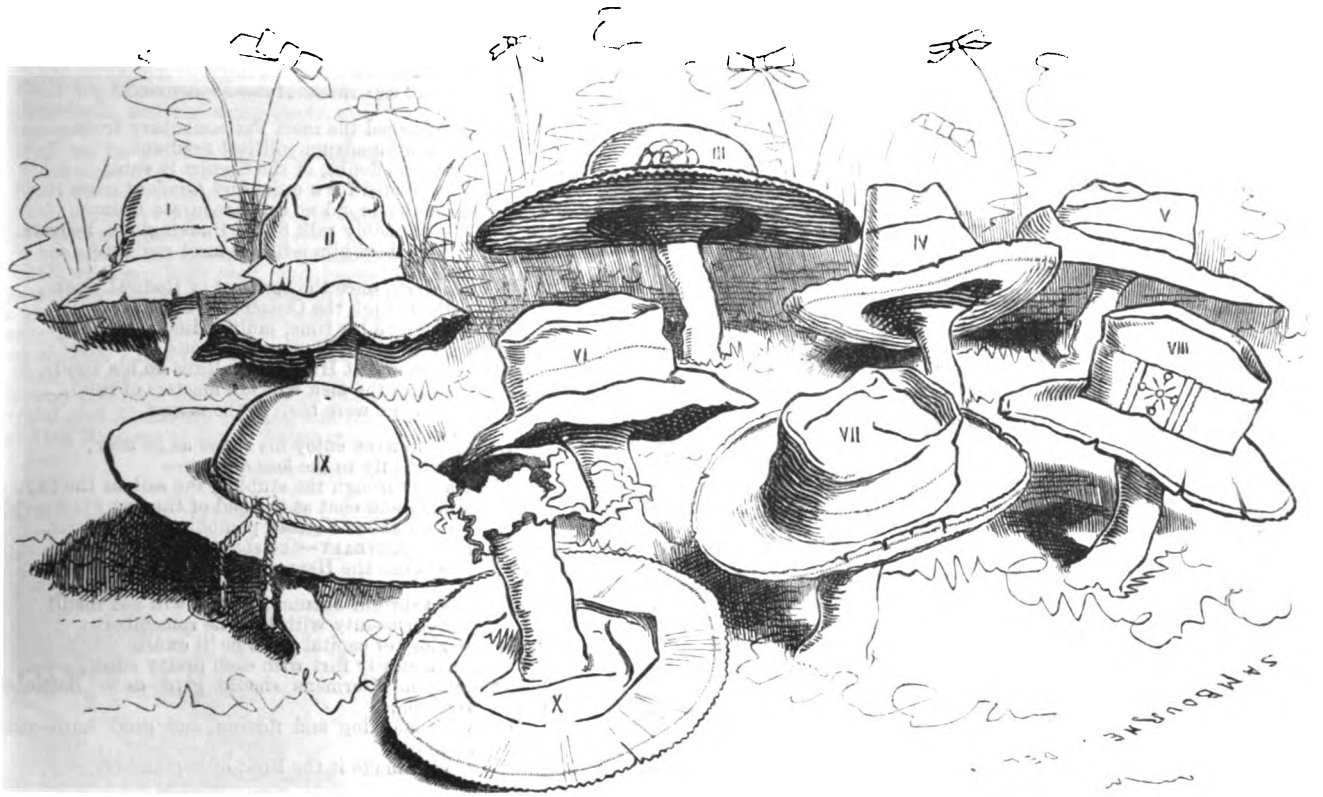
What the Prince Found at Sheffield.

THAT Steel is capable of the highest polish.

That the Diamonds born of Coal are not nearly so black as they are painted.

That Arms of Iron are generally directed by Hearts of Gold.

That a Sheffield welcome is not always smoke.



That, notwithstanding their sharpness, Sheffield Blades are the last things in the world to cut their friends.

And, finally, that certain self-elected Representatives of the Working-Man are (to put it mildly) very much mistaken.

Digitized by Google

FINE GROUP OF FUNGI.

AUTUMN is the special season for Fungi, and, at that very time, fungoid growths appear on the heads of English travellers, as their terrestrial congeners do in our woods and fields. The latter have been classified. The former still await their BERKELEY. Suppose Mr. Punch attempted to supply the desideratum. Here, named and numbered, is a group of specimens which were lately met with, mostly on board a steamer between Folkestone and Boulogne, on the heads of Clergymen of the Church of England :—

I. Marasmius clericalis. II. Coprinus curatorius. III. Clitopilus vicarius. IV. Cortinarius incumbens. V. Pleuropus episcopalis. VI. Russula decanalis. VII. Amanita rectoria. VIII. Hygrophorus prebendarius. IX. and X. Clitocybe archidiaconalis.

It is, perhaps, as well to state that no Fungi of the foregoing species are esculent. Annually, at this time of year, many people kill themselves through eating poisonous toadstools by mistake for mushrooms. Such persons may well be supposed quite capable of trying to eat any of the things above delineated that may fall in their way.

OUT OF TOWN.

An Urban Eclogue.

SCENE—"The sweet shady side of Pall Mall." Enter DAMON, meeting PYTHIAS.

Pythias (amazedly). Not yet out of Town?
Damon (peevishly). You're the fool of a phrase!
My good friend, there is no "Out of Town" in these days.
Pythias. What, DAMON turned cynic? Then Stocks must be down!
Or is it that She, or the "Dragon" doth frown?
Damon. You miss with both barrels. They've "flitted" to Brighton;
I follow.
Pythias. What, called by the horn of old Triton,
And Cupid's alarum?
Damon. Pooh! Fiddle-de-dee!
Your only sea-god now is Proteus, and he
Sways fashions, not floods; while for conquering Cupid,
Midst sand-shoes and shrimps, that young god seems half stupid.
Pythias. Hipped! hipped! my dear DAMON! Tell PYTHIAS the reason.
Damon. Fact is, I am fagged with the frets of the season,
And pine for a taste of the restful and rustic,
My prospect of which now appears nubibustic.
Pythias. With sweet AMARYLLIS to toy in the shade
Of——
Damon. A Small silken circlet, on Pier or Parade!
Pythias. With PYRRHA to——
Damon. Potter about on the sands,
Or lend ear to the wearisome bray of the bands!
Pythias. With a latter-day LYDIA, lovelier than she
Who could charm the Venusian——
Damon. Stare at the sea!
Pooh, pooh! my dear PYTHIAS, poetry, even
So modish as that with which HORACE could leaven
The life of old Rome, can have nothing to do
With a Cit's "out of Town" in these days. There are few
Of the freaks of fool-fashion such burdensome slavery
As this annual worship of Neptune.
Pythias. Your bravery
Stops short at Philippic; pray why don't you lead
A sublime insurrection?
Damon. I should not succeed.
Your Cit could not live far from pavement and kerb; he,
Inverting the pleasant old rule, rus in urbe,
Takes Town with him everywhere. Nature's best scenes
He invades with his shops and his bathing-machines;
With his family gods in a flock settles down,
And then calls the whole thing—save the mark!—"out of Town."
O, for true sylvan solitude!
Pythias. That is, à deux
With books, "bitter," and—baths, eh, as well as beau yeux?
Damon. Well, y-e-es!
Pythias. Ah, my very dear DAMON, I see
That your hatred of Town is a thing of degree.
The odi profanum may move you, but, think:
We can't each have a bower on a waterfall's brink,
With a PYRRHA to pet, with no tourists to throng,
And a dinner-bell sweet as a nightingale's song.
Poor gregarious man—though you're dreadfully down
On his foibles—is lost when he's quite "out of Town"!
[Exeunt Clubwards.

Digitized by Google

"SILENCE IS GOLDEN."

Chatty Old Gent. "HAVE YOU LONG HOURS HE-AR, PORTAR?"

Railway Porter (whose Temper has been spoilt). "SAME AS ANYWHERES ELSE, I S'POSE—SIXTY MINUTES!"—— (Bell rings, Railway Porter touches up Old Gent's favourite corn, and rushes off!)

Old Gent. "PH—O—O—O—O—!"

THE FIRST!

Lo, September is here before Summer 's begun!
For some of our many offences,
The Clerk of the Weather has kept back the sun,
The riotous rain has come down with a run;
But now that the pulses of Autumn are stirred,
We 'll trudge through the "turmuts" in search of the bird
That was rarest *Ausoniis mensis.

We 've dragged the inert Parliamentary train
Up a humdrum political gradient.
DISRAELI, no doubt, of the Session is vain,
Since he wished for a quiet and fainéant reign;
He unluckily found no commensurate foeman,
So he 'll plausibly talk to the Buckingham Yeoman,
And show him a future most radiant.

Vivian Grey, once the sprucest of Radical bucks,
Bears high the Conservative banner:
He has run, in his time, multitudinous mucks,
Has quietly taken his varying lucks,
And now down at Hughenden leans on his spud,
And lectures the men who are masters of mud,
As if he were born to the manor.

Let the PREMIER enjoy his recess as he may,
We 'll fly to the loca amœna—
The tramp through the stubble, the sail on the bay,
Gay dinner and chat at the end of the day;
Not a word about Vatican pamphlet Gladstonian,
Of blatant KENEALY—the sham Ciceronian,
Or even the Herzegovina.

No, misty-bright autumn, Punch will not insult
Your beauty with bosh he remembers:
In the glory of capital sport he 'll exult,
And shamelessly flirt with each pretty adult.
Though the Germans should give us a Battle of Dorking,
He, with shooting and flirting, and good knife-and-forking,
Will make it the First of Septembers.

* MARTIAL. xiii. 65.

MOTTO FOR MAJOR DICKSON.—For AHMED forewarned.

USING GOOD NAMES.

FAR be it from Mr. Punch to puff a Music-Hall singer, whether he be a "Giant Comique" or a "Little Wonder," or "The Unequalled" Somebody, or "The Great" Nobody. But Mr. Punch has just received a programme of the "Great VANCE'S" entertainment, with a picture of the immense comic vocalist himself (and, by the way, the Great Creature's hairdresser should insist upon advertising himself underneath this charming "portrait of a gentleman"), and extracts from various papers, stating the almost unutterable enjoyment they (the writers) have derived from the Great One's "unexampled," "admirable," "artistic," "eminently successful" impersonations, delineations, &c., &c. So far, "live and let live" being the motto, and every man his own trumpeter in the World's Fair, there 's no harm done to any one, and much good may it do the Magnate of Mimics—a new title to which the Great Artiste is welcome.

But, at the head of all this puffery, there is an announcement which Mr. Punch reads with regret, and it is this:

"Patron—H.R.H. PRINCE OF WALES. Patroness—H.R.H. PRINCESS OF WALES."

Are the names of their Royal Highnesses used with, or without, permission? If "with," it is a great pity: if "without," the Great One should be politely requested to omit them from his programme.

There is one delicious puff which, however, should not be omitted,—

"N.B.—It is a noted fact that the Aristocracy, Clergy, and Gentry of the Three Kingdoms recognise VANCE'S Varieties as the most refined Comic Entertainment of the day."

It calls to mind "JARLEY'S Waxworks." It is a wonder that the Clergy do not ask him to perform at the next Festival, and request him to give "Lord Swoon; or, the Exhausted Swell," "The Shah," "The Beautiful Blonde," "Slap Bang!" "Old Brown's Daughter," and other choice tastes of his quality, which have doubtless contributed vastly to the amusement of their Royal Highnesses, above advertised, and still more to that class of young men of the period, of the cheap swell order, with the rakish air, the unwashed hands, and the bad cigar, who, we suppose, are included among the "Gentry" that patronise the Great VANCE. But surely, surely, our Princess and our Prince are not really giving their countenance to this sort of thing!

PRELIMINARY.

SHALL we go at all?
When shall we go?
Where shall we go?

Shall we go to Pierpoint, where the mortality, according to the Registrar-General, is only 11·2 per 1000, or to Sandbeach, where the same authority reckons it at 11·19? (Shall we study decimal arithmetic, to comprehend the exact difference between these two rates?)

Shall we go down, beforehand, to both these places, and see which of them we like the best; and ascertain which has the most thorough system of drainage, and the purest water, and the best air, and the nicest people, and the most comfortable beds?

Shall we go to Shingleton, where there is a pier and no sands, or to Glareville, where there are sands, but no pier?

Shall we ask the DARTLETTS, who are at Billowsmere, to look out for rooms for us there?

Shall we take a furnished house, or lodgings?

If we decide on a house, shall we take our own plate and linen?

Shall we take SARAH with us, as well as ELIZABETH?

If we settle on lodgings, shall they be expensive and close to the sea, or economical and away in the town (with a sea-view from the back-bedroom window)?

Digitized by Google

Shall we take the dining-room, or the drawing-room?

Shall we shut up our house at home; or leave SARAH in it on board wages, and give her the company of MRS. NIGLETT, the charwoman (SARAH being of a timid nature); or shall we send SARAH home for a holiday, and put Police Constable SHADLOCK and his wife in command of the premises?

What shall we do with the plate?

What arrangement shall we make about the cat?

Shall we take baby's cot, and the perambulator, and the travelling-bath, and the camp-stools, and the gun-case, and the large telescope?

Shall we have to pay for extra luggage?

What class shall we go?

Shall we take return tickets?

Shall we go for three weeks, or a month?

What train shall we go by?

What additional extra shall we find this year?

Shall we come back well, and happy, and contented, cherishing the most agreeable reminiscences of Chearmouth and MRS. FAIRFAX; or shall we return dyspeptic, and cross, and dissatisfied, resolute never to set foot in Kelpside again, and dwelling on the recollection of MRS. FILCHER with fierce hate and unconquerable aversion?

Shall we stay at home this year, and have some drives and little dinners, and take the children to the Zoological Gardens, and the Crystal and Alexandra Palaces, and the Thames Embankment, and the Fish Museum at South Kensington, and Kensington Gardens?

CONSIDERATIONS ON COOKERY SCHOOLS.

ALL the arrangements of Cookery Schools should, of course, be made, as the bumpkin said, with a view to Eton.

In the First Form of a Cookery School the instruction should be rudimentary. The earliest lesson might be how to toast a piece of bread, which not everybody knows. The next, perhaps, how to boil potatoes. Yes, "perhaps;" because the ability to boil potatoes properly is uncommon. It may even be considered by some persons as the test of scholarship in Cookery, and thought worthy to constitute the principal exercise of the Sixth Form.

The Second Form might learn the rudiments of roasting, boiling, and frying after having received sufficient instruction in Chemistry. One of the first lessons to be impressed on the tender mind is that all cookery is essentially a chemical process, an operation based on principles. An unprincipled cook is as bad as an unjust steward.

Made-dishes of the simpler kind might be commenced in the Third Form. For instance, plain hashes, minces, and stews—including Irish Stew.

The Fourth Form might go as far as bubble-and-squeak and toad-in-the-hole.

In the Fifth Form the course might comprise the ordinary Three Courses; not MR. GLADSTONE'S, but those of the well-to-do middle classes.

The composition of "French kickshaws and toys" should be reserved for the Sixth Form. At the top of the School the students could learn to prepare such dishes as potage de tortue clair and turtle purée, dorée à l'Italienne, riz de veau, mazarine de foie gras à la Lucullus, and so on with all manner of salmis, fricandeux, and fricassees—such as suprême de volaille.

These hints have been partly suggested by an interesting report in the Standard of an official visit by MR. BUCKMASTER, deputed from the Committee of Council to inspect the Cookery School of St. Mary's, Soho, an academy originated by the REV. ROBERT GWYNNE, Vicar, and MR. THOMAS BLACKWELL, Churchwarden, with the object of teaching "Cookery for the poor and invalids." In this establishment education does not soar quite so high as mazarine de foie gras à la Lucullus. But it is sound as far as it goes. Some idea of it may be derived from the following extract from a diary:—

"'Went to market at 30 past 9, February 20th, 1875.—Two lbs. of tripe at 8*d*., 1*s*. 4*d*.; dripping, 4*d*.; two sheep's hearts, 10*d*.; giblets for pie, 6*d*.; onions, 4*d*.; pork for soup, 3*d*.; flour, 2*d*.; currants, 1*d*.; potatoes, 8*d*.; carrots, sage, and leeks, 3*d*.: total cost, 4*s*. 9*d*.' On this date from these purchases eighteen persons dined."

In this School it will be observed that economy is taught as well as cookery; and the Vicar and Curates sometimes sit down to dine in the kitchen on dishes provided from such as the above-named materials.

In the Soho Cookery School prizes for proficiency are awarded to successful pupils. In the higher Schools which must soon be generally instituted, competition will probably be promoted likewise; but it is to be feared that in Cookery Schools, beyond all others, there will inevitably be a peculiar tendency to cram.

DIGNITY AND IMPUDENCE.

THE Commissioners appointed to examine into the cases of corruption alleged to have taken place at the Bribeborough Election resumed their inquiry.

MR. CASH examined: He said he was a member of the firm of CASH, DISCOUNT & Co., Universal Merchants. He knew nothing about the bribery said to have taken place at the election. The fact of the matter was this—the Commissioners would have their trouble for nothing. (A laugh.)

The Chief Commissioner. Don't be so sure of that! (Renewed laughter.)

The Witness resumed: What was the good of dragging him into that room when he had nothing to say?

Commissioner Wagg. Come, Sir, I have no doubt you are very fond of a drag at Epsom! (Roars of laughter.)

The Witness resumed: He admitted that the Commissioner was right—on this occasion only! (Laughter.) Well, he had said his say, and there was an end of it. He could give no further evidence of any value on any subject to any one. (A laugh.)

The Chief Commissioner. What is your favourite Party?

The Witness. A dinner-party! (Roars of laughter.)

Commissioner Clever. Very likely. But we don't mean that. What we want to know is this, do you belong to the Pinks or to the Blues?

The Witness. Well, at the election I belonged to the Pinks, but, since I entered this room, I have been in the Blues! (Shouts of laughter.)

THOMAS CLODD was next examined. Witness said he was a labourer. He had a vote at the election.

Commissioner Clever. A what?

The Witness. A vote. Don't you know what a vote is? (Laughter.)

Commissioner Clever. Do you? (Renewed laughter.) Come, what is a vote? (The Witness hesitated.) Try and describe it. Well, perhaps I can help you. Is it a vegetable? (Laughter.) Is it good to eat?

The Witness. No, it 's good for drink. (Roars of laughter.)

The Witness resumed: He was a poor man.

The Chief Commissioner. And fond of your beer? (A laugh.)

The Witness. Yes, when it ain't brought to me by the undertaker. (Much laughter.)

The Witness resumed: He did not know why he had been brought before the Commissioners. He could offer no evidence. At the Election he had had some beer. He took it as a medicine. (A laugh.) He was not very well.

Commissioner Wagg. In fact it was a case of ailing! (Laughter.)

The Witness. You make a pint of the beer. That 's wrong—it was a quart! (Renewed laughter.)

Commissioner Wagg. I see that you will give me no quarter! (Roars of laughter.)

The Witness resumed: He did not know why the Commissioners had come down to Bribeborough. They (the Commissioners) would make a mess of it. (A laugh.)

The Chief Commissioner. Well, a Bar Mess is a very pleasant thing indeed! (Much laughter from the other Commissioners.)

The Witness having no further evidence to offer, the inquiry was adjourned.

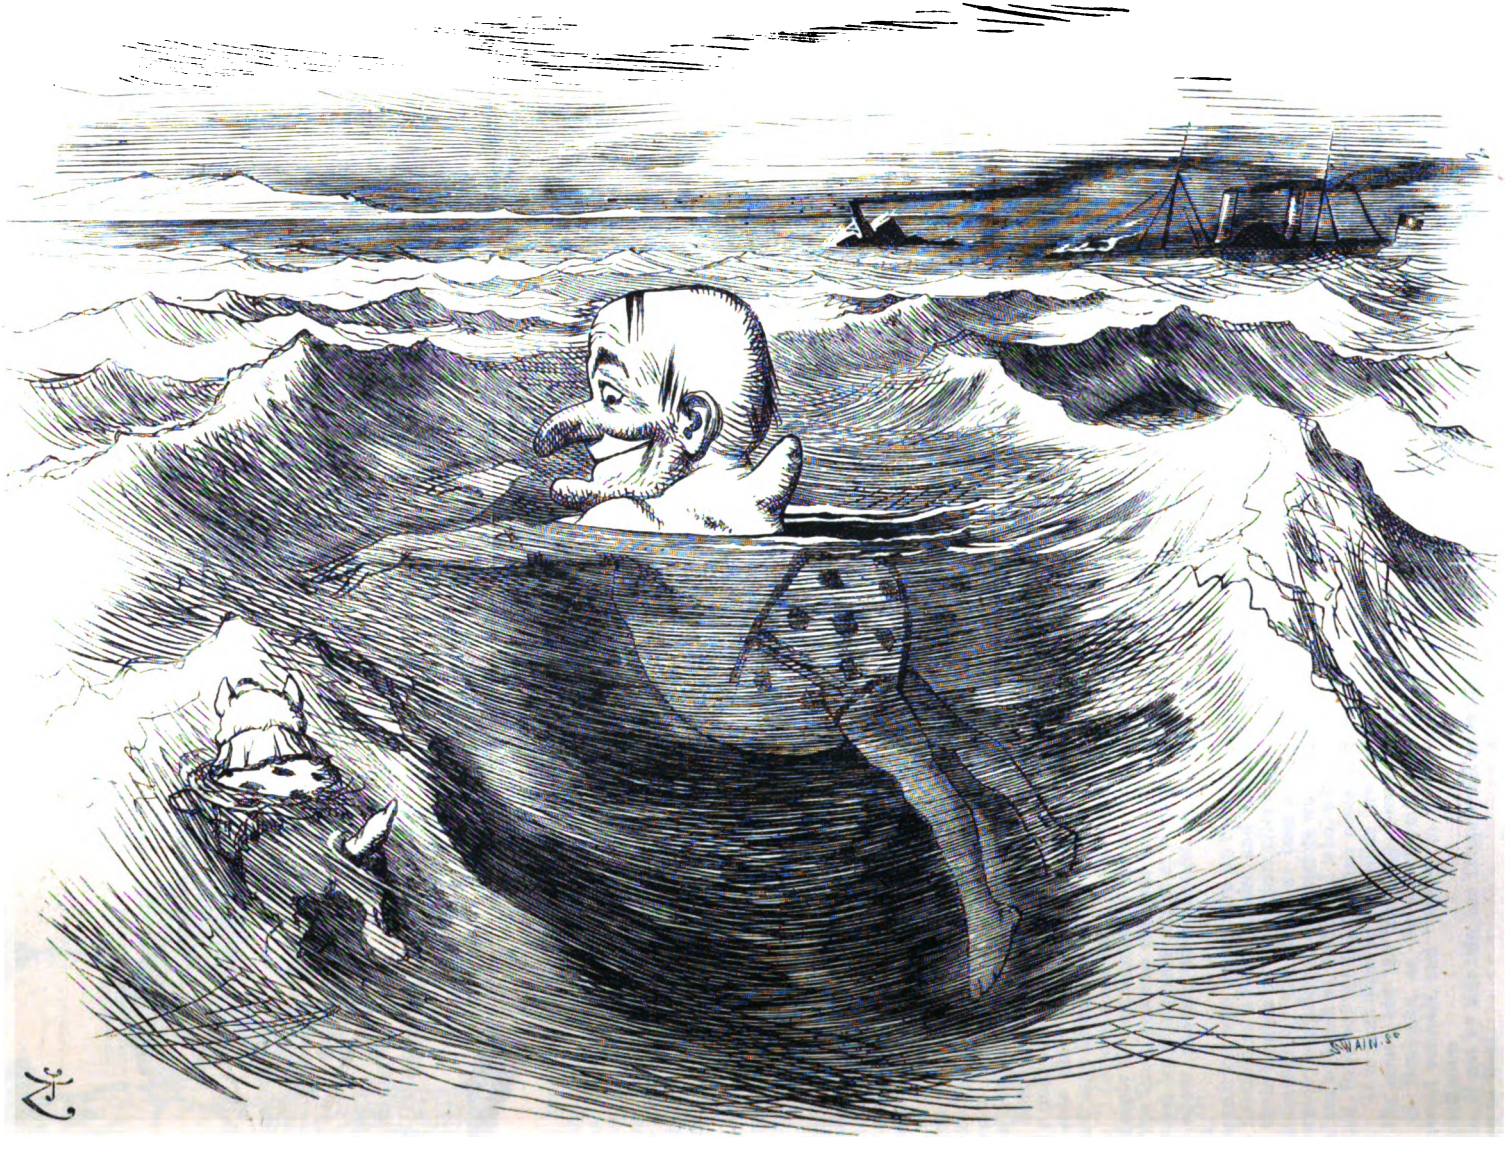
A Peculiar Plant.

SOME apparently poetical party has advertised in the Daily Telegraph for a—

VEGETABLE MAID WANTED at the Tavistock Hotel, Covent Garden.—Apply after six o'clock.

Roses belong to the vegetable kingdom; so do Lilies. Is the foregoing a matrimonial advertisement for a Virgin Flower?

Digitized by Google



POLITENESS ON THE "PÉRISSOIRE."

"PARDON, MONSIEUR, BUT COULD YOU INDICATE TO ME THE SHORTEST ROAD TO ARRIVE AT TROUVILLE?"

"SOUTH-SOUTH-WEST BY SOUTH, AND STRAIGHT ON, MADAME! BUT AS I HAVE THE HONOUR OF VOYAGING IN THE SAME DIRECTION AS MADAME, PERHAPS SHE WOULD DEIGN PERMIT ME TO HAVE THE DOUBLE HONOUR OF ESCORTING HER?"

[The "périssoire" consists of two boats joined by a seat and footboard, and is common on the French coast. Probable derivation: "Péri," a Peri; "S'asseoir," to sit down.

Digitized by Google

THE CHANNEL QUESTION SOLVED.

"COME ALONG, TOBY! WHAT CAPTAIN WEBB HAS DONE, WE CAN DO!!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

TRIPS FOR TRIPPERS.

Seasonable Hints for Vacation Voyageurs.

HERE are all sorts of Trips from Ramsgate for Trippers. By rail, by road, and by sea. You can be like "Little Water Wagtail," and "sit upon a rail," or you can "put yourself up for sail," and go for very little,—that is if you go on board what is called "a pleasure yacht," at a shilling a head for two hours, in which case you might be entered in a catalogue as among "an odd lot for the next sail." Some people enjoy this sort of thing per se, but, if you'll enjoy it more per land, don't you go. Should you, however, feel that you are a born Tar, then, avast heaving and step on board the Saucy Emma, and away, with a fair wind, to Deal, to the home of Black Eye'd Susan, to the scene of the true love of that able seaman William, so hardly treated by that unable seaman Le Capitaine Crosstree, R.N., both devoted to La Fille de Madame Hatley. Though, on reconsideration, it occurs to me that William was Mr. Hatley, and Susan was no relation to the Hatleys—but the subject without a pedigree, or a chart, or a bill of the play to refer to, is somewhat obscure.

If the sea does not take you, the train will.

En attendant, while making up your mind (the lightest luggage, by the way, you can take with you), you can look round at Ramsgate for the Pier, and wonder why, with all its advantages, it is not to Margate what Dieppe is to Boulogne,—only that for us, it should be rather Boulogneish than Dieppish in its opportunities of amusement. Ramsgate has the advantage over Boulogne in being what the Guide Books call "a salubrious spot,"—being, in fact, about the salubriousest spot that ever we did see. No sea-side place is without some sort of odour at some time or other of the year, and at some particular spot. Even Ramsgate may once and away, with a south-easterly breeze, get a sniff of the mud in its own harbour at low tide. But Boulogne, with regard to smells of all descriptions, puts Cologne in the shade, the latter being unable to hold a scent-bottle to Boulogne in this respect.

The Tripper to Boulogne will find the smells there so thick, that he will be positively compelled to cut them—and that as quickly as possible. In Boulogne the Tripper, who is following his nose, will be perpetually obliged to stop it in the street.

Every sea-side place has its season and its seasoning, and the French proverb may be adapted to the French watering-places, and be read thus; "Chacun a son égout." At certain hours of the day Boulogne is simply Covent Garden by the sea—only worse. In your hotel, if on the Quai, you are not safe from the incursion of the odour. A young lady Trippiste might at Boulogne complain to her father of the odour, and say with Hamlet, on Yorick's skull, "and smells so! Pa!"

Yet our compatriots who would turn up their noses at Ramsgate, do not object to stand on a foreign shore, and "hold their own," and even to hold their tongues on the subject afterwards. Indeed, they seem to be attracted by the smells as bees are by the scents of flowers. However, our beloved compatriots who, when abroad, can make themselves so much at home, and who, when at home, are so often all abroad, have but one use for their noses, and that is, to pay through them. It is next door to impossible (we forget the number and name of the street, but the foregoing direction will suffice) to order rooms in Boulogne, as our countrymen would say, "ong sweet." Go sweet yourself, and "sweets to the sweet" would be, of course, superfluous.

By this time, if not by this tide, the Tripper will have determined how he will go to Deal.

Much of the material for the "wooden walls of Old England" used to be supplied by Deal.

Before arriving there, it will be as well to say that should you find Deal not so warm as you had expected, you can go to a place that is Walmer.

Temperature is a matter for each individual traveller, as you can soon make even the Arctic regions too hot to hold you.

Notice the coast. See the Flats of Deal. These flats have not yet been taken in by anybody; and not having been taken in, they are, strange to say, not let out; though when lodgings and hotels are at fancy prices at Ramsgate, it would surely pay any enterprising Company to let these out, advertising them as "Several airy Flats, with considerable accommodation for large or small families, to be Let, in the neighbourhood of Deal."

If you go by train, you won't see much of these; but read this, and "imagine the rest," as the lodger did when he was kept awake by fls.

The Pedestrian will have a good time of it. Naturally it will occur to him that, if hungry, he can walk into Sandwich.

He will also see, somewhere about here, the commencement of a splendid building, probably another Aquarium, in these Aquaria-maniacal days.

Apropos of aquaria, a Frenchman on a visit to a compatriot residing in London, came suddenly upon the New Winter Garden and Aquarium in Westminster. He mistook it for a new Railway Station, and exclaimed, "C'est magnifique! cette Gare!" His friend corrected this wrong impression by his reply, "Oui, mon cher, vous avez raison, 'c'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la Gare.'"

En voiture, Messieurs, for Deal! Carthago est delenda! which, being translated, "Carthage was uncommonly like Deal."

Forwards! To Deal, to Dover, and then—

> Over the Sea! Over the Sea!
> Let us away to the Stinkomalee!
> Over the Sea! Over the Sea!
> To Calais, and so to Boulogne!

Avoiding Folkestone, which is too full to be pleasant. Not that you will meet with the dregs of the people there, but you cannot help coming across the Lees.

Au plaisir.

WEBB ACROSS THE WATER.

COME, now at last there 's something new we 've seen beneath the Sun;
A swim from England's shore to France, which CAPTAIN WEBB has done.
So kudos be to CAPTAIN WEBB—and he 'll get it from the QUEEN,
As an ornament to his Country and the Mercantile Marine.

He stripped himself to his caleçons—of merino made, or flannel?
He anointed his skin with porpoise-oil, and plunged into the Channel.
And, whilst bystanders let their tongues in cheers uproarious loose,
Some fools cried, "What a duck of a man!" and others, "What a goose!"

Hurrah for daring CAPTAIN WEBB, that resolute Commander!
He has far outdone LORD BYRON, MR. ERENHEAD, and LEANDER.
As for LEANDER, now his fame must sink to nearly zero;
For what is he compared with WEBB—who 's in himself a Hero?

LEANDER was a Grecian youth, but CAPTAIN WEBB 's a Briton.
Our WEBB is to LEANDER as a large cat to a kitten;
Or rather, since above all things a cat objects to water,
LEANDER is a water-rat to WEBB, who is an otter.

Our Merchant Navy's mostly manned by men of this man's stuff;
A man of might and valour, and endurance firm and tough.
When shipknackers, O PLIMSOLL, send seaworthy men like him
Afloat in unseaworthy ships, they need know how to swim!

Now, JONATHAN, let WEBB's exploit drive none of you too frantic,
So as to lead to more than talk of swimming the Atlantic.
You may cross it in a fragile barque—not to choose an A 1 clipper—
But O, don't perish in the attempt to excel our doughty Skipper.

Dedicated to the British Association.

"It occurred to a chemist of Pontresina to distil an essence from the Iou, a little white-starred flower, with a delicate aromatic bitter. He named his new liqueur after the plant it comes from, and it gained him a medal when exhibited at the Paris Exhibition. What is more, in our opinion the honour was deserved, for the Iou 'sweet' or 'bitter' is equally to be recommended as an appetiser, or a chasse."—Times, August 12—Article on "The Engadine.'

> No cleverer conjurer ever has been
> Than this chemist who lives in the Engadine—
> The Times has omitted to mention the name
> Of a Swiss so deserving the chaplet of fame—
> For what do you think he is able to do?
> Extract a liqueur from an I O U!

Digitized by Google

PRETTY MANNERS IN HUMBLE LIFE.

Gallant Scavenger. "VERY MUCH THE GOOD DAY,* MADAME! AND HOW FARES MISTER YOUR HUSBAND, THIS FINE WEATHER?"

Polite Applewoman. "MUCH BETTER, I THANK YOU, MONSIEUR! RECALL ME, I PRAY YOU, TO THE AMIABLE RECOLLECTION OF MADAME YOUR SPOUSE!"

Gallant Scavenger. "WITH PLEASURE, MADAME. VERY MUCH THE GOOD EVENING!"

Polite Applewoman. "GOOD EVENING, MONSIEUR, AND GOOD NIGHT!"

* In the original, "Bien le bon jour, Madame."

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

IT is strongly to be hoped that, as education spreads, and School-Boards multiply around us, a knowledge of something more than the Three R's will be gradually instilled into the smallest of Great Britons. Little boys now run the risk of being nabbed by the police, and even put in prison, because they have not studied the law of gravitation. In ignorance, no doubt, of the force which is acquired by the impetus of falling, they drop brickbats upon trains when passing under bridges, and incur thereby the peril of being tried for manslaughter. Unversed in physics, they project small pebbles with their catapults or with their tiny fists; and these projectiles, coming into sudden contact with the window of a railway-carriage, pierce the glass, and injure, or, at the least, affright, the passengers.

As a preventive to these pastimes, a course of physical instruction might with wisdom be prescribed; and a fair notion of the forces of contact or collision might be fittingly imparted to the minds of little students, by exposing a small portion of their bodies to a few blows with a birch, which should be so wielded as to come into collision with them.

MECHI IN ANOTHER MOUTH.

(That of MR. HAWTREY.)

ZING a zong o' MAKEY,
'Bout zummut moor than rye;
Whate and wutts and barley:
Spell o' weather dry,
Which, in time o' harvest,
Meaks we birds to zing;
None but robins else no more
Wun't afore next Spring.

Four fine weeks o' sunshine
Ha' dried the sodden ground,
Sorry soaked craps ripun'd,
And brought their heads all round.
Kernels med be bigger,
And moor on 'um, no doubt;
The Miller, for all that, 'ool find
'Um prove a good turn-out.

Barley laid and matted
Wi' weeds and clawver got,
But now there's hopes o' savun
A purty tidy lot.
Zum on 't mun be wasted,
Thof the crap wun't fail.
Shan't ha' not much malt this year
To meak the best pale ale.

This ha' ben the sazun
For wutts above all graain,
Little though they promus'd
Afore they got the raain.
A second crap o' clawver
'Ool make the Farmers blithe:
'Tis now in vlower already,
A bidun vor the zithe.

The Winter banes be prime uns;
The Spring do middlun grow.
The paes I can't zay much for,
As they be but so-so.
The Zun ha' saved the taturs
By manes o' hate and light,
A dryun up the vungus,
And burnun out the blight.

The root-craps altogether—
There's time afoor 'um yet—
Though now they looks perfecshun,
Be ready for moor wet.
Let's whoap the land 'ool vurnish
Enough—and that's a veast:
Abundance o' provizhun
And food for man and beast.

Music o' machinery
Hereabouts plays now,
Rippun ingion's puffun,
Throbbun o' stame-plough.
All the sarial straa-craps
Be bulkier, like, this year.
Charge the pipe wi' baccy;
Fill the glass wi' beer.

Here's to MR. MAKEY!
Med a live and thrive
Long to teach we farmers
Our hosses how to drive.
Wisdom for the smock-frock
Bid 'un change the gown:
Who 'ood bide a Cockney
When he med be a Clown?

The Cheapest Channel Route.

Pat (in an economical mood). Shure, and isn't it myself that 's found the cheapest route to the Continent!

Sawney. Ye dinna say so! Ma gracious! I 'd like to knaw hoo to save the bawbees.

Pat. Faith thin, bedad and I 'll tell ye. See now. Isn't it taking a wee bit of a swim from Dover to Calais?

Digitized by Google

John. But you don't know how to swim, PAT.

Pat. And it 's that, is it? It 's that that 's causing a botheration? Be aisy! Wouldn't there be toime now to learn how to swim, in an elegant manner, during the passage? Come now. Get out wid ye!

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dilletanty Society.

OCCASIONAL NOTE.—Remember that French polish is most useful. When you want an old piece of furniture done up to look rather better than new, you must go smilingly to the upholsterer, and address him thus, putting on your best French polish, "Voulez-vous veneer?"

Not sufficient attention has been hitherto given to tables.

A table, like a ballet-dancer, should have good legs. How much of them should be shown to the public is a question for the lady of the house, or, in her absence, for the master, who will act as Lord Chamberlain.*

Do not lose sight of the fact that there is poetry in furniture; though this would not warrant you in calling on MR. ALFRED TENNYSON and asking him, "if, being such a good hand at turning neat compliments in verse, he would kindly turn you an elegant set of legs for your dining-table." The Laureate, his fine eye in frenzy rolling, would probably be inclined to turn the modest visitor out among his own laurels in the front garden.

Here at once is a device for a Shakspearian Table, a figure of Hamlet intersected in the centre by the table which Hamlet's legs support underneath. Hamlet's hands are raised, each holding a little carved miniature table, while round his waist is written the quotation,—

"My tables! Meat it is!
Set it down."

This is a highly artistic conception.†

The Addition Table is so constructed that by the simplest possible mechanism another place can be added at a moment's notice. Most useful (where friends drop in accidentally) to a really hospitable person. It will be satisfactory to explain to a host of a truly liberal turn of mind that this table cannot be, and is not intended to be, worked by a Screw. Our illustration, showing the arrival of an unexpected but welcome guest, say the Author of this work,‡ and the table at once enlarged, to one place more. We cannot inform the public how it is done. That is our secret. But when 'tis done, 'tis well and quickly done.

The Multiplication Table is something of the same notion, only made to suit Hotels and Families arriving.

In few articles of furniture can so much variety in taste and fancy be shown, combined with the strictest economy where necessary, as in tables.

For a West-End Moneylender's Dining-room what more suitable than an Interest Table, with, in the middle, a small fountain, with equally-distributed jets throwing up into the air Scent per Scent? The Interest Table should be divided into four quarters and supported by twelve legs. The legs should be of ebony. We append a design (our own) for an Interest Table, supported by Twelve Black Legs. The rich ornamentation should be executed in gold, silver, and as much brass as possible.

(To be continued.)

* The LORD CHAMBERLAIN, by the way, doesn't act, he only controls those who do.

† Orders (enclosing cheques in advance) for the new Shakspearian Table to be sent to the Editor of the Decorative Grammar, which will be immediately attended to and executed with celerity and despatch.

‡ Foot-note (by the Artist) on the Artist.—To make the idea intelligible (and to prevent any ill-feeling), I have made them both coming in unexpectedly together, and everybody of course delighted to see them.

(Signed) THE ARTIST.

A Material Mystery.

THE Fanfulla has lately published a minute description of the habits and manners of the POPE. In this interesting contribution to natural history we are informed that—

"By nine o'clock the POPE is always to be found sitting in his arm-chair under his canopy, before a large writing-table, on which stands a crucifix and an Immaculate Conception, besides papers and an inkstand."

Who can conceive a Conception standing on a table? Such an object, so situated, appears about as imaginable as a hypothesis on the mantelshelf or an assumption in the grate. The mind might as well try to form a notion of a chimæra buzzing in a vacuum, eating its second intentions.

AFTER CLASSICAL PRECEDENT.

AT Worship Street, one day last week, a little matrimonial difference was discussed, on which occasion it appeared that the Lady had threatened to break her Husband's head with a pitcher. This may be said to be a renewal of the Jug-Earthen War.

THE PORT OF LONDON.

OUR own Medical Officer reports that in sixteen cases out of twenty the Port of London is rather worse than the Sherry.

THE LAST OF THE "THAMES VALLEY ELEPHANTS."—The one at the Elephant and Castle.

Digitized by Google

A LITERAL FACT.

The Young Master (to new Valet from the Emerald Isle). "I SAY, CONFOUND YOU, WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN DOING WITH MY BOOTS HERE?" (The night had been rainy.)

Pat. "SHURE, SORR, YOU TOULD ME LAST EVENING TO PUTT 'M ON THE THRAYS!"

HIS OWN MASTER!

(A Farce, in One Short Scene.)

SCENE.—The Sultan's Palace. The SULTAN and his Grand Vizier discovered in consultation. Unpaid Bills (RIGHT and LEFT). A tottering Throne (CENTRE).

The Sultan. And so you say I must see them?

The Grand Vizier. It is Fate, O mighty Father of the Faithful, and what is stronger than Fate?

The Sultan. Very well. Tell the Dogs to come in.

The Grand Vizier. The meanest Slave upon the Earth hastens to do the bidding of the all-powerful Master of the World.

[Exit, and re-enter immediately, ushering in the Ambassadors of Austria, Russia, Germany, France, and England. The Ambassadors bow themselves down to the ground before the SULTAN.

The Sultan. Well, Gentlemen, and what do you want with me? But first, with your permission, I will raise my right hand to my head, to arrange my turban, which (as you see) seems to be falling off.

The Austrian Ambassador. With the greatest possible respect for your Majesty's wishes—which are to all of us law—I most humbly but distinctly protest against your Majesty using your Majesty's right hand.

The Sultan. Well then, Gentlemen, I will raise my left.

The Russian Ambassador. Your Majesty of course can do absolutely what your Majesty pleases; but I, on behalf of my Government, respectfully but firmly insist that your Majesty shall not use your Majesty's left hand.

The Sultan. Well then, Gentlemen, you will notice that my footstool appears to be slipping away from me. With your permission, Gentlemen, I will pull it back again with my right leg.

The German Ambassador. Of course we (without exception) are prepared to treat your Majesty's slightest suggestions as positive commands. Still I have the honour to inform your Majesty that your Majesty cannot be permitted to move your Majesty's right leg.

The Sultan. Well, Gentlemen, my left leg will do equally well.

The French Ambassador. We have only to know your Majesty's ideas to carry them out instantly, in the most perfect integrity. Still, France will not consent to your Majesty advancing your Majesty's left leg.

The Sultan. Well, Gentlemen, what can I do?

The English Ambassador. I am desired by Her Majesty's Government (who are prepared to give each and every of your Majesty's plans the most unqualified moral support) to inform your Majesty that your Majesty will be respectfully permitted to do nothing!

[Scene closes in.

Regula sine Exceptione.

(JACK loquitur.)

BILL BOWLINE comes and he says to me,
He says to me, he says, says he,
"What is the Rule of the Road at sea?"

I says to him, says I (that 's me),
"Whether ashore, or whether at sea,
The Rule of the Road, folk seems to agree,
Is to suddenly launch in eternity
Any one not quite handy to see
If the helm turned to starboard or port should be,
As we learn by a late catastrophe."

A Rotten Pair.

(To ALEXANDER-WILLIAM & CO.)

WHAT has been the fruit of your sad transactions?
Melon-Collie!

Digitized by Google

DISGUISED IN TARTAN.

MOSSOO HAS BEEN INVITED NORTH FOR A FEW DAYS' SHOOTING. HE ARRIVES TOUT À FAIT—"EN MONTAGNARD"!

DISCOVERIES IN LONDON.

During the Dull Season.

If by accident you happen to remain in Town just now, you will probably discover—

That, although everybody who is anybody has long ago left Town, there seems to be a myriad of nobodies still moving in it.

That London, after all, is a vastly more agreeable city in the autumn than its fashionable visitors would imagine or believe.

That you may cast away your "Chimney-pot" and wear a comfortable "Billycock," and yet be safe from all reproof by your feminine relations.

That, if you wish to give a dinner at some river-side Hotel, you can do so without writing down beforehand for a room.

That there are many ancient nooks, and lots of modern sights in Town which are really well worth seeing, and which, in the hurry-scurry worry of the Season, you never have the time to dream of, much less try to go to see.

That even Hansom Cabmen can be civil in September, and will condescend to drive you nearly two miles for a shilling, even though forewarned by you that such will be their fare.

That you need not pay for booking your place now at the Theatre, for you are sure of a good seat by simply paying at the doors.

That the penny papers issue still great placards of their news, although it puzzles you perhaps to imagine how their columns can daily be fresh filled.

That now is just the time for trying your new Shooting-boots, and persuading them, by gentle ambulation in the Park, to adapt their creases neatly to the contour of your feet.

That you may absent yourself from your seat in Church, without a tremble lest your neighbours should take notice of the fact.

That your Club is all your own now (if the painters be not in it), and you may read the papers leisurely, and lay your legs up cosily, and even take your forty winks without a chance of interruption.

That, though your Wife perhaps may grumble at being kept in Town without a soul to speak to, the novelty of such a solitude is really not unpleasing to the meditative mind.

That you never need be dull while you have your tradesmen near you, who, for dearth of other customers, will welcome you most heartily, and lend you their ears cheerfully whenever you drop in.

That if you want a joint cut after your own fashion, you will find your butcher most willing to oblige you, and to throw you in a sweetbread gratis just to turn the scale.

That you can get a chair now in the Park without a scramble for it, or may ride along the Row at any pace you please.

That you can pass by MESSRS. CHRISTIE'S without running any risk of being tempted there to bid for something which you well know that you can't afford to buy.

That, if your tailor comes to see you about that small account, you may relax your mind by having a few minutes' conversation with him, and hardly need apologise for taking up his time.

That, should you desire to see the Lions fed, you need not fear the crowd, nor be nervously afraid that you may have your pocket picked.

That you may practise small economies by wearing your old clothes and riding outside omnibuses, without offending MRS. GRUNDY—who, of course, is out of Town now.

That, when your hair wants cutting, you can get it done directly, and need not waste your time and temper by waiting to take your turn while the Artist operates on preceding patients.

That even so-called quiet streets are really quiet in the autumn, for all the blaring bands and barrel-organs are gone to the Sea-side.

That when the Tax Collector calls—strange though it may seem—you are not sorry to see him, if merely for the sake of seeing somebody you know.

If by good luck you chance to find a friend still left in Town, what a capital good fellow you find him to be! and what unsuspected virtues you discover in his character, especially if he insists upon your dining twice a week with him, and you have previously tested the merits of his Cook.

And, in conclusion, that as to all the rest of your acquaintances, you will probably learn that you get on very well without them; though you will also very probably be vastly glad to see them when they return to Town.

Digitized by Google

HELPS OF A HIGHER KIND.

SCENE—The Domestic Board after Dinner. PATERFAMILIAS, DAUGHTERS, and UNCLE.

Daughters. What nice weather this would be for the sea-side, Papa!

Paterfamilias. H'm! How nice it has been for the harvest, and the British Association.

First Daughter. And so like it. So dry.

Uncle. Well, this time the Association was, perhaps, a little drier than usual. But you should read MRS. CRAWSHAY'S paper on "Lady Helps." That might interest even you.

Paterfamilias. Will her plan ever answer?

Uncle. Not as it ought to, I am afraid. Not among the higher classes.

Paterfamilias. Why?

Uncle. It requires the Lady of the House personally to work it out. She won't, unless she has a very exceptional taste for doing good. Too much trouble. But poor gentlefolks might manage it, if they chose.

Paterfamilias. How?

Uncle. By having Lady Helps, who would be helps in reality, helping the young ladies of the family do the household work, all of it—no common servants being kept at all.

A Daughter. What, help clean knives and forks?

Uncle. Yes, my dear, and boots and shoes; scrub floors, wash plates and dishes; perform all the offices of maids-of-all-work, cooks, kitchen-maids, and scullions.

Daughters. O, Uncle!

Uncle. O! Yes. O! I know. Non possumus, as the POPE says. But in poor genteel families Lady Helps could hardly expect any wages. They would have to accept association with the family on equal terms, and board, as sufficient consideration.

Paterfamilias. Common servants are better off in their way than that.

Uncle. Considerably. But there are people, rich people, who could well enough afford good wages—if they were only inclined to put the "Lady Helps" scheme in practice.

Paterfamilias. What sort?

Uncle. Uneducated people; persons of low origin who have grown wealthy. Any of them, capable of treating poor ladies with proper respect, might derive a double advantage from Lady Helps. In addition to getting the work of servants faithfully done, boots and shoes, for instance, thoroughly well cleaned, they might acquire a degree of polish themselves by habitual intercourse with persons of higher culture than their own.

Paterfamilias. A benefit for them, indeed.

Uncle. Their children, too, by conversing with Lady Helps, would unlearn dropping their aitches—just as, on the contrary, you know, little boys and girls usually learn from common servants to talk bad English.

Daughter. O, Uncle, how can you!

Paterfamilias. I wish the project could be brought to bear. Anything to save girls from the necessity of marrying merely to live.

A Daughter. That must be a sad life for them.

Uncle. Yes. Still sadder for their husbands.

Paterfamilias. Eh? I say. Mightn't there be Gentleman Helps, too?

Uncle. Certainly. We know—and I am sure you girls know—numbers of young gentlemen who are exactly fit to be Helps. They are sons of small gentry or professional men. They inherit neither property nor brains. Are perfectly honest, obliging, and civil, but utterly incapable of learning enough to enable them to pass any examination. All the higher walks of life are as completely closed to them as to women; and they loaf about at home with nothing to do but smoke short pipes, stupefying the moderate intellect they possess. But nature has admirably adapted them to be valets, footmen, butlers, buttonses, grooms, and coachmen—especially grooms and coachmen; for they mostly do know how to ride and drive. Were Gentleman Helps practicable, then youths might be rescued from a life of idleness, and, in helping others, also in some measure get to help themselves.

Paterfamilias. Eh, now, after that discourse, practise your preaching. Help yourself, and pass the wine. And let us drink—"The Dignity of Domestic Service." Paterfamilias, at any rate, can appreciate the endeavour to promote it which has been made at Cyfartha.

Tear'em Complimentary.

"We are a polished people."—MR. ROEBUCK'S Speech at the Master Cutlers' Feast.

AND what should Sheffield Blades be, but polished?

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

Astronomical Tables.—Our designs for these will, we feel sure, be praised up to the skies. They can be specially ordered, and will be adapted, according to the order received, to the use of stars of the first magnitude. We impartially advise MESDAMES NILSSON, PATTI, TITJENS, and the other operatic stars, to inspect our Catalogue.

The one idea of increasing a table has hitherto been to split it up into leaves. These leaves, being invariably brown, or some dull colour, give the table an autumnal appearance, far from exhilarating. Our design for a Sunflower Table, without leaves, meets every possible contingency, and overcomes all difficulties.

N.B.—To carry out our magnificent designs, we have already rented a large space in a well-known table-land. The address, for various reasons, cannot be published at present.

The Tea Table ought in every way to carry out its name. Nothing for simplicity can compare with the accompanying illustration:—

In houses where green and black teas are mixed, in obedience to the rule "always cross your teas," it will be as well to have another sort of table in use. But, really, if you trust to us, you can't have too many of these tables [designed at our place, patentea'd and sold only by US.]

This symbolises the mixture abovementioned, and is called the Cross'd Tea Table.

There can be no possible doubt that much space is wasted in our rooms, while much space is inconveniently occupied. Thus, what are legs of tables, as a rule, but difficulties in the way of our own legs? "I beg your pardon, is that your leg or the leg of the table?" is a common question. The situation is most awkward. But if there were no legs—if all tables were what we shall henceforth term (having patented the name) "Biffin Tables," the difficulty would be cut away from under our feet.

It is evident that guests round a table are not likely to knock their heads together: heads have eyes: legs have not.

Digitized by Google

The space above the table is free and unoccupied. I do not say, let us put our legs on the table; no, but let us, in the interests of Decorative Art, and in the name of all that is commonly sensible in furnishing, utilise this vacant space, and let us either support the table by four strong wires from the centre of the ceiling attached to the centre of the table, or by the same number of wires fixed to the four corners.

The wires can be golden-coloured or silver; or they may be as chains of flowers supporting the banqueting table. Or, if another plan be adopted, a handsomely carved brass rod, of bed-post circumference, could descend from the ceiling to the centre, representing the trunk of a tree, while the branches would serve for light, and the effect would be what is expressed in the additional title, the "Picnicky Biffin Table."

(To be continued.)

THE GUIDE OF THE CYNICAL TOURIST.

Compiled by SIR CHARLES COLDSTREAM, Second Baronet.

Aberystwith.—Chief occupation of visitors—pebble collecting. Here they speak Welsh, and dine at one o'clock. Principal attraction—the Atlantic Ocean, which, at this point of its career, is strongly suggestive of the River Thames off Gravesend.

Boulogne.—Rather more English than Ramsgate. Bathing on the sands, with the occasional use of a Tidal Wave. Bone-breaking and other attractions on the Skating-rink. Port odorifĕrant three P.M.

Cologne.—Sights limited—drains unlimited. To prevent any unpleasantness, it is as well to remind travellers that, strange to say, killing a Cathedral Commissionnaire is considered murder, and not justifiable homicide.

Dieppe.—French watering-place of the usual character. Sun-dresses and chatter. The Casino will be found an excellent cage for jackdaws and parrots.

Exeter.—Should only be seen from the window of a railway-carriage. Enemies may be recommended to visit this City, with the certainty of vengeance.

Folkestone.—Dear and dull. During the calm weather, even the Boulogne Boat loses its attraction, except when Frenchmen are on board.

Geneva.—Brussels is a bad imitation of Paris, and Geneva is a worse imitation of Brussels. Mont Blanc is sometimes on view—when on view, Mont Blanc is uninteresting.

Hastings.—Pronounced by many of its visitors 'Astings.

Interlachen.—Decidedly slow. Cockney accessories prominent and unpleasant. Jung Frau in the sunset—rather "loudly" dressed. Scenery—overdone.

Jersey.—Better than Guernsey, but not to be compared with Southend.

Knightsbridge.—Near the Park and the Barracks. Capital place at this season of the year. No one there!

Lucerne.—Table d'hôte at the Schwerzerhof Fair. This meal consumes about one hundred and twenty minutes—the remaining two-and-twenty hours of the day will be found excessively depressing.

Margate.—Several cheap excursions daily from London!

Naples.—After you have seen the Bay, take the advice of the natives, and die. You will have nothing else to do.

Ouchy.—Music and mist. The Lake monotonous. Company genteel, and the Sunday Scotch.

Paris.—At this time of the year an excellent place for old melodramas, dear hotels, and sun-strokes. French spoken on the Boulevards, near the Palais Royal, and in the Rue de Rivoli, as at the best finishing schools of Clapham and Putney. Costumes of the visitors quaint and unpicturesque.

Quebec.—Comparatively new. When the electric telegraph is brought to perfection, you may spend an afternoon in travelling to Canada and back with some amusement. At present the trip is rather impracticable, unless you are passionately fond of ballooning.

Ryde.—Would possibly be a very pleasant place indeed were it not for the yachts, the sea, and "the Island."

Scarborough.—The Margate of the North. Much patronised by Birmingham, Sheffield, and Lower Tooting.

Tunbridge Wells.—Good place for Cemeteries. The decease of Her late lamented Majesty QUEEN ANNE accepted here as news.

Uxbridge.—Capital spot to drive a coach to—and back again.

Venice.—Damp.

Waterloo.—Place to be carefully avoided by patriotic Britons staying at Brussels.

X.—A sign signifying the unknown. A splendid place, if you could only find it.

Yarmouth.—Cheerful town for people who live entirely upon bloaters.

Zurich.—Go to Zurich, and be happy. Don't go to Zurich, and be happier still.

N.B.—Mr. Punch wishes it to be clearly understood that he has no sort of sympathy with the rather extreme views of his "used up" contributor.

AUCTUMNALIA.

AY, the gay time is here,
Sweetest of all the year,
Cool be the bitter beer,
Straight be the cartridge.
Session and season o'er,
Girl-flirt and Statesman-bore,
Seek we the joyous shore,
Worship Saint Partridge.

HORACE, that demirep
(Known as a fifth form step),
Sang of the quiet Septembribus horis:
And it appears to me,
Even by land or sea,
This month must surely be
Mensis a moris.

Yes, when the toil is o'er,
When we forget the bore,
Then, by some happy shore,
Quiet the pulse is:
Far from the City's fuss
Bright eyes rain joy on us,
Deep woods are glorious—
Latebræ dulces.

D., who would catch the tide,
G., with his notions wide,
Each is temporicide—
Time's reckless murderer:
Past now; the moon is bright
O'er sea and sand to-night;
Lady, with dainty sleight,
Ice me the Rœderer.

Confound their politics!
Plague on their knavish tricks!
Doubtless, in Seventy-Six,
Stalks some fresh spectre in.
But 'tis September now;
Far off be any row;
Sea-breezes cool my brow—
Hand me a nectarine.

BUTTER AND BEEF SUET.

A CONTEMPORARY informs us in an advertisement that there is—

WANTED, eight miles from Town, a respectable, middle-aged Woman, R.C., as GENERAL SERVANT, to wash for four in family, and make butter of two Cows.

Most people will flatter themselves that they have never tasted butter made of Cows. But does not adulteration render it too true that a very considerable quantity of the butter sold in the shops is made of Oxen?

A Hint in Season.

REMEMBER, remember,
The month of September—
Partridges, rabbits, and hares:
Any hamper you send,
My breech-loading friend,
Put "Paid" on the label it bears.

Digitized by Google

O FLATTERY, THY NAME IS FRENCHWOMAN!

JOHN HENRY JONES THINKS HE WILL DO A LITTLE BIT OF MARKETING FOR HIMSELF, AND ASKS THE PRICE OF TOMATOES. WITH A KILLING GLANCE AND A WINNING SMILE, THE VENDOR REPLIES THAT FOR HIM THEY WILL BE A FRANC APIECE, BUT THAT HE MUSTN'T MENTION IT. THE MODEST J. H. J. BLUSHES, AND BUYS, IN SPITE OF SOME MISGIVING THAT FOR ANYBODY ELSE THEY WOULD BE ABOUT SIXPENCE A DOZEN.

ON THE SPOT.

SHALL we like Pierpoint, to which favourite and healthy seaside resort we finally resolved to come, after a period of much indecision and uncertainty, and where we arrived, in heavy rain, in two cabs, with thirteen packages, on Saturday?

Shall we be comfortable at 62, Convolution Street, dining-room floor, two guineas and a half a week, and all and perhaps rather more than the usual extras?

Shall we like MRS. KITTLESPARK?

Shall we find KATE all that a KATE ought to be?

Shall we look everything up, or repose a noble confidence in MRS. KITTLESPARK and KATE?

Shall we get to know the people in the drawing-room?

Shall we subscribe to the Pier, or pay each time we go on it?

Shall we subscribe to that most accommodating Circulating Library, PIGRAM'S, where we can exchange our books at pleasure, but not oftener than once a day?

Shall we relax our minds with the newest novels, or give our intellects a bracing course of the best standard works?

Shall we dine late or early?

Shall we call on the DENBIGH FLINTS, who, according to the Pierpoint Pioneer, are staying at 10, Ocean Crescent?

Shall we carefully avoid the WILKIESONS, whom the same unerring guide reports at 33, Blue Lion Street?

Shall we be satisfied with our first weekly bill?

Shall we find in it any unexpected and novel extras, such as knife-cleaning, proportion of the water-rate, loan of latch-key, &c.?

Shall we get our meat at ROUND'S, who displays the PRINCE OF WALES'S Feathers over his shop-door, and plumes himself on being "purveyor" to His Royal Highness; or at CLEAVER'S, who boasts of the patronage of the Hereditary GRAND DUKE OF SELTERSLAND?

Shall we find everything dearer here than it is at home?

Shall we be happy in our laundress?

Shall we be photographed?

Shall we, as MRS. KITTLESPARK has a spare bed-room, invite our Cousin AMELIA STATTHORP, from whom we have expectations, and who is CONSTANCE EDITH AMELIA'S Godmother, to come down and stay a week with us?

Shall we be praiseworthily economical, and determine not to spend a single unnecessary sixpence; or shall we, as we have come to Pierpoint, enjoy ourselves to the utmost, go in for all the amusements of the place—pier, public gardens, theatre, concerts, Oceanarium, bathing, boating, fishing, driving, riding, and rinking—make excursions, be ostentatiously liberal to the Town Band, and buy everything that is offered to us on the Beach?

A month hence, shall we be glad or sorry to leave Pierpoint, and go back to Paddington?

Extra-Parliamentary Utterance.

(From a Hughenden Hammock.)

WHERE the tree rooks, there rook I,
Far from question or reply;
Silent still when owls do cry,
Extra-Parliamentary.
East or West, canards may fly,
Out of duck-shot here I lie,
After Session, sleepily.
Dizzily, dizzily, leave me to drowse,
Under the shadow of Hughenden boughs!

£1000 Reward!

WHAT is the object of the subscription for CAPTAIN WEBB? Only to reward merit. It surely cannot be to keep his head above water. He has shown us that he is able to do this for himself. However, no one knows better than the Hero—or, rather, the Leander—of the hour that "There is a tide in the affairs of man, which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune,"—viâ Dover and Calais.

Digitized by Google

"PERMISSIVE" RECREATION.

"DIZZILY, DIZZILY, LEAVE ME TO DROWSE,
UNDER THE SHADOW OF HUGHENDEN BOUGHS!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PIETY AND POLICY;

OR, PASSING WORDS WITH A PILGRIM.

He'd a very keen eye and a fair double chin,
And the set of his lips was more sly than demure.
"Whither bound?" we inquired. With an affable grin,
He replied, "On a Pilgrimage, friend, to be sure!
Out of date? Not at all! 'Tis a day of revivals;
Time's clock is turned backwards, the POPE holds the key.
The Palmers of old have their latter-day rivals,
Well fugled by PIUS, GRAF STOLBERG, and Me!

"Who am I? Well—ahem!—I'm incog. for the nonce;
But I'm very well known, though I'm not to be named.
I used to wield sceptre and crosier once,
And—well, well, we shall see! Pious zeal is inflamed
For the Paray-le-Monial Nun. We're supplied
With badge and with banner, with legend and motto.
In honour of her—it must fill her with pride!—
We are off on a pilgrimage now to her grotto.

"Cui bono? Good friend, time would fail me to mention
The gains to be looked for, there's such a variety;
'Twill keep us en évidence, stir up contention,
And give a fresh fillip to Catholic piety.
Sauvez Rome et la France! A good cry, and we hope
It may help to put BISMARCK—the brute!—in a panic.
He's had rather the pull in some rounds with the POPE,
But we'll play off the Gallic against the Germanic,

"And checkmate him yet. We've the POPE's special blessing;
The fair Teuton fraülleins have broidered our banner;
So I think, on the whole, we're—for tyros—progressing
In a pleasant and highly professional manner.
No need for sore penance, or peas in our shoes;
Such stuff is, of course, obsolete and absurd;
No civilised comforts we're called to refuse,
While en route for the shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes!

"Notre Dame des Victoires!—a nice rendezvous surely
For patriot Teutons who never could plot to Set Faith against Fatherland! Piety purely Inspires them. O yes! Thy miraculous grotto,
MARIE ALACOQUE, is a godsend indeed
For a Pontiff sore put to it. Hope sweetly sings
That the new Holy Pantomime's bound to succeed
Since the Pilgrims are puppets, the POPE pulls the strings.

"Vive the Virgin of Lourdes, and hurrah for the road!—
Of the Pilgrims, I mean—we are dropping the leaven.
Processional piety, quite à la mode,
Must further the views of the Vicar of Heaven.
Farewell! I 'fall in'!" He adjusted his cloak
And his face, till he looked like a Saint orthodox;
None had dreamed that a sinister smile ever broke
O'er the lips of this latter-day Reynard the FOX!

HOPPING IN KENT—UNRIVALLED FEAT.—The other day, a Kentish labourer took one hop from Faversham to Canterbury. He is none the worse, and backs himself to repeat it on the first opportunity.

TRIPS FOR TRIPPERS.

(Seasonable Hints for Vacation Voyageurs.)

AT Deal. Deal is not only unfinished, it is hardly commenced. It is a charming place for a Tripper, but for anybody who aspires to be more than a Tripper,—well, this carefully-compiled Guide is not "for the likes of him." A Tripper should never be caught tripping,—and this he might be if he once ceased the rotary or merry-go-round-the-world movement, and became, what the celebrated bad oyster was, and what a "welcher" never is, a settler.

There is a new terrace at Deal—but it is new; and the road is new; and, as the song used to say, "Wait a little longer."

But, per contra, there is a first-rate pier, with a tramway (price one penny) right up to the end of it; and at the end of it there are baths, as good as you'll find anywhere; and the Deal Band can come out there strong on occasions, pretending to be Brighton—at a distance. Though, as to saying a word in favour of Brighton, now-a-days, be that far from this Guide, which seeks to introduce the Tripper to cheerful, but comparatively quiet, places, where London-over-again is less an object than a pleasant lounge on a beach, a walk on the sands, and sufficient amusement within reach, if you feel inclined for it.

Sailing, bathing (not very great), lounging on beach under shadow of an awning (an excellent idea of a spirited proprietor—on spec), rowing, piering, sailing, and plenty of fishing,—these are the recreations of Deal.

The Tripper will go over to Walmer Castle, and visit Richborough, which belies its name, being, apparently, a Poor-borough. However, the Guide-book purchased on the spot will tell you all this, and time is getting on, the Long Vacation will be over, and the undecided man will not have left London, unless this Guide becomes his familiar friend, and tells him where to go.

From Deal to Dover by Coach.—Yoicks! tantivy! tallyho! and any other sporting ejaculation inspired by the sound and sight of the word "Coach"—that is, as a means of conveyance, not as it sounds to Undergraduates' ears, who would only connect coach with cram. And, by the way, on most occasions, the Coach from Deal to Dover is connected, very closely connected, with cram. It is usually crammed inside and crammed outside, and the weakest are left behind in the struggle for places—for "booking" is a mere form with the proprietor of the Deal and Dover Coach. How the luggage is managed, the Proprietor and Providence (who most assuredly watches over him) only know. How ten people manage, on an emergency, to squeeze into space which is a tight fit for six, Providence may know, the Proprietor doesn't. But here it is advertised, in large letters over the office-door, with two "o's" in Dover, either because that is the way to spell it, or because the Printer was out of the letter E. So the Tripper will read, staring him in the face—and will ascertain, on inquiry, that it starts from that office.

"THE DOVOR COACH,"

Ah, my Trippers! Imagine a neatly appointed turn-out, buff and blue, or dark maroon, drawn by four greys, richly caparisoned, with chinking bits and burnished buckles, tight reins, roses in their ears, knowing leaders, strong, hard-working, but sprightly wheelers—imagine the Coachman in his long white coat, with pockets in every possible place, and a flap over his shoulder to protect him from rain, airily flicking a fly off the leader's ear with his long whip, and tooling the "tits" with a dexterous turn of the wrist and the slightest movement of the left foot on the foot-board, as they whisk round a right-angled corner—imagine the Guard, in scarlet and gold, perched up behind, guarding the bags, beguiling the passengers with his stories of the road, and occasionally awaking the echoes with his post-horn—imagine all this, and anything sporting the Tripper likes to add to the picture;—for, when he sees the reality, the ideal will vanish, "leaving not a wrack behind," except the "Dovor Coach" as it really is, viz., a second-rate ordinary omnibus, with a knife-board outside, and a couple of steady useful animals to draw it from Deal to Dover.

Montez, Messieurs les Trippers, montez! En route!

A Palace for the Parisians.

THE deliberations of the Committee appointed by the Versailles Parliament to consider what should be done with the remains of the Tuileries, have resulted in a report, drawn up by M. MONNET, recommending a faithful restoration of the external features of the building, but mentioning the circumstance that—

"M. GLAIS BIZOIN proposes that it should be the vestibule of an immense glass building, exceeding the Crystal Palace in splendour and utility."

It is obvious to the meanest capacity that this idea of M. GLAIS BIZOIN is worthy of a master—glazier.

Digitized by Google

EXCESS A FAULT.

"LA POLITESSE" CAN BE CARRIED TOO FAR, EVEN AMONG THE POLITEST PEOPLE IN THE WORLD—FOR INSTANCE, IT CAN BE CARRIED RIGHT ACROSS THE PAVEMENT, SO AS TO STOP THE WAY.

Digitized by Google

ROMANCE OF THE KITCHEN.

Cook (from the Area). "O, 'LIZA, GI' ME MY WINIGRETTE—I 'VE 'AD A—OFFER—FROM THE DUSTMAN!!"

"WHERE SHALL WE GO?"

AMANDUS exclaims to AMANDA,
When Roses are richest in bloom,
And Clematis climbs the verandah,
And full is the air of perfume,
"To go out of Town in September
Is an absolute duty, I know:
I 've done it since first I remember—
But, where shall we go?

"I don't care for Alps in hot weather;
Hill-climbing don't suit men of nous;
Very pleasant a tramp through the heather,
But scarce, as I hear, are the grouse:
Iceland sounds nice and cool, but they say it
Is turning to lava and snow,
Since volcanos and earthquakes betray it:
So, where shall we go?

"There 's your Uncle, whose partridge and pheasant
Uncommon good shooting afford;
But he potters away on the peasant,
Until one is awfully bored.
When a fellow gets so philanthropic,
They should send him to Hanwell, you know.
I can't stand the horrible topic—
So, where shall we go?

"There 's Trouville and Deauville patrician,
Where fashions in bathing are fine,
And the nymph is a very nude vision,
And it costs you a guinea to dine:
There 's Brighton for fun and flirtation,
The Thames, for a jolly good row:
But I say, with a strange hesitation,
O where shall we go?"

Then AMANDA she said to AMANDUS:
"There must be some corner divine,
Where the countryfolk can't understand us,
And won't charge us double for wine;
Where, escaping from civilised fetters,
We can hear the cool rivulet flow,
And never be bothered with letters—
Aye, there let us go."

LONDON IN SEPTEMBER.

MY DEAR MR. PUNCH, September 4, 1875.

I AM quite sure that you sympathised with me, when I was forced, by circumstances over which I had no control, to refuse your very kind invitation to accompany you and two other "guns" over the stubble on the ever-glorious First. If a proof were needed that your sympathy was sincere, a certain hamper, labelled "Game," received at my solitary lodgings yesterday, afforded the proof required. Your happiness was indeed a contrast to my misery. In my mind's eye on Wednesday I saw you the whole day. First you were blazing away behind the dogs; then, under the cover of a leafy hedge, you were exploring the succulent treasures of the luncheon-basket: then (a few hours later), you were driving merrily home in the dog-cart, so that you might reach the hall in ample time to dress for dinner. Yes, we both of us know that a certain amiable and accomplished hostess likes to see her husband and his guests assembled in the drawing-room before the sounding of the second gong. A pleasant dinner, some claret, a little music, and a pipe in the smoking-room after the ladies had retired. That was your programme, was it not?

And what was I doing on the First? Alas! I was all alone in London the deserted, London the dull! As everybody knows, there is not a soul in Town in September. This year is not an exception to the general rule. As a proof that my assertion is what the French would call "exact," I send you the diary of my day's work.

After breakfast I walked down Regent Street, and could scarcely make my way along the pavement for the crowds of red-cheeked people who blocked the way. Staring into every shop were fathers, mothers, sisters, and brothers.

Driven from Regent Street, I lounged into the Park, and for my pains was deafened with the hearty shouts of a thousand vigorous children. Not satisfied with this cruel outrage, they knocked off my hat with india-rubber balls, and broke my shins with hoops of wood and iron.

Hurried thus from the streets and the gardens, I determined to visit some of the "morning entertainments" which during the Season are so very popular. I looked in upon three, and quickly looked out again, for I found the rooms crammed to suffocation.

"There is evidently nobody in the West End of the Town," I murmured; "then let me try the East."

I walked into the City. I was pushed right and left, and took ten minutes to cross from the Royal Exchange to the Mansion House.

"The East is every bit as empty as the West," I cried, bitterly, and turned my face homewards.

Tired out and weary, I went to my second Club (my first is closed for repairs), and had to wait half an hour for a table. At last I managed to dine, but the meal was not served comfortably. The waiters seemed overworked, and the Members were numerous. However dinner is a great restorative, and I was soon merry and sociable. I met a Club friend.

"You here!" he cried, in surprise.

"You here!" was my very satisfactory answer.

We discussed the dreariness of Town, and after a small cup of coffee, a smaller glass of curaçoa, and a mild cigar, decided that the only thing to be done was to go to the play. We sent out for Stalls, and would you believe it, my dear Mr. Punch, not a single place could be obtained for love or money!

From this letter you will at once gather that London (as is usually the case in September) is unquestionably empty.

Yours very mournfully,
THE LAST MAN LEFT IN TOWN.

The Model Man-of-War.

ABOVE half-a-million of public capital invested in the Vanguard has been added to the Treasures of the Deep. But the money sunk at the bottom of St. George's Channel is not all thrown away. Now we know what to look out for in case of a war. And, seeing that the Iron Duke poked her ram through the mail of the Vanguard, we now clearly discern that all our Ironclads of the future must be of the Punch type.

Digitized by Google

SELF-CONFIDENCE OUT SHOOTING.

Nephew. "JUMP, UNCLE! I'LL CLEAR YOU!"

[But he didn't "clear" him, and old Brown says he'll carry the marks to his grave!

A TEMPERANCE LINER.

A CERTAIN Marine Engineer had his certificate suspended the other day for twelve months, by the Hull Local Marine Board, for drunkenness. He had signed Articles to go from Hull to New York in the Wilson liner Navarino, as Chief Engineer. He got down in a cab to the dock just as the steamer was going out of it. Witnesses declared him to have been so drunk as to be incapable of getting on board. Happily, perhaps, for others as well as himself, he was left behind. But we are not sure. For, according to the proverb, there is a sweet little cherub that sits up aloft to keep watch for the life of drunk JACK—amongst other drunkards. And the crew of the Navarino appear to have been, in respect of sobriety, the mates of their Chief Engineer. The Times, in a paragraph headed "Unseaworthy Sailors," and containing the above particulars, further states that:—

"The vessel left the dock at Hull on Saturday the 29th ult., the bulk of her crew being intoxicated at the time appointed for sailing. One of the sailors fell overboard, owing to his drunken condition, as the vessel passed through the dock lock. Later, whilst she was at anchor in the roads, another of the men jumped overboard, while intoxicated, and was drowned."

It will of course occur to almost every reader that although the Navarino had gone no further than the roads, her crew were already half-seas over. We can only hope that the vessel herself ever got so far as the middle of the Atlantic, and did not, very soon after she left Hull, go down to the bottom of the German Ocean.

Cause and Effect.

"LOUISE LATEAU, according to a letter from Brussels, is again a stigmatist. For some weeks, her sister having kept priests and sightseers aloof, she reverted to normal habits and conditions; but relapsing into a state which led to priestly services being called in, the former symptoms, fasting, trances, and stigmata, have reappeared."

THIS case of miracle (so-called) abroad,
We stigmatise it as a case of fraud.

SCOTTICISM AND WUTTICISM.

A PUBLIC-SPIRITED act of an ornament to the Scottish Peerage has received a due acknowledgment from grateful citizens. Witness the annexed paragraph in the Times respecting—

"THE EARL OF AIRLIE.—At a meeting of the Dundee Town Council yesterday, it was unanimously resolved to confer the freedom of the burgh on the EARL OF AIRLIE, in recognition of his generous assistance to procure a new water-supply for the town."

This resolution having been voted by the Dundee Municipality, there is too much reason to fear that more than one Member of that corporate but national body took occasion facetiously to remark that "it 's aye the Airlie bird that picks up the worm."

PERFECT BEINGS.

"Wings are very much worn as ornaments."—Le Follet for September.

WE'VE all of us heard it,
And most of us said it,
And even the sceptic
Must now give it credit—
I mean the belief
Universally rife,
That women are angels,
Maid, widow, and wife;
But one thing was wanting
To make them en suite—
The wings, which they're wearing,
So now they 're complete.

[Some tiresomely accurate person insists that the "Wings" are worn on the hats, not on the shoulders,—but this is a mere detail.]

Change of Name.

(For the Scene of the late fatal Railway Collision near Bradford.)

FOR Kildwick read Killed-quick Station.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.—A "Lover of Equity" desires to enter his protest against the fusion of Chancery with Common Law.

Digitized by Google

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dilkitanty Society.

IT may be objected that my designs are impossible except for millionnaires. Quite the contrary. I am prepared to furnish anybody and everybody with a hundred varied designs equally adapted to the peer or the pauper, the private house or the public-house, the palace or the pavilion, the homestead, the hut, or the hovel.

N.B.—The present writer has turned his attention largely to Hovels. Hovels furnished entire on the most reasonable terms, and taken to any part of the kingdom.

N.B.—All builders of Castles in the Air I am able to furnish with ideas—at a moderate charge. As the patient says, who is going through the system of Harrogate or Aix waters, "A considerable reduction made on taking a quantity."

The Hall.—The Hall, where you leave your hats, should be paved with tiles. This is what is termed "corresponding affinity" in decorative art.

A School-Room.—A School-room should be furnished exclusively with cane chairs. A boy inclined to be obstreperous will be reminded of the fate in store for him when told to seat himself in one of these chairs.

The Drawing-room should be as attractive as the magnet; for a drawing-room is a room which, like a successful piece, draws. There should be in it several cabinets or chiffoniers (called in Lodging-house English "sheffyneers"), because these are full of drawers.

These are general notes which may be of some use to my readers.

It is a great pity that the principle of Pantomime tricks has not been introduced into furniture. Why should we avoid the Pantomimic in one art when we have adopted it in another? Why reject in furnishing what we jump into in clothing? At one time no well-dressed gentleman was without a pair of pantaloons, and the French tailor still has the "pantalon" on his list. Again, in the garden, the most jealous and the strictest of housewives would not object to seeing her husband utilising his leisure hours by training

Columbines. While, in some instances, when the landlord took an interest in the cottage of his ploughboys and other yokels, he might, like a fine Old English Gentleman, make them a present of half a dozen Columbines apiece, and let the clowns themselves train them up in the way they should go.

This is no digression, but merely a note or two on the road to the application of the Pantomimic Principle on furnishing.

(To be continued.)

A Nominal Euphemism.

AT Bow Street, the other day, a prisoner was committed for trial on a charge of theft. He was named JOHN SHOESMITH, but had at one time gone under the name of DUVAL, and many different names. Of all the aliases MR. SHOESMITH could have selected, the most appropriate one would surely have been COBBLER.

Digitized by Google

OUR MAID-SERVANTS.

Mistress (opening Post-Bag). "FOURTEEN LETTERS FOR YOU AGAIN TO-DAY, MARY! I CAN'T UNDERSTAND IT."

Mary. "WELL, MA'AM, I OUGHT TO HAVE GIVE YOU NOTICE, BUT I HADVERTISED. YOU SEE HOW GOOD SERVANTS IS SOUGHT AFTER."

UP OR DOWN?

WHITHER, lovely Lady, say?
Up or down the Thames to-day?
See, the great stream glistens:
Just to hear what we betray
Silently it listens.

Richmond Hill, where nightingales
Tell the ancient passionate tales
Full of love's emotion?
Greenwich, with a thousand sails
To and from the Ocean?

Everywhere the river-marge
Hath its beauty—tardy barge,
Steam-launch fast and fretful.
Whither shall we roam at large,
Carelessly forgetful?

Whether up or down we went,
How those magic hours we spent,
Ask: I cannot answer.
One there was who gave content—
Love, th' Oneiromancer.

Note by Mr. Punch.

Wise, O rhymer, 'mid the strife,
'Mid the Ups and Downs of life,
This your pleasant bias.
Still I fear, upon my life,
'Tis but ὄναρ σκιᾶς.

Rationalism and the Reverse.

PROTESTANTISM, CARDINAL MANNING has told us at Manchester, ends in Rationalism. But has not Roman Catholicism, a good deal of it, in the land of VOLTAIRE, and other "Latin Races" than the French, made the same end? Still, to some extent, no doubt, it has ended in the reverse of rationality. Few reasonable persons will deny that the doctrine of Papal Infallibility and the legend of MARIE ALACOCQUE, are entirely contrary to reason. However, people who profess belief in absurdities are not always so unwise as they seem. If CARDINAL MANNING will only try to analyse his own thoughts, perhaps he will discover that a man can at most only believe that he believes in propositions which express not any ideas that are conceivable, and in dogmas which he has swallowed whole without first having chewed them.

OUR REPRESENTATIVE MAN.

(One Evening in Town en route.)

SIR,—No one, at this out-of-town Season of the year, would dream of representing You in London, except en passant. Having to leave the grouse in the North in order to join my yacht in the South (this is, of course, what I say to anyone I meet in Town) it occurred to me that London would be an excellent via media.

"To think, with me, is to do," as JULIUS CÆSAR said, on the celebrated occasion when——but as this ought to be known to every schoolboy, I will not pause for the historical details.

"Take me," said I to the Cabman, whose emotion on seeing me arrive was most touching to witness, "take me to mine Inn, the 'Bedford,' Covent Garden, where I take mine ease. Away!"

The Cabman touched his hat. It was a sign that I had touched his heart.

By the way, is there no voice that can make itself heard about the disgraceful state of Covent Garden Market? Of this another time. For the present, passons.

What was to be my evening's amusement?

Sir, Your Representative unhesitatingly chose The Shaugraun; first, because I hadn't an idea what the word meant; and, secondly, because a Sensational Drama is, to my mind, the easiest way of being amused without any mental effort,—a strong recommendation for hot weather. A Drama finds more employment for the eyes than the ears, and an Irish Drama by MR. BOUCICAULT would be sure to be full of sensational situations, with a relief of Irish fun. This being settled, it occurred to Your Representative that, at this time of year, when no one is in Town, he would be able to have his pick of tables, and the very cream of the menu to himself, at the now famous Holborn Restaurant. I lounged in. "Can't have a table, Sir, for another quarter of an hour," said the most civil and obliging of Managers, "unless you wouldn't mind going into the hot room!" He seemed to imagine I wanted a Turkish Bath. But the place was crammed. "London is here!" exclaimed Your Representative, to himself. Then a Happy Thought occurred to him: London is empty—so am I; therefore, we both come here. After dinner, London will be full—so shall I be.

"Garçon, le menu!" Bring me "Purée à la Tomate," and "Côtelettes à la Cardinal" (evidently His Eminence's idea of what 's good—à votre santé, MONSEIGNEUR MANNING!), while the melodious band discourses for me La Gazza Ladra, and that delight of the waltzers, known as La Manola. Now the fragrant cup of coffee, and the cigar (here, at a certain time, you can light up, without quitting the table,—a great luxury to the after-dinner smoker), and then, all hail McHansom and to Old Drury, to see Her Majesty's Servants perform The Shaugraun.

Heavens! London empty! Well, if London be empty by this time of the evening, it must be because Drury Lane is full.

In a stall chair I sat and saw the lately produced Irish Drama.

"'Time writes no wrinkle on thy brow,' MRS. BOUCICAULT," observed Your Representative to himself, on seeing the most charming and perfect delineation of the Irish Maiden trip on to the stage as comely, as neatly-ancle'd, as bright, as bewitching as ever she was as Arrah-na-Pogue or the Colleen Bawn. "And Time puts you up to a good many dramatic wrinkles, MR. BOUCICAULT," was my next observation, as the piece proceeded. It was all good; all admirably put together; slow in parts; very little new from beginning to end, not even the perpetual mention of the faithful dog Tatters, who, without being either heard or seen throughout the piece, raises the same kind of interest in his behalf as was felt for "Mein tog Schneider," when MR. JEFFERSON played Rip Van Winkle. The Irish Wake was a novelty, and the Scene a good one. In spite of the heat, there was no doubt as to the enthusiasm of the audience, from the first row of the Stalls up to the Sixpenny Gallery, and assuredly no doubt as to the success of the piece, in which MR. BEVERLEY's scenery was no small ingredient.

It was over at 10·30, as all principal pieces should be in these early closing days, and Your Representative was able to step into the Promenade of Covent Garden, see HERR JOSEF GUNG'L conduct one of his own waltzes, and hear the new cornet-à-piston player, who, on my arrival, seemed to be having a nice blow-out.

Digitized by Google

One can't be in "more than two places at once," but altogether this was not bad as an evening, en passant, for

YOUR REPRESENTATIVE.

A PIS ALLER.

(See last Number.)

THEN AMANDUS exclaimed to AMANDA,
"I think I have hit the right track,
Let us hurry away to the Forest—
I don't mean the New, but the Black.
To get out of Town in September
Is always a pleasure, I know,
And that Forest how well I remember—
In days long ago!

"'Tis a place where you're quite clear of tourists—
Of the terrible COOK and his band!
Who swarm elsewhere like locusts in Egypt,
And eat up the fat of the land.
There living is cheaper and better
Than in most other forests I know;
Yes! that Forest's the place of all others
To which one should go.

"There the traveller meets with innkeepers,
Who of honesty still have a share,
And don't think that because you are English,
To cheat you is perfectly fair.
Who really seem glad to see you,
And civil—though prices are low;
And whose bills do not always want checking,
As when elsewhere we go.

"You may wander in beautiful valleys,
Refreshed by the cool water's flow,
With the pine forest murmuring above you,
And the rivulet babbling below.
They've no waterfalls lit up to bore you,
Like that dreadful Swiss Staubbach and Co.;
One is free to see just what one likes to—
O say, will you go?"

Then AMANDA replied to AMANDUS,
"Call a Hansom, and let us away,
For London grows dustier, drearier,
And stuffier, day after day;
You have not a Club fit to dine in,
I've not a soul left that I know;
No Black Forest on earth can be duller—
So do let us go!"

DISTINCTION—WITH A DIFFERENCE.

SAID MR. ROEBUCK the other day, by way of something sharp to suit the blades of Sheffield,—

"There is no nation in the world so distinguished as England by a House of Commons."

Collectively, we brag of our "Collective Wisdom," yet our M.P.'s are not all wise, regarded individually. So we may call our House of Commons "distinguished" if we like, but we can scarce apply that epithet (at least, by way of compliment) to certain of its Members. For instance, the Member for Stoke is a distinguished man, no doubt, but few of his fellow Members would covet his distinction. So the Member for Peterborough likewise is distinguished—but we will not attempt to say for what he is esteemed to be so. MR. BIGGAR, too, has made himself distinguished this last Session, though, perhaps, not in a manner that most persons would think enviable. And not to prolong the list, MR. DRAX, M.P. for Wareham, may also claim to rank among our Members of distinction. He is distinguished as the man who is destroying CÆSAR'S Camp, in spite of the appeals which have been made both to his pocket and his patriotism.

SIGNS OF SWEETNESS.

NOW-A-DAYS we defy augury. We have renounced, at least, that superstition. No alarm will probably be created by the following piece of seasonable intelligence:—

"PORPOISES IN THE THAMES.—During the past fortnight several porpoises have been seen disporting themselves below and above London Bridge. One has been shot near the Cherry Tree Garden landing stage, Rotherhithe, and another was captured near Waterloo Bridge, and the carcase has been exhibited in the neighbourhood of the New Cut. The body of a dead porpoise has for the past week been floating up and down the Thames, to the great annoyance of excursionists in the neighbourhood."

We are not as our forefathers were when, as Old AUBREY notes in his Miscellanies,—

"A little before the death of Oliver Protector, a Whale came into the River Thames and was taken at Greenwich. . . . Foot long. 'Tis said, Oliver was troubled at it."

Nobody would now take the appearance of Porpoises in the Thames to portend that anything was going to happen to anybody. If such visitors may be regarded as ominous, they can only be looked upon as good omens. Perhaps Porpoises seen in the Thames are signs that we shall soon have better fish there—Zoologists, pray pardon the misnomer of calling a Cetacean a fish. They testify to the comparative purification of the Thames. A few years ago, the body of a dead Porpoise in the River would have added little to the annoyance of excursionists on it. Could you, dear friends and fellow-citizens, only contrive duly to dispose of all your sewage, then there might be a river of Middlesex which would resemble a river in Macedon and a river in Monmouth likewise, in the special circumstance that there would be "salmons" not only in two of those fortunate rivers, but in all three.

Ducks and Dripping.

O WHITHER hie, the heat to fly?
Of course a sea-side trip!
Perspiring down we steam from Town,
And dripping take a dip.
To wipe us dry, in vain we try,
For drying makes us drip,
And so again we seek the main,
And strip, and drip, and dip!

No Vegetarian.

BY the composer of an advertisement extracted from the Aberystwyth Observer there is—

WANTED, unfurnished, a small Garden and House, near Aberystwyth, within a mile of the town preferred.—Address ——, Post Office, Aberystwyth.

The want of an unfurnished Garden as well as House, above expressed, may suggest that there are Welsh bulls as well as Irish. It is, however, obvious that anybody who wishes for a Garden without furniture can as little delight in leeks as rejoice in potatoes.

Dear Old England!

THE Sea hath its sharks,
And so hath the land:
They fall on their prey
By shingle and sand;
At Brinesmead or Groyne,
Congerwhinkle and Breeze,
There are ravenous things
In and—out of the Seas.

Jupiter Tonans.

THE Newspapers report that, on the evening of Thursday, a terrific thunderstorm broke over the north of Scotland. Punch does not wonder at it, considering how close the weather has been. Were he a heathen, he should ascribe the thunder and lightning to the awful puns of which he has lately received so many from Scotch correspondents.

Digitized by Google

A DREAM OF THE SEA.

ETHEL, WHO IS NOT TO HAVE A SEA-SIDE TRIP THIS YEAR, DREAMS EVERY NIGHT THAT SHE AND HER MAMMA AND AUNT AND SISTERS SPREAD THEIR SASH-BOWS AND PANNIERS AND FLY AWAY TO THE YELLOW SANDS.

A SEAT OUT OF SESSION.

He. This is better by far than St. Stephens!
She. Indeed, Sir!
"M.P.-rial interests" bow at my shrine?
'Tis more than you once were inclined to concede, Sir!
He. A proud fledgling Senator's dictum,—once mine,—
I beg leave to retract, and make open confession
I've altered my views on the choice of a Seat,
And think, in September, the pleasantest "Session"
Is—one at your feet!

She. Mere flattery!
He. Nay! as the sands of Sahara
Contrasted with these, was the Session gone by
As compared with our causerie here, mia cara.
Alas that such moments so swiftly should fly!
While howl of KENEALY, or wailing of WHALLEY
Will handicap Time, till his wings seem as lead.
But raising laid ghosts is the flattest of folly,—
We'll dream, dear, instead.

She. Of what?
He. Why, of coming events,—that wee finger,
That bright cheek, or anything couleur de rose.
She. 'Tis only the sunset.
He. Well, well, let us linger
And watch out this wonderful day to its close.
Quite cool? May I venture? This nook, I am certain,
Was built for a Nereid's shore-going seat:
It needs but a couch, and a seaweedy curtain,
To make it complete.
Now the Treasury Bench should not tempt me, my NINA,
To quit this snug seat where black care may not bide;
What talk about Trade or the Herzegovina
Is worth one more hour of such eve at your side?

She. An hour? I must go.
He. Now the low beams begin
To gild our sea-grot, would its Nereid be flitting?
To leave it just now would be something like sin,—
So stay, Nymph!

(Left sitting.)

COSTLY EXPERIMENTS.

HER Majesty's Government, having learned that the loss of the Vanguard is considered by the nation "a costly but valuable experiment," are said to be arranging the following "trials," with a view to obtaining information:—

To Test the Endurance of the Travelling Public.—To allow accident after accident to occur on the Railways without taking any steps to fix the criminal responsibilities upon the Companies in fault.

To Test the Popularity of Recruiting for the Militia.—To repeat the experiment made this year in Somersetshire, when a Regiment was kept encamped on marshy ground, in tents half full of water, for a fortnight.

To Test the Good-Nature of the London People.—To allow (as heretofore) all the principal thoroughfares of the Metropolis to be blocked up annually for weeks, that certain officials may have ample leisure to turn their attention to the mending of a gas-pipe or the reconstruction of a water-supply.

To Test the Power of our National Existence.—To allow our Army to remain disorganised, and the ships of our Fleet to be proved dangerous only to one another.

To Test British Prestige in Foreign Parts.—To allow our Flag to be insulted with impunity; to permit, further, our Representatives (in Asia) to be ill-used, and our Ministers (in Europe) to be outwitted.

And, lastly, to Test the Patience of the Nation.—To repeat the half-hearted policy that was the disgrace of last Session.

Digitized by Google

LOSS AND GAIN.

JOHN BULL. "HALF A MILLION O' MONEY GONE TO THE BOTTOM AT ONCE!!!"

MR. PUNCH. "YES, MY DEAR JOHN, IT 'S AN EXPENSIVE EXPERIMENT! BUT NO LIVES WERE LOST, AND NOW WE KNOW WHAT WE 'VE GOT TO TRUST TO!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE FATAL CONTRACT.

(A Warning to Travellers.)

SCENE I.—The Saloon of a Steamship bound from the Port of London to —— (passage two or more days). The Steward discovered discoursing affably with his Subordinate.

Steward (smiling). Soup and biscuit. They will do well for the opening luncheon. A modest refreshment truly, but one that will be pardoned for the sake of the glories of the coming dinner.

Subordinate. Ha, ha, ha! The coming dinner!

Steward. You like the jest!

Subordinate. Right well. It is a merry one—a very merry one! Ha, ha, ha!

Steward (smiling). Well, I confess it lacks not quaintness. But come, we must be serious. Have you prepared the final breakfast—the breakfast that will be eaten at our destination by the thoughtless and unwary?

Subordinate. Ay, ay. That indeed I have.

Steward. 'Tis well, 'tis very well. And now, Boy, back again to deck to whistle away for the kindly storms that will keep our larder sacred. (Exit Subordinate.) Clouds! (looking out of porthole) clouds everywhere. 'Tis well, very well. Ah! I hear the fall of footsteps. The sound denotes the arrival of passengers, with whom I must contract. Ha, ha, ha! But let me dissemble. (Enter Imperfect Sailor and CHARLES, his Friend.) Good morrow, Gentlemen. I am the Steward of this pleasant ship. The journey will be a fine one. You will contract?

Imperfect Sailor. Faith, yes—if I do starve.

Charles (his Friend). Good! very good, indeed!

Steward. You speak truly, Sir—a very merry quip, indeed! Ha, ha, ha! Your pardon, Sir, but you will be the death of me! But you will not starve if you contract with me for your provisions. First, lunch—a slight collation, some simple soup, a broken biscuit, a little cheese and butter, nothing more. And then a good Old English dinner: Salmon, meats of all kinds, fruit pies, nuts, cheese, grapes, plums, pears, and everything you can require.

Imperfect Sailor. A noble meal!

Charles (his Friend). A noble meal, indeed!

Steward. So you will say when you do see it. After dinner a rich meat tea—not devoid of kippered herrings. Supper for those who will. The next morning coffee with the rising sun, to be followed by a glorious breakfast (with fish, meat, and many eggs)—a breakfast worthy of our sires. Another good Old English dinner, and then tea, supper as before. Do you like the picture?

Imperfect Sailor. Much.

Charles (his Friend). Very much, indeed!

Steward. And for all this—a dozen paltry shillings!

Imperfect Sailor. Done with you, Sir Steward.

Charles (his Friend). Ay, indeed—a goodly bargain. I too say done.

Steward. Indeed, fair Sirs, then it would be uncourtly not to echo "done!"

[The contract is signed, and the Imperfect Sailor and CHARLES (his Friend) gaily discuss the lunch—soup and broken biscuits. The Steward regards them with an air of triumph.

SCENE II.—The Same. Off Greenwich.

Imperfect Sailor. This boat appears to breast the waves most bravely. See, a gale is springing up. Already we have weather that old sea-horses, making for Battersea Bridge from Westminster, would call "dirty." Come, good Sir Steward, is dinner ready?

Charles (his Friend). Yes, indeed,—we ask for dinner.

Steward. Anon, fair Sirs, anon. [Exit, smiling.

SCENE III.—The Same. Two hours later.

Steward. Dinner waits, my masters. Salmon—the finest meats—boiled mutton, and white-sauced fowls. Come, and be merry.

Imperfect Sailor (struggling with his emotion). Begone!

Charles (his Friend—ditto). Begone, and quickly!

SCENE IV.—The Same. TIME—The evening of the second day.

Steward. I have called you once to breakfast, twice to dinner, and still you will not come. You are eating nothing. Nay, good my masters, let me urge you to take something—say a tiny piece of good fat ham, cut thickly, and smothered well in large broad beans and savoury melted butter.

Imperfect Sailor (faintly). You torture me! Begone!

Charles (his Friend—very faintly). O dear! O dear!! O dear!!!

SCENE V.—The Same. The Steamer has arrived in Port. Imperfect Sailor and CHARLES (his Friend), having recovered, are seen eating breakfast.

Imperfect Sailor (giving money). Take thy cash, false Steward, for food we did not eat—for phantom dinners and for shadowy teas.

Steward. They were there for you to eat. Why did you not come for them? I own the passage was a rough one, but was that fault mine?

Imperfect Sailor. Fault or no fault, begone! Let us enjoy at least in peace the one poor solitary meal we have been able to eat since leaving London.

Steward. Your pardon, fair Sirs. For this meal we charge you each four shillings extra!

Tableau and Curtain.

WORDS TO THE WISE.

AT this season of the year, when so many of Mr. Punch's friends cross the seas in search of distant lands, "advice to those about to travel" rises to a premium. Under these circumstances, the Greatest Sage of this or any other age jots down a few opinions of more or less value—opinions which must be taken for exactly what they are worth; an unknown quantity. It will be seen by the intelligent that the following advice is tendered with a view to enabling the recipient to avoid what our "lively neighbours" (by the way, they are not particularly "lively" on the Channel) call mal de mer.

Angelina's Advice.—Choose a day for the passage when there is a magnificent sun-set and (insist upon this) a glorious moonlight. Pass the afternoon in reading TENNYSON, and, as the evening star appears, accompanied by the silvery moon, begin to talk softly (after having disposed of Mamma in the Cabin) to EDWIN. In his company, the voyage will prove a very short one.

Mr. Decimal Point, M.P.,'s Advice.—A mere question of figures. Take seventy blue-books, and find out the average of shipwrecks in the summer months and the average of shipwrecks in the winter months. Calculate the proportion of shipwrecks to the vessels (taking care to distinguish between sailing vessels and steamers) leaving the Port of London. Repeat the operation with the other British Ports. Having obtained these figures, be guided by the result, and choose a day for your passage which would seem to warrant you in the belief that the statistics, properly considered, should yield you a fine passage.

Mr. Thomas Nipper's Advice.—Keep it up, Sir, keep it up. Choose any day you please. It don't matter a rap whether it's rough or fine. All you have to do when you come on board is to order the Steward to bring you a brandy and soda. Drink it. Next smoke a pipe. This done, drink a quart bottle of stout. After that take another pipe and another quart bottle of stout. Repeat the remedy every ten minutes until you arrive at Calais, and when you get there you will find yourself quite able to hold your own with the Mossoos who want to examine your luggage.

The Hon. Plantagenet Vagueboy's Advice.—The simplest thing in the world. Tell your Fellow to choose a good thingummy for you, and be careful when you go on board to see that the what-you-may-call-'em is on a line with the thingumbob. Before you turn in, ask for a glass of what-d'ye-call-it (mind you don't take what's-his-name, as it is never good on board ship), and be careful to regulate the—dear me, what is it?—by the—h'm, I had the word only a moment ago. If you make no mistake in carrying out these directions, you are sure to be as right as possible in the very roughest weather.

Mrs. Materfamilias's Advice.—Before going on board, mind you have a good meat tea, and be careful to drink a bottle of champagne. The moment you are in the cabin, put large lumps of ice on your head and lie on your back, eating every now and then a mixture of glycerine, ketchup, and camphor. These remedies were furnished to me by the Family Doctor. I am not altogether sure that I have given them quite correctly.

Mr. Punch's Advice (warranted infallible).—Take all the above remedies, and choose the most comfortable berth in the vessel. Then, if you want to be quite well, come ashore, and allow the steamer to start without you.

Digitized by Google

A LOVELY BURDEN.

Fine Woman. "TENNY—VENNY—PRENNY—PORTY MWAW—COM CET HOM LAR PORT CET LAR FAM!"

AN EARNEST REMONSTRANCE.

"I have almost forgotten myself in the universality of my remarks."—MR. ROEBUCK at Sheffield.

SELF-forgotten? Nay, Tear'em, mellifluous Mentor,
As well might a circle forget its own centre,
The planets lose sight of their sun, or their axes,
Poor PAT of his wrongs, or JOHN BULL of his taxes!
Bethink thee, our ARTHUR, ere yet 'tis too late,
Thou pride of the People, thou prop of the State!
And in "universality" merge not that Ego,
That serves to Creation as pivot or peg. O!
Oblivious optimist, what should we do
For a pocket omniscience, if barren of you?
Who would fugle our princes, and polish our plebs?
Who would shear, Sheffield-blade-like, through sophistry's webs?
Who would rub up our rulers, and rub down our "roughs?"
Who could mix, as you mix them, Philippics and puffs?
All coming events from incredible distance see,
And contraries clearly invest with consistency?
Identify rabidest Rads with tame Tories?
Extol of our great House of Commons the glories?
Give the Cutlers their kudos, the Times its jobation,
And say complimentary things of Creation?*
Great Briareus-Argus, compendious host,
What comfort there lurks in that saving "almost"!
Remember, you rule the round world, JOHN,—as thus,
We govern all nations, and you govern us!
At once prophet-pedagogue caustic and drastic,
Political posturer polished and plastic,
Thersites-cum-Pangloss! Forget yourself? Fie!
Sweet Tear'em, stand fast by the infinite "I,"
Or we all are undone, and your followers fond
May be plunged once again in that Slough of Despond!
Though your programme 's fulfilled, and you 're satisfied quite
With the ROEBUCK régime, yet but deign to delight
All our ears with a little thrasonical bounce,
Just to show how Old Tear'em could tickle and trounce,
And we too are content; but so long we have known
The bold bray of that big brazen trumpet (your own!)
That, without an occasional solo, we might
Forget,—but ah! no! that 's impossible quite!
Yet tootle, sweet Tear'em, and earn our best benisons;
And ho! all ye small budding MILTONS and TENNYSONS,
With epic ambition, materials grand
For a modern "Arthuriad" lie to your hand.
Mighty HOMER might murmur, for never such luck he had!
Who 'll run down to Sheffield and write the "Roebuckiad"?

* "Nobody can admire God's creation more than I do."—Tear'em's Tribute.

WONDERS AT A WATERING-PLACE.

(From Our Special Penny-a-Liner.)

THE inhabitants and visitors of Shrimply-upon-Sea have been thrown into a state of considerable excitement by a series of discoveries which have recently been made there. Shrimply-upon-Sea, as our readers are aware, is a well-frequented watering-place, fast rising in repute, and its lodgings-letters long have enjoyed the doubtful fame of being among the surliest and most slovenly of their kind. It is, therefore, the more singular that the discoveries have been made there, which we may proceed, without more prelude, to relate.

The facts are briefly these. On the arrival of the mid-day train last Monday afternoon (it being, as is usual, about fifty minutes late), a gentleman from London, of the well-known name of SMITH, engaged a sitting-room and bed-room, with a good view of the Sea, for the mutual accommodation of himself and better half. The simple word "APARTMENTS" attracting his attention, and no friendly introduction having led him to the house, MR. SMITH was much surprised at finding the door opened by a clean and civil handmaid, instead of by the dowdy and draggle-tailed young person who usually waits upon the lodger near the Sea. On entering the house, his astonishment was heightened by finding that the door-mat was not threadbare, nor the stair-carpet in holes; and his surprise was much increased by the subsequent discovery that the door

Digitized by Google

A FAIR OFFER.

Athletic Barman. "NOW, IF YOU DON'T TAKE YOURSELF OFF, I'LL PRECIOUS SOON TURN YOU OUT!"

Pat (with a yell). "TUR-R-RN ME OUT! IS IT TUR-R-RN ME OUT! THIN, BEDAD! COME OUTSIDE, AN' TUR-R-RN ME OUT!!"

A BORE FOR JOHN BULL.

On wooden walls, in times of old,
Well-manned, we placed reliance,
Our own against the world could hold,
And bid all foes defiance.
On canvas wings our ships could speed
Athwart old Ocean wavy,
Till Steam arose, and we had need
To reconstruct the Navy.

Still men-of-war were heart of oak,
By foreigners unmated,
Till we to the discovery woke
They must be iron-plated.
Lest, quick, new monster-shells should send
Our ships to JONES, called DAVY,
Our millions we'd again to spend,
To reconstruct the Navy.

So, fast enough, we built a fleet
Of Warriors, iron-sided,
Which not a foe could dare to meet,
As fondly we confided.
Still "Rule Britannia" was our song,
No Briton be a slavey!
We never dreamed we'd have ere long
To reconstruct the Navy.

Our ocean-bulwarks, iron-bound
Soon after we had got 'em,
Torpedoes, to our grief we found,
Could penetrate at bottom.
And now that to our cost we know
A Ram their sides can stave, we
With sorrow once again must go
To reconstruct our Navy.

O task recurring without end,
Each time with more expenses!
But untold millions better spend,
Than trust to vain defences.
Out then, JOHN BULL, your money pour,
As beef that yields much gravy;
And brave that everlasting bore—
To reconstruct the Navy!

A COMPROMISE AT FULHAM—ON THE DISTRICT RAILWAY. — The Eastern position at the North-end Station.

of the bed-room could be shut without a bang, and that the windows of the parlour did not rattle to his tread.

Being induced by these allurements to engage the rooms forthwith, MR. SMITH was further able, at his leisure, to discover that he could sit at table without hurting his knees, and could recline upon the sofa without injuring his back. The easy chair, moreover, was not devoid of stuffing, nor fractured in its springs, nor was there any sign of weakness in its legs. Still more wondrous to relate, the white curtains were evidently recent from the wash, and upon the table-cover there was neither trace nor spot of candle-grease or ink!

Subsequent disclosures showed the like result. Both the bed-room candlesticks were furnished with extinguishers, and the two decanters were liberally provided with a stopper each. The wall-papers, though cheap, were not offensive to the eye; and the vases on the mantelshelf were neither of them cracked. MR. SMITH, moreover, found that he could even lift the water-jug without an inward tremble for the safety of the handle, and that his looking-glass did not need any propping with a hairbrush to prevent its twirling round upon a sudden while he shaved. His comfort, too, at meal-times was considerably heightened by his finding that the pepper-box, when shaken, very rarely lost its head, and that the two salt-cellars had a spoon apiece. Moreover, the carving-knife was not lose in the handle, and would actually cut; while, to his wife's astonishment and infinite delight, the lid of the tea-pot was so securely fastened, that it never took the liberty to drop into the cups.

As a climax to his comfort, MR. SMITH likewise discovered that not a single (nor a married) flea, nor any heavier insect, disturbed his light repose; nor did his mutton, nor his muffins, nor his marmalade, nor his money, stand in any danger of consumption by the Cat.

RARÆ NATANTES.

"Dux fœmina facti," says VIRGIL,
"Ducks fœminæ factæ," says Punch;
And his ducks are MISS BECKWITH and PARKER—
Web-footedest ducks of the bunch!

BAPTISM WITH A BOTTLE.

Two large canoes, according to the Court Journal, each hollowed from a single log of wood, were one day last week recovered from the bottom of the Loch of Kinnoord, Aberdeenshire, where they are supposed to have been lying for more than one thousand years, and whence another such canoe was fished up some time ago. "The largest canoe, on being drawn ashore, was christened by the MARCHIONESS OF HUNTLY, and a bottle of whiskey was broken over the bow."

This proceeding suggests questions more or less grave.

Everybody almost will be ready to ask what was the use of christening a canoe which had been for more than one thousand years under water? Had it not had more than enough of water—and that by immersion?

The answer, perhaps, will be that water is not the matter wherewith vessels—of that kind—are wont to be christened. They are christened with wine or spirits—as in the present instance with whiskey. In fact, their christening is a baptism to Bacchus.

A doubt might possibly arise in the minds of Ritualists whether the canoe christened by the MARCHIONESS OF HUNTLY had ever been christened before; and some of them may, therefore, suggest that her Ladyship ought to have given it merely a conditional christening. This point will perhaps be considered by MR. MACKONOCHIE and ARCHDEACON DENISON.

What do SIR WILFRID LAWSON and the United Kingdom Alliance think of christening a boat by breaking a bottle of whiskey over its bows? That it was about the best use which could have been made of a bottle of whiskey? Or, on reflection, will they not be rather inclined to regard the practice of christening vessels with ardent spirits or wine a vicious glorification of intoxicating liquors? What say the Teetotallers and their anti-Bacchic Momus, their Falstaff, who has abjured sack and addicted himself to thin potations? That is, if he himself really practises the dismal abstinence which he longs to have the power of enforcing upon others.

Digitized by Google

SO CONSIDERATE.

Page. "PLEASE, 'M, COOK WISHED ME TO SAY WHEN MASTER 'LL BE DONE WITH THE TIMES,—AS SHE'S A WAITIN' FOR IT!!"

CAUSIDICUS AD CANEM.

My old Dog stands by the Temple Stairs,
Watching the water's turbid flow,
And he thinks, as the Autumn sunlight glares,
This is a river he ought to know.

He gives a strange suspicious sniff
As he sees the dark stream eddy along,
And dreams of a lazy loitering skiff,
Of a Lover's laugh, of a Lady's song.

First drops of a deluge, heavy and warm,
Under Marlow Bridge had driven us three,
And we rocked in our boat in the thunderstorm:
If either grew tired, dear Dog, 'twas he.

Ah, the days are here for the straining oars—
The life and the love our toil to crown!
You shall splash, old boy, from the soft green shores
Of a river unsoiled by London town.

INTOLERANCE IN TURKEY.

ACCORDING to the Osservatore Romano, the POPE, the other day, in replying to an address from some pilgrims, complained that Catholicism is persecuted in certain countries, especially in Germany and Switzerland. His Holiness added that—

"Even the Turk, who was lately tolerant, had become the protector of Neo-Schismatics."

The world at large imagines that, in thus acting, "the Turk" has only afforded another instance of his accustomed toleration. Not to protect the "Neo-Schismatics," or any other Schismatics needing protection, would be intolerance. But the protection of Schismatics, apparently, in the judgment of the POPE, is the persecution of the Church. Who shall dispute it, if His Holiness is really the infallible judge of faith and morals?

TITIENS WITH THE TROWEL.

ON Tuesday last week the first brick of the New National Opera House on the Thames Embankment was laid by MLLE. TITIENS. Here was a Brick laid by a Brick; a Foundation by a Songstress who has long been a main support of the Opera. The Times, in reporting this event, says, speaking of that Brick of a Vocalist—

"The lady descended by a stairway dressed with red cloth to that corner of the foundation which had been chosen for the honour, accompanied by MR. MAPLESON, MR. FOWLER, the architect, and some dozen gentlemen well known or interested in music, and all people and things musical, while about an equal number watched the proceedings from above."

There is one statement in the foregoing extract which in the minds of fair readers less thoughtful and more frivolous than those of Punch, will no doubt have created a sense of disappointment. MLLE. TITIENS, they are told, "descended by a stairway dressed with red cloth." Yes, that is all very well to know; but what dress did MLLE. TITIENS wear herself? This they are not told; whereas for them, it is just the one point in connection with the ceremony in which she figured about which they care to know, or take any interest.

Hero and Leander.

MRS. BROWN to BROWN, who has a bad cold.

CALL yourself a man,
Sitting there wrapped in flannel?
Rouse up, if you can—
And swim over the Channel!

BROWN respondeth.

I will, I declare,—
'Tis not gammon and spinach,—
If you'll do your share
By swimming to Greenwich!

[Tallows his own nose in triumph.

Digitized by Google

L'INVITATION À LA VALSE.

SCENE—The Weekly Children's Ball at the Casino, Briocheville-sur-Mer. (Entrance, to Non-Subscribers, Fivepence.)

Master Isidore Bouchenœur. "VILL YOU, MEES MARY, MEK ME ZE HONORE OF TO DANCE ZIS VALSE VIS ME?"

Digitized by Google

A PAGE FROM THE VISITORS' BOOK.

ROYAL HOTEL, TOURISTVILLE, BLANKSHIRE.

Names.	Addresses.	Remarks.
The EARL and COUNTESS TIPTOPINGTON and Suite	Tiptopington Castle, Chalkshire.	Highly recommended. (Signed) A. PERQUISITE, Courier.
MR. and MRS. PLANTAGENET SMITH	Birmingham.	Landlord most attentive and respectful. Company very select and genteel.
BARNEY O'TOOLE, Esq., of the Inner Temple (late Trin. Col. Dublin)	London.	Whiskey very good, if you ask for the Irish. Scotch bad.
ROB ROY M'GREGOR, of Gray's Inn (late St. Andrew's, Edinburgh)	London.	Whiskey good. Ask for the Scotch. Irish (almost) undrinkable.
MISS BRIDGET GRIMM and MISS ALLALONE	Clapham, near London.	MISS BRIDGET GRIMM desired me to say, that she found the Mistress of the local Sunday School most attentive to visitors, and the School children fairly advanced. (Signed) PRUDENCE ALLALONE.
THOMAS SNOOKS, Tourist	Dalston, London.	Beer good. Baccy indifferent.
CAPTAIN THE HON. HECTOR FEATHERBED	St. James's St., London.	Not bad hotel. Only take care to tell the Boots to use varnish instead of blacking.
COLONEL GOSH, U.S.A., Family, and Helps	New York, U.S.A.	Waited here ten minutes for dinner fixings while on the road to Paris, viâ Persia, Constantinople, Berlin, Scotland, and St. Petersburg. Slow.
MAJOR-GENERAL WELLINGTON BOMB and Family	Woolwich.	Found everything correct, and all on the alert. (Signed) W. BOMB, Major-General.
MRS. FLIRTINGTON and the MISSES FLIRTINGTON (3)	From Scarborough.	Found ourselves very comfortable. Farewell, dear Touristville! (Signed) MAUD F. Parting is such sweet sorrow! (Signed) NELLIE F. When shall we meet again? (Signed) ALICE F.
MARMADUKE MODS, CECIL SMALLS, FRANK FRESHMAN (Reading Party)	Ch. Ch., Oxford.	Fun; but bad place for cramming.
MR. D. I. S. PEPTIC	From Cheltenham.	I am afraid that the sheets were damp. (Signed) D. I. S. P.
MRS. MAJOR STINGY and Daughter	Bon Marchais, near Brussels.	The hotel was not so moderate as we were led (by friends) to believe it to be. (Signed) CHARITY STINGY.
Mr. Punch	85, Fleet Street, E.C., London.	Off at last. There is no place like home. By Order (Signed) TOBY, Private Sec.

THE HOUSE OF CALL FOR COUNTRYMEN.

MR. GLADSTONE the other day told the labourers of Hawarden that in a village like theirs there ought to be an institution which should—

"Assert its own existence and be a familiar, every-day part of life—an institution in which all families may take an interest, and in which they may find opportunities for culture united by judicious arrangements with opportunities of rest and recreation."

Perhaps Hawarden is, as it were, a village in Arcadia peopled with nymphs and swains, shepherds and shepherdesses, both equal to sing and prepared to reply in pastoral eclogues. The institution proper for a village like that would be, of course, a rural Athenæum. But are not the majority of English villages, unfortunately, so little like Hawarden that an average specimen of a rustic villager, if asked what sort of an institution he understood by that described in the eloquent language above quoted, would be almost certain to name the "White Horse" or the "Red Lion"?

A SECOND VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

Being an additional Chapter to "The Tour in the Hebrides."

"SIR," said DR. JOHNSON, "let us take a walk down Princes Street."

Finding the Great Man in so excellent a humour, I seized upon the opportunity to put to him many interesting questions.

"Sir," said I, "pray what do you think of Edinburgh?"

"I think, Sir," replied the Doctor, "that its name is most appropriate."

"Sir," I continued, in a fever of anticipation, "I shall be very much obliged to you if you will explain your meaning in greater detail."

Dr. Johnson. Sir, I am sorry that my meaning should require explanation. I say that the name Edinburgh is appropriate, because I find the City primitive and beautiful. ADAM and EVE would, doubtless, have held it in high consideration had they had the advantage of its possession. In short, Sir, they would have called it the Town of their Eden, or Edinburgh."

Mr. Boswell. A pun, Sir!

"It was a pun, Sir!" cried the Doctor, very angrily, and I hastened to change the subject.

"I am surprised to find, Sir," said I, "that HER MAJESTY does not reside at Edinburgh. Do you not think, Sir, that she might use her Scottish Palace at Christmas time?"

"No, Sir, I do not think so," replied the Doctor, "and I can find no reason for your surprise."

"Indeed, Sir!"

Dr. Johnson. Sir, were Her Most Gracious MAJESTY to dwell at Edinburgh at Christmas time, she would be put to great inconvenience. Her Most Gracious MAJESTY exhibits excellent sense in selecting Balmoral for her residence.

Mr. Boswell. Sir, I trust you do not call in question my loyalty to the House of Brunswick?

Dr. Johnson. Sir, I do not; I only question your wisdom.

Mr. Boswell. Sir, if I do not trouble you, will you explain to me why HER MAJESTY should avoid Edinburgh at Christmas time?

Dr. Johnson. Why, Sir, the very branches put up in honour of the festive season would treat her with disrespect!

Mr. Boswell. Indeed, Sir!

Dr. Johnson. Sir, if Her Most Gracious MAJESTY visited Edinburgh at Christmas time, would she not find Holly-rood?

Mr. Boswell. Another pun, Sir!

"It was another pun, Sir!" cried the Doctor, very wrathfully, and I said no more.

The next day we visited Stirling. We walked up to the Castle, and admired the magnificent view we there obtained of the surrounding country. We next examined the ramparts.

"These old walls, Sir," said I, "must weigh many thousand tons avoirdupois."

"Sir," replied the Doctor, "you should have said pounds stirling!"

"Another pun, Sir!" I exclaimed.

"It was another pun, Sir!" roared the Doctor, and I thought it best to hold my peace.

The next morning found us at Perth. Here we were received

Digitized by Google

(LOCH) FYNE GRAMMAR.

(A Sad Fact for the School Board.)

Tugal. "DUD YE 'LL EVER SEE THE I-OO-NA ANY MORE BEFORE?"
Tonal. "SURELY I WAS."
Tugal. "AY, AY! MAYBE YOU WAS NEVER ON POARD TOO, AFTER THUS——"
Tonal. "I DUD."

A CYNIC ON CENTENARIES.

Two more Centenaries! The World 's gone mad
About this latest fashionable fad!
Here 's a suggestion—why not celebrate
The birth of ADAM? "Who will fix the date?"
What matter? He was born (ah! more 's the pity!)—
Be the exact date left to a Committee;
Say MANNING, HUXLEY, LIDDON, SMITH—a dozen
Of priests and savants equally well chosen;
And when by calculations just and joint
They 've settled that preliminary point,
Doubtless the human race will be quite ready
To answer with subscription stiff and steady.
National pride 's a localised insanity,
Our noble selves shown up by reflex vanity;
(That 's why the Teutons find such wondrous charm in
The glorifying of their hero, ARMIN;)
But ADAM all may claim: no learnèd German
Has yet made out his name, at home, was HERMANN.
Our last find is, four centuries ago
Was born the mighty MICHAEL ANGELO;
So, in pursuance of the latest fancy,
We must proclaim the fact with loud jactancy.*
Upon our tall talk it might clap a stopper,
Could BUONAROTTI 's spirit play eavesdropper
At R.A. council-doors! He who shook men so
In the strong days of JULIUS and LORENZO,
How would that eagle flutter our tame sparrows
Of Art, whose small strength braves small critics' arrows,
With prurience, half voluptuous, half ascetic,
Or puling commonplace, miscalled pathetic,
False mediævalism's fantastic flummeries,
Or mock Catholicism's vapid mummeries?
That Titan-thewed exalter of high themes,
How would he rate our Art's distracted dreams,
The petty peddling of its puny toilers,
And all the modern mystery of pot-boilers!
In fight for fame, which now would come off victor—
This giant, or the dainty West-End pictor,
Whose highest inspiration must be sought
In dull or doll-face, tame truth over-wrought,
Or in a well-paid manufacturer's order,
And dealer's fiat, our Art's best rewarder?
What a new light would glow upon "the Line."
From bull's-eye of the fierce old Florentine!
Punch recommends the thought to his Art-brothers,
As fitting this Centenary, of all others!

* Why should not Punch add to the language his translation of the French "jactance"?

---

most hospitably by the gentry and the people. In the company of our host (a gentleman of the highest consideration in "The Fair City"), we ascended Kinnoul Hill, and greatly admired the splendid scenery.

"A very lovely spot, Sir," I ventured to observe.

Dr. Johnson. Sir, you are right. Sir, I have here found the people so kind-hearted, the City so handsome, and the scenery so magnificent, that I confess it would give me infinite satisfaction were I able to call the town in which I was born the place (as the Highlanders have it) of my Perth!

"A pun, Sir!" exclaimed our excellent host, and I could not help noticing that he seemed greatly surprised.

The Doctor made no reply, but I could see by the working of his countenance that he was suffering pain.

We came to our journey's end at Wick.

"What do you think of this place, Sir?" I asked.

Dr. Johnson. Sir, I think that the title of "The Modern Athens" should be conferred upon Wick rather than upon Edinburgh.

Mr. Boswell. Indeed, Sir! May I ask why?

Dr. Johnson. Why, Sir? Sir, you must be very dull. I say, Sir, that Wick should be called "The Modern Athens."

Mr. Boswell. I confess, Sir, that I am dull, and yet I cannot perceive why Wick should be called "The Modern Athens" rather than Edinburgh.

Dr. Johnson. Sir, you indeed must be dull if you do not associate Wick with the centre of Greece!

I was silent for a few minutes, and then I ventured to make a remark.

"Sir," said I, "you once expressed a very strong opinion about pun-makers. Sir, you asserted your belief that a man who would make a pun would be capable of picking a pocket."

Dr. Johnson. Sir, I believe so still.

Mr. Boswell. And yet, Sir, during the course of our tour, you have made a large number of puns.

Dr. Johnson. Sir, you have good grounds for what you assert. I admit, Sir, with a feeling of sorrow, that I have made many puns during our tour.

Mr. Boswell. Sir, may I venture to ask you why you have made so many puns?

"Sir," said DOCTOR JOHNSON, "the puns you have noticed are symptoms of a painful disease, known to men of letters as 'the Silly Fever.' I attribute the commencement of this melancholy malady to the depressing effects of a Scotch climate upon a Londoner in September!"

SING A SONG OF BRIGHTON!

SING a song of Brighton!
Pockets full of gold;
Skating-rinks, Aquarium,
Piers new and old.
When the Season opens,
The Stars begin to sing;
Wasn't it a famous place
When GEORGE THE FOURTH was king?
Pater, in the counting-house,
Slaves to make his money;
Mater, on the Esplanade,
Spends it, sweet as honey:
The girls are in the balconies,
Showing off their clothes—
And here comes a family
Distinguished by its nose!

Digitized by Google

"PLEASANT ALL ROUND."

"Enfant Terrible" (after contemplating Visitor for some Time). "O, MR. BROWN, LET'S HAVE A GAME! WE'VE GOT A WHACKING BIG SPONGE UP-STAIRS! I WISH YOU'D SPONGE ON 'PA NOW; IT'D BE SUCH FUN! HE SAYS YOU ALWAYS DO AT THE CLUB——!!!"

[Tableau!

JOHN'S GROWL.

(In re Aries v. Taurus.)

JOHN BULL he stood, in no merry mood,
O'erlooking his silver streak.
Sighed he, "I have prided myself on my JACKS,
As a set-off to Red Tape and Sealing-Wax;
I never yet thought my Sea-doctors were quacks;
If they are, a new lot I must seek.
With my rivals in reg'ments I may not compete,
But, by Jingo, I did pin my faith to my Fleet!

"And when wooden walls and white wings were no more,
Done to death by the Iron-ribbed Demon,
I sighed, but submitted. Thinks I, while my shore
Is guarded by seaworthy ships as of yore,
I must bow to the change, though it 's rather a bore,
For at least it has left me my Seamen!
Trim hulk or black bulk, all is one; I've no fear,
While my Blue Jackets know how to fight and to steer.

"But now, by St. George, it is pitiful quite!
When the cannon-balls volley and hurtle,
What chance will my Iron-clads have in the fight,
If in peace—and a fog—JACK can't steer them aright,
But they ram one another—go down in my sight,
Run blindly ashore, or 'turn turtle'?
I've a nice show of ships, if on paper I tot 'em,
But they won't serve me much if they're half at the bottom!

"I have paid for them, too, at a pretty stiff rate,
These lumbering mountains of metal:
If matters go on as they have gone of late,
These lubbers of mine, high or low in the State,
Who can't build a seaworthy ship, or steer straight,
With me will accounts have to settle.
What with Public Opinion and Purse, 'twill be funny
If I do not get value received for my money!

WILLIAM THE WOODMAN.

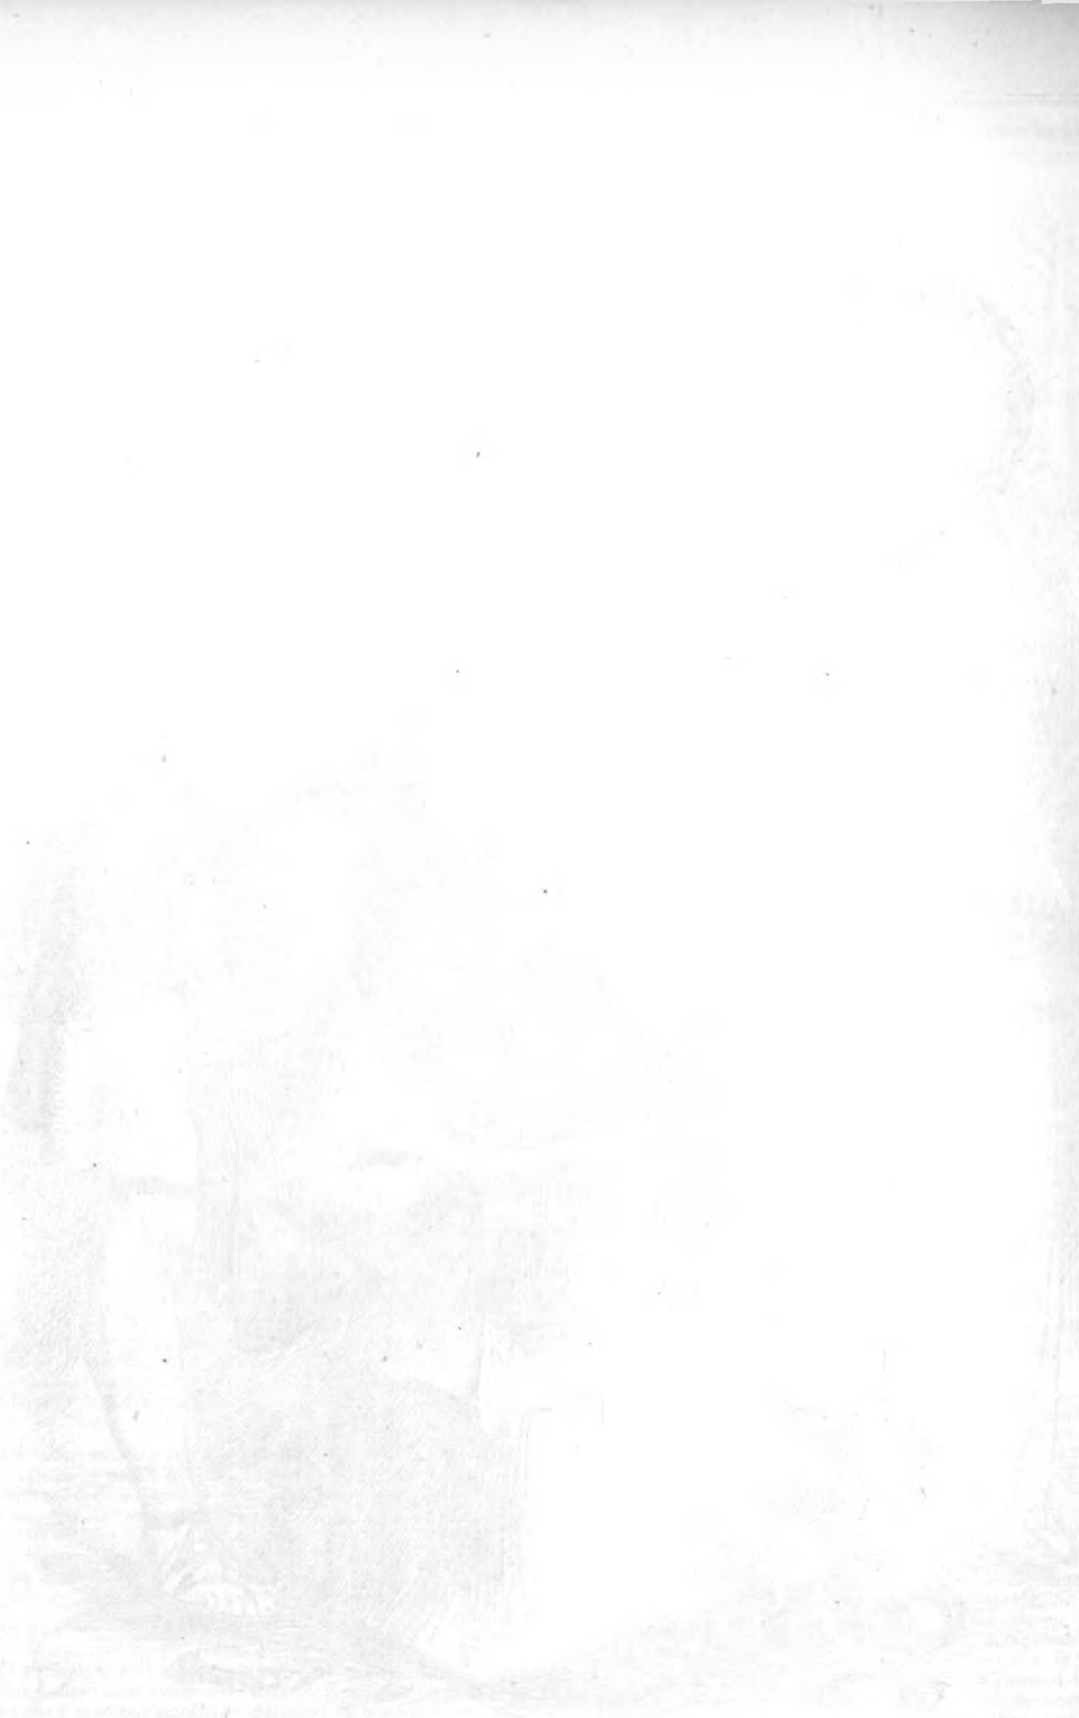
IN one sense, MR. GLADSTONE is certainly a leveller. According to a Liverpool paper, two hours before the meeting at Hawarden on Tuesday evening:—

"MR. GLADSTONE was engaged in his favourite exercise of felling trees. For a portion of two days he has been wielding the axe upon a large tree in a lane at the outskirts of Hawarden village, and he succeeded in bringing it to the ground late yesterday afternoon. Those who saw him say that he went to work in true woodman fashion, with his braces thrown off behind him and his shirt collar unfastened. After completing his task, he walked home with his axe slung over his shoulder, and two hours afterwards was at the meeting, looking not tired and weary, but quite refreshed with his bodily labour."

The Right Honourable ex-Premier, depicted by a competent artist in the guise above described on his walk home, would most admirably serve for a wonder and a sign; namely, for the sign (pace SIR WILFRID LAWSON) of the Man in the Moon. Although his followers are disunited, he might be suitably represented carrying a bundle of real sticks. Long live the People's WILLIAM to fell timber, if he prefers that occupation to the Liberal Leadership and lopping national expenditure. It is an employment which may typify advanced Liberalism; but whilst WILLIAM is physically cutting down the Monarch of the Forest, his mind, when not engaged upon Vaticanism, is doubtless often most profoundly absorbed with the rumination of the wisest designs for the support and preservation of the British Monarchy.

OVERLOADED.

POWDER! what folly! why, you 're fair enough:
Your face speaks for itself and needs no—puff!



Digitized by Google

WHO'S TO BLAME?

VULCAN. "IT'S NO FAULT OF MINE! I CAN MAKE A RAM; I CAN MAKE A TORPEDO; AND I CAN MAKE AN IRON SHIP! BUT I CAN'T TEACH YOU TO USE THEM!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

SOME WONDERFUL WANTS.

THE wants of our fellow-creatures, some of them, claim our sympathy. Others may contribute to our amusement. Subjoined are a few of the latter kind, extracted from sundry both local and London journals. The first of the series, for which thanks are due to a country paper, might be imagined to have appeared in the Medium, the Spiritualist, or some other of Mr. Punch's necromantic contemporaries:—

IF MRS. FRANK BEVEN wishes to see her Mother before she is buried, she will come to her lodgings at once.—Address, &c.

In these days of "materialised" apparitions of the dead-alive at "dark séances," to those at least who credit them, not the slightest difficulty can present itself in the idea of a corpse walking to give anyone wishing to see it a look in. The Ghost does indeed walk now-a-days out of the theatre, and in the flesh, which naturally occasions wags, especially if Scotchmen, to remark that Spiritualism is all Walker.

A want rather unlikely to be readily supplied is experienced at—

HARTLEPOOL SCHOOL-BOARD.—WANTED, by the above Board, a FEMALE INFANT PUPIL TEACHER, in her third or fourth year.—Apply, not later than August 31st, 1875, to, &c.

A female infant pupil teacher in the third or even the fourth year of her age would be an infant very much more precocious, probably, than the world has for some time seen.

In another quarter there is—

WANTED, a ROAST COOK, also VEGETABLE MAID, thoroughly experienced, for first-class Hotel by seaside.—Reply, stating age, wages required, and where last employed, to, &c.

How a Roast Cook could want wages is a question which has not occurred to the mind whence this requisition proceeded. It is evidently in a frantic state. The postulant of a Roast Cook, perhaps, labouring under the mental delusion that he is a native of the interior of Africa, contemplates eating his Vegetable Maid, boiled, together with his Roast Cook. Cooks would really seem to be delicacies in the imagination of a certain insane class of advertisers. Subjoined is another inquiry for an esculent Cook:—

WANTED, a PLAIN COOK, to Bake. Two Cows kept; no family.—Address, &c.

The imaginary anthropophagist may be supposed to dream of eating his baked Plain Cook without sauce.

A story has lately gone the round of the papers about a father who rescued his child from the jaws of a crocodile; an incident which, whether it occurred or not, nobody can be surprised to see reported at this season. Perhaps the account of it put an idea into the head of a party who announces a—

NURSE WANTED. Four miles from Tonbridge. Two children. Able to take a baby from the mouth. £16 and all found. Help given in the Nursery. Address, &c.

Now that the better sex has so generally taken to swimming, it is at least conceivable that a Nurse could emulate the exploit of taking a baby from the mouth of an alligator.

A not uncommon want is expressed in an odd fashion by apparently an eccentric man of letters:—

A. E. I. O. U.—A Man, possessing the Five Vowels, Ability, Energy, Industry, Originality, Usefulness, seeks a Situation of emolument and trust.—Address, with particulars, &c.

Besides the five vowels, initials of the virtues abovenamed, there are, as LINDLEY MURRAY says, sometimes W and Y. W stands for Wisdom, which a man can hardly possess who expects any answer to an application for a place so very indefinitely described as the one which he means by a "situation of emolument and trust." It is, however, too probable that he could add Y to his vowels—Y for Yokel.

That same appellation may likewise be deemed applicable to the gentleman who meditates marriage in the circumstances thus candidly stated:—

A Respectable Single Gentleman, age forty-seven, income £50 per annum, would be glad to correspond with a Lady, with a view to marriage.—Address O 26, at the Printer's.

O 26, indeed! A better thing than matrimony for O 26 would be the employment which he could doubtless obtain by replying to the notification following:—

WANTED, a good-looking DONKEY, free from vice, to draw a Bath Chair.—Apply, &c.

Or this situation might also suit the man of five vowels and virtues, if the virtues are unqualified, and the advertiser is indeed justly describable as a "donkey free from vice."

Let us conclude this string of wants with the want of a droll individual who wants to sell a very extraordinary animal:—

JUST ARRIVED, a WILD BOAR, from the Brazils. Perfectly tame. To be SOLD.—Apply on board, &c.

This is obviously an advertisement to which there would be a peculiar impropriety in appending the notice that "No Irish need apply." Who indeed but an Irishman could expect to buy a tame wild boar? And, of course, if PAT came to be a customer for such a bargain, he would find that he had to deal with a compatriot.

It is a pity that advertisements such as the foregoing are dispersed throughout various newspapers. They would form pleasant reading arranged altogether in a continuous column, which might be set apart on purpose for them in an organ possibly to be established, and turn out a success, under the title of the Colney Hatch Gazette.

SWEETS OF THE SEA-SIDE.

Shingleton, near Dulborough.

SYMPATHISING MR. PUNCH,

WITH the desire of enjoying a few days of tranquillity and a few dips in the sea, I have arrived and taken lodgings at this "salubrious watering-place" (as the guide-books choose to call it), having heard that it was quiet, and possessed of a steep, cleanly, and bathe-inviting beach. As to the latter point, I find that fame has not belied it; but surely with a view to tempt me into suicide, some demon must have coupled the term "quiet" with this place. Quiet! Gracious Powers of Darkness! if this be your idea of a quiet spot to live in, I wonder what, according to your notion, need be added to its tumult to make a noisy town. Here is a list of aural tortures wherewith we are tormented, which may serve by way of time-table to advertise the musical attractions of the place:—

1 A.M.—Voices of the night. Revellers returning home.

1·30 A.M.—Duet, "Io t'amo," squealed upon the tiles, by the famous feline vocalists MADEMOISELLE MINETTE and SIGNOR CATTERWAULINI.

2 A.M.—Bare-arole and chorus, "Bow wow wow" (BACH), by the Bayers of the Moon.

3 A.M.—Song without words, by the early village cock.

3·30 A.M.—Chorus by his neighbours, high and low, mingling the treble of the Bantam with the Brahma's thorough bass.

4 A.M.—Twittering of swallows, and chirping of early birds, before they go to catch their worms.

4·45 A.M.—Meeting of two natives, of course just under your window, who converse in a stage-whisper at the tip-top of their voices.

5 A.M.—Stampede of fishermen, returning from their night's work in their heavy boots.

6 A.M.—Start of shrimpers, barefooted, but occasionally bawling.

7 A.M.—Shutters taken down, and small boys sally forth and shout to one another from the two ends of the street.

7·15 A.M.—"So-holes! fine fresh so-holes!"

7·30 A.M.—"Mack'reel! fower a shillun! Ma-a-ack'reel!"

8 A.M.—Piano play begins, and goes on until midnight.

8·25 A.M.—Barrel-organ at the corner. Banjo in the distance.

9 A.M.—German band to right of you. Ophicleide out of time, clarionette out of tune.

9·30 A.M.—"Pa-aper, mornin' pa-aper! Daily Telegraft!"

9·45 A.M.—German band to left of you. Clarionette and cornet both out of time and tune.

Digitized by Google

10·15 A.M.—A key-bugler and a bag-piper a dozen yards apart.

11 A.M.—Performance of Punch and Toby, who barks more than is good for him.

11·30 A.M.—Bellowing black-faced ballad-bawlers, with their banjoes and their bones.

Such is our daily programme of music until noon, and such, with sundry variations, it continues until midnight. Small wonder that I have so little relish for my meals, and that, in spite of the sea air, I can hardly sleep a wink. I shall return to Town to-morrow, for surely all the street tormentors must be out of it, judging by the numbers that now plague the sad Sea-side.

MISERRIMUS.

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dullidillitanty Society.

OLD furniture fanciers should avoid the localities where their taste has been especially consulted by the vendors of antique specimens.

Let them keep their eyes open, and remember that there is all the difference in furniture between a venerable appearance and a veneer-able appearance.

I know a clever man who can manufacture Elizabethan chairs and tables for a mere nothing, and turn them out as good as old. [Name and address on receipt of twelve stamps.]

To furnish Actively is to carry in your own furniture yourself, and place it where you like. This action need not be limited to your own furniture. You can carry in other people's. Only, to make such an action worth your while, it should be carried into your own house.

To furnish Passively is to give a general order, and let the Upholsterer carry it out, while you lie on a sofa and give yourself no further trouble about the matter. This is what a tradesman likes, whose motto is "Order is Heaven's First Law," and he will write to you to inform you that your "esteemed order" will receive every possible attention.

The conscientious Upholsterer will carry out your instructions, will carry in your furniture, will (as is said by SHAKSPEARE, who furnishes us with quotations) "set down ought in malice" and carry one, and go on carrying one, until he calls on you with his Little Bill—and you say, "Dear me, how he 's grown! I had no idea he was so big!"

DECLENSION OF NOUNS AND ADJECTIVES.

The following Nouns, with their disqualifying Adjectives, should be declined altogether by every student of my Grammar of Decorative Art: e.g.,

Nominative. — A broken old cheap chair.

Possessive.—I have this broken old cheap chair (implying, "And I will sell it to you a bargain").

Objective.—I don't want your broken old cheap chair.

But remember your French polish, and invariably let such a qualified Noun be declined with thanks.

The Verb "To Furnish."—Of this Verb, as of all similar Verbs, there are three kinds, the Active, Passive, and Neuter: and it is also divided into Regular, Irregular, and Defective.

Neuter.—This relates to the tint of the papers, coverings, blinds, curtains, &c., &c.

First, in Wall Papers.—You must cautiously guard against the wall-papering so common now-a-days in external mural decorations.

The Art Student, having avoided the above, must be very careful in his choice of papers.

The first paper for choice will of course be Punch. Cela va sans dire. For your Dining-room you can't do better than choose certain low-toned papers. An example of

A Low-Toned Paper is the Englishman. I should unhesitatingly say, do not bring this into your dining-room or drawing-room, or library. There are a few other low-toned papers, whose tone is not quite so low as this, which may perhaps suit the taste of the present day. A propos of low-toned papers, it is a marvel to me (the author of this work) that the Authorities (whoever they may be) do not ask me to decorate St. Paul's. Here is my suggestion for the Whispering Gallery: give it a low-toned paper. The Deans and Canons are welcome to this hint gratis. I trust the Canons are canons of good taste. But to resume.

There are some papers, which, for their washed-out appearance, might be called the weakly papers. But do not forget that, according to the sort of paper on which you ultimately decide, so must you choose your articles. A light paper will require light articles: a heavy paper, heavy articles. A neutral-tint would represent the political opinions of a Liberal-Conservative, and if this idea is carefully acted upon throughout, what opportunities for conversation will be afforded! The paper, whatever its tone, will speak for itself, and will speak for its proprietor.

Papers and Borders.—The question of borders will, perhaps, only occur for the parlour. Of course you must decide by your means whether you will have parlour-borders or not. Borders are placed at the extremes of papers; but this is less a question of extremes than of means. If you do have parlour-boarders, humour them, and avoid "crossing the boarders" in any way.

(To be continued.)

MELLOW PHILOSOPHY.

"I HAVE ceased," remarked a blasé cynic, "to care enough about my species to take any pleasure in saying disagreeable things."

Digitized by Google

IN PROPRIÂ PERSONÂ.

First Medical Student. "THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION APPEARS TO COUNTENANCE VIVISECTION!"

Second Ditto. "I SHOULD THINK SO, AFTER THE WAY THEY CUT ME UP AT THE COLLEGE!"

THE ANGLO-FRANCO VOCABULARY.

To those about to Travel.

ALL the World and his Wife and Daughters are now thronging the Pier at Dover, crossing the capricious duckpond, clambering up the ladder on to the Quay at Calais, and, probably, many of the World's Daughters (British branch) will be afraid to air what little French they possess.

It should be a great comfort to these young ladies to know that now our beloved language, grating and harsh as all our continental neighbours declare it to be, is taking wider and surer root in fashionable foreign conversation.

ADA MARTINGALE would be astounded, after wearying her brain at MISS ATHENA GAMBOL'S over cheval and chevaux, to hear her chestnut called a "step-pair," or her brother's cob "un pau-nee."

The SLIPPERSON girls, who have left the Rink for the Righi, will ask in vain for any other translation of the "outside edge" than "ootzeeda ayshe;" and, though English spoken with a foreign pronunciation may not as yet quite supply the place of French, the following letter, from a lady of rank in Trouville to her friend at Etretat, will show what a long way it goes in that direction:—

MY DEAREST POPOTTE,

Tous les fashionable high-lifeurs de Paris, et même les tiptoppeuses de la vie aristocratique, se sont donné the meet sur la beach ici. Jamais, nevare no nevare je n'ai vu tant de keepsake vignettes, tant de splendid swells, tant de darling bébés together. Beautiful Meeses, Parisiennes charmantes, schöne damen, m'entourent. Les plus vaillants Gentlemen arrivent sur leur English Steppers ou leur American Trotteurs. Là c'est un breack à la Daumont, ici un Forinhan coché par LORD JIM JONES.

Remember, il faut absolument que tu sois introducée à Milady. Elle porte un amour de watterproof, et une billicoque garnie d'un aile de grouse, tout bonnement ravissante. Milady est aussi book-makeuse que n'importe qui, et je parierai 10 contre 1 qu'elle handicappera les fillies à marier par ici mieux que la PRINCESSE CHOCNOSOFF elle-même. "To be, or not to be," voilà la question, my dear.

A propos, l'Aquarium est all there à l'heure qu'il est; à nous maintenant le Rink, pour les flirteuses qui savent patiner, et le petit Rottinrô pour nos trotting girls, sur leur jolis hacks, et pour nos jumping gentlemen-riders et leur little grooms. Le lunch m'appelle, rien qu'une cotelette mottin-shope, et du pale-ale.

Mille kiss: à bientot. Good-baye.

Postscriptum.—Je suis invitée à prendre le five o'clock tea à bord le steamer-yacht de Milord. Son petit cherubin de midshipman, SIR JENKINS, ESQUIRE, m'attendra ce soir avec ses hearts of oaks dans leur gig. Comme disait ce cher Prince à Marlbrook House, "it will be orflée jolly." Encore good-baye. Shake hands for ever.

Postscriptum.—Retour du yacht. Après tout, ma très chère, les deux langues se ressemblent enormément. Je me suis entendue appeler par SIR JENKINS, ESQUIRE, "dam jolly." Evidemment ceci ne veut dire que "jolie dame," en langue de midshipman. Je m'en servirai à la première occasion. Good night.

A WAITER'S WARNING.

"ENTOMOLOGY IN PARLIAMENT STREET.—MR. FRANK W. DUFREY, 55, Parliament Street, writes to the Field:—'It will interest your entomological readers to hear that a fine specimen of the Death's-head Hawk Moth (Acherontia atropos) was taken in Parliament Street on Monday evening. It flew into the dining-room at the Red Lion Tavern, and was captured by one of the waiters, who was alarmed at its size and the peculiar noise it made. Apart from its being rather rubbed, it is a very good specimen of the largest of our lepidoptera, and is now in my possession."

"WILLIAM, where 's JOHN?
What, is he gone?"
"Not gone away, Sir.
Sorry to say, Sir,
JOHN ill a-bed, Sir,
Bad in 'is 'ed, Sir.
'Ad a great fright, Sir.
Turned 'is 'air wite, Sir.
Last Monday night, Sir."
"Struck down with fear!
How? Let me hear."
"'Orrible thing, Sir,
Came on the wing, Sir;
Window in through, Sir,
Suddently flew, Sir,
Into this room, Sir,
A shape from the tomb, Sir.
'Twasn't a bat, Sir;
No, Sir, not that, Sir:
Moth, Sir, we thought, Sir.
But wen it was caught, Sir,
Huttered a shriek, Sir,
A scream, Sir, a squeak, Sir!
Hinsect, you know, Sir,
Couldn't do so, Sir.
Wot should we find, Sir,
On its back, Sir, be'ind, Sir,
Printed, exact, Sir?—
A skull, Sir,—a fact, Sir!
JOHN gapsed for breath, Sir;
Thought it was Death, Sir—
Notice to quit, Sir.
JOHN was that frit, Sir,
JOHN 'ad a fit, Sir—
Went a'most mad, Sir.
JOHN very bad, Sir;
Better, bimeby, Sir:
'Opes JOHN won't die, Sir.
Doctor 'e said, Sir,
Moth, named Death's 'Ed, Sir,
In Natteral 'Istory, Sir;
Rare; but no mystery, Sir:
Honly a prize, Sir,
A catch in 'is heyes, Sir,
As a medical gent, Sir;
No call to repent, Sir—
That 's 'is belief, Sir.
A sirloin of beef, Sir,
Just up—very nice, Sir.
Bring you a slice, Sir?
Potatoes and greens, Sir—
And any French beans, Sir?"

Digitized by Google

COMING DOWN IN THE WORLD.

Yearly Visitor to Sea-Side Shop. "YOU 'VE NOT GOT SO MANY JET ORNAMENTS AS YOU USED TO HAVE, MRS. BLACK!"

Mrs. Black. "AH, NO, MA'AM! YOU REMEMBER WHAT A RESPECTABLE CLASS OF GOODS I USED TO HAVE. NOW, FOLKS IS SATISFIED WITH ARTIFICIAL JEWELLERY AT 'ALF THE PRICE!"

LITERATURE VERSUS SCIENCE.

"Literature—that is a very high flight. Science—that is a higher flight still."—MR. GLADSTONE at the Hawarden Literary Institute.

YOUR pardon, dear GLADSTONE. We seldom dispute.
Are you rightly reported? Punch cannot be mute.
As a recognised leader and lover of Letters,
He will not admit the Professors his betters,
Or let ARCHIMEDES fly higher than HOMER,
Through whose infinite realm you 're a fortunate roamer.
Our NEWTON reached Science's summit, we know,
But on Poetry's peak was great SHAKSPEARE below?
Imagine the wrathful discussion 'twould kindle
If we had to decide 'twixt the Laureate and TYNDALL!

Punch, Proctor of Letters, designs no defiance
To the absolute definite value of Science;
But he holds that by logic 'tis clearly deducible
That the Pen beats retort and alembic and crucible,
Beats compass, theodolite, sewing-machine,
Creates or suggests them, and tells what they mean.
It gives us the easiest record of thought,
And without its strong aid all our Science were nought.

September's long lights cross the lawn and the garden,
You, statesman retired, enjoy autumn at Ha'arden;
Punch hopes, when you 've felled the due number of trees,
On the turf by the Castle there, sitting at ease,
You 'll just reconsider that saying of yours—
Since you 're one whose terse apophthegm always endures.
The different grooves which are occupied scan:
See, Science takes Nature, but Letters take Man—
Take Woman as well, a most exquisite field!
Think over that matter, dear GLADSTONE, and yield.

The Binomial Theorem 's something to strike; it
Was clever, no doubt—I prefer As You Like It.

ARCHIMEDES was deucedly wise on the cone,
ARISTOPHANES' Birds suit me better, I own:
And though Science must have her keen Surgeons with lancets,
Her Astronomers sage to watch Venus's transits
(From boudoir to drawing-room, doubtless, and back again),
Yet as long as life lasts men will tread the old track again,
Will follow the Pen, that can wing them afar
To regions beyond the least visible star,
Will smile just awhile at the Science experiment,
Then welcome pure Poetry's music, depth, merriment.

Since School-Boards have come a great change there must be,
And even ex-Premiers have learnt Rule of Three:
So, as Letters to Science is Dinner to Lunch—
Thus verily sayeth

Yours verily,
PUNCH.

Head and Foot.

THE following advertisement, extracted from a newspaper, might, if the Compton Hotel at Liverpool were not a respectable Inn, be capable of misconstruction:—

HEAD BOOTS WANTED, for the Compton Hotel, Liverpool.—Apply to MR. RUSSELL.

In too many common public-houses at Liverpool "Head Boots," it is to be feared, may be taken to mean boots with which ruffians are accustomed to kick people's skulls in.

THE NEW WORK.

O! TENDER-hearted sex,
What instincts in you work,
That you should take delight
In doing crewel work?

Digitized by Google

"VICISSITUDES OF FAMILIES."

Ragged Party. "Ah! I should never a' been reduced like this 'ere if it hadn't been for the Lawyers!"

Raggeder Ditto. "And look at me! All through my Title-Deeds bein' made into Banjos an' such like! Why, I spent a small fortun' advertisin' for one Tambourine as was supposed to a' been made out o' my Grandmother's Marriage-Settlement!!!"

LAWSON'S LAST.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson is a merry man. Indeed the adjective and the substantive might be very fitly conjoined, and the Honourable Baronet called a Merryman; a Mr. Merryman, but for the handle to his name. Say, as a Frenchman would, Sir Merryman. The Member for Carlisle has constituted himself a sort of Clown in the Temperance Ring. He may be regarded as the United Kingdom Alliance Yorick, whose jibes and flashes of merriment, in Liquor Law Debates and at Total Abstinence Tea-parties, are wont to set the tables in a roar. Such a Yorick, it may be suggested, would not have done in Denmark. We don't know that. Our Jester's jocosity is a great marvel you may suppose—he drinks no wine. Doesn't he? See The Draper's report of an entertainment lately given by a "Mr. George Moore, in his Cumberland Home," whereat—

"A Champagne luncheon was served in a large marquee.

"Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., presided; Mr. Moore sat on his right.

"Sir Wilfrid Lawson proceeded to say—'Gentlemen, I have to propose the health of our worthy host. . . . And . . . let us pay honour to our worthy host—the kind, the hospitable, the generous, the popular Mr. Moore; and I call on you now to drink his very good health with all the honours.'

"The toast was drunk with great enthusiasm."

Drunk in what? Champagne, doubtless, by the majority of the drinkers. But by Sir Wilfrid Lawson? As President of a Champagne lunch party, one would think, in Champagne too. At any rate, he not only countenanced people in drinking Champagne, but also warmly exhorted them to drink it in drinking a health which he well knew very few would drink in water. The President of the United Kingdom Alliance, in presiding at a Champagne lunch, proposing a toast to be drunk with all the honours in an intoxicating liquor, and presumably drinking it himself, has joked a joke immensely surpassing the most brilliant witticism he ever uttered; and the best of it is that the joker of this high joke is the Mover of the Permissive Bill in the House of Commons, and the Permissive Law Orator, who, liquoring up in Champagne, goes about clamouring for leave to be enabled "to rob a poor man of his beer."

ADDENDUM TO "YANKEE DOODLE."

Yankee doodle, doodle, doo,
Glory to the cross keys,
Scarlet Hat, Sirree, to you,
First of the M'Closkeys!
Pio Nono showed more sense
Than bespeaks a noodle,
Biretting of your Eminence—
And singin' Yankee doodle.
Yankee doodle, doodle, doo,
Yankee doodle dorum,
Yankee doodle slick right through.
Per sæcula sæculorum.

Mac is now a Papal Prince.
The Pope, by his creation,
A sense intended to evince
That we're a glorious nation.
Although we do not, in the main,
Belong to his communion,
He valleys neither France nor Spain
A cent above our Union.
Yankee doodle, &c.

Long years may Pius live to see,
But, sooner or else later,
'Tis like St. Peter's Chair will be
To fill, in course of Natur.
The Cardinals thereto will call
Some Cardinal or other;
'Taint no ways sure their choice won't fall
Upon their Yankee brother.
Yankee doodle, &c.

The Prisoner of the Vatican
Remains in self seclusion,
Because he is Eu-ro-pean,
And cherishes delusion.
A Yankee Pope would in Old Rome
Ne'er stay and sulk so frantic;
He'd shift the Holy See to home,
Make Popedom transatlantic.
Yankee doodle, &c.

The Pope of Rome, United States,
By our free Constitution,
Might curse whatever Prince he hates,
Nor fear a persecution.
Anathema by name might fling,
Accordin' to his adviser,
At Victor, the "Sub-Alpine King,"
Bismarck, or William Kaiser.
Yankee doodle, &c.

Rome Number Two Rome Number One—
Jeerusalem the Golden!—
Would flog, as in the cent'ry gone
New England flogged the Old 'un.
I reckon old St. Peter's Chair,
Or what them Romans call so,
We'd ship to home from over there,
And all its fixins also.
Yankee doodle, &c.

And Pilgrims then with Peter's pence,
Which his Successor collars,
Would shortly to arrive commence,
And bring no end of dollars.
Our Pontiff he'd be, I expect,
A valuable attraction,
And every soul of every sect
Would sing with satisfaction
Yankee doodle, &c.

So in the room of that old Hoss,
Which might be soon vacated,
M'Closkey may be made the Boss
That's to be venerated.
I reckon now he's got the Hat,
That he may come to wear a
Considerable more than that,—
The ginocine Tiara!
Yankee doodle, &c.

Digitized by Google

NUPTIAL REFORM.

THE Pall Mall Gazette records a marriage in humble life, transacted with an exemplary simplicity. The bridegroom, a MR. JONES, employed at the Old Brentford Gasworks, had to be sent for thereto from Church, to which he came from his work coatless, with tucked-up shirt-sleeves, and smoking a pipe:—

"There being nobody present but the bride and another woman, JONES was asked who was to give the bride away, when, turning to the sexton, he replied, with much feeling, 'You can do that, Guv'nor.' On the conclusion of the ceremony the happy pair adjourned to a public-house, and after 'partaking of some refreshment,' they departed—the bride to her new home, and JONES to his work at the gas factory."

How glad many young men of the middle and even higher class, meditating matrimony, would be to be enabled to contract it with as little ceremony as what attended the nuptials of MR. and MRS. JONES! Of course, their customary morning dress including a coat, they would not come to Church from their employment in their mere shirt-sleeves, and if they adjourned from the altar to a public-house, it would be such an one as a decent restaurant or hotel. Thence the bridegroom, going like MR. JONES about his business, would go, after having partaken of a moderate refreshment, sober of course, and there would be nobody to remain behind drinking intoxicating liquors. The bride, satisfied to go home and wait there for her husband, would spare him all the expense of a wedding tour.

Too much praise cannot be given to MRS. JONES, and to MRS. JONES's relations, if she have any, for the readiness with which they entered into MR. JONES's views with regard to hymeneal ostentation. She is doubtless a sensible woman, and may be expected to make a wise man as happy as any husband can be who has to work for his living.

The subject of funeral reform has lately undergone much appropriate discussion in the dead season; but that of nuptial reform is equally suitable. Indeed, as a philosopher pleasantly remarked at a wedding breakfast, the marriage list in the newspapers, involving that of the births, represents the conditions necessary to those of the obituary.

MONSTERS AND BOGIES.

ARTILLERY, MR. MILTON tells us in Paradise Lost, was originally employed by a certain Generalissimo of Legions, one of which, considered to be under his special command, is that of the Inns of Court Volunteers. The original cannon appear, from MR. M.'s account, to have been monster guns, and may well be imagined to have resembled the 81-ton gun thus described in the Times:—

"The gun is mounted for proof on a sleigh or carriage composed mainly of iron—portions of the cheeks only being of wood—and carried on two six-wheeled bogie trucks. The bogies are pivoted under the sleigh by centre-pins working in square iron blocks, having springs fore and aft of each block."

The ordnance wherewithal the military Old Gentleman or Veteran, ex-Archangel, and Commander of the Rebel Hosts, assailed the Loyal troops under Major-General St. Michael, was invented by a Bogy, and constructed, as well as carried, by Bogies. It is natural to suppose that the Bogies introduced their own forms into the design of their field-pieces for ornament, like the dragons which decorate the now comparatively little, but formerly enormous, mortar in St. James's Park. A good sense of congruity and keeping was displayed in mounting the 81-ton gun on bogies. We trust that the bogy-borne gun will play Old Bogy with all at whom aggression may compel us to fire it.

GENEROSITY AND GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

ACCORDING to a letter in the Times, by MR. J. HARDCASTLE, the Trustees of Felsted Grammar School, Essex, and the Visitor, the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, have been behaving in a most generous and gentlemanlike manner to the REV. W. S. GRIGNON, Head Master of the School for nineteen years up to last June, when the Trustees and the Bishop summarily sent him about his business.

It is true MR. GRIGNON may pretend to have done the School some little service. He raised the number of boys from sixty-eight to two hundred and sixteen. Many of them have gained University and College distinctions. One of his pupils was last year's Senior Wrangler. When first MR. GRIGNON came to Felsted School, it was in a bad way. Under the clever management of a House Steward, it had fallen into debt eight hundred pounds, for which the Trustees were personally responsible. MR. GRIGNON, at their request, took the House-Stewardship on himself, paid off the debt, reduced the School expenses twenty per cent., and put an end to complaints of long standing about the diet. But then, finding double work too much for his strength, he gave the Stewardship up, so that his self-sacrifice was not entire. The Trustees hereupon appointed their own Clerk Steward. He was seventy years old, and lived six miles off. So he visited the School once a week, and his duties were almost wholly entrusted to, and equally neglected by, the Matron.

But, of course, no complaints from parents or guardians were made to the Trustees. MR. VELEY, their Steward, was also their Clerk. Complaints as to the Steward's department would have had to be carried to them through the Clerk. MR. VELEY would have had to complain of MR. VELEY. MR. VELEY is no Essex calf.

MR. GRIGNON did not follow MR. VELEY'S wise example.

In August last year diarrhœa and sore throat broke out in the School. In February last, scarlet fever. The drains, among other little matters, had been neglected. One boy, who sickened of scarlatina, was placed by the Steward or the Matron in the wardrobe-room, whence clothes were distributed to all the boys—certainly a slight mistake. All this may not have been quite the thing; but was there any occasion to make a fuss about it?

Nevertheless, in March, MR. GRIGNON sent the Trustees in a protest against the mismanagement of the School by the Matron and the House Steward. The Trustees perhaps took time to consider their reply. But MR. GRIGNON could not wait longer than till April, when he wrote a circular to the parents and guardians of the boys, disclaiming responsibility for the state of the School, and apprising them of his protest, and its failure!

That was bad enough—in the eyes of the indignant Trustees. But MR. GRIGNON was not content with that. About the same time he actually applied to the Charity Commissioners for an inquiry into the state of the School and its Trust!!

Accordingly, on the 6th of June last, the five Trustees—who ought, by the scheme of the School, to be eleven, but have omitted to fill up vacancies—met, and passed a resolution, subject to the approbation of the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, cashiering MR. GRIGNON. The Bishop approved of this noble and righteous resolution. It was communicated to MR. GRIGNON six days afterwards, when he was in the midst of a school examination.

MR. GRIGNON immediately forwarded a protest to the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER. DR. CLAUGHTON took no notice of it. MR. GRIGNON, in a fortnight, wrote to DR. CLAUGHTON again. DR. CLAUGHTON answered him through MESSRS. DAY AND HASSARD. Prompt and polite.

MR. HARDCASTLE says that MR. GRIGNON is fifty-two years old, received only £500 a-year, "is thrown on his own resources, and dismissed with a quarter's salary, with as little compunction as if he had been a drunken butler or a poaching gamekeeper." But had he not committed high treason against the majesty of the Trustees? Had he not been guilty of flat blasphemy in murmuring against their inscrutable ways? So, apparently, thought BISHOP CLAUGHTON. It is difficult to say which is the more admirable in this business—as told by MR. HARDCASTLE—the magnanimity, considerateness, and courtesy of the Trustees of Felsted School, or the behaviour of the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER. The Trustees, however, did perhaps only what might have been expected of them; but the conduct ascribed to the Bishop must be acknowledged to exceed everything that could have been imagined. It is, indeed, lovely if true.

IN-SOLENT BEHAVIOUR.—Getting too near the Royal Yacht.

Digitized by Google

"UNCO CANNY."

Noble Sportsman. "MISSED, EH?"

Cautious Keeper. "WEEL, A' WADNA GANG QUITE SAE FAUR AS TO SAY THAT; BUT A' DOOT YE HAV'NA EXACTLY HIT."

FIE! FIE!

(Aberdeen Station, Saturday, September 18, 1875.)

THE account, in the Times, of the journey of the PRINCE and PRINCESS OF WALES, on their return from Scotland to Sandringham, records the following extraordinary incident:—

"Aberdeen was reached at nineteen minutes past twelve, or one minute late. On the platform were a few of the public officials and an unusually large concourse of the general public, embracing representatives of the leading families of the county and city."

WE 'VE heard of Scottish pride,
And something have believed,
But such a scene at Aberdeen
Must show us we 're deceived;
For rank and caste disowned,
This rather stiff-backed nation
Have taught us all, both great and small,
Our duty in our Station.

The Prince's train arrived—
What met the princely gaze?
A great surprise for Royal eyes,
In these decorous days:
Officials, steady men,
The Public, in high feather,
The county swells, the city belles—
Embracing all together!

BLOWING GREAT GUNS.

THE 35-ton Gun, named at its birth "The Woolwich Infant," was a strange monster; well, the 81-ton Gun may be fairly said to be a little Stranger.

OUR EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS.

AT STEIGITON not long since, on the meeting of the School-Board, there ensued a briak debate as to the duties of their Clerk. Certain members pleading ignorance as to what they had a right to expect their Clerk to do, it was explained by the Chairman that:—

"The duties of the Clerk were to give notice of meetings, and to mention special subjects to be considered; to keep the accounts, and to have them printed twice a year; to make any returns which the Education Department asked for, or which he required, and, under any circumstances, to make them once a year. The Clerk might appear for the Board in legal proceedings, and he must keep his office open at all reasonable hours that the rate-payers might inspect the books."

In addition to these trifles, it seemed to be considered that a Clerk should be a sort of general overseer and educational policeman, as well as a man of all work to the members of the Board.

Said one speaker, somewhat shrewdly:—

"Certain duties were defined, but the Act did not prevent other duties being done by the Clerk, which it might be proper to put on him in order to save a multiplicity of officers."

Considering their multiplicity of duties, candidates for School-Board Clerkships ought to be examined, with the view of testing thoroughly their fitness for the place; and, as there seems to be no knowing what a Clerk may be called upon to do, some few "flahing" questions like the following should certainly be put to him:—

1. What is your age, and weight, and power of physical endurance?
2. Can you write shorthand, and are you acquainted with the use of the boxing-gloves and globes?
3. For how long will you be satisfied to pocket without grumbling a salary not exceeding ninety pounds a year?
4. Can you clean boots, and will you be too proud, if called upon, to do so?
5. Who dragged whom, and when, round the walls of what?
6. Explain in a clear manner, and also with conciseness, the differential calculus, the origin of the digamma, and the atomic theory as applied to neutral salts.
7. Have you any taste for Art, and does your wife prefer chintz or cretonne for the covers of her drawing-room?
8. Cite the leading cases where the legal cestui qui trust of a copyhold assignment has established a contingent claim to the remainder, under the Act abolishing the use of lease and release?
9. When were you last vaccinated, and how much did it take?
10. Have you a good temper, and are you prepared to keep your office open until midnight, for inspection by the rate-payers, and to supply them gratis with pipes and gin-and-water whenever they drop in?
11. In case of sudden illness of any Teacher in your district, could you, at five minutes' notice, undertake to give instruction in Welsh, Russian, Greek, Turkish, trigonometry, therapeutics, geography, gymnastics, Hebrew, High Dutch, singing, dancing, Chinese, and thorough bass?
12. Do you go to Church or Chapel, and at which do you sleep best?
13. Explain and give the derivations of the following:—Cephalonian, Bacchante, Spectroscope, Herzegovina, Bunkum, Chiar-oscuro, Consols, Contango, Baker's Dozen, Bosh, and Baily's Beads.
14. Does your wife wear a Chignon, and, if so, how much did she pay for it?
15. Transpose the first six bars of the music of the Spheres, pointing out, by counterpoint, their melodic progression in A minor from B flat to F in alt.
16. Who were the Old Masters, and in what Schools did they teach?
17. A. having sold a horse to B. and his co-heirs, state under what circumstances the assignees of C. can claim a limited co-partnership of the estate in tail.
18. Does your Mother know that you are out of place?
19. Can you cook accounts, and make an apple dumpling?
20. If a boy persists in saying that C-a-t spells Dog, where do you conceive that he expects to go?

M'Swiney Corrected.

WHAT LORD MAYOR M'SWINEY'S NEW CRY SHOULD HAVE BEEN.—"Faith and Holy-Father Land."

THOUGHT BY A TOURIST.—Too many COOK'S Excursionists spoil the table d'hôte.

Digitized by Google

POLO ON THE SEA.

AS IT IS TO BE PLAYED NEXT YEAR AT ALL THE FRENCH WATERING-PLACES.

BRITANNIA OBJECTS—

To the Admiralty Circular, of July 31st, to Captains of H.M. Ships, on the subject of fugitive Slaves.

"EH! what!" cries BRITANNIA, rubbing her eyes,
With a look of exceedingly startled surprise,
"'Supplementary Slave-Trade Instructions'?
I thought I had settled that little affair.
A pretty postscriptum, my Lords, I declare!
But I don't see my counterSign set anywhere,
To this newest of naval productions.

"My will, I conceived, was made clear to the world,
That, wherever my Union Jack was unfurled,
The Slave should find freedom thereunder.
That's a fair and square rule which all quibbles should quell,
But, as for this roundabout 'Circular,'—well,
It would tax a Sea-lawyer its bearings to tell:
One thing, though, is plain,—it's a blunder!

"No need for tall talk about ruling the waves,
But, at least, my 'broad rule' does not recognise Slaves,
Whether stretched o'er green land or blue ocean.
A legalised Serf on a free British ship
Is a novel conception not easy to grip.
Re-rivet the chains he has managed to slip?
I rather rebel at the notion!

"With Slave-owning powers my Sea-dogs and I
Will find it stiff work to keep terms,—if we try.
We hold them in scorn, and they hate us.
O! I fancy I see a Committee of JACKS
On a fugitive wretch coolly turning their backs,
Or holding palaver, like shore-going quacks,
With a view to 'determine his status'!

"My ships may not court the poor runaway thrall,
But, if once he's on board, upon Britons to call
Their prey to the sharks to surrender,
I fancy is coming it rather too strong.
I demur to the 'claims' of the shackle and thong,
And to 'rights' which are based on the blackest of wrong
One may be just a trifle too tender.

"Let them look to their 'chattels'! my craft were not made
To play any part in the Slave-snatching trade.
I have spent blood and bullion to burk it.
My stand has been taken, and if it should lead
To some trifle of trouble,—as well may succeed
When Honest Intent counters Villanous Greed,—
It is not my intention to shirk it.

"No, my Lords; your solicitude's thoughtful and kind,
I regret the result is not more to my mind.
When you give my old rule a new reading,
I might be consulted. At present, I hold
That your course in the case is a little too bold;
You had better hark back, for your counsels are cold,
And your glosses obscure and misleading.

"What philanthropists fought for, and legists confirm,
Shall not be evaded by wriggle and squirm,
Nice quibble, or politic paltering.
My Law is writ large for all Nations to see,—
Ashore or afloat, 'neath my Flag all are Free!
That's a very plain rule, and you'll reckon with me
If you think it requires any altering!

Riotous Religion.

THE papers have lately been enlivened with some edifying reports of "Roman Catholic Riots at Montreal." It is a wonder that the denomination thus applied to Riots has not brought out SIR GEORGE BOWYER with a protest against it. The idea that a riot can have a religion, Catholic or Protestant, appears very absurd, but the fact, nevertheless, is undeniably so; at least, wheresoever there is a Latin Race or an Irishry.

INSTANTANEOUS COMMUNICATION BETWEEN GUARD AND PASSENGERS BY RAILWAY.—A Tip!

Digitized by Google

THE "FLAG OF FREEDOM."

First Lord of the Admiralty. "A RUNAWAY SLAVE, JOHN! YOU'LL HAVE TO GIVE HIM UP, YOU KNOW! SEE OUR CIRCULAR OF 31st OF JULY."

John Bull. "GIVE 'IM UP, YER HONOUR!! AS WELL ORDER ME TO HAUL DOWN THAT THERE FLAG AT ONCE, SIR!!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

HOMEWARD BOUND.

IERPOINT—Are we materially better for our month's sojourn here?

What shall we give KATE?

Will MRS. KITTLESPARK, on the plea that we were a large family, and that the boys have been a good deal in and out, and not so observant of the scraper and mat as they might have been, make some charge at the last for the extra cleaning of the front-door steps?

Have we sufficient money to pay all our bills and take us home?

Shall we calculate exactly how much it has cost us, dividing our expenditure under different heads, and comparing our expenses here with what they would have been at Kilburn; or shall we waive all disturbing questions of finance, and rest contented with the reflection that we know now in middle life what a yawl is, have discovered a new kind of fancy bread, formed a nice acquaintance with dogfish and horse-mackerel, have been led to take an interest in the wind and the weather—which we hope to keep up in the North-Western suburbs of London—take EDMUND and EDWARD back bent on going to sea as soon as they are of an age to follow that precarious calling, and are all very brown?

Will Baby be good on the journey?

How many things shall we leave behind?

Shall we get all our fifteen packages (not to mention fresh prawns, pieces of seaweed, and cages with dormice) home safe?

How many cabs shall we require, and what will the Cabmen charge?

Shall we find the painting, papering, and cleaning at 58, Windermere Gardens, N.W., thoroughly and satisfactorily done, and quite finished?

Will absence have improved the servants, or the contrary?

Will Cook give us warning the morning after we arrive, because her present is not so good as SARAH'S?

Shall we find the cistern in good order, the gas all right, the roof sound, the spouting unexceptionable, the back garden door locked, the wardrobes and drawers undisturbed, and the wine-bin intact?

Will the garden be a wilderness?

Will the beds be well aired?

Will the joiners and masons still be hammering and knocking at No. 49, directly opposite?

What sort of weather will it be in London?

Will there be as much East wind at Kilburn as at Pierpoint?

Will it rain when we arrive?

Shall we find anybody in Town?

Shall we not, on the first evening of our return, say (children, perhaps, excepted) "After all, there is no place like home"?

Shall we feel to have very much the advantage of our friends and neighbours, the MUSKHAMS, who have stayed at home this year, or shall we, on the whole, envy them?

Will this be the very last time we shall go to the Sea?

VERY IMPORTANT!

BY some unaccountable mistake, the following "Extra Parliamentary utterances" have not been reported in the London Newspapers. Mr. Punch, ever anxious to do full justice to the wisdom of our Legislators, begs to supply the omission. It will be noticed that the following speeches do not differ materially from the orations so frequently telegraphed to the Metropolis for publication at this pleasant season of the year:—

TORYSHIRE.

On Monday last SIR PERCY PROSY, Bart. (M.P. for the Eastern Division of this County), attended a meeting of his Constituents, held in the Banqueting Hall of the Blue Lion Inn and Hotel, Dullborough. The Hon. Baronet was supported by the greater part of the Bench of Magistrates, the Town Clerk, and others of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood. So great was the interest taken in the proceedings, that at one time no less than fifteen persons were present in the magnificent saloon provided for the auspicious occasion by MR. CIDERBEER, the enterprising landlord of the Blue Lion Inn and Hotel at Dullborough.

The Hon. Baronet said that he had great pleasure in meeting his Constituents once again. Although he had not had occasion to speak in the House of Commons during the past Session, those of his Constituents who had perused the local Conservative paper of Dullborough would have noticed that his votes had been always given for those measures which had received the sanction of that Great Man, that Magnificent Statesman, that Excellent Financier, his Right Hon. friend MR. DISRAELI. ("Hear, hear!") He had much pleasure in telling them that the country was prosperous, and that, at the present moment, England, he might say Great Britain, was at peace with all nations. (Cheers.) There had been some heavy rains in the summer, but now they seemed to be enjoying fine weather. ("Hear!") This was very satisfactory. ("Hear, hear!") He could further say that the great question of granting a Government grant for the improvement of that noble structure—the Dullborough Town Pump (cheers) was now under consideration. (Enthusiastic cheering.) Nay, more, he had been assured by one of the Ministry of this great fact. (Great cheering.) He knew the question of the Dullborough Town Pump was a matter of deep interest in the County, and he was glad to be in a position to give them such welcome news. (Cheers.) The Member of the Ministry ("hear, hear!") from whom he derived his information very kindly added that the Cabinet, as a body, extended their great appreciation of the Town Pumps of Dullborough to the Pumps of Toryshire collectively and individually. ("Hear, hear!") He was pleased that a Merchant Shipping Bill had been passed, and was very well satisfied with the Budget. He had nothing more to say. (Cheers.)

After the meeting had listened to two or three speeches of purely local importance, a vote of confidence in SIR PERCY PROSY, Bart., M.P., was passed unanimously.

GLITTERBOROUGH.

On Tuesday last MR. WAGG, M.P. (of the firm of MESSRS. WAGG, CASH, AND WAGG, General Merchants), met his Constituents at the new hotel recently erected in this rapidly rising town. The magnificent saloon was crowded in every part. On the platform were the Mayor and MESSRS. THOMPSON, SMITH, SNOOKS, BROWN, JONES, and ROBINSON, MR. ALDERMAN WILKINS, and other persons distinguished in the worlds of Fashion, Literature, and Art.

MR. WAGG said that he felt like the Clown in the Christmas Pantomime when he observed "Here we are again!" (Loud laughter.) Well, he had nothing much to say. (A laugh.) His friend the Prime Minister (a laugh) had at length reached the summit of his ambition—what he might call a "Dizzy" height. (Shouts of laughter.) Peace seemed to be the order of the day—not the DEY OF ALGIERS ("hear, hear!") in China. This was most fortunate, as everybody knew that China was a very brittle article. (Loud laughter.) He was glad, therefore, that the Government had been tender with China. (Renewed laughter.) He did not think that a single Act that had received the Royal Assent during the past Session could be of any service to anyone. ("Hear, hear!") He could not give his reasons for this assertion—was he not a Liberal? (Cheers.) As a Liberal, he claimed the right to do, to say, and to think what he pleased, without consulting anybody. ("Hear!") Of course he excepted his Constituents, whose will was at all times his very sternest law. (Cheers.) As for the Session, like old Mother Hubbard's cupboard—there was nothing in it. (Shouts of laughter.)

A vote of confidence in the Hon. Gentleman was then passed in the customary manner, and shortly afterwards the meeting separated in great good humour.

POCKETBOROUGH.

On Wednesday the MARQUIS of PERKYBOY (grandson of His Grace the DUKE OF CURFEW, to whose title he is the heir) met the tenants of Pocketborough at a luncheon given in the Duke's grounds.

The Noble Marquis said that he had much pleasure in meeting his Grandfather's tenants. (Enthusiastic applause.) Their greeting was so very kindly that he wished he could call them his friends—but that he could not do, as he regarded them as his enemies. He called them enemies because he knew perfectly well that he did not in the least represent their opinions. (Murmurs.) They were enemies to the Constitution of their country. (Renewed murmurs.) He justified his assertion by pointing out to them that they made no sort of use of that noblest of institutions, the Ballot. (Loud murmurs.) His opinions, he knew, were not shared by his Grandfather. (Loud and long-continued cheering.) He told his Grandfather (renewed applause), years ago, when he (the Noble Marquis) was a boy at Eton—in fact it was in 1873—that without the Ballot the country would be lost. As to the past Session, his Constituents, or rather his Grandfather's tenants, would notice that he had been Counted Out when he had made an attempt to abolish the Established Church and the House of Lords. (Cheers.) Well, as he said before, he knew that he did not represent them. That was their fault. Why did they not get another man? (Loud murmurs.) In common fairness, however, he must warn them that so long as he retained a seat in the House of Commons he would certainly work with might and main to change England from a Kingdom into a Republic. (Loud murmurs.)

Digitized by Google

MR. PAIDWELL (Agent to His Grace the DUKE OF CURFEW) admitted that the sentiments of the Noble Marquis were perhaps a little extreme. They were charmingly expressed; but perhaps, taking everything into consideration, they could scarcely be said to be quite the sentiments of a High Tory. Now they were all High Tories in that town (loud cheers), and as High Tories he was quite sure that they would not forget that Pocketborough, from time immemorial, had been represented by the heir to the estates and title now belonging to his (MR. PAIDWELL'S) noble employer, His Grace the DUKE OF CURFEW. (Enthusiastic cheering.) He therefore begged to move a vote of entire confidence in the Noble Marquis who had so ably represented them, during the past Session, in the Junior Chamber of the Legislature.

A vote of confidence in the views of the Noble Marquis was then passed unanimously amidst much enthusiasm.

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

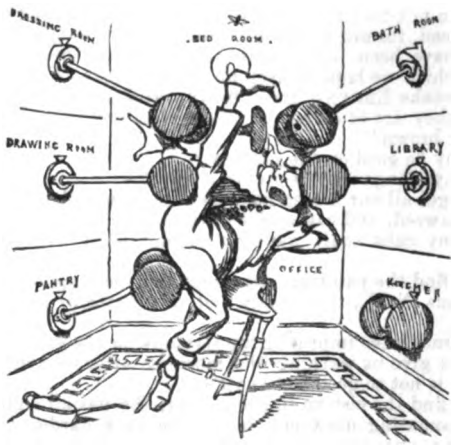
By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, ESQ., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dullidillitanty Society.

Walls have Ears.—This is a sufficient reason for not giving them tongues as well, or they might be dangerous. The tone therefore should be as low as possible, in fact a dumb pattern would be by far the best. I have seen the shapes of blue bells worked into such a paper. This might be adopted in dumb-bells.

Note.—While mentioning dumb-bells I would strongly advise all those about to furnish a house, to well consider the subject of bell-hanging and bell-ringing. Why should we have those startling sounds disturbing your slumber, frightening you out of your repose, and startling you at your studies? No, I have a new plan of dumb-bells, which I think will be the invention of the age.

Your wires (electric) should all work in one room, and one servant, a page boy, should be kept to attend solely and only to the bells.

At the end of each wire is a dumb-bell, and the boy sits on a stool in the centre of the small office down-stairs.



SECTIONS SHOWING ACTION OF DUMB-BELLS.

1. Dressing-Room.	2. Bed-Room.	3. Bath-Room.
4. Drawing-Room.	5. Dining-Room.	6. Library.
7. Pantry.	8. Bell's Messenger Office.	9. Kitchen.

1. Gentleman in a hurry ringing for his boots.
2. Lady ringing for her cup of tea.
3. Gentleman ringing to say he has turned the hot water on and can't turn it off again.
4. Lady ringing to show visitors out.
5. Gentleman ringing to know why he is being kept waiting for his pudding.
6. Gentleman ringing to know what the dickens they've done with his blotting-paper.
7. Butler and footman discussing politics.
9. Cook, housemaid, and ladies-maid entertaining their cousins the civil and military.
8. The Dumb-bell Boy.

DUMB-BELL BOY SEATED. NO BUSINESS BEING TRANSACTED.

THE DUMB-BELL SYSTEM IN FULL OPERATION.

Having for the time exhausted this portion of the subject of bells, I leave my casus belli—this joke is a side-board splitter, calculated to set a table in a roar—and return for awhile to the peaceful topic of paper patterns and walls.

(To be continued.)

PUNCH ON THE BRIDGE.

(Common-sense Counsel for Common-Councilmen.)

PUNCH "stood on the bridge at midnight," when Big Ben was tolling the hour,
And an Autumn moon was gleaming through the mists above the Tower.
The Bridge was that self-same structure on whose wreck MACAULAY'S Maori
Will sit to portray, at no distant day, St. Paul's as a ruin hoary.

Thinks Mr. Punch—"Should that Maori bring a bit of the Bridge his view in,
'Twere well that he and his public should see the grandeur of greatness in ruin.
But if these confounded Councilmen are allowed to mess and mull,
What unlimited scorn critics yet unborn will heap on the late JOHN BULL!

"Methinks I hear the Sketcher's sneer, his pencil as fast he plies,
'O land of WREN and RENNIE, thou wert wealthy, but not wise!
Yon dome is a decent dome, indeed, in contour and proportion;
But the Bridge—O buried London, what a nondescript abortion!

Digitized by Google

SYMPATHY.

Plain-featured Party, who is a strong advocate for Cremation, begs his Friend will see that his remains are submitted to that process, in case of his sudden death.

His Friend. "ALL RIGHT, OLD MAN. BUT—A—HADN'T YOU BETTER WAIT TILL THE FIFTH OF NOVEMBER?"

MISTAKES ABOUT SCOTLAND.

(Contributed by a Converted Cockney.)

IT is a mistake to believe that every Scotchman, when he goes to Edinburgh, immediately walks down Princes Street clad in the ancient costume of the Highlanders.

It is a mistake to believe that the pièce de résistance at every Scotch dinner-party is a Haggis.

It is a mistake to believe that a Scotchman does not enjoy a joke every bit as much as an Englishman.

It is a mistake to believe that a Scotch Sabbath in the country is a whit more triste than an English Sunday in the provinces.

It is a mistake to believe that a Scotchman sets a greater value upon his "bawbee" than an Englishman upon his shilling or an American upon his dollar.

It is a mistake to believe that inns in Scotland are dearer and less comfortable than hotels in England.

It is a mistake to believe that we have a City in England that can compare favourably (from an architectural point of view) with the town of Edinburgh.

It is a mistake to believe that it always rains in the Isle of Skye.

It is a mistake to believe that there are no more "Fair Maids" in the houses of Perth.

It is a mistake to believe that Hampstead Heath is as beautiful as Dunkeld.

It is a mistake to believe that the Caledonian Canal is at all like the Serpentine.

It is a mistake to believe that Aberdeen is less imposing in appearance than Chelsea or Islington.

It is a mistake to believe that the countrymen of SCOTT and BURNS do not appreciate the works of SHAKSPEARE, MILTON, BYRON, DICKENS, THACKERAY, and TENNYSON.

And, lastly (this is added to the Cockney's list by the wisest Sage of this or any other age), it is the greatest mistake of all to believe that Mr. Punch does not like and respect (in spite of an occasional joke made at their expense) the kindly, homely, sound-hearted people who live North of the Tweed.

A LITTLE DIALOGUE AT "THE C. S. C. STORES."

"AUSTRALIAN Beef has gone up,
I'm sorry to see, MRS. BROWN."
"Alas! my dear MRS. SMITH,
With us it has never gone down!"

"'And yet 'tis written that once it stood, the pride of the Thames that washed it,
Till a league of Common Councilmen—the boobies!—went and boshed it.
JOHN BULL, no doubt was a Trader stout, but methinks it seems a pity
That tasteless greed had so tight a grip on the purse-strings of his City.'"

Quoth Mr. Punch, "This will never do! These turtle-gulping Vandals
Must not be permitted to perpetrate this sorriest of scandals.
JOHN'S happiest part is not High Art, and Æsthetics rather fog him,
But to make him kick at this sort of trick, there is only need to jog him.

"I, Punch, must play the Pontifex, and quash this skinflint quorum;
(The only bridge they should meddle with is the old Pons Asinorum.)
On rival plans, and piers, and spans, let the rival C.E.'s squabble,
But a bridge like this is no thing, I wis, for the dolts to botch and cobble.

"Trade must have way, and if JOHN 's to pay, he has cash, and is good to give it;
But he shan't be lured into bogus schemes by the spell of a gilded rivet.
Though boiler-plate be a blessed thing, and the paint-pot Sham's sheet-anchor,
Yet the patchwork span these potterers plan might inspire a Saint with rancour.

"The Gradgrind theory's sway is wide in this money-grubbing grim age;
But a bridge as heterogeneous as KING NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S image
Is a quite superfluous eyesore, a gratuitous concession
To the Demon of Utter Ugliness which holds us in possession.

"Up, up, æsthetic RUSKIN, then! Come forth with lash and lecture,
Thou foe of jobs and jumbles and hybrid Architecture!
Thy scourge and Punch's bâton, JOHN, together plied, must trounce ill,
If they do not wake to wisdom e'en a Court of Common Council."

CONSERVATIVE EDUCATION.

MR. PUNCH,

SIR,—I hear people call the present Ministry Tories. Sir, I say they are not even Conservatives. Here is MR. CROSS actually opening an Educational Bazaar at Orwell, and making a speech in which he tells workpeople that they might as well starve their children as not send them to school! MR. FORSTER could not have said more, and I don't see a pin to choose between FORSTER and CROSS, nor indeed between DISRAELI and GLADSTONE, for the matter of that. Education! Why, wasn't it DIZZY himself who boasted that he had educated his Party, and now his Party begins to talk, not only of educating the People, but of compelling them to be educated. He has given them a "Liberal education" with a vengeance. But he hasn't educated me. I hold to the belief that popular education is as dangerous politically as it is pecuniarily expensive. It will only make the working classes dissatisfied with their lot in life. Don't tell me education will prevent drunkenness. A sufficient preventive of drunkenness would be the Stocks, if we had a genuine Conservative and Tory Government to revive them amongst other good old Institutions insanely abolished. I know there is no hope of such Conservative legislation as that. Some say CROSS is what they call in advance of his colleagues; but, no doubt, they will soon all give in to the cry for education to keep in office—the time-servers! They 're all alike to

Yours, in disgust,

AN UNEDUCATED TORY.

Digitized by Google

PREPARATION!

Parson's Daughter (to the Squire's Keeper). "WHAT ARE YOU DOING WITH THE PHEASANTS, MUGGINS?"

Keeper. "WELL, MISS, THERE'S A LOT O' CITY GENTS A COMIN' DOWN WITH MASTER TO SHOOT ON THE FIRST, SO I 'M A TAKIN' A FEW O' THEIR FLIGHT FEATHERS OUT!"

GENTLEMEN HELPS.

(Apply to Punch's Registration Office.)

REGINALD DEUCRACE wants an Engagement in a decent Family. Snobs objected to, and needn't come bothering. He doesn't intend to do any dirty work, and he is going to get up when he likes; but in return for a liberal salary, he will teach his Employer any or every game of cards that exists, give him a few wrinkles for Pool, make him a book on the next Derby, and teach him to mix American drinks.

MEDICUS (Middlesex Hospital) has studied this question, and sees that Helps are only to be used when there can be three or four of them. He knows three other first-rate fellows (all ploughed in last Exam.) who would be very happy to join him, and get an Engagement in a comfortable house (as their present lodgings are beastly), where there is a billiard-table. In return for their grub and bed, they will all be delighted to perform operations on their Employer, to write him as many prescriptions as he likes, and if they kill him, will dissect him in the most artistic manner. Troublesome dogs or cats in the neighbourhood promptly vivisected. N.B.—No old frumps, or Ladies who object to Beer or Birdseye, need apply.

HON. FITZROY PLANTAGENET has heard of this sort of thing, and thinks it will suit him down to the ground. He has no objection to living in anybody's house, and being treated as one of the Family, if he is paid a pot of money for it.

F. O. CLARK wants an Engagement in a Provincial Family desirous of entering Society. His terms are high, but he is worth the money, having been in good Society all his life. He will teach the men of the family to walk, talk, bow, ride, and generally behave themselves everywhere, from the ring at Doncaster to a ball at Buckingham Palace. He will impart instruction to the girls in dancing, flirting, and polite conversation. If his efforts meet with success, he will furnish his employers with some good introductions.

JOHN (generally called JACK) HARKAWAY, having come a howler over the Leger, is stumped. Wishes to come across a muff, who wants it taken out of his horses. Doesn't mind tooling a drag or tandem in the Park, but objects to a one-horse brougham. Will drive his Master to fires, but won't wait outside theatres, and will be blowed if he 'll put on livery.

WOOD B. BENEDICT thinks it 's all very well talking about ninety million (he is not quite certain about the figures) superfluous women, but there seem to be a jolly lot of superfluous men. He is one. He has got five hundred a year, and only spends a thousand, but he wants to marry and settle down, only the girls of the present day are so sharp. If any of this superfluous stock (under forty, and with more than two thousand pounds a year) will marry him, he don't mind. P.S.—He never advertised before, but, while he is about it, will do the right thing. N.B.—Reduction made on taking a quantity.

AN UNLUCKY OMISSION.

IT is much to be regretted—considering the comments called forth by the letter which COLONEL PONSONBY, by HER MAJESTY'S command, lately addressed to the Commodore of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club—that the letter was not printed in its entirety. It was written on two pages, the second of which seems to have been detached by some unlucky accident before the letter reached the papers.

Punch is glad to be able to supply the missing passage:—

"At the same time, the QUEEN has commanded me to remind all Officers of Her Majesty's Navy of the importance, especially in the navigation of much-frequented waters, of keeping a careful look-out, and never, under any circumstances, exceeding such a rate of speed as will leave them in thorough control of their vessels. Above all, the QUEEN hopes the Officers of her Navy will bear in mind that the maritime rule of the road—according to which vessels under steam shall give way to vessels under sail, as being less manageable—admits of no exception, whatever be the dignity of the flag or rank of the passengers on board of the vessel on which steam is employed."

Had this passage of the letter accompanied the portion already made public, we should probably have heard nothing of the disagreeable comments provoked by the publication of the first part only, without the context.

Digitized by Google

A STRUGGLE FOR SUPREMACY.

SCENE—A French Shop at the Sea-side.

Young Lady (wishing to improve her French). "O—ER—ESKER VOOS AVVY——"
Tradesman (wishing to show off his English). "O YES, MEESS—SAIRTENLY!"
Young Lady. "ALORE VOOLY VOO ONVOYAY——" Tradesman. "VATEVARE YOU VILL PLEASE, MEESS!—VARE?"
Young Lady. "ER—JE DEMURY ROO DE L'ECKEW, NEWMERO——" Tradesman. "VAT NOMBARE, MEESS?"
Young Lady. "O, KATTER-VANG-KANGS; VIZERVEE LE BEWRO DE——"
Tradesman. "YES, MEESS—IN FAICE OF ZE OFFECE OF POST.—VAT A BEAUTIFOOL TIME IT MEKS TO-DAY!" &c., &c., &c.

THE LATEST FASHION.

SCENE—Pall Mall. TIME—Three P.M. Perfect Swell discovered lounging down the shady side. He wears the costume of "a Gentleman of the period." To him enter Imperfect Swell, attired in a suit of huge cheque dittos and a Prussian Helmet wideawake hat. They encounter one another.

Imperfect Swell (surprised, but hearty). Hallo, you here! How are you?

Perfect Swell (annoyed, but polite). How are you? (Trying to avoid Imperfect Swell.) Good-bye. See you again soon.

Imperfect Swell (laughing). I don't think you will for some time. Fact is, I came from Switzerland yesterday, and to-morrow am off to the Highlands. Only passing through, you know.

Perfect Swell (making another attempt to get away). Hope you'll enjoy yourself. Good-bye.

Imperfect Swell (not to be put off). But I say, look here. Why are you wearing a frock-coat and all that sort of thing, eh? Been to a wedding?

Perfect Swell. No.

Imperfect Swell (surprised). No! Then why do you wear 'em?

Perfect Swell. I am wearing them, I suppose, because every fellow wears them. I mean to say (looking at Tourist costume with intention), they seem to be the sort of things most fellows are wearing just now.

Imperfect Swell (subdued). Really! Well, you see, I've been away such a long time, that I'm quite out of it. But, I say—what are you doing here? Passing through, eh?

Perfect Swell. O dear no. Been staying in Town for the last three weeks.

Imperfect Swell. Come, you are joking! Staying in Town in October!

Perfect Swell. Of course. Everybody here. But I am so sorry. Really must run away—promised to meet a fellow at PRINCE'S at four. Ta, ta! [Exit, with a sigh of relief.

Imperfect Swell. Everybody in Town! Well, then, the Highlands must wait!

[Exit, to "wake up" his Tailor. Later in the day he dines at his Club (established 187-), in full evening costume, to the surprise of his friends, and the envy of his acquaintances.

MORE CIVIC IMPROVEMENTS!

IN consequence of the very successful manner in which the plan for the degradation of London Bridge has been devised and accepted, several proposals for the further improvement of the Metropolis will be brought forward at the next meeting of the Common Council:—

1. To avoid the détour of St. Paul's Churchyard, it will be proposed to throw open the Cathedral as a public thoroughfare. Carriages and carts will pass through at a walking pace.

2. Owing to the complaints made by several members of the Common Council, who are also members of St. Stephen's Club, of the interruption to their slumbers by Big Ben, a suggestion will be made to the First Commissioner of Works to pull down the Clock Tower, and melt the bells into something useful.

3. Temple Bar being both dangerous and unsightly, it will be proposed to leave it in its present condition.

4. It will be proposed to excommunicate Punch for having dared to impugn the taste of the Common Council!

Digitized by Google

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME:

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, ESQ., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

THE Wall-flower Pattern for a ball-room is charming.

Of course you will decide what sort of ball-room it is to be before settling your pattern.

Shall it be a cricket-ball-room or a tennis-ball-room? A soft ball-room, or an elastic ball-room? Patterns are at once suggested by these distinctive appellations.

Summer Room.—Decorate this cool apartment with a frieze all round. Get a friezingly polite artist to do it for you. You can speak of this as "A*n ice* room." If you don't speak of it like this, you won't have your little joke, and you must have your little joke. [N.B.—You needn't speak of it at all unless you like.]

A modern writer on paper patterns says there's "nothing so dreary as an unrelieved pattern." I beg to differ from him; an unrelieved Sentry is far more dreary than an unrelieved pattern. If it's damp, the Sentry, unrelieved, must stay where he is; not so a pattern of unrelieved colour on a wall, which, in the damp, can run, and ultimately go away altogether.

However, if you want to be kind to a fault, you can relieve your patterns as they do the sentries at certain times of the day. The Artist can (if he likes, and you can shoot him if he won't do what you want) indicate this idea on the walls of the room by portraying a soldier saluting his sergeant and guard, and saying, with SHAKSPEARE (who need not be in the picture), "For this relief, much thanks."

Gold.—Gold can be judiciously introduced into papers. Gold can do anything it likes, in fact. The effect on the papers will be—well, start a daily paper, and see for yourself. Experientia, &c.

Having omitted to make any allusion to furniture during this disquisition on papers, I consider it advisable to introduce at this point a simple rule—forming part of my present Art Grammar—with regard to Furniture Verbs, which are divided into Regular, Irregular, and Defective.—The Regular is divided into regularly good and regularly bad. The rule is to avoid the latter.

The Irregular chiefly applies to clocks, which are, of course, included in the items of furnishing.

The Defective will be evident from the accompanying illustrations.

1. The Necessity Table. "Necessitas non habet Legs."
2. The Old Greenwich Pensioner Chair. Lost a leg. Lost an arm.

You send one to be mended. The Carpenter tells you that it is "weak in the back." To which you will reply, "Then it won't be back in a week?" This is a side-splitter which will send him into tight fits.

With the above furniture "thrown in," I can now beg your attention for a very few moments to the important question of

Mural Decorations.—There are intra-mural and extra-mural decorations. The latter are divided into two classes—(1) those extra-mural decorations which you put up yourself but don't want, and which are simply extra; and (2) those put up for you, outside chiefly, by streets boys gratuitously.

These latter (specimens of which may be seen on the Pompeian remains, and belonged also to the earliest school-time, or out-of-school-time, of youthful Egyptian arts) consist of such designs as a portrait of yourself (not generally flattering), suspended in the air to a gallows, after the model of the hangman whom Mr. Punch, in the old legitimate show, hangs on his own gallows-tree, with some legend underneath, professing to give his (the artist's) opinion on you personally, as, for instance, "SMITH is a fool!" "Old SMITH is a Hass!" and so forth.

Intra-mural decoration of the same genre will be supplied gratis, if you have a small family in your house, and allow them lead pencils. They will practise spelling on your walls. Encourage this talent if you will. By so doing, you may be rearing up pupils of a school of Decorative Art of which your countrymen will be proud (a "Proud Countryman" would be a fine subject for the wall of a rustic villa, or would make a good sign for an old inn), and, if this satisfies you,—you are very easily satisfied, and at a small cost.

(To be continued.)

MACBETH AT THE LYCEUM.

THERE is little to be said about MR. IRVING'S Macbeth which has not been said already, with quite unusual accord, by the critics in the papers. It is a picturesque and energetic performance, based upon and working out a very distinct conception of the murderous Scottish thane, as what the Scotch call a "fey" man; that is, a man borne helplessly along in a career of crime under the sway of an irresistible fate. But MR. IRVING seems to have overlooked, or not to admit, that the impressiveness and pathos of such a spectacle depends mainly on our sense of the height of nobleness from which the "fey" man has fallen; and that the strength of the tide which sweeps him down will be gauged involuntarily by our feeling of the thews and sinews with which the swimmer buffets and bears up against it. Those who can conceive SHAKSPEARE'S Macbeth as thin, pale, and haggard in face, meagre almost to emaciation in frame, shrill and high-pitched or hollow of voice, feverish and restless of movement, and hysteric of temperament—those who can clothe in such hectic and sickly flesh and blood that "minion of valour," that "Bellona's bridegroom" who drives in flying swarms rebel kernes and gallowglasses before him, and unseams the merciless Macdonwald from nave to chaps—the Thane whose praises, as a valiant warrior, are poured out, post on post, before the king, till he acknowledges him chief of his chiefs—the noble Macbeth, who has "won golden opinions from all sorts of men"—may be prepared to accept MR. IRVING'S impersonation, if not as consistent with the text of SHAKSPEARE as it stands, at least as within the limits of fair psychological and histrionic interpretation.

But all must see at once that this is Macbeth without the background of stalwart strength and material courage against which his murderous deeds, if they are to have any relief, must stand bloody off; it is, as has been well said, an "abject" Macbeth, exhibiting before us, in the utmost elaboration, the extremities of physical terror, and the most palpable and pitiable writhings and wrenchings of remorse. And, as in Hamlet, MR. IRVING expunged those passages of the text which he found in the way of his interpretation, so, in Macbeth, the introductory scene, of which Macbeth's fighting feats are the theme, is bodily struck out, and we lose even our old friend, "the bleeding sergeant," because, for the actor's purpose, the thought of Macbeth as a mighty warrior must not be called up in the spectators' mind.

MR. IRVING has gallantly—whether wisely or not is another matter—chosen in Macbeth a part, with which every one of his personal peculiarities seems to jar. Now there are some physical barriers from which the utmost histrionic energy and courage must fall back baffled and beaten. Such a barrier nature seems to have raised between the part of Macbeth and the person of MR. IRVING.

He is, by physique and temperament, absolutely unfitted to embody a rude, stalwart, fierce, fighting, northern warrior of those stormy times when gracious Duncan ruled. His thews and sinews seem unequal to the wielding of heavy bill and battle-axe—his body to the weight of bull's-hide targe and ringed byrnie. The exhibition of physical terror and cowering, shrieking remorse, with no suggestion of strength and manhood behind it, becomes repulsive. We turn from it with a kind of loathing, largely dashed with contempt.

Digitized by Google

Even his courage in the last Act—when he is tied to the stake, and, bear-like, must fight the course—is feverish, tetchy, and irritable, more like the waspish petulance of an angry sick woman than the concentrated fury of a strong man driven to despair.

In the presence of this pervading character of Mr. Irving's conception, all details of odd or ungraceful habits of pose, or movement of body and limbs, all peculiarities and tricks of elocution—the sudden shrillings or sinkings of voice, the guttural slurring of some lines, or the long-drawn dragging out of others,—are hardly worth insisting on. They are only to be noted as mannerisms already fast growing into affectations, which, like the abuses attacked by Mr. Burke's famous Bill, "have increased, are increasing, and ought to be diminished."

Miss Bateman's Lady Macbeth had many points of high excellence. She, too, has peculiarities of elocution which sometimes detract from the effect she aims at—as in the Sleep-walking Scene, the slow, drop-by-drop utterance of her "Who-would-have-thought-the-old-man-had-so-much-blood-in-him!" But her strong marking of the different moods of the wicked woman, from the intense determination of the First Act to the breaking strength and failing spirit of the Third, was both original in conception, and powerful in execution. But she should distinguish, by a more decided change of voice and manner, her evil brooding over Macbeth's letter from her triumphant greeting as she throws herself into his arms; and she should be more careful to assume a serpentine smoothness and lowly courtesy of subject and hostess as she bows before Duncan.

Punch must again protest, as in the case of Hamlet, against arbitrary changes of scene running in the teeth of the text.

What is the meaning of bringing Duncan and his train in front of Macbeth's Castle by moonlight, and setting the Castle at a distance which deprives of all meaning the reference to the martlets' nests under its eaves and cornices? Is it not evident that Shakspeare meant to conjure up in the minds of his audience of the Globe—he had no scene-painters—a close view of the grim, grey Castle front, basking serenely in the pleasant air of summer afternoon, as if in contrast to the dark deeds of blood and horror about to be wrought within it after set of sun.

And if there must be not a "moving grove" only in the last Act, but moving miles of the country between Birnam and Dunsinane, at least the management might give us the comfort of a set-piece to mask the raw, straight edges of the shifting cloths.

Punch must congratulate Mrs. Bateman on her courage in getting rid of the chorus of witches, even at the cost of Matthew Locke's music, and bringing back the weird sisters to the original mystic three—The Fates of Macbeth—the Eumenides of modern tragedy.

RAISING THE VANGUARD.

Since the Court-Martial has pronounced sentence, Mr. Punch has received the following communications on this interesting subject, which are published for what they are worth:—

Sir,

It appears to me that the Vanguard might be raised by attaching twenty-five thousand balloons to her hull by means of chain-cables. The only difficulty would be, when and where to drop her.

Yours extraneously,

Earlswouldn't; Sunday out. Balloonatic.

Dear P.,

Concerning the proposed floating of the Vanguard, could not the experiment be tried of attaching to her, at low tide, a number of those gentlemen who are so clever in floating Public Companies? The Blue Book of the Foreign Loans Committee recently published will suggest the eminent members of the commercial world whose extraordinary powers of flotation especially qualify them for the task. Even should they fail to float the vessel, and, in the attempt, go under themselves, the loss would hardly be irreparable. Yours,

City, Sept. 19. In Corpore Vili.

Sir,

I have given intense thought to the problem of raising the hull of the Vanguard, and, up to the present time, I have come to the firm conclusion that one of the obstacles to successfully floating it is its great weight; and another may be found in the fact that there is a large hole in the vessel's side.

Hoping my humble efforts may assist any ideas which may have been formed by others on the subject, I have the honour to be, Sir,

Yours reflectively,

A. Noodle.

The Owl's Nest, Bedford. Monday.

Dear Mr. Punch,

That there are difficulties to be met in raising the Vanguard cannot be disputed, but with money and encouragement there are few things impossible to the modern Engineer. Let the Government place £1,000,000 at my entire command, and give me a baronetcy before I commence operations, and I think I may promise that the task of floating the noble ship would appear less formidable than it does at present to

Yours faithfully,

Archimedes Jones, M.I.C.E.

Anvil Lodge, Hammersmith, Sept. 28, 1875.

My dearest Punch,

Don't laugh at me, if I seem foolish: I was always a giddy thing. Promise you won't make fun of me, and I'll tell you an idea I have of how to make that Iron thing—you know, the something "Guard"—I mean how to make her swim again. I'd have a great big Boyton's dress to put her in. It must be a large one, of course. Am I very silly?

Yours affectionately,

Shrimpton-cum-Prawnly, Goose Day. Arabella.

Dear Sir,

I have a firm belief that successive shocks, from seaward, produced by a huge battery charged with a sufficient number of Electric Eels, would have the effect of driving the Vanguard into shallow water. Hoping you will not think me officious in making this suggestion,

I am, Your galvanic Servant,

Stockton-on-Tees, Friday. Electrician.

Sir,

I have a splendid idea for floating the Vanguard, which I mean to keep to myself. Yours sincerely,

Aut Face aut Tace.

P.S.—Might not water-tight doors be called "Sink Ports"?

Dear Old Boy,

My recent experiences in endeavouring to raise a hundred pounds convince me that the Vanguard must remain where she is. If you can drop me a fiver do. Yours ever, Impecuniosus.

P.S.—I have no present address. Direct—"Vanguard," G. P. O

My Dear Punch,

Of course, long before this, you have come to the same conclusion as myself with respect to raising the Vanguard.

You may just as well try to raise the Devil.

Nothing can be done except to censure the Iron Duke and give the Vanguard what the Court Martial has already given her Captain and principal Officers, Admiral Tarleton and the Captain of the Iron Duke, in other words, everybody concerned in her loss—a good "blowing up." Yours, sternly, Sept. 30th, 1875. Common Sense.

Michaelmas Day, 1875.

Corn may be down and Coal may be dull,
And Indigo puzzle the clever;
But Cotton they say, in the City to-day,
Is soon to be higher than ever.

With him in the Chair of London's Lord Mayor,
He who talk after dinner fears,
Of Mansion House fare may partake without scare—
He'll have Cotton in his ears!

Digitized by Google

AWKWARD.

The Aristocratic Jones (rather ashamed of his loud acquaintance, Brown). "YOU MUST EXCUSE ME, BUT IF THERE'S ONE THING IN THE WORLD I PARTICULARLY OBJECT TO, IT'S TO HAVING ANYBODY TAKE MY ARM!"

Brown. "ALL RIGHT, OLD FELLOW!—YOU TAKE MINE!"

A GIANT'S JUBILEE.

(Fiftieth Anniversary of the opening of the first Passenger-Railway, Darlington, Sept. 27, 1825.)

"Now, my lads, I will tell you that I think you will live to see the day, though I may not live so long, when railways will come to supersede almost all other modes of conveyance in this country—when mail coaches will go by railway, and railroads will become the great highway for the King and all his subjects. The time is coming when it will be cheaper for a working-man to travel on a railway than to walk on foot. I know that there are great and almost insurmountable difficulties that will have to be encountered, but what I have said will come to pass as sure as we live."—STEPHENSON'S post-prandial prophecy.

O, a flourishing brood are our latter-day Titans,
The children colossal of Iron and Steam;
Though as black as Old Nox, and as ugly as Sheitans,
These promising pets of BRITANNIA may seem.
One strenuous babe, spite of croaking and snarling,
His Jubilee reaches, still crescent and stout,
And so they at Darlington drink to their darling,
Whom STEPHENSON dandled, and HACKWORTH brought out.

He seemed but a rickety bairn to his gossips,
His shape was uncouth, and his action but slow.
Would he flourish or fade? 'Twas the merest of toss-ups,
The quidnuncs opined, fifty autumns ago.
But his sponsors had faith in their black-visaged bantling,
And now, though a youth, as these Titans count years,
He beats ancient Brontes in stature and scantling,
Briareus in grasp, and in speed has no peers.

Fifty years! Men are grey who first saw him at play;
His sponsors are dead, his detractors are dumb;
And he, to the sprawling young gnome of that day,
Seems as huge Hurlothrumbo to Hop-o'-my-Thumb!
Fifty years! and "Owd Neddy," who took him in tow,
The swart "Puffing Billy" he fostered might fail
To detect in the iron-thewed Titan we know,
Our Hercules-Puck, with the thousand-leagued trail!

Our good-natured giant, he's patient and pliant,
Will fetch and will carry at anyone's hest,
A glutton at toil, of fatigue he's defiant,
A sleepless Colossus who never needs rest.
No henchman so stout for so humble a hire works,
What wonder men cheer at his Jubilee fête!
And toast him in wine with rhetorical fireworks,
Our sturdiest, steadiest Servant of State!

Yet giants we know have their weaknesses ever,
So soft in the caput, or weak at the knees,
And our young Colossus, though potent and clever,
Plays cantrips at times little likely to please.
Though our huge Iron-Horse is not vicious or idle,
Yet to make him run straight, and steer clear of a spill,
He needs a stout rein, a strong hand on the bridle,
And brain!—the Bonassus!—to guide his good will.

Small blame to the juvenile Titan, but trainers
Who boast of their favourite's power and pace,
If they hope of the "National Stakes" to be gainers,
Must learn that good jockeyship counts in the race.
This sturdiest servant of civilisation
May stay to the end if they handle him well;
But we want fewer "spills" ere a satisfied nation
Claps hands to this chorus of whistle and bell.

We may drink to the health of our Giant of Fifty—
Punch empties his bumper—yet gladly would find
His trainers of tall-talk a trifle more thrifty,
While yet in the race Matter handicaps Mind.
Brute force is not all, nor material progress;
While soul's at a stand, stoutest sinews are vain,
And Civilisation an iron-toothed ogress
Our Titans may toil for, but cannot sustain.

Digitized by Google

THE GOLDEN WEDDING.

(Mr. Punch's present to Vulcan and Vapour on the 50th Anniversary of their happy Union.)

Mr. P. "LET'S HOPE, MY DEAR FRIENDS, THAT BEFORE THE NEXT ANNIVERSARY YOU'LL HAVE BROUGHT BLOCK AND BRAKE BOTH TO PERFECTION."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

AMONG THE FISH.

(Meditations in the Brighton Aquarium.)

BEWARE the gigantic Turtle. He is "dangerous to touch." Clearly, therefore, this interesting creature may be viewed in three different lights—as a thing "to eat, drink, and avoid." What will be his ultimate fate? Will the Directors and their Staff always be proof against temptation? Suppose some morning he is missing—and the coroner's jurisdiction does not extend to these poor friendless animals — what grave suspicion will rest on those who have access to the building at times when the public are not admitted! Watch long enough, and you will see an instructive sight—Aldermen, Common Councilmen, and other great municipal functionaries devouring the Turtle—with their eyes.

Aquariums make us acquainted with strange tankfellows. When the Golden Eel thus unbosomed itself about the Mud Fish to a friend of both parties, it had reason on its side. A compromise has since been effected. So long as the Mud Fish has the privilege of being the companion of the Golden Eel, it is only to be accosted by its scientific name—Lepidosiren.

Have Ichthyologists reflected what may be the effect of captivity upon the fish? Do the Crabs become more crabby, and the Chub more chubby? Do the Carp carp at the passing remarks of the tench, and are the Plaice more or less common-place than when they had the range of the Channel? We trust there is no foundation for the report that the Cray-fish occasionally go crayzy.

The Company should provide intelligent and well-informed persons, of good manners and address, to guide the pronunciation of visitors. Even the best of men may go astray when he is confronted with the Axolotl for the first time; and we know that Anemones and Zoophytes have been stumbling-blocks to many generations, and are yet far from being household words. But there is no excuse for anyone calling a Gurnard a "Cunard," or making the g in "Conger" soft. It would increase the public comfort, if one of the officials were to proclaim in a loud voice the proper pronunciation of Octopus every half-hour during the day.

Do not raise your expectations too high. Be prepared for a little disappointment. The Sea-horses are under fourteen hands. It was hardly fair to the Paradise Fish to give them such a pretentious name. The Telescope Fish are scarcely six feet long, and the Boar Fish, whatever rumours you may have heard to the contrary, show no indications of tusks.

Great sympathy was expressed for the Toper. Not a drop of anything to drink but salt water. Common humanity might surely prompt the management to do something to alleviate such sufferings. One suggestion we will presume to offer. Put Bass in the same tank with Toper, and there will be no more discontent. The Monk Fish might be safely trusted to see that there was no approach to excess.

Smokers should not neglect the Pipe Fish, and an important section of the artisan class will do well to make acquaintance with the Weevers.

We could not learn whether the Skates had been to the Rink.

The Herrings and Sprats are together. We waited some time, hoping to see a long standing question satisfactorily settled, but we had to leave without seeing a sprat catch a herring.

Happy Aquarium which shall first exhibit a live Sea Serpent, and happy those who may hold shares in the concern! The only chance for any rival establishment would be to secure a Mermaid.

A NASTY DOSE.—The thing to put London Bridge to-rights (according to the Common Council)—"GREGORY'S Mixture."

A DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN.

(A Chapter from Punch's "Pilgrim's Progress.")

PUNCH dreamed a dream.

He was walking in a dreary and desolate country. On either side of the dark-coloured road were stunted, leafless hedges. Every now and again there was a mile-stone, and once or twice he saw a pool of murky and stagnant water. The sky was hidden from sight by heavy lowering clouds, and although he knew that it was mid-day, everything seemed to him to tell of night. The hedges were black, and so were the mile-stones; so, also, were the pools of stagnant water. In the distance he could see tall factory chimneys belching out huge volumes of smoke, and the air was dense with a yellow and loathsome fog.

And as he went his way, he came upon a house—a house which those who saw it might have called a hovel. The glass of the windows was shattered, or replaced by rags or boards; the door was broken, and all but hingeless. The little garden space was full of weeds, and in the weeds lay broken bottles.

Punch was curious. He pushed aside the broken door, and looked in. He saw a miserable room nearly bare of furniture. The table had three legs—one shorter than the others. A couple of tottering chairs, a heap of rags to represent a bed, and the inventory was complete. Seated in this room were a couple of half-naked children, with hollow cheeks and large hungry eyes. As the door was pushed open, these children raised their hands in silence, and Punch felt, as he looked upon them, that they had no strength to cry, even for the bread for want of which they were pining away.

Punch was glad that he was only dreaming. He left the hovel, and walked on. Again the road seemed to be utterly deserted. The factory chimneys were still adding their volumes of smoke to the dense overhanging clouds. He saw no living creature. He murmured to himself, "Where are the men of this strange country? Where are its women?"

His question was answered by a voice from under the smoke-cloud.

"The women are over yonder, working," and a dirty finger was pointed at the factories.

"Do you work?"

"O, yes," was the reply. "I am a Fogger. It is I who beats down the wages of the wives. You see, women can't combine like men, and I can get them to take almost anything. Lor bless you, they don't stand out for tommy and beer. They think themselves lucky if they can get anything to feed their half-starving families with! We give them eight shillings, instead of twelve—and quite enough too, for the sort of work they do."

"Is it not good work?"

"Well, it's hard work." And then came a laugh. "Making chain-cables is no joke. But, as to its being good work, well, that must be proved at sea."

"And what are you?"

"Can't yer see—a man!"

And, for a second time, Punch was glad that he was only dreaming.

Punch walked on. He grew nearer and nearer to the smoke, and soon the air resounded with the sounds of heavy blows, soon the walls were red with the glare of fiery furnaces. Punch entered a workshop. What did he see?

Haggard and slatternly women doing unwomanly work. Some were carrying heavy weights on their heads: some were wielding iron hammers,—all were labouring beyond their strength; all were more like African slaves than English maids and matrons. Health, youth, and beauty, maidenliness and mannerliness, had all been sacrificed in the hard struggle for bread.

"And have these poor creatures no fathers, brothers, husbands, lovers, to save them from this?"

Again Punch was answered.

"I have a brother, but he was taken years ago from the Tavern to the Hospital."

"I have a husband, but he spends all he earns in gambling and drink."

"I have a lover, and when I get bigger wages he will take me to the church, and then I'll work for him instead of father."

And once more the air resounded with the din of the heavy hammers, and once more the walls were red with the glare of the fiery furnaces.

And for the third time Punch was glad he was only dreaming.

So Punch went his way, and now he found himself in a crowd of respectably-dressed people, and the crowd of respectably-dressed people cried to him with one voice—

"Punch, we complained of you, years ago, for painting the Black Country too black. But we were wrong, and you were right!"

And they spoke so loud that Punch awakened from his dream, to find himself seated in his study, his right hand resting on a book with a blue cover, inscribed "Factories Inspectors' Reports" (MR. BREWER on the Iron Manufacturing Districts, S.W.).

Digitized by Google

A GROWL FROM JACK FROST.

INKS, more Rinks! I have no patience
With their asphalte imitations
Of my favourite reality—
Ice-sheet smooth, of glassy quality,
Where, if young feet should come croppers
(As at first they will come,—whoppers!)
There's some pleasure in a tumble
So clean, it seems a shame to grumble.
Then the air—exhilaration
Quickening venous circulation,
Mantling blood in rosy faces;
And the motion—one for Graces
To display their pretty figures,
Fur-enfolded 'gainst my rigours!

But this Rink, that gives no heeding
To the seasons swift succeeding,
Spring and summer, autumn, winter,
Joints will twist and bones will splinter,
On these go-cart things with wheels,
Skates, forsooth—without the steels.
Skates whose waggly wheel-born motion,
Is to that of skates indeed,
As duck-pond's flow to tide of ocean,
Or donkey's jog to lightning's speed—
Is a parody, at best,
Of motion's poetry confest,

When, through winter vapours hazy,
Beauty, with my breath more bright,
Cuts the ice, in circles mazy,
Winding, whirling, wheeling light;
While man's strength, on skates beside her,
Finds its proudest task to guide her;
And o'er strength and beauty skating,
Jack Frost, at his task of mating,
Hovers happy and hilarious—
Braving Pisces, or Aquarius!
Rinks, indeed! In spite of fashion,
They put Jack Frost in a passion!

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

VANGUARD COURT MARTIAL.

By the Court. CAPTAIN D., why did you slacken speed when you got into a fog?

Captain D. If you please, Sir, I thought——

By the Court. What the devil business had you to think? Up to the mast-head immediately, Sir!

* * * *

By the Court. CAPTAIN H., why did you not reduce speed when you got into a fog?

Captain H. If you please, Sir, I did not think——

By the Court. What the devil business had you not to think? Up to the mast-head immediately, Sir!

RAVENS ON THE "RAILWAY JUBILEE."

SCENE—A Chimney Corner. SMELFUNGUS and MUNDUNGUS croaking behind pipes.

Smelfungus. What a fuss and parade they have been making up there at Darlington, to celebrate the starting of the first passenger train fifty years ago on their Railway!

Mundungus. Wonder how many railway accidents have happened from then till now?

Smelfungus. A Railway Jubilee! Why Jubilee? What is there to rejoice at in the invention of railways?

Mundungus. After fifty years' experience, less, I should think, than there is in a golden wedding.

Smelfungus. A fast would be fitter than a jubilee for either anniversary.

Mundungus. Railways have brought, on the whole, more mourning than joy.

Smelfungus. Yes. As undertakers and mourning-linendrapers especially may say, "Good for Trade."

Mundungus. Mourning, even sincere, is always much aggravated by mourning bills. But, how many persons have Railways made to mourn in earnest, turned out of house and home?

Smelfungus. By cutting through their parks, and spoiling the beauty of landscapes.

Mundungus. Hush! You'll be called an aristocrat if you talk like that. Say, rather, cutting through their shops, and ruining business, for which no award could possibly compensate.

Smelfungus. So individuals are sacrificed to the community.

Mundungus. As though by cannibals.

Smelfungus. And with what results?

Mundungus. Of course we are told, unbounded Prosperity and Progress.

Smelfungus. Beef at one shilling and sixpence a pound.

Mundungus. Fowls nine shillings a couple. Geese eleven shillings each.

Smelfungus. Oysters three shillings a dozen.

Mundungus. Continually increasing excess of population.

Smelfungus. Competition and struggle for existence in every walk of life daily getting more and more wolfish.

Mundungus. Greater and greater difficulty for young men to get on.

Smelfungus. And young women to get off. What with the expensive habits and dress which have resulted from Railways and prosperity, what young fellow of the middle class not in business, and not doing a roaring trade, dares to marry? In these days, and at this season, nobody, however silly, would venture, even in the newspapers, to propose marrying on two hundred a year.

Mundungus. Well; there, perhaps, is an evil tending to work its own cure. If half the population would only keep single, its rate of over-growth would decline. Meanwhile, the lot of the unmarried is all the better—if they would only think so.

Smelfungus. But they don't. So they

Digitized by Google

THE SILLY SEASON.

Brown (reads from Newspaper). "'STURGEON PICKED UP DEAD ON THE BEACH AT WEYMOUTH——'"

Mrs. B. "LOR', BROWN! AND IT AIN'T A MONTH AGO YOU AND ME 'EARD HIM PREACH AT THE TABBYNACLE!!"

A PLEA AGAINST THE BEE.

A CERTAIN "C. R." has announced in the Times the discovery that the Bee, from time immemorial reputed a model insect, the embodiment of virtuous diligence and industry, is, instead of that, a truculent and noxious pest, no better than a wasp, a cockroach, or an earwig. This discovery is news indeed. It is also just now particularly seasonable, as this is the season of fruit, especially of monstrous pippins and gigantic peaches and pears. "C. R." accuses Bees not only of devouring his own wall-fruit and that of other people, but also of having wantonly pitched into and stung himself, and being prone, without provocation, to fly at and sting mankind. His denunciation of Bees has naturally raised a swarm of gainsayers about his ears, and the character of the Bee may, perhaps, be considered to have been satisfactorily vindicated; but, if "C. R.'s" assault upon it could have been sustained, the immortal poem in which it has been extolled by DR. WATTS would have to be re-written. Instead of being represented as an entomological pattern to a moralising infant, the Bee would deserve to be proposed as a study to an idle and vicious boy, abandoned to the indulgence of a swinish appetite, and glorying in it. The verses of DR. WATTS might then be replaced by the following perversion of his panegyric:—

THE BEE.

How doth the gorging greedy Bee,
Destructive little brute,
Hum all day long from tree to tree,
And spoil the choicest fruit!

Behold how deep she scoops a cell,
When peaches she attacks,
In nectarines and pears as well
How big a hole she makes!

Likewise to eat and drink my fill
I should be happy too;
For Nature has disposed me still
But little else to do.

In prog and grub, by turns with play,
Might all my life be past,
Till I, perhaps, should come to weigh
Good fourteen score at last.

However, there is every reason to think that "C. R." has mistaken a sort of blow flies for Bees, and that, having, as he says, been stung by a Bee, he is labouring under melissophobia.

---

pine—and repine—in unwilling celibacy, while the rich tradespeople and the proletarians go on increasing and multiplying like Colorado beetles, and overrunning the earth with their Cockney abodes.

Mundungus. Impregnating our air with noxious gases and noisome effluvia.

Smelfungus. Turning our rivers into filth.

Mundungus. That is, turning our filth into the rivers.

Smelfungus. And what are we the better for railways? What have we got by them that we had not in the old coaching times?

Mundungus. Facility of locomotion, as the phrase is—quick conveyance from place to place. But then one place is daily getting more and more like another—and all more like suburbs of London.

Smelfungus. Railway receipts grown to £22,000,000 in one year! What have we got to show for it?

Mundungus. About the greatest blessings I see from the railway system, and steam, and commerce, and communication between man and man, are cheap pine-apples, gutta-percha, and india-rubber.

Smelfungus. In the meanwhile an Ironclad costs above half a million, and we have to reconstruct the Navy every two or three years.

Mundungus. Every shot or shell we may have to fire from a monster gun, bang will go from five-and-twenty to fifty pounds.

Smelfungus. Public expenditure and private extravagance, grasping and squandering, increase yearly, at the rate of thousands of millions. And every now and then there is a smash for three or four.

Mundungus. All the fat 's in the fire.

Smelfungus. And—with the Iron Horse all over the civilised earth to feed—all the coals. There at least they will be before long. Prosperity is blazing up, but when our coal-fields are exhausted? How then?

Mundungus. Prosperity will have burnt itself out.

Smelfungus. Darlington won't be much inclined to celebrate a centenary Railway Jubilee, I take it.

Mundungus. If the world lasts so long.

Smelfungus. Let us hope it won't.

Mundungus. We shan't, at any rate, old man.

Smelfungus. No; long before that we shall both of us have fallen martyrs to bile and indigestion.

Mundungus. And so have got rid of a world of sorrow, stink, steam, rheumatism, ritualism, roguery, and rhodomontade!

Smelfungus. And a good riddance, too!

(Curtain falls on them croaking severally.)

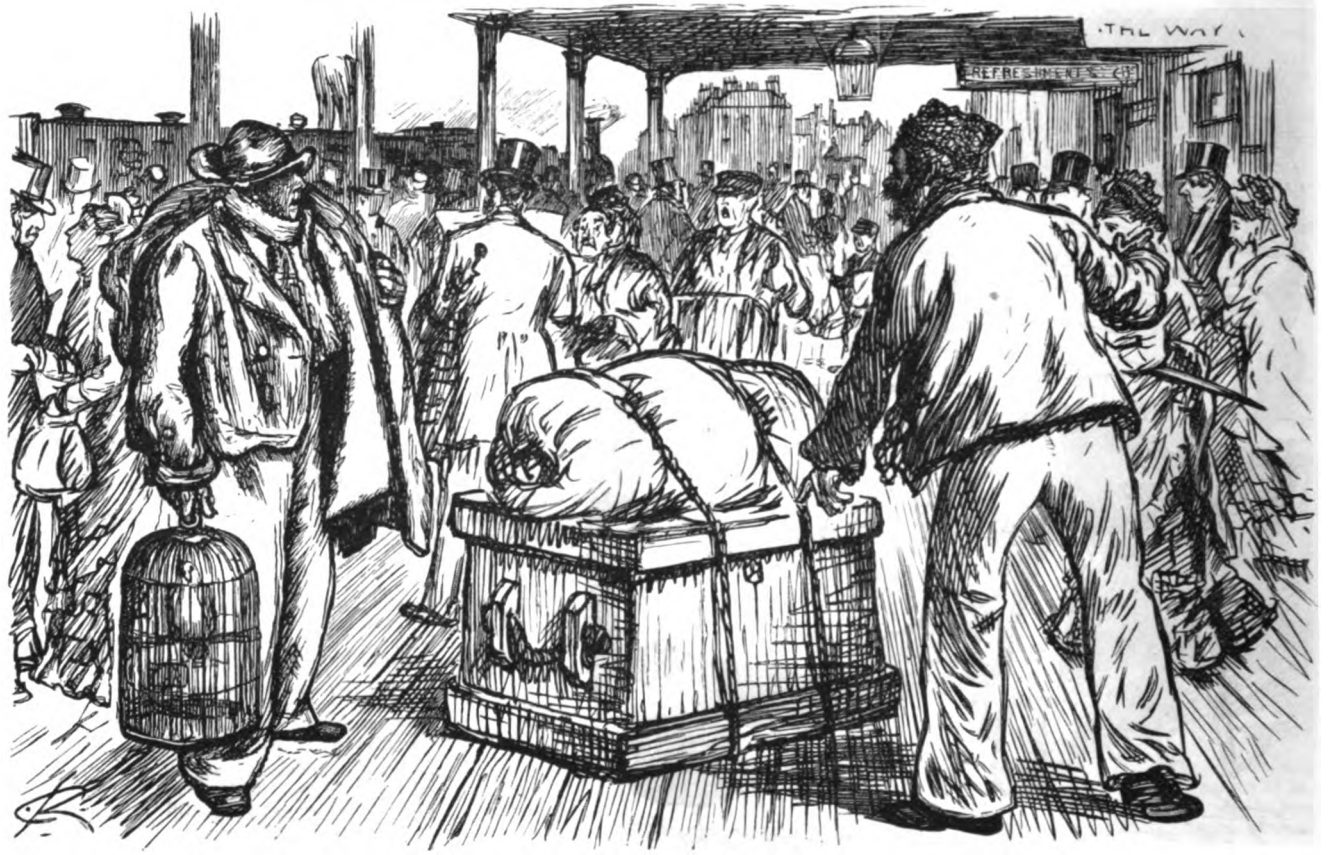
GRACIOUS COMMUNICATIONS.

Or, Pour Encourager les Autres.

IT is rumoured that, in consequence of the general satisfaction given by two of their most recent official communications, the Lords of the Admiralty intend sanctioning the invariable use of the following form of letter, to be used in all cases where the recognition of assistance rendered at sea becomes absolutely necessary. The same form to be adopted by the Board of Trade:—

Whitehall, [Date].



SIR,—I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Admiralty to inform you that, in consequence of your heroic gallantry in saving the crew of the ship ——, during a heavy gale, you have made it necessary for their Lordships to take notice of the matter; and, on your enclosing a stamped receipt for Five Pounds, and a letter of thanks, I shall be directed to forward to you, in the course of the next financial year, the above-mentioned sum, together with a concertina, or any other article you may, within the above-mentioned period, select from the Lowther Arcade.

Their Lordships, however, desire me to warn you that, should you at any future time render like services at sea, you must not look for any further recognition of such service.

Your Obedient Servant,

To CAPTAIN ——, of the —— [SECRETARY FOR TIME BEING].

Digitized by Google

"THERE BE LAND RATS."

Jack Ashore. "Bill, just keep a Heye on my Jewel-case 'ere while I go and get the Tickets. There's a lot o Sharks always cruisin' about these Railway Stations, I've heard!"

FLOURISH FELSTEAD!

Now that the Rev. W. S. Grignon has been dismissed by the Trustees of Felstead School, a new Head Master will probably be required for that once rising educational establishment. Mr. Punch has great pleasure in preparing an Examination Paper which should be immediately submitted to Candidates for the appointment. A single answer in the affirmative to any of the following simple questions will of course be an ample proof that the competitor does not possess the necessary qualifications for the peculiar position he wishes to occupy.

1. Do you think it advisable that a Head Master should call the attention of Parents and Guardians of his Pupils to the existence of a neglected fever raging in a School over which he has (theoretically) the supreme control?

2. Do you think a Head Master, who properly represents his subordinates, should feel aggrieved if his Assistants are told to go to the Matron to get the cheques for the salaries due to them?

3. Do you think a quarter's notice, given with the scantiest courtesy, an improper or insufficient warning of dismissal, when addressed to a respectable Clergyman, who has spent twenty of the best years of his life as Head Master of a School he has rescued, by his exertions, from debt and obscurity?

4. Do you think that the aged Clerk of the Trustees of a School is an improper person to become the Steward of the School of which his employers are the Trustees—do you, in fact, object to his filling two positions, in which the duty of servant and master are strangely jumbled together?

5. Do you think there should be any appeal to a higher power in the case of the Trustees neglecting to perform the duties they were appointed to perform?

6. And, lastly (most important of all), in the event of your being appointed Head Master of Felstead School, will you expect to be treated with the courtesy and respect generally accorded to a person claiming to be a scholar, a gentleman, and a divine?

NATIONAL MISTAKES.

(By a Dyspeptic Newspaper-Reader.)

It is a mistake to imagine that water-tight compartments can be relied on to keep iron-clads afloat, if they strike on a rock, encounter a ram, or are struck by a torpedo.

It is a mistake to imagine that our Naval Officers understand their business.

It is a mistake to rely upon our Navy as a first line of defence against invaders.

It is a still greater mistake to rely upon our Regular Army as a second.

A greater still to trust to the Militia as a possible third.

And the greatest of all mistakes to regard the Volunteers as anything better than an armed mob.

It is a mistake to imagine that the British Flag is the standard of freedom, and that slaves setting foot upon British ground (including the quarter-decks of Her Majesty's ships) "never, never, never shall be slaves" any more.

It is a mistake to imagine that with the freest and finest Constitution in the world, we are free from the lowest political vices.

It is a mistake to believe that our houses are our castles, so long as we live under the sway of Bumbledom.

In fact, it is the greatest mistake in the world to believe now-a-days that Britannia rules the waves, or that John Bull has the slightest right to turn up his nose at the follies, shortcomings, or vices of his neighbours.

Potato Show, Alexandra Palace.

Exhibitors, Committee too,
Around the tables moved with air profound,
Wearing the looks of men who knew
The Eyes of England on them, and around!

Digitized by Google

UP AND DOWN STAIRS.

Young Mistress (at the Parlour-Door). "Eliza, what is that Bell Ringing for so violently!"

Cook (below). "It's on'y me, M'um. I want you down in the Kitching a Minute!!"

THE OTTOMAN OUT-AT-ELBOWS.

So the Turkish Government is obliged to come to a composition with its creditors, whom it proposes to pay, for the next five years, half in cash and half in paper! This is the result of gross extravagance, especially in two principal branches of lavish expenditure—money squandered to satisfy the demands of the Harem, and to pay for the Fleet. Both the ships and the ladies are more ornamental than useful. It is difficult to say which the Sultan has found the more costly—his Ironclads or his Silkenclads. This cool act of repudiation will swell the ranks of the rising against Turkey, by adding to the other rayahs in revolt all the British creditors of the Porte, who will now be just as eager to get rid of their Turkish bonds as the Bosnians or Herzegovinese

Vindication of Wales.

In the course of his discourse on Crime before the Social Science Congress at Brighton, Lord Aberdare mentioned that the crime of Wales, in proportion to the population, is but half that of England. This statement may help to remove from some minds a prejudice they have been imbued with in the nursery, that—

"Taffy was a Welshman, Taffy was a thief."

This slanderous nursery-rhyme should be cancelled, or re-written, now that Lord Aberdare has vindicated his countrymen from the aspersion it implies. He has demonstrated, by figures, that Taffy is not half such a thief as John Bull.

Ward Hunt to his Friend Punch.

We haven't hauled down the British Flag
(See one of your recent productions),
But we 've chosen the other alternative—
We've hauled down our Mis-instructions.

A STRONG CASE FOR PLIMSOLL.

If the report of Bishop Claughton's conduct in the dismissal of the Head Master of Felstead Grammar School be correct, his Lordship is clearly un-see-worthy.

A SPEECH TO MEDICAL STUDENTS.

An exceptional "introductory lecture" was delivered on the first instant, in the Medical School of the Westminster Hospital, by Mr. Richard Davy. In marked contrast with discourses reported the next day, and filling much space, it must have greatly disappointed many respectable persons who love to read, or sit and listen to, a succession of moral and scientific platitudes. Mr. Davy—according to a summary of his address—began by saying candidly that:—

"He disapproved in toto of introductory addresses, but, at the request of the Medical Council, conformed to custom. Both students and teachers preferred a day's pheasant shooting to hearing or giving an 'introductory.' As a surgeon, he should cut down his sermon from an hour to fifteen minutes, and his successor might still further reduce the volume of these fruitless harangues."

Mr. Davy wronged himself in calling his lecture a "sermon." It could have had no effect in common with morphia or mesmerism. Still, in point of brevity, it was a model which preachers might study.

Having touched on the subject of medico-chirurgical reform, the Lecturer next, in a few strokes, gave his audience a sketch of their professional prospects. He told them what honours and payment they might hope to obtain by the practice of their noble calling. Thus did he set forth the generosity with which an appreciative Government, and a grateful Public, are accustomed to requite the services of medical men:—

"Their salaries were simply miserable; hospital physicians and surgeons were, for the most part, unpaid. Poor Law Officers most piteously; surgeons in the services very badly, and young practitioners not at all. For seven years' hard work in the Marylebone Dispensary he had received one guinea, and a very distinguished London assistant physician had found that his salary equalled that of the man who put the skid on the omnibus wheels at Holborn Hill."

Who, then, would enter the medical profession but a wealthy philanthropist? We should say nobody except a poor fool. Perhaps this consideration may, in a measure, account for the shortcomings of medical science, as well as for the general quality of the introductory lectures delivered on the First of October. Possibly, in some cases, for that of the whole course.

Mr. Davy warmly supported a prophylactic Act of Parliament denounced by sentimentalists. Moreover—

"He was pained at the nonsense which had been let off over vivisection. Practical experiments were as important to medical men as to the Royal Artillery at Dartmoor."

In conclusion—

"He advised every one to resign at once any and every thought of becoming a medical man unless he possessed three qualifications:—First, independence; second, an aptitude and love for the profession; third, the readiness to pay a heavy premium in this world for his prospects of reward in the next."

It may be hoped that Mr. Davy's introductory lecture will, if in any sense a "sermon," at any rate not prove a "fruitless harangue." The "lastly" of this "sermon" is commended to the attention of all young men who dream of living by the practice of the medical profession.

Longevity at Felstead.

Dear Mr. Punch,

I see in the Guardian that the Felstead Rump have advertised for a new Head-Master. They promise him £200 a-year, and "five pounds capitation fee for every boy beyond 25 and up to 75, two pounds for every boy beyond 75 and up to 150, and one pound for every boy beyond 150." Will you please to let me know, per return, whether these are the common ages of boys in Essex, and if the longevity of that county extends to girls? If so, I shall migrate thither.

Yours truly,

An Old Maid.

Digitized by Google

BILLINGSGATE À LA FRANÇAISE.

Miss Mignonnette Millefleurs has mastered the Grammatical Difficulties of the French Language, and is anxious to familiarise herself with its Idioms. During a short sojourn on the French Coast, she adopts the plan of Marketing for herself and her Family, and acquires thereby an idiomatic Fluency that is quite appalling.

Digitized by Google

HARMLESS AMUSEMENT.

Mr. Muckleston (after missing his Bird for the twentieth time). "I say, Gaskins, I do believe the Birds are frightened at me!"
Old Keeper (blandly). "They didn't ought to be, Sir!"

PLAIN WORDS WITH A PROPHET.

Concerning certain predictions from the Pulpit of the Pro-Cathedral, Kensington.

"It is my duty to show that the restoration of the Catholic hierarchy in England is not only a grace to the Catholics of this land, but a benediction upon England itself. . . . The mind of England is infinitely nearer to Catholic truth than it was twenty-five years ago. . . . Englishmen know the Catholic Church better than they did.

"If England ever come again into conflict with the Catholic Church, though I am no prophet, I will foretell the result . . . it will lose the last fragment of its Christian inheritance. But I do not believe it will."

Cardinal Manning at Kensington.

Most reverend Cardinal! mellifluous Manning,
A vastly pretty programme you are planning!
But though the project has your imprimatur,
Punch dares to traverse it with his negatur!
Your benediction 's bold, but, as you state it
(You 're quite correct!), we don't appreciate it.
We 've snapt the golden link? Most true. The fetter,
Though gilded, galled us. Freedom suits us better.
That English common-sense you laud so sweetly
Runs counter to your Eminence completely.
Dreading free play of individuality
Far less than Rome's infallible finality.
"Do we not know the Catholic Church?" Well, slightly—
And, but that Punch desires to speak politely,
(While fires—pro tem.—are out and pikes are rusted,)
He 'd hint that Church is "better known than trusted."
For we have memories: and, when holy touters—
Dupes to decoy and silence stubborn doubters,
With that fine mingling of the bland and bounceable,
Which irritable listeners wish were trounceable—
Paint her an unambitious, loving Mother,
Why, then, your Eminence, 'tis hard to smother
Irreverent laughter, for the sketch is risible.
Your Church has long been audible and visible,
And if we do not know her voice and features,
We English must be very purblind creatures.
"Great, solid, calm," you call us. Flattering, very;
But then your application makes us merry.
You kindly show us—thanks for the civility!—
Our greatness measured by our—gullibility.
Unarmed, submissive, poor, without ambition—
'Tis so you paint the Church's meek condition
Within our borders, most persuasive Pictor!
But give the Ultramontane Boa-Constrictor
The power, and tightening of the coils might follow;
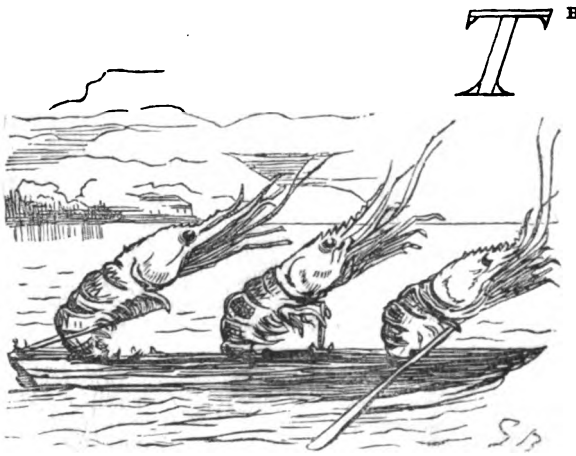
And then—we know the Creature's power of swallow!
Nay, nay, your Eminence, there are no terrors
For us in any Syllabus of Errors,
Pea-bladder which the Pope may shake at pleasure
Against the very things we trust and treasure;
But Mother Church's milder voice of suasion,
Which she so deftly uses on occasion,
Will hardly coax our Common-Sense to closing
With her bland offer. No! John may seem dozing,
But if, with his experience, he hark back again,
And, lamb-like, tread the well-known Romeward track again,
Lured on by wandering prophets of things pleasant,
Like—shall we say your Eminence?—at present!
Punch, his pet spokesman now, will yield his function,
And, though he 'd mark with pity and compunction
The double-dupe's decline—a sorry sight, John!—
Could scarce resist the verdict, "Serve you right, John!"



"BACK AGAIN" AT THE ADMIRALTY.

Suspension of the Slavery-Circular is all very well, as far as it goes. The next step will, of course, be suspension of the blundering official who framed it.

Digitized by Google

THE NEXT NAVAL NOVEL.

Chapter XLV.—"The Lively Polly."

THE Vulcan was ploughing the sea bravely. In spite of the immense thickness of her iron sides, she was moving at a speed of at least two knots an hour. It is scarcely necessary to explain to the nautical reader that she could have attained even a greater rate of speed, had not the Lords of the Admiralty issued their celebrated instructions regulating the consumption of coal.

"And so, Mr. Simple Simon," said our First Lieutenant (a Fellow of Trinity, by the way), "our Junior Midshipman will join us at Portsmouth from Cambridge."

"Yes, Sir," I replied. "Mr. Muttonhead has done well. You will have noticed, from reading the newspapers, that he joins us as Senior Wrangler."

"Yes, yes, very fair," commented my superior officer. "Still, I must confess that I should have been greatly disappointed had he not joined us as First of his year."

"I suppose, Sir, he will resume his ordinary duties when he reports himself?"

"Quite so. He will personally superintend the weighing out of the rations, and will occasionally (in his official capacity) test the quality of the grog."

Our conversation was interrupted at this point by a cry from the sailor on the look-out. The Second Lieutenant hurried on to the quarter-deck, and, after the customary salute, addressed himself to his senior.

"Sir," said he, "it is my duty to inform you that black care often sits at the back of the helmsman, and that, therefore, post equitem sedet atra cura may have a wider meaning than the glorious old Roman was inclined to give to it."

"Always classical, Sobersides," remarked the First Lieutenant, with a smile; "but I hope you bring no bad news. Remember garrula lingua nocet!"

"Well said!" exclaimed Sobersides (who, I must admit, was something of a sycophant). "But I wish merely to report to you that the look-out, through his telescope, has made out a boat in the offing. She appears to be steering for us. How shall we get out of her way?"

"How far off is she?"

"Some five-and-twenty miles."

"We may yet have time to save ourselves!" exclaimed the First Lieutenant, gallantly. "Mr. Simple Simon, will you be good enough to get the Book of Signals."

Of course, I complied with the request; and for the next three hours the First Lieutenant, Sobersides, and myself were engaged in perusing the mysterious volume.

In the meanwhile, the boat discovered by the look-out continued on her reckless course. She seemed to be a deserted pleasure yacht, of about two tons, and, from the fact that she carried the name of Lively Polly painted in white letters on her bows, I took it that she hailed from the Port of Margate.

By degrees, she came nearer and nearer, until she was within half-a-mile of us. Then there was a cry of astonishment from the lips of the younger of our crew. She was carrying a sail—an article of nautical perambulation scarcely known to the rising generation.

"Rara avis in terris nigroque simillima cygno," I heard one of our Second Class boys observe to a companion.

"Tuttoo!" replied the other, suiting the action to the word.

"Really, Mr. Simple Simon," said our First Lieutenant, "I do not like to disturb the Captain in the midst of his experiments, but I think I must trouble you to request his presence on deck."

"Aye, aye, Sir," I replied, and I descended below, and knocked at the door of the laboratory of my Commanding Officer.

Chapter XLVI.—The Captain of the "Vulcan."

"Come in!" And I entered.

The Captain of the Vulcan was a thin, intellectual-looking student. He wore long hair, and his eyes were shielded from the glare of a small fire (in which several crucibles were glowing) by a pair of azure-coloured spectacles. His laboratory, or (to use the nautical term "cabin") was furnished with a library of dusty volumes, a stuffed alligator, and a few skeletons. He was standing near a camera, and held in his hand a penny whistle.

"This interruption is very mal à propos," he exclaimed as I entered. "What is the matter, Mr. Simple Simon?"

"We are in danger of a collision, Sir," I replied, respectfully.

"We are always in danger of a collision," he murmured, petulantly. "Really, I must leave the matter in the hands of the First Lieutenant. I have every confidence in him."

I bowed, and was about to leave the apartment, when an irresistible impulse seized me to put a question to my Commanding Officer.

"Your pardon, Sir," I said with some hesitation, "but the experiment upon which you are engaged seems to interest you deeply. Is it indiscreet to ask you what you are doing?"

"Not at all!" he cried, with the enthusiasm of an inventor. "I am attempting, with the aid of photography, to fix and depict a ray of sound." And he blew the penny whistle, and concealed his head in the curtains of the camera.

On my return to the deck, I found that the Lively Polly was within a few yards of the Vulcan. We consulted the Signal-Book for the last time, and prepared to meet our fate like Officers, Gentlemen, and Scholars.

The crew of the Vulcan stood still, and closed their eyes, and then came a shock. The Lively Polly's bowsprit had made a hole in the side of the Vulcan, and all was lost!

At this moment the Captain appeared. He was calm and resolute. He spoke to the First Lieutenant—

"What is the size of the leak?"

"Two inches by three, Sir."

"At what rate is the water coming in?"

"About a pint an hour, Sir."

"Then get to the boats, and save yourselves!"

Within five hours of the collision, every man belonging to the Vulcan had left that hapless ship to her melancholy fate. And such is life on the waves!

Chapter XLVII.—The Last of the "Vulcan."

It was many years after the events related in the last Chapter that I (now Sir Peter Simple Simon) was coasting in a steam-launch off the Isle of Thanet. On board were my eldest son, his wife, and their youngest daughter, a charming little maiden of nineteen. My grandchild, who was called Wolfhilda (a family name), was standing near me, looking through a pair of opera-glasses at some object seen dimly in the distance.

"O, Grandpa!" she cried, with a little joyous laugh, "do let us see what it is! I am so curious!"

Willing to please her, I smilingly put the helm hard-a-port, and we soon neared the subject of our conversation. It turned out to be a very old ironclad, covered with sea-weed. In the starboard side was a hole, which had evidently grown larger, in the course of years, from rust and the action of the waves.

"O look, Grandpa!" cried Wolfhilda, pointing to the stern of the vessel. "See, the name is written up!"

I put on my spectacles, and then leisurely looked at the boards at which my descendant was pointing. Then I uttered a cry of surprise.

It was the Vulcan that we had deserted five-and-forty years before; and as we gazed upon the wreck, the brave old ship at last began to sink.

Two months afterwards, the spot once occupied by the Vulcan was occupied no longer!

Clerical Conference Question.

In the course of a discussion, at the Oxford Diocesan Conference, on the subject of Church Patronage, the Bishop of Oxford made a remark which may have raised a question:—

"As to the appointment of Clergymen for terms of years, it must be remembered that Governors of Colonies and others had retiring pensions, and a Clergyman without an incumbency would be in a cold place as far as this world's advantages were concerned."

But, it may have been whispered among the Bishop's diocesans, is not a cold place in this world preferable to a warm berth in the other?

A King in a Fix.

What Alfonso, knave and cad-rid,
Can do, is a mystery hidden;
When his capital is Mad-rid,
And the race he rules mad-ridden.

Digitized by Google

"CAB, SIR?"

Considering that we have had a show of Cabs, Cab-horses, and Cabmen, it seems to be only just to the employed that we should have an exhibition of the employers. Should the scheme come to anything, Mr. Punch will expect to hear that the Cabmen of London have agreed upon the following list of prizes.

First Prize.—Lieutenant and Captain the Hon. Bertie Dangle (Life Guards, green). Is in the habit of paying cabmen at the rate of two shillings a mile. Has a very small bump of locality. Considers the distance between the Guards Club, Pall Mall, and the Bank of England, Threadneedle Street, to be seven and a half miles. Forgets to dismiss his cabs, and pays willingly and handsomely for keeping the vehicles waiting.

Second Prize.—Mr. Walter Crœsus Thompkins. Connected with the City Money Market and South Belgravia. Although he is a keen man of business, he pays his cabmen half-a-crown a mile, because he wishes them to consider him a votary of fashion and the "West End." When addressed as "My Lord," adds an extra shilling to the fare.

Third Prize.—Major Alf. Pay. Recognises a good horse when he sees one before him. Pays only a shilling more than the legal fare, but gives his cabman a cigar before parting. Never bullies the driver when there is a mistake in the turning.

Fourth Prize.—Miss Lily Heartsease. Pays nothing, but makes her Mamma give an extra shilling when the weather is showery. Says "Thank you!" when the door is closed for her.

Fifth Prize.—Mr. Jeremiah Grumbleton. Growls on entering the cab, and pokes his umbrella through the trap-door when anything displeases him on the way, but who always pays double fare at the journey's end.

Sixth Prize.—Messrs. Brown, Jones, and Robinson. Know the fares, know the distances, and know that cabmen have to live, and very often, moreover, have to support wives and children, and, knowing all this, are not too hard upon poor fellows who are out all hours of the day and night in all sorts of weather.

Grand Extra Prize.—For saying a good word for the Cabmen (who, mind you, are not an ungrateful set!), Mr. Punch.

N.B.—Mr. Punch begs to say that he will accept, in lieu of a prize, future good conduct and civility.

THE BRITISH WORKWOMAN.

A Pæan of Modern Progress, disrespectfully dedicated by Mr. Punch to the Black Country Niderings, ironically called British Workmen!

"The women are said to take the place of fathers as well as of husbands, while the men are idle and drunken. . . . At Bromsgrove I heard also of the growing custom of idle, lazy young lads looking out for skilled industrious wives, in order to obtain an easy life."—Mr. Brewer on the Black Country.

Brave Britons of Bromsgrove! You 've hit on a plan
Which redounds to the praise of the creature called Man!
The term sounds archaic. It once, so 'tis said,
Stood for one who 'd a fancy for winning his bread
Before he devoured it, and held it foul scorn
To sponge on the sex which to motherhood 's born.
You have altered all that, and the heads of your houses,
Brave lads, are your stout Amazonian spouses.
You loaf, "train your whiffets," and guzzle and gorge,
While they sweat at the anvil and puddle and forge.
Ingenious scheme! Let us hope it may solve
Some of those puzzling problems which sages revolve.
Want work for our women? Absurd! while they 're able
To hammer a spike or weld links for a cable.
These swarthy she-Vulcans set fancy agog.
The old rule marital of knuckle and clog,
One would think, should be waning, since women must work
At the toil their protectors are eager to shirk.
Brute-force in its bondage too long must have held her,
This "Oliver"-wielder and chain-cable welder,
Once known as Weak Woman! 'Tis pleasant to think
That the sex in the stithy can swelter and swink,
Whilst husbands and fathers,—these titles are nominal,—
Reserving their vigour for duties abdominal,
Grow fat on her toil, and their idleness cheer
With such light recreations as skittles and beer.
"Our Amazons?" Nay, 'tis not quite one's idea
Of a latter-day version of Penthesilea.
Those virile viragoes of old played the man,
As masters, not serfs; but the Black Country plan,
A happy contrivance, as cunning as brave,
Unsexes the Woman, but keeps her a slave;
Shifts at last to her shoulders Man's share of the Curse,
Yet leaves him sole lord of her person and purse.
The British Workwoman! Up, pencil, and ply,
And bid her appear to the general eye!
No Lely or Lawrence is wanted to limn
That Daughter of Drudgery, grimy and grim.
A sight to raise dandified Chivalry's gorge,
For her skin is not sleek, and the reek of the forge
Hides, not the cheek-roses the bardling be-sings,
But the pallor which ill-tended motherhood brings.
Yes, paint her, true limner, in hues of eclipse,
Toil's grime on her forehead, shame's seal on her lips,
Our Nymph of the Hammer, hard-worked and ill-paid,
The scapegoat of sloth, and the victim of Trade!
Paint her so, and present her, the tribute of truth,
To the chivalrous souls of our stout British youth,
In the Black Country hives who the parasite play
Upon creatures, though loathly, less wormlike than they,
And contrive to lead easy and jovial lives
On the toil of their mothers, and sweethearts, and wives!

Hurrah! These magnanimous males may well cheer
For material progress, plus "tommy" and beer!
If the poor Woman's part in our grand Iron Age
Be the heaviest toil and the scantiest wage,
Give they not sweet assurance of family joys,
These she-smiths and their partners, the Black Country boys?
Where men drink, drowse, and dawdle, reserving their force
For that physical discipline, needful, of course,
When the bread-winner's restive. A chain-welding slave,
To coward marital and mercantile knave!—
Say, is there a creature more hopefully human,
Than this pride of our Progress, our Black Country woman?

ANOTHER GLORY GOING!

As if it were not enough that Temple Bar should have given way, another of the most venerable institutions of the City of London has come to such grief as will necessitate its abolition, or at any rate its disuse. Witness the subjoined paragraph of melancholy news touching Aldgate Pump:—

"Aldgate Pump Water.—The Sanitary Record says it has had a sample of water from the Aldgate Pump analysed by Mr. J. A. Wanklyn, whose report shows that the water contains of solids 8; chlorine 11·1; ammonia, free, 0·01; albuminoid 0·76. It is, therefore, positively impure, contaminated, and dangerous water."

Even if not absolutely removed from the site which it has occupied almost from time immemorial, Aldgate Pump will remain where it now stands only as it were a defunct carcase and a doleful monument. From the dignity of a hydraulic engine it will have sunk into the abasement of a supernumerary post. Aldgate Pump, if permitted still to exist at all, will drag on a miserable existence, divorced, so to speak, from the vitality it possessed as a fountain of living water, which, however, it perhaps really ceased to be, when the spring whence the neighbourhood derives water to drink coming to contain, among other matters, "albuminoid" enough almost to make that water "thick and slab," became converted into a truly dead well. Alas, poor old Aldgate Pump!

A Safe Speculation.

"The Investors' Guardian publishes the following list of Companies, which were registered during the week. . . . . Virtue & Co.," &c., &c., &c

Do you wish to be happy, lighthearted, and brisk,
With nothing to harass or hurt you?
Do you want an investment without any risk?
What can you have better than Virtue?

Digitized by Google

THE ORNAMENTAL v. THE USEFUL.

Servant. "I SUPPOSE, MA'AM, I SHALL NOT HAVE TO WAIT AT TABLE?" Lady. "O, NO! I WANT A HOUSEMAID."
Servant. "I SUPPOSE, MA'AM, I SHALL NOT HAVE TO MAKE THE BEDS?" Lady (surprised, but composedly). "CERTAINLY NOT!"
Servant (thinking the place will suit). "AND I SUPPOSE, MA'AM, I SHALL NOT BE EXPECTED TO ANSWER THE DOOR?"
Lady. "OF COURSE NOT! THE FACT IS, I WANT A SERVANT TO LOOK AT, AND I DON'T THINK YOU WILL DO!"

CARDINAL POINTS OF FACT.

IF there is sometimes wisdom in the wig, how much must there always be in the Hat—the gift of an infallibly wise donor? Although it is just possible that a Cardinal may err, who can point out any mistake in the eloquent discourse delivered by CARDINAL MANNING on the twenty-fifth anniversary of that benefaction to England by heretics misnamed Papal Aggression? Mark, for instance, the extraordinary accuracy of the statement that:—

"The English Church, which remains established by law and endowed with property, is so divided and subdivided by the internal conflicts of religious belief, that but the other day it was necessary to invoke an Act of Parliament to determine their conflicts—nay more, to settle how Almighty God is to be worshipped."

Now that we are told by CARDINAL MANNING, we see the full scope of the Public Worship Act. Its framers no doubt thought they had merely devised a statute to compel the observance of the law which had long ago settled what public worship was to be, but was only not strong enough to prevent the Ritualists from mimicking Roman Catholic ritual. But the Legislature may learn from CARDINAL MANNING that they meant not only to settle much more than that in respect of worship, but also to determine conflicts of religious belief—as though Parliament had pretended to be a synod. Who dares to think that he knows better than what CARDINAL MANNING says? Of course the Cardinal doesn't know better himself.

Here also is wisdom, in part perhaps prophetic, though our MANNING disclaims the pretensions of our CUMMING:—

"He did not pretend to be a prophet, but he ventured to foretell that if ever England again clashed with the revelation of Divine Truth, she would lose the last fragment of her Christian inheritance. But he did not think England would, for Englishmen now knew that the Catholic Church had nothing to do with politics, or with the Crown, except to obey it like good subjects."

As long as the Ultramontanes, or as CARDINAL MANNING calls them, the Catholic Church, do that, there is small chance that England will ever clash with what he also calls the revelation of Divine truth. Nor is there any fear that English Ultramontanes, any more than Irish, will meddle with politics, or will do otherwise than obey the Crown like good subjects, as long as the law allows them the liberty they now enjoy, or any further liberty they may claim. How loyally doubtless the Bishops would all behave in Germany, if BISMARCK and his King would only desist from enforcing education laws, which, being calculated to make the children of German Catholics not only Catholics but Germans too, are therefore opposed to Papal policy!

Good Works.

"The Commissioners of Works intend to distribute, this autumn, among the working classes and poor inhabitants of London the surplus bedding-out plants in the Metropolitan parks."

YOUR bedding-out plants you may offer the poor,
Now Autumn her leafage is shedding;
But Winter will teach you they want something more,
And then you can offer them—bedding.

A Rare Opening.

TALK of Women wanting work! Here's a chance—from the advertising columns of the Daily Telegraph—for an accomplished and industrious young Lady:—

WANTED, a DAILY GOVERNESS. Hours ten to six. For three Children, aged eight, ten, and eleven. Requirements, English, French, Music, and Needlework (and perhaps Drawing). Salary to commence at seven shillings per week.

Digitized by Google

"BON VOYAGE!"

"GOOD BYE, MY DEAR BOY! AND MIND YOU GIVE MY LOVE TO INDIA."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

IN AND OUT OF TOWN.

The Confession of a Voluntary Trappist.

SAYING what is not true, I know, is a sin, or at least as a baby I was taught to think so; but I find it difficult to believe it, since making the charming acquaintance of so many ribbons of Diplomacy, stars of the two Houses, and lesser lights of the Legal and Medical professions, who assure me by their daily practice of the contrary; so that I suppose it is only some latent souvenir of a Puritanical code of morality which makes me shudder as I sit in the back dining-room in Stucco Square, when I hear that worthy but dilapidated Mrs. Shrub, with the chronic snuffle which peppermint and prevarication engenders, answer the knock at the front door with a responsive—

"Hout of Town, Sir. The fam'ly is at presink on the Riggy, and don't return afore the hend of October."

The "fam'ly" being myself and my two daughters.

When a widow in Society,—the best Society (well, not Marlborough House, you know, and Carlton Gardens, but next door)—is expected to be everywhere during the Season, from pigeon massacres at Hurlingham to Son-slaughter on the Rink at Prince's, it is difficult on limited means to bring both ends to that affinity which a plump banking account renders so easy: so when Society goes out of Town we must go out of Town too.

Accordingly, we go out of town, that is, we close the shutters, send away our servants (who are engaged by the month, and, most unaccountably, are found fault with just four weeks before the Ministerial whitebait dinner), carefully dress all the furniture in Tussore polonaises, call in the invaluable Mrs. Shrub, and retire with our Murrays and Baëdeckers to the back dining-room, where Ethel and Winifred study the route we have chosen for our trip, and study it till I am satisfied they can both pass a thorough examination in it when we go down to my brother-in-law's in November.

I had seriously thought of covering the small area of leads which forms our landscape with cotton-wool or salt, which, with an old Christmas-tree and a couple of alpenstocks, might have added to the illusion: but as strict economy is the order of our vacation tour, I have thought better of it, and simply put the refrigerator there, which suggests ice, you know, though there is never any in it.

Ethel practises the zither (the lessons are cheaper than a first-rate pianofortist), and Winifred has set up the tails of a brace of black game, as a souvenir of the Tyrol, where we think of spending a week as soon as the Righi has been sufficiently explored in the pages of Baëdecker and Murray.

My French and German, both learnt at Highgate some years ago, are, happily, sufficiently polished to admit of teaching my dear girls the necessary phrases which waiters and guides consider indispensable; so that I feel sure that no tourist, and few foreigners, will ever know that we have never left the back dining-room of 44, Stucco Square, South Kensington.

"I wonder who it was that called!" Mrs. Shrub says. "The gent wouldn't leave his name. But he come on foot, and 'is ginral appearance warn't by no means haristocratic."

There are always a few men in town rushing through on their way from Cowes to the Continent, or from the Grampians to Germany, which makes it awkward sometimes, for my dear girls can never take exercise until the evening.

After all, the parks are lovely when no one is in town, and I send them sometimes down to Battersea, where they are sure to meet no one of their acquaintance, and where they can get up some of the plants Murray will speak of so continually.

Lucky thought, to ask for Gouffe's Cookery at Mudie's. A cutlet, or chop is the most we indulge in; but it becomes quite exciting to know what dish we shall have for lunch, as I never allow my girls to mention the word chop, or cutlet without an addition, or an alteration.

Chaudfroid à la Maréchale means cold cutlets. Epigrammes à la Montmorency, does not sound like chop and potatoes, but it gives an additional zest to our somewhat monotonous meal, and, as we sometimes vary the entertainment by the substitution of mutton-broth, it does not jar on our nerves when one hears it, in the dear girls' voices, dished up as Potage à la Reine Pomaré, or Purée de Gibier aux Quenelles Impériales.

The only luxury I allow ourselves is a cup of coffee. This we take sitting on the leads outside, with the refrigerator as a table. We make believe it's a café, and Ethel pretends to be waiter, and calls out "Pavillon à gauche-Boám"—as to the manner born. We have no neighbours but the cats—all the others being really absent either in Switzerland, or Shepherd's Bush, at the Hague, or, perhaps, only at Littlehampton.

The blacks are unpleasant, it is true, but we try to think they are snow-flakes, and we wrap ourselves in our rugs and chorus the Ranz des Vaches, certain that we shall be able to describe our autumn tour as well as any of our friends we may meet this winter.

MYNHEER VAN DUNK.

(A new Version.—Ad usum Sir Wilfrid Lawson.)

Mynheer Van Dunk,
That he might not get drunk,
Drank milk and Thames water gaily,
After ridding the first
Of what it had worst,
By a Lipscombe's filter daily.
Singing, O, that our London milk might be
As pure as it is in Alderney!

Milk mixed with water, as one to four,
No Londoner thinks of scorning;
But of milk unwatered he sees no more
Than the cow supplies,
Milked under his eyes,
In the Park on a summer's morning.
And his milk, like his water, should filtered be,
And drunk, even then, most cautiously.

SHORN OF THE SHOULDER-KNOT!

Mr. Punch.

Sir. Grate constunnation have been occasun'd in fashonable Alls by the startlin enounsment in the Harmy and Knavy Gazette that "the uniform of deputy lieutenants has been subjected to a reform which may be described as radical, seeing that the swallow-tails have been developed into tunic-skirts, the lovely epaulettes abolished, and the sash changed into a sword-belt." Wel may this inavation unda the nam of Refaum be call'd Raddicle. Honly that ain't a bad enuf wurd. Revolucianery I calls it, and if heppalets is abollisht in Her Majesty's Sarvis wot next? Wy verry soon the Uniforms of gentlemen in Domestic Imployment will be stripped of the same deckerations. This is a prospect witch hevery gentleman, and gentleman's gentleman of true consawvative feelin must regaud with the gratest Alawm and disgast. Hand when Shouldanots go, in cawse Lace and Plush, and likewise Cockt Ats, and abuv all Air Powda will go too. Has the H. and K. G. truly obsawves—"The new tunic may look smart, but what is a deputy lieutenant without his epaulettes?" True and wot is hany uther Gentleman in Livary? Hand, though possible a Tewnic may look smart enuff in certing suckemstences, honly fancy Mr. Punch, honly pictsha to yourself me and William in Tewnics beind our Caridge. We too shal be put hinto Tewnicks next, and then it won't be no long time befaw you'll beold on the foot-board 2 pair of lowa limbs not to say legs in—O orra the thort is too Dreddful to contumplait in—Trowsas. I think I sea my swallow-tails develupt into tewnick skirts, and my carves envellupt and id in loose cloth overhauls instead of exibited in silks and tites. Our unifawms will be diwested of heverythink distanguy. At last it will cum to plane close. The ideaw makes me fit to sink into my shoos. I can no maw. In a state of utta Colaps and Postration, I remane, honna'd Sir, eva your most abeedjient umble Servent,

John Thomas.

Belgravy, Oct. 8, 1875.

HOW NOT TO DO IT.

What certainly will not put down the rising against Turkish rule—Consul-tations and Capitulations.

Digitized by Google

BELLE À LA MÉCANIQUE. (A RINK WRINKLE.)

RAILWAY JOKES.

As Played Daily on the Principal Lines.

TURNING Business into Pleasure.*—Take a Traveller pressed for time, and induce him to enter a train supposed to be in correspondence with another train belonging to another line, and by which other train the Traveller proposes to proceed to his destination. As the first train arrives at the junction, start off the second train en route for Town. The dismay of the Traveller when he finds his journey interrupted will be, to say the least, most mirth-moving.

The Panic-stricken Passengers.—Allow an express train to arrive at the station of a rival Company two hours behind its time. The Travellers will, of course, be anxious to learn the cause of the delay, and will (again of course) receive no sort of information on the subject from the servants of the rival Company. Should there be any nervous Ladies in the train, the fun will become fast and furious.

A Lark in the Dark.—Start a train ten minutes late, and gradually lose time until it arrives in the middle of a long tunnel, and then stop the engine. Stay where you are for half an hour, whistling and letting off steam every now and then, to increase the excitement. Should it be known in the train that an express is due on the line of rails already occupied by the carriages, the humour of the situation will be greatly improved. Before playing this joke, it will be as well to lock the carriage-doors, and to carefully sever the cord of communication existing (on some lines) between the Passengers and the Guard.

A Comical Meal.—On a long journey promise that the train shall stop at a stated station ten minutes for refreshments. Lose time in the customary manner, and allow the train to arrive at the stated station half an hour late. Permit the Passengers to descend and to enter the Refreshment-rooms. The moment they are served, drive them back hurriedly into the carriages with the threat that if they are not immediately seated in their places they will be left behind. When the Passengers are once more in their compartments, the carriage-doors should be securely locked, and the train can then remain waiting beside the platform for three-quarters of an hour.

The Strange Companions.—Invite Ladies and Gentlemen to travel in a First-Class Carriage. When the compartment is a third full, over-fill it with "merry" excursionists holding Third-Class tickets. The contrast between the "merriment" of the excursionists and the disgust of the Ladies and Gentlemen will be found a source of never-ending amusement.

A Wholesome Joke (added by Mr. Punch and suggested to the Passengers).—Whenever you find yourselves subjected to the "fun" of the Railway Officials, write to the Newspapers and obtain a summons against the Directors of the Company which you believe to be in fault. Verb. sap.

PUNCH TO OCTOBER.

Joyous Month of the Pheasant!
Gamely come to the front:
Give us a time that 's pleasant—
Menses tristes sunt.
Now and then a disaster
On the bright blue sea—
Royalty steaming faster
Than safe, where sails fly free:
Now and then a collision
'Twixt ships of monster power,
Bringing a sudden vision
Of battle's terrible hour.

Come, awaken, October!
Give us a happier time:
England's oaken *robur
Should shake off folly and crime.
What can there be absurder
In a land of progress and pith,
Than every morning a murder
And every evening a myth?
O for October weather
Out on the moorland wide,
Birds in covert and heather,
Beauty at eventide!

If the Winter chills us,
If the Spring is severe,
If a wet Summer fills us
With fancies utterly drear,
Yet our English Autumn
Ought to have days divine:
Fair month, have you brought 'em,
With game, and peaches, and wine?
Ministers turn one acid
With blunders worse than crimes:
O for an Autumn placid—
And nothing new in the Times.

Come, russet, ripe October!
Month when England's ale,
Sipped by Judges sober,
Doth o'er all drinks prevail.
Bring thy calmest weather,
Spare the yellowing leaves:
Punch, with his lengthened tether,
Over their downfall grieves.
Ay, and Youth at the portal
Of life will grieve much more
Than Mr. Punch, the immortal,
Who has seen some Autumns before.

* Stabat ingens animoso robore quercus.

THE GAME FOR RACKETY BISHOPS.—Lawn-tennis.

Digitized by Google

"TURN ABOUT."

George. "I say, Tom, do take care! You nearly Shot my Father then!"
Tom. "'Sh! Don't say anything, there's a good Fellow! Take a Shot at mine!!"

THE RUNAWAY COACH.

"Many a Layman has been somewhat startled of late by the pace at which the Clergy run away with the old Coach of the Establishment whenever it is repaired."—Times.

A propos of Disraeli! How sad the reproach,
That he cannot pull up the runaway Coach,
That off the brisk team at a gallop will go,
The leaders too High and the wheelers too Low,
While the Whip who maintains he can best understand 'em,
Is driving the Pope and old Homer in tandem!

Ben's a judge of a horse too: indeed, there are few men
With eye that is keener, or truer acumen.
We remember his speech, when, with humour to flavour it,
He backed Angel to win, although Ape was first favourite.
But what can he do—ask his warmest adorers—
When Rectors will jib, and when Bishops are roarers?

Away down the hill goes the runaway team;
The old woman who sits on the box doesn't scream;
For though the old coach has been many times patched,
Its early materials are not to be matched.
And the Coachman observes, with no atom of doubt,
"Only give them their heads, and they'll run themselves out!"

Punch must needs shake his head o'er this coaching revival:
And, whether 'tis Ben on the box or his rival,
Only hopes that the team (if they must have their kick),
Won't smash the old Coach by some rascally trick:
And whoe'er holds the reins, if the horses go wrong,
Let us wish him strong wrists, and a whip with a thong.

THE RULE OF ROME.

An "Inquiring City Clerk," fresh from his Roman History, writes to ask if "S.P.Q.R." stands for "Small profits, quick returns."

LADY HELPS.

On this subject much nonsense has been written. They are quite as suitable (perhaps more so than otherwise) to the cottage as to the castle. The cottage need not have a name spelt with a Celtic series of dissonant consonants. A few hints may be advisable to the numerous "Lady Helps" at present in the market.

A Lady may efficiently help the mistress of the household to snub her husband, by adroitly echoing (and improving) the said mistress's remarks of a personal character.

A Lady may help the Cook to produce an original dinner, by suggesting fresh combinations, which will make the said Cook indignant, and even furious.

A Lady may help the Butler effectually, by decanting the '45 port, and shaking it a little first, as you would Daffy's Elixir.

A Lady may help the visitors to the house by reading all the letters that may chance to be thrown aside, and taking advantage of any private intelligence they contain.

A Lady may help the master of the house by a flirtation in the library, while the mistress is away on a round of visits.

A Lady may help the daughters to quiet talks in the Park with ambitious Curates.

A Lady may possibly help the son and heir to—herself.

You see, there are ladies and ladies, as there are fagots et fagots, and Mr. Punch has his suspicions of the Lady Helps of the future.

An Experienced Envoy.

A telegram from Berlin announces that:—

"The Arnim Case will come on before the Supreme Tribunal on the 20th of October."

By-and-by, perhaps, Bismarck will discern Count Arnim to be a person possessing one important qualification at least for an office of trust. He must see that he is a well-tried man.

Digitized by Google

PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE.

(From Our Own Special Eavesdropper.)

LORD SKYNFLYNT has invited a small party of his friends to stay a few days with him at his mansion in Ayrshire. But, as a rumour is abroad that His Lordship's guests last autumn were chiefly fed on rabbits, there are reasons for supposing that His Lordship's invitations will this season be declined.

SIR THOMAS NODDY has accepted a seat on the directorate of The Aldgate Pump and Hounsditch Milk Adulterating Company.

LADY PRATTLEWELL is suffering from the loss of two of her front teeth, which she has sent to be repaired by her dentist, MR. TUGWELL.

The EARL OF STARBOROUGH has purchased the St. Giles's Theatre, and there will shortly make his début before a British audience, in a burlesque, which has been expressly written for him by his wife.

The HONOURABLE MR. SCAMPERTON has just returned from a short tour upon the Continent, wherein he visited Vienna, Copenhagen, St. Petersburg and Moscow, returning by the way of Amsterdam, Constantinople, Athens, Norway, Venice, Heligoland, and Rome.

LADY BOOBIE is at present on a visit at LORD OGLEWELL'S, near Greenock, where she is enjoying some fair sport in her favourite amusement of fishing—for compliments.

CAPTAIN SHARK is just now living with, and on, his friend LORD LOOSEFISH, to whom he is imparting some, but not much, of his knowledge in whist, billiards, and écarté.

VISCOUNT NINCOMPOOP has laid a wager with LORD POPPINGTON that he will shoot a score of sparrows, sing a comic song, swallow a pint of shrimps, and swill a quart of soapsuds, standing on his head, all within the space of sixteen minutes and six seconds.

MAJOR SLYBOOTS has returned from a campaign in Dumfriesshire, where he has been laying siege to the widow of LORD MONIBAGGE.

MR. HOOKITT, after vainly trying to negotiate a loan upon some Honduras and Ojibbeway Ship Railway State Securities, shot the moon last quarter-day without taking out a gun licence, and since has not been heard of, even by his Uncle.

LADY ROUGELEY has contrived, after several attempts, to bring LORD CRŒSUS on his knees (figuratively speaking, for his Lordship has a wooden leg) before her eldest daughter.

MR. BORER has again been blackballed at the Snarlton Club, although on this occasion he was both proposed and seconded by Members of the Government.

The EARL OF MAGNUMBURY is unfortunately laid up with a sharp attack of gout, in consequence of a week's visit to his friend LORD BEESWING.

MR. DUNDER HEAD, M.P. for Muddleborough, took the chair, on Monday last, at a meeting of the Anti-Vaccination and Small-Pox Insurance Society.

MR. SNOBLEY has started in his yacht for Alexandria, with the intention to waylay the Prince when he proceeds to India.

LADY BUTTERFLY has been fluttering about among her friends. She is now on a flying visit to LORD CHRYSALIS, at Grubwell.

COLONEL LONGBOW is enjoying some rare sport in Central Africa. According to his letters, which have not yet been credited, his average bag per diem has consisted of six elephants, eight gorillas, ten ostriches, twelve tigers, fifteen lions, twenty reindeer, and a brace of hippopotami.

VISCOUNT LIQUORUP has proposed, and has been declined with thanks by the HONOURABLE MISS BELINDA GOODIE GOODIE.

SILENCE IS BRAZEN.

O WHERE is the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER?
On a jaunt beyond the seas?
And where, out of reach by goad or spur,
Are the Felstead School Trustees!
The GRIGNON affair—what an ugly tale!—
Could they not, if they chose, explain?
Do they let it pass by, like the idle gale,
As a slander they all disdain?

Again and again is the story told,
Which a word might at once confute;
But from pen, ink and paper their hands they hold,
And their tongues keep also mute.
In the pride of a conscious rectitude,
Can it be they forbear reply?
Are they, Bishop and all, in too haught a mood
To a fiction to give the lie?

The world may believe that a Board of Trustees
Did an act of ungenerous spite,
Which a careless Bishop confirmed at his ease,—
Whereas both may be in the right.
They are silent still, they are silent all;
They are dumb while accusers shout.
They are deaf, as it were, to a trumpet-call—
Will nobody draw them out?

COTTONOPOLIS.

MR. ALDERMAN COTTON has expressed his intention of reviving the glories of the Lord Mayor's Show on the 9th of next November. On that day London is to be rejoiced with a glimpse of Trade Deputations and Volunteer Detachments marching gaily from the Guildhall to Westminster. The Prophet Punch begs to give an anticipatory programme of the Procession.

750,000 Soldiers, Sailors, Tinkers, Tailors, Ploughboys, Apothecaries, Gentlemen, and Thieves.

Policemen getting out of the way.
Enthusiastic Mob, who have got no work to do.
Military Band playing "See the Conquering Heroes come."
Shop-Assistant carrying Banner. Motto—"By Adulteration we Live."
Deputation of Grocers in their own Carriages.
Trade Trophy. Pickles, Copper, Sugar, Sand, Red Lead, Cut-up Birch Brooms, and Tea.
First Volunteer Detachment. Sixteen Captains and a Private.
Military Band playing "Take this glass of Sparkling Wine."
Bar Attendant carrying a Banner. Motto—"Rob a Poor Man of his Beer."
Deputation of Licensed Victuallers in Carriages (the vehicles kindly lent for the occasion by several eminent Brewers).
Trade Trophy. Liquorice, Strychnia, Gin, Cayenne Pepper, Whiskey, and Oil of Vitriol.
Second Volunteer Detachment. Seven Sergeants, a Colonel, and a Bugler.
Military Band playing "O the Roast Beef of Old England!"
Boy carrying a Banner. Motto—"Two and two make five."
Deputation of Butchers driving in Carriages and Six (attended by Wholesale Dealers asking for a larger share of the profits).
Trade Trophy. Scales, Bones, Fat, and Cheque-Books.
Third Volunteer Detachment. A Provincial Pioneer.
Banner of the City of London. Banner of MR. ALDERMAN COTTON.
Standard of H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES. Standard of H.I.H. Mr. Punch.
The late Lord Mayor in a Brougham (wishing that he had thought of "the Procession notion" himself last year).
A strong guard of Cavalry, with Carbines loaded with blank Cartridge.
Carriage and Twelve containing the Rt. Hon. Baron Toby (attended by His Lordship's Veterinary-Surgeon in Ordinary).
Some Trade Deputations, with their Trophies (a little late).
Some Volunteer Detachments (just a trifle disorganised).
An Assortment of City Officials (in Carriages of unequal merit).
Guard of Cavalry guarding Nothing.
A State Coach, moving very unsteadily, containing THE RIGHT HON. THE LORD MAYOR (attended by his Chaplain, Mace-bearer, Common Crier, Secretary, and a few Friends).
City Trumpeters playing extempore Voluntaries on horseback.
Guard of Infantry. Guard of Artillery.
Guard of Cavalry.
State Coach and Sixty-Six, carrying The Staff of His Imperial Highness Mr. Punch (representing His Imperial Highness).
Guard of Infantry. Guard of Artillery.
Guard of Cavalry.
Gigantic Mob, enthusiastic but disorderly.
Policemen getting out of the way.

750,000 Soldiers, Sailors, Tinkers, Tailors, Ploughboys, Apothecaries, Gentlemen, and Thieves.

Digitized by Google

THOSE TERRIBLE TURKS!

"My dear Fellow, your're Looking quite Blue. What is it? Indigo?"
"No. Turks."

"OUR BULWARKS ON THE BRINE."

On Seamanship when Sailors disagree
How can John Bull expect to fare at sea?
Fault sinks a ship; on whom should censure fall?
Chiefs judging Chiefs, are snubbed by Chiefs of all.
Our Sires could trust their Navy. Are their sons
As safe with Ironclads and monster guns?
In time of war protection we must owe
To ships which may be foundered at a blow.
Then, if we wish in ease at home to dwell,
Commanded they need be, and handled, well,
Now that the day of wooden walls is o'er,
And Jack can board his enemy no more,
But they will conquer who the best can steer,
And fight the battles of the Engineer,
The Fleet whereon our sole insurance lies
Would be well officered, if fools were wise!
There, with the Navy to construct anew,
May be some room for "reconstruction" too.
But where will Admirals, conflicting, end?
How far does "unseaworthiness" extend?
Our iron walls are 'gainst teredo good;
But has that insect not bored heads of wood?
These thoughts may somewhat tend to waken fears,
Which bid us cry, "Call out the Volunteers!
Them with the regular troops in camps combine,
And double the Militia and the Line,
To fight for hearth and home as best we can,
Now Vanguards can no longer guard our van."
But Seamen, as to seamanship at sea,
In one particular at least agree;
"My Lords" and the Court-Martial, all the same,
A culprit both condemn to bear the blame.
To whom "My Lords," not erring on the side
Of legal usage, add a man untried.
For half a million sunk the waves below,
Two ruined officers we have to show—
No single scapegoat his superiors saves:
Long may we sing, "Britannia rules the waves."

The Worst Result of Vivisection.—Eve. (By an incorrigible Old Bachelor, who is hiding himself for fear of consequences.)

BEYOND A JOKE.

Scene—A Board-Room in Whitehall. Naval Lords in Council.

A Naval Lord. Ha! ha! ha! The best things I have heard for years. Ha! ha! ha! You will be the death of me!

Another Naval Lord. We have had a fine time of it! Ha! ha! ha! [Roars of sympathetic laughter from other Naval Lords.

Enter Mr. Punch.

Mr. Punch. I beg your pardon—perhaps you are busy?

A Naval Lord. Not at all, my dear Sir, not at all. We have nothing particular to do at this moment for a wonder.

Another Naval Lord. I say, tell him that good story—you know, the one about the Niggers. Now do. It will make him roar.

Other Naval Lords (to Mr. Punch). The funniest thing you ever heard. Ha! ha! ha!

Mr. Punch. Perhaps it was reported in the papers?

A Naval Lord. I don't know. Why, bless you, my dear Sir, we never read the papers. But there, I will tell you the story, and if it doesn't make you shriek, well—I was talking to these fellows about that affair on the Solent. One of our ships ran down a yacht, don't you know, caused a couple of inquests, and then we said that the matter wasn't of sufficient importance to call for any official investigation! Wasn't that good? Ha! ha! ha!

Other Naval Lords. Ha! ha! ha! Eh?

Mr. Punch. Hum!

A Naval Lord. What! It doesn't make you laugh! Well, here's another story. We got a Paymaster (on full pay) to come up to Town to draw up a Circular. He was a Barrister, don't you know, and he drew up such a Circular! He said that Captains commanding Her Majesty's Ships must give up fugitive slaves seeking freedom under the shadow of the Union Jack! Well, we sent it out, and it made such a row! Ha! ha! ha!

Other Naval Lords. Ha! ha! ha! Good, eh?

Mr. Punch. Hum!!

A Naval Lord. Why, that doesn't make you laugh, either! How dull you are!

Another Naval Lord. Tell him about that ship—what was her name? The one you know we put in this month's Navy List with a note saying that she was at the bottom of the sea. Ha! ha! ha!

A Naval Lord. Ha! ha! ha! You mean the Vanguard.

Another Naval Lord. That's it. Ha! ha! ha! The Vanguard. (To Mr. Punch.) Now this will make you roar.

A Naval Lord. Well, Sir, a squadron of Ironclads went into a fog, by order of the Admiral in command, at full speed! Funny notion, wasn't it? Ha! ha! ha! Well, one of the ships, having no fog signal (a capital joke that was too—wasn't it?), ran into another ship, and—ha! ha! ha!—ship No. Two went to the bottom! Wasn't that a joke? Ha! ha! ha!

Other Naval Lords. Ha! ha! ha! Go on.

A Naval Lord (with difficulty suppressing his merriment). Well, Sir, of course there was a Court Martial, and the verdict was "Guilty" against the Captain of ship No. Two, and (as a rider) "Guilty" against the Captain of ship No. One, and "Guilty" against the Admiral in command of the squadron. And what do you think we did? Ha! ha! ha! You will never guess!

Another Naval Lord (shrieking with laughter). Tell him, tell him!

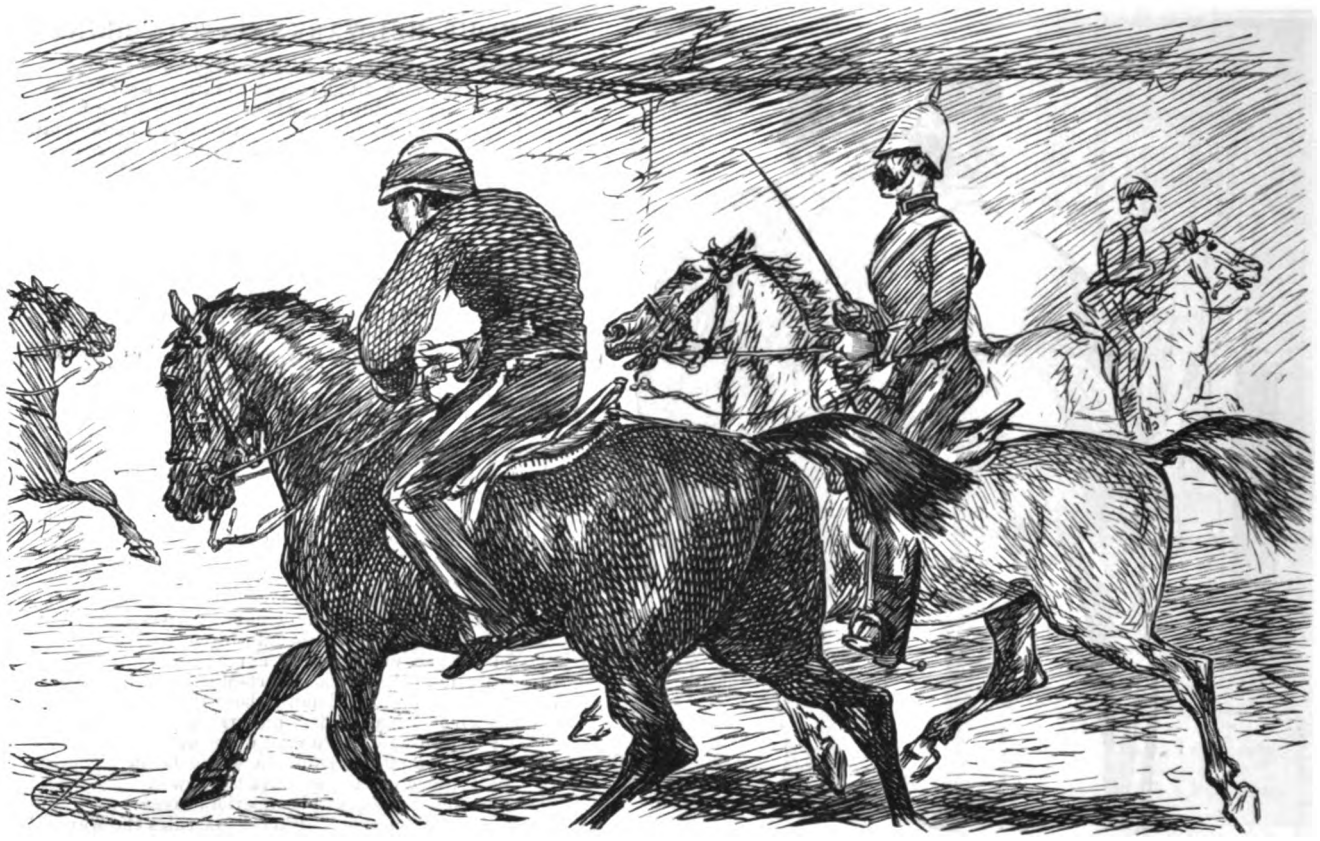
A Naval Lord. Why, Sir, we did—nothing! Now, wasn't that a joke? Ha! ha! ha! Wasn't that a joke?



Mr. Punch. Hum!!!

[Exit Mr. Punch abruptly, so that the stage may be left clear for the appearance of Mr. John Bull. Mr. John Bull is expected to do his duty.

Hope and Heterodoxy.

From a letter in the Times, signed "Plunket," it appears that Mr. Beresford Hope is anxious that the Irish Church "would replace in its rubric the damnatory clauses of the Athanasian Creed"—which though it retains on paper, it has determined shall no longer be read. No Hope for anyone who cannot accept the whole of Athanasius' dogmas, "damnatory" and all. No Hope for the heterodox!

Digitized by Google

THE RIDING LESSON.

Riding Master (to Sub, who is qualifying himself for the Punjaub Cavalry). "IF YER 'EAD WAS ONLY TURNED THE OTHER WAY, WHAT A SPLENDID CREST YOU 'D 'AVE, MR. BOWDRIB!"

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

Dated (en route) Oct. 11, Brandypaunee, India.

SIR,—When the subject of H.R.H.'s visit to India was first on the tapis (this is not an Indian word), the question you naturally, yet artfully, asked, in my presence, was, "Who will go for us?" There was no response. Silence may speak consent; and I (hitherto Your Representative) was silent. So also was the rest of the party. Enfin (again not an Indian word), to quote the Immortal Bard, the rest was silence. Then came the rumour that the Prince wouldn't go. I knew that the Prince would go. I remembered the ancient song, which said, "If I had a donkey wot wouldn't go,"—but we had a Prince who had said he would go, and go he meant to, and go he decided to, and gone he has!

Going! going!! gone!!!

But not there yet.

Now where's the fluster? Everywhere. Every newspaper Editor rushing to me; my room besieged from dewy morn to foggy eve, Editors, Proprietors, everywhere at my doors, at my windows, all beseeching me and crying out, "You're the man we want! Come out of your ambush! Name any terms you like! India and back for five millions. Only do go."

"Gentlemen," I replied, seated at my rosewood desk, in my damask dressing-gown with silk tassels, and the smoking-cap of her work on my glossy locks, "Gentlemen, I cannot. I am another's. My word is my bond—better than Turkish, more durable than Khedives. The séance (not an Indian word) is dismissed."

They left, blowing their noses to conceal their emotion. It was a touching sight. I put my pince-nez (French word, not Indian) to my eyes, and took a sip of chocolate to conceal my emotion.

Then, Sir, I came to you.

In five minutes it was settled. I was to go as Your Representative in India—as Agent in advance, to let you know how the boilers of the Serapis were getting on, and make things generally pleasant for the Royal party.

Of course the Public will be fed from time to time with accounts of what is doing on board, and then will come "how gallantly, how merrily," &c., we passed the day on the broad expanse of ocean. You will hear how (also to be found in the song of The Admiral) "strange things came up to look at us"—to take a sight at us—"the monsters of the deep." Of all this you will be duly informed. But where the interest must commence is in the Second Act of the Drama, with the arrival of the Prince on Indian soil. Till then, the saucepan of journalism can only be kept simmering—then it must boil over.

But this climax it is my aim to anticipate, that is, to a certain extent. By the time you have printed and published this I shall have arrived in India. I, Your Representative, will be on the spot, rehearsing the Indian Rumjams, Rajahs, Burrumpooters (troublesome fellows these Burrumpooters—always have been), and my first telegram, which you can append to this letter, will put you au courant (French, not Indian, this—but I'm a master of both languages, and have sincere friends in both countries) with my doings, and will give the Public some sort of idea of what the Prince will have to expect when he is welcomed here by the swarthy natives.

You may depend upon me for genuine local colouring. Indian ink shall not be spilt in vain by me. Of course this erudition and labour can't be done for nothing, and Your Representative expects something considerably extra for the local touches, Indian phrases, &c., &c.

I have obtained introductions to the best society, and special information on every subject from the intelligent REGENT RUMMUN, now a resident in London—a worthy and noble Indian, who is amassing a colossal fortune. He takes care of the pence, and lets the pounds look after themselves. He is a Parsee-monious gentleman. [Vide Foot-Note.]

I am, with real Indian warmth,

YOUR REPRESENTATIVE.

P.S. (by Telegram).—10 A.M. Only a Rajpoot and a Kitmagar have come to rehearsal. Thermometer 150° in the shade. Regimental native band in attendance. I'm now talking to a distinguished Tom-Tom, who is their hereditary leader. He is what they call here a Chittabac Jugmul,—but I've a little forgotten my

Digitized by Google

CROSSING THE DESERT.

(Fancy Sketch of a Royal Bird of Passage.)

MY BROKER.

Who leads me on to fields Elysian,
Where golden prospects greet my vision,—
And charges but a small commission?
My Broker.

Who, while I trudge through muddy ways,
Rides (for that small commission pays)
Behind a handsome pair of bays?
My Broker.

Who, sitting at Pactolus' fount,
Buys, sells, or holds for "next account,"
Charging, of course, a small amount?
My Broker.

Whose tone is soft, whose manner bland;
Who, lightly holding by my hand,
Talks figures I don't understand?
My Broker.

When panics come, who seems to wear
A calm, serene, superior air,
As if it wasn't his affair?
My Broker.

Whose villa's somewhere in the West;
Whose wife's in silk and sealskin drest;
Whose wines and weeds are of the best?
My Broker's.

Whose waist expands? Who still can sport
A face of roundest, ruddiest sort,
Through drinking forty-seven port?
My Broker.

Whom did I look on as my friend,
Till he those "Turks" would recommend—
Yet knew the inevitable end?—
My Broker!

Such a Rammer!—England's Vanguard—the Iron Duke.

Hindoostanee. I must brush it up again. Twenty-four hours' brushing will do it; and, until I have brushed it up, I don't think it safe to call him a Chittabac Jugmul to his face.

11 A.M.—The Bungalows have arrived. They are as fine a set of men as I've ever seen. Their chief is a Howdah—a real Howdah,—i.e., a genuine native Prince, all jewels and gold, daggers, swords, pistols, and moustache. They are most willing to accept any instruction from Your Representative. We are arranging terms for lessons as to "How to receive the Prince." A nice mess they'd have made of it without me!!

The Howdah rode in accompanied by a guard of Tiffins (mounted). After kincob (an Indian meal for which there is no equivalent in England), he treated me to a cigar and a review. To see the agility of each Tiffin is marvellous! While his horse is at full gallop, the Tiffin swings himself out of the saddle, rushes back three hundred yards, fires his betel (a peculiar sort of Indian pistol), executes a supposed enemy, and is on horseback again in less time than it has taken me to recount the feat. I doubted, I said to the Howdah, whether this particular Tiffin would have had time to cut off the head of a real foe. It is dangerous to hint a doubt to a Howdah. He frowned, and said something in Hindostanee, which I would rather not translate. The result, however, was that an unfortunate Punkah was ordered to represent the enemy, and, in the next charge, the Tiffin (whose agility I had questioned) leapt from his horse, and, before I could wink, his coolie flashed in the air, and the poor Punkah rolled down-hill a lifeless corse at my feet! The Howdah smiled . . . This telegram leaves while he is still smiling. Y. R.

Foot-Note.—This indiscreet hint from our Correspondent lets in more than a ray of light on his proceedings. We have strong reason to suspect that the so-called "Regent Rummun" is the ancient swarthy sweeper who for years has swept a crossing in Regent Street. We are informed that our Correspondent was seen in conversation with him, and, if still in England, he will be closely watched. As to the extra pay for "local colouring," it will depend upon the colouring itself, and the locality it comes from. We can only in honesty warn our readers, and print our Correspondent's letters and telegrams as they arrive. If he is going to try on us a repetition of the "Old Sheik" and "Brummy," let him beware. The Bowstring—we mean the Bow Street—will be his portion.—Ed.

Melancholy Announcement (under the Judicature Act).—The last of the Barons—Sir John Walter Huddleston, Knight!

WANTED!

The Lady and Gentlemen Help Association can find excellent positions for—

A Lady Help with twenty thousand a year, who can help her husband to enjoy existence.

A Lady Help with deft fingers, who can open oysters, peel walnuts and prawns, and make toast.

A Lady Help who can draft a speech that will suit an ex-Secretary of State at a Social Science Congress.

A Lady Help who can do the same for a mild and moderate Bishop at a Church Congress—extra wages will be given for assistance in the composition of Charges.

A Lady Help who can drive Four-in-Hand, for a Coach to be started from Hatchett's Hotel to Coventry.

A Lady Help who is absolutely helpless—none need apply unless they can show that they are good for nothing.

A Lady Help who can look into Messrs. Emmanuel's or Madame Elise's shop-window, with the house-money in her pocket, and not wish to help herself.

Also—

A Gentleman Help who can nurse babies, and comb their hair carefully.

A Gentleman Help who can choose good cigars, and assist in smoking them.

A Gentleman Help who can work a Sewing Machine and a private apparatus for the distillation of whiskey.

A Gentleman Help who can assist the Sultan of Turkey to pay the interest on his debts.

A Gentleman Help who can help the Clerk of the Weather to turn on a little more sunshine.

General Shut-up.

(Aldgate Pump included.)

O'er 'Change still hangs the fatal spell—
Clerics and spinsters Turkish sell;
Egyptian Drafts, too, downward jump,
And none may draw on Aldgate Pump!

Digitized by Google

GUILDHALL IN THE GREENWOOD.

"It had been the custom for the City Aldermen, after transacting their ordinary business at Guildhall, to proceed to Epping Forest to hunt the deer." —Times Report of the visit of the Corporation to Epping Forest on October 14.

O, Aldermen, to the Forest—but not to chase the deer;
'Tis a triumph there they celebrate with pageant and good cheer.
Such a Lord Mayor's Show in the greenwood glades is a novel sight indeed,
Yet the Wood Nymphs well might welcome it as it winds through famed Fairmead.
Guildhall in all its glory amidst the beeches dines,
And though the cold may Turtle chill, or the rain dilute the wines,
They may not damp the doughty Cits, or arrest the fluent flow
Of the toasts that pass o'er a brimming glass as through the card they go.

And Punch is there, and gladly drinks to the health of the Corporation.
These Civic Champions well have earned the cheer of a thankful nation.
They stood to the front, and bore the brunt when the battle's storm waxed sorest,
And from the ghoul Enclosure's prowl they saved the People's Forest.

MAID MARIAN'S self to such a "Mayre" a brimming stoupe had quaffed,
ROBIN HOOD had greeted such "Sheryfes" with shout instead of shaft;
Stout FRIAR TUCK had wished them luck, fair quarry, and full bag,
If as of wont, the Epping Hunt meet again at the "Bald-faced Stag."

For "mery it is, in grene forèst among the levès green,"
To see London's happy, holiday folk enjoy that sylvan scene.
And as they revel in "Englyshe shaw, under the green-wode tre,"
They shall bless the Corporation bold of London's fair Citye!

Five thousand acres well secured, ten thousand thanks well earned!
Be sure from Bethnal Green those thanks with interest are returned;
Pale Spitalfields its tribute yields, when its dense Easter throng,
With voices stout shall swell the shout, two hundred thousand strong!

Three cheers for the Common Councilmen who could take the people's part,
With a better eye for Nature, than some of them show for Art!
Judicial Punch must shrug his hunch, when taste's bounds they 're o'erstepping,
But he gladly owns a good set-off in the rescued glades of Epping.

THE CAT FOR CRUELTY.

LORD ABERDARE, in his speech on Crime, at Brighton the other day, called in question the hitherto undoubted fact that the decrease of robbery with violence was owing to the punishment of that offence by flogging. From the tone of his Lordship's remarks, he does not appear to enter into those feelings which are solaced by the consideration that a cruel ruffian, by whom a person's teeth have been knocked out, or his skull cracked, or his nose smashed on his face, has been scourged to the effect of making him howl some time for mercy. To this extent LORD ABERDARE is evidently deficient in the heart that can feel for another.

However, it is idle to argue the point whether or no flogging has diminished garotting. If this were at all doubtful, it might be tested by a very practicable and most desirable experiment. The crime of wife-beating and wife-kicking is just now prevalent. Extend the punishment of flogging to savage assaults, and see whether it does, or does not diminish them.

LORD ABERDARE should consider that for crimes of violence the cat-of-nine-tails is not merely an instrument of retribution. It is a means of commencing the moral education of the criminal by teaching him what it is to feel physical pain, which he did not consider when he inflicted it. The Cat appeals to his sensitive nerves, in which resides all the feeling he has, and to arouse this is, necessarily, the first step in a process of development tending, as highly as possible in his case, to the elevation of our fellow-man.

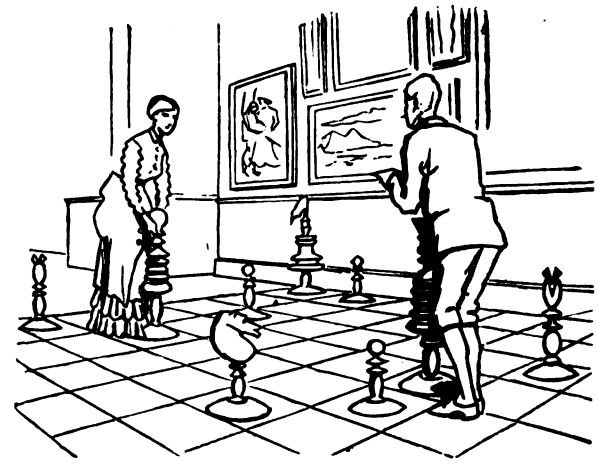
THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

Paperhangings.—The most important feature in this portion of decorative art is "The Dado."

Origin of the Dado.—It is supposed originally to have been the feminine of the now extinct Dodo. The Dodo and the Dado were formerly, of course a very long time ago, caught, stuffed, and kept in glass cases in the Atrium or Hall of the House. In order to display the plumage, the wall forming the back-ground to the Dado, and visible through the glass, was coloured plainly in paper, or if the bird had not been in good health, in "distemper"—but, as the Latins said, Distempera mutantur, and as we haven't now got the Dado, and are forced to do without her, so we perpetuate the remembrance of her stuffed existence by colouring the wall of the hall to a height of three or four feet from the floor. Whatever colour you choose, bear what I have told you in mind, and don't forget the Dado.



Flock patterns are, as might be supposed, a sheepish sort of design, and I cannot recommend them.

For the pavement of a hall—and by a hall I mean something more than a narrow passage between the front door and the dining-room, lighted by an outside gas lamp—tiles should be used.

How to Collect Tiles.—Give several parties. At each party several guests will do what Bo-Peep's sheep did with their tails—and leave their "tiles" behind them. These tiles can be easily arranged for the hall.

As for patterns in tiles, buy a kaleidoscope. It will supply you with an endless variety of patterns.

But if you require REAL NOVELTY, take my advice, and combine the useful and amusing with the ornamental. Make your hall a place where to spend, happily, a rainy day. Every householder should make provision against a rainy day—and here you are; here is your modus operandi: Lay down a chess-board pattern in tiles. Have chess-men made as big as skittles. You can then walk about and play the game.

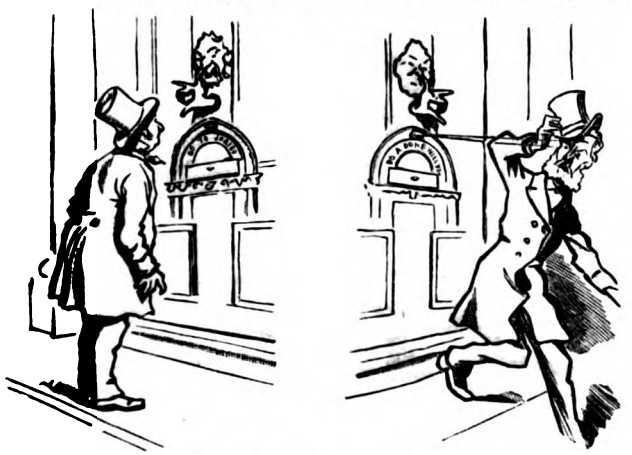
The same pattern forming a chess-board will also do, of course, for draughts. But, as draughts should always be avoided in a house, specially in a hall, I will not be the first to introduce them.

A skittle alley, and an alley for American bowls, should form part of every well-regulated hall.



Digitized by Google

While so near the front door, it will be as well to pay some attention to the exterior decoration in knockers and bell handles.

The knocker, which might be a Roman nose, or a fist, should be so arranged as to answer its own requirements.

I will explain. When a person knocks at a door, it means that he wants something. Now, the first thing he wishes to know is, whether any one is at home. Now, the knocker may be so arranged as to touch a spring, with one knock, which shall immediately shoot out a white metal plate with "Not at Home" on it. Two raps would produce "Return Uncertain." Three raps, which would show obstinacy, and would indicate an unfriendly spirit on the part of the rapper,—an unfriendly spirit-rapper,—should produce a metal plate bearing the words "Be Off!" Four raps, evincing pertinacity, animosity, or clearly the hand of a dun, should produce a plate with the words "Go to—Jericho!" on it. All this can be managed with a circular shield, of mediæval design, affixed to the front door at a small cost.*

A fifth rap should touch a percussion exploder, and project a small but sharp-hitting pea, with the words "Do 'a done! will you?"—or, instead of the percussion, a piston-worked squirt which would discharge a small quantity of water into the rapper's face.

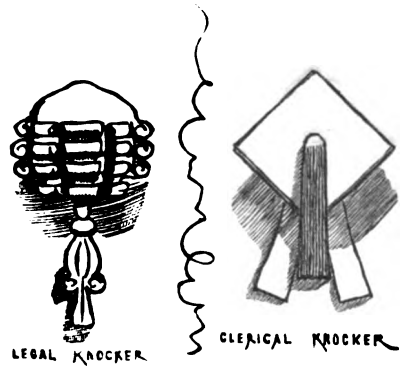
Bells could be arranged on a similar principle. Unless they were entirely done away with, and speaking-tubes used.

The Master or Mistress is then able to go to the window, or without doing so to recognise the voice of the caller. In which case, if there is a piano at hand, Dr. Watts's Sluggard's Hymn can be adapted and sung as follows:—

'Tis the voice of the Caller,
I heard him complain,
"Not at home! Always out!
I won't call here again."

Or, without wasting time in song, the answer can be at once given, "No, gone out," or "Not at home," or you can call down through another tube to the footman in the pantry, and say, "Master's not at home—gone out—won't be back for ever so long," &c., &c.

These Tubes can be, externally, in floriated metal of exquisite design, representing flowers of speech.



These speaking-tubes save the servants' legs, if that is an object, and your servants' legs should be an object—of admiration.

À propos of "saving your servants' legs"—every Lady of fashion should have a cupboard where she should save her servants' legs—I mean a cupboard which should represent a Domestic Magazine, for the use of male servants, and be filled up with plenty of padding.

A Lawyer, a Doctor, a Clergyman, a Dentist, an Artist, an Author, an Actor, &c., &c., each one ought to have a special and peculiar style of furnishing his house, instead of bringing down the decorative art to one dead level uniformity.

* Send to the Author of this work; he knows the man to do this cheap. Small commission; no other charge. Orders punctually attended to.

For example, a Barrister's door knocker should be a tail of a legal wig; a Clergyman could publish his bands outside; a Dentist could have a tooth and nail, and so forth.

(To be continued.)

(POLICE)-COURT THEATRES.

It is stated, on the best authority that can be found for the rumour, that the delay which has taken place in providing proper Police Courts in several districts where the existing ones are disgracefully inadequate, has been occasioned by the consideration of a scheme which would necessitate buildings of an entirely different character. It has been thought that the large amount of "applause," "laughter," and "cheers, which were taken up outside the Court," continually occurring, might warrant the establishment of an auditorium where such manifestations would appear less out of place. The ordinary design for a bijou theatre would be all that could be desired.

In this the worthy Magistrate might occupy the centre of the stage, and persons of distinction, instead of being "accommodated with a seat on the Bench," could be shown into a private box. The Chief Clerk might be accommodated in a prompter's box, such as is used at the Opera House, where his various suggestions and expoundings of the law would not appear so derogatory to the Magisterial capacity as is occasionally the case at present.

Prisoners, accompanied by a Policeman, might come up a trap from the cells. On conviction, they might descend amidst flashes of red fire. On acquittal, they might be allowed to bow to the audience and retire at the wings, amid applause. Any defendant informed that he, or she, left the Court "without a stain on his (or her) character," might at his, or her, exit, have the limelight turned on, as a visible and sensational symbol of innocence triumphant!

On such a stage the worthy Magistrates and Counsel, who are now so often witty under every disadvantage, might crack their jokes to their hearts' content, and receive naturally the national tribute of laughter and applause.

On these boards the Comic Witness might "gag" till he brought down the house; while the Comic Prisoner might rouse "the Gods" to that enthusiasm which expresses itself in the cheering which at present is so often "taken up outside the Court."

The question of refreshment-rooms, and a small orchestra to play appropriate airs during the unavoidable pauses in the proceedings, such as adjournments for lunch, might be considered at leisure. While, however, "laughter," "applause," and "cheers," cannot be suppressed in the Courts that exist, Police-Court Theatres do not strike us as a very great innovation. If Justice cannot be administered with gravity, in the present temper of the public, we see no reason why the temples of Themis should not be invested with all the attractiveness that now belongs to those of her popular relatives Melpomene and Thalia.

What Can It Be? or, the Sphinx of the Sea.

The Correspondent of the New York World, on board the Pandora, hailing from Disco, transmits his log; wherein occur the following entries:—

"Monday 19th.—Begins with calm. At three A.M., Davis, A.B., catches three 'moley-mokes.' At eleven we see two seals. . . . We also see several bottle-nosed whales."

A bottle-nosed whale may be imagined a sea-Bardolph, an emblem of a man who drinks like a fish, as a whale drinks, if either a fish or a whale drinks at all. But what is a "moley-moke"? There are said to be sea-horses. Can the "moley-moke" be a sea-donkey? We hope the People will shortly be enabled to study a "moley-moke" in the Westminster Aquarium, some fine Sunday.

Digitized by Google

EQUALITY.

Lady Clara Vere de Vere. "CAN YOU TELL ME, JANE, WHAT YOU MOST WANT FOR YOUR WEDDING?"

Jane. "REALLY, MY LADY, I CAN'T 'ARDLY SAY. I AVEN'T GOT NOTHING. BUT YOU'D KNOW BEST, MY LADY—ANYTHING JUST WHAT YOU'D WANT, MY LADY, IF YOU WAS IN THE SAME POSITION."

A WONDERFUL SHOW.

ENGLAND is a showful country. But we question whether any of the Shows and Exhibitions which have allured millions of shillings during the last quarter of a century can vie, for variety and comprehensiveness, with one which is being held this week at the Alexandra Palace.

The mere recital of the extraordinary attractions now on view at the Alexandra must convince the most hardened sight-seer that there is still something left to stimulate his attention, and satisfy his curiosity.

Pouters.—We put these first, because of the place they occupy in the advertisement. But why they should hold such a prominent position, or why they should be thought to possess any merit at all, we are at a loss to understand. Pouters ("one who pouts," Dict.) may be found in most domestic circles, particularly where there are children, but this must be the first time that the idea of rewarding them with prizes can have entered into anyone's head.

Carriers.—A most useful class, who deserve all the encouragement that can be parcelled out to them. The success of the Cabmen's Show has, no doubt, suggested the propriety of awards to Carriers.

Dragons.—This class ought of itself to fill the Palace to overflowing, and to bring in a fabulous amount of money. There is not a Zoological Garden in the world which can boast of even a single specimen. Having the repute of being very ferocious creatures, we trust all proper precautions will be taken to ensure the public safety.

Tumblers.—No rarity either at the Alexandra or Crystal Palace. Perhaps these may possess some extraordinary elasticity of limb, some singular strength of nerve, calling for special commendation.

Barbs.—Out of place here. Ought to have been sent to the Horse Show.

Jacobins.—Very interesting. Rather a surprise to find they are not extinct, at least under this name. See CARLYLE'S History of the French Revolution. Not to be confounded with Jacobites, of whom there are no specimens in the Collection.

Fantails.—A complete puzzle. The hats of peculiar shape, worn by coalheavers, dustmen, and other industrious classes, are, we believe, called "Fantails;" but such articles scarcely seem interesting enough for public exhibition.

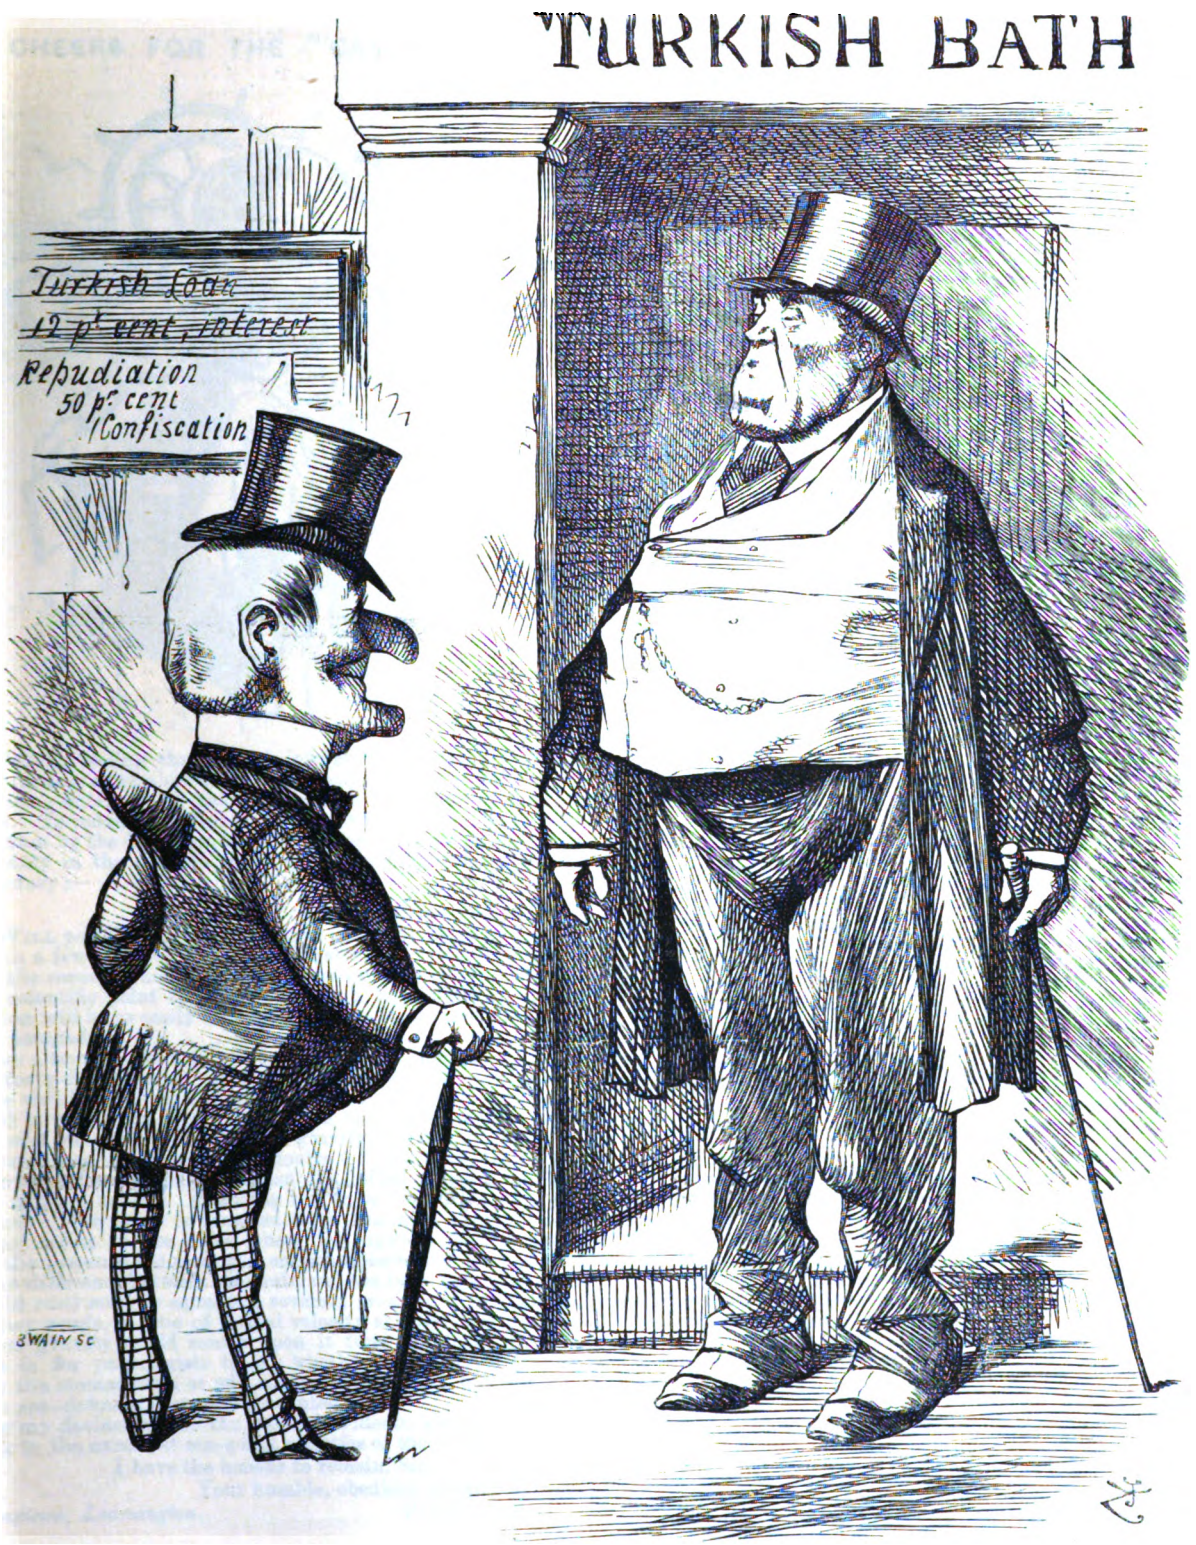
Nuns.—None so remarkable as these in the whole Show. All our conventional notions of the seclusion and retirement of these excellent persons are shattered to pieces for ever. It is needless to add that they are without exception carefully hooded. (We looked in vain for prize Monks to match them.)

Trumpeters.—Novel, but noisy. Probably supplied by the bands of Her Majesty's Regiments. Perhaps more suitable for a National Music Competition.

Owls, Magpies.—Attractive to bird-fanciers, Judges, and chatterers.

Runts.—Can this, after all, be a Cattle Show?

Turbits.—Is this a misprint for Turbots?



Antwerps.—For mysteriousness may be bracketed with Fantails and Nuns. There is but one Antwerp in the world, and to transport it from the Scheldt to Muswell Hill, even with all the appliances of modern scientific ingenuity, is simply an impossibility.

Archangels.—This Show must be a hoax. Nothing of the sort! It is really a Pigeon Show. Poultry also; but these we must entrust to other pens.

Useful Knowledge in Yorkshire.

HOORAY for the Yorkshire Training Schools for Cookery!—established by the Yorkshire Ladies' Council of Education in various Yorkshire towns, particularly York, Leeds, and Wakefield, to teach Cookery in all its branches, from those at the top of the tree downwards, and so instruct the poorer classes how to better and cheapen their meals; which perhaps may be said to be going to the root of the matter. It is confidently anticipated that the effect of these Yorkshire Training Schools will even extend to a very considerable improvement of Yorkshire Pie. Let them take care: "Le mieux est l'ennemi du bien."

Digitized by Google

A TURKISH BATH.

(In the City.)

MR. PUNCH. "GOOD GRACIOUS, MR. JOBBERSTOCK! WHAT'S THE MATTER?"

PORTLY CITY MAGNATE. "MATTER, INDEED! JUST HAD A TURKISH BATH! LOST THOUSANDS O' POUNDS IN LESS THAN NO TIME! PHEUGH!!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

CHEERS FOR THE "CASTALIA."

Mr. Punch, feeling the deepest interest in the success of the Castalia (a most admirable vessel), has great pleasure in publishing the following letters which have reached his office during the last few days. To judge from their contents, some of them seem to have been written by the Correspondents who have been airing the subject recently in the columns of a highly respectable and respected contemporary:—

Sir, October 16th, 1875.

Will you allow me space in your excellent pages to supplement with a few words of popular explanation the valuable observations of the savants who have treated the question of sea-sickness from a scientific point of view? I think the following simple illustration will be as easily understood by the most frivolous as by the least learned.

Suppose a smooth sphere to rest on an inclined plane at an angle of—say forty-five degrees. To fix our ideas, we will imagine that the plane weighs a pound, and that the smooth sphere is of globular form and is vertical in direction. When the smooth sphere is at rest, we will imagine that the lateral gravity is virtually impressed with a weight varying from zero to double (or even more) the weight of the intermediate velocity between the initial reaction and the artificial upward motion. Assuming this to be the case, it stands to reason that if the brain is removed (with becoming gravity) from the lowest point to the place where the upward motion would increase the pressure between the smooth sphere and the inclined plane, the difference between the brain and the table (upon which it now would rest) must be equal to a reversed pressure of two pounds, or, in other words, a ratio of lateral velocity exactly corresponding with what gravity would confer upon it from the rest. Now, of course, it is for pathologists to say whether this variable gravity acting on the stomach will or will not produce nausea; but if it will, why then sea-sickness is at once accounted for.

Adding my declaration to the mass of evidence already collected testifying to the excellent sea-going qualities of the Castalia,

I have the honour to remain, Sir,
Your humble, obedient servant,

The Lexicon, Leamington. Plain English.

Sir, October 16th, 1875.

I think there can be no doubt now about the success of the Castalia. She has only to be well known to gain a large and lasting popularity.

Faster engines have been suggested as a mode for securing this very desirable publicity, but I think I can propose a far better plan. In years gone by, there was (I am given to understand) a coach running between London and the Provinces, which was wont to carry its passengers for nothing. This plan was adopted to ruin the prospects of a rival conveyance. Now, Sir could not the Directors of the Castalia take the hint, and convey their travellers at a similar rate? The scheme might be greatly improved upon by the addition of a gratuitous dinner offered to the passengers before starting.

If the latter valuable suggestion is adopted, I, for one, shall be very happy indeed to patronise the Castalia daily for weeks and months—nay, perhaps, even for years to come.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Rather a large Holder of Turkish Bonds.

Post Office, London, E.

Sir, October 16th, 1875.

The Castalia is unquestionably an excellent vessel—perhaps a little too excellent. I am a first-rate sailor. I have been all over the world, and have never been ill in my life. My wife, on the contrary, is invariably reduced to silence the moment we leave the harbour. The other day, to my great annoyance, she insisted upon travelling in the Castalia. I opposed the plan, because I have been accustomed to enjoy peace and a cigar on the deck of the Mail Boat when my wife has been helpless in the cabin below. However, she would go by the Twin ship, and, thanks to the disgusting steadiness of the vessel, on this occasion I enjoyed neither peace nor a cigar. My wife remained on the deck the whole time, and favoured me with her views (very decided ones)—anent latch-keys and late suppers.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Rose Bank Cottage, Loamshire. Married For Money.

Sir, October 16th, 1875.

As a very old sailor, who has made the passage between Dover and Calais at least a score of times, I trust you will permit me to say a few words about that greatest of modern inventions, the twin-ship Castalia.

In the olden days, I have seen the Mail Boat crowded with pale men and suffering women. The miserable hour and a half has been miserable indeed, especially at times when the weather has been described (excuse my nautical phraseology) as "dusty."

A few days since, I determined to cross the Channel in the Castalia. The sea was tolerably calm, and the sky was beautiful. As a thorough salt, I made my customary preparations to secure a painless passage. Before starting, I consumed a hearty lunch of salt herrings, boiled mutton, lobster, champagne, and Chartreuse vert. My pockets were full of rose cough lozenges and liquorice, and next to my back I carried a good sized linen bag, containing crushed ice, mustard seed, and powdered camphor.

Thus fortified, I went on board, and took up a position near the centre of the vessel. I lighted a cigar, and enjoyed, for the first time, a splendid view of Dover Castle. The Castalia began to move, and we slowly left the harbour. The moment we were in the open sea, I noticed a slight (a very slight) rolling—as comforting as the rock of a cradle. I took out my note-book to chronicle further observations, when, I am sorry to say, I was suddenly seized by a strange indisposition, which caused me to lie on my back for the rest of the journey.

The Steward (who was most attentive to me) informed me on our arrival that only one passenger had been ill during the passage.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
The Sea Gulls, Blackheath. An Admirer of Nelson.

Dear Master, October 16th, 1875.

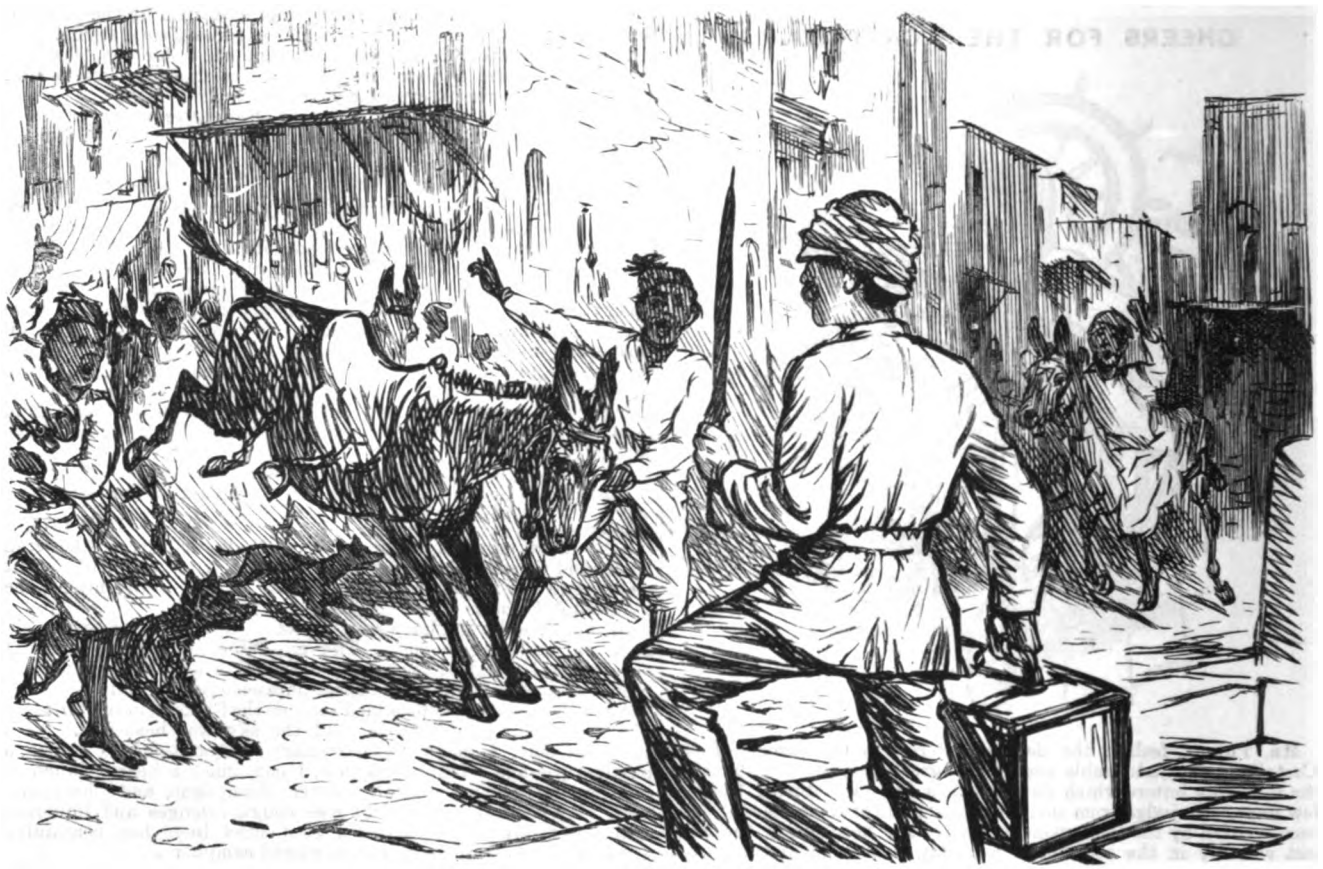
In compliance with your honoured instructions, I have just been from Dover to Calais and back in the Castalia. The sea was rough, but the movement of the vessel was so pleasant that we, none of us, felt in the least unwell. The ship (when she has new engines) will be a great success in every particular.

I hope you will not be angry with me for biting a man who said something about my "bark being on the sea." I could not help it. He told a story—I did not bark at all.

Yours respectfully and affectionately,
On Board the "Castalia," Dover. Toby.

Does a Bad Ending make a Good Beginning?



If so, there is much hope for the new Servian Ministry, which, as we learn from the Daily News of the 11th instant., contains the following names: M. Kaljevic, M. Pavlovic, Major Sdravkovic, Colonel Pickovic, and M. Jancovic. Colonel Pickovic is probably a member of an Eastern branch of the Pickwick family; but, be this as it may, one cannot but regret the appointment of so wicked a Ministry at such a critical moment.

To the Serapis.

"The boilers (of the Serapis) have been found to prime to an extraordinary degree."

Your boilers are "priming," and just at a time,
When, consid'ring your errand, they ought to be prime.

Digitized by Google

FAME!

Donkey Boy (to Britisher, landing at Suez). "DIS BERY SUPERIOR DONKEY, SAR! DIS 'DOCTOR KINEELER,' SAR!!"

SCHOOLS FOR SCARLET FEVER.

IT is possible for School Board visitors to be not a little too active in the execution of their office. Some of them exceed it by the exercise of considerably too much zeal. Witness a case related by "A MEDICAL MAN" in the Standard, "à propos of compulsory school attendance." The children of a family he usually attends have lately been suffering from severe, if not malignant, scarlet fever. During its continuance, they having been removed from the Board School which they had previously been attending, remained some time absent, when—

"The visitor called on the mother during the week to learn the cause of their absence, of which he was informed. 'How long had they been ill?' 'Some ten days; one was then very bad.' 'One was nearly well?' 'Yes—at least, was much better.' 'She must be sent to school again immediately.' The mother replied that she did not think it would be right to send her, as she would probably convey the infection to the other children in the school; and, upon the visitor insisting, positively refused to allow the child to attend for the present. The visitor, finding her determined, left, threatening to take further proceedings."

Zeal, in the conduct of this official, appears to have dangerously prevailed over discretion. In fact, the latter attribute may be thought so conspicuous by its absence as to constitute an utter unfitness for any function which could not be performed by a fool. According to "A MEDICAL MAN," however, such fools as this one are by no means uncommon amongst School-Board visitors:—

"Yet it is a matter of wonder why scarlatina, &c., have lately been so much on the increase. Often I have been horrified, on calling to see children barely convalescent from scarlet and other fevers, to hear that they were at school; and, on inquiring what could have prompted the mother to send them, have been informed that the School-Board visitor had been and had insisted on their resuming attendance at once."

Not to know that "scarlet fever is a deadly and most infectious disease," that for at least a month after its disappearance it is not safe for a child to return to school, and that the case is the same with measles, chicken-pox, hooping-cough, and typhus, is ignorance through which "A MEDICAL MAN" has found all those diseases, and perhaps even small-pox also, propagated by "hyper-zealous visitors" of Board-Schools. Is not such ignorance on the part of such officers quite as criminal as any which, when it kills people, juries find to be manslaughter?

SCIENTIFIC INDUSTRY.

TO MISTER PUNCH Onered Sir i ear as eow LORD DARBY hev bin a speechifyin at Manchester about the subjick of skilled Labor & a presentin of the prizes at a meetink of the Siety fur the Purmoshun of Skyentiffic Hindstry. which there's me & CHARLEY CLYFAKER is both on us what our french pals ud call us shovellers of Hindstry* leastways we gets a onest living by aputtin of our Ands into other peoples pockets in a skyentiffic manner wich Hif this ere aint skilled labor ide like to no wot is & me and CHARLEY wants to ear if onest fellers sich as we be elligible fur to compete fur prizes which LORD DARBY he mite giv us. Sir we wood both on us be appy fur to show our skill and hindstry at any public meeting purwidin as the Crushers ud be bound to take no notice on us & not to intafere with our leggittimate pursoots—Which if so be as how they'n on'y jest allow us fur to pop the Tickers as we prigged we shoodent ax fur no more Prizes to reward us for our trubble. Umbly oping they 'll elect us both as fellers of this Skyentiffic Siety i remane sir to comand your most obejent PETER PRIGGINS.

* Chevaliers d'industrie?

Comparative Sable.

FROM a letter addressed to LORD LYTTLETON by ARCHDEACON HONE, and published in the Times, it appears that the Black Country, in MR. BREWER'S report thereon, looks too entirely black, there being even among the "nailers" a large number of "good and respectable" white spots in it. It is gratifying to discover that the Black Country is not so black as it is painted. But this qualification leaves it subject to a comparison more odious than flattering.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL MOSSOOS IN THEIR SUNDAY BEST.

THE PRINCE'S LAST WORDS.

Oct. 12, Dover Pier.

Lo, the Castalia ready to start,
And our pet Princess, with a tremulous heart,
Thinking of perils by sea and shore—
When there comes a Mayor (don't call him a bore!),
And, to the Mayor a natural pendent,
A Corporation, in robes resplendent,
And the sauve Lord Warden, with patience rare,
Says, "Your Royal Highness, this is the Mayor."

He had an address, which he could not read,
For the Captain wanted to get up speed:
The moon was bright and the sea was calm,
And why should Royalty suffer a qualm?
There was tug and turmoil the deck all over,
So "unabatedly loyal" Dover
Was perforce content with a word in the Times,
And immortal fame in Punch's rhymes.

Never, since Princes had to be fluent,
Was better speech than our royal truant
Made to the mighty Mayor of Dover—
Who wished him fortunate passage over,—
For he simply said, with his good-humoured air,
"I am much obliged to you, Mr. Mayor."
The Prince's laconic style of reply
We advise all mayor-ridden magnates to try.

"With a Difference."

"I SIT at ten pounds a week," exclaimed Sir John Falstaff; and the fat knight wished to make an end of it. "I sit at ten pounds a day" might be the exclamation of the Chief Commissioner at an Election Inquisy, "and I have not the slightest desire to make an end of it." Verb. Sap.

REASSURING INTELLIGENCE.

A LOAD must have been taken from many minds by the Times' statement that the Pump in Aldgate, about to be closed by the City Commissioners of Sewers, "on account of sewage contamination rendering it absolutely unfit for domestic purposes," is another Pump than the venerated engine which has stood so long the ornament and glory of Aldgate, and bears, distinctively, the name of that famous Ward:—

"The offending pump is opposite the Church of St. Botolph, Aldgate, at the corner of the Minories, and must not be confounded with the Aldgate pump par excellence, situated at the junction of Leadenhall and Fenchurch Streets, against which no imputation can justly be made."

Let us hope so. Perhaps Aldgate's own Pump descends into a formation below the stratum whence sewage leaks into the well of the mere Pump in Aldgate. Maybe the water of Aldgate Pump par excellence excels that of the other in purity, and, particularly, does not contain any of that meaty "albuminoid," which, present as so much, and in any quantity too much, "body," in any water, renders it peculiarly unfit to drink. Alas, this possibility is contested as a fact, but if it were really so, and not otherwise, what good citizen would not rejoice exceedingly to learn that the announcement of conditions implying an end to Aldgate Pump was a false alarm?

NICE NAMES FOR THE NAVY.

ALARMISTS we are not, and have no wish to frighten anybody. Still, we cannot help remarking that there really is some room for some improvement in our Navy. Costly as they are, our ships seem hardly worth the pains and pounds we spend on them. Soon as they stir from shore, they appear to be assured of either breaking down, or else of breaking up and sinking. The Vanguard was lost lately, mainly owing to bad seamanship; and the Serapis, though chosen for her speed as the right ship for the Prince, has, it is reported, owing to the "priming" of her engines, been steaming at the rate of only seven knots an hour!

In either men or ships, then, it is clear we cannot boast much of our Navy just at present. Put not your trust in Ironclads, must just now be the watchword. As a cautionary measure, it might be wise to change the names of certain of our ships, so as to inspire a wholesome doubt of their seaworthiness. Names expressive of distrust might be judiciously applied, and might by way of warning prove of service to the nation. Instead of choosing names such as the Victory or the Valorous, it might be well to christen vessels as the Faulty or the Timorous. As a name of evil omen we should rather like to see a big ship launched as the Cassandra. Names such as the Trusty we would utterly discard, and in their place make use of others—such, for example, as the Faithless, the Deceptive, or, still worse, the Unreliable. The Eagle or the Lynx might likewise well be laid aside: and to imply a bad look-out, we would call a ship the Mole, the Bat, or else the Blindworm. For the Camilla or the Swiftsure, we would advise the substitution of the Sinksure or the Slowcoach: while in lieu of braggart titles like the Terrible, the Bulldog, the Ajax, and the Thunderer, we would recommend the usage of a more modest nomenclature—as, for instance, the Feeble, the Tortoise, the Jackass, or the Blunderer.

Herzegovina and Spain.

A PARTY in Spain is said to meditate a pronunciamiento in favour of EX-QUEEN ISABELLA. While they are about it, they might as well tell us how to pronounce the name of the Herzegovinian Leader LUBIBRATICS. That crack-jaw word looks about as like "Lucubrations" as "Skuptschina" to "Soup-kitchen."

CRUEL, BUT COMPENDIOUS CRITICISM.—MR. IRVING'S Macbeth — Mac*Bells*.

Digitized by Google

THE CRY OF THE COMMON-COUNCILMAN;

Or, Mr. Alderman Sludge on Public Opinion.

HAT for Public Opinion, I say! Why, what next shall we come to, I wonder?
A pretty idea, indeed! This 'ere Court to the Country knock under?
Cave in at the cry of the Press, the Profession, the People—good gracious!
I almost feel my 'air stand on end at suggestions so simply owdacious!

Can't we do what we like with our own, we incorporate Nobs of the City?
If this Court hasn't gumption sufficient to mend an old Bridge, it's a pity.
What, go and rescind resolutions, along o' this Press-botheration?
I do trust my Lud Mayor we shall shun such ridiklus Self-Stultification!

Ahem! That's a capital word, and I think it should settle the business.
Self-stultified? Us! This 'ere Court! Why the notion affects me with dizziness!
The term, I am told, is derived from the forren for something like "duffer;"
Which applying the same to ourselves is a thing which we never should suffer!

"Obscure derivation?" Ah, well, MR. ALDERMAN POSE is so clever!
No matter! But pander to Public Opinion and Press Writers? Never!
We know 'ow such things are got up. For myself, I regard those with pity
Who talk about taste and all that, and yet haven't a voice for the City!

I'm sick of the stuff that is talked about spoiling the Bridge, and such gammon.
One would think 'twere some Temple of Wenus, and not a mere highway for Mammon,
Leading straight to the heart of our City, the centre of all that is glorious!
Of course 'tis the Bank as I mean!
[Here the Council's applause was uproarious.

That cheer does me good! I contend Tin has nothing to do with the Tasteful;
And spending the Citizens' cash on such nonsense is wickedly wasteful.
This talk about Hart, and the like, is mere sentiment, silly and sickly;
What we want is a Bridge as will bear us, come cheap, and be finished off quickly.

Object to the boiler-plates, do they? By Gog, what could well be absurder?
Our Age is the great Iron Age, and the man who would gird at a girder,
Or talk silly trash about holding the Bridge as a trust for the Nation,
Would turn up his nose at the Bank, or pooh-pooh our sublime Corporation.

These 'ere Engineers, why, of course, of expensiver plans they 've a many;
It's all in the way of their trade. But to talk of respect due to RENNIE
Is rubbish. He built us a Bridge, long ago, and we paid 'im his figger.
What is it to him if we do spoil its beauty in making it bigger?

But I see no objection myself to our plan. I should pass it instanter,
And not stop to argue the point with each newspaper critic or canter.
This Court should be cock of the walk in the City, and not the whole Nation:
So, whatever we do, my Lord Mayor, let us shrink from Self-Stultification!

OUR ADVERTISING COLUMN.

HAVE we Cannibals among us, without going to the Fans of the Gaboon? It would seem so, from such a "Want" as this, openly advertised in the Daily Telegraph:—

HAM AND BEEF.—WANTED, a YOUNG MAN for the above.—Apply, &c.

Pecksniff is immortal. Therefore we may be sure Pecksniff cannot be dead. He lives and advertises. Here surely we trace the fine Pecksniffian hand, in this advertisement from a recent number of a leading daily:—

GOOD NEWS FOR FATHERS.—An architect, of credit and renown, has VACANCY for ARTICLED PUPIL, on exceptionally favourable terms as regards premium and advantages.—Letter to PALLADIO, 5, Stucco Terrace, South Kensington.

Othello talks of "anthropophagi and men whose heads do grow beneath their shoulders." Had the Moor been a reader of the daily papers of October, 1875, he might have felt that the advertisement which heads our column of Wants was meant for his "anthropophagi." And surely he would have admitted that the "delicate monster" demanded in the advertisement to which we now give extended publicity, would have been worthy to figure beside his men with heads beneath their shoulders:—

TO PLUMBERS, GASFITTERS, &c.—WANTED, a THREE-HANDED MAN.—Apply, &c.

Can anybody tell us why Plumbers and Gasfitters should be considered the likeliest trades to supply such a phenomenon?

Widowers beware! "Lady Helps" are all the cry; and here is a Lady, who evidently, we should say, means to help herself. As an appeal to the Snobocracy, her last touch is capitally imagined. This serene Lady Housekeeper will have nothing to say to parvenus or nouveaux riches; so, if she accepts a situation, her happy hirer may feel assured that he does not belong to either of these "low" categories. Such a Housekeeper will, of herself, be as good if not as a patent of nobility, at least as a cachet of distinction:—

LADY-HOUSEKEEPER.—WANTED, by a Lady, age thirty-two, a SITUATION in the above capacity, in the household of a Widower, with or without children. She is an experienced housekeeper and an excellent manager, calculated to make a home very comfortable. Being a staunch Churchwoman (without bigotry), a thorough Lady both by birth, position, and education, she could not treat with any one avowedly professing no religion, neither with parvenus nor nouveaux riches.—Address, &c

We can only end as we began—Widowers beware!

And here's a chance for the Clerk of the Weather in London, if—as we admit is very unlikely—he should be short of the article in question for November:—

THIRTEEN ACRES OF FOG TO LET.

We cut this advertisement from the Leeds Mercury. Leeds is a good way from London, but no doubt, as fogs can be let by the acre, they are capable of being carried by the mile.

SHAKSPEARE has familiarised us with the notion of "Sermons in stones." What do our readers think of "Sermons on bones?" This happy thought seems to have occurred to the Ex-Indian Chaplain whose advertisement we take from the Ecclesiastical Gazette:—

PREFERMENT or EMPLOYMENT SOUGHT, for a period not exceeding Two Years by an Indian Chaplain on furlough. Age fifty-five. Thirty years in Holy Orders. Opposed to all mimicry of Roman usages. Preaches Extempore from a skeleton. Ample testimonials. London, Oxford, Cambridge, or South Coast preferred.

Admiralty Blockades (or 'Eads?).

DEAR PUNCH,

I HEAR, on very good authority, that the Admiralty have issued orders that the Channel squadron will proceed down the Channel, in future, on the block system, thereby avoiding all chances of collision.

Yours obediently,

A. SOLDIER.

Digitized by Google

"WAYS AND MEANS."

First Country Gentleman. "'Mean Hunting this Winter, Charlie?"
Second Country Gentleman (doubtfully). "'Shall try and 'Work' it."
First Country Gentleman. "How?"
Second Country Gentleman. "Give up the Under-Nurse, I think!"

PUNCH TO THE CLERK OF THE WEATHER.

Despotic Official!
Punch wants to know
Why in the world you drench us so;
Why, with savage persistence, again and again,
You turn off the sun and turn on the rain;
Why you spoil the frills of the lovely sex;
Why Thames and Severn and Trent and Exe
Of their legal limits pass the line,
And in neighbouring cellars spoil the wine.

The official mind, O Clerk of the Weather,
Is apt to keep to a certain tether:
The Board of Admirals clearly think
'Tis nothing to them if Ironclads sink:
The Postmaster-General scorns all fetter,
And laughs at the fellow who loses a letter;
If on Home Affairs a man 's at a loss,
Little he 'll get from Assheton Cross.

But on Olympus, O Weather-Cleric
(Punch respects you as being Homeric),
There are surely officials who manage to beat
The do-nothing duffers of Downing Street:
And now, as the rains are washing away
The splendour of Autumn's divine decay,
Punch, Earth's Zeus, insists on knowing
Who left the tap of the cistern flowing.

It really will not do, you know,
This damp, discouraging overflow:
Clerk of the Weather, think again
Before you order additional rain.
Would you cruelly make your Punch rheumatic,
And drown the only wit that 's Attic?
If you turn to a sponge our native granite,
We must emigrate to another planet.

Insolvent Islam.

The Mahometans were, during the ages of Chivalry, stigmatised by Christian knights with the name of "Paynim." This appellation revived, with the difference of a letter, will perhaps very soon be rendered applicable to the modern Turks. There is too much reason to fear that, Turkey becoming utterly insolvent, the Sultan and his people will be soon in a condition to be denominated "Pay-nix," or "Pay-nil."

NEW SPORTING NOMENCLATURE.

Give a dog an ill name, and hang him. By the account of the Field, this saying applies likewise to the Horse. Conversely it may be said, Give a horse a good name and—back him. He goes in to win:—

"It is indubitable, so far as the British Turf is concerned, that the euphony and appositeness of his name have often exercised the most potential influence on the fortunes of a distinguished racehorse. It is a singular circumstance that, among nearly 300 horses by which the three historical races of England have been hitherto won, there is not a single animal cursed with an ill-sounding or unseemly appellation."

Hence it appears that Mr. Shandy's theory of the influence of Christian names is confirmed by parallel facts proving the like of it to hold good with regard to that noble animal the Horse. Mr. Shandy did not wish his son to be "Nicomedus'd into nothing." The same feeling influences the "stable mind":—

"About twenty years ago, Mr. Bowes requested a brother Member of the Jockey Club to lay out a considerable sum for him upon one of the best-bred and best-looking colts that the Streatham paddocks have ever sent up to Langton Wold. 'I will do your commission with pleasure,' was the discouraging answer, 'but I shall not follow it myself; for it is impossible that a horse with the name of Græculus Esuriens should ever win the Derby.'"

So even the matter-of-fact horsey man has a spice of superstition in him. As touching horses, at least, he believes in the "magic of a name." Of course he would object to names for racehorses which, if racehorses had sponsors, some sponsors would give them in view of the ignoble purposes to which those noble animals are made subservient. Racehorses then, like Ironclads, as the Devastation, the Warrior, and so forth, would receive names which, if not eligible for euphony or seemliness, would however be significant. As, for example: Astuteness, Concealment, Deception, Dishonour, Falsehood, Knavery, Meanness, Roguery, Rascality, Subtlety, Treachery, Trickery—appellations expressing the qualities and attributes which chiefly characterise and actuate Betting-men. Also denominations representing the crimes which horsey clerks and shopmen are apt to be led into by gambling, as Embezzlement, Robbery, and Forgery. Likewise the terms denoting the various blackguards who undertake the underhand and dishonest practices which discredit the Turf, as Touter, Tipper, Scratcher, Welcher, and Thimblerig; to which might be added Repudiation, Levanter, and—were jockeying bondholders a sufficiently horsey trick—Grand Turk.

A LOG OF IRON.

(A Page extracted from the Journal of H. M.'s Ironclad Teakettle.)

Monday.—Carried away a couple of anchors, and started. Came into collision with another Ironclad, and made all taut for the night.

Tuesday.—Repaired ram, and got up steam. Weighed anchor, and made good progress until stopped by pier-head. Disentangled the rigging from the Lighthouse, and made all safe for the night.

Wednesday.—Repaired bowsprit, masts, and spars, and accepted assistance of Tug. When cast loose rammed Tug; took her crew on board, and made everything comfortable for the night.

Thursday.—Placed buoy over wreck of Tug, and steamed into smooth water. Saw Pleasure Yacht in the offing. Accidentally rammed Pleasure Yacht in a fog, and made everything cosy for the night.

Friday.—Got up steam, and found that the engines primed famously. Drifted on to some rocks, and made everything shipshape for the night.

Saturday.—Got off rocks, and, finding the vessel sinking, made sail for the harbour. Sank on the Bar, rose to the surface, swam ashore, sent despatches to the Admiralty, and made everything snug for the night.

Digitized by Google

A FINE HEAD (BUT NOT OF THE RIGHT SORT OF CATTLE).

PERKINS HAS PAID A MINT OF MONEY FOR HIS SHOOTING, AND HAS HAD BAD LUCK ALL THE SEASON. TO-DAY, HOWEVER, HE GETS A SHOT, ONLY—IT TURNS OUT TO BE AT A COW!

THE "PRIEST OF ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA."

A LAY OF MODERN ROME.*

SAYS MANNING, "My Church is the mildest of Mothers!"
JOHN ponders in doubt o'er the plausible text.
One parent, he thinks, should have pity for others;
But here a plain person is slightly perplext.
Rome posed as the type of relation parental?
That sounds very much like pure fiddle-de-dee!
When read, with the comment,—which seems providential,—
Supplied by a "Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea!"

Pray what do you think of it, JOHN? Does it strike you
As being conclusive, and much to the point?
This Spirit of dear Mother Church, doth it like you?
Is 't fitted to heal a poor Age out of joint?
How does it appeal to your fatherly feelings,
This burst of abuse and of arrogant glee,
Which comes, as the crown of his sinister dealings,
From this kidnapping "Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea"?

Priests-militant, even, methinks should fight fairly,
And shrink from back-stabs and from blows in the dark;
But some of these clerical guides chuckle rarely
At finding a dirty backstairs to their Ark.
To the lay mind it seems a strange roadway to Heaven.
"A tool in God's hands!" Surely Satan must be
For a clerical catspaw extremely hard driven,
To stoop to the "Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea!"

"Throw mud," my good man? Well, the missiles you handle
Are something too filthy for fingers polite,
And perhaps we may thank you for holding a candle
To things which your betters hide snugly from sight.
'Tis a peep we should prize at the sense esoteric
Of prophets who call us the nestlings to be
'Neath the wing of a Church of which you are a cleric,
Most merciful "Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea!"

Your doctrines and dogmas you're free to promulgate,
By any fair means it may suit you to try;
Pray pin, if it please you, your faith to the Vulgate,
Not to arts of the area-sneak and the spy.
These are weapons unfit for the service of Heaven;
And JOHN, though he wills that all faiths should be free,
Turns up nose at the ill-smelling Jesuit-leaven
You'd spread, my fine "Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea!"

To gloat o'er the capture of foolish young gudgeon
Seems small. But our kidnapping priest doubles parts
Like a knowing lay-burglar, he handles the bludgeon,
As well as the picklock of Jesuit arts.
Nay, fatherly tears are a joke to this "pastor."
Friend JOHN, is this Rome? Then, methinks, you 'll agree
It were well, if you wish in your house to be master,
To watch spies like this "Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea!"

* Punch is glad to see both the letter and the transaction herein commented on indignantly repudiated by at least one Priest of St. Leonard's. But there is nothing to show that this one is the accredited priest of the place, or that the perversion and letter are not both the work of a Priest of the Holy and Infallible Roman Catholic Church.

Compromise with Nonconformity.

FROM a quantity of breath lately expended in talk at various "Diocesan Conferences," it seems that there are not a few Clergymen who think it wise to resist the claim of Dissenters to bury their dead in parish churchyards after their own manner. Argument in such a matter is useless; but a compromise may be suggested to reverend gentlemen. Might not a portion of every churchyard be set apart for the interment of Dissenters; and could not the Incumbent or the Bishop, if they thought proper, deconsecrate so much of it for that purpose? Who would be in any way the worse for this simple arrangement?

Digitized by Google

PROUD OF HIS CLOTH!

S the punishment most appropriate to the offence, H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding in Chief, has sentenced an unruly Subaltern, who has disgraced Her Majesty's Service — by taking part, first, in some silly practical joking at Hythe, and, as a sequel, in some ungentlemanlike, and, worse, unfair fisticuffs on a public promenade—to appear for the space of a year constantly in uniform. Until now the Queen's coat has been considered an honour to its wearer, not a disgrace. However, "we have changed all that," and may soon expect to see the publication of the following sentences:—

The Colonial Bishop of Niggerstown, having insisted upon lighting sixteen candles during "Morning Celebration," has been ordered to wear his lawn sleeves at all croquet parties to which he may be invited during the next six calendar months!

MR. CHRISTOPHER SHARP, Barrister-at-Law, having addressed the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE with unbecoming levity, has been ordered to wear his wig and gown at Covent Garden during the Opera season of 1876.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HERCULES HANNIBAL, K.C.B., D.C.L., having spoken with disrespect of the Honorary Degree conferred upon him by the University of Oxbridge, has been ordered to wear his Doctor's gown in Rotten Row every day for a twelvemonth.

And, lastly, H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, having made a serious mistake, is hereby desired by Mr. Punch not to presume to put on a red coat or a cocked hat until he has learned to appreciate the uniform of his Sovereign at its proper value.

A VICAR ON VANITIES.

(Some words with the REV. A. WILLIAMS, Vicar of Kingston, concerning his Views with regard to "Dramatic Performances" and "Entertainments for the People." See Daily Telegraph, Oct. 20.)

REVEREND SIR,—MR. PUNCH has a profound respect for honest convictions temperately expressed, however antagonistic they may be to his own opinion. But as it is in the nature of pulpit Philippics, especially when directed against what are clerically known as "Worldly Vanities," to be just a little one-sided, he would like to put to you a few questions with regard to your recently reported Sermon.

In the first place, what are "Worldly Vanities;" and are there no Vanities which may be called "other-worldly"? It is not, perhaps, every Stall in Vanity Fair whose badge is motley, and whose sign is the Cap and Bells. Are there not booths there, sombrely enough draped, yet where are vended, at a good price too, such indisputable "Vanities" as spiritual pride, professional bias, purblind dogmatism, and uncharitable construction? "All is Vanity," said the Preacher of old. But modern pulpiteers are apt to be somewhat arbitrarily eclectic, and to brand as Vanities the things only which they individually or professionally dislike. It is well to hold the balance fairly—even in Vanity Fair!

Again you endeavour to give show of logical process to what you please to consider your "argument," by declaring that "amusements of this description" are demonstrably wrong, because Scripture pointedly condemns "foolish talking and jesting." But is the sequitur so clear as might be wished? Might not the text, with equal show of logic, be twisted into a condemnation of the pulpit, seeing that from that quarter we have such a superabundance of "foolish talking"? Or is stultiloquence more tolerable from the lips of a preacher than from the mouth of a mime?

You do not seem to take the intelligible, though disputable, position, that in the divine economy of things there is no legitimate function for mirth or for amusement. It is clear then, that it remains to decide what is permissible amusement and allowable mirth. The inquiry demands discrimination and candour, things not much in favour with such sweeping anathematisers as yourself. But "the Cloth" is fond of the argument analogical. Shall we say then that because so many Sermons are dull, idealess, unprofitable, not to say, "deteriorating," it would, therefore, be well to abolish the pulpit altogether?

You say that "the whole spirit of such things is as worldly and unscriptural as it can possibly be." Worldly? Unscriptural? Vague words, Reverend Sir, which may mean anything or nothing. Is all that is not distinctively spiritual to be condemned as worldly, in an evil sense? Is all that is not specifically enjoined by Scripture to be branded as unscriptural or anti-scriptural? Is Hamlet "worldly"? Is the Midsummer Night's Dream "unscriptural"? Or are they, like a large proportion of legitimate human works and ways, innocently extra-scriptural, but no more antagonistic to the Spirit of the Book we all reverence than a lily or a laugh? Your Philippic, though intended to be pungent, seems to lack point and particularity. There are numberless details of the daily duties of humanity, concerning which Scripture gives no specific judgment or direction; otherwise you would hardly, in your indiscriminating condemnation of the Stage, be compelled to fall back upon doubtful metaphors and distorted texts.

Does it not strike you that the rôle of "Spiritual Watchman," which you so readily assume, demands, for its proper discharge, some judicial faculty and fairness, some knowledge of human life, its needs and its possibilities? Do the spiritual policemen who would imprison a child for picking a flower, or anathematise an adult for entering a theatre, exhibit that fairness, or that knowledge—to say nothing of such minor Christian attributes as mercy or charity? "The broader the farce, the more it pleases," say you. But about sundry ecclesiastical performances of late, has there not been all of the farce but the fun? Would it not be well to banish burlesque from the pulpit before falling foul of it on the stage? Finally, doffing "the seven-league boots of self-opinion," would it not be wise to direct the lively battery of clerical energy against the proven evils which beset all human institutions, ecclesiastical ones not excepted, rather than sweepingly to condemn dramatic performances and popular entertainments (as one might as fairly denounce the multitude of "pulpit ministration" in which you rejoice) by the aid of illogical appeals to the misread letter or misrepresented spirit of Holy Scripture? I pause for a reply; and holding my lay rostrum of at least equal dignity with a misused pulpit, do not think it necessary to apologise for thus catechising a Catechist before I subscribe myself

Your very obedient Servant,

PUNCH.

Digitized by Google

MAKING THE BEST OF IT.

Social Contrast kindly supplied by certain Tourists from England and elsewhere.

PICTURE—"THE SMITH FAMILY ABROAD."

SCENE—The Hall of a Hotel. Landlord bowing at the door to the departing Members of the Smith Family.

Landlord. Everything has been to your satisfaction, is it not? Gentlemen and Ladies—is it not?

Mr. Smith Senior. Certainly not. The view of the Lake was disfigured by the Hotel flagstaff.

Mrs. Smith Senior. Satisfied! Of course not. The muslin curtains in the bed-rooms had not been changed for at least a couple of days.

Mr. Smith Junior. Satisfied!—and the soufflé overdone at the table a'hôte!

Mrs. Smith Junior. O dear no! Why, the piano was out of tune in the salon!

Mr. John Smith. Satisfied! I like that! Why, the boot varnish was of inferior quality!

Miss Smith. And the Chambermaid was as clumsy as possible in arranging my hair!

All the Smith Family (together). Ah, so very different at home!

COMPANION PICTURE—"THE SMITH FAMILY AT HOME."

SCENE—The Dining-Room of No. 25, Prospect Place, E.W. Day after the return of the Smith Family.

Mr. Smith Senior. That dead wall in front of the window is rather a contrast after the borders of the Lake and the flagstaff we thought so pretty—isn't it?

Mrs. Smith, Senior. Yes, and only look at the furniture. Why the cleanest things in the house are those muslin curtains we put up in the drawing-room last Christmas twelvemonth.

Mr. Smith, Junior. The usual dinner, I suppose, to-day. Cold mutton and jam pudding. Ha!—rather a contrast! A roley-poley! When one thinks of that excellent soufflé!

Mrs. Smith, Junior. How absurdly small the piano looks after that splendid grand we used to play upon, you remember, in the salon.

Mr. Smith, Senior. With only one servant to wait upon us all, I should be a fool to expect to find my boots properly blacked. I wish I had bought a bottle of that varnish, by the way.

Miss Smith. After getting accustomed to a lady's-maid on the Continent, how can I do without one at home?

All the Smith Family (together). Ah! so very different abroad!

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

Letter No. 2.

DEAR SIR,

HERE we are again: in India. Our Indian Empire lies between 80 Fahrenheit and 120 Réaumur. It is composed of divisions, subdivided into castes, according to their behaviour. The First Division is the lowest form, and the lowest form of caste is not spoken to, or recognised, here, any more than is a man of "bad form" among ourselves, chez nous. The people's religion is mixed: they have the sacred books of the Deccan, and worship Veda, Brushnu, and Bogie alternately, according to the weather. I forgot to add MUMBO-JUMBO, but I rather fancy that his rites belong exclusively to the High Church caste in India. I do not pick these items out of MURRAY, but have obtained them at first hand, either from personal observation, or from the REGENT RUMMUN, the distinguished resident whom I have already had occasion to mention.

On a brilliant November day the Prince will land, and will be received at Bombay with a ceremonial unequalled since the glorious days of the Old Lord Mayor's Show, the time of BUNN, DUCROW, and the Lyceum Extravaganzas.

Subject to alteration, here is the programme (in the rough), which I have already drawn up:—

1. A Band of Papaws on the quay, playing, "God Bless the Prince of Wales."

2. The leading Guava (a kind of High Sheriff), accompanied by the chief Jamrocks (sort of Deputy-Lieutenants), bearing garlands and banners.

3. A Bevy of Nautch Girls dancing up and retiring. Tune, "It's Nautchy but it's Nice."

4. A Hashish with his Suite, who will read an Address between them. Solo and chorus.

5. A Regiment of Mangosteens (the very pick of the Native Troops), mounted on thoroughbred nullcolls. ( I can't explain this, but ask any respectable Indian resident in England, and he 'll tell you.)

6. Eurasians playing on bandicoots. [This last word, of course, is musically suggestive, and was, no doubt, imported into India from England. COOT'S band is well-known (I think they call it COOT AND TINNEY, or COOT AND BRASSY—I forget which) at balls, and "bandi-coot" is clearly only a transposition of Coot-his-band. I shall bring out an Anglo-Indian Dictionary, with the origin of mixed words. This is entre nous.]

7. More Nautch Girls dancing up, scattering garlands, and retiring. (Whenever I am at a loss for any part of the entertainment on the Prince's tour, I shall always throw in the Nautch girls. They like it, and so will H.R.H.)

8. Shurjashes in chain armour. (These are all that now remain of the ancient chivalry of India, of which you've read so much—and I haven't.)

9. Then will come a procession of Loquats (native Barristers without wigs) preceding a Yam (a native Judge, with his wig on), followed by Pumplinoses (Beadles, Ushers, and Officers of the Native Court, evidently a word of mixed origin for "pimply-nose"), bearing white wands, and singing hymns to Fu-Rangum (Juggernaut's brother—and a great card here).

10. Anglo-Indians and Indo-Anglians led by SIR SAM JAM JEE JELLYBOY, in coat-tails and turban, who will deliver an address.

11. Ayahs, Punkahs, Pundits, and Nabobs, in full costume, bearing insignia.

12. Nautch girls, and bells.

That's as far as I've got at present, and it promises to make a pretty big show.

After spending some time here, H.R.H. will be taken by me to a real treat. He will dine off Junglewallahs—a sort of sweet-scented venison,—and drink the soothing tatous, a kind of mild champagne, with only two per cent. of sugar.

At this point I have engaged a party of Western Ghâts (conjurors), who are the most entertaining dogs in the world. I will tell you some of their tricks, which would puzzle MR. HOME, the spiritualist, and make MASKELYNE AND COOKE wild.

One Ghât balances a stick on his nose, while another, a stout man of about sixteen stone, runs up it, bare-footed, and, when he has reached the top, he suddenly disappears—apparently into the air, like the witches in Macbeth. Then a goat, a horse, and, finally, an elephant,—mind, this is in full daylight, and in an open plain, no mécanique, no spring, no deception,—ascend the stick one after the other, and all, in turn, disappear. Five minutes afterwards, the stout man, the goat, the horse, and the elephant, reappear, quietly making their way through the crowd, which receives them with enthusiasm.

This is wonderful, and, sharp as I am, I can not tell how it 's done. Money won't buy the secret.

This will please H.R.H., as will also the Cheetah, a sort of native "Jolly Nash," who sings comic songs racy of the soil, after dinner. Such is life in India.

The next day I shall take H.R.H. to the Begum's Restauration, where he will be received by the Burra Sahib (or head waiter), attended by his Chokees (i.e., the other waiters in white chokers). The name Chokee bears the same relation to the Choker as mortgagee does to the mortgagor. Again evidently Anglo-Indian.

Then the Prince will taste the most lovely iced durbar that was

 Foot-Note.—We have a sort of idea that Our Representative is deceiving us, or that somebody is. From information we've received, we learn that a "Howdah," described by Our Representative, in his letter last week, as "a genuine Native Prince," is a sort of palanquin on the back of an elephant used by tiger-hunters. There can be no such corps as a "guard of Tiffins"—if tiffin be the Indian word for Luncheon, as we are now told it is. Again, a "coolie" cannot be flashed in the air, if a "coolie"—as a real Indian, MAJOR RYCE CHUTNEY, has written to us to say—means "a man of low caste." Should Our Representative insist on extra pay for his "local colouring," he shall get it—pretty strongly—when he presents himself at our office. We print his letter, and suspend our judgment. Only, we do advise our readers to consult some dictionary of Indian words and phrases—such a vocabulary as may be found in any book about the Sports of India, or MR. SALA'S excellent prospective account of the Prince's tour, recently published in the Illustrated London News, where, we are informed, many of the words used in Our Representative's letter appear. But, in any case, if our readers will kindly inform us whenever they catch Our Representative tripping, they will be doing good service to the Public, and conferring a benefit on the Editor.

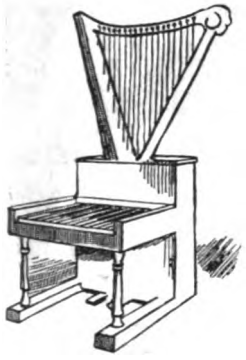
Digitized by Google

ever made. Perhaps you do not know of what this dish is composed? I don't; but I ate it. It is something between the flavour of oranges and shrimps, and when iced to about the consistency of a jelly, you pick it out with an Indian killar made of ivory, and closely resembling the mustard-spoon in ordinary use among ourselves.

If the Prince does not stop to taste this, which is eaten as a relish before dinner, he will in the future miss one of the most delightful reminiscences of the Indian cuisine.

In haste to catch the mail, I am

YOUR REPRESENTATIVE.



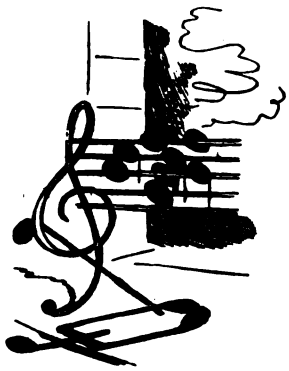
P.S.—Don't forget extra pay for local colouring.

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME:

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, ESQ., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dullidillitanty Society.

How to Furnish a House for a Composer.—Every article of furniture should be instrumental in affording him assistance at his work of genius. Nothing should be lost.



His chairs should combine the harp at the back and the pianette in the seat.

The glasses on his table should be each of a different tone, and so arranged as to produce the most melodious tunes at every meal.

The patterns on his plates should be in musical notes, and these would exhibit his peculiar crotchets in decorative art.

His fire-place should be five bars. His tongs should be two quavers, and his poker another quaver, and they could stand on clefs. Nothing more simple, nor, I may add, to the artistic mind, more touching.

What for a flower-stand can be more suitable than a post-horn?—fitting into a small stand, so as to prevent dust getting into the mouthpiece, and also not to allow of the escape of the water so necessary for the support of the flowers.

For the Composer's Washing-Stand, what better than a drum, with movable lid, so that when the basin was removed it would be a drum, and when the basin was restored it would be a washing-stand?

A Tambourine Tray or salver is also suggested by the musician's skill.

His front door-posts would be formed by the uprights of bassoons, if bassoons be the name of those long wooden sticks with a brass mouthpiece sticking out of them; and to these mouthpieces the visitors could apply themselves, and with a good blast would become at once "Somebody with a note—at the door."

A violoncello would form an admirable cupboard, and the pillars of the house could be fluted columns.

The window blinds should be covered with his own compositions. Another would form exquisite patterns for his portières. All the stools should be musical boxes, and all the fauteuils likewise.

Venetian blinds lend themselves to bar patterns admirably, and with a couple of strings you can change the tune from time to time.

The lower part of the house should be styled the thorough basement, and the upper the altics.

There should be a key of a different pattern to every lock in the house. One set of major keys, and another of minors.

The staircase carpet pattern (or pavement, if used) should represent the Chromatic Scale.

The Key of A should be that of the Ante-room.
The Key of B, the Boudoir.
The Key of C, the China Closet.
The Key of D, the Drawing-room.
E, the Eating or Dining-room.

(To be continued.)

BEEF AT A CHURCH CONGRESS.

(See Letter by a "WEST SOMERSET PARSON" in the Times, Oct. 20.)

THERE is a Country Parson of Western Somersét,
He seems as wise a Parson as Punch has ever met;
He finds the tenant of his glebe at law and justice mocks,
And sends to London market cow by the name of ox:
He finds, moreover, that said cow, seller and buyer weeting,
Died in a state which rendered it most questionable eating.

He does not stay to sermonise—he writeth to the Times:
He says that selling beef that 's bad is quite a crime of crimes:
He states that the bucolic lout, extremely fond of pelf,
Will send to Leadenhall Market what he would not eat himself—
He really doesn't think it a wicked thing to do,
Just poisoning with meat diseased a Lunnon chap or two.

Punch likes idyllic country life, and really feeleth loth
To think that Arcades ambo too oft means "blackguards both;"
Yet might the term apply full well, he verily must avow,
To the man who sold, and also to him who bought, that cow.
And he thanks the Somerset Parson for coming to relief
Of the unsuspecting Cockney who prefers wholesome beef.

For what says he, the Parson? Unlikely you would guess:
This, that such tricks are the thing to moot at the Church's next Congréss.
Altar or Table battle is squabble very slight;
'Twixt con- or trans- substan-tiate is hardly worth a fight;
Wear alb or surplice as you will—long petticoats, short sleeves:
But High or Low should teach their flocks they ought not to be thieves.

Hail, O West Somerset Parson! Go on as you 've begun,
Archbishop Punch declares the Church has not a wiser son.
You know the way to check the men who swindle and overreach:
If your sermons are not very long, he 'll come and hear you preach
And afterwards, right willingly, go home with you to lunch
On steak of ox (with oyster-sauce) fit for the plate of Punch.

"THE SILLY SEASON."—The Honeymoon.

Digitized by Google

PRUDENCE.

Very Small Mite. "ARE YOU FOND OF SUGAR-PLUMS?" Lady. "NO, MY DEAR, THANK YOU!"
Very Small Mite. "THEN, WILL YOU KEEP THEM FOR ME, PLEASE?"

ADMIRALTY GUIDE.

(Out of the Fog.)

THERE appears to have been considerable misapprehension among officers of the Royal Navy as to the line of conduct to be adopted under certain circumstances. All doubts, however, on these points must have been removed by the decision of a recent Court-Martial and the Admiralty minute thereupon.

For the benefit of the Service we give a short summary of the instructions which appear to be conveyed.

For Admirals.

Admirals in command of a squadron will regulate the speed of the ships composing it, but will not be responsible for accidents which may arise from the rate of speed being improper.

On the approach of fog, a gun may be fired from the flagship; care being however taken that the gun used is not heavy enough to be heard by the other ships of the squadron. (Suitable pieces of ordnance for this purpose may be obtained at the Model Dockyard in the Strand.)

For Captains commanding Ironclads in Squadron.

No alteration of speed or course must under any circumstances be made on the Captain's own authority.

Should a vessel be unfortunately discovered across the bows, the Admiral must be signalled to, and his directions awaited. If, however, the vessel in danger be the Admiralty yacht, carrying their Lordships, the Captain of the Ironclad may, on his own responsibility, order life-buoys to be got ready; that intended for the First Lord being at once decorated with red cloth.

In the event of fog coming on, steam is immediately to be shut off from the whistle, or it might inadvertently be sounded, thus giving notice of your whereabouts to some other ship, and enabling her to get out of your way, or perhaps to ram you; in which case, of course, you would be held responsible for the disaster.

Should this however occur, the diver belonging to the ship will immediately assume his dress and descend to inspect the leak.

On his return he will prepare a written report of its size, &c., and upon this report, countersigned by the Captain, the necessary quantity of oakum, spare sails, and hammocks will be handed to the Carpenter, in order that he may at once arrest the influx of water.

Should all endeavours be unavailing, and the ship continue to settle down, the efforts to save her are on no account to cease; but when the ship commences her final plunge, and the decks begin to burst up, boats' crews may be piped away and the boats lowered. The men must not, however, be allowed to get into them until the water is level with the hammock nettings. It must be strictly borne in mind that the preservation of the crew is entirely a minor consideration. Men may be had at any time at the usual rate of pay, but modern vessels of war cost both time and money, and the loss of one may even cause the addition of a halfpenny to the Income-tax.

The above instructions have special reference to ships getting into a fog, and by inducing a corresponding state of mind with those in command, may be of the utmost practical utility.

The Vegetable Winebibber.

(See Account of a gigantic growth in a Cellar at Upper Norwood.)

SAY, of what wood is formed the tree-like growth
O'er Upper Norwood cellar spreading free?
Perhaps its spring it takes from Port beneath,
And Upper-Logwood may turn out to be.

No Hoax.

A TELEGRAM from Hong-Kong the other day confirmed the report that the Gordon Castle had landed at Shanghai sixty tons of Henry-Martini ammunition for the Chinese Government. It does not much signify, but the telegram would have been more welcome if it had announced that the ammunition landed was all Betty-Martini.

Digitized by Google

NEPTUNE'S WARNING.

Father Nep. "LOOK HERE, MY LASS! YOU USED TO 'RULE THE WAVES;' BUT IF YOU MIS-RULE 'EM, AS YOU 'VE DONE LATELY, BY JINGO THERE 'LL BE A ROW!!!"

Britannia. "I 'M SURE I DON'T KNOW WHO 'S TO BLAME, PAPA DEAR!"

Father Nep. "DON'T KNOW!!! THEN PIPE ALL HANDS, AND FIND OUT!!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

WEAK MOMENTS.

When I yielded to the persistent solicitations of Mrs. Gilliflower, and migrated with the whole of my family (ten souls in all), for six weeks, from a comfortable home at Upper Norwood, to uncomfortable lodgings at Stragglesea; where we had indifferent cooking, defective sanitary arrangements, a high average of easterly winds, several inches of rainfall, a carriage accident, a doctor's bill, and an unexpected and unwelcome affaire de cœur, in which the rapidly advancing tide, a Newfoundland dog, a Lieutenant of Militia, and my second daughter, Mona Frances Caroline, all played a conspicuous part.

When I allowed my eldest daughter, Leila Katharine, to contract an engagement with Mr. Bolingbroke Jaxon, a young engineer, who hopes, through his cousin, who is a connection of the wife of one of the Directors, to get an appointment under a Company now in formation for the purpose of supplying the Fiji Islands with tramways. Seeing that Bolingbroke has been a regular visitor at Upper Norwood twice a week, and always on Sundays, for the last three years, and that his views on politics, Church questions, education, the drama, and smoking, are directly opposed to mine, and that he is subject to violent sneezing fits, and invariably only just catches the last train at night, it will surprise no one—certainly no father—to be told that the Polynesian project has my best wishes for its successful accomplishment.

When I gave my sanction to our two youngest boys, William and Rufus, keeping poultry in the back premises, on the understanding that they should bear the entire expenses of the establishment, and furnish the family breakfast table with a constant supply of fresh laid eggs at a very liberal rate of remuneration. William and Rufus have altogether failed to fulfil their engagements, and I have been summoned to appear at the Police Court, to answer a complaint from the neighbours that our "Bright Chanticleers proclaim the dawn" with distracting loudness and unnecessary frequency.

When I was cajoled into a little dance with refreshments, which was artfully expanded into a regular ball and supper, to the serious depletion of my pocket, the detriment of the furniture, the complete upset of all domestic comfort both before and after the rout, and the chagrin of my wife and daughters at the inability of the Harborough Bakers, "owing to a prior engagement," to accept Mr. and Mrs. Gilliflower's kind invitation for the 27th.

When I was persuaded, contrary to my own wish to send him to Germany, to give my eldest boy, Alured Christopher, all the great educational and social advantages of that ancient and aristocratic seminary of sound and useless learning, Mossington, founded by Stephen Carraway, citizen and grocer, in 1565, where he was diligently instructed in Xenophon's Anabasis and Ovid's Metamorphoses, as the best possible training for his future career as a clerk, and probable partner, in the old-established house of Gilliflower, Dewsberry & Co., Ship Chandlers and General Provision Merchants.

When, at the instance of my old, and, as I thought, knowing friend, Rentmore, I bought Herzegovinian Eight per Cent. Bonds at 164, which to-day are down to 45½; and invested, on the recommendation of the same sage counsellor, a good deal of capital in the shares of the Window and Housetop Gardening Company, which undertaking was, in less than three months' time, wound up in Vice-Chancellor Baggewigg's Court.

When I wrote to the leading journal to unfold my plan for facilitating the recognition of the various trains on the Underground Railway by hurried, timid, and short-sighted passengers, and was so unfortunate as to have my communication inserted—being thereby beguiled to go on writing letters on all kinds of subjects, ranging from brilliant meteors in the heavens to enormous potatoes in the earth, none of which ever found a corner in the columns of the paper in question.

When I deeply offended my Aunt Martha—one of the old school, who had all the washing done at home, insisted on her maids wearing large frilled caps, and would not allow them to speak even to the Postman, if she could prevent it—by needlessly constituting myself the champion of the servants as against their mistresses, so that she made a new will within the week, and left the bulk of her property (sworn under £80,000) to the Home for Blighted Hearts at Nozzlebrooke.

When I began by throwing out that bay-window to the dining-room, and then went on to add the conservatory to the drawing-room, and took another step in building the billiard-room, and greatly improved the sleeping accommodation by the addition of two or three bed-rooms, and finally rebuilt the kitchens, out-premises, and stables; so that for five years, on and off, I was always moving in a circle of masons, carpenters, plasterers, painters, and other costly artificers.

GLIMPSES OF THE FUTURE.

Mr. Punch's prophetic inspiration is a matter of world-wide notoriety, and when in the peculiar mesmeric condition into which he occasionally lapses after dinner he is more than usually clairvoyant.

"Rapt into future times" the other evening, Mr. Punch distinctly saw a copy of a morning paper (second edition) dated November 1st, 1885, in which were the following interesting items of intelligence:—

LATEST TELEGRAMS.

Plymouth, 4 A.M.

Last night, Her Majesty's Ironclad Ships, Diver, Blunderer, Lobsides, Crusher, Submarine, Downshire, Founderer, and Mudlark, forming the Channel Fleet, and which had in the morning been got off the sandbank on which they grounded the day before, ran into one another, and all went down in deep water. Officers and crews all saved by taking to the boats a quarter of an hour before the collisions.

7 A.M.

Nothing is visible of the sunken vessels. An Admiralty official with a numerous staff has already left for the purpose of making a minute inspection of the waves beneath which the submerged vessels are supposed to be.

9 A.M.

The cause of the untoward event is supposed to have been the extreme clearness of the night, the brilliancy of the moon having a decided effect upon the commanding officers. The fleet of boats had quite a picturesque effect coming into harbour, the men receiving an ovation. It has already been decided that the Admiralty tug Washtub shall cruise in the Channel for the protection of the coast until the fleet can be replaced. She will have her funnel repainted, and be re-christened "The Tug of War." A telegram has been received from the Queen, expressing a hope that none of the officers or men have taken cold.

9·30 A.M.

Immediate orders will be issued for the construction of eight new Ironclads—two on the circular principle, two on the three-cornered, two on the telescopic, and two on the upside-down principle. A diver has just been down, and brought up a capstan-bar and a cocked-hat, as well as his breakfast. Nothing further can be done till the Spring.

Constantinople.—A decree has been made that in future all interest on Turkish loans shall be paid half in Turkey Sponge and half in Turkey Rhubarb.

Norwich.—The Election Inquiry Commissioners resumed their sitting this morning. After hearing the evidence of the oldest inhabitant, who is stone-deaf, and the potboy of the "Goat in Boots," who is an idiot, and whose answers gave considerable amusement to the Court, the inquiry was again adjourned.

A new Magazine will appear at Easter. Mr. Gladstone, the late Member for Greenwich, has promised to contribute a series of papers on "The Past, Present, and Future of the Hot-Crossed Bun: its influence on the Established Church and the Digestion," &c.

The Little-Smashington Line was closed yesterday. It is a single line, with several level crossings, and the Authorities have deemed it prudent, considering the loss of the entire rolling stock (with the exception of an engine and a trolly) during the Excursionist Season, to close the Line until next Autumn.

The Detectives are still actively engaged in their search for Alexander Collie. They are confident they possess a clue.

The 81-ton gun burst in Fleet Street yesterday, immediately in front of No. 85, and——

* * * * * *

It was a knock at the door, and Mr. Punch's trance was at an end.

Digitized by Google

MORE FRIGHTENED THAN HURT.

New Vicar (with a general impression that the Inhabitants of Lancashire are Savages). "I HEAR THE LATE VICAR WAS NOT ON GOOD TERMS WITH THE PARISH."

Loquacious Churchwarden. "NA. AN' YAN DARK NEBT THEBB O' OUR LADS WAD PAY UN AFF, SA OU JEST JUMPED OWER A WALL T' FLEY* UN!" Vicar (aghast). "TO FLAY HIM?!!"

Churchwarden (laughing loudly at the recollection). "AYE. AN' OU WERE FLEYED FINELY—OU WERE WELLY FLEYED TO DEETH!!"

[New Vicar hastily wishes him "Good morning!" takes the next Train back, and resigns the Living.

* "Fley" (Lancashire), to frighten.

"GENTLEMEN—LORD DARNLEY!"

LORD DARNLEY has given the Mayor of Gravesend notice to quit a farm of which his Lordship is the landlord and his Worship is the tenant. The Mayor is under the impression that LORD DARNLEY would not have ejected him had he (the Mayor) consented to put pressure upon his son with a view to causing a gap in the ranks of the West Kent Yeomanry Cavalry. LORD DARNLEY is ex-Colonel of the celebrated corps in question, and MR. LAKE (the Mayor's son) is one of the troopers. LORD DARNLEY having incidentally testified to his love for "feudal tradition," expects his tenants to do their duty—that is to quit the service of Her Majesty the QUEEN at the order of their ex-Commanding Officer. The Mayor of Gravesend has refused to put the necessary pressure upon his patriotic son, and Mr. Punch rejoices to say, MR. LAKE, junr., is still a member of the West Kent Yeomanry Cavalry. The lengthy correspondence between the Mayor and the Earl has resulted in the QUEEN having one soldier the more and LORD DARNLEY one tenant the less.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Punch hastens to inform the Public that there is not the slightest foundation for the report that LORD DARNLEY is about to issue the following characteristic circular:—

D. TO OUR WOULD-BE TENANTS. R.

Cobham Hall, October, 1875.

LORD DARNLEY begs to say that no wish to get rid of the Mayor of Gravesend personally emanated from his pen. On the contrary, so far from it being so, his Lordship might as well have put up his farms to public competition, and indeed it would be foolish not to do so.

LORD DARNLEY would explain that all he wanted the Mayor of Gravesend to do was to make his son follow his example in giving up his commission in his late regiment, where he had found things not pleasant, and which good feeling (as he must know) would have induced him to leave a corps which has been personally a source of annoyance to him. No further wish than this emanated from his pen.

LORD DARNLEY begs to say, that if any one personally has any difficulty in finding out the meaning of the above paragraph, that it is immaterial to his Lordship whether he accepts it as written or according to any other construction he may be pleased to place upon it. However he disclaims the idea of puzzling persons personally. In fact, nothing of the kind has emanated from his pen.

LORD DARNLEY would explain that he expects would-be tenants to be free as the air, and he disclaims the idea that he wants to control anything more of their movements than all the actions of their public and private lives. So long as his tenants do exactly what LORD DARNLEY wishes, they are perfectly at liberty to do what they like, and it is immaterial to him whether they accept anything as it is written or according to any other construction that they may please to place upon it. This is his opinion from a monetary point of view; and had he thought it would not have been sufficient notice, he would have been glad and ready to give it. However nothing of the kind has emanated from his pen.

LORD DARNLEY, moreover, begs to say that any very enterprising gentlemen residing at Birmingham or Liverpool, or wherever else you will, would answer every purpose. LORD DARNLEY would also say that, in conducting an angry correspondence, he is in the habit of addressing his opponent as "Dear Sir," and signing himself "Yours very faithfully," and it is immaterial to him whether any other construction is placed upon it. LORD DARNLEY has adopted these forms because he avowedly claims to write with grace, grammar, and generosity. As he is about to start for Scotland, however, little

Digitized by Google

LAYING THEIR HEADS TOGETHER.

STUDY OF AN INTERESTING DISCUSSION BETWEEN TWO EARNEST BUT VERY NEAR-SIGHTED GENTLEMEN WHO HAVE LEFT THEIR SPECTACLES AT HOME.

MODERN LOVE-SONG.

By a Young Bachelor in the Black Country.

COME, live with me, and be my bride;
And when the nuptial knot is tied,
Our wedding-day I'll make you rue,
And nightly beat you black and blue.

My temper's ugly, as you'll find,
I'm brutal when with rage I'm blind:
I work as little as I can,
And drink my wages like a man.

There's working-men as spend their lives
In slaving to support their wives;
With such as them I don't agree;
I want my wife to work for me.

Ere half our honeymoon be flown,
You'll hardly call your life your own:
And, when a second month hath sped,
You'll wish you'd died ere you had wed.

Assaulted by my manly foot,
Encased in heavy hob-nailed boot,
A life of misery you'll lead,
And all in vain for mercy plead.

Some day, when I am on the drink,
Of death I'll beat you to the brink:
And if the neighbours interfere,
I'll swear you tried to stop my beer.

Then, should you snivel to the Beak,
Mayhap he'll quod me for a week;
But when I darken next your door,
You'll catch it hotter than before.

So, if you like that sort of "hub,"
Would see your savings spent in "bub,"
And daily tremble for your life,
Come, live with me, and be my wife!

The New Alderman.

THE Cordwainer Ward must implicitly feel
That NOTTAGE's views are the best for their weal;
But if they had added SIR JOHN to the Knights,
They'd have had a good watchman, at least, of their rights.

more than the following and concluding paragraph of this Circular will emanate from his pen.

LORD DARNLEY begs to say that the following paragraph is as follows:—

LORD DARNLEY does desire and intend to have a resident tenant at West Court upon the same footing as his other tenants. He begs also to say that to say (as some of the Press say) that LORD DARNLEY would have lost his head on the scaffold, for trying to break up one of Her Majesty's Regiments, had he lived hundreds of years ago, is immaterial to him. He begs to say (indeed, it would be foolish not to do so) that it would have been utterly impossible to have deprived him personally of his head. Nothing of the kind has emanated from his pen.

By Order of LORD DARNLEY.

LONG LIVE LORD DARNLEY!

Repudiation and Revolt.

PENDING an insurrection in Herzegovina, the Turkish repudiation was peculiarly inopportune. By renouncing their obligations to their bondholders just now, the SULTAN and his Government not only justify the Herzegovinians in throwing off their bondage, but also set Crete, and all their other discontented provinces the example of rejecting their bonds too. This repudiation, if tried, will be preventible only by force, and then, the Sublime Porte just having cheated its creditors, how on earth will it possibly be able to borrow money to carry on the war?

IN THE PRESS.

HALF-HOURS with the Worst Authors, including the Admiralty Minute. Dedicated to the RIGHT HON. WARD HUNT, M.P.

VACCINATION AND WISDOM.

AMONG the Boards of Guardians in England and Wales, there is, whatever satirists may say, a considerable number comparatively at least endowed with immense wisdom. Our friends the Keighley Board lately held a meeting, thus reported by a contemporary:—

"OFFICIAL OPPOSITION TO VACCINATION.—At the meeting of the Keighley Board of Guardians yesterday afternoon, fifty letters were read in answer to an anti-vaccination memorial which had been sent by the Board to all the Boards of Guardians in the kingdom. Not one of the replies concurred with the opinions expressed in the memorial."

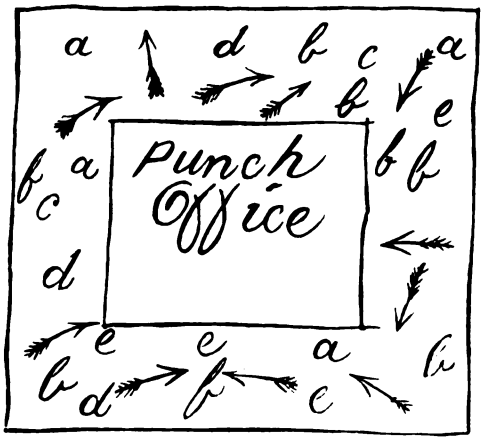
The absolute amount of sense indicated by this difference of opinion is, to be sure, no more than ordinary. Relatively to the common understanding it does not appear to be above the average, and might in fact be below it. Nevertheless, it is evident that there are no less than fifty British Boards of Guardians endowed with intelligence in a measure whereby they immensely exceed those of Keighley. Indeed, the replies of some of these fifty Boards evince even a degree of acuteness:—

"The Merthyr Tydfil Board said they thought that the Keighley Board must have gone mad, and hoped the laws would bring them to their senses. The Stafford Guardians enclosed a copy of a resolution which had been passed by them to the effect that 'the Keighley Board ought to be sent to an asylum, and made to pay their expenses.'"

Hereupon it is significantly added:—

"No remarks were made by the Guardians."

Although they could not be sent literally to an asylum for idiots, the Keighley Guardians were, as to their anti-vaccination drivel, conclusively shut up; a reality which it appears they were just sufficiently sensible to feel.



THE SINKING FUND.—The Navy Estimates.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S WEATHER-EYE-OPENER.

Mr. Punch, resolved not to be behind his contemporaries in enterprise, has determined to publish henceforth a Meteorological Chart. Allowances are requested for his first attempt, as the young man who was engaged (on his own representations) for the purpose apparently knows nothing about drawing, and still less about Meteorology.

WEATHER CHART.

Explanation.—The arrows fly with the wind, in fact, bow before it. a, awful; b, beastly; c, cursed; d, never mind; e, everlasting; f, frantic.

Rainfall.—Wet through twice a day, and through the ceilings of the attics.

Barometrical Readings.—None. Somebody having smashed the barometer by tapping it too hard with his umbrella.

Thermometrical Readings.—None. A youthful and scientific member of the family having robbed the thermometer of its practical utility by putting it in the fire to see the mercury run up the tube.

General Remarks.—Shan't make any, for fear of using bad language. Dreadful cold in my head.

The Meteorologist to Mr. Punch.

RULE OF THE ROAD WANTED.

The Iron Duke has, as Mr. O'Brallaghan says, by cannoning the Vanguard, taught us that the Ram in naval warfare is the best Gun. Another lesson is suggested by that cannonade. Pedestrians on land are exposed to collisions as well as mariners at sea. Velocipedes moving with a certain velocity may do similar damage to that done by Ironclads going so many knots an hour. Foot-passengers on public thoroughfares need eyes in the napes of their necks to see them coming. Not seeing them, and particularly in the dark, they are liable to be run into by them. The approach of the Velocipede is as silent as that of the Dromedary, or the Camel, the "Ship of the Desert." Impact from a Velocipede at a high rate of speed is no joke. Would it not be as well if the riders of Velocipedes were obliged to carry little bells, and after sunset lights, in their bows?

Eminence and Innocence.

Cardinal Manning is reported to have lately read a paper to the Catholic Academia, contending that Pope Innocent the Third never condemned Magna Charta, but only the Barons for having obtained it by levying war against their Sovereign. No doubt his Eminence made out to the satisfaction of his hearers that the Pope accused of having anathematised the title-deed of English liberty was an injured Innocent.

New Test of a Gentleman.

Customer. Do you know Mr. Jones?

Newsvendor. O yes, Sir; a customer of ours—a perfect Gentleman—never reads anything under the Saturday Review.

Harmless Amusement.

Subscribing to the Herzegovinian Insurrection with Turkish Bonds.

SAPPHICS TO THE SILENT.

Hark to vain outcries on an ugly scandal,
Which with a word, if false, could be refuted;
But the word rests with taciturn accused ones,
Yet to be spoken.

Word to yourselves due, Managers of Felsted
School, the Trustees, and you their supervisor,
Rochester's Bishop, celebrated preacher,
Popular Claughton!

Can you, Trustees, not say it is a lie that
You did in spite expel a good Head-Master,
Only because he trod upon your toes in Doing his duty?

Bishop, explain what very cogent reason
Made you confirm his merited dismissal,
Show us in truth that 'twas a confirmation
Just, by a Bishop.

Whilst a grave charge you, reticent, lie under,
How will you face your retrospective hearers,
When you deliver, say, a visitation
Charge to your Clergy?

Are you not victim of a vile, atrocious
Calumny, trumped up by a base traducer,
Forging a groundless taradiddle, and cen-
-sorious falsehood?

Deaf the Trustees seem, dumb abides the Bishop.
When to the Public they shall show their noses,
Will they not hear this universal greeting,
"How about Grignon?"

Superstitious Suggestion.

The following piece of intelligence suggests a question which may have occurred to sailors:—

"The 'Iron Duke.'—A Press Association telegram says: 'On Saturday, as the Iron Duke was being taken out of Devonport Dock, she ran foul of the Black Prince. The latter lost her davits in the collision, but little other damage was done.'"

Happily. But the Iron Duke is evidently an unlucky ship. What has made her so? Is it possible that she was, if not launched or christened, begun on a Friday?

Bavarian Misnomer.

The Ultramontane and anti-Liberal Party in Bavaria has an alias. The Ultramontanes are also called Particularists. But (see the Times) "the Ultramontane Deputies in the recent debate contrived to wound the King deeply by applauding and making mirth over some infamous scurrilities published in a low comic journal imported from the other side of the Main, and quoted with gusto by a member of the Opposition." As the Ultramontane Deputies must be taken to represent their constituents, this outrage proves the Ultramontanes are not all particular.

No Answers.

"Wanted, by a Farmer in the country, a plain Governess.—Apply to &c."—Western Mail.

Deluded Farmer, quit your quest,
You 'll advertise in vain:
What woman ever yet confessed,
Or thought, that she was plain?

A Sovereign Remedy.

M. Rouher, who, in the French Chamber as Imperial Minister, by declaring that the Italians should never go to Rome, earned the name of a prophet in association with "jamais," has been, at Ajaccio, cracking up Bonapartism, which brought France to grief. Poor France is sick of the Imperial dynasty; and it appears that in recommending her a restoration of the fallen Empire, Dr. Jamais would fain prescribe a hair of the dog that bit her.

A Creed at a Discount.

'Tis an ill wind that blows nobody good. The hopes of Missionary Societies may improve in an inverse ratio to the depreciation of Turkish Stock, and discredit of Mussulman faith.

Digitized by Google

"OUT O' SESSION."

Grandma' (from the Country). "MY DEARS, I COME UP PARLI'MENTORY A PURPOSE, BECAUSE I THOUGHT I'D SEE AS MUCH AS I COULD. BUT WOULD YOU BELIEVE IT, THERE WASN'T A SINGLE—NOT SO MUCH AS A IRISH MEMBER O' PARLI'MENT IN THE WHOLE TRAIN!"

THE CAT.

(PUNCH to SIR H. JAMES, touching a weak point in his very good talk at Taunton.)

WE know, SIR HENRY, the nine-tailed Cat
Is not pleasant at all to the fierce garotter:
No wisdom needed to tell us that.
Does rat like ferret, or salmon otter?

But when you talk about torture, Punch
Would hint that we all are sometimes tortured—
The hungry man with no time for lunch,
The schoolboy birched for robbing an orchard.

The Belle of the Season's Mamma, fit to drop,
Who sees that charming creature gaily
(Though Dukes and Earls are ready to pop)
Flirting with detrimentals daily.

Member who fails in his maiden-speech,
Or makes bad jokes, and House won't see the fun of them—
Parson hard up for a sermon to preach—
Are they not tortured, every one of them?

Torture! an ad captandum phrase,
'Tis very clear to the English nation
That for brutal crimes in these finnikin days
No remedy equals castigation.

When the red weals rise on the ruffian's back,
For his cruel crime you have not half paid him:
On his vile career when looking back,
Tell us, SIR HENRY, how can you degrade him?

You suggest the case of husband and wife—
Husband flogged when wife is accuser;
Well, 'tis a difficult problem of life;
But might not dread of Cat make the coward well-use her?

That the Cat's revenge is rather severe
Punch free to confess, nay delighted to own is;
But when woman is crushed by the brute in his beer,
Cat upon cad is Lex talionis.

PEACE AND PEKOE.—It will be a blessed thing, says MRS. CADDY, if we escape a war with China. Next to quarrelling with our bread-and-butter, the worst we could do would be to quarrel with our tea.

LAW REPORTS (IN FUTURO).

(By a Barrister who can't understand the Judicature Act.)

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

Brown v. Smith.

THIS case, which has now reached its fortieth year, is of great interest to the general Public. In 1797 PETER BROWN, being then heir in tail to the estates of Llymcromrch and Chatmyallingo, North Wales, married, and had five children, of these THOMAS (cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum), was the co-heir, with a contingent remainder to BARBARA.

At this point the Jury said they had made up their minds, and found the prisoner Guilty.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, having ordered both Plaintiff and Defendant to stand in the dock, said, that the Jury were doubtless aware that the intricate gloom of Chancery was henceforth to be illumined by the pure light of Common Law. His Lordship, addressing the prisoners, said that, in the whole course of his professional career, he had never had to try so bad a case as this. The prisoners had tried to find shelter behind the quibbles of Chancery by dubbing themselves Plaintiff and Defendant. That only made their case worse. He would sentence BROWN to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour, and SMITH to seven years' penal servitude, regretting, at the same time, that he could not have them both soundly flogged.

The Plaintiff and Defendant, who seemed very much surprised, if not gratified, at the sudden termination of this protracted case, were then removed in custody.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR.

WILLIAM SIKES, thirty-five, thief, was charged with the wilful murder of his wife. The case has already been fully reported in our columns. The facts of the murder having been clearly proved,

The LORD CHANCELLOR, in the course of an elaborate judgment of four hours' duration, remarked that all those in Court were doubtless aware that the intricate gloom of Common Law was henceforth to be illumined by the pure light of Chancery. His Lordship, having quoted a great number of precedents, said that the judgment in the case of Thompson v. Green compelled him to discharge the rule.

The Prisoner, after remarking that he had never been called a rule before, hastily left the Court.

BRAVO, PROFESSOR!

IT is seldom indeed that "Parliament out of Session," or in it either, is redeemed from dulness by such a passage as the following in PROFESSOR FAWCETT'S late speech delivered at the North London and Hackney School of Art and Science Annual Prize Distribution. Speaking of the cultivation of the æsthetic faculties derivable from works of nature, the Professor having, "evidently with the deep sympathy of his audience," referred to the calamity which has for twenty years past denied him the pleasure of looking upon them, said:—

"It was perhaps because he had once enjoyed that pleasure, and could do so no longer, that he could estimate what a precious privilege it was, and during the ten years he had been in Parliament there was nothing in his work he regarded with so much satisfaction as his endeavours to preserve Epping Forest, the New Forest, and the beautiful commons which still remained, from being sacrificed to the selfishness of individuals and a contemptible parsimony."

This declaration was received with cheers, to which might have been deservedly added "three times three" for the LORD MAYOR and Corporation of London, as the saviours of Epping Forest, and as many rounds of hisses and groans for the individuals to whose selfishness that and the New Forest, and sundry beautiful commons, were like to have been sacrificed; and likewise for the Administrators who wished to sacrifice them from motives of contemptible parsimony.

Digitized by Google

VENTURING TO PRESUME.

CLERICAL gentleman writes to the Times:—

"Presuming—if I may venture to presume—that the recent rainfall has now come to an end," &c., &c.

If such venturesome presumptions are to be made, Mr. Punch will try his hand at venturing to presume—

That strikes and lock-outs will soon be things unknown.

That Turkish Bond-holders will not invest money at high interest on worthless security in future.

That foolish flies, who know nothing of business, will hereafter keep clear of a certain financial cobweb in the City, where the spiders grow very stout.

That adulterated articles of food will cease to be sold.

That beef, mutton, and oysters will return to a reasonable price.

That Her Majesty's ships will refrain from ramming each other, and the First Lord of the Admiralty from blundering.

That Her Majesty's yachts will travel slowly through crowded sea-thoroughfares.

That we shall hear the last of Dr. Kenealy.

That the High, Low, and Broad Church will cease to quarrel, and do their duty to the people.

That the Bishop of Rochester will explain his conduct in the Felstead case.

That all Congresses where bores meet to edify each other will be abolished.

That the Irish will lose all their grievances, and be unable to invent a new one.

That Earl Russell will write no more letters, and Mr. Gladstone no more pamphlets, about the Pope.

That railway trains will keep time now and then, and not crash into one another by special arrangements.

That parallel straight lines will at last meet.

And, finally, that the weather will be permanently so fine as to deprive ordinary English people of their chief topic of conversation.

IRISH "AT HOMES."

At a time when the representatives of the Emerald Isle are urging in the House of Commons and elsewhere the necessity of giving to Ireland "Home Rule," Mr. Punch does not think it necessary to apologise for calling attention to two little meetings held recently at Waterford and Bally Gricken. The first was a banquet given on the occasion of the turning of the initial spadeful of earth of the proposed new waterworks; the second a meeting of free and independent electors, called together to listen to the eloquence of a certain Irish solicitor, yclept Mr. Henry Sargent.

At the banquet, Captain Johnson, J.P., proposed "The Health of the Municipalities of Ireland." To quote the report:—

"He said that, as the Mayors of Cork, Limerick, Clonmel, and Wexford were present, he felt great difficulty in selecting one of the number to respond. He, however, gave the preference to Alderman Woods, Mayor of Clonmel."

Now this seemed to be a moderate suggestion, and one that, in England, would have been hailed with a mild hammering of knives upon plates—in other words (as the reporters would say), with "enthusiastic applause." Not so in Ireland. Cork, Limerick, and Wexford were disgraced, and the fiery champions of municipal precedence were on their legs in an instant, shouting for justice, and purple with excitement. The scene was terrible.

"Alderman Woods and Mr. Nagle, Mayor of Cork, rose simultaneously to respond.—Alderman Woods: 'I rise——' Mr. Nagle: 'I beg your pardon.' (Great uproar, and cries of 'Hear Woods!' 'Hear Nagle!')—Alderman Woods (scarcely audible): 'I must request the Mayor of Cork to take his seat.'—Mr. Nagle. 'I will not, Sir. (Great confusion.) As the Mayor of the second city——' Alderman Woods: 'Sit down, Sir, and don't interrupt me.' (General uproar.) Mr. Nagle: 'As the Mayor of Cork, I claim ——' (Terrible uproar, and cries of 'Hear Woods!') Alderman Woods: 'I will not sit down, Sir, until I am heard.' Mr. Nagle: 'I have been insulted.'"

And now the time had arrived for the treading upon coat-tails, and, doubtless, many a gallant Alderman regretted that he had left his shillelah with his opera-hat in the vestibule. All eyes were turned towards Mr. Nagle, and "an elegant quarrel" was evidently expected. Fortunately, discretion even in Ireland is the better part of valour; and Mr. Nagle, having declared himself insulted, prepared to leave the room, amidst "a scene of great uproar." He was, however, persuaded to return; and after he had once more taken his seat at the hospitable board, Mr. Alderman Woods returned thanks. Mr. Woods' observations are not chronicled, but doubtless they were of the most edifying character. But the storm was not over. To quote the report—

"Mr. Nagle followed, stating that Captain Johnson had exhibited a very ingenious diplomacy in the gingerly manner in which he had proposed the toast, and held that as Cork was the second city in Ireland, he should have priority in responding.—Mr. Hall, Mayor of Limerick, followed, and denied that Cork was more important than Limerick. He denied that Cork was the second city in Ireland. Mr. Nagle: 'I rise to say——' Mr. Hall: 'Sit down. I did not interrupt you' (Cries of 'Chair! Chair!') Mr. Hall. 'Let me explain.' Mr. Nagle (very firmly): 'I will not be interrupted.' (Cries of 'Sit down!' and 'Chair! Chair!') Mr. Hall then resumed, and defied any person to show that Cork was more important than Limerick. He represented the city of Sarsfield. The city was the first and last city in Ireland to fight for civil and religious liberty. (Great cheering.)"

The "very firmly 'I will not be interrupted'" of Mr. Nagle, the interrupter, was delightfully Irish, and was appreciated at its proper value. But Mr. Hall had more to say. He did not consider that the question of municipal precedence had been satisfactorily settled, so he offered more evidence "on the same side." Said he—

"If parental importance gave a Mayor priority, he claimed it, because he had one of the finest daughters in Ireland—(great laughter)—and if the Mayor of Waterford gave any of the fine young fellows he saw round the table a letter of introduction to him in Limerick, he would take care to see that they were properly introduced to her. (Renewed laughter.)"

This argument was allowed to settle the question in dispute, and after the Mayor of Waterford had insisted that the town he represented should have priority over Cork, Limerick, or Clonmel, the company (once more to quote the report) "proceeded to spend a very social evening." Mr. Punch only hopes that digestion waited on this occasion, on appetite. It is scarcely necessary to say that in England an uproar is not usually adopted as an excellent substitute for "brandy and coffee."

The second little meeting was held, as Mr. Punch has already said, in Bally Gricken. Three hundred good men and true, from the City of Waterford, were present, and Mr. Henry Sargent addressed them from a very appropriate stand—the Bull Post; no doubt the post to which, in the old times, Bulls, not M.P.'s, were chained for baiting. The speech began pleasantly.

"Mr. Sargent commenced by calling on those present to give three cheers for old Ireland. He cheered for Ireland from the depths of his Irish heart. (Laughter.) He had but one object in view, and that was to be returned the Home Rule Member for Waterford. If they returned him he would succeed in blending the orange and the green. (Cheering.) Green was his colour. [A lad who was convenient to him here knocked off Mr. Sargent's hat.]"

Which, to say the least of it, was very rude, and must have been inconvenient to Mr. Sargent. However, Mr. Sargent was equal to the occasion,—and here we have a glimpse of the sort of etiquette that will be observed on College Green when the Irish House of Commons meet once more in their old quarters. Says the reporter of Mr. Sargent:—

"That gentleman turned round, and, with a stick he held in his hand, amidst roars of laughter, began thrashing all round him with it."

These very striking arguments seem to have had their due effect, and order was soon restored.

"Mr. Sargent continued. He said that it was not Sargent that was speaking to them that day. (Laughter.)—A Voice: 'Well, maybe it's your ghost.' (Great laughter.)—Mr. Sargent: 'No; it was the spirit of the great O'Connell that had come back to them through him, to implore of them to return him (Mr. Sargent) to Parliament. (Roars of laughter.)"

And then came a threat that will cause much weeping in Peterborough and Bucks:—

"He assured them that the first time he met Disraeli he would call him and Whalley to account for wanting to pry into the mystery of convent life."

In spite of this warning, so full of mystery and vague terror, Mr. Sargent seemed to have a kinder side to his character, for he immediately—

Digitized by Google

—"asked them to remember that they had immortal souls, and he prayed to God he and his dear sisters and brothers would all meet in Paradise."

Now, after so pleasant and pious a sentiment, it is very sad to hear what followed.

"A number of little boys here began to throw caps at him, when he turned on them, amidst a scene of great uproar, and began striking them in every direction with his stick till order was restored."

After this little "divarsion," MR. SARGENT resumed his speech denouncing MAJOR O'GORMAN, and declaring (amidst great laughter) that the PRINCE OF WALES should succeed HER MAJESTY (whom he requested to vacate the throne), with a view to founding "Balmoral in Ireland." After quoting MILL'S Political Economy and Lord Chesterfield's Letters, he brought his speech to a quaint conclusion by observing that—

"He believed in the spirits of the departed coming back to this world, and hoped no man would wear any colour but green."

A colour, by the way, very appropriate to the believers in Spiritualism.

And yet, after these two meetings, there will be people, Mr. Punch will be bound to say, who will still declare that Home-Rule is not a good thing for Ireland!

AUDI ALTERAM PARTEM.

DEAR MR. PUNCH,

ALTHOUGH a Broker myself, I heartily enjoyed your lines this week, which are true of here and there a case in our calling, though about as applicable to the great body of Brokers as those I enclose are to the generality of Clients. The portrait I have sketched is, however, drawn from nature, and by no means libels a constantly increasing class, whose little game is "Heads, I win; tails, you lose."

Your highly-tickled reader,

Throgmorton Street, Oct. 29. FAIR PLAY.

MY CLIENT.

Who hangs about the Courts all day,
And deals in a most reckless way,
With every Broker who will stay?
My Client!

Who talks a guttural foreign lingo,
And, whilst he wins, still lets the thing go,
Until a panic comes?—by jingo!
My Client!

Who dabbles in a hundred "specs,"
His Broker's hazards little recks,
And chuckles as he takes large cheques?
My Client!

Who, when his ventures, "bear"-hugged, quake,
Commissions, quick, a double stake,
Vowing the thing all right to make?
My Client!

Who, when the threatened crash has come,
And he owes me a stiffish sum,
Fails to turn up—and leaves me glum?
My Client!

Who, for his "little games" out-lawed,
His pockets filled with fruits of fraud,
Coolly retires, and lives abroad?
My Client!

ALTER ET IDEM.

(From Broker No. 2.)

Who swaggered down from West End Club,
As fierce as any half-pay "Sub"
Prepared all City Men to snub?
My Client!

Who, when I gave him sound advice,
And "landed" him on "something nice,"
Declared I'd robbed him in the price?
My Client!

Who (though, when things were going well,
He took his profits, like a Swell)
Firmly, for loss, declined to "shell"?
My Client!

Who, on that Panic settling-day,
Just calmly kept himself away,
And left me all his debts to pay?
My Client!

Whom did I find "Gone out of Town"?
Whose assets not worth half-a-crown?
And who'd done twenty Brokers "brown"?
My Client!

SOCIAL SLAVERY.

SYMPATHISING MR. PUNCH,

PRAY let me call your notice to this paragraph:—

"The well-known work entitled Le Monde Slave, by M. LEGER, has been supplemented by a very timely volume of Études Slaves, by the same author."

By "Le Monde" I may presume the writer means "Le Beau Monde," to which I have the honour, and the labour, to belong. Although the work may be well known, I confess I never read it, for really I've so many other things to do. But I perfectly agree with the title—"Le Monde Slave!" Yes, indeed! We slave from morn till night, and from year's end to year's end. It is very fine to say that Britons never, never, never will be slaves; but the fact is that we all of us, who belong to le beau monde, live a life of constant slavery, from which we never, never, never can be free. Noblesse oblige. See how hardly we all slave in London through the Season; and when the summer ends, we have the slavery of travelling, when we so want to be quiet, or of entertaining people whom we so want not to see. Or we have the hard labour of visiting our relatives, and everybody who is anybody knows exactly what that means. Then, again, we have to slave to get our daughters off our hands, and get good places for our sons; and what with all the daily work and worry of dressing, driving, dining, and occasionally dancing, I'm sure not even the Negroes in Cuba are greater slaves than we are, and I wish heartily that some one would endeavour to emancipate us, and set us free to live exactly as we like. Meanwhile, believe me,

Yours in thraldom,

URSULA FITZ-BATTLEAXE.

Ovations and Omelets.

BY telegram from Munich we are apprised that:—

"KING LOUIS has declined with thanks to accept an ovation which it was intended to make in his honour on his arrival in the capital."

There is a disaffected party in Munich who might perhaps have attempted to render the KING OF BAVARIA'S ovation in the literal sense an egging. In that sense, an ovation differs materially from an omelet. Omelets, if not sweet, are savoury; but the ovation with which a Sovereign is likely to be assailed by a rebellious faction might turn out an unsavoury one.

Our Compliments to the Chasseurs d'Afrique.

Balaklava Dinner. October 25.

QUE le p'tit speech du BARON DE GRANCEY
Fût bien à propos et grandement sensé!
Qui ne serait fier d'être Français
En écoutant le speech de MONSIEUR DE GRANCEY!

MODUS VIVENDI BETWEEN ITALY AND THE PAPACY.—Cat-and dog.

Digitized by Google

A SLIGHT MISUNDERSTANDING.

"DO YOU EVAH WINK, MISS EVANGELINE?" "DO I EVER WHAT, MR. SMYTHE?" "WINK?" "WHAT DO YOU MEAN, SIR?' "WELL, SKATE, IF YOU PWEFER THE EXPWESSION!"

THE BISHOP'S BAN.

"THE BISHOP OF RIPON ON MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS.—A letter has been received from the BISHOP OF RIPON, in reply to MR. DAVID HOYLE, of New York (U.S.A.), who desired to have cut on the gravestone over the grave of his father, in the churchyard of Marsden, near Huddersfield, the words 'Requiescat in pace.' The incumbent of Marsden (the REV. T. WHITNEY) refused to allow the inscription to be cut on the stone, and on an appeal to the BISHOP OF RIPON, his Lordship replied:—'I am truly sorry to find myself unable to comply with your request. I cannot sanction the inscription on a tombstone, "Requiescat in pace." I need not remind you that this is, in fact, a prayer for the dead. All true Protestants believe that the state of the departed is fixed the moment after death. The souls of the faithful are in joy and felicity, and do not need our prayers. Lost souls could not be benefited by them.'"—Leeds Mercury, October 23, 1875.

THE cleric mind is a continual feast!
Bishop and Rector, Presbyter and Priest,
All seem of late industriously engaged
In giving Charity, PAUL'S crowning gift,
The tautest tether or the shortest shrift.
The war of dogma, long so hotly waged
In pulpit and polemic tome,
To its last stage is surely come,
By such a chief episcopal when led,
And fought above the gravestones of the dead.

This Overseer of the Church declares
That kindly wishes are as bad as prayers,
When humbly breathed above the grave's grim portal
After the spirit of a parted mortal—
Flown—whither? Who may say? In any case,
The Bishop's cold dilemma stops the way
To all who hope, as to the few who pray,
For any grace
Beyond the ken of the prelatic mind,
Which Heaven's own love in cords of creed would bind.
What! Give the faintest hope the feeblest wing?
Solace with vain lip-vales hearts that grieve
When "that which all true Protestants believe"
Brands the fond impulse futile? 'Tis a thing
That cock-sure dogma may not sanction. No!
Let the departed go,
Unfollowed by good wishes on their way,
Rather than Faith from her straight line should swerve,
Or Charity—the creedless vagrant—stray
Into God's-acre,—priestcraft's last preserve!

And are we then so sure! Have we so sounded
The awful depths of doom,
That hope from the grave's border must be hounded,
And poor affection vainly plead for room
To carve upon the tomb, where hates should cease,
Her yearning—"Rest in Peace!"?
When soaring Science set her iron law
Against the plea for prayer, the cleric host
Rebuked with pious zeal the careless boast
Of Sciolists, and bade them kneel in awe
Before the Inscrutable. And now
Cold Dogma, with uplifted brow,
Bids humble aspiration halt before
The tomb's dark door,
Nor dare to desecrate its stone with speech
Of gentler augury than Churches teach.

Nay—stand aside! Let human love have way
Where even hate stays foot! Forbear to play
The Graveyard Cerberus; or else go fix
Your dolorous office on the shores of Styx,
Weigh Charon's freight, assay each erring soul,
Take there your tax and toll,
But cease to ban, with your despotic breath,
These inoffensive courtesies of death.
Brand not for het'rodox poor Hope that dares
Break Creed's fixed bounds, though 'twere with humble pray'rs,
That seek for pangs of parting some surcease
In bidding the departed—"Rest in Peace!"

Digitized by Google

BLACK SHEEP IN THE CITY.

CHORUS OF EXCLUDED DIPLOMATISTS. "WHY—YOU 'VE LET HIM IN!"

LORD MAYOR COTTON. "YES; AND HE 'S LET US IN! BUT WE MUST DRAW THE LINE SOMEWHERE!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE FLOODS IN OXFORD.

THE following decree of the Hebdomadal Council has this day been published:—

Spire of St. Mary's, Oct. 30th.

In consequence of the unforeseen rise of the waters, and general inundation of the Colleges, the following regulations will be observed by Undergraduates:—

1.—Lectures will be delivered from the highest tower of each College. Undergraduates will attend in the Boyton life-dress, with cap and gown.

2.—Academicals must be worn over the Boyton dress after sunset.

3.—The roll of the Undergraduates will be called at their respective Colleges at eleven P.M., when all are required to moor themselves for the night in their respective quads.

4.—Canoes will be reserved for those who have taken the degree of M.A. Any Undergraduate paddling his own canoe without a written order from the Proctors will be fined ten shillings.

5.—Sculling boats are reserved for the Vice-Chancellor, Proctors, and Heads of Houses.

6.—The Proctors and Bull-dogs will patrol the streets in steam launches.

7.—Any Undergraduate convicted of furious paddling will be severely dealt with.

8.—The Boyton dress worn by Undergraduates must be of a subfuse hue.

Given under our hand and seal this 30th day of October, 1875.

PORTE IN A STORM.

MR. GLADSTONE having refused a Palace on the Bosphorus, and £50,000 a year, in return for his services as a Turkish Financier, the Government of the Sublime Porte are said to be turning their eyes to other quarters in search of a possible substitute for the eminent English Statesman in question. It is rumoured (it is fair to say on very unreliable authority) that the following letters have been received at the Turkish Foreign Office during the last seven days. For obvious reasons the names of the writers are not given in full:—

Stoke, October, 1875.

DR. K——Y, M.P., Q.C., &c. &c., presents his most respectful compliments to his Sublime Majesty, the SULTAN OF TURKEY, and deeply regrets that the toil of literary labour, devoted to the noblest purposes of mankind, prevents him from accepting the very complimentary invitation of becoming Minister of Finance to Turkey, the land of the brave and the free, the nation of heroes, and the terror of slaves. The Doctor feels that he is eminently suited to fill the post with care, punctuality, patriotism, and the most business-like despatch. The Doctor (as doubtless his Sublime Majesty is aware) can speak Greek, Latin, Hebrew, French, Austrian, Prussian, German, and Irish. Years ago, too, he could write English. The Doctor, however, will be glad to send over to Turkey, the land of the brave and the free, the nation of heroes, and the terror of slaves, one of his dear sons to represent him. The boy with the Turkish name would be the most appropriate; but the SULTAN can take his choice. His Sublime Majesty may have the pick of the lot. In the event of this proposal being accepted, the Doctor would wish that all subscriptions to the Magna Charta Association (prospectus enclosed) may be sent to the President direct. The Doctor as a man, a father, and a peer of CROMWELL, must insist upon this in the plainest language possible. Accounts audited every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Office hours, from eight to six.

T. R. D. L. October, 1875.

MR. D——N B——T presents his compliments to the SULTAN OF TURKEY, and regrets to say that previous engagements will prevent him from accepting the position offered to him by His Majesty. MR. D——N B——T, however, would suggest that the only way to place the Turkish Finances on a satisfactory footing would be to produce in Constantinople in the off season a new and original Oriental Drama, with gorgeous scenery and novel effects. The features of the piece might be a Race (in sacks) on the Bosphorus, the Burning of a Real Turkish Mosque, and the Celebration (in the third Act) of a Comic Arab Funeral. The present Turkish Bonds might be exchanged for Orders for the Upper Circle not admissible after seven o'clock. Should His Majesty think well of the suggestion, MR. D——N B——T would be glad to undertake the management of the scheme on sharing terms. Provincial Rights in the Herzegovina to be arranged for after the production of the piece in Constantinople.

Peterborough, Oct., 1875.

MR. W——Y, M.P., indignantly refuses to become Finance Minister to the Sublime Porte. MR. W——Y, M.P., begs to say that he believes the SULTAN OF TURKEY to be as wily a Jesuit as CARDINAL MANNING himself.

Dartmoor, Oct., 1875.

A "B. of the B. K." ("Barrinite of the British Kingdum") giv his respeckful respex to the Sultun of the Iland of Tuckey, and regretts that circumstarnces ovor wich he as kno kontrole preventes im from acceptin of the kinde invitashun. Opin the Sultun of the Iland of Tuckey is well, wich it leives me at presente.

England, Oct., 1875.

MR. E. A. S——N regrets to say that it is utterly impossible for him to accept the office of Finance Minister with the title of Pacha. MR. E. A. S——N feels that the SULTAN OF TURKEY has written to him under a misapprehension of the facts of the case. Lord Dundreary is merely a creation of the brain. MR. E. A. S——N, however, cordially agrees with His Majesty that were Lord Dundreary a real personage, his Lordship would be just the man to arrange the details of Turkish Finance.

85, Fleet Street, E.C., Oct., 1875.

MR. P——CH is surprised at the impudence of the SULTAN. Turkish repudiation is a disgrace to civilisation, and His Majesty deserves to be brought before a Judge and a common jury. Mr. P——ch begs to state that should any further messengers be despatched from Constantinople to the Punch Office, Toby will arrange matters with them on their arrival!

THE PROFESSOR OF THE FUTURE.

THIS Lady Professor's so wondrous wise,
Her very face is a study;
She mounts a pair of celestial blue eyes,
And her mouth's small ellipsis is ruddy.

To masculine pupils of various age
She lectures,—for such is her duty;
And the old ones think her an absolute sage,
And the young ones a perfect beauty.

Her small white hand has a clenching force,
If sometimes her facts look like fiction;
And, whate'er be the logic of her discourse,
Her smiles breed instant conviction.

Such sweet little theories doth she advance,
And her eyes emit proofs so thickly,
Her senior disciples fall into a trance,
Her junior in love as quickly.

Now, though Punch's opinion should go for nought,
Or be slighted as merely funny,
He holds that if thus the old fellows be taught,
The boys will get most for their money.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

IN CÆSAR'S time, as he tells us at the beginning of his Commentaries, "Omnis Gallia divisa est in tres partes." So it is still,—the three parties being Legitimists, Bonapartists, and Republicans. Only CÆSAR is wanting.

L'AFFAIRE DARNLEY.

(By Our Own Nobleman.)

LORD DARNLEY'S conduct, at the best,
Must be pwonounced infewior,
While Gwavesend's Mayor—exouse the jest—
Comes out as Lake Supewior!

[Left alone, laughing.

Digitized by Google

THE CLERK OF THE WEATHER TO MR. PUNCH.

FIE, MR. PUNCH! That you should join in the Chorus of Commination which perpetually assails me! Still I know your forte is fairness, and your foible indulgence; your motto "Strike, but hear!" And I think I can say a few words for myself, if you will listen.

"Clerk of the Weather" you call me. Well, I should like to see the mundane clerk who could successfully control so much as the smallest subbranch in my establishment. The department of Spring Showers in your dot of an island alone, would, I suspect, drive your astutest Bank Director to distraction in the twirling of a meridian. And consider what I have to look after! But, of course, nobody does consider: blind abuse comes so much easier. Of course it doesn't much matter. You may rave till all is blue—in TYNDALL'S sense—and not stay a seemingly superfluous rain-drop, divert a too torrid sun-ray, or ruffle my equanimity. Indeed, you may thank your lucky stars that I am impervious to abuse as to entreaty, and do not put the reins of my power into the hands of every pseudo-Phaethon of the moment. But I have compassion on the sufferers from meteorological miseries, of which, I confess, you Islanders have a Benjamin's portion, and mean to give mortals a hint or two through their sagest representative—yourself! You know what unthankful rule is, and are familiar with the manners and customs of well-tended but recalcitrant donkeys.

Look here, then! Why not try and work with me, instead of railing at me? E. g. I supply the rain—more than you appear to relish sometimes—you provide the cistern, the watercourse, the sluice, the umbrella, and the waterproof. I furnish the material, you the means of utilisation, distribution, defence or prevention, as the case may be. Carry this partial co-partnership out on the large scale, and there you are. Twig? The rain I send must fall on the just and the unjust, the thirsting plain, and the thronged promenade, the turnips, and the turnip-growers, who want it, and the ripening ears and holiday pleasure-seekers, who do not. A Local-Sun-and-Shower-Distribution Company, Limited, is not possible in my realm. I have the round World to look to, not Little Peddlington only. But Little Peddlington can help itself if it will.

The fact is, you monocular mortals suffer far more from drought and deluge, damp and dirt, discomfort and disease than there is any necessity for. Why?—For want of forethought, providence, ingenuity. Prevention of a large portion of the woes you attribute to the vagaries of the Clerk of the Weather are "within the resources of Science," as the newspapers say. Let human ingenuity, which, after so many rain-discomforted generations, achieved the Gingham and the Macintosh, set to work on the great scale at the task of adaptation, utilisation, self-protection, and the Chronic Grumbler's occupation will be pretty nearly gone. You have not half exhausted the sweet utilities of the Conduit and the Tank; nor, in spite of your much-mouthed proverb, do you really cultivate the useful art of providing for or against a Rainy Day. You bear, grumblingly, all the evils incidental to the alterations of draught and deluge, from damp feet to drowning, from scorched noses to sun-stroke and water-famine, when by timely provision and intelligent economy you might strike a normal balance between plentiful lack and unmanageable superfluity, dodge discomfort, shun disaster, and minimise loss.

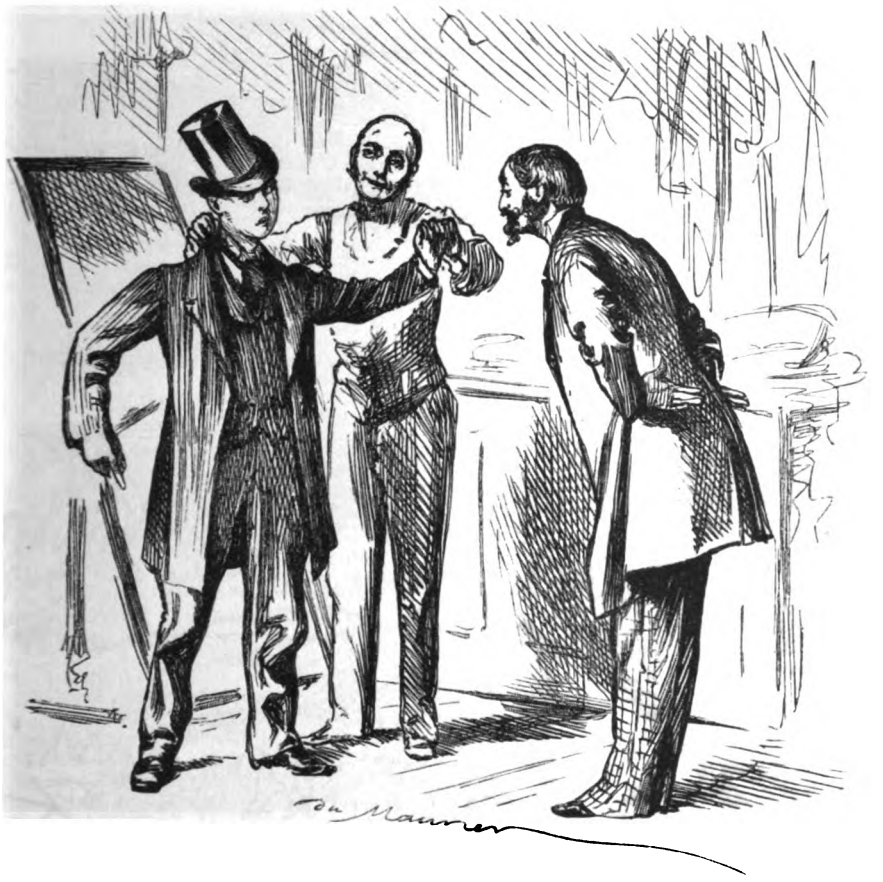
You don't expect me to play the part of universal Sangster, street-cleaner, hydraulic engineer, and sanitary inspector, do you? If you won't play those very practicable rôles yourself, blame your own unwisdom, not the Weather. Grumbling at the Weather is about as wise as tilting at windmills. Set your vanes to the wind, and it will grind your corn for you; direct and store your floods, and they will serve instead of swamping you; rightly manage your streets and subways, and my rains will be not much less welcome or more worrying on the flags than on the furrows. Whether they result in refreshment or rheumatism depends largely on yourselves.

Here be a few examples out of many possible ones. Verbum sap., my dear Punch. Sorry to incommode you, I'm sure! Would gladly find you a weather-proof private Paradise—a bright little isle of your own, where north-easters never wandered, and St. Swithin was unknown—if you would accept it. But I know you would not. The World and 85, Fleet Street cannot spare you. Noblesse oblige, eh? But do just tell the stupids and the savants what I say.

How large, of weather-woes which men endure,
The part that sumphs may cause and skill might cure!

No more time now. There's another "tap" requires turning on. Au Reservoir!

Yours pluvially,



THE CLERK OF THE WEATHER.

[Mr. Punch gladly prints this communication. Even if his accustomed courtesy did not constrain him, the maxim, Fas est et ab hoste doceri, would move him to compliance with the C. of the W.'s request. Wisdom may derive a few wrinkles even from a special-pleading Jupiter Pluvius.]

Rhymes for the Month.

REMEMBER, remember
The fogs of November,
And wrap up your thorax (or chest),
Beware of bronchitis,
Avoid laryngitis,
And money in sealskin invest.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL ROAD TO ELEGANCE.

Little Spiffkins (who can only afford one new Suit per Annum, but patronises a fashionable West-End Tailor). "O, BY THE BYE, MR. BROWN, CAN YOU SUGGEST ANY MEANS BY WHICH I COULD PREVENT MY TROUSERS FROM BAGGING AT THE KNEES!"

Mr. Brown. "WELL, SIR, THERE'S ONLY ONE WAY I KNOW OF, AND THAT'S WHAT MOST OF MY CUSTOMERS DO!"

Little Spiffkins. "TELL ME! WHAT IS IT!"

Mr. Brown. "WELL, THEY ORDER TWENTY OR THIRTY PAIR AT A TIME, SIR!"

"CHARGE, CHESTER, CHARGE!"

IMITATION being the sincerest form of flattery, a few admirers of the Light Brigade intend to celebrate the anniversaries of the following charges:—

November 9.—HERR VON CHEATEMDORF, of the Golden Fleece Baden-Baden, celebrates the ninth anniversary of the famous day when he charged VISCOUNT NOODLE five pounds for his bed and breakfast.

November 11.—M. MACAIRE, Hôtel du Grand Voleur, Paris, celebrates the first anniversary of the glorious day when he charged SIR SMITH and SIR BROWN thirty-five pounds for a week's accommodation.

November 20.—ANGUS MCCORKITON, Rob Roy Hotel, Glen Stealach, N.B., celebrates the third anniversary of the unco' guid day when he charged a party of Frenchmen sixteen shillings for eight small glasses of whiskey.

December 2.—The BISHOP OF DOUBLE GLOUCESTER celebrates the eighth anniversary of the pious day when, in his charge to his Clergy, he forbade them the use of scent on their pockethandkerchiefs, and the playing of croquet.

December 17.—A Contented Nephew celebrates the nineteenth anniversary of the fortunate day when his Rich Uncle put so large a charge of powder in his gun that he blew himself to smithereens, and thereby enabled the aforesaid Contented Nephew to take possession of his large estates.

STRANGE COMPANY.

WONDERS will never cease, while people advertise their wants. As for instance, thus:—

A LADY of Good Education desires a POST as COMPANION.

We have heard, when on board ship, of a companion ladder, but we never before heard of a companion post. Really, a post seems an odd thing to desire for its companionship. For ourselves, we had far rather make a crony of a walking-stick. There are so many kinds of posts, too, that we wonder that the lady does not specify her preference. For light company perhaps a lamp-post would be suitable; but at all events at night one might find comfort in a bed-post.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE.

(No. 2.)

(At the Alexandra Palace Banquet, October 25.)

PAYING sight! Left and right,
Crowds pressing onward,—
Sharp Alexandra Board
Dines the Two Hundred!
"Free passes grant them all!"
Veterans, short and tall—
Sharp Alexandra Board—
(Profits will not be small)—
Dines the Two Hundred!

"Go it, the Light Brigade!"
Toast-Master, sore dismayed,
Queered by those heroes' chaff,
Boggled and blundered.
Theirs not to speechify,
Still less to make reply;
Theirs but to drain all dry,—
Into the drinkables
Walked the Two Hundred!

Bottles to right of them,
Bottles to left of them,
Bottles in front of them,
While the band thundered:
They knew no "Captain Cork"—
Boldly they went to work,
After the eatables
Fell to their knife and fork,—
Thirsty Two Hundred!

À La Russe might surprise,
Still they knew joints and pies,
Clearing the dishes there,
Relevés and entrées, while
Scared waiters wondered;
Then, plunged in 'bacca smoke,
Glasses and pipes they broke—
Comrades long sundered,
Big with old lark and joke,
Gleefully met again—
Jolly Two Hundred!

Trophies to right of them,
Trophies to left of them,
CARDIGAN'S charger's head,
Piously sundered!
Back they reeled, from the spread,
Straight as they could, to bed—
They that had dined so well—
Nothing to pay per head—
Happy Two Hundred!

When shall their glory fade?
O, what a meal they made!
Cockneydom wondered.
Honour the Charge they made—
Bravo the Light Brigade!
Hearty Two Hundred!

Translation by our Eton Boy.

(HORACE, Odes, I. xxxvii. 10.)

"Minuit furorem
Vix una sospes navis——"

"ONE of the ships having got off scot-free has scarcely diminished the public fury."

WITHOUT THE PAIL OF THE CHURCH.

THE New York Times informs us of the misdeeds of a certain Long Island Bishop, who, when not attending to the niggers in his church, employs his time in white-washing ceilings! Better, at least, than white-washing blackamoors, an exploit which some Northern dignitaries are bent on.

Digitized by Google

A PRECISIAN.

Artist (affably). "FINE MORNING." Native. "NO' BAD AVA'." Artist. "PRETTY SCENERY." Native. "GEY AN' GOOD."
Artist (pointing to St. Bannoch's, in the distance). "WHAT PLACE IS THAT DOWN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE LOCH?"
Native. "IT'S NO AT THE BOTTOM—IT'S AT THE FUT!" Artist (to himself). "YOU PAST-PARTICIPLED HIGHLANDER!"
[Drops the subject!

"LIE TEA."

"The article known in the trade as 'lie tea.'"—DR. HASSALL, in the Times.

"Now stir the fire, and close the shutters fast,"
Surely the boredom of the day is past:
With some reward our virtue should be crowned,
"Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round,"
Forget the morning, when one's cares return,
"And, while the bubbling and loud-hissing urn
Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
[COWPER despised the naughty man who sups,
Adhering to his liquor like a leech]
That cheer and not inebriate, wait on each,
So let us welcome peaceful evening in."

O peaceful poet! is it not a sin
That this, your fragrant fine and favourite beverage,
Should be so treated in our mighty clever age?
It "not inebriates," but it causes stupor:
And, you, so surely as your name was COWPER,
Would find yourself a sufferer by the trick
That mixes indigo and turmeric,
And other things, with names unfit for rhyme,
In the rare product of old China's clime.

At least they give the poison proper name,
Since as Lie Tea 'tis known to grocery fame:
But comes the deep momentous question, why
False Tea alone should have the prefix "Lie."
Lie-Wine is found on tables of pretence,
Lie-Agitators mock our common sense,
Lie-Hair is seen on heads of ladies bright,
Lie-bloom to cheeks gives dangerous delight,
Lie-Ten-per-Cent. brings house and land to th' hammer,
Lie-Journalists write trash in wretched grammar,
Lie-Politicians somehow fill their purses,
Lie-Christian clerics shock the world with curses,
Lie-Coals are slate and brick, Lie-Broadcloth shoddy,
Lie-Whiskey 'd make a Scot abjure his toddy.

Enough; for Mr. Punch is far too wise
Half to exhaust the catalogue of lies:
They flutter in the fine patrician air;
They haunt our shops and workshops, plenteous there;
E'en when you walk beneath the rainy sky,
Your silk umbrella soon begins to lie.
Wherefore Punch says, whoever may be able
Lie to detect, should give that lie its label:
If this were bravely done, right soon there 'd be
Reform in other things besides Lie Tea.

Effects of the Wet Weather.

DEAR PUNCH,

WASN'T DARNLEY blown up by MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS? If so, there's a joke for you about DARNLEY being blown up by fire, and LORD DARNLEY being blown up by LAKE or water. I'd work it out myself if I hadn't got such a cold in my head.

Yours sincerely,
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS.

A Suggestion for the Ninth.

To make the Procession a typical Show,
And in Citizens' eyes its attractions to heighten,
A strong deputation should instantly go
To ask, as a loan, the great Turtle from Brighton.

Digitized by Google

"THERE ARE MORE THINGS IN HEAVEN AND EARTH," &c.

Affable Parson (in Yorkshire Train). "AND WHAT RACE-HORSE DO YOU THINK WILL WIN THE ST. LEGER STAKES TO-DAY, SIR?"

Bookmaker. "'BLEST IF I KNOW!—WISH I DID. THINK LEGRANGE WILL ABOUT PULL IT OFF. I CAN ACCOMMODATE YOU TO A PONY, IF YOU LIKE, Y' KNOW. BUT" (seeing no chance of a bet) "IT MAYN'T BE BAD BUSINESS TO FLUTTER A BIT ON THE OTHER FORRIGNERS, AND TO TAKE THE ODDS TO A QUID OR TWO AGAINST THE FYFIELD PICK, AND BATES'S BEST FOR A PLACE!!"

[Clerical Gent "gives it up," and retires behind his "Times."

OUR HEROES.

WHAT shall we do with our Heroes? Say!
"Whatever you please, so you make them pay!"
Cries the Valet-voice. It has changed its tone,
For the Valet-soul has sagacious grown,
And learnt that its venal shouts and cheers
Turn prompter pennies than flouts and sneers.
It has dropped "pooh-poohs" with extreme content
Since praise got quoted at cent. per cent.

What shall we do with our Heroes stout?
Pose them in public, and make them spout!
In public let them be filed and fed—
The sight should pay at a shilling a head.
Walk up! Walk up! Let the long-eared see
How Heroes dine. Bid the Daily T.
Grow dithyrambic, and bardlings rush
To greet our Heroes with floods of gush!

What imports, though the hero shines
Little enough when he talks, or dines?
What imports, if his finest points
Scarce come out over jugs or joints?
Bid him perorate, make him feast,
Though he mayn't pose well, he will pay at least.
And gifts most needed to face his foeman,
Are scarcely those that best suit his Showman.

A double debt to our "Braves" we owe—
First in the battle, then in the Show.
Here's to the man who can fight and feed!
With the gift of the gab for the hour of need.
"Honour" the Hero's mistress? Nay,
Huckster and Humbug have him in pay.
Wouldn't a Bayard be glad and proud,
Trotted out for a holiday crowd?

Who would not yearn a Hero to be,
To live on the lips of SIR FIDDLE DEDEE?
To be gushed o'er in prose and invoked in verse,
And—help to replenish a caterer's purse?
A shilling a day, an occasional feed,
And much tall talk is Our Heroes' meed.
'Tis fine to be brave, but better, no doubt,
To be up to the rôle of the Hero's Tout!

What shall we do with Our Heroes? Nay!
The problem's solved in the prettiest way.
They find their Kudos, at life's grey close,
In penny papers and public shows!
To "Hero Worship" one chapter add,—
How shall we name it—"Hero" or "Cad"?
It's coming to that in our glorious Isle:
What do you think of it, THOMAS CARLYLE?

THE ART OF NOMENCLATURE.

By Coe NOMEN, Esq., Prenomen Place, near Agnomen.

THE Art of the Nomenclator has been neglected in these modern days. There seems good reason for calling attention to its great importance. A few hints on the subject may lead to its scientific investigation. Names have a great influence on destiny.

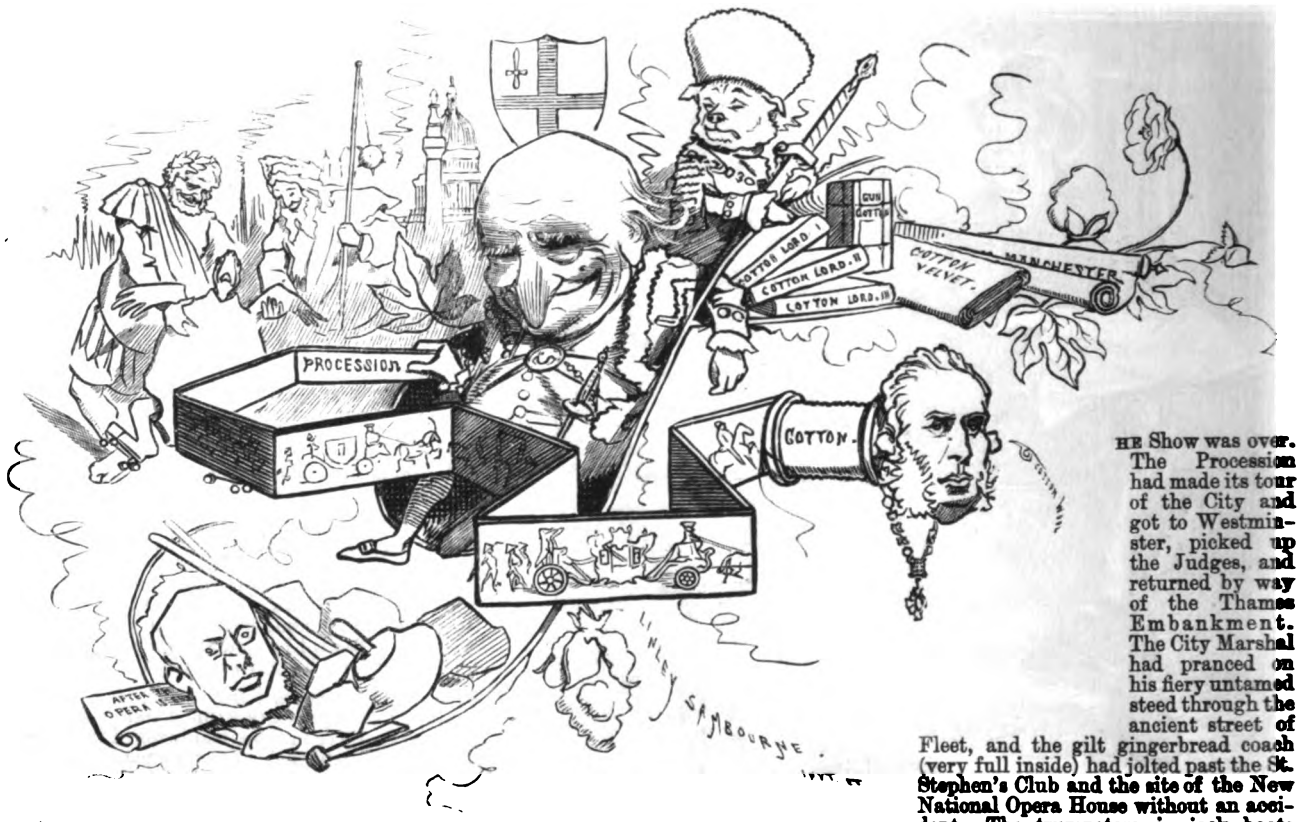
Boys.—Call a boy JOHN, and he will be steady; call him CHARLES, and he will deviate into CHARLEY, and go in for flirtation. It is to be remarked that MESSRS. SMITH, BROWN, and JONES are fond of christening their sons STANLEY, HOWARD, CLINTON, GROSVENOR, though they have no claim to connection with those noble families. HOWARD SMITH is a queer combination. Why not go to earlier traditions? As thus:

For the son of a Statesman named SMITH—PERICLES SMITH.
For the son of a Poet named SMITH—HOMER SMITH.
For the son of a Doctor SMITH—ÆSCULAPIUS SMITH.
For the son of a Soldier SMITH—ACHILLES SMITH.
For the son of a Democrat SMITH—THERSITES KENEALY SMITH.

And so on, to the end of a very long chapter indeed.

Girls.—Difficult. All questions about girls Mr. Punch finds uncommonly difficult. Would you, pretty reader of this column, rather be KATE or KEZIA, JESSY or JEMIMA, AMY or AMELIA, LILY or LUCINDA, SALLY or SOPHONISBA? Ponder this momentous question, for upon it depends the opinion of you held by that Arbiter Puellarum who dwells at 85, Fleet Street. Mr. Punch likes to give girls names of poetic form. A famous Poet called his daughter ROTHA, after the river which flowed beneath Rydal Mount. And may not fair christenings be found in English poetry? Have not SPENSER'S Una, and SHAKSPEARE'S Rosalind, and JONSON'S Earine, a right to be remembered?

Streets.—The two chief streets of a certain English city are Wine and Corn Streets. Good. But the old London names are good also. Piccadilly may be connected with peccadilloes: Punch can't say. Pall Mall recalls the pleasant game of ball played by the gayest of our kings. The Strand was once the shore of Thames; through Holborn ran the Old Bourne; once there was a gate to commemorate King Lud. Can't modern folk be similarly commemorated? We seem to have lost our inventive faculty—all of us, save Mr. Punch, who means to amaze the City with Punch Buildings, and get Apollo and half-a-dozen other gods to meet the LORD MAYOR and Aldermen when the great College of Wit is opened.



Dogs.—Rover, Lion, Neptune, Dash, are among the stupid old names for dogs which have become stereotyped. Inventive people have other names. Mr. Punch has his ancient immortal canine comrade, Toby, who in days to come will be transfigured to the skies as Canis Maximus, Canis Major being utterly eclipsed. This, of course, will be coincident with Punch's own apotheosis, the date whereof depends very much on the arrangements to be made between Olympus and No. 85.

Maid-Servants.—Fair LUCILLA ought to have her name legibly written on her face. POLLY and SALLY and SUKEY materially differ. But are there any POLLIES and SALLIES and SUKEYS now? Not a bit of it. MISS MARIANNE comes as Cook, MISS SARA as Housemaid, MISS SUSANNA as Lady's-Maid—all in the latest fashionable attire. The mistress who is deciding whether or not to engage them gets many a wrinkle about the latest fashions from their elegant costume.

THE LARGEST-SIZED TURKEY SPONGE.—The SULTAN.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH AT THE LORD MAYOR'S DINNER.

THE Show was over. The Procession had made its tour of the City and got to Westminster, picked up the Judges, and returned by way of the Thames Embankment. The City Marshal had pranced on his fiery untamed steed through the ancient street of Fleet, and the gilt gingerbread coach (very full inside) had jolted past the St. Stephen's Club and the site of the New National Opera House without an accident. The trumpeters, in jack boots and velvet caps, had flourished their loudest flourish, and the principal guests had been cheered by the other guests, and all was joy, cold viands and hot turtle-soup—thick and clear.

Mr. Punch, having only consented to be present at the Banquet on the understanding that his incognito should be strictly respected, was seated at one of the lower tables, with a Common Councilman on one side of him, and a gentleman in a Yeomanry uniform—fearfully and wonderfully made—on the other. He was weary of the talk of his neighbours. The first had given him a tedious history of all the less noted pumps in the City of London, and the second had shown him (with the aid of some walnuts, a pair of crackers, and a desert-spoon) how Putney might be saved from the hoof of the ruthless invader, in the event of the Germans taking Herne Bay by a coup de main. Mr. Punch listened with the amiable politeness for which he is famed all the world over, and was turning round to suggest that, perhaps, 85 Fleet Street might be of some service as a rifle-pit (Mr. Punch's military knowledge is sound, as far as it goes, if limited), when he noticed that, in the place of the warlike Yeoman, was seated a lady of most prepossessing appearance. She was dressed in white, and carried in her hand a small mirror.

"My dear Mr. Punch," she said, smiling, as her neighbour gazed upon her with a broad stare of astonishment, "you are surprised to see me here?"

"Very much indeed," replied Mr. Punch, bluntly.

"As one of my oldest, dearest, and firmest friends," she continued, "I will tell you why I have come. I want to make the speakers to-night talk frankly. In my presence they dare not be guilty of deceit. While they are smiling and attempting to conceal their thoughts, you and I will be listening to the Truth. You know who I am?"

"May I be shot if I do!" replied Mr. Punch, again very bluntly.

"Look at this mirror!" Mr. Punch looked, and saw a very handsome, clever man—it was the reflection of his own face. "Yes, I see you have guessed my name now—I am Truth; and for the last thirty-four years I have been near your desk, to guide your pen and point your pencil. And here we meet at the LORD MAYOR'S Banquet! What do you think of that?"

"That you are out of place," returned Mr. Punch.

"Quite so. It is the first time I have had anything to do with after-dinner speeches, and very likely it will be the last. But hush! There is the LORD MAYOR proposing the health of the QUEEN.

And very pleasantly did the LORD MAYOR perform the duty. In the presence of Truth he could only praise HER MAJESTY. His speech indeed would have been perfect had he omitted the last two or three sentences, which seemed to be forced from him against his will:—

"I am very much pleased to be Lord Mayor," said he; "and before my predecessor was out of office I took care to put myself en évidence by explaining that, out of respect to MR. ALDERMAN STONE, I could not take part in any public ceremony. The QUEEN is the fountain of honour, and certain Representatives of Foreign States are still permitted to go to Court. I am sure you will be delighted to learn that, in future, people admitted to the Palace will not be allowed to dine in the Guild Hall. The Crown I admit is the Fountain of Honour, but is not the LORD MAYOR something more—is he not the Chief Cook of Dignity?"

"Really," said Mr. Punch to his neighbour, "I think these remarks very mal à propos."

"I made him say that," replied Truth, with a smile. "But listen to that Distinguished Officer returning thanks for the Army."

Said the Distinguished Officer: "You do not deserve much praise from us. We know perfectly well that you scrutinise every item of the Army Estimates. Still, I must say something civil, and so I allude to the City Train Bands. I think they must have been, as a body of men, nearly as useless as the Volunteers. I believe they have a large drill-ground somewhere near Finsbury Circus. I hear you have been squabbling about it. All I can say is, squabble as much as you please, but don't bother us with your complaints. These remarks are local, but I will add one of general interest. Recruiting is still very unsatisfactory. The young men we wish to draw into the Service consider the Army a disgraceful calling. Under these circumstances, it is most important that we should treat the livery of Her Majesty with the greatest possible respect; that soldiers should be taught that the red coat is the most honourable of costumes. Accordingly, we have ordered two officers to wear their uniforms, as a punishment, for the space of a year; and may,

Digitized by Google

HUNTING PROSPECTS FOR 1875.

(NECESSARY PRECAUTION.)

PATERFAMILIAS PROVIDES HIMSELF AND SONS WITH THE PATENT LIFE SAVING AND SWIMMING COLLARS FOR THEIR FIRST DAY IN THE MIDLANDS.

some day, send all the old tunics, returned into store under the new regulations, to Pentonville and Dartmoor, to be re-issued as convict-clothing.

"Surely he did not mean to say that!" whispered Mr. Punch.

"I don't think he did," replied Truth; "but I put it into his mouth. Silence! here come the thanks for the Navy."

An official in a richly embroidered coat was now addressing the company:—

"The Army is not so popular in this great city as the Navy, for the simple reason that Commerce requires ships, and not regiments. Were England invaded, your hearts and pockets would be equally touched. It is only right therefore to tell you that you have been wasting millions upon Ironclads that run into one another and sink on the smallest provocation. You will be consoled to learn, however, that their loss is of comparative unimportance, as they are out of date, and have long been unable to perform those duties for which they were originally constructed. As to that unlucky Slavery Circular—it wasn't our doing, but those blundering fellows' at the Foreign Office, and they ought to be made answerable for it. I speak for my brothers of the Admiralty, and can honestly say that the Board is a most united one—a perfect happy family. Vanguards may sink, Mistletoes may be run down, but Patronage will go on for ever. These are my sentiments, and I think I may add are the sentiments of every true-hearted sailor and long-headed civilian who passes his leisure hours in the Admiralty, Whitehall, near Charing Cross, S.W."

"Eh," cried Mr. Punch, "surely that is a very painful confession."

"Great is the power of Truth," replied his fair companion. "But listen, here comes the speech of the evening."

A well-known Statesman was on his legs.

"In the absence," said he, "of one more worthy to occupy the place I fill, I return you hollow thanks for those hearty after-dinner cheers. The traditional policy of a Tory Cabinet is well-known to all of you. A Conservative Ministry is supposed to be jealous of the national honour, to be the mouthpiece of all that is good and stable in the land. Since we have been in power we have found our Foreign policy laughed to scorn. Turkey no longer looks up to us as a guide and authority. Russia does precisely what she pleases. Considering that the latter country is making great strides towards our Indian frontier, we can scarcely repeat the boast that we are an Asiatic Power of the first magnitude. For all that, we have still a certain amount of influence on the West Coast of Africa. This influence may fade away, and when it does we doubtless shall be able to introduce civilisation into New Guinea and the countries lying adjacent to the North Pole. Thus the power of England will always be in the ascendant. That we are the mouthpiece of the People must be very apparent to you. The Nation told us to bring in a Merchant Shipping Bill, after we had rejected the measure, and we brought one in. The Nation told us that we had issued a disgraceful Circular about Fugitive Slaves, and the disgraceful Circular was withdrawn. The Nation tells us that we are a mistake, and we do not say no. Our opinion of one another, on the contrary, coincides strangely with the opinion of the Nation. However, here we are at the Lord Mayor's Dinner, and now is the time for hiding the truth under a bushel of big words, and smothering plain sense, as far as we can, with ornamental nonsense."

The applause that followed this strange address was so hearty that Mr. Punch turned round to Truth to inquire the cause of the enthusiasm. His fair neighbour had vanished, and in her stead was the Yeomanry officer.

"You have been snoring, Sir," said the warrior. "We could scarcely hear that gentleman proposing the toast of the 'Ladies.'"

"And who will return thanks for them?" asked Mr. Punch.

"Perhaps ——," and then the Yeoman mentioned the name of a very great Statesman indeed.

"Why should he return thanks for the Ladies?" again inquired Mr. Punch.

He heard the voice of Truth—invisible as she had made herself—for the last time, "Because, my dear Sir, the Right Honourable Gentleman is the most egregious old woman they can find in the Egyptian Hall!"

Digitized by Google

THE HOUSE AND THE HOME;

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, ESQ., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

I HAVE but few hints left to make on the subject of furnishing. Already I see an improvement, and I look around me with pride at the first improvement which I recognise as the genuine results of my labour, and as so many steps in a right direction. The right direction being, of course, towards the shops where, by arrangement with the proprietors, I can choose anything for anybody.

Glass is an important item in furniture: as my old friend HERR JOSEPH MÜLLER observes, "Glass offers matter for reflection."

Glass ceilings are amusing, because you can see yourself as others do not see you; i.e. walking on your head.

In drinking-glasses two things alone have to be considered, quality and quantity; and these have more to do with what you put into them, than what you are likely to get out of them.

But a dinner-giver should get a good deal out of glass. New shapes will be supplied by our Artist, as for instance—

THE COCKED HAT AND FEATHER GLASS. (For a Military Dinner.)

THE TARPAULIN AND STREAMER RIBAND GLASS. (For a Naval Dinner.)

THE SARDANAPALUS CHAMPAGNE GLASS.

THE MITRE TUMBLER. (For Ecclesiastical Dinners.)

THE JOCKEY CAP AND PERSUADERS GLASS.

The last shape, in china, would make a handy coffee or tea-cup. But for designs let inquirers send to me, and I shall be happy to furnish them myself.

With a few useful remarks on jewellery and modern dress, I propose to conclude for the present a subject which is interesting to all, from the peasant to the prince, from the penny to the sovereign.

(To be continued.)

THE HON. AND REV. FRANCISCO FARRYSEE TO MR. PUNCH.

Eve of Saint Phylax.

REVEREND SIR,

IT is with much diffidence I write, having failed to receive any acknowledgment in any one of the daily journals to which I have applied for publication, but I feel there is deep significance beneath the motley garments in which you are depicted, and it is this which gives me courage to address you.

I am one of those ministering martyrs who believe that the beauties of the soul must be represented to erring sinners by the glory of the garments we wear.

Are we not told to consider the lilies of the field? Am I not right then in appearing before my congregation in the nearest approach to imitation of Nature's hues that Art and workmanship can devise? They toil not, neither do they spin. Therefore I appeal to all my Christian sisters to devote a portion of the day to albs and dalmatics for my use.

Rome decrees that feasts and fasts should have their various colours. I adore all that issues from Rome, though pecuniary circumstances prevent me from accepting every sacrifice, and martyrs have no right to elude the struggles their conscience has commenced; but I opine that we should clothe our bodies in the colours which illustrate the spirit prevailing in us at the time. Thus: Tulips, yellow and purple, on a red ground—noble pride. Lilies on amber and gold—purity of purpose. Gardenia on blue—odour of sanctity.

Would that I could persuade my brethren to assist me in this noble enterprise! Would that all who hear me would be persuaded that religion is nothing without embroidery; tenets futile without vestments.

Fools and sceptics point the finger of scorn at me, and say, "Look after your poor. Cleanse the inside of the platter." My dear friend, would my congregation be a tithe of what it is, if the eye were not fed with constant variety of form and colour? Every sister wonders as she takes her seat what my state of soul is going to be. Shall I wear Tulips on a red dalmatic, or Jonquils on a silver stole? She sees my vestments, and in them reads her ministering priest's spiritual mood.

There is much controversy going on in the Press about subjects which are as nothing compared with this. Several of the sweetest shades of religious temperament are still unfurnished with their corresponding robes. I appeal again, through your powerful columns, to my beloved sisters. May their needles point the way to perfect happiness!

FRANCISCO FARRYSEE,
Incumbent of Saint Wistoria.

P.S.—I fear you have no space for an exhaustive exposition of my faith; indeed, in moments of discouragement, I doubt whether you will aid the good work by printing my letter. If I see this in type, I shall wear Sunflowers and Dahlias—modest exultation; if not, Snowdrops and Violets—resignation under adverse circumstances.

F. F.

IMPOSITION ON IMPOSTORS.

COLONEL SCHENCK, the American Minister, has communicated, from the United States Legation, to the newspapers, an exposure of a fraud practised in this country by certain persons in selling degrees and diplomas purporting to be conferred by American colleges and universities so-called; notably by the "Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery," and the "Livingstone University of America," of which there are professed agencies in London and elsewhere, whereas no such institutions exist. Who does not sympathise with COLONEL SCHENK in the feeling which moves a gentleman to try and frustrate the practices of rogues? Yet who at the same time does not feel that, whilst those rogues, the vendors of bogus titles, deserve imprisonment and hard labour, those other rogues, but also fools, their customers, the would-be buyers of distinctions which, if veritable bargains, would be lying testimonials, deserve at least to lose their money.

From St. Paul's Churchyard.

According to the Graphic, a Danish Lutheran Church was consecrated last month at Newcastle-on-Tyne by the Dean of Copenhagen, DR. FOG.

In a city	You can see it—
Near home	When fine:
There 's a church	DR. FOG
With a dome,	Would have been
SIR C. WREN'S	That church's
The design,	Fit Dean.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH TO THE LORD MAYOR GREETING!

ALVE, my LORD MAYOR! In convivial session,
Punch has seen pass your annual procession;
The City Marshal, on the worst of nags,
Leading the City guilds, whose gorgeous flags
Have made the ancient street of Fleet alive,
And caused a joke or two at Eighty-Five,
Whose wit, no great ones, howe'er gorgeous, spares—
Sultans or Shahs, Khedivès, Czars, or Mayors.

The gaudy pageant has passed Temple Bar:
Punch stirs his fire and lights a fresh cigar,
And ponders over London. How it grows,
This City flushed with luxuries, vexed with woes!
Is it to be a town, for many a day,
"Where wealth accumulates and men decay"?
Epicure Mammon in BEN JONSON'S time
Had scarcely reached our gorgeous heights sublime:
Now he rides rampant, and his splendid dinners
Have magnetising force for saints and sinners.
Who can resist the haunch, the hot-house pine,
The perfect menu, the long-cellared wine?
The company befits the bill of fare:
You meet Wit, Beauty, Rank, and Fashion there.
A prima donna comes, no singer sweeter:
And Mammon's Rector is right glad to meet her.

And all the while, in many a London hovel,
What myriads of the dangerous classes grovel!
No hope in this world of less load of care,
No knowledge of a happier world elsewhere.
Philosophy, with scientific lens,
Looks on the inmates of those dreary dens,
Finds that the poor existed long ago,
And smirking says, "It always must be so."

Now, LORD MAYOR COTTON, there's a chance for you;
Your race has always been both brave and true.
Your ancient motto,* which in verse won't scan,
Announces you a proper type of man.
The life of fashion, the disdain of fear,
Brought to the front that haughty Cavalier,
WELLINGTON'S friend, the daring COMBERMERE.
Another COTTON, Admiral complete,
In Tagus river seized a Russian fleet.
Earlier, SIR ROBERT, in rare learning dipt,
Collected many a priceless manuscript,
And, with a princely scholar's generous will,
Gave to the people fruit of wealth and skill.

* "In utraque fortuna paratus."—Motto of Cotton.

Noblesse oblige! The claims of such a race
Will make you bolder in your civic place:
Besides you are a poet. Very odd:
Punch knew it not till he referred to *Dod.
Put poetry in practice, dear LORD MAYOR:
Already you have somewhat cleared the air—
See Punch's last Cartoon in every street—
Drawing the line 'twixt honest man and cheat.
Go on as bravely as you have begun,
And when your year of civic power is done,
Punch will give London's and all England's thanks
To him whose shield bears the three Cotton hanks,
And hail the falcon in your ancient crest,
The City's scourer of a vermin-pest.

* "Has written poems."—Dod, p. 190.

EDUCATION AND CRIME.

MR. PUNCH, SIR,

ALTHOUGH the necessity of living, combined with impatience of industry, has compelled me to pursue illicit courses, I am enabled, by having had the advantage of instruction, to read the Times, and you. Your contemporary, the other day, published a report, more interesting than agreeable, to me at least, on the "Employment of Convicts." It contains the following particularly unpleasant suggestion:—

"The chaplain of Pentonville Prison suggests that there should be assigned to convicts what he calls the unsavoury occupation of diverting sewage from your rivers, and utilising it for manure."

Diverting sewage, indeed! A high diversion, no doubt, for the Reverend gentleman, situated to the windward of a member of his flock engaged in it, to contemplate. An occupation truly unsavoury, and equally laborious. I cannot but admire the ingenuity of this aggravation—not to say refinement—of punishment. There is, however, another service imposed upon gentlemen in seclusion, of which, regarded as a penal infliction, the annoyance is really refined. In some of the principal Government Prisons, besides hammocks made for the Royal Navy and mail-bags for the Post-Office—

"Clothes are made by convicts for the Police."

The pain of being thus obliged unwillingly to work is enhanced by a sting of studied acuteness craftily envenomed, mental, and nicely calculated to hurt the feelings. To what toil could a convict be doomed more bitter than the task of making clothes for the Police? Only one, Mr. Punch, that—under sentence for robbery with violence—of having to manufacture cats-o'-nine-tails.

It is with mingled feelings of approval and apprehension that I transcribe a passage of a nature slightly personal:—

"It may surprise many to learn from this year's report of the Chaplain of Dartmoor Prison, that ninety-five of the prisoners have, since their confinement there, studied and made considerable progress in the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Latin languages. The Chaplain of Portland Prison states that some of the educated prisoners are among the most difficult to deal with, for their superiority in some respects to the general class leads them to resent the application to themselves of some of the prison rules; and it has been found to check the tendency to a morose, sullen, and insubordinate spirit if a little ambition to revive former studies can be created, or if a man can be induced to employ himself after the labours of the day are over, in enlarging his knowledge by the pursuit of some particular subject."

In the too probable event of my getting into trouble, I trust I may experience the kindly discipline of Dartmoor, where penal servitude appears to consist very much in literary occupation. Should my place of detention be Portland, the difficulty of dealing with me will, I am sure, be much simplified by treating me in the considerate manner suggested by the Chaplain of that Institution, making the "labours of the day" as light as possible, and never subjecting me to the cruel indignity of being utilised as a tailor to the Police, slavery which I should feel to be infinitely more disgusting even than employment in the "diversion" of sewage.

With every apology for trespassing on your valuable space, I remain,

Your habitual Reader,
JIM THE PENMAN.

Swag Lane, Faker Street, Feast of S. Guy.

Not Quite the Cheese.

(Re Jenkins v. Cook, Arches Court.)

Μὴ δίλογοι let Deacons be,
A Bishop no impostor;
And yet upon the Bench we see
Δίγλωσσος—double G———R.

Digitized by Google

A HAPPY THOUGHT THAT NEVER OCCURRED.

Mother (in continuation). "AND SO THE WICKED PHARAOH ORDERED THAT ALL THE BABY-BOYS SHOULD BE KILLED——"
Madeleine. "BUT, MAMMA! DIDN'T ANY OF THEIR MOTHERS SAY THEY WAS GIRLS?"

THE WEDDING OF LAW AND EQUITY.

"This first of November England witnesses the union of Law and Equity."—Times.

UNION of Equity and Law!
Who such a union ever saw?
Such fusion must confusion mean!
Can no Queen's Proctor intervene,
Show the plan, ere 'tis born, miscarried—
Being divorced, they can't be married.

This happy union, people say,
Was fitly fixed for All Saints' Day.
Ye warriors of the Devil's Own,
Was such a blunder ever known?
Ye who in Hall eat legal dinners,
Is there no feast that's named All Sinners?

Picture the bridal! Bridegroom gruff,
Made of the very sternest stuff:
No smile o'er that grim visage flits;
His wedding coat is lined with writs.
His honeymoon, no doubt, he fain
Would spend in happy Chancery Lane.

But O sweet Equity, the bride!
A creature to be deified—
With perfect justice in her eye,
She cannot cheat, she cannot lie:
Behold her, dressed in virgin white,
An angel of serene delight.

They're wedded! Wonders never cease:
War in due time will marry Peace;
To seek a husband Truth will range,
And find him on the Stock Exchange;
Religion, jilting Controversy—
Her follower long—will wed with Mercy.

When Law and Equity receive
Their guests, one hardly can believe
That he, of tyrants quite the sternest,
Will take her counsel in good earnest.
But Punch the union won't disparage,
And drinks their long and happy marriage.

MOURNING AND GRIEF.

AS a Reformer, MR. GLADSTONE is a little behind MR. BRIGHT with regard to a social question whereon the latter statesman is thorough. Hear our WILLIAM, however, on "Funeral Reform." He thus answers a Correspondent:—

"Hawarden, Oct. 29, 1875.

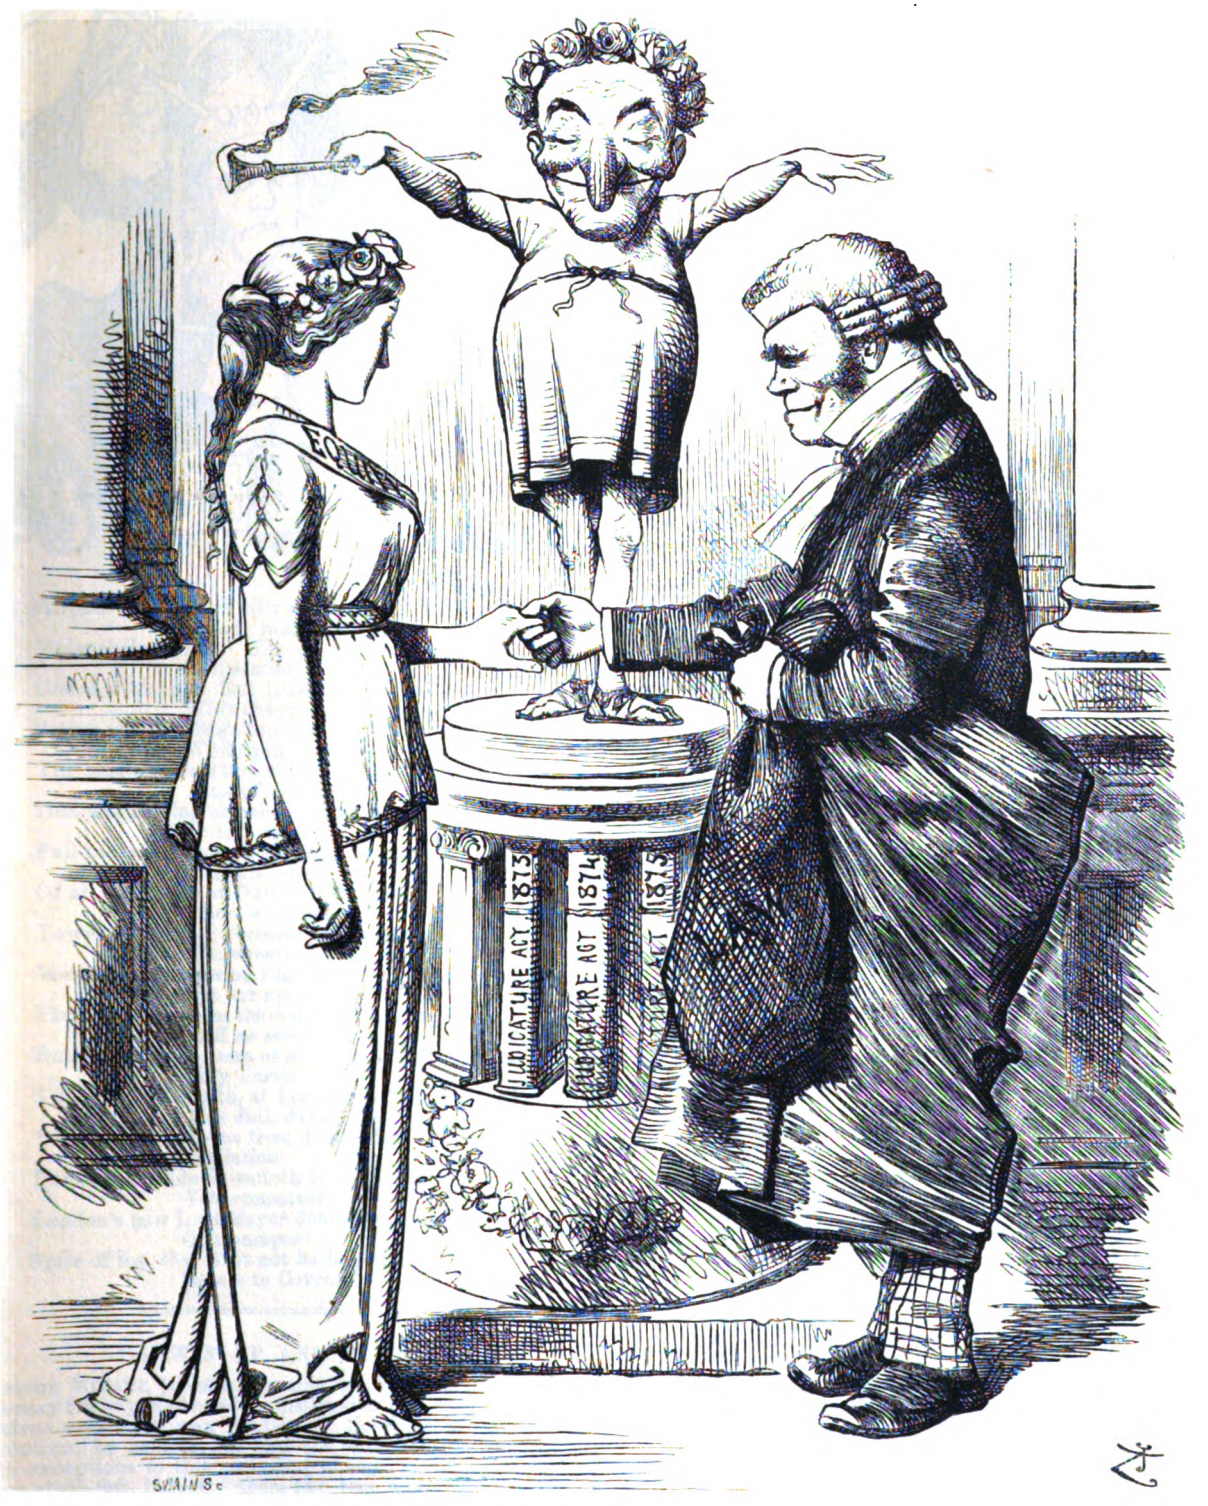
"SIR,—I thank you for your communication, and, though unable to concur with you in the opinion that the wearing of mourning ought to be abandoned, I concur in much that you have said, and think the whole subject requires to be gravely considered by this country.



"Your faithful servant,
"W. E. GLADSTONE."

Will not WILLIAM, on further reflection, see that mourning might be advantageously abandoned by influential and independent parties who can afford the expense of it, for the relief of those who cannot, and at the same time cannot afford to ignore MRS. GRUNDY? "Mourning" always aggravates grief, unless the mourners are wealthy, or ladies whom it becomes. It is especially grievous when it has to be worn by survivors for a relation who has left them no money. The whole subject of the haberdashery pertaining to funerals requires, as MR. GLADSTONE says, to be gravely considered. Levity in the consideration of a subject so grave strikes us as unbecoming. Is our WILLIAM also among the punsters?

CONDITIONAL CON.

WHAT class of Officers in the British Army will the Turkish Bondholders be like? Those on half-pay—if they get it.

Digitized by Google

SETTLED AT LAST!

HYMEN. "BLESS YOU, MY CHILDREN! YOU HAVEN'T 'MARRIED IN HASTE·' THE LESS LIKELY TO 'REPENT AT LEISURE'!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

NOTES FOR NOVEMBER.

IRKEST Month of all the changeful dozen,
Night's first cousin!
Nature's Nemesis upon the City!
What a pity
Mortals cannot hibernate a little!
Not a tittle
Would be lost by sleeping through your thirty
Days so dirty.
For you noon is dim as most midnight is;
And bronchitis,
Fogs and fireworks, civic feeds, and folly,
Are not jolly.
We could spare from out the Season's summary
FAUX and flummery,
Sulphury fumes and silly speeches part with
A light heart with,
Melancholy month! Throughout Creation
Obfuscation
Comes with you. But London chiefly suffers:
Wit's sharp snuffers
Scarce can trim life's taper to bright burning,
While you 're churning
The breathing mixture called, by touch satiric,
Atmospheric!—
Into a something nameless, which so dense is Human senses
Fail beneath its vague and vast oppression.
'Tis full session
Of all the Incubi of Dulness. Dismal
Black, abysmal,
Yawns the gulf of Boredom now beneath us.
O to wreathe us
With sprays of Spring time, or June's joyous roses!
But our noses,
Finger-fended from the fog's foul flavour,
Sniff no savour
But what smells more of soot-bag than of myrtle!
Only Turtle
Thick and clear both, at Lord Mayor's Civic banquet
This dull, dank, wet,
Dirty month redeems from detestation.
Jubilation
For aught beside ill-suiteth grim November!
Yet, remember,
London's new Lord Mayor demands a thumper
Of a bumper!
Spite of fog, that must not be forgotten.
Here 's to COTTON!

DARWIN UP AND DOWN.

PROFESSOR MIVART, the other evening, at the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, delivered an instructive lecture on the subject of ourselves and "our poor relations." Speaking of development and evolution, he pointed out that the animal kingdom presents "certain exceptions to this ascending change." Amongst reptiles and some shell-fish, indeed, "there had been a process of degradation rather than of advancement," especially observable in the lobster and shrimp group. He might have added the oyster—except, indeed, as regards price, in which there has been an advancement too rapid and too high to be pleasant.

"Of late, however, there had been a tendency to extend the zoological area over which degradation was supposed to have taken place. If this view met with acceptance, it was difficult to see where it was to stop; indeed, it might bring our ape friends again before us in a new light, for hereafter some one might profess to find in them not the rude ancestors, but the degraded descendants, of early man."

Hereat there was, of course, "a laugh." It is much better fun to imagine that other people, once on a parity with our ancestors, degenerated from humanity into apehood, than to suppose that we are the descendants of apes. Britons also may complacently regard much in the manners, customs, and conduct—including, they consider, numerous monkeys' tricks—of foreign nations as indicating a process of undevelopment still going on amongst some of our neighbours. As for ourselves, however, let us confidently hope—if we cannot exactly assert—that a daily increasing height of moral aim, and preference of the sublime and beautiful to the ignoble and the grotesque in literature and art, demonstrate us manifestly to be on the rise, and tending, not downwards towards the Ape, but (with MR. DISRAELI) upwards to the Angel.

"RETIRE YOUR MEN, SIR!"

THE premature publication of the proposed Army Retirement scheme in the London papers having caused much confusion in military circles, Mr. Punch thinks it right to issue a plan of his own, founded upon precedents that have been for years recognised both in the War Office and at the Horse Guards.

RETIREMENT.

W. O. Circular, 01,423. Horse Guards, Nov. 5, 1875.

In future, Buglers will be kept on the strength of their regiments for two years. At the end of that time, if they are found to be efficient, they will be discharged, unless (in the interim) they have been promoted to the rank of Sergeant-Majors unattached. If a Bugler at the end of two years' service is found incapable of sounding a single call, he will be kept on the strength of his regiment for a further term of two years. After he has completed four years' service, however, he will be compulsorily retired on a pension of five pence a day, or a lump sum of £1 3*s.* 7½*d.*

Subalterns, having learned their drill, will be compulsorily retired, to make room for subalterns who have still their drill to learn.

Captains who have passed the Staff College will be offered a brevet step and 5*s.* a day. Commutation, £150.

Majors having completed twenty years' service will be ordered to retire on the uniform of a Lieutenant-Colonel and £135 a year. On availing themselves of the privilege of wearing "mufti," they will be deprived of their pensions.

Lieutenant-Colonels with twenty-five years' service (fifteen of which have been spent before the enemy) will be ordered to give up their commands, to make room for untried men. Lieutenant-Colonels so retired will have the right to wear their medals, clasps, and other decorations, at flower shows, agricultural meetings, and private evening parties.

Generals, Field-Marshals, and officers of all ranks who have reached the age of seventy-five, will not be called upon to retire, but will remain in the posts they occupied prior to the Abolition of the purchase system, until severally recommended for further promotion.

By Order of Mr. Punch.

(Signed) TOBY.
Civil Military Secretary.

AN OMISSION SUPPLIED.

AULD REEKIE'S Duchess, hard on Hallowe'en,
Presents another Grandchild to the QUEEN,
Whose Grandchildren, if truth reporters score,
The new-born PRINCESS brings to twenty-four.
So many hours, observe, the day contains,
Coincidence remarked by men of brains.
Ye wise, proclaim it while you can, for who
Can tell how long it will continue true?
How soon the moment may, or not, arrive,
When twenty-four will rise to twenty-five?
Heaven grant HER MAJESTY a reign to see
The number grow as great as it can be
And still her children's children keep in view,
As they to children old add children new!
The strains foregoing are the sort of thing
A Laureate, on occasion, ought to sing.
All well Arthurian poems to indite,
And turn out idylls, in the Isle of Wight;
But, from the wearer of official bays,
Events auspicious ask appropriate lays.
Behold the way to build the lofty rhyme,
ALFRED, do thou the like another time!

HOW TO SUPPLY ST. PAUL'S WITH BELLS AND CHIMES CHEAP.—Melt down the Canons.

Digitized by Google

LUCID!

Irish Sergeant (to Squad at Judging-Distance Drill). "NOW, YE'LL PAY THE GREATEST OF ATTINTION TO THE MAN AT EIGHT HUNDRED YAR-RDS: BECASE, IF YE CAN'T SEE 'M, YE'LL BE DECEIVED IN HIS 'APPARANCE!!"

A PROCLAMATION!

COTTON, LORD MAYOR.

BE it known, once for all and to all, that from and after the date of this current number of Punch, any joke, jest, gibe, pun, quip, crank, or waggery, offered as a voluntary contribution, and fondly intended for publication, answering to the description hereinafter contained, will be treated in the manner hereunder set forth, any statute, ordinance, institute, enactment, or encouragement and approbation of deluded and deluding fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, wives, sweethearts, and friends to the contrary notwithstanding.

Any written communication, designed for a joke on Threadneedle Street, in connection with the surname of the LORD MAYOR, will be instantly torn into ten thousand (more or less) fragments.

Any contribution which, on being opened by one of Mr. Punch's private secretaries, shall disclose at the first glance such expressions or phrases as "cotton to" "dropping the thread of his discourse," "winding his way," "wound up his speech," and the like, will, without a moment's hesitation or delay, be thrown contumeliously into the waste-paper basket.

Any piece of paper bearing on its surface, in characters inscribed either in ink or pencil, a suggestion to the effect that the LORD MAYOR, on those public occasions when he has to return numerous salutations, will have to go through a great deal of bowing and bobbin', will be forthwith flung contemptuously into the office grate.

Any note, letter, or other missive, whether with or without an envelope, proposing that, for the year 1875-6, the name of Cottonopolis should be transferred from the City of Manchester to the City of London, will be twisted up into the form and shape of a spill, and used as an instrument for lighting a pipe or kindling a cigar.

Any person being so misguided as to allude to the possibility of the LORD MAYOR giving a Cotton Ball, and plunging still deeper into crime by associating reels with an entertainment of this description, will, if he can be traced, be handed over to the proper authorities, to be dealt with as the Supreme Court of Judicature may direct.

And, generally, any correspondence which may have for its object the establishment of a playful connection between a soft white vegetable substance, largely imported into this country from America and India, and the name of the LORD MAYOR, will be zealously guarded from all other eyes but those of the butterman and his customers.

PUNCH.

85, Fleet Street,
Lord Mayor's Day, 1875.

N.B. The foregoing proclamation is to be construed as applicable in its main purport—the discouragement of unseemly jesting on the names of great civic dignitaries and the diminution of Mr. Punch's correspondence—to MR. ALDERMAN and SHERIFF KNIGHT. It seems hardly possible that the most disordered imagination, the most perverted ingenuity, can extract any material for its nefarious practices from the name of MR. SHERIFF BREFFITT; but time and the post will show. Mr. Punch knows only too well what human nature is capable of daring.

Sors Horatiana.

(On the PRINCE'S Visit to India.)

"SERVES iturum Principem in ultimos
Orbis Britannos, et juvenum recens
Examen, Eois timendum
Partibus, Oceanóque Rubro."
Carm., lib. i. 36.

L'Entente Cordiale.

THE delightful sympathy between England and France has another illustration in the all but contemporaneous loss of the Vanguard and the Magenta. What charming reciprocity! Let both countries rejoice until the bills are sent in.

Digitized by Google

OTHER PEOPLE'S HOBBIES.

Mr. Jones. "WHAT A WONDERFUL COLLECTION OF WALKING-STICKS, MR. BROWN!"

Mr. Brown. "WELL—YES! THERE ARE NINETY-SIX OF THEM. AND WHAT MAKES THE COLLECTION REALLY INTERESTING IS THAT EVERY ONE OF THEM HAS A HISTORY. TAKE THIS ONE, FOR INSTANCE—LABELLED No. 1. IN 1837 I HAPPENED TO BE——"

[Mr. Jones suddenly recollects he has a Train to catch, and bids a hasty farewell.

CURSING AND SWEARING.

WE know that good Society has now for some time relinquished the bad habit of cursing and swearing. So, SIR GEORGE BOWYER maintains, has the Roman Catholic Church—although he cannot deny that, at one time, it cursed as terribly as ever the British Protestant troops swore in Flanders. On All Saints' Day the Defender of the Ultramontane Faith appropriately communicated the following explanation to the Times:—

"Sir,—In answer to your Correspondents of to-day, I will only say that I did not assert that curses had been never used in the fulmination of excommunications. But I assert that curses are no essential part of excommunication, for it is defined by the Canonists simply as a communione exclusio."

Just so. Curses, in excommunication, as well as in common talk, are unnecessary. Excommunication, in its ultimate effect, means all that can be expressed in the strongest language. Going into detail from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, with a special malison on each of the intervening organs, is simply superfluous. Ecclesiastics, like other gentlemen, have discontinued the use of vulgar expletives. It is now only the coarser portion of the populace who are accustomed to utter imprecations on the organs of sight, the circulating fluid, and the members of those who displease them. The declaration added to the foregoing statement will perhaps be frankly accepted by MR. NEWDEGATE, or even by MR. WHALLEY himself:—

"I assert that those old forms are either abrogated or obsolete. Our present POPE repealed a great number of old excommunications, and, among others, the Bull of POPE CLEMENT excommunicating Protestants."

Had not this Bull, however, practically repealed itself? What was the use of a Bull to excommunicate persons who were never in communion? A Pontifical Bull which had come to be as it were a capital sentence on dead men had surely degenerated into a Bull of the Irish species.

However, it is some news to hear from SIR GEORGE BOWYER that the POPE has repealed Bulls. If present Infallibility can allow itself to repeal bygone Infallibility's Bulls, there is no saying to what rational conclusions future Infallibility, guided by Common Sense, may not one of these days find it possible to arrive. In the meanwhile, let us allow all due weight to the assurance that, in "the fulmination of excommunications," unparliamentary language is now unusual, if not uncanonical.

A FUNERAL ANTI-REFORMER.

(Sings.)

WEN we 'ears the knell a tollin'
Wile the 'earse along is rollin'
To the Parties 'ow condolin';

Slow and solemn, wilst in others,
Wakenin' feelings wot they smothers;
Yourn and mine, beloved brothers,

In our melancholy duty,
Mindin' us 'ow rich and fruity
Black jobs is in gain and booty.

But there is a agitation
For mean burials, and "cremation,"
'Orstile to our havocation.

BRIGHT advises people turnin'
"Friends" he calls 'em, as to mournin';
Not a rag the bier adornin'.

Nare a mute, nor wand, nor weeper,
All in plain clothes, nothink deeper,
For to make interment cheaper.

"Friends," and all the world not show to
Due respect deceased they owe to!
Where do they expect to go to?

Then there's Clergy a combinin'
In a resolution jinin',
'Atbands, scarves, and gloves declinin'.

Funeral show sitch check at Sutton,
Maidstone, Kent, they've been and put on,
From our mouths to snatch the mutton:

Sich you might expect of Quakers—
But the Church, to back the makers
Of a war on undertakers!

Also there's the leadin' papers,
For the shabby funeral-scrapers,
Foes to we and to the drapers.

Wot will then be our condition,
Stopped from funeral exhibition,
In the day of abolition?

To the knell of the departed,
In their plumeless 'earses carted,
We should 'earken 'eavy 'earted.

Not, as now, with innard gladness,
In the decent garb of sadness—
No more—that there way lies madness!

Change may come, by slow degrees on.
But, in their bereavement's season,
Folks is deaf to stingy reason.

In their rooted inclination
For funereal hostentation,
Dead agin all reformation,
Long will yet lay our salvation.

WHICH Jewel does Russia hope to add to her Crown? Turk wars or an Oriental Purl?

Digitized by Google

"Vaticana bibis, bibis venenum."
MARTIAL. Epig. lib. vi. 92.

"GLADSTONE'S CLARET."

LORD MAYOR'S DAY AS IT MIGHT BE.

(Extracted by Clairvoyance from the City Chronicle, A.D. 1975.)

WE often hear remarks about the wisdom of our ancestors, yet we are not seldom filled with pity when we patiently reflect upon the follies of our forefathers, such, for instance, as they perpetrated in their foolish Lord Mayor's Show. How vast is the improvement since a hundred years ago! Who would ever dream now of stopping for some hours the whole traffic of the City, that stupid simpletons might stare at a stupid, senseless show? And who would dream of sitting squeezed and sweltering at what was called a "banquet," where, after scrambling for some soup and a slice of lukewarm mutton (christened "venison" in the menu), you were doomed to sit half-stifled and to listen to dull speeches which you vainly tried to catch?

But, now that women have their rights, and the Lady Mayoress reigns as Empress of the City, how much altered for the better are our old Civic ceremonials, since they have been confided to the care of the fair sex! In lieu of gingerbread state coaches, and men in pasteboard armour, and tawdry flags and trappings, which of old were suffered to impede the traffic of the City, and attracted crowds of idlers to be plundered by the pickpockets and pommelled by the roughs,—in place of this tomfoolery which was termed the Lord Mayor's show, what is it that now constitutes the principal attraction of our Lady Mayoress's Day? Let us briefly chronicle a part of what occurs.

The happy day is welcomed by a peal of merry laughter from the mouths of the Bow belles, who attend as maids in waiting on the Lady Mayoress, and are all a-Gog (and Magog) for the Show. They proceed to deck her Ladyship in her official robes, and scatter roses in her path as she proceeds to the Guild Hall. Here the Show of Civic Beauty is annually held, and the prettiest girls in London are arranged for exhibition, previous to their reception and appearance at the Ball. On the entrance of her Ladyship, the band strikes up "See the Conquering Charmer Comes!" and the young ladies all drop curtseys, and present bouquets. In order to prevent blushes, as well as scrambles for admission, the Show is strictly private, and no unmarried reporter is permitted to intrude.

To satisfy the Public, a few photographs, however, are suffered to be taken, and these are sold by auction, and the various civic charities share the proceeds of the sale.

After the Show, the Lady Mayoress entertains the fair assemblage at an elegant repast of sugarplums and sweeties, whereat their partners are by courtesy invited to assist, on production of certificates (signed by a Court Dancing-Master) that they are chatty in square dances, as well as active and untiring in a galop or a valse. None but known good dancers are suffered to obtain an entrance to the ball-room, and all chaperones and wallflowers are most rigidly excluded. Dancing generally begins as soon as it is dark, and is kept up with ceaseless vigour until midnight; when the Lady Mayoress, being wiser than her foremothers, instead of sitting up till daybreak, bids her guests good-night.

THE INFALLIBLE TRUTH.

"WHAT is Truth?" asked PILATE,—
But that he asked in vain.
"O! what Truth is," says MANNING,
"I can soon make plain."

"Truth is this—this only—
The one Infallible Church;
Doubt, and at Day of Judgment
You 'll find you 're in the lurch."

"Ach! ist das so?" says BISMARCK.
"Your notion is not mine."
"Ten times accursed," cries MANNING;
Says BISMARCK, bravely, "Nein!"

LORD REDESDALE says, "Inform me,
And you 'll oblige me much:
What thing can be Infallible
That does not 'act as such'?"

Says MANNING: "My good gracious!
You beg the question quite.
Can't you—or won't you—understand?
Whatever 's right is Right!

"A Church divinely founded—
Is this not clear to you?—
Cannot but act divinely,
Whatever it may do.

"I hope that proposition
Has set your mind at rest?"
Says REDESDALE, very sharply,
"If it has, I am—blest!"

Powerful Peacemakers.

THE Paris Correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, the other day telegraphed as follows:—

"There are rumours to-day of a Russian Circular inviting the Powers signataries to the Treaty of Paris to a pacific intervention in the affairs of Turkey."

If the Russian Circular were a Circular Ironclad, a summons from such a pacificator, to judge by MR. REED'S account of it, would perhaps command attention.

Suggested Epitaph

(For those who fell at Balaklava).

DEATH was our end, that end was great,
And saved us from a sadder fête.

Aristocracy and Ale.

THE Hampshire Independent contains a statement that MR. BASS has declined a Peerage. If this is true, it shows the distinguished Brewer to be a supporter of whom the Government thinks no small beer; and the House of Lords has failed of a reinforcement by one more able man of business. It is whispered that the title destined for the Honourable Gentleman was that of the "EARL OF BURTON."

CHANGE OF NAME.

IN consequence of a recent decision of the Lords of the Admiralty, a distinguished sailor-officer will probably for the future change his name from TARLETON to TAR-LET-OFF.

"SIX TO ONE AND HALF-A-DOZEN TO THE OTHER."

THE SULTAN has now promised half the interest on his debts. No doubt his Word will prove as good as his Bonds.

Digitized by Google

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Operator (commencing Attack). "'HAIR'S FALLING OFF VERY FAST, SIR!"

Patient (carelessly). "Y-E-S."

Operator. "I CAN REC——"

Patient (gaily). "'GENERALLY DOES THIS TIME O' YEAR. FRESH CROP IN THE SPRING, Y' KNOW!!" (Snores.) [Operator sighs, and raises Siege.

"TELL MAMMA WE ARE HAPPY."

THE Prince is out among the Orient race,
Who must, some day,—
Remote, Punch hopes,—be subjects of his sway;
He gazes on the grey East's changeless face
In far Bombay,
And he will be, in days of undreamt wonder,
Chequered, mayhap, with War's irrational thunder,
In that far Orient earth's foremost man—
Emperor of Hindostan!

Why, what was PRESTER JOHN, a traveller's whim,
Or the Great Mogul,
To him who, from this island masterful
Goes forth to regions vague and strange and dim,
Fresh flowers to cull?
New-censused myriads humbly bow before him—
A mighty Empire, eager to adore him,
Gladly his actions and his face will scan
Who must rule Hindostan.

Simple Bombay brightly illuminates
With "Tell Mamma
That we are happy" 'neath her sceptre fair,
Whose power is felt through all the Eastern States.
The pariah
Feels beneath English rule an equal calm
With son of MAHOMET and breed of BRAHM,
And thinks of when VICTORIA'S rule began—
Empress of Hindostan.

And Hindostan is happy. Punch says "YES."
Why should it not,
So long as England's rule is strong and wise,
Have a fair share of human happiness
Beneath the skies?
And when the Prince returns from hunts and durbars,
May he have pacified all weak disturbers,
And learnt, as such a Prince on Progress can,
The worth of Hindostan.

VERY WELL DEVILLED.

MR. BULL having been very properly reproved by his wife for using bad language in connection with Turkey, has bound himself not to say anything worse of that repudiative power than "Devil take Turkey" till Christmas. After which he must use stronger language.

BURIAL IN BEDS.

WE must not believe all the world says; but the Christian World at least should speak the truth; and, if it does, the Established Church appears to be in danger of losing a valuable Clergyman. The REV. HARRY HOCKEN, Vicar of Cople, Bedfordshire, is, the Christian World says, "a fanatical member of the Ritualistic School." Ritualism is not commonly combined with logic; and the Ritualists who secede to Popery are exceptions. But—still if we may credit the Christian World—the Vicar of Cople has lately delivered himself of utterances sadly suggestive of the fear that his Ritualism is too essentially Papistical to allow the hope that he can continue much longer to hold his Protestant vicarage. The late Archidiaconal Conference at Bedford included a debate on MR. OSBORNE MORGAN'S Burial Bill. In this controversy MR. HOCKEN took part; and some of his remarks are quoted by the Christian World. They were directed principally against the REV. HUGH BLAGG SMYTH, Rector of Houghton, a previous speaker, who, in moving an unsuccessful Amendment to a Resolution denouncing the proposed measure of concession to Dissenters, "had delivered a speech admirable for its kind Christian feeling and statesmanlike moderation; but it seemed to have almost a maddening effect on MR. HOCKEN." Transcribed from out the text of the Christian World, and with only the needful grammatical changes, set simply together in the first person, the selections from the speech ascribed to that Reverend Gentleman may be read as under; it being premised that the name of "MR. HUGH BLAGG SMYTH," was "repeated contemptuously" by him "at least a score of times:"—

"I wonder how MR. BLAGG SMYTH could dare so dreadfully to violate his holy orders by introducing a motion so contrary to his profession. . . . . I am horrified at the thought that this MR. HUGH BLAGG SMYTH can be a parish priest. . . . Some ladies with whom I lunched . . . also expressed their horror at MR. HUGH BLAGG SMYTH being now a priest in the Church of England. . . . . I must enter my protest against this horrible amendment, which is so dreadfully discreditable to holy orders. . . . Such a horrible amendment would be a curse to the Church of England; and I should not be surprised if MR. HUGH BLAGG SMYTH, who would thus shake hands with the Dissenters, would not hesitate to shake hands with that horrible man who introduced that measure into Parliament, MR. OSBORNE MORGAN."

Does it not strike the reader how extremely the foregoing invective resembles that which his Holiness the POPE is accustomed to hurl at parties who have incurred his animosity? Only the Holy Father never abuses anybody by name. He always limits himself to vilifying the object of wrath by implication, or else under a pseudonym, calling him, for example, HEROD, or JUDAS, or PONTIUS PILATE. If MR. HOCKEN did really blackguard MR. HUGH BLAGG SMYTH as above, he will probably learn how to talk as a "temperate controversialist," and curse in due canonical form, very soon. Moreover, not only does he scold in a Papal style, but, in denouncing a Clergyman for shaking hands with Dissenters by concession as to the Burial Bill, he expresses an exclusiveness founded on ideas of the effect of consecration on churchyards, quite special to Romanism. Let us hope, however, that he has been misreported, and that the Church of which he is an ornament need not hopelessly make up her mind to lose him.

A Week after Marriage.

Mr. Law (angrily). But I tell you "Equity follows the Law."

Mrs. Law—formerly Miss Equity—(calmly). O, that was so before marriage; but now I am to rule.

[See Judicature Act, 1873, sec. 25 (11).

FROM THE SUBLIME TO THE RIDICULOUS.—The Porte and its promises to pay.

Digitized by Google

THE PRINCE'S VISIT TO INDIA.

(Our Own Representative at Bombay, and all over the place.)

DEAR, VERY DEAR SIR,

HERE 's local colour for you! Here we are again! I send you a picture—a mere sketch—"a poor thing, Sir, but mine own," which I knocked off on the spot. Isn't there about it a life and a go—quite a man-go—(ha! ha! Indian joke too!)—which is racy of the soil?—Yes, you won't see many illustrations so up to the time of day as this.

THE INDIAN VISIT.

MR. BLANK CALLING AND GIVING CARD TO "THE BUTLER."

The Ayah (knowing he wishes to see the Daughter of the House). "MASTER CAN'T SEE MISSEE. MISSEE IN BATH-TUB, EATUM THE MANGO FRUIT, SAR."

Of course I do not say who the Gentleman with his back to the audience is. No. Fine man, isn't he? But delicacy forbids to make any remark behind a Gentleman's back, which I would not make to his face. I mean before his face. Look at my puggaree! Look at the umbrella! There 's Local Colouring, my boy! When I told the story—which this cut illustrates—to the gallant ——th, at mess, they yelled and shouted. It went immensely. Of course I imitated the native dialect, which I can do to admiration, so if the picture seems to go a little flat, try reading the words underneath out loud. I need hardly say that directly a certain Exalted Personage, in whose company I happen to pass most of my time just now, heard it, he clapped me on the shoulder, and exclaimed, "By jove, BILLY, it 's the best thing I 've heard for years! It 's a side-splitter! It 's a screamer! Send it to Punch."

So, Sir, it is at his wish I have forwarded this now invaluable sketch to you. Treasure it, cherish it, prize it, for England's Royalty has laughed at it, England's Hope and Star of India has approved of it, and what more can you want?

We had an interesting Masonic ceremony at Bombay. We laid a stone: pretty sight! You should have seen me with my orders, sashes, buckles, sword, and apron, with a trowel in my hand, and H.R.H. leaning gracefully on my shoulder, haranguing the assembled Brethren, I prompting him.

"Brothers," said he, "when I come to this foreign shore, which is my own home, I feel that whether the sun is in the East, the moon in the West, or the stars are shining bright, there is but one sense of universal Brotherhood, which we experience in following the commands of our Great Master HIRAMABIFF. (Masonic applause.) Brothers, let us make the signs secretly to one another (here all made signs secretly to one another), and let each place his hand on his heart, and in the presence of the two elder Pillars of Brotherhood, BROTHERS JACHIN and BOAZ, let us pronounce the Shibboleth of the password; and giving the grip in the third degree (here every one gave the grip in the third degree, a most touching sight), let us say, with one voice, 'Fidelity, Fidelity, Fidelity!'"

Myself. So mote it be.

Then the Masonic hymn was sung:—

O, Masons all, with one accord,
Sing out with tuneful fire,
And praise the great KING SOLOMON,
And HIRAM King of Tyre.

Let Indian Brothers hymn the strain,
O'er mountains, hills, and dales,
And after SOLOMON and HIRAMS twain,
God bless the PRINCE OF WALES!

You 'll observe that the third line in the second stanza is a trifle out, but it exactly suits the tune which has here a florid passage. The chorus was repeated enthusiastically. The author was called for, then the composer. Need I say that representing both, I stepped forward and bowed my acknowledgments. This was one of the first and biggest successes of the Prince's tour as far as we 've gone.

On Tuesday last we saw a Nautch dance in a Chuprassee, and walked round a Cummerbund. After this we returned to our Bheiree, where we partook of Aukoos and a Hackery (iced). Before retiring for the night, we smoked a mild Jemadar, and had a short conversation with a native Chunam, played three games of Chowrie (at which I politely and loyally came off second best. H.R.H. is so pleased, even if its only half a Gongwala on the rub—he does like winning)—and then turned in,

Yours ever,
YOUR OWN INDIAN REPRESENTATIVE.

Foot-Note by the Editor.—Once more we have our doubts. On referring to an Indian dictionary we find that a Chuprassee is "an upper servant;" a Cummerbund is "a waistcloth;" a Bheiree is "a long-winged hawk;" Aukoos "a goad for driving elephants;" Hackery (which he says he drank iced), "a cart;" Jemadar (which he represents himself as smoking) is "a Sepoy sergeant;" Chunam (with whom he says he held a conversation) is "a cement made of shells;" Chowrie (which he speaks of as a game at cards) is "a fly-flapper formed of the tail of a Thibet cow;" and the Gongwala (which he mentions as a coin) is "a villager." Either Our Correspondent is incorrect, or a new Anglo-Indian dictionary is a want which should be speedily supplied. But we have our suspicions.

PYROTECHNICS AT THE PYRAMIDS.

An Allegory on the Banks of the Nile.

"After dinner came the event of the evening—the illumination of the Great Pyramid . . . First Bengal fires, placed at short intervals round the Pyramid, were lighted, and each stone shone out as clear as day. Rockets, Roman Candles, and other more complicated feux d'artifice, filled the air with many colours. Then lights of all imaginable colours, which had been placed on every course of stone, and up each angle of the Pyramid, were so simultaneously lit that the blaze seemed to run up the vast mass, and, in a moment, enveloped it in one great blaze of variegated fire, while magnesium wire shone out bright and clear from the apex. Every sort of firework crackled and blazed and made cascades of coloured stars in the heavens. . . . Soon all was grey and cold again, and the lonely, sad-eyed Sphinx was left behind in the gloom."—Times.

Father Nile. Are there no Gods in Egypt? Hath the Sphinx
No voice to startle these mad fools?
Sphinx. Methinks
E'en Memnon might find utterance! 'Tis a crisis
To move his lips to murmuring. Though, by Isis,
Silence is sweetest!
Father Nile. Silence never more
Shall haunt thy spreading sands, my reedy shore.
The West overwhelms us!
Sphinx. Could not Horus bid
These blatant Britons spare the Pyramid,
Leave the lone Sphinx in happy, haughty scorn
Of the false fires of Sydenham and Cremorne;
Nor shame old Egypt's night—the vulgar Vandals!—

Digitized by Google

With flare of rockets, squibs, and Roman candles,
As though great Nile were Thames?

Father Nile. These shores to light
Like lurid London on a Guy Fawkes night,
Is deepest degradation. Yet, alack!
'Tis not the last straw Egypt's camel back
May have to bear! How am I forced to brook
The bounce of BAKER, or the cheek of COOK!
League beyond league explorers poke and spy,
And my long-hoarded secret—vainly—try
To wrest from my reluctant grasp. But no!
Their Nemesis is swift, their progress slow.
I'll foil them yet, though Cockney-Babylon
From all its "knife-boards" shout, "On, STANLEY, on!"
Shall coarse Cook-fugled crowds of tourists flaunt
Their hideous garb around my secret haunt?
Never!

Sphinx. I'm not so sure. When near the Nile
Tarboosh gives place to billycock and tile;
When camels, such as conquerors bestrode,
Are mixed with broughams upon the Shoubra Road—
Called by some cool, conceited Cockney scribe
The Rotten Row of Egypt!—when the tribe
Of white-faced wanderers and their Prince clap hands
At the poses plastiques of Ghawàzee bands;
Sleep at Gezireh, dine at fair Abdeen,
And wake Nile's echoes with "God save the Queen!"
What may not chance, since in the land of PHARAOH
London has laid strong hand on Thebes and Cairo?

Father Nile. Alas! what hope when "intimate relations"
Are all the theme of princely perorations;
And Egypt's rulers stoop to hob-a-nob
With parvenus? 'Twould make SESOSTRIS sob
To see the Morning land absurdly drest
To greet a Mushroom Monarch from the West.
And, crowning shame!—Can Isis hold her peace?
The Pyramid a huge feu d'artifice?
Light up that mighty mass with Bengal fires!
Illume that apex with Magnesium Wires!
Enough to make the indignant Mummies turn
In all the tombs of Egypt!

Sphinx. To your Urn,
Most ancient Sire of Streams! Time's farther shore
Methinks I sight. When Memnon's song no more
Salutes the morning, all that is shall pass
Like a swift scene from a Magician's glass—
That hour must be at hand.
Some snares at least
Beset the path of England in the East.
Bondholders fume, the watchful Bear creeps near,
The Lion's growl wakes not the ancient fear.
The word seems passed,—the hope may prove forlorn,—
Play off the Nile against the Golden Horn.
Time may avenge us yet, Fate fronts the West!
Let us await, in silence,—as is best!

"BOTTOM, THOU ART TRANSLATED."

November 10, 1867.

IN returning thanks for the Navy, MR. WARD HUNT said:—

"It is with great pleasure that I rise on behalf of so popular a branch of the English Service as the Navy; and it is with greater pleasure that I am able to inform you that never in the whole course of its history was the Navy in such a gloriously perfect condition as it is now. (Cheers.) There have, I know, been some blunders and accidents lately. But what of that? In spite of the sneers of the Liberal Press, I prefer to look on the bright side of things. (Cheers.) The Blunderer and the Incapable came, as you well know, into collision the other day. I am very sorry that both sank, and eight hundred men were drowned. But does no gleam of hope shine out from that accident? I am certain there does. It proves that we possess magnificent vessels. What is a ram for, if it is not to run down a ship? (Cheers.) Then you remember in our torpedo experiments the other day we blew up four new gun-boats. Ought we not to feel proud and happy that our engineers are capable of constructing such deadly instruments of warfare? (Cheers.) Suppose those gun-boats had been the vessels of an enemy, would their destruction not have been a glorious triumph? (Cheers.) At the present moment there are no less than half a dozen of Her Majesty's ships aground in different parts of the globe. The mere mention of such facts is sufficient to prove, that despite the assertions of libellers, the British Navy is still distinguished for the intrepidity, for the exploring zeal, for the seamanship of its officers and men. (Cheers.) In conclusion, I will relate to you a conversation I had with the PREMIER this afternoon. He said to me, in that epigrammatic manner of which he is so great a master (laughter), 'HUNT, the country won't stand you any longer; you must go!' (Roars of laughter.) And I am going. (Cheers.) As I said before, I am always inclined to look on the bright side of things; and I cannot help thinking it will be a good day for the English Navy when I resign my office." (Loud and prolonged cheering.)

THE RIVAL OPTIMISTS.

(JOHN'S Judgment on certain Speechifyings at the Mansion House Dinner.)

"To one or two of these vessels accidents had recently happened, but to whom was blame for these accidents to be attached? Surely not to any man, but rather to the action of the elements."—The LORD MAYOR at the Mansion House Dinner.

"We only recently lost one of the finest of Her Majesty's ships. I prefer, however, to dwell with you, my LORD MAYOR, on the bright features of that unfortunate event."—MR. WARD HUNT, on the same occasion.

SAYS JOHN, "It would seem
I've been having a dream,
A nightmare in fact I may term it;
Some poet declares things are not what they seem—
And Mansion House speeches confirm it.
I had fancied, of late, in my Nautical State
There was something remarkably rotten;
But 'everything's fair, if it isn't first-rate,'
Is the verdict of HUNT and of COTTON.

"I must say the view is decidedly new;
These Sages who spot the 'bright features'
In all the big blunders we've made on the blue,
Must be the most keen-sighted creatures.
For these blunders, they say, do these Optimists gay,
There is no one to blame but—the weather!
That settles the thing in a very neat way,
But does not end my doubts altogether!

"If my ships cannot steer when the weather is queer,
And are equal to nought but plain sailing;
With the advent of Iron-clads, ugly as dear,
Old seamanship surely is failing.
My old wooden walls were not frightened at squalls,
And had lubbership courted disaster,
JACK had found 'consolation'—what COTTON so calls—
But a pitiful sort of a plaister.

"Though my vessels, I see, must decidedly be
Well adapted for sinking each other,
That fact does not perfectly satisfy me,
Or suffice my misgivings to smother.
If, handled aright, they sank foes in fair fight,
It might be a matter for merriment;
But this mutual method of proving their might
Is a somewhat expensive experiment.

"Very fine to pooh-pooh just a blunder or two,
And lay stress on some fanciful far gain;
To rejoice that in losing our ships as we do,
We lose not our men in the bargain!
What such Oracle saith is mere wasting of breath.
While around my own shores matters wrong go,
I am scarcely consoled by brave GOODENOUGH's death,
Or some bush-whacking feats on the Congo.

"No; your yarn of excuse is decidedly loose,
Most hopeful First Lord of the Navy.
These pleas à la Pangloss are worse than no use;
There's a vast deal more pluck in 'Peccavi.'
Perhaps I am dense, but your line of defence,
In my judgment, could scarcely be thinner
And your words won't go down with one Briton of sense,
Save perhaps at a Mansion House Dinner!"

Digitized by Google

"THE EARLY BIRD CATCHES THE WORM."

Struggling Young Physician (who, after listening with rapt attention to the symptoms of his first patient, strikes a hand-bell, and summons his faithful Attendant). "O—ER—ROBERTS!" Roberts. "YES, SIR."

Physician. "WHEN MR. GLADSTONE COMES, TAKE HIM INTO THE BREAKFAST-ROOM, AND ASK HIM TO BE SO KIND AS TO WAIT A LITTLE WHILE." (To Patient.) "NOW, MADAM!"

HOT CODLINS AT THE CAPE.

THE South African Mail publishes some particulars of intelligence which, if of a political character, nevertheless wears a dramatic aspect:—

"MR. MERRIMAN has visited Dordrecht, but was coldly received. At the conclusion of the meeting of his constituents, there was something like a repetition of the back-door scene."

Doesn't this look as if MR. MERRIMAN had, in professional motley, been playing Member of Parliament, though to unappreciative spectators? Yet the "repetition of the back-door scene" seems something rather like success. In his performance of that scene one can imagine that MR. MERRIMAN introduced the red-hot poker.

MR. MERRIMAN, we are further told, addressed his constituents:—

"In a long speech he defended the action of the Ministry, and denounced the Conference as of no advantage to the colony, and wished it no success."

An appropriate form of wish for a MR. MERRIMAN.

"When he had finished, he intimated that he would answer any questions. MR. H. HUTCHONS asked whether he would vote for the Conference—yes or no. He avoided a direct answer; whereupon MR. HUTCHONS denounced him as not representing the opinions of Dordrecht, and moved a vote of want of confidence. Two milder votes were proposed, but lost; and the vote of want of confidence was carried by a large majority."

All this has a very pantomimic appearance; but the sequel is exactly the sort of business with which Christmas has rendered playgoers familiar:—

"A Gentleman who attempted to support MR. MERRIMAN was charged with being a turncoat. His excitement caused him to rush to the speaker to explain; and the audience, thinking he had other intentions, interposed. In the confusion that thus ensued, MR. MERRIMAN slipped out at the side-door into the Magistrate's office. The meeting closed with cheers for federation."

So the shindy ended. MR. MERRIMAN really seems to have performed very well; and his want of success appears to have been quite undeserved. Although indifferently received at Dordrecht, he would very possibly find favour on the London boards, where he might count upon being duly supported by an efficient Harlequin, Columbine, and Pantaloon. If, therefore, he has failed at the Cape, he will perhaps do well to try his luck in the Mother Country.

THE TURKEY ABSORPTION COMPANY (LIMITED).

Abridged Prospectus.

THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA, as Managing Director of the above Company, has much pleasure in informing the World in general, and the European Public in particular, that he is making arrangements to establish a Branch of his business in Constantinople.

When this has been accomplished, he will take over the Bankrupt Stock of the present SULTAN OF TURKEY, at a valuation hereafter to be agreed upon.

On the establishment of the Branch at Constantinople, a great increase of Trade may be expected with the East, and negotiations will be immediately commenced, with a view to acquiring the right of opening fresh Branches in India, China, and the Australian Colonies.

Preparations are now being made to buy the good-will and fixtures of the British nation, on terms exceedingly favourable to the interests of the Managing Director. After this has been done, the Company will at once commence operations.

No Shares will be allotted.

N.B.—The only contract affecting the new Company is a treaty signed by the EMPEROR OF RUSSIA on the one hand, and by the EMPERORS OF GERMANY AND AUSTRIA on the other.

By Order of the Managing Director,

(Signed) BISMARCK,

Acting Assistant Under Secretary.

Digitized by Google

DISINTERESTED ADVISERS.

BRUIN. "YOU MUST FEEL, DEAR TURKEY, OUR ONLY OBJECT IS YOUR GOOD!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THE STORY OF THE SERAPIS.

(A Thousand and Second Arabian Night.)

E read in the Bahar Danush (or Garden of Knowledge) that there was in modern times a Prince of a goodly presence, and with a kindly disposition, who was also fond of travel. And this Prince, having voyaged throughout the length and breadth of Europe, desired to journey to the country of India, which was an empire belonging to the QUEEN, his mother. And he consulted a great statesman, one BEN DIS RAELI, upon the subject. And BEN, knowing that the Prince, the son of his Royal Mistress, had been to St. Petersburg, and to Paris, and to Cairo, and to Margate, and to other distant places, was pleased with the idea, and said unto himself, "This visit to India will be as a robe of honour to myself. When the great day of feasting arrives in the City, and the LORD MAYOR proposes my health, I shall be able to say this is a great day for England. No one can doubt that the visit will be rife with consequences of importance both to India and to England." And so BEN rejoiced greatly, and promised to bring the matter before the Council of the Kingdom. And the story of the bringing of the matter before the Council of the Kingdom is recorded in the pages of HANSARD. And when BEN had named a sum to be used for the purchase of presents for the Princes of the East, there were those who puffed out their cheeks and snapped their fingers, saying, "Bah! This sum is not enough for the purchase of white elephants and jewelled swords and gifts of gold and silver!" But BEN replied: "I know a place where white elephants and jewelled swords and gifts of gold and silver can be purchased for a moderate sum." And they wondered greatly, and questioned him as to the name of the place. And BEN replied: "The name of the place is Birmingham." And after this answer they who had puffed out their cheeks and had snapped their fingers held their peace and were heard no more.

And it was arranged that the Prince should travel in a ship propelled by steam. This ship was to meet him at a certain port called Brindisi, and was then to carry him to Bombay. And certain of the Lords of the Admiralty looked round about them to find a vessel proper for the purpose. And they selected a troop-ship called the Serapis. And the Serapis was to be accompanied by a squadron of Iron-clads. And when it was related that the Iron-clads were to accompany the Serapis, some of the people marvelled greatly, and said, "Surely these Iron-clads would be safer at anchor off Herne Bay." And others said, "The Lords of the Admiralty have decided wisely. The Iron-clads will serve as diving-bells, if peradventure the Prince should wish to examine the bottom of the sea. Do we not know that the voyage is to be a luxurious one?"

So the Serapis was turned inside out. The after part was converted into dining-rooms and drawing-rooms and bed-rooms and bath-rooms. And the chairs were of costly leather, and the windows were glazed with the best plate glass. And the Serapis was painted white, with a broad gold line. And part of the deck was made into a practising ground for the Prince's horses. And when it was rough, the horses taking exercise on the practising ground had a pleasant time of it.

And when it was time for the Serapis to start, the Purser beat his breast with his hands, and gave way to great lamentation. And it was asked of the Purser what was the matter. And he replied: "Lo, we have everything of the best on board. We have goodly meats and excellent seasonings, and a cow, and claret and sherry and champagne in magnums and quarts. But, alas! we have not champagne in pints, and therefore do I beat my breast with both hands and give way to great lamentation." And those who listened ran quickly to the shore and visited the merchants of wine, and returned to the Serapis, bearing with them large hampers. And, when the hampers were opened, behold there were dozens and dozens of champagne in pints. And, when the Purser saw the bottles, his brow cleared and he smiled, and his countenance was like unto the bulbul singing in the fig-trees of Bagdad.

And now the Serapis was ready to start, and the Captain (who was new to the ship) gave the order to let go. And there was great noise and much blowing-off of steam and little more besides. The Serapis moved as the omnibus moves in mid-day in Fleet Street, as the turtle moves on the shores of the Pacific. And the Lords of the Admiralty bowed their heads, and said, "Lo, we have remembered everything save one thing—and that thing the engines." And there was much patching up and alteration, and at last the Serapis started for Brindisi.

And the Lords of the Admiralty were greatly troubled in their minds about the engines of the Serapis, and they ordered and commanded a great official to meet the vessel at a distant port, so that he might see to the machinery. And the great official started for the distant port. In the meantime, the Serapis had taken a smaller official on board, who had cured the engines of their vices, so that the travelling of the ship through the water was like unto the bounding of the antelope from the arrow of the pursuer. And when the great official found this to be the case, he obeyed the instructions of the Lords of the Admiralty to the letter, and journeyed for many days on board the Serapis. And the people rejoiced greatly to find the nation possessed an official with so much zeal, common sense, and discretion.

And when the Serapis had arrived in Greece, a certain Royal Yacht came within half a mile of her bows. And the Serapis, being manœuvred with great skill by the Captain (who was new to the ship), cleverly managed to avoid running over the Royal Yacht by the space of a cable's length. And those who were on board the Royal Yacht were filled with wonder, and cried, "We have had a narrow escape!" And after that the Royal Yacht contrived to steer clear of the Serapis. And the distance between the Royal Yacht and the Serapis after this was usually two miles. And yet there were those who dwelt on board the Royal Yacht who lived in dread of the Serapis, saying, "Who is safe from her?"

And when the Serapis was brought to her moorings, she contrived to carry away two of her anchors. And the people marvelled greatly, and said, "This is a wonderful thing! This is the first time a ship so placed has carried away two of her anchors. The Captain of the Serapis (who, it is reported, is new to his ship) must be a man of original genius." And this was the second accident that happened to the Serapis off the coast of Greece. And the accidents to the Serapis were considered clever and unique by mariners of all nations and of every clime.

And after this the Serapis arrived safely in Bombay.

And when it was told in the Bazaars and the Mosques and the Temples and the market places that the Serapis had arrived safely, the people were exceeding glad. And there were those who were surprised at the accidents that had happened to the Serapis. And this was in India. But when the story of the accidents was reported in England, about the champagne in pints, and the priming of the engines, and the narrowly escaped running down of the Royal Yacht, and the carrying away of the anchors, the people were not surprised. But when it was reported that the Serapis had arrived safely in India, the people of England cried with one voice, "This safe arrival of the Serapis seems to be the greatest accident of them all!" And Punch, the Imâm of the Prophet, agreed with them!

GOOD NEWS FOR DISTRACTED HUSBANDS

(And others whom it may concern).

AMONG the varied attractions which their establishment offers to Depositors who do not care to be burdened with the custody of their own valuables, the National Safe Deposit Company (Limited) advertise that "there is a room specially adapted and reserved for Ladies."

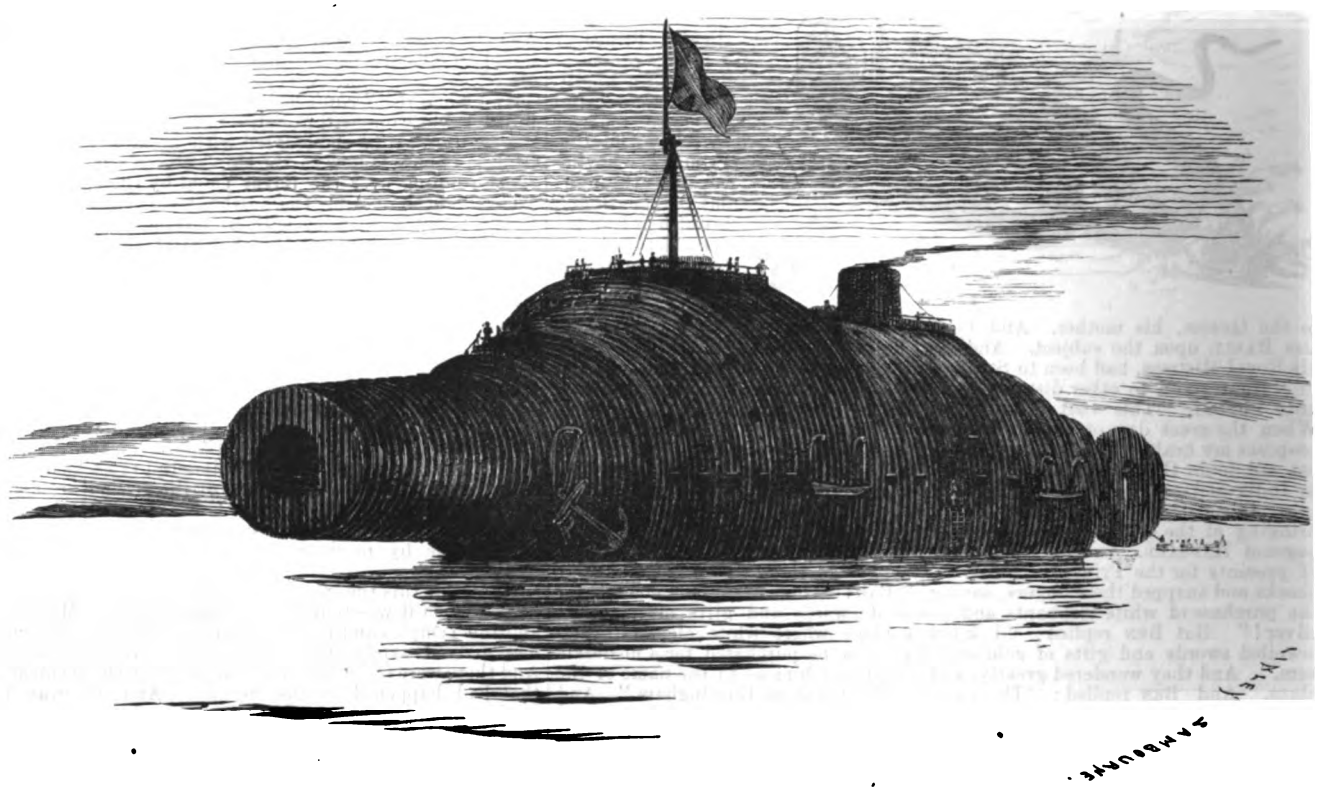
A word to the unwise, who are unable to keep their wives out of mischief, or their daughters out of danger—Apply to the National Safe Company.

Our only regret is that the cost of a Safe specially adapted for females will probably put such a retreat out of the reach of many of the victims to marital brutality, especially in Lancashire and the Black Country.

A Rash Challenge.

MR. PUNCH, last week, after prohibiting all puns on the name of LORD MAYOR COTTON, was daring enough to doubt if the most perverted ingenuity could extract any material for the nefarious practices of the punster from the name of SHERIFF BREFFITT. Alas, he has this week received twenty-four letters, informing him that "BREFFITT!—he is the soul of wit!"

NOT NIL ADMI(RRO)RARI.—An Advertisement, evidently not emanating from one of the fair sex, now meets the eye on every Hoarding—"All for Her—Mirror."



Digitized by Google

THE WAR-SHIP OF THE (REMOTE) FUTURE.

DEAR PUNCH,

I BEG leave to lay before you an illustrated plan of my new invulnerable invincible breech-loading Man-of-War.

I have not submitted it to the Government of my country, much less to any foreign state, for the simple reason that the former would not be likely to appreciate anything so radical, not to say "revolutionary" (the latter was the reason why the Elder-Reed-Popoff-Circular-Turtle-Battery was objected to), while the Foreigner pays off unpatriotic Englishmen by appropriating their plans and claiming their inventions. I shall therefore content myself for the present with registering my plan and description in your columns.

You will perceive that I retain the old form of a gun, with the exception of the trunnions. The mouth is plugged with a huge explosive shell, loaded with a compound of terribly destructive power adapted, for the first time, to practical purposes—picrate of odium theologicum! My boiler heat for the screw is obtained by very economical means—the consumption of Admiralty despatches, minutes, and old Blue Books. The magazine is situated in the breech of the gun-ship, the remainder of the bore serves for the housing of the crew, stores, &c. The great peculiarity of the ship is that if the Captain desires to strike a decisive blow, he pipes his men on deck, which is reached through the touch-hole, and at the right moment explodes the magazine!!!

I remain, dear Punch, your obedient Servant,

THOROUGH.

RIGHT ABOUT, FACE!

An Important Personage and an Un-Important Personage meet.

Important Personage. LORD CLAUD HAMILTON, I believe?

Unimportant Personage. Yes, Mr. Punch.

Important Personage. You returned thanks for the Army at the LORD MAYOR'S Dinner, I think?

Unimportant Personage. Yes, Mr. Punch.

Important Personage. In the absence of the Authorities?

Unimportant Personage. To quote from my speech on that occasion, "In the absence of my Right Honourable friend, and also of the UNDER SECRETARY FOR WAR."

Important Personage. You said it was an unenviable task to have to return thanks for the Army. What did you mean by that?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. You said that the Corporation of the City of London were the best friends the Army had. What did you mean by that?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. You said that the Army were invisible at the Dinner—"at any rate, above the cover of the table." What did you mean by that?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. In returning thanks for Her Majesty's soldiers you talked of "what remains of the British Army." What did you mean by that?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. You said that before many years were over "you hoped wise counsels might prevail in Parliament, to restore the British Army to what it was once—not an army existing partially on paper, but an army of blood and bone." What did you mean by that?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. In fact, your speech was flippant and superficial. What did you mean by making such a speech?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. Besides the knowledge acquired whilst holding a commission in the Guards for a few months, what do you know of the British Army?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. What, then, gives you a right to return thanks for the British Army?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. What have you to do with the War-Office and the Horse Guards?

Unimportant Personage. Nothing in particular.

Important Personage. And now, Sir, I tell you, emphatically, you may retire? [Exit Unimportant Personage.

The Porte's Answer to its Bondholders.

(Freely Translated from Horace.)

"Nec sumit, aut ponit 'secures'
Arbitrio popularis auræ."

IT won't try to take up its bonds, or to place out its securities,
From respect for its popularity, or fear of Russ futurities!

Digitized by Google

AN IRISH MELODY TRANSPLANTED.

German Tenor warbles:—"I 'LL NOT LEAF ZEE, SOW LÔNE VON,
TO BINE ON ZE SCHTEM!
ZINS ZE LÔFLY ARE SZCHLEEEBINGK,
CÔH! SZCHLREEB SOW FIZ DEM!
ZOS GHYNTLY I SCHGADDER
ZY LEAFS ON THE BET,
VAIR ZY MAIDS OF ZE KÂRRTEN LIE SCHENTLESS AND TET!"

OUR MAYORS.

THE ninth of November has come and gone to join so many of its predecessors. The loving cup has been passed round, toasts given, quotations borrowed, hands grasped, and bells rung. We have welcomed the coming and sped the parting Mayors. Throughout England and Wales, from Bootle to Beaumaris, from York to Yeovil, the annual transfer of furred gowns, gold chains, historical maces, and antique wands, has once more taken place, and our Boroughs have again chosen new Mayors, or been faithful to old Mayors, or, as in one or two cases, found it a very difficult enterprise to secure any Mayors at all.

Turning away then our eyes and thoughts for a time from Bombay to Bodmin, from Turkey to Tewkesbury, from the Herzegovina to East Retford, let us keep up an established practice, and go through the new tale of Mayors, that we may form some idea of the way in which the Municipalities are likely to be governed between now and next November. No interference with the politics of their Worships will be attempted, beyond the expression of a hearty wish that they may all be Liberal in their hospitalities, and Conservative of every good custom and laudable usage.

This year there can be no doubt which Borough ought to take precedence of all its fellows—Hull, for it has put itself under the sway of a King, in marked contrast to Maidstone, which is satisfied with the services of a Page. Wolverhampton happily combines both the civil and military power in its Major; and the renewed fidelity of Birmingham to its Chamberlain deserves again to be recorded. It remains to be seen to what height the Mayor of Truro will attain: at present all we can say for certainty is that he is a Clyma.

What great names there are in the list! Sampson at Leominster, Nelson at Warwick, Livingstone at Swansea, Manning at Nottingham, Walton (would that his Christian name had been Izaak!) at Newark, Cotton in the City of London, and Pinnock at Newport!

While Brighton, ecclesiastical in its views (the Church Congress met there not long ago), secures an Abbey, Dover, which so often receives passing visits from Royalty, not unnaturally shows its partiality for a Court. Rotherham has Chambers, Wigan, Burrows; Leeds a Croft, Great Yarmouth a Barnby, and Rochdale a Littlewood; Dartmouth, as a true Devonshire town, possesses a Puddicombe; Wakefield a Gill, and Gravesend, we are particularly pleased to announce, will not part with its Lake.

Many of the Municipalities are modest in their aims, moderate in their aspirations. Bath is loyal to a Paynter, Hanley is contented with a Baker, Canterbury with a Cooper, Ipswich with a Mason, Tynemouth with a Potter, Derby with a Turner, Oldham with a Wainwright, and Barrow-in-Furness with a Schneider. The Fowler is at Louth, but the Trappes a long way off, at Clitheroe; and the Hunt appears to be fixed at Scarborough.

Man (we do not forget Wildman at Tamworth) does not seem to have sole possession of the field. There is a Wolfe at Bolton, and a Galloway at Gateshead; a Papillon at Colchester, and a Goldfinch at Faversham: a Dawe at Penryn, and a Rooke at York.

If Leicester shows a Barfoot, Deal can supply a Nethersole. There may be Cutts again at Retford, but there is Healing at Tewkesbury. Portsmouth has its Pink—it would be disrespectful to an old and tried joke not to add—of perfection, and Devonport its May; Coventry gets a Berry, and Banbury a Stone. There is Brown at Windsor, and White at Launceston; and, as a fitting ending, at Chipping Norton, there is, for the sixth time, Farwell—can there be a stronger proof that he is a far better man for the office than any one else in the whole place?

THE CIRCULAR IRON-CLAD.

WHO invented the Circular Iron-clad? REED,
Says ADMIRAL POPOFF—most frankly indeed—
First started the thought in his nautical brain:
And, this being so, Punch can only complain
That Russia has got, for its sea-warfare's need,
The very first use of the notion of REED.

Build your Circular Ship, Lords of tar and red tape,
But will it from nautical dangers escape?
Alack, the First Lord would be flurried and angered
If, misplaced in a fog, it went down like the Vanguard:
While a terrible rage all the realm will be rapt in,
If it coolly capsizes, and outdoes the Captain.

My Lords may be asked (without answer, I ween)
Why the CZAR could obtain what they lost for the QUEEN?
Why, if we must fight upon Neptune's rough tide,
The genius of England should go the wrong side?
Why our sharpest ship-planner from office was hunted,
While improvements in build, thanks to old screws,
were shunted?

Another shrewd question. It touches us all,
And extends from the Neva as far as Whitehall,—
Why should Circular Iron-clads, viciously whirled,
Against the fair fleet of a neighbour be hurled?
Why fight for more provinces, quarrel for trifles,
And tax us to pay for your cannons and rifles?

War's fire is the flare-up of Statesmanship's fuel:
Why cannot Prime Ministers make it a duel?
If England and Germany fail to agree,
DISRAELI and BISMARCK might meet, don't you see?
And, should this occur, Punch is ready to swear,
They 'd fire, as they frequently talk, in the air.

CHANGE OF NAME (suggested for the new Directors).—The Emma Mine—The Dil-Emma Mine.

Digitized by Google

REMINISCENCES OF HEDGE-FIRING.

Itinerant Photographer (from under the Cloth). "WILL YOU KEEP QUIET? HOW DO YOU SUPPOSE——"
Subject (who is evading the Focus). "BE JABERS, MAN! WILL I SIT STILL TO BE SHOT AT?!!"

CIVIC HONOURS AT SHREWSBURY AND SOUTHAMPTON.

A REMARKABLE case of mendicity has occurred at Shrewsbury. The Mayoralty of that Borough was, up to the 10th instant, going a-begging. Out of the candidates for the office of Mayor proposed to the Town Council, one was rejected, and the other two declined their election, and paid £50 each rather than serve. A Correspondent suggests that this is a scandalous state of things. Yes; but scandalous to the municipality of Shrewsbury or to its population?

Some light on this question may be thrown by accounts received from another borough—Southampton. Thereat, indeed, a Mayor was elected on the 9th of November; but after proceedings of which some idea may be briefly presented thus from the local papers:—

SCENE—The Council Chamber at the Audit House. Present—The Town Council, with a Privileged outer Few, and a dense body of the General Southampton Public.

Enter the Mayor and Corporation, and take their seats. As they severally appear in succession, they are saluted by the Southampton Public as follows:—

Mayor (MR. PASSENGER) arrives.

Southampton Public. Make room for a First-Class Passenger. You've not long to sit there: your time 's nearly up. Don't cry! What 's the price of coal? Any coal-tickets knocking about? Have you had the chain polished up?—because MR. PUTTY did. (This was a reference to a gentleman in an extensive business including that of a Plumber and Glazier.)

MR. PHIPPARD arrives.

Southampton Public. What 's the price of meat and paper?

MR. DARTNALL arrives.

Southampton Public. What 's the ticket for soup?

MR. ROGERS arrives.

Southampton Public. Well done, Evergreen! Come at last. Where 's poor BILLY GAMLEN? Look at his trousers!

(An allusion, like most of the preceding and subsequent questions, to the gentleman's vocation—that of a Clothier.)

MR. LAMB arrives.

Southampton Public. Make room for HAURDRAW LAMB. Why don't you use your pocket handkerchief?

ALDERMAN PAYNE arrives.

Southampton Public. Take off your hat, old man. No, he 's afraid of showing his bald head. Your friends the Templars are here.

ALDERMAN JONES, J.P. arrives.

Southampton Public. Hurrah! Hurrah! Hip, hip, hip, hurrah! One cheer more, Hurrah! (Could MR. ALDERMAN JONES, a most respectable man, have felt himself flattered?)

MR. SHERIFF PEARCE arrives.

Southampton Public. Yah! 'Ss! Hurrah! Oh, oh! Coals, coals! What is the price of coals? MELDRUM will wait on you. Why did you shut up poor HARRY ABRAHAM? (A considerable testimonial to MR. PEARCE.)

MR. G. P. PERKINS arrives, struggling towards his seat.

Southampton Public. Now for the King of the Cannibal Islands!

MR. CHIPPERFIELD arrives.

Southampton Public. Hollo, here 's CHIPPER! Now you 'll have some physic.

MR. WESTON and ALDERMAN TUCKER, J. P., arrive.

Southampton Public. Knock 'em down, JIMMY! Knock 'em down, JOHN!

MR. ELLYETT arrives.

Southampton Public. What have you done with your white pony?

After a succession of speeches interrupted by amenities of which the foregoing are mild specimens, a Mayor was elected. MR. JONES, a previous Mayor, who had declined re-election last year, now having consented to undertake the office. But is it not a wonder how any decent man can be prevailed upon to become Mayor of Southampton? and—if Shrewsbury is like Southampton—is it any wonder that nobody could be got to be Mayor of Shrewsbury?

HOW TO BACK OUT.—On dit that MR. DISRAELI, with his rare genius for apt nomenclature, has designated the Cabinet Council-Chamber the "Withdrawing Room"!

Digitized by Google

GORGED VULTURES ON THE TOWERS OF SILENCE.

WHEN the Prince left Government House at 3.30 yesterday afternoon, attended by the DUKE OF SUTHERLAND, MAJOR-GENERAL PROBYN, LORD CARINGTON, &c., it was to visit the Towers of Silence. SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHOY received the Royal party, and conducted them inside the garden. He also explained the processes by which the vultures are gorged on the Towers."—Report of the Prince's Progress.

"THE Towers of Silence!" Where, O where, are they?
Not where political palaverers stray,
And, while with care all common sense they shun,
Tell what they might, could, would, or should have done;
Not where Club gossipers, in full debate,
Pass on the scandal which they oft create;
Not where deep Dulness reads, without a fear,
What stirs e'en kindred Dulness to a sneer;
Not where fair maids and merry matrons come
To silver tea-kettle and kettledrum;
Not where the waltz's liberal law hath placed
AMANDUS' arm around AMANDA'S waist;
Not where the Woolwich Infant's giant power
Sends twelve-foot iron shields in splint'ry shower;
Not where quick thought and judgment soundly ripe
Set engines roaring in the Square of Type;
Nor where, to catch the time's swift change alert,
Punch and his friends are sitting at dessert.

As for gorged Vultures—Princes need not range
In search of them. They haunt the Stock Exchange.
Right plausibly the gorging Vulture works:
He'll sell Egyptians, Eries,—even Turks.
When with a customer of shallow brain,
Excited by petroleum champagne,
He'll say, with countenance most kindly wise,
"The safest thing is buying for a rise."
The man who lives by books which others write,
The man who earns the fame when others fight,
The man who many a legal fraud will dare,
And from a bankrupt, come up millionnaire,—
The man who cures the mass of human ills
By odorous ointment, diabolic pills,—
Such we have had, since first our world began:
No need to search for them in Hindostan.
This nineteenth century is an age of culture,
And cultivates the ever-gorging Vulture.

O for the Towers of Silence! Let us rest
And leave all Vultures to their own foul nest.
Silence in tower, where great star-movements stir
The vision of the keen astronomer;
Silence where with a look, half kiss, half prayer,
AMANDUS springs to clasp AMANDA fair;
Silence in Paul's great Gallery, while below
London lies basking in the sunshine's glow;
Silence when Mr. Punch, who doth determine
To laugh at idiots and extirpate vermin,
Lights a cigar, his regal oriflamme,
And calmly cogitates an epigram!

PUNCH'S INVENTORS' COLUMN.

MR. PUNCH does not see why he should be without an Inventors' Column. He starts one with a few of the patented inventions which have recently been sent him by imaginative Gentlemen—and Ladies. Like the words in a Latin Dictionary, he classes them as "Masculine" and "Feminine," hoping none of them will turn out neuter.

Balloon for Pic-Nics.—Goes up into the air with a motion as smooth as silk, and stays there all a summer's day. Special corners arranged for flirtations. Champagne bottles can be thrown over the side when done with. Kisses inaudible on the earth's surface. F.

Diving-Bell for Pic-Nics.—Diving Belles . . . pun too obvious. Warranted not to throw cold water on matrimony. Champagne bottles can be dropped into the sea. Kisses invisible to people on shore. M.

Aaron's Rod, redivivus.—Very useful in the City, and also in the West-End. Scourges, of its own accord, all swindling members of Syndicates, all men shady on the Turf, all women who talk scandal and do worse than what they say of their neighbours. Warranted to draw blood from the thickest cuticle. M.

The New Cinderella's Slipper.—Will only fit the foot of a Lady who has no guile in her heart, and who knows the true meaning of love. F.

The Philosopher's Stone.—Reduces to common sense the theories of DARWIN, HUXLEY, and TYNDALL. For this a large sale cannot be expected. M.

The Perpetual Motion.—This cannot be offered to the Public, having been at once purchased by MR. GLADSTONE. M.

The Alkahest.—Turns Tory into Whig, Whig into Radical, Radical into either. Supposed connection with the modern trinity —£. s. d. M.

The Magic Inkstand.—Enables anyone using it to write leading articles for the Times, and poems for Punch, which will bring him in many thousands a year.* M.

The Perennial Roseate Bloom of Youth.—This recipe is never failing: so, Ladies fair, attend unto it and you will be beautiful for ever. Read Punch. F.

* "Credat Judæus Apella, Non ego."—Punch.

Interesting Experiment.

"SIR,—At this present time two vessels laden with petroleum are discharging in the Regent's Canal basin, where there are many other vessels with various cargoes."

THUS a Correspondent writes to the Times. It is evident that the local authorities are curious to ascertain which is the most destructive, gunpowder or petroleum. The explosion of the gunpowder barge on the same canal two years ago supplied one factor of the experiment. These petroleum boats are, no doubt, meant to furnish the other.

In the City.

"The Aldermen had proved themselves admirable managers, and the Members of the Common Council . . . took the liveliest interest in the care of the streets . . . There was only one thing upon which he would not defend them—namely, for their introduction of asphalte."—LORD MAYOR COTTON, in proposing the "Corporation of London," Nov. 8.

LURKS there beneath this compliment
In COTTON'S silky phrase,
Another meaning and intent—
You'd better mend your ways?

High-Water Mark.

MR. PUNCH is informed that, in consequence of a distinguished member of the Metropolitan Board of Works having got his feet wet during the late high tide, immediate steps will be taken to prevent a recurrence of a calamity which has four or five times reduced the poor water-side population of the South of London to the greatest misery.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH ON THE RINK.

PART I.—The Use of Skating.

PUNCH, as everybody knows, is the real Inspector-General of Nuisances. In the exercise of his official duties he has been everywhere—now to a croquet party, now to a Volunteer review, now to a passage across the Channel. For many years he has inspected the House of Commons, and, when he has been able to turn his eyes away from Westminster, any number of foreign potentates have laid claim to his attentions. Only a wonderful man is ubiquitous. Mr. Punch is a wonderful man, and ubiquitous. Like the steam-hammer, he can crush either a common nut or an uncommon Colonel, either a fussy nobody or an injudicious somebody. So when a cry reached his ears, "Rinking is a nuisance," he determined to examine the nuisance for himself, with a view to presenting a report founded upon his own observations. "Sliding on thin ice" is a favourite amusement in the City, and "skating upon wheels" is the fashionable dissipation of the West End. They are equally dangerous. The first usually ends in a fall below par, the last invariably terminates with a tumble before Ma—that is to say, if the young Lady is attended to the Rink by her mother. "Skating on wheels" frequently entails sprained wrists and fractured arms; "Sliding on thin ice" constantly causes tarnished reputations and broken hearts. Mr. Punch, having recently said a great deal about the Sliding in the City, now turns his attention to the Skating in the West End.

London boasts three Rinks. The first is near a successful rival to Clapham Junction—the station of many trains; the second would very possibly be situated in Belgrave Square were it not established somewhere at the bottom of Ebury Street; the third is at Lillie Bridge, in close proximity to the Head-Quarters of a Metropolitan Volunteer Corps. Of the three, perhaps, the last is the best for beginners. It is paved with asphalte, and asphalte is excellent for—tumblers. It is, moreover, conveniently near a Cemetery. To fall (on Skates) is human; to fall with grace and dignity is sublime. Any one can fall. It shall be the task of Mr. Punch to teach the young idea how to tumble in a manner worthy of JULIUS CÆSAR, WOLSEY, or MONSIEUR LEOTARD. All that is required is a little courage, a great deal of endurance, and a well-developed taste for the romantic and the picturesque.

But, first, let Mr. Punch declare that his duties as Inspector-General of Nuisances became a sinecure on the Rink. If you have no objection to what the Railway Companies call a "severe shaking," and are fond of sprains and bruises, you will find skating on wheels one of the most delightful recreations in the world. It is no more a nuisance than organ-grinding, a November fog, or the steam-roller. It is an amusement that is equally well adapted to young and old. The young have the advantage of strong constitutions, the old have no teeth. The first have the power to "pull through" the pain of a broken arm, the latter are free from the danger of losing incisors that can never be replaced. With such advantages to recommend it, "Skating upon Wheels" must always be popular.

But this favourite diversion may be something more than a frivolous amusement—it may be converted by the least experienced into one of the most important "opportunities" of a man's long life. To prove this assertion, Mr. Punch will take an imaginary case. He will say that MR. EDWIN BROWN has for years secretly adored the beautiful and aristocratic LADY ANGELINA SMITH. Season after season he has allowed dances and garden-parties to pass away without putting that important question which even the best of us seldom put more than half-a-dozen times in as many months. He has never been able to ask her to become his wife. He may have met her at the Beau Rivage, Ouchy, at the table d'hôte, and then only may have hinted at his affection by the melancholy manner in which he may have passed her the salt or recommended the salad. He may have seen her at Dieppe, and vainly attempted to show the depth of his feeling by a hoarse allusion to the state of the weather. He may have done all this, and more, and yet may never have made his meaning quite plain to the object of his soul's adoration. And it is at this crisis that he determines to visit Lillie Bridge, with a view to learning the secret of Skating upon Wheels. Perchance he may have heard that a hated rival knows how to do "the outside edge," and a thirst for vengeance may be driving him onwards, onwards, towards the discovery of a solution to that most difficult of problems "the figure eight." He is in this state of mind when he pays a visit to Lillie Bridge.

He arrives at a Railway Station, and finds a passage leading from the platform to the Rink. He thinks, "I have left the wheels of the trains to go to the wheels of the Skates. Only a few planks separate the proud power of steam from the weak indecision of poor human nature. It is but a dozen yards from the sublime to the ridiculous!" If he continues in this groove of melancholy thought, he may imagine that, if "Wheel" is a good name for the Station, "Woe" is a particularly appropriate one for the Rink.

He walks into a vast marquee. There are high poles here and there to support the canvas, and round the sides run a row of friendly seats. The place is all but empty. There is no one there save an accomplished skater, who pursues his graceful course with the ease and elegance of a wheel-wearing Apollo. He hates this skater (who seems to skate with more than his wonted elegance as he enters the marquee) with a savage jealous hate, until he learns that the services of the Accomplished One may be purchased with gold, or rather silver.

"Are you going to skate, Sir?" asks a boy, as EDWIN sits on one of the friendly seats.

"I am going to try," is the half jocular, half terror-stricken reply. And then a bargain is struck between the Experienced and the Inexperienced. EDWIN is to receive his first lesson. The boy looks at his feet, exclaims "Tens," and the fatal skates are put on. EDWIN tries to rise. For a moment he stands looking about him proudly, and then he shudders slightly and hurriedly resumes his seat. As he does this there is a great whirring of wheels at the ends of his feet.

"Lean upon me, Sir," says the Professor, "and I will take you out."

EDWIN once more rises and clings to his teacher. He moves his right foot, and in a moment the playful skate carries it quickly away in an eccentric direction. EDWIN tries to follow his wayward right foot, and then there is a strange weird motion of his until now bashful left foot, and he embraces the Professor with what the French call "effusion."

"You will soon feel your feet, Sir," says the Teacher. "Now all you have to do is to keep your feet close together and to strike out gently. Mind you don't fall." And EDWIN is alone on a desert of asphalte. Alone, and on wheels!

What can he do? Two yards from him is a pole, upon which is fixed a placard. If he can but reach that pole, his head may yet be saved. He draws his long cloak closer to him, and prepares for the sacrifice. He cautiously advances his right foot. As he does so he trembles like a leaf on his left leg. He puts down his right foot, and, O joy! it does not give way!—at least, not at once. And now his left foot is in the air, and then there is an awful struggle, in which dignity is thrown to the winds, and he is clutching wildly at the pole. Saved! He pretends to read the placard. For five minutes he stands unsteadily perusing the Rules and Regulations. As he does this he is conscious that a Lady has put on a pair of skates, and is coming towards him. He cannot move, he dares not turn his head, but something tells him he is in the presence of the woman he loves!

And now Mr. Punch begs to adopt the dramatic form of description:—

Digitized by Google

TO GIRLS WHO "WALK WITH THE GUNS."

Ethel. "AREN'T YOU GOING TO SHOOT TO-DAY, UNCLE?"

Uncle. "NOT IF YOU ARE, MY DEAR. WHEN I WAS YOUNG, THE MEN SHOT THE BIRDS, AND THE WOMEN STAYED AT HOME TO COOK THEM."

Lady Angelina (approaching EDWIN, who is still reading the placard). Dear me! MR. BROWN! I am so pleased to see you!

Edwin (steadily and cautiously raising his hat). LADY ANGELINA!

Lady Angelina (aside). How cold he is! I must give him a little encouragement. (Aloud.) I am so glad to see you. We used to be great friends. Will you not take my hand? [Offers it to him.

Edwin (very pale). I would with pleasure; but the fact is, a gulf divides us——

Lady Angelina (quickly). Which surely is not impassable. See, you are but two yards from me. You used to take my hand once—(sighs)—but that was long ago!

Edwin. The fact is, I am a little unsteady——

Lady Angelina. Do not talk of the past. I can forgive everything, if you live but for the future.

Edwin. I might slip——

Lady Angelina (archly). I am no QUEEN ELIZABETH, to elude you, if, in your ambition, you seem to soar too high. Will you not take my hand?

Edwin. I can restrain myself no longer!

[Cautiously lets go of the pole, when the skates hurriedly fly from under him, and he falls upon his knees.

Lady Angelina (bashfully). This is very sudden!

Edwin (clinging to her hand). It is, indeed!

Lady Angelina (in an ecstasy). And so you love me! (Seeing other skaters.) But rise, rise, my EDWIN, the cold heartless world hems us in on every side.

Edwin (cautiously attempting to rise). I obey you reluctantly. My place is at your feet. [Slips, and tumbles on his knees.

Lady Angelina (fondly). Nay, although I love to see you thus, you must rise. We are observed by the frivolous and facetious.

Edwin. I obey you. (He staggers unsteadily to his feet, and then suddenly slips into the arms of LADY ANGELINA.) You must forgive me. I could not help it.

Lady Angelina (aside). How he loves me! (Aloud.) My EDWIN, I could forgive you everything!

Curtain.

So much for the "use" of Rinking. The "abuse" of Rinking may some day give Mr. Punch a subject for a second lecture—a lecture more gloomy in its character than the first.

THE NEW JUDGE-ADVOCATE.

BENTINCK said the Shipping Bill
Was nothing more than "fudge;"
DIZZY saw his sense and skill,
And straightway made him Judge.

Let all men draw a lesson hence,
And, heedless what folks say,
Be sure that honesty and sense
At last will win the day.

Our DIZZY, from his chair of state,
Looks out for able men;
And glorious Measures we await
From Great plus Little BEN.

"WHEN IGNORANCE IS BLISS," ETC.

MRS. PARTINGTON writes to say that after reading half-a-dozen cases of assaults of feet, in the shape of wife-kicking, the other day, it was a positive relief to come across a paragraph announcing an "Assault of Arms."

MAKING GAME OF HIM.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY has made so many slips during his administration, that the PREMIER, "with that graceful wit, &c.," has conferred upon his colleague the sobriquet of "HUNT THE SLIPPER." Fact!

ALTER ET IDEM.—Oxford in a flood—SPIRES AND POND.

Digitized by Google

"THE SERVANTS."

Cook. "THEN, SHALL YOU GO AS 'OUSEMAID?"

Young Person. "NO, INDEED! IF I GO AT ALL, I GO AS LADY 'ELP!"

SCHOOL FEES AND FLOGGING.

ACCORDING to the Metropolitan, as quoted by the Pall Mall Gazette:—

"The masters of a Board-School at Tipton have adopted a novel plan of enforcing payment of school fees. Three children have been 'severely flogged by the masters of the schools which they attended, owing to their having neglected to take their school-pence with them.' It seems, also, that at one school there is a regular flogging hour, at which non-paying children are whipped."

If this is true, it is visiting the sins of the parents on the children with a vengeance. Worse, in some cases it is visiting the poverty of the parents on the children.

It appears that:—

"The School-Board, however, are not horrified at the occurrence, and have not prohibited the practice, but only express their dissatisfaction at 'undue' flogging."

It would be a great satisfaction if a flogging highly due were inflicted on offenders who—always unless the Metropolitan has been hoaxed—richly deserve it. Satisfactory as is the knowledge that a savage garotter has been handsomely whipped, it would satisfy retributive feeling much more to know that the cruel pedagogues who flog poor children to extort school-pence from their defaulting but perhaps indigent parents, had been flogged themselves, for their dastardly brutality, to within an inch of their lives. There was once an eminent hero of the Prize Ring, celebrated in connection with Tipton. What man—not to speak of the Tipton School-Board—would not wish such an athlete as the Tipton Slasher could be appointed to slash their backs with a cat-o'-nine-tails?

THE PEN AND THE POPPY.

ACCORDING to the London and China Telegraph, two prizes, one of £200, the other of £100, given by MR. J. W. PEASE, M.P., for the two best Essays on the Opium Trade, have, after much deliberation, been awarded by the Committee of Examiners; the first prize to MR. SPROAT, Agent-General for British Columbia, the second to the REV. F. S. TURNER, Secretary of the Anglo-Oriental Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade. MR. PEASE, who appears to be no Free Trader, is an active member of the Anti-Opium Society. He offered the prizes with Anti-Opium intentions. The Prize Essays have been doubtless conceived in an Anti-Opium spirit. Yet they are announced under the title of "Opium Essays." Too many Essays upon all manner of subjects are found to produce upon their readers the effect of opiates. Let us hope, however, that the Opium Essays may possibly prove so interesting that, on the contrary, they will deserve to be entitled "Anti-Opium Essays," by answering their purpose, and not that of the narcotic they have been written against, but for which, in the latter too likely case they may serve as substitutes.

THE LITTLE BIRDS TO LESBIA.

(A Round Robin from Songland to the Softer Sex.)

"A considerable demand for small birds, especially robins and wrens, has arisen within the last few months for the decoration of ladies' hats, this being the latest requirement of fashion. Not only are the birdcatchers of the Seven Dials and Whitechapel unusually busy, but we have the authority of the proprietors of a large West-End establishment for saying that, great as is the supply, it does not at all equal the demand."—Lancet, Nov. 13.

"The fashion now so prevalent of ornamenting ladies' hats and bonnets with small birds, has given such an impetus to the activity of the birdcatchers, both here and in France, as to cause well-grounded fears for the annihilation of our favourite little songsters."—Daily News.

LESBIA! are Ladies' hearts more cold
Than when your prototype of old
Wept over one dead sparrow?
Has Fashion iced that snowy breast
Where Cytherea's doves might rest,
Till sighs of Songland, sore distrest,
Its feelings may not harrow?

O Sex, whose softness lords of rhyme,
From soft CATULLUS to our time,
Invoke in songs and sonnets;
Can you look on with smiling face
While La Mode's myrmidons apace
Exterminate our harmless race
To trim your hats and bonnets?

This crowning woe you well might spare:
With Cockney's shot and coster's snare
We long have had our trials;
But is it meet that your commands,
Through Fashion's call, which none withstands,
Should give us to the Herod-hands
Of slaughtering Seven Dials?

Ah! deign to picture, if you please,
Your poor petitioners' miseries,
Which well may claim your pity.
Tracked by an ever-thickening throng
Of London louts, who 'll leave, ere long,
Our woodland ways as void of song
As is your smoky city.

Conceive how feathered bosoms throb
When roughs' rude hands, intent to rob,
In our loved haunts invade us!
Yet not with them, dear Ladies, lie
The wrong, the shame, the cruelty,—
For, did we plead, they might reply,
"'Twas gentle LESBIA bade us."

Think when you trim your hats and "things"
With linnets' breasts and finches' wings,
How many songs you stifle;
Swallows that charmed with darting flight
And nightingales which gladdened night
In myriads die to deck aright
The moment's modish trifle.

The robin, e'en, who all may dare,
Whom callous Cockney gunners spare,
Must fall as LESBIA'S quarry.
O shame, to think that gentle she
Should such a ruthless butcher be!
Could she her slaughtered thousands see,
The Slayer might be sorry.

But if compassion may not move
That breast, supposed the home of love,
When Fashion sways within it,

Digitized by Google

Self-interest should surely wake
And bid men spare, for Music's sake,
To banish from the bush and brake
The blackbird and the linnet.

Prudence to purblind Pity lends
Her keener sight. The farmer's friends
Might claim the law's protection.
And Cruelty's courageous foes
Such wanton slaughtering oppose,
With arguments as hot as those
Poured forth on vivisection.

Yet surely 'twere a gentler grace
Did LESBIA set her lovely face
Against what Pity bleeds for!
Consider, LESBIA, should you rove
With STREPHON in a songless grove!
That mercy Punch is fain to move
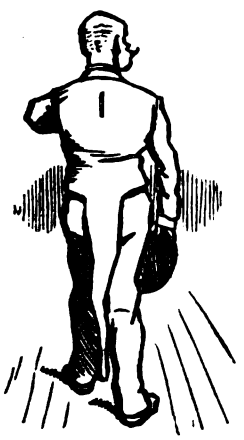
Love, the bird's teacher, pleads for.



THE HOUSE AND THE HOME:

OR, HINTS TOWARDS A GRAMMAR OF DECORATIVE ART.

By LEONARDO DELLA ROBBIA DE TUDOR WESTPOND TUMPKYNS, Esq., S.A.S., A.R.F., M.U.F., and Hon. Member of the Dulli-dillitanty Society.

LAST AND MOST INTERESTING CHAPTER.

THE ugliness of modern dress is, in my opinion, undeniable. I look in the glass, and I find it so. I am the best judge of what is good or bad taste, of what is true or false in Art, and I say, once for all, emphatically, that modern dress is hideous.

Male attire is unbecoming, and becoming more unbecoming every day. As to evening dress, had we all, unquestioningly, accepted the theories of MR. DARWIN, we could not have done more to illustrate our hereditary deficiency than we have done in putting on tails. Not one tail each, which would savour at all events of some sort of sense, but two tails apiece. For my part, so disgusted am I with this imbecility, that, when forced by the requirements of my friends to dine out, I have a coat with only one tail. It is more ornamental, and more graceful, simply because it is more in accordance with the dictates of nature.

As to buttons,—Great Jupiter! why should I have buttons to a garment that I never button, and that was never intended to be buttoned? No, I will not have buttons—except where necessary: and I am inclined to admit their use, in certain instances, when, however, they might also, with very little trouble and no expense, be made artistic as well as useful.

Nature is our teacher. She never throws away a chance. All in Nature is useful, and, according to its surroundings and its intention, ornamental. Nature has not produced buttons. Nature has produced coats in endless variety, but I defy every eminent naturalist to point me out one single instance of a coat, of Nature's make, with buttons.

I am not prepared to say what style of costume would be best suited for all classes.

I am not certain if something of this sort wouldn't do:—A sensible hat—time of JAMES THE FIRST,—modern collars, to protect the face and neck; shooting coat, to button over, with large pockets; waistcoat, of course, and a sort of half cassock, covering knee breeches or knickerbockers, gaiters over stockings and shoes. Then, on entering the house, the visitor would simply take off the sort of outer petticoat, which would have been invaluable out-of-doors as against cold, wind, and rain, &c., and would appear thus:—

Either in tights or knickerbockers. Or, the dress might be more in pieces, so that in two minutes an entire change in costume might be made with the greatest ease.

This might be done with facility, but there is no time now to spend on details.

The question of dress is (1) what is wanted, (2) what is necessary, (3) what is absolutely indispensable.

1. What is wanted.—This depends on the person—his position in society, &c.

2. What is necessary.—This also depends on accidents of birth and education.

3. What is absolutely indispensable. This appears to all. Of course we must begin boldly with clothes generally. In a civilised state, they are indispensable.

But why not one garment for everything? Instead of wearing a stock of things, and making oneself a clothes-peg, existing only for the benefit of tailors and haberdashers, why not one garment—a simple over-all, a be-all, and end-all? And a hat—a hat, of soft material, to cover the ears in the wintry tempests, and guard the pate from the summer sun?

THE HAT IN WINTER—SIDES AND BACK TIED DOWN.

There is perhaps something monkish about this, but I am not at all sure that the monks' habits are not au fond the very best. In short, a robe, a bed-gown, stockings, and a hat would be all, which, according to my plan, any man would want in this world.

The material would be according to his quality.

One endeavour we ought all to make, i.e. to do away with buttons entirely. I have not yet succeeded in this. My washerwoman has tried to do so very often, in her own way, which is not mine.

And so I finish pro tem. my hints towards a Grammar of Decorative Art. That what I have written is invaluable, and worth its weight in gold, I shall be the first to proclaim and to admit. Let everyone follow my lead, and they will be right. Let them look at the back numbers of this work, note down the addresses of the shops where certain makers follow my patterns, give their orders there, and they will be happy ever after. Farewell!

HINT TO THE ADMIRALTY.—One gun that will sink an Iron-clad at a shot, is equal to any multiple of it that can be fired from a broadside, and cheap in proportion.

Digitized by Google

A DOUBLE SUSPICION.

(GROUNDLESS, WE ARE HAPPY TO SAY, IN BOTH CASES.)

THE NEW DELUGE.

'Tis the old, old story over again,
We are shower-bath'd now with perpetual rain,
Thames, Severn, and Trent conspire, and fain
Would drown our municipalities.
To the Patriarch NOAH, we'd say, "Ah, no!"
But the Sun won't come, and the rain won't go,
And the Summerless year begins to grow
A mass of dismal realities.

Now, can a fellow be jolly and gay,
And pretty things to his sweetheart say,
When "the rain it raineth every day"
With a vicious regularity?
Can you gladden at wit from a Lady's lip,
When the sound outside is, Drip, drip, drip!
And sciatica hath you on the hip,
And a gleam of the Sun's a rarity?

Why, where's the fun of a merry lunch?
(As well mere bread and bacon munch.)
And where's the radiance of *Mr. Punch?
(As well read DOCTOR KENEALY!)
East wind making your fibres throb,
Rain like a school-girl's sulky sob,—
You drink mulled claret, and sit by your hob,
And feel like a martyr, really.

"Rivers, arise!" So MILTON said.†
Fain would we have them keep their bed,
And down to the sea be safely led;
But they bring us all the shivers—
And we cry, "O Member for Greenwich, please,
Having disestablished Churches and trees,
Bring us a little quiet and ease
By disestablishing rivers."

* Always there, O rhymer! Read Punch, and defy rain and all other miseries of human life.

† College Vacation Exercise: Anno ætatis undeviginti.

MUSICAL.

THE questions which naturally suggest themselves to all inquiring minds, on perusing the following advertisement from a contemporary—

BOARD (partial) wanted in musical family, by Young Gentleman, where he can practise singing. Full particulars to "Music"— are various. What sort of a voice does the Young Gentleman possess? Is he a tenor, a baritone, or a bass? Will he request Maud to come into the garden, after—a long way after—the manner of MR. SIMS REEVES? Will he inform the musical family, in a way not at all suggestive of MR. SANTLEY, that it is his wedding morning? or will he acquaint them, in sepulchral tones, that hearts of oak are his ships? Does he accompany himself, or has that to be done for him? Does he wish to sing solos, or to join in duets with the musical daughters of the musical family? If the latter, is he good-looking? and what are his prospects? Will he practise in the mornings, or will the evenings content him? Will he sing in bed? Will he take a rest on Sundays, or will he then turn his attention to hymns and anthems? Does he sing French, German, Italian? or does he confine himself to English? Will he promise not to sing comic songs? Is his partial board to include beat-up eggs, troches, STOLBERG'S invaluable lozenges, and other compounds good for the throat?

These questions ought to be answered; although, for our own part, we cannot imagine a more delightful resident in the bosom of one's family than a Young Gentleman who wants to practise singing.

"Hail to the Chief who, in Trouble, Advances."

A TELEGRAM informs the Public that "The Uncle of the SHAH OF PERSIA has arrived in Constantinople." Mr. Punch is not aware whether the SULTAN OF TURKEY has an "Uncle." If he have, what a lot of unredeemed pledges he should have on hand just now! But what a godsend must his visit be to the SULTAN in his present state of impecuniosity, if the Commander of the Faithful has anything left on which to raise money!

Digitized by Google

A VOICE FROM THE CLOUDS.

JUPITER PLUVIUS. "STORE YOUR FLOODS, AND EMBANK YOUR RIVERS; AND THIS MISERY WOULD PROVE A BLESSING!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

OUR WATERY WASTE.

T the Entrance of a Corn-Market.

Farmers Mayflower and Marigold.

Marigold. How bist?

Mayflower. Middlun. Thinks I got a touch o' the lumbagy. 'Tis about, I hears, a good dale jest now. How bist thee, this here plaaguy weather?

Marigold. Purty fairish consider'n.

Mayflower. Terreeable dale o' wet we 've a had.

Marigold. Ees; what ye med call a extry 'lowance from the Clark o' the Weather, or St. Swithun.

Mayflower. Things is come'n sarious wi' all these here floods. 'Tis ruanaashun fur farmers. No gitt'n the whate into the ground. What can 's do?

Marigold. Ah, that 's moor than you 'll find in Moore's Almanac—or Zadkiel's either.

Mayflower. Some talks about call'n upon the Archbishop o' Canterbury and the Clargy to put up praayers for fair weather.

Marigold. Yaa!

Mayflower. Yaa? What dost say "yaa" for? Bist thee a haythen?

Marigold. Haythen; not I. They be moor like haythens as thinks by praay'n to git the coorses o' natur alter'd for to suit their privut convaniunce, and 'commodate the sazuns to their lazinus and ignorance—which they wun't. Why, that there 's just what the anshunt haythens used to do—didn't 'um?—praay'n for change o' weather to old—what d 'ye call un?—Joopiter.

Mayflower. Why thee dostn't hold wi' Daddy Longlegs, in the children's nusserry book, as oodn't say his praayers at all—dost?

Marigold. Not by no manes. I only says doan't praay agin the weather it plaze goodness to send us. What I be for praay'n for is sense and understandun, whatever 's sent, always to larn and know how to meak the best on't. Talk o' praay'n for fair weather now! Why, as like as not, in little moor nor six months' time they 'll be cryun out and wantun to praay for raain. Raain, itself, is a preshus good thing.

Mayflower. Ees, but we 've a ben have'n a preshous sight too much of a good thing. All this here wet is, I says, too good for the turmuts, and too bad for the graain.

Marigold. We can't ha' too much of a good thing, if we knows what to do wi' it. If we doan't, good turns to bad, like as when a feller, wi' ate'n and drinkun too many good things, wauverlooads his stummick. Here 's all this here raain we 've a had swampun the fields and floodun the medders here and elsewhere, besides plaay'n old Goosebury, I be told, among the wharves and pleaces along the banks o' the River up in Town. S'pose the Rivers was all proppurly banked up, that oodn't never a happened. And s'pose we'd got our medders and fields every one on um well draained so as for all the wauverflow for to run into tanks and reservoys. That oodn't be too much of a good thing, then, 'ood ut?

Mayflower. No, sartunly 'toodn't—there 's zummut in that.

Marigold. Then eversomuch raain 'ood be little if any too much of a good thing for the presunt, and none too much for the futer, but a doosid good thing altogether, and raly a gurt massy. Praps if the water we lets run to waste and do mischuf was saved for use, relidgus farmers 'ood now be proposun thanksgiv'ns for, instead o' prayers agin, abundance o' raain.

Mayflower. Loramassy, mun, what a fancy! Bissunt gett'n a little into the clouds? Thee bist raythertoo much a feelosofer, I be afeard, for me.

Marigold. Well, but still there 's the fact as are a fool med zee, that uncommon wet could aisy be made a blessun on if people chose to't, instead o' sufferin' on't, like we mostly do, to be a cuss. Dost see that?

Mayflower. Why ees, I thinks I sees purty well what you manes.

Marigold. That what we farmers, and others as thinks theirselves many on 'um, wiser than farmers, ought to do for our own intur'st, and the gin'ral good, is to zet to at improvemunts fur storun up the superflus water of a raainy sazun when ut comes, agin a time o' drought—when we shall be glad on't.

Mayflower. Aa! Putt'n by raain fur a shiny day, as the say'n 'ood be turned hind part afore.

Marigold. That 's the pint. I thinks now I 've manidged to bate that much into thy head. There, now goo thy ways, and any donkey thee meet'st on the rhwooad whoam, as needs to be taught, thee try and do un the same kindness. But talkun so much about wet, I be dry.

Mayflower. Ees, thee bist, raythor.

Marigold. Well, there then, come wauver the way to the "White Hart," and ha' a drap o' beer. [Exeunt ambo. Curtain.

THE LAW AND THE LADY—OF THE MANOR;

Or, the Menaced Maypole of Ashford-Carbonell.

"The old English practice of dancing around a Maypole has been solemnly vindicated before the High Court of Justice; and the right of some Shropshire parishioners to a particular piece of land whereon to so disport themselves has been established against the contention of the Lady of the Manor."—Daily Telegraph: Hall v. Nottingham and Others.

The Men of Ashford-Carbonell they doughtily declared,
That where their Maypole had been raised, that pole should still be reared;
But the Lady of the Manor and her myrmidons of Law
Took counsel with a view to strike those villagers with awe.

Is it in England's favoured land, on turf by Britons trod,
Where "proputty"'s a fetish, and the landlord as a god,
That resistance to the sacred rights of owners of the soil
Is found among its rustics and its humble sons of toil?

Alas! e'en so; the times have changed; Lord Darnley knows it well:
And she learns it too, the Lady high of Ashford-Carbonell;
While, sadder still, Law's powers refuse an owner to support—
And the great High Court of Justice backs the Ludlow County Court!

So the Parish beats the Lady, for the big-wigged Barons found
That reserving here and there a space for recreation-ground
Was a "reasonable" practice, and that "proputty's" tight clutch
Must be relaxed, nor landlords play the Ahab overmuch.

Hard lines for injured owners! Ay! But tenure of earth's soil
Must be viewed with other eyes than robbers' swag or warriors spoil;
From "Custom immemorial" as clear a right may flow
As any Norman William or Eighth Harry could bestow.

If "proputty" were but compelled to render back in full
All it has cribbed from "common-land," how long a face 'twould pull!
How many a Lord-of-Manors would have to tithe his hoards,
And make bonfires of his fences and his threatening trespass-boards!

O Lady of the Manor fair of Ashford-Carbonell,
Though you lose that longed-for acre, and pay legal costs as well,
What think you is the usufruct of one of many fields
To the pleasure which the village-green to landless hundreds yields?

Madam, when next that Maypole 's reared in its accustomed place,
To play the Lady Bountiful, with a British Matron's grace,
Were worthier of your Sex and State than waging stubborn fight
With a plucky Shropshire parish for a more than doubtful right.

Naval Intelligence.

"It is stated at Chatham to be the intention of the Admiralty shortly to commence the construction of a circular iron-clad ship of the Popoff type."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Build on the Popoff plan—but fate forbid
That ship should pop off as the Vanguard did!

FROM A PUZZLED PRACTITIONER.

Dear Mr. Punch,

How can there be an Attorney-General when the Judicature Act puts an end to Attorneys?

Your Constant Reader,

A Solicitor (for Information).

Digitized by Google

THAT "EXPLAINS IT."

Green. "HOW IS IT, BROWN, YOU ALWAYS HAVE SUCH SPLENDID FRUIT FROM YOUR GARDEN? I EXHIBIT, AND CARRY OFF CUPS AND PRIZES (AT LEAST MY GARDENER DOES, FOR I ONLY SEE IT IN PRINT), BUT I NEVER HAVE SUCH FRUIT AS THIS ON MY TABLE!"

Brown. "SIMPLEST THING IN THE WORLD, OLD FELLOW. I KEEP A GARDENER FOR MY GARDEN; YOU KEEP A GARDEN FOR YOUR GARDENER!"

THE HAWARDEN POST-BAG.

"Last Saturday morning I was tempted to count the number of letters and packets brought to me by the post, and that number reached the moderate amount of forty-two."—MR. GLADSTONE, at Greenwich.

WE have been favoured with the following more particular details of the contents of MR. GLADSTONE'S Budget:—

1. Letter from an Oxford Undergraduate, asking MR. GLADSTONE'S opinion on that disputed passage in the Iliad (XXV., 313), which begins "Τις ποτε τον προσεφη," &c.

2. Packet containing a five-act MS. Play, called Gunpowder Plot, a novel in three volumes, entitled Maud's Marriage, and an epic poem in twelve books, Aurungzebe; or, the Last of the Moguls,—with a request that MR. GLADSTONE would be good enough to read each carefully through, and favour the Authoress with his opinion as to the particular branch of literature she should finally adopt.

3. Note, begging MR. GLADSTONE to inform the writer whether he had seen MR. IRVING as Macbeth, and what was his estimate of that performance.

4. Bulky parcel of official papers and documents, with an autograph letter from the Sublime Porte, imploring MR. GLADSTONE to occupy a palace on the Bosphorus, and take the entire control of the revenue and expenditure of Turkey.

5. Despatch from the KHEDIVE, entreating MR. GLADSTONE to make Cairo his home until all financial difficulties in Egypt were satisfactorily adjusted.

6. Letter from the Treasurer and Secretary of the Muddleforth Friendly Society (the Free Roamers), earnestly begging MR. GLADSTONE to examine the Statement of Accounts for the year 1874-5, and advise the Members as to the course they should take in the face of a deficit amounting to £294 10*s.* 9*d.*

7. Letter from the Churchwardens of Stolethorpe, begging MR. GLADSTONE to remonstrate with the new Rector on his Romanising practices.

8. Letter from the Parishioners of Slumberham, proposing to MR. GLADSTONE to expostulate with the Curate in charge on his Broad Church views.

9, 10. Prospectuses of the Xeres, Oporto, Bordeaux, and Epernay Amalgamated Vintage Company (Limited), and the Bythesea Aquarium and Winter Promenade.

11. Patterns of Winter Trousers and Overcoats from an advertising Tailor.

12. Begging Circular from the Incumbent of the District Church of St. Dionysius, Shuttleford, asking for help towards the enlargement of the Vestry.

13. Invitation from the Committee of the Bumpsted Athenæum (Salop) to take the Chair at their Annual Soirée in January.

14. Appeal from the Members of the Whirlingham Lyceum (Lancashire), to aid that struggling Society by the delivery of an Address or Lecture in the Corn Exchange, in the week after Christmas. Subject suggested—"Reminiscences of an ex-Premier."

15. Letter from a staunch Protestant, soliciting a short, but comprehensive, epitome of the Lives of the Popes.

16. Packet of Italian newspapers (Papal).

17. Packet of Italian newspapers (anti-Papal).

18, 19, 20. Letters from Constituents, setting forth the abilities and merits of their sons; and urging MR. GLADSTONE to use his influence to obtain for them Private Secretaryships, or advantageous posts in mercantile houses, or travelling tutorships, or desirable colonial appointments.

21, 22, 23. Letters asking for Letters of Introduction for Greece, Rome, and Japan.

24, 25. Requests for Autographs.

26, 27, 28. Letters soliciting MR. GLADSTONE'S votes as a supporter of the Civil Service Messengers' Widows' Annuities Fund, the Fine Art Dealers' Benevolent Institution, and the School for the Daughters of Classic Commentators.

29. Catalogue of a magnificent collection of china, glass, and earthenware.

Digitized by Google

THE SHORTEST WAY THE BEST.

Mamma (to Ethel, on their way to the latter's first Party), "Now, mind, Darling, if you see any nice Things on the Table that you'd like to Eat, you mustn't Ask for them!"

Ethel. "O No, Mamma!—I'll Take them!"

RECIPROCITY IN PULPIT-ROOM.

There has been lately going on in the Times a controversy respecting the "Interchange of Pulpits"; whether or not it is lawful and right for a Clergyman of the Church of England to preach in a meeting-house, or, by his leave, for a Dissenting Minister to hold forth in a church. This appears to be a matter that had best be left to the discretion of a discreet Bishop. To Bishop Punch it would seem one thing for a Clergyman to change pulpits with such a Dissenter as the late Dr. Binney, another to reciprocate in like manner with an emissary from Brigham Young. The appearance of Mr. Newman Hall or Mr. Spurgeon in a Low Churchman's pulpit would be something considerably different from the apparition, in a Ritualist's, of Monsignor Capel. But is not the one just as legal as the other? At present, with regard to the interchange in question, all that appears quite certain is, that a Parson has no right to change pulpits with an Auctioneer.

HUNT AFTER BYRON.

My boat has run ashore,
And my barque's beneath the sea,
And I'm told I never more
Must rule the Admiraltee.

There's a sigh from those who love me,
And a smile from those who hate;
And the man who's put above me
Will tremble at my fate;

But though Commons rail around me,
They still shall hear me on:
Though the Upper House confound me,
It hath seats that may be won.

My boat has run ashore,
And my barque's beneath the sea,
And I fear I never more
Shall rule the Admiraltee!

A Negative Compliment.—Parell House, Bombay (since the Prince of Wales made it his head-quarters), is to be called "Nonpareil House."

30. Offer to dispose of a superb picture, by that rare old Florentine master, Capo di Monte—subject, "Daphne Changed into a Laurustinus."

31. Price list of an importer of choice cigars.

32. Proof-sheets of a new translation of the Odyssey into English hexameters, with a request that Mr. Gladstone would kindly compare it word for word with the original, and mark (with suggestions) any passages which might strike him as deficient in spirit or wanting in accuracy.

33, 34, 35. Translations of a recent article in the new Church Review into Italian, French, and German.

36. List (from Rome) of the latest additions to the Index Expurgatorius.

37. Invitation to dine with the Lord Mayor.

38, 39, 40. Applications from photographers and illustrated papers.

41. Notice of recent excavations in the Troad, with photographs of Helen's pocket mirror, Paris's crook, King Priam's corkscrew, &c.

42. Punch.

VILLA-NOUS.

There is a strong inclination at St. Petersburgh to build an Imperial residence in the environs of Constantinople. This looks like Russ in Urbe with a vengeance.

My Awful Dad (by a river-side resident Cockney).—Father Thames, in a flood.

HOMAGE TO TALENT.

Signor Verdi, of Trovatore-Traviata-Rigoletto fame, has been created Senator of the kingdom of Italy, in recognition of his superb musical talents. The Happy Thought has fructified. Similar (proposed) appointments are already telegraphed to us by our Correspondents in the different Capitals of Europe:—

Monsieur Offenbach, whose oratorios, La Belle Hélène, Orphée aux Enfers, &c., place him at the head of religious composers, will, it is said, be offered by the Pope the next Red Hat vacant.

Monsieur Gounod has accepted the appointment of Minister of Agriculture in the first Government of the good time coming in France.

Mr. Arthur Sullivan has been recommended by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh for the Civil Lordship of the Admiralty.

Mr. Frederic Clay, whose Treasury experience gives him peculiar claims to employment in the higher branches of National finance, is likely to be named for the post of Chancellor of the Exchequer in the first æsthetic Administration that is formed.

Herr Richard Wagner is likely to be appointed Envoy from Bavaria to the Court of St. James's, as a compliment to the Music of the Future.

ANYTHING BUT A DRY REMARK.

Independence is always much to be coveted; but during the late floods to have been able to "Paddle your own Canoe" must have proved more than usually beneficial.

The English Flag of the Future.—The School-Standards.

Digitized by Google

A GOOD PLAIN COOK!

MR. J. C. BUCKMASTER, that most energetic pioneer of civilisation, has recently been visiting Glasgow. The object of his journey to the North was to deliver his excellent Lecture upon "the Art of Cookery"—a subject which is peculiarly his own. His remarks were (as usual) characterised by wisdom, mirth, and tact; and nothing could possibly have been better than his selections from Scottish poetry. It is well known that LORD MAYOR COTTON is a bard of no mean order. Consequently, we may shortly expect to see published at the Mansion House Lines on a Turtle, and a Meal with the Common Council, but until the appearance of the two anticipated pieces specified, the following lines will certainly bear off the palm as the best culinary poem of modern times:—

"O leese me on the canny Scotch,
Wha first contrived without a botch
To make the gusty good hotch-potch.
The French mounseer or English loon
When they come daunderin' through the toun,
Wi' smirks and smacks they gulp it doun,
And lick their lips fu' brawly."

But MR. BUCKMASTER'S prose is even better than his verse. At Glasgow he was addressing an audience composed of all classes of the people. Under these circumstances he could not have chosen his words more wisely. To quote the report—

MR. BUCKMASTER said:—

"The cookery schools which I am anxious to establish are intended to teach people the virtue and religion of domestic life. How many ill-natured words, quarrels, suits in the Divorce Courts, and even murders, have originated over a badly-cooked dinner? How many happy marriages, how many hard-and-fast friendships, have been formed over a nicely-cooked dinner! No man is so dangerous as a hungry, ignorant man when he returns home weary and exhausted, finds everything in disorder, his wife uncleaned, a mass of greasy odds and ends turned out for his supper, the sight of which is enough to make a cannibal sea-sick. (Laughter.) Can you wonder at him using bad language to his wife, and immediately setting out for the nearest public-house? And do you think that any amount of schooling, teaching, tracts, sermons, or tea-parties will efface from the memory of his children the horrid curses they have heard under such circumstances, and the dreadful scenes they have witnessed? All this misery and demoralisation proceed not from poverty, but from ignorance of those duties which every woman ought to know how properly to perform before she undertakes the responsibilities of a wife. And, if I were a despot, no woman should ever be allowed to marry unless she was able to cook. (Laughter.)"

And, although the "canny bodies" of Glasgow laughed, MR. BUCKMASTER is perfectly right. Take two men of similar tastes, who have lived similar lives, and give them two dinners with the same ingredients—one dinner badly cooked, and the other cooked to perfection, and you will find that he who eats the well-cooked dinner will be a hundred per cent. happier than the other.

Try the eater of the badly-cooked dinner first. He arrives tired and hungry at his own home. He sits down, and the first discovery he makes is that the soup is cold.

"As usual," he says, with a sigh, "soup cold. Never can get it hot!"

"You ought to speak to the servants yourself."

"Well," he continues, "after all, it is not so cold as my principal client. I met him this morning, and he cut me! The soup reminded me of it."

The fish appears.

"Hm! not fresh! It never is fresh. The sort of fish that wants renewing,—and that reminds me that a bill for two thousand pounds comes due to-morrow, and I don't know where to get the money from with which to meet it."

The joint arrives.

"Burnt to a cinder, of course! And that reminds me that that scamp of a son of mine has been burning his fingers on the turf!"

The pudding appears.

"I really can't stand this! It is always the same! Nasty and expensive. I shall be off to the Club."

And the bad diner disappears, and returns accompanied by a policeman seeing him home at three in the morning.

Take, on the other hand, the eater of the well-cooked dinner.

He arrives tired and hungry at his own home. He sits down, and the first discovery he makes is that the soup is hot.

"As usual!" he exclaims, with a smile. "Soup hot. Never get it cold in this house."

"You should praise the servants, it is their doing."

"Well, it is not so warm as the greeting I got from my UNCLE HARRY this morning. He was quite affectionate, and asked after the children most markedly, my dear. Wanted to know their Christian names in full."

The fish appears.

"Quite fresh! But not fresher than the air of Brighton, my love,—we will take a holiday there next week. It will do you good."

The joint arrives.

"Done to a turn. And that reminds me that that good-hearted boy of ours has really taken a turn for the better. I gave him a good lecture to-day, and am certain of his reformation. I never felt happier in my life. Another slice, dear."

The pudding appears.

"Now, this is really an admirable dish. Pastry excellent. Well, I shall spend a quiet evening with you, and break my appointment at the Club. Who would care for billiards with such a happy home as this to rest in!"

And so the evening grows into night, and all is good-nature and contentment.

That is the idea—is it not, MR. BUCKMASTER?

Cheap at the Money.

MR. PLIMSOLL writes to the Times of last Wednesday—"A single telegram from the British Government to our Consuls and Vice-Consuls, authorising them to spend £2 2*s.* on the proper inspection of each grain-loading vessel, is all that is required to make the Act of 1875 virtually operative, and so to save many lives. The neglect of this will consign them to a watery grave." Of course the British Government has, before this, thanked MR. PLIMSOLL, and sent the telegram. Punch is waiting to hear of the receipt of it.

Clerical Nosology.

AT the opening Autumnal Assembly of the Church Conference, the other day in Liverpool, the Chairman, MR. THOMAS R. ANDREWS, said, with reference to the future work of the Society, that "they had a number of typical cases of Ritualism ready to be submitted to the new Judge when he entered upon office." Is MR. ANDREWS a medical gentleman? He talks like one. "Typical cases of Ritualism"—as much as to say that Ritualism is a complaint in the Church; a clerical epidemic. A very neat and scientific way of putting it.

An Illusion of the Rink.

ALONG the Rink careering fast,
How women hoax their lords and masters:
SMITH thought an angel glided past,
And it was MRS. SMITH on castors!

Hunted.

WHEN the First Lord of the Admiralty was raised to his exalted position, Mr. Punch was good enough to celebrate it by observing, "The Hunt is up!" From the present tone of public opinion, Mr. P. feels constrained to fear that it is all up with HUNT.

Shakspeare on the Turks.

"And every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute."—Falstaff, Henry the Fourth, Part II., Act iii. sc. 2.

FROM which it appears that the Turk is an old defaulter, and the Bondholders ought to have known better.

TOWN AND GOWN.

DEATH shall be Mayor, the Cambridge Council saith:
The Undergraduates' cry is "War to Death!"

Digitized by Google

BLANK FIRING.

Ancient Sportsman (whose Sight is not what it used to be). "PICK 'EM UP, JAMES, PICK 'EM UP! WHY DON'T YOU PICK 'EM UP?"

Veteran Keeper. "'CAUSE THERE BEAN'T ANY DOWN, MY LORD!"

THE ETERNAL JACK-IN-THE-BOX.

"The Lord Mayor [of Dublin] observed that MR. SULLIVAN was an 'eternal Jack-in-the-Box.'"

ARRAH, thin, MASTER SULLIVAN, what have you done,
Such a wonderful wicked name to have won,
The peaceful atmosphere troubling?
Now, Gramachree! (whatever that means)
There 's a gentleman tired of such noisy scenes,
And that 's the Lord Mayor of Dublin.

Dublin 's a city of quiet and peace,
Where they easily might disestablish police,
Since nobody cares for a shindy;
But when an O'Connell Committee meets,
There 's a general row you may hear in the streets,
Though the weather is wild and windy.

Up they jump, one after one,
Each eager to share in the fighting fun,
And the row becomes—supernal!
But SULLIVAN 's worst of the party there;
He 's up each minute, till called by the Mayor
"A Jack-in-the-Box eternal."

In the days of long-vanished Irish war,
Punch had an anagram, DANIEL R.,
For Ireland, devoted to DANIEL:
But times have changed, and old KING DAN
Is to our mere mutinous Irishman
As lordly mastiff to spaniel.

He had a voice that the world must hear,
A lion-like head, with vision clear,
And a good strong brain for kernel:
Often wrong, he was seldom weak;
His courage never came down to "cheek,"
Like a Jack-in-the-Box eternal.

Ah, never mind! To the Jack-in-the-Box,
Who against the roof his thick skull knocks,
Punch grants absolution plenary.
What SAXON dare say that it is not right
To have whiskey galore and a good free fight
In honour of DAN'S Centenary?

THE CHEAPEST MODE OF LIVING.—On Flats.

A QUESTION FOR MR. CROSS.

THE subjoined questions and answers afford a specimen of rural and juvenile intelligence:—

"'How old are you?' 'I don't know.'—'Can you read?' 'Yes, a little bit.'—'Can you write?' 'No.'—'Can you reckon?' 'No.'—'How many are twice two?' 'Seven' (laughter).—'Try again, two and two?' 'Eight' (renewed laughter).—'Do you know how many commandments there are?' 'No.'—'Do you know the ninth commandment?' 'No.'—'Did you ever hear anything about bearing false witness?' 'No.'—'Ever before the Magistrates?' ''Ees.'—'Did they ask you to kiss a book?' ''Ees.'—'Do you know why you kissed it?' 'No.'—'Did the Magistrates tell you that it was a testament, and you called God to witness about speaking the truth?' 'No.'"

The examiner in the foregoing catechism was a MR. THOMAS BLAKE, of Ross, in Herefordshire. He cited it at a public meeting there, as illustrating, in particular, the moral and intellectual fitness to give evidence on oath, of SAMUEL RUDGE, a little clown, ten years of age, the principal witness against EMILY DAVIES, a child of thirteen, sentenced, on the 17th of September last, by the Ross Magistrates, to fourteen days' imprisonment in the County Gaol, and thereafter to four years' detention in a Reformatory, for stealing a few plums. MASTER RUDGE was an accomplice in this extensive robbery, and turned Queen's evidence.

MR. BLAKE also read, as below, part of a letter from MR. MINETT, Clerk to the Magistrates, who pronounced the lenient sentence which occasioned the above-mentioned meeting, held to denounce it and get it rescinded:—

"You have been condemning the Justices upon very meagre information, being information given in open court. The Justices have other information, and upon that information they have acted."

We have lately seen a general fusion of Law and Equity. A particular instance of it is afforded by the Ross Magistrates in dealing with the case of EMILY DAVIES, only Law prevails; especially in respect of the evidence, oral and hearsay, this heard out of Court, on which they convicted her. The evidence last referred to—their "other information"—appears, from the report of the meeting on her behalf, to have been false information, affecting the character of her parents; a sort of information which, in fact, was defamation. Is it so? This, surely, is a question for the HOME SECRETARY to consider; for awful as the crime is of which EMILY DAVIES was convicted, and imperfectly as it may have been expiated by only fourteen days' imprisonment in gaol, yet, if her parents are really respectable people, is it quite fair to them, to say nothing of her, that she should not be forthwith replaced under their care, instead of being kept four years longer away from home shut up in a Reformatory? Perhaps MR. CROSS will deign to answer this crucial question.

CRIMINAL COURT COSTUME.

SAYS, very properly, the reporter for the Standard, describing the scene last week at the Central Criminal Court:—

"Chacun à son goût: but that taste can hardly be deemed praiseworthy which prompts elegantly-dressed, and some young and charming Ladies to crowd and bustle at the Old Bailey for seats on such an occasion as the trial for one of the most repulsive murder cases of the present century."

With all our boasted progress of feminine enlightenment, one might have fancied that Young Ladies would have nowadays known better than to scramble for admission to a place where a revolting case of murder was on trial. One would think that elegant dresses might be displayed with far more fitness in the precincts of St. James's Court than in the Court of Newgate. Should the taste increase for attending courts of justice when murder cases are on trial, we may expect that the Court milliners will take advantage of it. Elegant dresses will be advertised for such occasions, and pretty names will be invented for criminal costumes. Robes à la Calcraft will be considered de rigueur. Young Ladies will array themselves in shining satin dresses made after the manner of that worn by MRS. MANNING on the memorable morning of her execution; with, perhaps, white cotton head-dresses, formed in Newgate fashion, and round each snowy throat a necklace, knotted à la mode Jack Ketch.

Digitized by Google

MONEY'S WORTH FOR THE MONEY.

"Egyptian Government sold to English Government Suez Canal shares for £4,000,000 sterling. Minister is authorised to draw on ROTHSCHILD at sight."—Friday's Telegram.

S our Indian door-key we mean to hold fast,
BRITANNIA'S will she has now found a way for;
On our shop-keeping instincts contempt let them cast,
But who 'll take what we've forked out four millions to pay for?

Such a sum if it suit JOHN BULL'S int'rest to pay,
It is clear it suits Egypt's 'cute Chief to receive.
Now KHEDIVE upon ROTHSCHILD may draw any day,
We must take care that nobody draws on KHEDIVE.

THE COMPENSATIONS OF LIFE.

RECENTLY, in his travels, Mr. Punch met with a gentleman who declared that he was an ancient Druid (not in MR. CARDWELL'S sense of the word), and that he had helped to build Stonehenge. He looked dilapidated, but not quite so old as that perplexing edifice. He did not object in the least, when Mr. Punch—who, when wandering, finds small generosities often to have their reward—proposed a glass of ale. If he was an ancient Druid, and had therefore lived before ale was invented, how delighted he must have been to know that to some brilliant genius had occurred the happy marriage of malt and hops!

This Druid talked most wisely, as might be expected of so ancient a philosopher. He propounded several theories, one of which was the Theory of Universal Compensation. Others may follow, if Mr. Punch finds the Druid's philosophy appreciated. He maintained, being an Optimist, that whatever happens has its compensation—and that you are always better off than you were before. He descended from the lofty pinnacle of Druidic antiquity, and deigned to give from modern time examples of this great Theory of Compensation. Thus they ran:—

1. You acknowledge yourself a descendant of ADAM and EVE. You cannot, therefore, have any original sin, and may do just as you like.

2. You are "something in the City." It is very sad, but it means a good many thousands a year.

3. You are a great poet. Terrible thought! But then nobody reads your books.

4. You are the Belle of the Season, and are modestly afraid lest you grow conceited. The Beaux of the Season prefer the dinner-bell.

5. You are the only man who can act Hamlet. Console yourself by the thought that this is the belief of every man who ever acted or even aspired to act.

6. You envy MR. DISRAELI his pride of place. Would you like to have to scratch a Russian to find the Tartar underneath, or to be plagued by the Heathen Chinee?

7. You envy MR. GLADSTONE his retirement and renown. Go cut down an oak in the forenoon, my dear boy, and disestablish the POPE in the afternoon, and translate a book of the Iliad after dinner.

8. You meet an elderly wiseacre, who will talk about the Herzegovina, which has been invented to depreciate Turks. Tell him it is where they grow Angostura bitters.

9. You go to a pic-nic, which happens, by the fatuity of mankind, to be without its central idea—a corkscrew. You are compensated by showing how deftly you can knock off the necks of bottles with a carving-knife.

10. You find somebody warmly attentive to your wife. Ah, but your wife is the wisest little woman in the world, and is sure to do MR. ALIQUIS a great deal of good.

11. Your banker is insolvent. How excellent an opportunity of deferring sine die the payment of your "outstanding liabilities!"

12. Your Great-Aunt's second cousin twice removed is dead. Of course you can't give any dinners just at present.

13. One English Iron-clad runs into another. If it so easily sunk a friend, what would it do to an enemy?

14. That same English Iron-clad did its best to commit suicide. There was one man on board with brains—a fact to be remembered in the British Navy.

15. It never rains but it pours—and it always pours. Ducks are happy.

16. You lose your copy of Punch in the Post. Think of the moral and mental elevation which reading it will produce on the Post-Office Clerk or village Postmistress who has stolen it.

MOTTO FOR HER MAJESTY'S SHIPS.—"One down, t' other come on!"

Digitized by Google

FASHIONABLE COMPLAINT.

Young Groom. "So your Gov'nor's out again! Been amiss, I heard."

Old Groom. "Well, the Doctor said as there wasn't much the Matter, but he might call it a 'Bronkital Affectation.' If it were you or me, Jim, I daresay we should call it a Cold."

THE POLITICAL PAD.

"'Progress,' piebald colt by 'Freedom,' out of 'Caution.' Owner, Mr. John Bull. Colours, Blue or Buff, according to circumstances."—St. Stephen's Stud Book.

"The Conservative majority, I think, may well be likened to a man on horseback, who, while he certainly may make some advance on his journey, prefers sitting with his face to the horse's tail."—Mr. Forster, at Bradford.

The Political Pad is a singular steed,
Not Pegasus boasts of more various paces.
The Hippogriff beats it in breeding indeed,
Claims pedigree prouder, and daintier graces.
But bottom and stay, with a Protean way
Of changing its colours, its paces, its jockeys,
Are points of our nag. It is risky to play
At thimble-rig, "poker," or "nicky-nack-nockies";
But seers may well shun the Great National Course,
And tipsters eschew the Political Horse!

He will run well enough in the Buff or the Blue
For a time,—though his distance the sharps cannot settle.
Yet Jocks who are up to the mount are but few:
A seat like a Centaur's, grip, judgment, and mettle,
He'll want who would back this redoubtable hack;
And, given a Perseus with spur, whip, and bridle,
He'll fly—yet possesses a curious knack
Of pulling up short with a shy or a sidle,
Which gives the best rider a nastyish spill,
While Progress- old 'oss—jogs along at his will.

What jockeys have tried him! Deft Tiverton Pam,
Who cared not to push him beyond a brisk canter,
Kept saddle some time, for the horse like a lamb
Bore bit from that light-handed master of banter.
Then Bill Buff, a right Jehu, set spurs to his flanks,
And sent him along a rare rattler indeed—
Stiff hedges, stone walls, posts and rails, ditches, banks,
Nothing daunted that jock, or gave check to his steed.
Till the spurring and pace tired the latter, who then
Gently grounded Bill Buff, and gave seat to Blue Ben.

Blue Ben is a jock of the Tiverton race,
Light hand, quiet seat, and no passion for spurring;
He takes the old plater along at a pace
More steady than showy, more easy than stirring.
But jog-trot or not, there's a certain slow lot
Who from Progress would change the nag's name to Reaction:
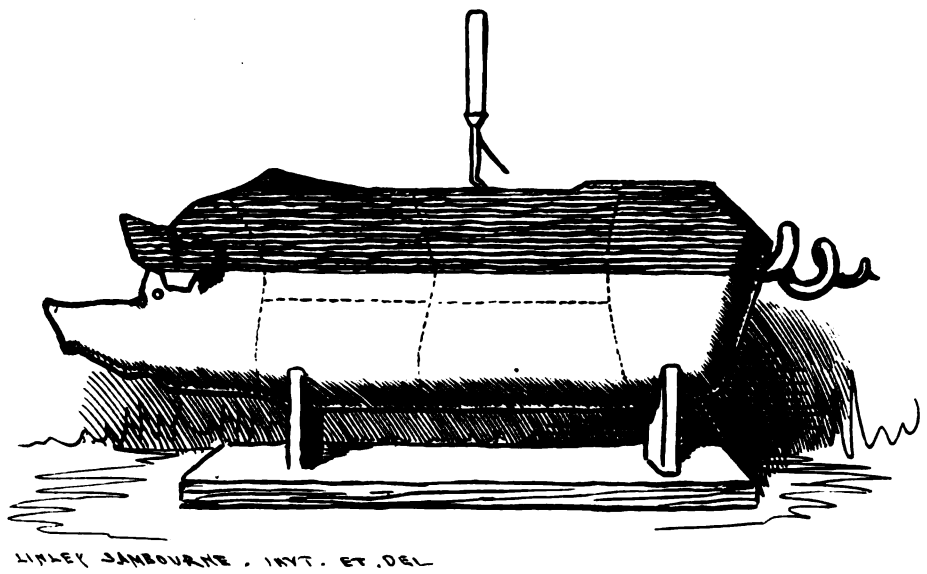
And thinking the pace even yet is too hot,
Would look upon "pulling" with much satisfaction.
Nay, had they their way, this Conservative class,
Would put the Political Pad out to grass.



But although he may lag, the Political Nag
Has an eye to the goal, and prefers to keep moving;
And Ben, the Blue Jock, is a bit of a wag,
Who may find any day that the pace needs improving.
Ben knows very well did he try to turn back
The steed who beneath him so softly will amble,
He would find himself prone on the turf in a crack,
And Ben is no flat with his chances to gamble.
But lest her Blue backers of patience should fail,
He will ride, if they please, "with his face to the tail!"

The Right Man in the Right Place.

"On Monday, 22nd Nov., Mr. W. G. Cross, Druggist, was elected Mayor of Shrewsbury."

The Municipal Chair having, to judge by the difficulty of getting anyone to take it, become a drug in the market, the Shrewsbury Corporation have very properly selected a Druggist to fill it.

Digitized by Google

ANOTHER SHIP OF THE FUTURE.

(The latest thing in the way of Suggestion to the Admiralty Constructors.)

Diagram showing arrangement of joints and novel screw-propeller.

BUT TOBY ALWAYS UNDERSTOOD THAT PIGS CUT THEIR OWN THROATS IF THEY TRIED TO SWIM.

A SPECIMEN OF LAW.

A JURY of British Tradesmen has made MR. LESLIE, M.P., liable for some two thousand five hundred pounds' worth of specimen plants, bought by his Gardener at the seller's price, but valued by authority at one-third of that amount, and ordered without MR. LESLIE'S consent. Their verdict had the concurrence of BARON BRAMWELL, and has been confirmed by the LORD CHIEF BARON. Law may be Law; but, if Equity is to prevail over Law, has it prevailed in this instance? In a letter to the Times, MR. LESLIE asks "What are specimen plants?" One of them, and a most glaring one, is the plant which has been put upon himself.

Fashionable Fixtures for 1876.

(Dedicated to those who sat on the Bench at a recent Trial.)

JUNE 1.—LADY SMITH'S First Ball in Belgrave Square.

June 8.—MR. WILLIAM SIKES' Trial at the Old Bailey.

June 14.—The DUCHESS OF SANSCŒUR'S Garden Party at Thameserton, for 4·30 to 6 P.M.

June 29.—MR. JEM DALTON'S "Small and Early" at Newgate, from 7·50 to 8 A.M.

JERSEY JUDGES.

AMONG things not generally known is the recent history of the Jersey Bench of Judges. Of this the Post supplies some interesting particulars in a narrative of certain truly "notable events," which have occurred during the last two years and a half. The first of these was the catastrophe of Judge No. 1:—

"MR. JOSHUA LE BAILLY (elected a Judge in 1856), who, in May, 1873 was placed as a criminal at the bar of the Court in which he had so often administered justice. He was chairman and managing director of the Mercantile Union Bank, which suspended payment in February of that year, and was charged with issuing false and fraudulent reports as to the condition of the bank, and with embezzling trust moneys under his care. He was found guilty and sentenced to five years' penal servitude."

Jersey Judge No. 2:—

"MR. ELIAS NEEL (elected in 1861) was chairman and managing director of the Joint-Stock Bank, which suspended payment in July, 1873, its collapse being hastened by that of the Mercantile Union. In November of that year MR. NEEL, who sat on the bench during the trial of his former colleague, MR. LE BAILLY, himself stood in the dock on similar charges of issuing false reports and inducing persons to take shares in the bank at the time it was in an insolvent state. The jury were divided."

Everybody must be presumed to be innocent who has not been found guilty. Still Judge No. 2 did not return from the dock to the bench.

Jersey Judge No. 3:—

"MR. WILLIAM GAUDIN, Solicitor, was elected in October, 1873, to replace MR. NEEL. Domestic troubles, and the fear of being involved in a lawsuit with a client for whom he had acted during a lengthened period in the case of La Cloche v. La Cloche, had the effect of sending him into a low state of mind, and in August of the following year he committed suicide."

Jersey Judge No. 4 was rather an improvement on some of his colleagues and predecessors:—

"MR. PHILIP DUMARESQ, elected 1869, after attending to his judicial duties for nearly two years, ceased to attend either the Court or the States, of which he was an ex-officio member."

The nonadministration of Justice is obviously better than its maladministration; a probability when the Bench is occupied by Judges who commonly have to quit it for the dock. JUDGE DUMARESQ persisted in a constant inattention to his judicial duties on the sworn plea of disability from illness:—

"His friends pressed him to resign, but he stubbornly refused, saying, 'Non, je suis Juge, et comme Juge mourirai.' At length, by repeated entreaties, he was induced to resign in February last."

The career of Jersey Judge No. 5, M. DE QUETTEVILLE, appears to have been such as to entitle him, comparatively, at least, to the respectful denomination he is described by in the statement that:—

"This gentleman was the senior Judge on the Bench (with the exception of LIEUTENANT BAILIFF BRISSON), having been elected in January, 1851."

For his history may possibly be that of a gentleman indeed, though an unfortunate one. The account of Jersey Judge No. 5 is as follows:—

"He was chairman of the Commercial Banking Company, and carried on an extensive business as a ship-owner, with fishing establishments in Newfoundland. An action has been for some time pending between him and his co-partners in the bank, who claim about £23,000 for balance of account and interest. On Saturday week several judgments were given against him in the Royal Court, and on Saturday last he gave notice of his intention to appear before M. GIBAUT, the Judge Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, with a view of making a composition with his creditors."

Let us hope that Jersey Judge No. 5 will turn out able to pay not much less than twenty shillings in the pound. "The result, however, of having had to be whitewashed, though of nothing worse than debt," will be "to render his seat on the Bench vacant." Perhaps his successor will turn out something better than either an insolvent or a criminal. It may, perhaps, be as well to observe that it is Old Jersey, the Channel Island, whose judicial bench has been adorned with the worthies above enumerated, and not New Jersey, the American State. Old Jersey, indeed, can almost show Judges with New York. MR. BUTT and MR. SULLIVAN may perhaps be induced to review their wish to reduce Ireland to the insularity of Jersey, by the example presented by the Channel Island to the St. George's Channel Island, of "Home Rule."

Irish Poultry.

IN the extraordinary account of the proceedings of the O'Connell Centenary Committee, it is narrated that MR. A. M. SULLIVAN called upon his friends to leave the room, and let them make "ducks and drakes" of the surplus, if they liked.

DUCKS and drakes of their cash
They would make, we're afraid,
For great geese of themselves
They already had made!

THE ST. LEONARD'S WILL CASE.

What Plaintiff asks for. The deed for the will.
What Defendant insists on. The will for the deed.

Digitized by Google

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(The Prince among the Pig-Stickers,—a Sketch from Life.)

ANTARRA, tantarra, the hunt is up!" for "'Tis our opening day! Up rouse ye then, my merry, merry men, for 'tis our opening day!" And, "If you're waking, call me early, call me early, Ayah dear, as I'm to go out Pig-sticking, and hope to get "first spear." "And a-sticking we did go, my boys, a-sticking we did go!" "With a heigho sticky! Hark for'ard, hark for'ard tantsticky! And this is the burthen of my song, To-day a pig must die! To-day a pig must die!!"

Just cut that up into verse, sing it, with a chorus, and see how it goes. It even woke the early Mangoes—the mango is so early that it's a proverb here "Up with the mango,"—and echoed through the farspreading chowries.

You in England haven't the vaguest idea of Pig-sticking. Ah! it is the sport of sports! You in England would send for a pork-butcher, or, rather, send to a pork-butcher, and order the pig that had already been stuck. Not so here. Pig-sticking is the national sport. Children in arms are brought up to the sound of the dark Ayahs' voices, accompanied by the tinkle of the budjerow (a native instrument of a very sweet tone, in shape something between a pillar-box and a dust-shovel),* singing in Hindostanee (what you wouldn't understand, so I translate). I give the Orientalisms as nearly as possible—

"This offspring of the female porker travelled to the place where the vendors of varieties trade publicly in their merchandise; This, the next in order of the sons of the sow, preferred to remain in the house of his parents, where he had been reared; This, his brother, sat down to a dainty meal; And, this, the next of kin, sat down, but partook not of the savoury mess; And this, the smallest of the Porco family, lifted up its voice and wept bitterly, crying 'Qwee, Qwee, Qweek!!'"

Is not this beautiful? Ah, you should hear the Florikans (a kind of Indian chorister) chanting it in their deep and wild cadences, while the Chicks dance around, keeping excellent time on their charpoys.†

Well, Sir, to the sport itself. We were aroused in the morning by the Hakims (Indian pig-huntsmen), who blew the Chont (Indian hunting-horn made of elephants' tusks), and summoned us from our comfortable Chupatties (beds).

We were all rather sleepy, having been engaged, deeply, in an Indian rubber till past four in the morning. (You know a certain distinguished Royal Personage is fond of his rubber. "Aye, there's the rub," as What 's-his-name says.) Well, Sir, I am the first to spring up, and get to boot and saddle. After a hasty breakfast (before the boot and saddle, of course), we mounted our Bhanses (horses about sixteen hands high, piebald), and flourishing our bunds (Indian hunting crops, made out of stalks of maize), we cantered gaily towards the covert side.

Here the Dewanee Khâs (or pig-beater), informed us in a low voice, or what they call in India a "pig's whisper," that a magnificent Bucksheesh (a sort of fine sucking-pig), had been seen within a few yards of the Bunneer (or shooting lodge by the covert side).*

I have scarcely time to describe the exciting scene. We hid behind thickets, our breath suspended, our pulses beating fast, our hands on our rifles, our eyes fixed intently on the spot where it was likely the sucking-pig would rush out of his ambush. The beaters went in crying "Jât! Jât!" and only succeeded in driving out a fine specimen of the Jampaun,† which I kicked over, and it fell in mortal fear. I picked it up, wrung its neck, and put it into my bag, for the Jampaun is good eating. A certain Royal Personage cries out, "Jhool jemadar guddee gurrah!" "Ja, mynheer!" I replied in the same tone, though not in the same language. But to me all languages are alike.‡

And in less than no time out rushed one of the finest sucking-pigs I've ever seen out of a dish. He made, squealing and squeaking savagely, for where the Hope of our Nation was standing, who fired five shots from his rifle, seven from his revolver, and then stood on the defensive with his sticker.

It was a moment of intense excitement. The sucking-pig jumped up furiously, the P——ce defended himself gallantly, but unfortunately, not being the old hand at it that I am, he had not learnt the trick of fence so necessary on these occasions. He fell on one knee; the pig was making a dash at him which would have proved fatal, and there was that expression on the pig's face which would have terrified the boldest of us, when I took one leap, and drawing the carving-fork (worn on these hunting excursions), I plunged it into the creature's back, while my knife soon settled the remainder of the question. He squealed horribly, but I crammed an apple and an onion into his mouth, and in another second our Cummerbunds had lighted a fire and were cooking our victim.

Of the affecting scene that followed it would not be becoming in us to speak. We wept on one another's shoulders. But I leave this to England's future historian. It was a glorious animal, measuring at least fourteen inches from the tip of his snout to the curl of his tail. We gathered about the fire, for the dews were falling, ate trotters and drank Hafiz (a sort of Indian Champagne, as you may see by the name, with "fiz" in it), and then rode home singing, "Mahout! Mahout!" the great hunting song in those parts.

I remain, in hot haste, ever

YOUR REPRESENTATIVE IN INDIA.

* We have looked out budjerow in the Dictionary, where the meaning is distinctly given as "a decked passage-boat." We begin to suspect our Correspondent—or a new Indian Dictionary is a desideratissimum.—ED.

† Now, we will not stand this. Let the intelligent reader try for himself if he can't make our old nursery song of "This pig went to market," &c., fit exactly into what our Correspondent (the humbug!) calls the "Orientalisms"? He may be right, and it may have a common origin: but we do begin to suspect. Again we have consulted the Dictionary, and we find the meaning of Florikan, which he explains as a kind of Indian chorister, to be a "bird of the bustard tribe;" also the Chicks are not children (as he would have us believe), but "Thin curtains, made of thread and strips of bamboo;" and, finally, a Charpoy, which he would palm off on us as another musical instrument, is "a low bed, or stretcher." Our Correspondent, we begin to think, tells lots of Charpoys, or stretchers. But we caution the Public, and can do no more.—ED.

* There must be something wrong with our Dictionary. We've held it up to the light, we've turned it upside down, we've consulted solicitors and one of the Indian sweepers of the Metropolis, and we find that the Indian words used by our Correspondent in the above paragraph bear the following meanings. Hakim, a "physician;" and he says it's a "pig-huntsman." Chont, which he describes as another musical instrument, is "one-fourth of the revenue claimed by conquerors of the soil." A chupatty is "an unleavened cake," and he makes "a bed" of it. A bhanses, which he turns into a "horse sixteen hands high," is, in the Dictionary, "a short-winged hawk;" and a bund, which he represents himself as flourishing like a whip, is "an embankment." Dewanee khâs is not a "pig-beater," but a "hall of audience;" bucksheesh is our old friend baksheesh—not a "pig," but a "gratuity;" and the bunneer is not a "shooting-lodge," but a "shopkeeper." We do begin to suspect our Correspondent, and really think we have fair ground for suspicion.—ED.

† We have looked this word out. Jampaun is "a mountain sedan-chair." Can it be a mistake, or a misprint, or a lapsus calami?—ED.

‡ We really do believe this.—ED.

EPISCOPUS LOCUTUS EST.

AN invitation, signed by all the head-masters but one of every great public school in England, to explain his behaviour towards MR. GRIGNON has at length "drawn" the BISHOP OF ROCHESTER. Nothing, in the Bishop's opinion, MR. GRIGNON could say, could justify his tone and language touching the Trustees. That is BISHOP CLAUGHTON'S brief but triumphant vindication of his rectitude in sanctioning MR. GRIGNON'S summary dismissal, having refused to hear him, or to return him any personal reply. No matter what provocation the Master of Felsted School had received from the Trustees, nor what length and amount of service he had done the school. Had he been heard, of course he could not have proved more than that the latter had been immense and the former excessive. Even if he could have truly said all that, what then? The Bishop had predetermined to be moved by nothing he could say. No amount of merits, and no excuse, could be weighed against a little intemperate language. Now we see what caused his Lordship's long silence. It was a serene consciousness that the propriety of his course in confirming the Trustees' dismissal of MR. GRIGNON was self-evident. BISHOP CLAUGHTON is announced shortly to officiate in a more strictly episcopal confirmation. There can be no fear that this will be at all prejudiced by comparison with the other.

Digitized by Google

DIFFERENT POINTS OF VIEW.

Wife (anxious about her Dinner-Party). "O, CHARLES! WHAT DO YOU THINK THIS PRECIOUS PET OF YOURS HAS BEEN DOING? HE'S EATEN THE TURKEY AND SAUSAGES!"

Husband (anxious about his "precious Pet's" digestion). "GOOD HEAVENS, MARIA! NOT RAW, I TRUST!"

DERELICT! OR CARDINAL POINTS CORRECTED.

"For the last 300 years—in fact, ever since the Reformation . . . . Oxford had sunk from being an authoritative teacher of God's truth to a collection of human schools wrangling over doubtful philosophy, while the open page of Holy Scripture, which Oxford still used as her armorial bearings, along with her sacred motto ('Dominus Illuminatio Mea') floated like a derelict on the waves of the ocean of strife."—CARDINAL MANNING at the opening of the New Roman Catholic Church of St. Aloysius, at Oxford.

BACK to the scenes which nursed his fervid youth,
To brand as false what then he preached as truth,
The neo-Cardinal comes. Those halls, those spires,
Those walls, once witness of the Martyrs' fires,
Memories of all he loved and all he taught,
In days when Oxford owned him, must have fought
Against Infallibility's new clutch,
If aught of tender self-distrust may touch
A dogma-branded breast. Now MANNING flouts
His ancient Alma Mater! Wicked doubts,
The brood of franchised thought, have wrecked her state,
Leaving her dubious, dark, degenerate,
The prey of creeds which wrangle and conflict—
Faith fled, and Truth itself a derelict!

And is it so? Is all indeed so dark,
Since Oxford cut adrift from Popedom's Ark?
More saintless, sageless lies she, or more low
Than thirty, or three hundred, years ago?
Nay, your Creed-Cosmos is a dream; thought's play
Shattered it then, and shatters it to-day,
And shall, till some more potent fiat come,
Than peals from yonder puzzled Priest at Rome.
How poor, how puerile, these priestly plaints
Against this fallen Nursery of Saints!
As though post-Reformation times were bare
Of noble names, whose record well might dare
Challenge the mediæval muster-roll
To free comparison. Science, when she stole
Tradition's rotten staff, left deathless Truth
With unswathed limbs, and still renascent youth,
Plumed for the race. It is not we who fight
Against the ever-brightening flood of light,
Which some—apt heirs of the old monkish whim
That deems all light religious which is dim—
Would darken and divert, nor trust to fall
Save through stained windows in a Church's wall.
Old Oxford's motto 's ours; but then we know
Through new and broadening channels light may flow
From the old source,—nor will we close our eyes
To all save Orthodoxy's scant supplies,
Filtered through Rome's discoloured glasses! Nay!
Love night who will, we dare confront the day!
Derelict? Well, we 've left the Papal Ark,
Finding it but a crank and leaky bark,
Yet Truth is still our lode-star, and all life
Is but a struggle with that sea of strife
Whose waves so fright you, but to us appear
Less dread than the dull calm you hold so dear.
Derelict? Have you nought abandoned, too?
Freedom, the fearless tracking of the true,
Humbly and trustingly, to God's own ends?
An early love, and all the charm it lends
To Age's memories? Now your later faith
You 'd set against your earlier, and would scathe
The tree which sheltered you because it bears
For fruit the outcome of your younger prayers.
Derelict? So we deem your faith to be,
Yet fain would wish you well, and leave you free
To anchor by that "rock" from which doth shine
The faint fixed light you doubtless deem divine.
We seek the dawn—that being our idea
Of "Dominus Illuminatio Mea."

Digitized by Google

"THROW HIM OVER!"

DERBY. "VERY SORRY, MY DEAR HUNT, TO DO ANYTHING DISAGREEABLE, BUT IF YOU HAVE SUCH A THING AS A BOYTON DRESS HANDY——"!

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PUNCH ON THE RINK!

PART II.—The Abuse of Skating.

THAT Skating on Wheels has its uses having been proved, Mr. Punch now turns his attention to the abuses inseparable with "Rinkular" (bran new adjective) locomotion. "Abuse of the Rink" can be heard in great perfection by listening to the talk of beginners, and the murmurs of the "engaged ones" who do not skate, but whose "futures" do. The Rink has its enemies like everything else in the world. At Brighton, for instance, where Skating on Wheels is practised in four different places, the foes of the Rink are the Aquarium and the New Pier. In London (when London is London, i.e., during the Season), the hated rivals of the Rink are Lord's and the Row. But the Rink has its friends in the persons of managing Mammas and ubiquitous Surgeons. The first superintend the wounding of hardened hearts, and the last undertake the setting of broken arms. Flirtation thrives on the asphalte, the cement, and the wood, and many are the skaters who, while preserving their heads, have unconsciously lost their hearts. Nowadays, the education of that most wearisome of bores (in male society), the "ladies' man," is scarcely complete unless it includes amongst "the extras" a thorough knowledge of how to shout pretty things during the performance of the "outside edge." He may be able to sing "Waiting to Die," he may have mastered the difficulties of mewing like a cat, or barking like a dog, in obedience to the rules of some "innocent game;" nay, he may have even gone so far as to wear a scarf of many colours at a pic-nic, but unless he can skate upon wheels his popularity with the fair sex will be a thing of the past. Under these circumstances "ladies' men" can scarcely do better than practise spouting poetry on wheels. A drill-sergeant might be in attendance on these occasions to make suggestions. He might stand in a corner, and when necessary observe, "A little louder, if you please, Sir. You can't 'ear that there bit of TENNYSON at twenty yards' distance. A little louder, if you please." The allusion to the Poet Laureate naturally suggests the following lines, which may be considered very encouraging and useful to beginners:—

Early to tumble, early to rise,
Makes a man healthy, stealthy, and wise.

The health and the wisdom may possibly be open to argument, but there can be no doubt about the stealth. The tiger creeping towards the unconscious negro destined to serve ere long for an al fresco dinner, is not more cautious in his movements than the tyro who has put on his skates for the first time.

Before teaching the young idea how to skate, Mr. Punch begs to present the public with a few useful

RINK PROVERBS.

It is the early comer who gets the Rink all to himself.
A foot on the ground is worth two in the air.
Five minutes on the Rink is as good as enough.
Too many tumbles spoil the temper.
You may take a wise man to the Rink, but you cannot make him skate.
Idleness is the root of all rinking.
Look before you tumble.
Give a puppy a bad start, and upset him.
It is a wise skater who knows his own absurdity.

Having unbosomed himself of the above encouraging maxims, Mr. Punch takes the young beginner by the hand, or rather by the ear, and gives him his practical advice on the subject of Skating.

Lesson the First—The Toe and Heel Step.

Stand up, with the feet turned out in the First Position. Now walk away with the toes turned out, the heel of one foot placed almost touching the toe of the other. Now give a sort of slide, and over you go. First tumble.

This is an easy exercise, and should be well practised. When the young beginner has mastered the falls in slow time, he should attempt them in quick.

Lesson the Second—The Glide Step.

Stand up as before, with the feet turned out in the First Position. Now take your right foot, and rest with your whole weight upon it. Give a sort of push with your left leg, remove it from the ground smartly, and you will find yourself reclining on the asphalte before memory regains her hastily-deserted throne. Second tumble.

Lesson the Third—The Best Step.

Sit down, read Mr. Punch, take off your skates, and go home.

If these three Lessons are properly taken to heart, they will be found almost more than enough for the most reckless of young beginners.

And now as to falls.

It is easy enough to tumble (the merest child can manage it); but to tumble with grace is quite a different matter. While you go carefully you will never fall suddenly. Remember there will be always a premonitory scramble, and this scramble will ever be found amusing by those who take an interest in your eccentric evolutions. Remember this, and make your scramble as quaint and intricate as possible. Say that the scramble is over, and you are reclining on the ground. (By the way, you will soon find yourself quite at home on the ground.) And now is the time to improve your opportunity.

The Majestic Tumble should be adopted by statesmen, historians, and dignitaries of the Church. The tumbler, on reaching the ground, should strike an attitude as nearly resembling, as possible, some well-known statue. "The Dying Gladiator" will be found most effective. If the tumbler carries an umbrella, the upper portion of "The Apollo Belvidere" may often be realised with genuine success. Should the fall lack dignity the tumbler should at once assume the position of "Ajax defying the Lightning."

The Mysterious Crawl should be the favourite exercise of Chancery barristers and sensation novelists. The crawler should wrap his cloak about him, and seem to be inspecting the ground, with a view to the discovery of a secret panel. If he notices that he is observed by those who do not skate, he should immediately draw a large wide-awake hat over his brow, and dissemble.

The Mirth-Moving Smash is a capital fall for Comic Men, Amusing Rattles, and other pleasant persons belonging to similar classes of society. All the smashed one has to do, is to imitate the antics of a Christmas clown. Should he say, "Here we are again!" he will greatly add to the effect of the tumble. If he acts in amateur theatricals (which it is to be hoped he does), he may exclaim, "O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!" Should he manage to break his leg in the tumble, and thus lay himself up for a month, he will find, on his return to society, that the accident has become even more popular than the fall itself.

Before taking leave of the subject, Mr. Punch, in the interest of the public, would call attention to the existence of a couple of

RINK NUISANCES.

The Snob's Progress.—The Snob, after getting up his speed, suddenly backs, and moves blind-fold amongst a crowd of ladies and children. The result of this manœuvre is a general stampede. If the Snob is very quick he generally manages to knock over a couple of young ladies, and half a dozen tender little boys and girls, with results that often include broken arms and flattened noses.

The Fool's Slide.—The Fool bends his right leg until his head is within two feet of the ground. He then extends his left foot so that he appears to be a sort of natural "tea-pot." This vulgar inanity may be sometimes seen near the Addison Road.

And now, Mr. Punch having written what Skating on Wheels is, leaves it to his readers' imaginations to realise what Skating on Wheels might be. One is a pleasant dream—the other an existing nightmare. Mr. Punch refuses to say "which is which"—no, that, for obvious reasons, should be left to the decision of Mr. Punch's world-wide public, after they have tried the one and imagined the other.

WHAT CAN WE DO FOR HIM?

ADVERTISERS are not seldom prone to blowing their own trumpets, but the following is rather an exception to the rule:—

A BACHELOR, elderly and somewhat infirm, having a moderate acquaintance with the Latin and Greek languages, and who is likewise expert with a weeding hoe, seeks a HOME and EMPLOYMENT. A bracing air and easy access to the services of the Church indispensable.—Address, &c.

A smattering of classics, and some little skill in hoeing, can hardly be regarded as extraordinary acquirements; and we therefore cannot wonder that the advertiser makes no claim for any salary, but contents himself with seeking for employment and a home. Perhaps he hopes to vary the monotony of hoeing by digging out Greek roots: but these could little help him in the matter of his maintenance, and he quite forgets to mention his necessity for food. However bracing it may be, he can hardly live on air; nor, except as mental nutriment, can he expect to get much food by frequently attending the service of the Church.

Digitized by Google

LATEST FROM THE SHIRES.

Shorthorn. "YOU AIL FROM 'ARBORO', CAP'N, DOAN'T 'EE?"
Melton Exquisite. "NO; I ALE FROM BURTON, AND"—(aside)—"SHOULDN'T MIND A GLASS NOW!"

WHAT THE CARDINAL DID AT OXFORD.

HE averted his gaze from poor benighted Balliol, and dropped a little tract into the Master's letter-box.

He scowled at the Martyrs' Memorial.

He went into St. Mary's, and sighed and shook his head at the University pulpit.

He frowned when he saw Manning's Sermons in a bookseller's window.

He called on DR. PUSEY, but, unfortunately, an unavoidable engagement had obliged the Doctor to go out only a minute before.

He shuddered when he met two Heads of Houses in "the High," laughing and talking together, and seemingly careless of the doom awaiting them.

For old acquaintance sake he bought a pair of stockings at a celebrated hosier's, and was measured for a new hat at an eminent hatter's.

He listened once more to Great Tom, and mused on CARDINAL WOLSEY.

He met his old scout, and gave him a sovereign—and a word of warning when he found that he was still clinging to the poor worn-out Church of England.

He fairly broke down when he passed the Schools, and thought of the Thirty-Nine Articles.

He looked with a longing eye at Christ Church Cathedral—and indulged in a vision of the day when, the Constitution of England re-modelled, the Members of the Legislature converted, the Dissenters exterminated, the Press suppressed, the Middle Classes hoodwinked, public opinion stifled, and the Universities restored to the happy condition in which they were before the Reformation—he should "officiate pontifically" in that misappropriated edifice.

He grew melancholy when he met so many promising young men walking in the paths of fatal error; but brightened up when he thought of the time (date not yet positively fixed) when the new University in France would attract all the youth and intellect and culture of Christendom, and Oxford be deserted—its Colleges and Halls closed for want of students, its streets grass-grown, its public buildings in dilapidation, and its revenues applied to the maintenance of Jesuit seminaries.

MY BAKER'S MYSTERY.

OF late, on a dark evening, by my Baker's shop I passed.
A neighbouring gaslight through the gloom its radiance dimly cast.
On a high-laden cart it threw a faint and feeble light,
Wherein, as it stood waiting, the cartload glimmered white.

It was, for all unaided sight availed me to divine,
A lofty-towering pile of cubes, in substance crystalline,
Most like unto loaf-sugar blocks, or cakes of concrete snow,
Compressed, as in the balls which youths at one another throw.

What could it be? A horrid thought there flashed across my mind,
Of a certain earth with acid and alkali combined;
Astringent, deleterious drug, wherewith 'tis sometimes said
Bakers have been suspected of hocussing their bread!

I went a long and thoughtful walk; the cart, returned, I found
Had gone; a portion of its freight lay spilt upon the ground.
I scraped a sample of it up and carried home to see
If I, perchance, could ascertain what that white stuff might be.

Some grains of it upon the fire I tentatively threw.
The glowing coals gave up the thin familiar flame of blue.
'Twas common salt! O mind relieved! Now 'Evins be thanked therefore,—
Not alum, of which my Baker had been laying in a store.

Considering with how little salt a loaf of bread is made,
I joy to think my Baker needs must drive a roaring trade,
Since he so vast a magazine of salt requires to stow,
As I beheld him taking in to mingle with his dough.

Digitized by Google

NICOTIANA.

Edith. "I'M ASTONISHED, ARTHUR, THAT YOU CAN SIT HERE THIS LOVELY AFTERNOON, DOING NOTHING BUT THAT HORRID SMOKING?"

Arthur. "IF YOU'D BEEN WORKING HARD ALL MORNING, YOU'D BE GLAD TO SIT QUIET, TOO."

Edith. "AND WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN DOING, PRAY?"

Arthur. "WHY, I'VE BEEN WALKING ALL ROUND THE FIELDS, PICKING UP CROW'S FEATHERS TO CLEAN MY PIPE WITH!"

SONGS FOR THE NAVY.

THE acute faculties of Mr. Punch enable him, without going into the gallery of St. Paul's Cathedral, to detect even a whisper. It has been whispered that as a last resource, the Authorities of the Admiralty have determined to resuscitate the spirit which is generally supposed to have animated our seamen in the days of NELSON by circulating a choice collection of songs throughout the Navy. There being no DIBDIN among us, the productions of various authors, from SHAKSPEARE downwards, will be selected for the occasion, and will include,—

"Full Fathom Five," "Down Among the Dead Men," "On Yonder Rock Reclining," "Come Unto these Yellow Sands," "Poor Jack," "How Little Do the Landsmen Know," "Down, Derry, Down," "Man the Life-Boat," and many others of an equally lively character.

It is also proposed to alter some of our nursery rhymes for the education of our future sailors. As a specimen of what may be done in that way, Mr. Punch is enabled to publish the following:—

When we're built up, up, up!
Then we go down, down, down!
Sometimes stern first, sometimes forward,—
But soon we'll be round, round, round!

Enough has been said to give the reader some idea of the interesting scheme which is in contemplation, and to rouse the inventive faculties of those who would wish to aid in the great work. All Mr. Punch can suggest at present is that something might be made out of the "Last Lines" of poor THOMAS INGOLDSBY, altered to

"As I lay a synkynge, a synkynge, a synkynge!"

Uncommon Affection.

A MAN, seventy-four years old, who lived a lonely and penurious life in one of the meanest slums in Manchester, was found by the police the other day dead in his house. In a safe which they discovered on searching the premises, he had left behind him deeds and mortgage-bonds to the value of £12,000, besides £200 in gold. A journal announces these particulars in a paragraph headed with "Death of a Miser." It adds that "Death resulted from enlargement of the heart." Not exactly the sort of complaint one would imagine a miser to have been troubled with.

The Real Motto for Oxford.

(By an Ancient Mariner.)

"WATER, water, everywhere,
But not a drop to drink!"

THE PRINCE AND THE PIGS.

MR. PUNCH,

ZUR,—No doubt but what you be glad to hear as how the PRINCE OF WALES is enjoyun of his self pretty tolerable out there in Indiur. Arter all that are fuss and serramoney wi' the native Princes and Grandees a 've got to goo droo, 'tis raly needful vor un now and tan to ha a little amusemunt, and what could be better nor a spoort and passtime as ood zim vor the momunt like to teak un back whoam agen to countree life? Ut quite did my heart good, and yourn too, I dare zay, to rade the follern messidge by wire t'other day from Barwhoosda:—

"The PRINCE OF WALES and his party left Dutka at six o'clock this morning for pig-sticking."

Jest like what his Ryal Highnuss med a done at Sandrunham, where o' coorse a kips pigs, and, when there's a lot on um fit for killun, is customed to git up early of a marnun to goo and zee um stuck; and what moor sootable recreeaaishun fur a countree gentulmun? An oppurtoonaty o' gwiun a pig-stickun out in Indiur must ha ben just the thing vor un; and, by what follers, you can zee how a enters into the sperrit on't, so much so as at times for to take a hand in't his own self:—

"The Prince finally killed one pig."

No doubt to show them there native Rulers and chaps the right way o' dooun on't. Talk o' pig-stickun, I'm bound to zay he show'd his self that handy he meead zome on 'um stare like stuck pigs theirselves to zee un. Ut sims a didn't kill no moor nor one pig. Jest one or two fur practus, once in the way or so, I take ut, 's enuff to kip his hand in; and the PRINCE o' WALES, like all the rest on us, 'cept the regular pig-butchers, dwoant kill a pig every day.

Wi' that observaashun to conclude, I be, Zur,

Your obajunt Sarvunt,

Chook, Bacon Hill, Styford, Nov., 1875. CHIDDLUNS.

Premature.

"The term 'Attorney' is now abolished."

No more Attorneys? What good news!
All fears of law it banishes.
Alas! too bright these roseate views—
'Tis but the name that vanishes!

Biter not Bit.

THE late MR. MORSE, the celebrated humorist, was greatly addicted to saying disagreeable things. Yearly, at the regular season, he used to go and stay at the sea-side. Even there he never feared to sleep in a lodging-house. He was so intensely bitter that the fleas would never bite him.

Digitized by Google

FOX-HUNTING AND FALLS.

HAIR: "Success to Fox-Hunting!" This toast, given by VISCOUNT HARDINGE, at the annual dinner of the West Kent Fox-Hunters, the other day, at Penshurst, was drunk, of course, with acclamation. But could not Fox-Hunting possibly be too successful? In India, Tiger-Hunters might drink "Success to Tiger-Hunting!"—which, as generally understood, would imply the extermination of tigers, and, consequently, an end of hunting them. Who, except very utilitarian but short-sighted farmers, are they that would wish Fox-Hunting to succeed so?

In a Fox-Hunter's sense, "Success to Fox-Hunting" means, on the contrary, no end of Fox-Hunting, and, therefore, perpetuity to the breed of Foxes. In prefacing that toast, proposed in that point of view, with an appropriate speech, the noble Viscount said:—

"He had ventured to touch lightly on the accidents of Fox-Hunting, and he would allude as lightly to the drawbacks. There were drawbacks to every sport. There were such things as broken fences, and, unfortunately, the foxes ate pheasants, and they ate chickens, too. But, as he had said before, all the difficulties could be overcome by a spirit of good will and conciliation."

Doubtless; all the difficulties about the poultry and game devoured, and the fences broken. But how to get over the difficulty of other breakage—that of broken bones? For, though even this drawback to Fox-Hunting can to a large extent be surmounted by surgery, it is occasionally insuperable. Now and then Fox-Hunting results in a broken neck, which no science can set. The only wonder is that this difficulty does not happen more often. The infrequency of serious accidents in the hunting-field happening to be mentioned to a late eminent Surgeon, he, with dreadful disrespect for a noble sport, accounted for it by quoting the adage that, "Providence takes care of drunken men and fools." Where can that irreverent Surgeon have gone to?

MUSIC AND ITS MURDERERS.

THERE are some people in the world who seem never to shrink from annoying other people. They take the wrong side of the pavement when they walk along the streets, and either push you off it, or elbow you aside. They swing their walking-sticks about, so as to hit you in the eye if you happen to be near them; or they tread upon your heels by coming suddenly behind you, and with the point of their umbrellas, couched like lances at a tournament, they prod you in the back. Such people take delight in coming last into a theatre, and treading on your toes while stalking to their stalls. Such persons are especially a nuisance in a concert-room, which they are pretty sure to enter with abundant noise and bustle after the commencement, and to leave with the like tumult in the midst of the last piece.

To persons such as these does MR. ARTHUR CHAPPELL make a sensible appeal, beseeching them to cease from worrying the audience, as well as the performers, at the Monday Popular Concerts, where so charming is the music that there is no excuse for spoiling it by noise. Says MR. CHAPPELL on the matter:—

"The inconvenience is not merely felt by earnest listeners, but by the Artists themselves, who have to begin the concert and also to bring it to a conclusion, and whose attention is inevitably distracted."

The person who disturbs a concert-room in this way is one whom it were flattery to call a selfish snob. Better far that he or she should stay at home, and go to sleep over the newspapers, than come to worry people by unmannerly intrusion, and disturbance of their pleasure. Though secular in general, the music at the Monday Concerts may be looked upon as sacred to the cause of Art. It should be listened to with reverence, and not interrupted wantonly. The works of MENDELSSOHN and BEETHOVEN are works of inspiration; and such of them as may not be adapted for a Church, should not be spoilt by brawling, when given by a CHAPPELL.

PUNCH'S NAVAL SIGNAL CODE.

(For the Use of Iron-clads.)

Distinguishing Pennant.	Number.	Signal.
Red	27,423	Great fun.
,,	2	Immense joke.
,,	4	We are sinking.
,,	578	Got no ammunition on board.
,,	1	The Captain is asleep.
,,	17,865	First Lieutenant is playing on the piano.
,,	4,809	First Lieutenant just taken G sharp.
,,	43	The Second Lieutenant is smoking in the empty powder-magazine.
,,	783	The Midshipmen are skating on wheels on the Quarter-deck.
,,	18,405	The Navigating Lieutenant is reading a novel.
,,	4	The Crew have just heard that we are sinking.
White	1	The Crew are putting on their new clothes to sink in.
,,	3	The Captain is waking up.
,,	49,076	The Captain is awake.
,,	2	We have carried away three anchors.
Blue	1	The pumps won't work.
,,	2	We are getting into the boats.
,,	74,899	We are trying to save the ship.
,,	3	All the water-tight compartments are open.
,,	4,609	We shall have time to dine comfortably before the ship goes down.
,,	99,999	We are returning from the boats.
,,	88,743	We are trying to plug up a hole in the side of the vessel.
,,	4	We are resigned to our fate.
,,	2	We shall not have any amateur theatricals to-night in consequence of the disaster.
Black	4	This sinking is putting out all our arrangements.
,,	7	The Captain is much annoyed.
,,	8	So is the First Lieutenant.
,,	9	So is the Navigating Lieutenant.
,,	25	So are the Sub-Lieutenants and Naval Cadets.
,,	49,760	We are in deep water.
,,	99,876	The engines are at work.
,,	3	Fires in the engine-room gone out.
,,	1	Can you help us?
,,	5	We are leaving the ship.
,,	10	Order dinner for us on shore.
Green	1	The ship has sunk.

The Judicature Acts.

MESSRS. BUTTERWELL have sent for our revision the proof sheets of a work on these Acts by MR. J. C. DAY, Q.C., and MR. A. G. MARTEN, Q.C. The learned editors indulge in so many adverse criticisms on the Act, that we would suggest, as a title for their treatise, "Day and Marten's Blacking."

A PRETTY PASS.

MR. PUNCH'S cook has actually declined to clean the steps during Christmas week, on the ground that she will be too much absorbed in "the affairs of Turkey"!

TO A HOST OF CORRESPONDENTS.

YOU are all wrong. The KHEDIVE'S act in selling to England his shares in the Canal is one of self-preservation—in fact the reverse of Suez-cidal.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BRITONS AND TURKS.—The one pays his debts like a man, the other like a Not-a-man!

Digitized by Google

"'TIS AN ILL WIND BLOWS NOBODY GOOD."

First Sweeper. "I SAY, BILL, I CALLS THIS SOMETHINK LIKE WEATHER?" Second Sweeper. "BEAUTIFUL!"

SEASONABLE APPEALS.

MR. PUNCH, SIR,

A LETER wun Day larst Weak apear'd in the times, hunder 'eadin' of "South London Poor." Close beneath it stood anuther edded "Pauperism in Southampton." This here waluable Contribution was sined by "An Inhabitant" of that Town; the t'uther, a ignorant efusion, by 3 Members of the "South London Visiting and Relief Committee," includin' the Rewral Dene of Southerk. Leter 1 contaned a abeerd "appeal to the benevolent for assistance," meanin harms for the Pore. Leter 2 was a Statement and Complaynt that over Releef of the Pore 'ad encuridged Porperism. The former inwited Hasses to open their Pusses, the latter warned 'em for to buton upp their Pockitts.

Acordin' to "An Inhabitant" of Southampton the Number of Porpers in that unfortnit Town "annually increases, and now amounts to over one-fifth of the population." He hadds:—

"Indeed there is but one Union under 60,000 inhabitants that spends so much money as Southampton on the relief of the poor."

The emount thus annivally and orfully wasted at Southampton is no Less, Sir, than £23,000! The "Inhabitant" of Southampton is werry natterally Asham'd of 'is Naybors for so Grossly Misapplyin all that Munny. But that ain't all their Rewinus Extravigance wot increases the Growth of Porperism:—

"This growth is assisted by the unorganised and indiscriminate charity which is laviahly squandered in the town. For example, last year 14,435 of its 50,000 inhabitants received gratuitous medical relief, or one to 3½ of its inhabitants."

So, you see, Sir, it 's not honly Porochial proddigallaty but likewise Privat at Southampton wot Encuridges the Brede of them wishus Porpers. Wot sez Porochial Heconomy—witch I 'm told a irreverend Riter, as ort to No Beter, calls the "Dismal Science"? Leave the Pore aloan, let 'em die orf, and their Sufferins be an exampel to all others, to larn and labor and Wurk as hard as hever they possibel can to kep Sole and Body together and put by enuff Munny to save theirselves in Old Age from dyin of starvation. On the contrairy, at Southampton there 's Private "charity" besides the Workus, and the Workus heven made Comfortable, witch ortent to be the case for Nobody but the Master and Matron, includin', in corse, the Beedle.

'Tis like Clergymen and Rewral Denes to make Benevolent Apeals. They don't Kno no Better. Feed the ungry and Cloath the Nakid, and visit the Sick, fizzically—that 's their Noshon of Charity, and So, in Wether like the Late their Cry is still Coles and Blankits and Soop Kitchins for the Pore. Ar! They takes words in the Litteral Sense witch Porochial Heconomy teeches is True in jest the Rewerse. Talk of "DIVES and LAZARUS"! Where the Former was Rong was in alowin the Latter any Crums at All. He ortn't to ave let 'im 'ave none. Then he 'd have made 'im move on and Not lay and die at 'is Dore. That 's my Moral of it, Mr. Punch; insted of witch not honly in Southampton, but also the Metropolis where Porochial Principles ort abuv all Places to prewale, no dout but wot this Winter besides the Reglar Pore Rates, there 'll be all sorts of Subscriptions, specially in sewere cold, to porwide Close, Beddin, Food, and Fewel for the Pore, and Likewise praps, heven Gratewitchus Meddical Atendance abuv all things, to keep 'em from perishin, and in that way adishonally elp increase the Growth of Porperism by 'inderin' of it from diminshin' thru the beneficient hoperation of the Nateral Lors. Despiseable wekeness! Far different is the Enlarg'd Ideers of Inlighten'd Charrity as hunderstood by hall sound and True Porochial Heconomists, and witch is clearly the Vues of an "Inhabitant" of Southampton. I 'm proud to say also them is the Sentiments of

Your Dewoted Beadel,

BUMBLE.

To whom it may Concern.

A PLAINTIFF, in a case in the LORD MAYOR'S Court the other day, described himself as "the Inventor of White Hair." Mr. Punch having always entertained the idea that an old gentleman named TIME had something to do with the invention, begs to draw attention to what looks very like an infringement of patent.

Digitized by Google

SIGNS OF A SEVERE WINTER.

AR from pretending to the gift of weather prophecy himself, Mr. Punch may frankly state that he feels there is no weather profit at all in the present reign of slush, slop, sleet, snow-water, and general discomfort. He began collecting weather-symptoms the other day; but stopped after gathering the fore—and back—casts following:—

A snowball in his neck, hurled thither by a small boy.

A violent sore throat, and protracted fits of sneezing without the stimulant of a snuff-box.

Chilblains and chapped hands, despite the warmest gloves to cover them.

Beard frozen to moustache, so that he scarce can get his mouth open to hail a passing Hansom.

Blue lips and a red nose, together quite destructive to his beauty.

A sudden slip on a street slide, which, if it does not fracture his skull or his leg, sends his heart into his mouth, and his hat upon the pavement.

Attacks upon his knocker by an army of belligerents, who besiege his dwelling daily with shouts of "'Ave your door swep'?"

Attacks—if not a tax—upon his pocket by all manner of petitioners, from sham sailors frozen out to starters of soup-kitchens.

A horribly bad cold, which utterly destroys his taste for a cigar; and a biggish doctor's bill which follows on the general influenza of his family.

SOMETHING LIKE A GRIEVANCE.

MY DEAR MR. PUNCH,

I TURN to you in a time of trouble, as I know that nothing will induce you to betray my confidence by making this communication public.

I arrived at my house unexpectedly this morning from the country, where I had been on business. I was tired and cold, and determined not to go to my office, but to enjoy my Penates in Veneering Square. If ever a man yearned for the bosom of his family, I was that man.

On my arrival I was somewhat surprised to see the cook at the area-gate conversing with two rather suspicious-looking men; and I just caught sight of the housemaid in rapid retreat, she having observed me. I let myself in with my latch-key, intending to mention the matter to my wife, or one of my daughters. I looked into the dining-room. The fire was out, and there was a general air of untidiness and discomfort. In the breakfast-room I found the page-boy taking a hasty snack from a particularly choice game pie, the breakfast-things not having been removed. I learned from this functionary that no one was at home. My eldest daughter had gone to the skating-rink, my second daughter had gone out to lunch, but I could glean no other facts from my male domestic.

I subsequently found my youngest daughter, who should have been "practising," promenading the square with a moustached young gentleman, the honour of whose acquaintance I do not enjoy. With, I hope, becoming modesty, I took the liberty of asking my daughter where her Mamma might happen to be. Her reply stunned me, Mr. Punch, absolutely stunned me! "Why—didn't JANE tell you? She's gone with that dear LADY SHOCKERLY to hear that most interesting murder case at the Old Bailey!!"

I staggered into my solitary abode, and actually was obliged to take four glasses of sherry before I could sit down and write this. What can I do? Yours in all wretchedness,

PATERFAMILIAS.

Dec. 1, 1875.

P.S.—Five P.M. The late Wife of my bosom has just returned, and says she has had "a most charming day."

Horrible!

YOU MUST NOT SPEAK TO THE MAN AT THE WHEEL.

A new Sea Song, by the Ghost of CHARLES DIBDIN.

(Respectfully Dedicated to the First Lord of the Admiralty.)

ENGLAND is proud of her Iron-clad Fleet,
That all the rest of the world can beat·
Of each mighty monster of the deep,
That at half-a-million is dirt-cheap,
In whose guns the old Vikings' lord of thunder
Wakes again to strike foes with wonder.
The Fleet that will make all navies reel,
If you never Speak to the Man at the Wheel.

What if an Iron-clad sink its twin?
'Tis just that way that fights begin.
Whitehall is pleased that it ended so·
The enemy now our power will know.
What if after, the iron monster tried,
In remorse perchance, a suicide?
It failed, and intelligent folk must feel
'Tis wrong to Speak to the Man at the Wheel.

Another monster starts on her trip
By running into a timber-ship.
'Twas "Shiver my timbers!" once, my mates;
This time it came to "Shiver my plates!"
Well, neither sank, and if, by-and-by,
Some of us would fain know the reason why,
A delicate scruple we seem to feel,
Since you mustn't Speak to the Man at the Wheel.

On the Iron Duke an "investigation
Strictly private," must please the nation:
England, of course, don't care to know
Why to DAVY JONES her Iron-clads go;
So an Admiral and Captains three
A confidential Court will be:
And their verdict will that axiom seal—
You mustn't Speak to the Man at the Wheel.

For the sweet little Cherub that sits up aloft—
If Cherubs e'er swear, he must do it oft—
Poor JACK should pray for a smart engineer,
And a kettle of steam that will swim and steer.
Once a sink, or a smash, or a sudden capsize
Would have made old salts make free with their eyes;
But now civility outdoes zeal,
And we never swear at the Man at the Wheel.

Now is there nobody knows what's what?
Have we a Navy or have we not?
Have the men who invent, and the men who contract,
Grown all of them bunglers, in point of fact?
Are we land-lubbers all, who contrive to catch
For the head of our Navy the worst of the batch?
Put a Seaman there with the duffers to deal—
Then you may talk to the Man at the Wheel.

Respice Finem.

(By a Crusty Critic.)

MR. DISRAELI is credited by all parties with a fine stroke of policy in his purchase of the KHÉDIVE's Suez Canal Shares for £4,000,000. Wait a while. The Continental Press generally speaks well of it. Nevertheless, it may possibly turn out an advantage for England. We shall see.

Digitized by Google

"MARCH OF REFINEMENT," 1875.

Brown (behind the Age, but hungry). "GIVE ME THE BILL OF FARE, WAITER."
Head Waiter. "BEG PARDON, SIR?" Brown. "THE BILL OF FARE."
Head Waiter. "THE WHAT, SIR? O!—AH!—YES!"—(to Subordinate)—"CHARLES, BRING THIS—THIS—A—GEN'LEMAN—THE MENOO!!"

THE CANNIBAL SNAKE.

"A SNAKE-EATING SNAKE.—Difficulties have arisen in feeding the large Indian Hamadryad (Ophiophagus elaps) in the Zoological Society's Gardens, in consequence of his refusal of all other food except living snakes, which in the winter time it is not easy to procure in this country. A supply, however, has been received from the Continent, and the Ophiophagus has just made a fresh meal. The monster is now engaged in digesting the sixty-second of his 'weaker brethren' that he has devoured since his arrival in this country in March last."

So snake eats snake! There is no mistake:
The epicure pines if he can't get snake;
His fast on aught else declines to break—
This Elaps ophiophagus
Dinnerless let such a time elapse
That his keepers thought he might die perhaps,
So all Europe o'er they for snakes set traps,
To save him from his sarcophagus.

"Beautiful women born to deceive,
Blooming to fascinate, cruel to grieve,
Daughters are of the Serpent of Eve"—
So says an old Welsh Triad.
But O, ophiologists, tell us why
You have stolen a star from poesy's sky,
And called this creature, slimy and sly,
By the name of the Hamadryad?

The nymph that was born and died with an oak—
(Divine Greek fantasy!) is it a joke
When into her happy place you poke
An adder-eating adder?
Spirit she was of the Tree of Zeus;
And to see of her lovely name such use
Makes one wish ophiologists all at the deuce—
Though snakes would be none the sadder.

Elaps ophiophagus! though a snake!
Your conduct sympathy ought to awake
In the breast of man, who shrinks not to take
The blood or the cash of his brother.
You 'll be the fashion, I venture to swear:
So when round you crowd the Bull and the Bear,
With their jewelled wives and daughters fair,
You may fairly hiss out, "You 're another!"

ENTIRE ABOLITION OF BETTING-HOUSES.—A change for the Better

FASHIONABLE STREET-SWEEPERS.

LADIES, pay attention, if you please, to an important piece of news. We quote it from a letter by a fashionable writer on the Paris winter fashions:—

"Dark green and grey, with check patterns, are the favourite shades for dresses. These are worn both in and out of doors much longer than last year; the skirt, flat in front, grazes the ground at the sides, and runs off in a long narrow peak, trailing a full yard on the ground."

Crossing-sweepers are but seldom to be seen in Paris, but while the present fashion lasts their presence is not needed. Their work will be, no doubt, efficiently performed by Ladies with their pretty dresses trailing on the ground a yard or so behind them. Dark green and grey, being rather sombre colours, are quite fit for winter wear; but, considering the state to which long skirts must speedily be brought by draggling in the dirt, we should have recommended mud-colour, as being still more suitable. Check patterns are clearly à propos, in our opinion. It must be rather costly work to let your wife's dress play the part of the besom of a crossing-sweeper; and her costume may fitly show the figure of the cheque which you have paid for it.

A FARTHING'S WORTH OF FEELINGS.

IN the Queen's Bench division of the Supreme Court of Judicature the other day, a MISS FRANCES SHIRREFF sued a MR. CRYSTAL for breach of promise of marriage. MR. CRYSTAL, according to law report, "is an old gentleman with some private means." MISS SHIRREFF "is a dressmaker. Her father said he believed she was more than forty years old, but he did not know how much more." They had quarrelled over the purchase of a table, for which the plaintiff wanted to give what the defendant thought too much; whereupon, it was stated, she had called him "a stingy old Scotchman"; but this she denied. Defendant, on his part, denied that he had ever promised to marry plaintiff. That, of course, no British Jury could be expected to believe. This one returned a verdict for the plaintiff, but a verdict—in a typical case of crushed affections, lacerated feelings, and blighted hopes, will it be credited?—of "Damages one farthing." The Jury, moreover, that awarded to a confiding girl this uncommonly moderate compensation for a broken heart, was a Common Jury; presumably composed of shopkeepers, husbands, and fathers. Is a verdict so contrary to all precedent, but so nearly in accordance with common-sense as that given by them in a breach of promise of marriage case, one of the first fruits of the fusion of Law with Equity?

OUR OWN BOOK LIST.

TALES of Lillie Bridge. By the Author of The Story of Marco Polo.

How to Shake Hands. By the Author of Social Pressure.

Music and Morals. An Essay on Dancing Licences. By the DUKE OF ARGYLL (Rooms).

The Elephant and Castle. A Tale of India. By Our Special Correspondent with H.R.H.

Feet Rinker. By the Author of Hans Bunker, or the Silver Skates.

Our Great Reformers. By the Author of a Treatise on the Principles and Practice of Levelling.

With Organ and Five Shillings. By the Author of With Harp and Crown.

None of your Sauce! A Novelette. By the Author of Memorials of Harvey.

Badminton! A Poem. By the MARQUIS OF LAWN-TENNISON.

Blackballed at the Stock Exchange. By the Author of The Pillars of the House.

Butts and Chimneys. By the Author of Casque and Cowl.

Digitized by Google

SUGGESTED ILLUSTRATION

FOR "DR. DARWIN'S MOVEMENTS AND HABITS OF CLIMBING PLANTS."

(See Murray's List of Forthcoming Works.)

 We had no notion the Doctor would have been so ready to avow his connection with his quadrumanous ancestors—the tree-climbing Anthropoids—as the title of his work seems to imply.

PUNCH AT THE CATTLE-SHOW.

(Another Chapter from the "Progress.")

THE early days of December had come, the time for Annuals and extra numbers was at hand, and Christmas, with its traditions of holly, mistletoe, bills, and empty chairs, loomed in the future. Punch sat in his study, pondering over a paper. As his eagle eye rested on column after column of crimes and disasters, he sighed. Turning, impatiently, from the news, he perused the advertisements, and found that London was living in the week of the Cattle-Show. He paused in his reading, and memory carried him back to the days when the unhappy "exhibits" were stalled in Baker Street, where the Chamber of Horrors up-stairs found a faint reflection on the ground-floor. Punch thought, "It is better now. The Agricultural Hall is large and airy. The beasts are to be congratulated on their change of quarters."

"Are you going this year, Master?" asked Toby.

"Are you?" was the questioning reply.

"Certainly not," said the Wisest of Dogs, with decision. "Sheep may amuse collies with nothing better to do, and oxen may please those thick-headed individuals, the bull-dogs, but as for myself I hate Shows."

"You go to the Dog-Show at the Crystal Palace," said Punch.

"Only out of duty, my dear Master," replied Toby. "You see the Heads of the Profession are there, and it would never do for me to absent myself. It would be sure to be remarked, and dogs (especially those foreign creatures, the Maltese) are so spiteful. Now confess—were there a Show of Men, would you not attend it?"

"No. I hate Reviews. I carefully avoid Aldershott and the Curragh. I never go to Reviews."

"I said a Show of Men—not an Exhibition of Boys." And Toby was silent.

Punch sat in his arm-chair, and listened to the singing of the kettle. He murmured to himself, "An Exhibition of Men!" and closed his eyes. When he opened them again, the study was brilliantly illuminated. He could not account for this sudden increase in the lighting of his cozy little room. The gas was burning as dimly as ever, and the fire was red and flameless.

"How do you do, Mr. Punch?"

Punch started, and then became conscious of a very Bright Personage indeed. This Bright Personage seemed to take to Punch at once.

"I belong to a very large family, Sir," said the Bright Personage. "Hundreds and thousands of my brothers have been introduced to the Public by you, Mr. Punch."

"Indeed! And who may you be?"

"My father's name is Imagination, and I am called The Idea. You were thinking that, instead of visiting the Cattle Show, you would like to see something of the sort of greater novelty. Now I can help you."

"You! The Idea!" exclaimed Punch, contemptuously.

"Wait until you have seen my power," said the Bright Personage. "Follow me, and you will find that you have already left your study."

And the Bright Personage was right. Punch had certainly followed The Idea far away from home. He was standing in the Agricultural Hall.

"Now come with me!" Again following The Idea, Punch found himself near a number of strange-looking men. Two were fighting furiously as he came up to them. They paused for a moment in their combat as Punch approached, and then he found that their blows were made of hard words and little else besides.

"What are you quarrelling about?" asked Punch.

"Quarrelling, is it?" cried one of them. "And it is quarrelling that we are! Come now, I like that."

"What are you doing, then?"

"Why can't you see? Are we not an elegant band of united brothers a-honouring the greatest peace-maker of the age—the Liberator, DAN O'CONNELL?" And the fight was resumed.

"Band of brothers!" exclaimed Punch. "Why you don't seem to be agreed upon any one point."

"It's wrong ye are!" they shouted together. "We agree about Home Rule!" And the combat was conducted with increased fury.

"And who are these strange animals?" asked Punch of his guide.

"Bulls from Ireland."

"The Idea!" murmured Punch, who now found himself before another pen.

He was now in the presence of a number of Ladies. The first who attracted his attention was dressed in the most gorgeous garments. Her attire was made up of velvet, satin, and fur. She wore magnificent jewellery; evidently no expense had been spared to make her costume attractive.

"May I ask who you are, Madam?" said Punch, with his habitual politeness.

"Certainly. I am the COUNTESS OF SCATTERCASH."

"I congratulate your Ladyship upon your charming appearance."

"O, don't speak of it, my dear Mr. Punch," said the Countess, hastily. "The fact is, the Earl's estates are dreadfully mortgaged, and the bills of my dressmakers are a fearfully sore point with him. But you see I must follow the lead of my dear friend the Duchess."

And then Punch noticed that all the other Ladies were dressed in exactly the same fashion. One was the wife of a hard-working professional man; another, "the lady" of a tradesman living beyond his means; a third, the daughter of a retired Major existing on half-pay. To these persons Punch put but one question, "Why do you dress like this?" and the answer he received was, "Because we are pleased to be like the COUNTESS OF SCATTERCASH; and because we will be like her Ladyship until the names of our respective husbands or fathers appear in the list of bankrupts!"

"And who are these strange creatures who follow one another so closely and so foolishly?" asked Punch.

"Sheep from England."

"The Idea!"

And now Punch was standing before a group of Men with greedy eyes and cruel mouths. Their foreheads receded, and there was an air of stupidity about them which was particularly unpleasant and irritating. They were speaking in French, and seemed to be in a very angry mood.

"What is the matter?" asked Punch, using the Gallic tongue with the purest accent.

"Look here, Sir!" they shouted together. "We are simple-minded peasants. We cheat one another all the year round. We are accustomed to do it. A Parisian comes to live in our midst, and we cheat him. He objects, and we try to kill him, and he objects once more! Did you ever hear the like before? O how aggrieved we are!"

"Who are these amiable persons?" said Punch.

"Untamed donkeys from France!"

"The Idea!"

And now Punch was standing before a hulking scoundrel, with the most repulsive of countenances imaginable. On this scoundrel's feet were heavy boots, and in this scoundrel's hand was a bludgeon.

Digitized by Google

DELIGHTFUL ESCORT.

Small Boy. "NOW, THEN, MUM, GIVE US YER HAND, AND WE'LL SLIDE YER DOWN EASY, AND YON CHAPS 'LL STOP US!"

LES PAUVRES DE PARIS.

THE Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph tells us that "the other day PRINCESS DOLGOUROUKY wore a pelisse made entirely of ermine studded all over with diamonds set in turquoises;" also that "the cloaks to be seen on the fair shoulders of the PRINCESSE DE SAGAN, MADAME DE TALLEYRAND, and MADAME DE ROTHSCHILD represent each, in fur alone, a value of £4000 sterling." This is going too fur with a vengeance! Somebody ought to interfere, and take up the subject, as this is evidently a "great Pelisse case." Seriously, aren't there any poor in Paris? Isn't it going to be a hard winter? and, instead of four thousand covering the value of one of these cloaks, wouldn't one of these cloaks cover the freezing misery of four thousand, and, in the end, considerably enrich the wearer? The Parisian unscriptural motto seems to be, just now, "Fiat Luxe."

A Reformed Character.

REMEMBER, remember,
Be just to November,
Now ended and vanished away:
By Magog and Gog,
Was there ever a fog,
Save that on my Lord Mayor's Day?

A NEW READING OF MR. IRVING'S IN MACBETH. — "Throw Physique to the dogs!"

"Why do you wear such monstrous boots, and why do you carry so terrible a bludgeon?"

The scoundrel grinned a hideous grin, and answered, "Just to keep my Missus 'n order with, Guv'nor."

"And what animal is this?" asked Punch.

"The animals repudiate him."

"Well, then, what is he called?"

"He is called—a Man!"

* * * * *

"You have been making such a noise in your sleep, Master," said Toby.

"So would you, if you had seen the Man-Show," replied Punch, rubbing his eyes, and recovering from his slumber.

"The Man-Show! Why, what is it like?"

"I will tell you," answered Punch, now quite wide awake. "It is twice as instructive, but not half so amusing, as the Cattle-Show in Islington!"

THE SENSIBLE GHOSTS.

A Story for Christmas.

I HAD been sitting before the fire reading. In my hand had been a small red book—bound in leather. For hours the walls of the old oak dining-room had echoed and re-echoed with my roars of heartfelt laughter.

O it was a good book. A clever one. Full of quaint stories and brim-full of excellent pictures. It conveyed information too most useful to professional men. I was a professional man myself, and I had found it useful—very useful.

And I had read this excellent book twice from beginning to end. The fire was going out, and the candles were burning low in their sockets. I got up to go to bed. As I rose from my chair the clock struck twelve. The clock of the village church hard-by. I could not account for it, but the tones of the old church clock filled me with a sort of strange alarm—a feeling of vague mistrust. Why was it?

I rose to go, I repeat, when facing me I found a Shadowy Figure! There was no doubt about it. My blood froze in my veins, the hairs of my head stood on end. I was in the presence of a Ghost!

The Shadowy Figure glided across the floor towards the table. O that I could forget that moment of intense dread! Even now my cheek blanches, and my hand trembles as I write of it! It was too terrible! too awfully terrible!

I could not speak, I could not move. My tongue clove to the roof of my mouth, and my arms hung listlessly beside me. And as I gazed at the Shadowy Figure the candles in the sockets began to burn a faint blue. O that I could forget! O that I could forget!

And even as I looked at the first Shadowy Figure the door opened, and a second Ghost entered the room, and my brain reeled, and I felt old before my time.

"Have you got it?" The voice sounded so sepulchral. It was the second Ghost who was speaking.

"Not yet!" was the terrible blood-freezing reply.

I summoned up all my courage. I am generally considered a brave man, and I nerved myself for the task, the terrible task before me.

"What do you want here?" My voice sounded so strange that I scarcely recognised it. It seemed to be the voice of a horror-stricken lunatic.

"We must have it!" shrieked the first Ghost. "We cannot rest without it! It is our only solace! It consoles us all the year round! We read it together, and forget (so entranced are we in its glorious pages) to roam about the castles we were appointed originally to haunt. For your own sake give it to us, and you shall not see us again until next year."

"Take it from him by force!" shouted the second Ghost. "Tell him that we will have it!"

The beads of perspiration gathered thickly on my brow. I trembled in every limb.

"What do you want, Gentlemen?"

"Mr. Punch's Pocket Book for 1876."

When I recovered from my swoon the apparitions and the red leather-covered book were gone!!!

Proverbial Philosophy.

OUR quaint old proverbs are continually receiving illustration from modern doings and sayings. For example. The Town Council of Maidenhead (charming retreat! inseparably associated with the memory of delightful dinners) have been specially entertaining a proposition to the effect "that the Mayor do receive a salary of £250 a-year." Now, can any one doubt that those who advocated this munificent proposal were influenced by the recollection of the sterling adage which instructs us that "Money makes the Mayor to go"?

Digitized by Google

GENEROUS SELF-DENIAL.

Hostess. "YOU ARE NOT DANCING, MRS. MIRABEL! I SUPPOSE YOU'VE GIVEN UP SUCH A FRIVOLOUS AMUSEMENT!"

Mrs. Mirabel (stout Lady of considerable personal attractions). "O DEAR, NO! BUT—A—YOUNG MEN ARE SCARCE, AND I DON'T THINK IT'S QUITE FAIR TO THE GIRLS, YOU KNOW!"

WHAT THEY (AND WE) SAY ABOUT IT.

In France.—That it is worthy of England the perfidious.

That England is accustomed to the changing of coats.

That the French Government has neglected to do its duty.

That an angry note should have been sent from Paris to the Court of St. James.

That if this had been done England would have trembled, and the transaction would have been repudiated.

That a further proof has just been given that England is merely a nation of shop-keepers.

That all Englishmen are cowards.

That all Frenchmen are heros.

That in spite of everything, the incident only increases the glory of France.

In Germany.—That England may (with the kind consent of the EMPEROR OF GERMANY), do what she pleases in this matter.

That Germany, on account of the relationship existing between the two peoples, will not interfere.

That Germany acknowledges the judicious good feeling displayed by England in disappointing the wishes of that ex-grand nation—the French.

That Germany congratulates England upon having gained the consent of PRINCE VON BISMARCK to the completion of the arrangement.

In Austria.—That England, as an Asiatic power, of second-rate importance, may do what she likes with Egypt.

That Austria is, of course, far too great a country to concern herself with the petty bargains of a nation of cheese-selling islanders.

That England need fear no Austrian invasion at present.

That Englishmen should be delighted to hear this piece of good news.

In Russia.—That England in this emergency has done wisely in at last obeying the directions of the late EMPEROR NICHOLAS.

That the transaction is worthy of the Stock Exchange, and is consequently characteristic of the British Nation.

That, perhaps, under all the circumstances of the case, Russia will defer the annexation of India until next year.

That England should be very thankful to Russia for this display of friendly moderation.

In England.—That Englishmen are not afraid of Frenchmen, Prussians, Austrians, or Russians.

That people living outside the British Empire may say and think what they please.

That the purchase of the interest in the Suez Canal was carried out without the advice, much less the consent, of any foreigner.

That England, if she requires full, free, and unconfined control of the Canal for her own imperial purposes, has no wish or intention to exclude any other nation from the same advantages.

That England, having got a hold on the Suez Canal, and paid for it, knows how to keep it, and means to keep it, all people and potentates to the contrary notwithstanding.

N.B. What is said in England, Mr. Punch begs to remark, happens in the present instance to be an accurate statement of facts. Foreign papers are invited to reproduce this announcement.

Educational Compromise.

THE question whether Education in Board Schools should include religious instruction, still rages between Denominationalists and Secularists. There seems to be a way, which has, as yet, occurred to nobody, whereby Secularist arrangements, extended to the utmost, might be adopted with a pure view to Denominationalist ends. Suppose the Bible and religious books were not only excluded from District Schools, but the reading of them out of school were also strictly prohibited, would not the certain effect of that be to make all the scholars carefully read them?

Digitized by Google

"MOSÉ IN EGITTO!!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

ARMS FOR THE PROPOSED NEW WEST-END STOCK EXCHANGE.

(To be placed over the principal Entrance.)

On a chevron vert, a Pigeon plucked proper, between three Rooks peckant, clawed and beaked gules. Crest: a Head Semitic grinnant, winkant, above two pipes laid saltier-wise, argent, environed with a halo of Bubbles or. Supporters: a Bull and Bear rampant sable, dented, hoofed and clawed gules. Motto: "Let us prey."

JACK'S CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Loose my valves, start my rivets, and shiver my plates!
We expects good and bad luck to mingle;
But it never don't rain without pourin', my mates,
And misfortins they never comes single.
One on t'other, galore, they are laid at one door,
Sins whether of o- or com-mission,
And WARD HUNT we shall see soon the scapegoat will be,
For each sinking and smash, and collision.

The Vanguard had scarce to the bottom been sent,
When, through springs out of gear, shipping water,
The Ram what had caused that disastrous ewent,
Iron Duke, pretty nigh foller'd arter.
Scarce JOHN BULL hadn't ceased for to grumble and growl
At mischances from this and that blunder,
When the Monarch, behold, of the Halden runs foul,
And they both very nearly goes under.

For ships in succession so comin' to grief
Lay the blame on the right back, my hearties;
'Tis them there Admirality Lords and their Chief
People thinks the responsible parties.
When a Landsman the First Lord your Government makes,
In the place of a Sailor selected,
If there wasn't to happen continial mistakes
'Twould be luck as could ne'er be expected.

But a valve may give way, or a screw may get loose,
Under any command whatsomdever;
All the same, if so be that my Lord is a goose,
As in case that he 's able and clever.
And this here is a fact as must all men have struck
When the log of their lives overhaulin',
That such things often happens as runs of ill-luck
In every department and callin'.

There 's failures and fires, there 's offences and crimes,
There 's explosions I also may mention,
And famines and fevers occurrin' at times,
Spite of every attempt at prewention.
So likewise, mayhap, comes collisions by sea,
And all manner of naval disasters,
In trains, why and wherefore the reason may be,
Of the knowledge we 're none on us masters.

The causes is laid to the rule of the Stars
By them that from ZADKIEL takes pattern,
There 's been Jupiter lately, they tell us, and Mars,
In conjunction together with Saturn.
Good or bad, their effects is a question of doubt.
Let it meanwhile set Sailors a-thinkin',
As a token that all hands had better look out
To keep more ships from smashing and sinkin'.

FLYING RUMOURS.

WE give extended publicity to the following rumours, without pledging ourselves to the literal accuracy of every particular. Some of them, perhaps, are not more incredible than the purchase of 177,000 shares in the Suez Canal by this country would have been considered only a fortnight ago:—

Yesterday the Stock Exchange was violently agitated by a report that the EMPEROR OF RUSSIA had become so large a purchaser of shares in the Great Northern Railway, as to give him a preponderating influence in the future direction of that undertaking.

The POPE is understood to have expressed his readiness to render substantial assistance to the Corporation of the Albert Hall, but with the express stipulation that the Freemasons are never again to be suffered to assemble within its walls.

If the telegraph is correct in its announcement that the youthful EMPEROR OF CHINA is about to become a partner in the Worcester Porcelain Works, the future productions of that Manufactory must be largely influenced by Oriental tastes and requirements.

So highly was the SULTAN OF ZANZIBAR impressed by the stability of the institutions of this country, that he has telegraphed his desire to become a large purchaser of shares in the Westminster Aquarium. The famous financial house of BLACK, BROWN, BERRY, AND Co. are charged with the conduct of this transaction.

The money market was violently convulsed this afternoon by the announcement of extensive projects for the manufacture of plaster-of-Paris images and Vienna bread, in which the PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC, and the EMPEROR OF VIENNA were respectively stated to be deeply interested.

The PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC is reported to be on the eve of acquiring a considerable stake in the Langham Hotel. It is not expected that this action, on the President's part, will lead to any disturbance of the friendly relations at present existing between England and the United States.

Some Armenian capitalists are negociating (it is whispered in the interests of the highest personage in Persia) for the acquisition of one of the Brighton Skating Rinks.

The prospects of the Crystal Palace may assume an entirely new aspect, if there is any justification for the rumour that the KING OF WURTEMBERG is buying up all the shares now in the market.

A Company which has its head-quarters at Copenhagen, and is understood to be greatly controlled by Royal counsels, is about to undertake extensive building operations on Denmark Hill.

Great excitement has prevailed in the neighbourhood of the Swiss Cottage since last Friday week, owing to the presence of financial agents of the Helvetic Confederation. It is thought that the property may change hands.

There seems to be no substantial foundation for the report, which spread like wildfire through the City towards the close of business yesterday afternoon, that the German Fair was likely to pass into the hands of PRINCE BISMARCK.

The Northern Powers are said to be in treaty for the Baltic Coffee-house.

A portion of the vast wealth of the Begum of Nautchpore has been sunk in the East India Docks.

A grand commercial scheme, which aims at the establishment of spacious and magnificent saloons in all the principal towns in Europe and the East for Billiards, Pool, and Pyramids, is rapidly approaching maturity. It is understood that there is a strong probability of the Khedive joining the Board of Direction.

Suez Cuique

FROM the irritation displayed by our French neighbours at our investment in the Suez Canal, it might almost be supposed that we had given them the "Cut Direct," from Europe to Asia, instead of securing a portion of it for ourselves.

Digitized by Google

"LE SPORT."

Keeper. "WHY DIDN'T YOU FIRE THE OTHER BARREL, M'SIEU—THE OTHER BARREL AT THE LAST BIRD?"

Monsieur Alphonse. "BAH! I DID FIRE DE ODHER BARREL! I DO FIRE BODT BARRELS TOGESSER! AND IN MY OWN COUNTRY I DO SHOOT DE LARK AT TWENTY, TWENTY-FIVE, AND SOMETIMES DIRTY YARDS—WHEN HE STAND QUITE STILL! YOUR DOGS DEY MAKE DE BIRDS TO FLY AWAY"—(insinuatingly)—"AND DEY MUST BE FATIGUED. HERE IS MONEY. TAKE DEM, AND BUY DEM SOMEZINGS TO EAT! LEAVE ME TO MAKE MY OWN DOGS MYSELF!!"

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

SIR,

A FRIEND has wired me to the effect that you have expressed a doubt of my veracity. I can scarcely believe my eyes. He hints too that you think I am not here. If not, where am I, I should like to know? I am further informed that you question my Indian words and my couleur locale!!

Is it possible? No. A man who has lived among residents all his life, who knows the history of John Company (deceased), who has rented a Haremsadeh (look this out if you like—I won't tell you what it is:—a nice Dictionary you must have got hold of!) in the most fashionable part of Bozwangola, and spent several seasons at Sicrigully, Nawaub-Shums-Ood-Doulah, in the society of Begums, Nizams, Princes, Gwaliors, Dhâllees and Cherangs, is not likely to be deceived, nor, may I add, has he the smallest temptation or inclination to deceive. Besides, apart from other substantial reasons, best known entre nous (this is French, not Hindostanee), was I not chosen for this post because I had taken in Punch for so many years? Long may I continue to do so. "Believe not the tales they have told thee of me," as somebody says in his Thingummy (third edition). I have not time to do more than dash off this letter, for I own I have been in a fury since receiving the telegram from my friend. I was obliged to tell it to a certain distinguished Royal Indian visitor.

"What will they say in England?" exclaimed H.R.H., much annoyed, on my account.

"Sir," I answered, kneeling, and waving my pocket-handkerchief, "they will say in England, 'God bless the PRINCE OF WALES!'"

Just then, as if by preconcerted arrangement, the band outside struck up the well-known strain.

He turned away,—

"The soldier leant upon his sword,
And wiped away a tear!"

On any other occasion à propos of the quotation I should have been inclined to ask how much the soldier lent upon his sword, and on whose sword the money was advanced? But this is levity: and levity is the soul of wit.

The PR——E's extempore speech the other day was first-rate. I stood behind him, and prompted him. We worked it admirably. He began with a cough—then cheers from the crowd—then he turned round to me—I was at his elbow—and I gave him the word. "Ladies and Gentlemen! Unaccustomed as I am"—(hear, hear!)—"to public speaking"—(hear, hear!)—"I have the greatest pleasure in——" But there—it 's no use! You won't believe me; and I haven't the time, as I 'm just called off to eat some nice cool bungalow which has come in fresh from the cow.

Ever in haste,

YOUR TRUTHFUL REPRESENTATIVE
(In India).

The Real Way to Raise the Vanguard.

"A Heir of the Dog that Bit you."

IN the time of old HOMER a down-smitten foe
Was healed by the rust of the spear that laid low:
Let our Iron Dukes therefore (in Waterloo strain)
Give the order "Up (Van-)Guards," and at 'em again!

SUFFLAMINATION.

THE Government have started a Drag. Out of compliment to an excellent Sportsman it is called "The Ward Hunt."

Digitized by Google

VEILED SATIRE.

Royal Academician (after gazing with mute astonishment at the most abominable daub ever perpetrated by a Man whose real vocation in life was to be a Cobbler). "I TELL YOU WHAT, STODGE—HAPPY THOUGHT! I'D Sell IT, IF I WERE YOU!"

THE ANTIBOREAN.

A TAILOR of fame has invented this name
For a wonderful lining of leather;
He bids you go forth proof 'gainst east wind or north,
And laugh at the boreal weather.

Punch in preference sits and "warms his five wits"*
(Or rather, dear Laureate, five million),
And on Pegasus swift soars aloft through the drift,
While the Muse rides behind on a pillion.

Imagine the plague when some gossiper vague
Comes in,—an "agreeable rattle"!—
Full-charged with a pun which he thinks awful fun,
Or a budget of cynical tattle.

Were that coat Antibore, Punch would purchase a store
And so would the wise men, his readers,
And fury and folly, KENEALY and WHALLEY,
Would soon from the scene be seceders.

Ah, nothing can cure, and we fain must endure
The bore, with his brain-work vertiginal:
If original sin brought the dull fellow in,
His sin is, he 's never original.

* "Alone, and warming his five wits,
The white owl in the belfry sits."

In Lunacy.

THE lunatic who wrote to Mr. Punch last week, suggesting that probably the Otter which took refuge in a tree at Clewer, near Windsor, was hiding from the creditors of the Otterman Empire, had better at once be placed under proper control.

A Local Critic.

THE Sphinx
She winks
At DIZZY'S coup;
"Yes," thinks
The Sphinx,
"I think 'twill do."

CURIOUS CONTRADICTION.

MR. EDWARD ROUND, Vice-Chairman of the Tipton School Board, writes to say that the article quoted from a contemporary, and commented on last week by Mr. Punch, under the title of "School Fees and Flogging," "is simply untrue."

In proof of this assurance MR. ROUND sends the subjoined copy of a letter from the Clerk of the School Board:—

"To E. ROUND, ESQ.

"DEAR SIR, "Tipton, Nov. 26, 1875.

"I enclose the extract of the resolution which was passed on account of the Attendance Officer's Committee of the Western Division reporting that several children had been withdrawn from No. 3 School on account of undue flogging, and in one case the child had been beaten for not bringing its school pence.

"Yours obediently,
"EDWARD RICHARDS."

In the article quoted by Mr. Punch three children were stated to have been flogged for having neglected to take their school-pence with them. By the foregoing account several children appear to have been flogged unduly—flogged for little or nothing—and "in one case" the offence which the child was flogged for was in fact that specified in the article declared "simply untrue" by MR. ROUND. Does he not, on the contrary, prove it to have been at least partially true? However, perhaps the one child flogged for not bringing its school-pence was "only a little one."

MR. ROUND also sends the subjoined copy of an extract from certain minutes:—

"Extract from Minutes of October 19, 1875.

"Board-Room, Tipton, Nov, 26. 1875.

"Moved by MR. ROUND, seconded by MR. TOMSON, and carried unanimously. That the Clerk write the Master of No. 3 School, expressing the displeasure of the Board at the reports of undue flogging, and that whilst he must exercise great discretion himself in corporal punishment, it is his duty to see that the Assistant Master is never, under any circumstances, permitted to administer such punishment, according to the resolution of the Board of which he has had a copy.

"EDWARD RICHARDS, Clerk to the said Board."

The above resolution merely interdicts flogging by the Assistant Master. It leaves "corporal punishment" to the Head Master's discretion. There is nothing in it to prohibit him from flogging children for not bringing school-pence, if he thinks fit—if, for example, he suspects they have spent them on their way in lollipops. This seems, under favour of MR. ROUND, no more than a roundabout way of putting the statement relative to the Tipton School Board contained in the article he objects to. Let us hope that if only one child has been flogged at a Tipton Board School for coming there empty-handed, that one will be the last.

Moses Modernised.

A Historical Parallel (with a difference).

To get out of Egyptian bonds, as we know,
MOSES led to the Red Sea his clients Judaic:
Now, into these same bonds BRITANNIA must go,
To reach the same Sea, with a guide as Mosaic.

A CLEAN SWEEP.

MRS. GAMP concludes that the Government has solved the great Drainage difficulty, now it has invested so largely in the Sewidge Canal.

GOOD SHAKSPEARIAN ADVERTISEMENT (recommended to MESSRS. WILLS and NEVILLE) FOR THE OLYMPIC THEATRE.—"Private Boxes, Three Guineas; Stalls, &c., &c."—"So much! for Buckingham!!"

AN ALTERNATIVE.

THE Legal course which is open to England if the KHEDIVE don't pay his interest—Sue his Canal.

Digitized by Google

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Literary.

STUDENT.—When did LYCOMANDER of Nasos flourish? Tell us what he flourished, and we'll let you know.

ARTFUL, DODGER & Co.—Thanks, no! Having a copy of the work, we don't care to subscribe to an edition of The Pilgrim's Progress in seventy-two half-crown parts (subscriptions to be paid in advance). Still, we wish you success.

ASPIRANT.—Yes, a blank-verse poem on the History of the World, from the earliest times to the present day, would be very interesting. But you must look sharp, as it is a big subject.

BOW BELLS.—Your poem on the Rights of Woman is admirable; but try and get better rhymes to "Aurora" than "saw her," and to "hippopotamus" than "rhinoceros."

UMBLE ENERY.—It is very difficult to judge, off-hand, whether you are best fitted to write epic poems, novels, dramas, or leading articles. But, from the specimens of each that you send us, we consider that a light portership would suit you admirably.

INQUIRING FANNY.—You can't find their names in the Biographical Dictionary! Then we'll tell you, dear. APPENDIX was a Greek poet, and a friend of SOPHOCLES. GLOSSARY was a contemporary of CHAUCER. Most libraries possess these authors' works.

Artistic.

UP TO A WRINKLE.—You may certainly invite the Hanging Committee to a champagne lunch (and you may ask us), but we don't see what good it will do you.

YOUNG RAPHAEL.—If it gives you pleasure, whenever you meet an R.A., to tell him that all modern painters are idiots, do so. It doesn't hurt us.

CATALOGUE.—No. MR. WARD, R.A., has never painted any incidents of the French Revolution, nor any scenes in the life of CHARLES THE SECOND.

Dramatic.

A LOVER OF REALISM.—We perfectly agree with you that "the effect of Hamlet would be much enhanced if the performers were killed really, and not in mere make-belief;" and we sympathise with your unsuccessful efforts to get a company to play it in that manner. We consider, when we remember the end of the drama, that you show much modesty and forbearance in contenting yourself with the small part of Horatio.

A VERY YOUNG MAN.—The actress whom you mention is very pretty, but, as she is married, and is the mother of five children, we must really decline introducing you "with a view to matrimony."

BUNCH.—Read the above answer. We cannot help you to become a "life-long companion to that divine actor with the god-like eyes," as he has got one already. Still, if he becomes a widower, we'll think of you.

Legal.

TRUSTEE.—Kick your solicitor.

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM.—Bring the action, dear. He had no right to break off the engagement because you had dyed your hair from black to a "Venetian red."

EXCITABLE.—If you lost your case, we certainly don't condemn you for seizing your counsel by the whiskers, and hitting him in the face, but you shouldn't have called the Judge "a stupid old fool."

Natural History.

PET OF THE FAMILY.—It does show a nasty disposition on your brother's part to object to your putting your pet hedgehog into his bed.

LOVER OF ANIMALS.—We can't tell you how to charm a rattlesnake. Try stamping on its head.

TIMIDUS.—If your "full-grown male tiger has got a sore throat," apply a cold water compress. Only be cautious.

BURGLARIOUS JIM.—There are no fixed rules to send a fierce and lively bull-dog to sleep; but, if you have time, you might read him the Athenæum.

General.

IGNORANT.—(1) No. (2) Bosh. (3) Walker. (4) Idiot. (5) Idiot. (6) Shut up.

THIRSTY CARL.—We congratulate you. A young Lady who refused to marry you, on the ground that you drank eight quarts of beer a day, would have been an incumbrance through life.

PUFF.—We don't advise you to smoke more than twenty pipes a day, as most Doctors say that excess in tobacco is bad.

FRED.—You want to know how much Whiskey will intoxicate you. Try.

ARTHUR JAMES.—We never play Hockey, but if anybody hit us over the head with a stick, we should promptly return it.

LITTLE LOUEY.—Throwing yourself into a river, when you see a young man, is a very good way of being introduced to him; but suppose he can't swim?

AMIABLE ALICE.—Bosh about only having met him once. If you love him, write and tell him so. He won't mind it.

VICTORIOUS AUNTIE.—Not being a relation of yours, we don't see any objection to your thrashing your Nephews and Nieces every morning to teach them meekness and humility.

PARVENU.—We don't go to balls ourselves; but if it is against strict etiquette to shake every one in the room warmly by the right hand, it shows a genial and affectionate disposition.

LIVERPOOL LUNATICS.—Hunting Cats with a Fox-terrier is not the way we should recommend you to spend Sunday afternoon.

ECARTÉ.—If he broke a decanter over your head because he caught you looking at his hand, he is a simple brute, and we wouldn't play with him again.

G. C.—It is considered rather aristocratic not to answer letters. Attention to such matters shows a commercial spirit.

BALAAM.—Misprints in country newspapers must be very funny indeed to be admitted to our columns. Misprints and ungrammatical Advertisements are not paid for at the rate of original articles.

STATESMEN AS TRANSLATORS.

MR. GLADSTONE having translated a hymn into rhyming Latin, versed for a certain periodical, other Statesmen are, according to rumour, prepared to follow in his track.

MR. CAVE will translate ADAM SMITH into Egyptian, for the benefit of the KHEDIVE.

The EARL OF DERBY will complete his illustrious father's work, by translating the Odyssey into the language of a blue-book.

MR. WARD HUNT will translate the Rules of the Admiralty as to the navigation of a fleet into Siamese, so that the Captains of twin-ships may the better understand them.

LORD CAIRNS will translate the language of Law into that of Equity, and vice versâ, for the education of the Outer Bar.

MR. GATHORNE HARDY will translate the language of Russia, Austria, and France, on the Suez Canal question, into intelligible English.

THE MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON will translate all the moods and tenses of the verb je m'ennuie into all the languages of Europe.

SIR HENRY JAMES will translate the Taurine language of Capel Court into the Ursine, and the reverse.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON will translate a bottle of Clicquot into toast and water.

MR. WHALLEY will translate the Pope's last Bull into Hindustani.

MR. NEWDEGATE will translate the gossip of Nunneries into the Fi-fi language.

MR. BRIGHT will translate sound common sense into plain English.

MR. LOWE will translate the simplest thing in the world into the language of double acrostics.

MR. FORSTER will translate Denominational Lessons into Secular ones, in usum Scholarum.

LORD SALISBURY will, ex officio, translate into Sanscrit, all poems on the journey of the PRINCE OF WALES through India, which reach the Foreign Office on or before the 1st of April, 1876. They will be published in a magnificent edition at the expense of the Crown, and the next Poet Laureate will be the author whom LORD SALISBURY finds most difficult to translate.

MR. DISRAELI will translate a few Bishops.

Ritualistic Practices.

(A Fair Summary.)

FLORAL decorations;
Early celebrations;
Silly innovations;
Local irritations.

CARRYING COALS TO NEWCASTLE.—A new Roman Catholic Cathedral at Oxford.

DEAR FRIENDS.—England and Egypt are now Shares-amis.

Digitized by Google

"SMALL MERCIES."

First Jolly Angler (with empty Creel). "WELL, WE'VE HAD A VERY PLEASANT DAY! WHAT A DELIGHTFUL PURSUIT IT IS!"

Second Ditto (with ditto). "GLORIOUS! I SHAN'T FORGET THAT NIBBLE WE HAD JUST AFTER LUNCH, AS LONG AS I LIVE!"

Both. "AH!!"

EVENHANDED FLOGGING.

ON the morning of November 24th, a little boy, FREDERICK JOHN WHITEAR, aged twelve, stole two watches and three gold chains out of a private post-bag lying unlocked at the Winchester post-office. For this offence he was tried at Winchester Assizes. He had given one of the watches and some pieces of the watch-chains to JACOB WHITEAR and ANN SMITH, described as of "mature age," who were put on trial, together with him, for receiving the stolen goods. They were acquitted; but—

"The boy, FREDERICK JOHN WHITEAR, who had pleaded guilty, was then sentenced to three months' imprisonment, twenty strokes of a birch rod, and six years in a reformatory."

The effect of twenty strokes from a birch rod, laid on by an ordinarily vigorous turnkey, will probably be such as, through a tender skin, to impress as tender a mind with some idea of the value of property, the lack of which induced that young ROBIN HOOD, little WHITEAR, to give away what he had stolen, and perhaps mainly contributed to make him steal it. Not that there is any ground whatever for the slightest suggestion that the scourging to which that infant criminal has been sentenced is at all too severe. O dear, no! Perish the very ghost of an idea so sentimental! But if there is no reason to deprecate the infliction of twenty strokes of a birch rod on a small boy for a crime of whose gravity he was clearly insensible, is there not every reason to desire that an adult thief who commits an equal offence well knowing what he is about, shall be liable to receive at least a proportionally good flogging with the cat-o'-nine-tails? Why, in the scale of punishment for theft, is torture to be limited to children? Grown-up rascals are at least as able to bear it; and grant, therefore, that mere thieves, if they had their deserts, would not escape whipping, does not the conclusion that brutal violence committed in beating and kicking women and other defenceless victims, should subject every ruffian guilty of it to the same punishment, go without talk?

A GOOD MOVE.—Mobilisation.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

(Vide MR. TENNYSON'S "Recollections of the Arabian Nights.")

WHEN the breeze of a golden hope blew free,
In the time of my legal infancy,
The tide of men flowed on with me,
Onward into an Eastern clime,
Where bulls and bears and stags do range
Their paradise, the Stock Exchange—
O exquisite the aureate air!
Stunning the champagne-luncheons there!
I oft was bull, I oft was bear,
For it was in the glorious time
Of sumptuous ABDUL AZIZ.

At night my hansom bore me West,
And as it whirled through Temple Bar
A votary I to Fashion's star,
By POOLE unto perfection drest:
With youthful wealth no girl finds faults,
All doors to me were open wide,
I was the hero of the waltz,
And anywhere could choose a bride:
In sooth it was a goodly time,
For it was in the golden prime
Of gorgeous ABDUL AZIZ.

That Sultan, fond of bird and beast,
Sent men-of-war to search for them,
Bought many a fair Circassian gem
To shine in his Seraglio—
He was the Monarch of the East;
He set his palace walls aglow
With pictures of prodigious price;
He spent his money in a trice:
Ah, this was just the goodliest time
Of all, the very golden prime
Of lavish ABDUL AZIZ.

But ah, 'twas all too good to last,
The SULTAN soon this lesson learnt,
That he who spendeth money fast
Will some time get his fingers burnt.
So he proposed half interest,
For all the mighty sum of cash
Obtained from lenders green and rash:
But will he ever pay the rest?
Alack-a-day! how sad the time!
For in his impecunious prime
Is reckless ABDUL AZIZ.

A sorrow in my bosom lurks,
My diamond rings I wear no more,—
My Uncle, perhaps, might tell you why.
Remote from Fashion's haunts am I,
And, till I reach the Stygian shore,
I will not speculate in Turks.
But if, in Charon's fatal boat,
SULTAN and I are both afloat,
I'll throw him over, bearing the blame,
So much I hate the horrid name
Of cheating ABDUL AZIZ!

SOMETHING LIKE AN EAR.

"Entuned in the nose full feateously."—CHAUCER.

THE New York Sun, Nov. 17, in a report of its interviewer's colloquy with the famous Pianist VON BÜLOW, makes that tuneful Musical Doctor say, "When I was in England the pronunciation there was so unmusical as to be very distasteful to me, and I gave up attempting to learn the language. Since coming to this country I see its beauties, and am learning it." Is this pretty little compliment to the pronunciation of our American cousins due to the Doctor or his interviewer? If to the former, it shows a highly intelligent appreciation of our cousin's little susceptibilities, and proves that whatever other musicians may think, VON BÜLOW, at least, has no objection to the tone of the American organ—i.e., the Nasal.

Digitized by Google

A DREAM OF UNFAIR WOMEN.

GENERALLY awake, Punch, like HOMER, has his hours of sleeping; but when his eyes are closed, his mind is at work. The dreams of Punch have more wisdom in them than the wisest moments of the profoundest sages. Under these circumstances even the sleeping seconds of Punch's life are worthy of record, and accordingly they are recorded. Without further preface, then, Punch relates a dream he dreamed a few weeks ago—a dream that was also a nightmare.

Punch sat on a cushioned seat. His face was grave—so grave, that his white wig did not seem ridiculous—so grave, that his ermined robes did not seem less becoming than the motley. He was sitting in a large apartment, with high, narrow windows, and roughly-fashioned pews. This large apartment was crammed from the floor to the ceiling. Near Punch sat men in gaudy robes; and it was the fiction of the place that these men, and not Punch, were the real representatives of justice. And over one of these gaudily-costumed men hung a sword. And Punch knew that he held in his hands a power more terrible than that of those who wield swords, and level lances upon the field of battle. He knew that he had the power to condemn a fellow-creature to a painful, a disgraceful, a miserable death. And this knowledge made Punch grave and sorrowful.

And Punch looked round about him. There were advocates in that large apartment so full of the Shadow of Death, in the discharge of their duty; and Punch found no fault with them. Did not their profession bring them into that terrible place? And there were the reporters, who were there in the service of the Public. And Punch found no fault with them. He knew that crime must be recorded in the cause of good government and fair play. And then Punch looked upon the white face of a man who was dying—a man who was full of life and strength, and yet was dying. And as he looked at that face, he thought "Who would be here

Digitized by Google

FAT AND LEAN KINE.

Attendant (to Stout Customer). "TURTLE-SOUP, MA'AM? YES, MA'AM. AND A CUTLET AFTERWARDS?"
Attendant (to Thin Customer). "THOSE ARE THE PENNY BUNS. HELP YERSELF, PLEASE!"

[If Customers could only change Plates!

who could be away? Who would crowd for excitement to a sight suggesting all the terrors of death, all the horrors of the grave?" And Punch looked round about him to see if there were any who could seek interest in such a fearful sight.

Silk and satin and fur. Gold and silver and jewels. Soft faces and refined faces and faces strangers to misery and want. Bright eyes, sparkling and eager. And in the pauses of the terrible show—when the witnesses were not helping justice to trace to its sources a horrible crime—there was lunch to regale the body, and merry conversation to relieve the mind! But what a show it was! So well worth looking at, that double opera-glasses were in constant requisition, and a pince-nez almost indispensable! So very interesting to watch the quivering of the lips of this white-faced man! So very instructive and so exciting! Will he shudder when he hears the Judge's summing up, will he scream when the verdict of the Jury is read over to him, will he fall in faint as he listens to the sentence condemning him to be hanged by the neck until he is dead? Oh, these are questions worth the answering, and an eager watch must be kept to learn the replies! So out with the opera-glass, and on with the pince-nez, so that nothing—not a sigh nor a shiver—may be lost!

As Punch looked at these fair faces, he thought that they belonged to those who were less than women and more than men, and Punch wished from the very bottom of his heart that the vision he has related had been indeed—a dream!

Married Life in the East.

"A Cochin paper states that a rich Ryot in South Travancore, who has four wives, makes use of two of them by yoking them to his plough."

THIS must be the latest novelty in matrimony. The knowing Ryot evidently puts a literal interpretation on the word "yoke-fellow." The Prince should make a point of seeing so unique an exhibition of native husbandry.

REALLY CHARITABLE ASSOCIATIONS.

(For Christmas, 1875.)

THE Cabmen's Benevolent Association. President, MRS. PRODGERS.

The Peter's Pence Association for providing for the temporal necessities of the Sovereign Pontiff. President, MR. NEWDEGATE, M.P.; Vice-President, MR. WHALLEY, M.P.

The British Law and Order Association. President, DR. KENEALY.

The Ritualists' Defence Fund Association. President, the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY; Vice-President, DR. CUMMING.

The Evangelical Alliance Association. President, His Eminence CARDINAL MANNING.

The Total Abstinence from Intoxicating Liquors Association. President, MR. TOD HEATLEY; Vice-Presidents, MOET and CHANDON.

Respect an Artist's Feelings!

(Being a real Letter from a Professed Cook, giving a proper rap over the knuckles to a Candidate for her favours.)

IN answer to your letter this morning, I am sorry I did not see you on Monday. I would have come to-morrow, but I feel it is useless; and as you do not say whether you would pay my expenses one way if I did not engage, Madam, I feel I must now decline your situation, for I have never had the Servants' Hall to clean; in fact, I have never been expected to do any cleaning. I have often done my own covers—not that I was expected to—only because I liked to see them look nice; and I have always made my own butter, and got up in the morning according to what I have to do, not when the other servants have got up; but in justice to myself I must now positively decline your situation.

Yours, obediently,
J. G.

Digitized by Google

FAREWELL TO THE CATTLE-SHOW.

(By a Judge of Butchers'-Meat.)

I.

H me, the Cattle-Show is o'er!
Those visions of delight;
Of sirloins, rumps, and ribs, no more
Shall feed my hungry sight.

II.

Oxen obese,—no angles rude,
To break your fat's soft swell,—
O'er whose straight spines I paused to brood,
As one that loved them well!

III.

Sweet sheep, whose backs so broad and flat,
Of mighty saddles speak;
And pinguid pigs, that all for fat,
See not, nor stir, nor squeak!

IV.

No more your living forms I see,
Perspiring, prostrate, prone;
Henceforth your charms must be to me
A memory alone.

V.

Save when, in Mart of Leadenhall,
With azure ribbons tied,
Your stately spolia deck the stall,
In highest prices' pride!

VI.

Or when, in shape of juicy joint,
You burst upon my gaze,
Gushing to gravy 'neath my point,
And so reward my praise!

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(With H.R.H. and the Elephants.)

SIR,

I HASTEN to despatch this letter, which will probably arrive, thanks to extra stamp and other influence which I have at the Post-Office, before any other paper in England receives the news.*

We are among the Cingalese, and, as I said to a certain distinguished Royal Personage, "To be among the Cingal-ese is Singul-ar."†

He screamed at it.

He implored me to let him tell it as his own. It was a bargain. I regretted it afterwards, as my Illustrious Friend spoilt it. He said, "To be among the Cingalese is curious, isn't it? eh?" and was annoyed because nobody laughed. Of course a bargain is a bargain, and I was compelled, in conscience and as a duty to my family, to decline refunding the lac of rupees which was the joke's price for three years' Indian use only, and all other rights of translation and adaptation reserved. O, I am quite fair. As I said, "My dear Sir,

"If I had a joke what wouldn't go,
Wouldn't I force it? O, no, no, no!"

MY Exalted Friend very nearly bought this couplet of me, but a loss of two rupees and a half at our Indian rubber last night had impoverished the exchequer.

We've had blazing hot weather—regular Indian summer, varied by downpours of rain, which washed us all away on the road, and it was some time before we could get together again. My Distinguished Companion's baggage was all over the place—gun-cases in a mango field, portmanteaus among the chutnees—in fact, it was KING JOHN at the Wash all over again.

The moths are rather troublesome here; they are as big as crows, and have a nasty habit of getting into your bed in the dark.

The moon at night is lovely. It is five times the size of the moon in England, and so we can see distinctly the mountains and the lakes in it with the unclothed eye. I could almost swear (and for a very little more I would—but it's not worth while telling a falsehood for such a trifle) I saw a man come out of, what appeared to me to be, a house in a terrace, number nine, I think, and look at us through a telescope. Whether this was so or not, at all events the nights are simply exquisite. My Exalted Friend and myself sit up, after all the others are asleep, practising our duetts on the concertina; and as we play "In my Cottage," the dear old familiar air brings tears to the eyes of all who hear us.

Pig-sticking being voted a bore, (I said "a great boar"—ha! ha!—roars—regular tickler this!) we have been bitten by Elephantiasis. In the caves of Elephanta, a grand hunt was planned, of which I hasten to give you an account, as I wish to be the first in England to present the public with a true version of the affair, of which you will, doubtless, hear much, a few hours after this has been published.

On the morning of the —th*, the Khodabund roused us from our warm beds with his shrill note,† strongly resembling that of the Kokkeolli, which is heard only in certain parts of Africa.‡

Jumping to my feet, and after a rapid act of bathing, just a dash

* Mind this is worth all the money; and, by the way, to save you trouble, forward a cheque for past and future to me, under cover to H. WALKER, Jericho Villa, Bath. He has instructions, and the money will reach me quicker in this way. [We do not like the look of this. Why send to Bath if our Representative is in India?—ED.]

† I made another joke about the Cingal-he's being all garçons. This was literally a side-splitter.

* Illegible in MS.—ED.

† Our Dictionary gives the meaning of Khodabund as "a title of respect." Really this must be a very faulty work, or—our Correspondent is not entitled to many Khodabunds from us.—ED.

‡ Where? What is the Kokkeolli? We've been three times to the Zoological, five to the British Museum, and consulted various authorities, but cannot come across the Kokkeolli. Yet—we seem to know the name.—ED.

Digitized by Google

down a cataract and up again (coming up again, against the falling stream does take your breath away a little at first), I ran round to the tent of my Illustrious Co-Voyageur, and, putting my head in, called out playfully, "Bo!" A boot-jack came flying out, and from the whirring noise within, I knew that my Distinguished Chief was having his hair brushed by machinery. The natives are delighted with this, and dance with joy whenever My Gracious young Friend allows them to look in at the corners of the tent. He is so good-natured!

"Sir," I said, for I was the first to bring the news, "there is an old Tusker."

He darted to his legs, upsetting the Suwarrees (or native hair-dressers), and exclaimed—"Where?"

"In the jungle!" I replied, scarcely able to control my excitement.

"To horse!" cried my Exalted Fellow-Sportsman. Then turning to his native attendants, he said, "Worromot retfu y adehtu oysawwoh!" which was about as pretty a compliment as I've heard for some time, but its finesse is so subtle as not to bear translation into English.*

In another minute my Distinguished Friend, myself, and a few other notabilities, carrying the bags, extra guns, and luncheon, were advancing towards the jungle.

Being an old hand at the game, I warned my Illustrious Co-adahooter not to walk too quickly, but to let me lead the way.

We were on the trail of a rare old Tusker, as I could tell from the Paundaus (footprints), and also from the Khalâmuts, which were bent and broken on all sides.†

We had scarcely traversed ten miles of tangled Toofaun and prickly Vakeel,‡ when my old trained dog stood still, and made a point. Our fingers on our rifles. Hush! There they were!!

Before us lay sound asleep a herd of fifty as magnificent elephants as I have ever seen: and in the centre lay the old Tusker himself, snoring heavily.

"The Duke of Tusk-any," I whispered, to my Exalted and Appreciative Companion; for even in that perilous moment I couldn't restrain the joke that rose to my lips.

My Distinguished Friend was convulsed—nearly purple with suppressed laughter.

"Sir," I said, imploringly, "Don't!"

He tried hard not to, but was compelled to stamp. Had it not been for this, we should have captured the herd,—catch 'em alive O!—for, as the heel of the Illustrious Personage touched what seemed to be the Indian pampas grass, our ears were suddenly saluted with so astounding a whirr, as can only be imagined by those who know what the simultaneous rise of a thousand pheasants would be, or the sound of a score of policeman's rattles all going off at once.

The truth flashed upon me too late! My Most Illustrious Companion had trod on a rattlesnake, and the vigilant reptile, which always keeps watch by a herd of elephants, had sprung his alarum with a vengeance.

The natives (amongst whom we observed MR. JEE-JEE-JELLY-BHOY) bolted, panic-stricken; the suite ran to bring them back; and in less time than this has taken to tell, we two—my Illustrious Fellow-Hunter and myself—were alone among the gigantic mammoths of the Primæval Prairie!

The Tusker stood before us, brandishing his trunk aloft, and whetting his tusks one against the other, like a carver with his knife and fork, before proceeding to the attack.

My Distinguished Co-Sportsman was pale, but calm. My brow was unmoved. It was not the first time by many that I had encountered, single-handed, herds of far larger and more furious elephants than those by which we were now surrounded.

"Do not waste your powder," I whispered to my Most Noble and Illustrious Friend, but never for one moment taking my eye off the hideous monster that now threatened our existence.

My Royal Pâl (an Indian term of friendship and respect), true to the pluck of his race, would have blazed away, and then—ah! what then?

An old Indian hunter like myself knows well that an elephant must be trapped before he can be shot: the bun first, then the bullet.

I had provided myself with a more than sufficient supply of nuts, buns, and gingerbreads, which (with the exception of a small reserve) I now threw out by handfuls to the excited herd.

This scattered them. They stooped to pick up the much-prized morsels, and so broke their circle. Then, adopting at once my hint, my Illustrious Friend and myself retreated, back to back, so that I was still facing the Tusker, towards a magnificent Keemcat (a sort of beech-tree) whose branches offered us a welcome ambush.

This manœuvre was thoroughly comprehended by the old Tusker, who knew the moves of the game almost as well as I did myself. With a shriek of rage, and raising his trunk aloft, he charged at us. My Illustrious Companion wheeled round suddenly, fired both barrels without effect (except that we heard a sharp cry of anguish from MR. JEE-JEE-JELLY-BHOY in the rear) and then He stood confronting the enormous foe. Another moment, and even my experienced hand would have been powerless to save! Putting aside Court etiquette, I placed my hands on my Royal and Illustrious Friend's shoulders, forcing him involuntarily to (as the schoolboys say) "tuck in his twopenny," and give me a back. As I sprung over his head, I dropped my rifle; he fell prone, and I alighted safely, straddling across the nape of the old Tusker's short neck. Not the millionth part of a second was to be lost! I leant down, and pressing my left hand into the soft part of his jowl, tickled the beast with my right hand while I passed my other across his eyes, thus completely blindfolding him.* In this position I placed my lips to his ear, and sang him the Indian snake-charmer's song, which I had learnt from a faithful old Ayah who had long been retained in our family. In a low, sweet tone I sang, or rather chanted—

"Ybab, Ybab gnitnub, Srehtaf enog gnitnuha."

and so forth—but you would not understand it. To these weird sounds he sank slowly down, and the entire herd (they are an imitative race) followed his example. Changing my melody to that of the well-known—

"Ymmot ekam moorrof ruoye lonu!"

I slid down, and reaching out my hand to snatch up my suwan (or short dagger), I was about to despatch him at a blow, when it occurred to me that my Illustrious Co-Sportsman ought to give him his coup d' Indian grass. This joke I made then and there, and it might have cost us dear (for it roused the elephant), had not My Most Distinguished and Royal Friend pulled the trigger of my rifle, and, at one shot, in the right place, the ancient Tusker breathed his last at our feet.

I knelt, and cutting off the tusk, presented it, Indian fashion, to the Illustrious Sportsman, much the same as the brush is given in our own country.

The other elephants were easy victims. I will not describe the scene that followed. My Impulsive and Gracious Companion was for making me a Knight of the Star of India sur le champ. I gracefully, but emphatically, declined, quoting the chorus (in a whisper), "What will Mamma say?"

He pressed my hand, and murmured, "I shall never forget this day."

Then the merriment began. We sat round the camp fires, drinking Schroffs and Sircar (both delicious Indian beverages, somewhat resembling our gingerbeer with just a taste of brandy in it), and singing Routees till the break of day.†

Long ere this, I had stolen off to my tent to write this letter, and it was with a grateful heart, a feeling of deep thankfulness, and the consciousness of having earned my repose, that I at last laid my head on my Pillau,‡ and slept such a sleep as can only be the lot of

YOUR TRUTHFUL AND VIRTUOUS REPRESENTATIVE
(In India).

P.S.—I just send this from Colombo. We went to visit the Ancient Tortoise. Do you know what I said? Can you guess? Never! I'll tell you.

"Sir," said I, "of what fable does this interview remind you?"

"Can't tell, 'pon my life," said the Illustrious Visitor.

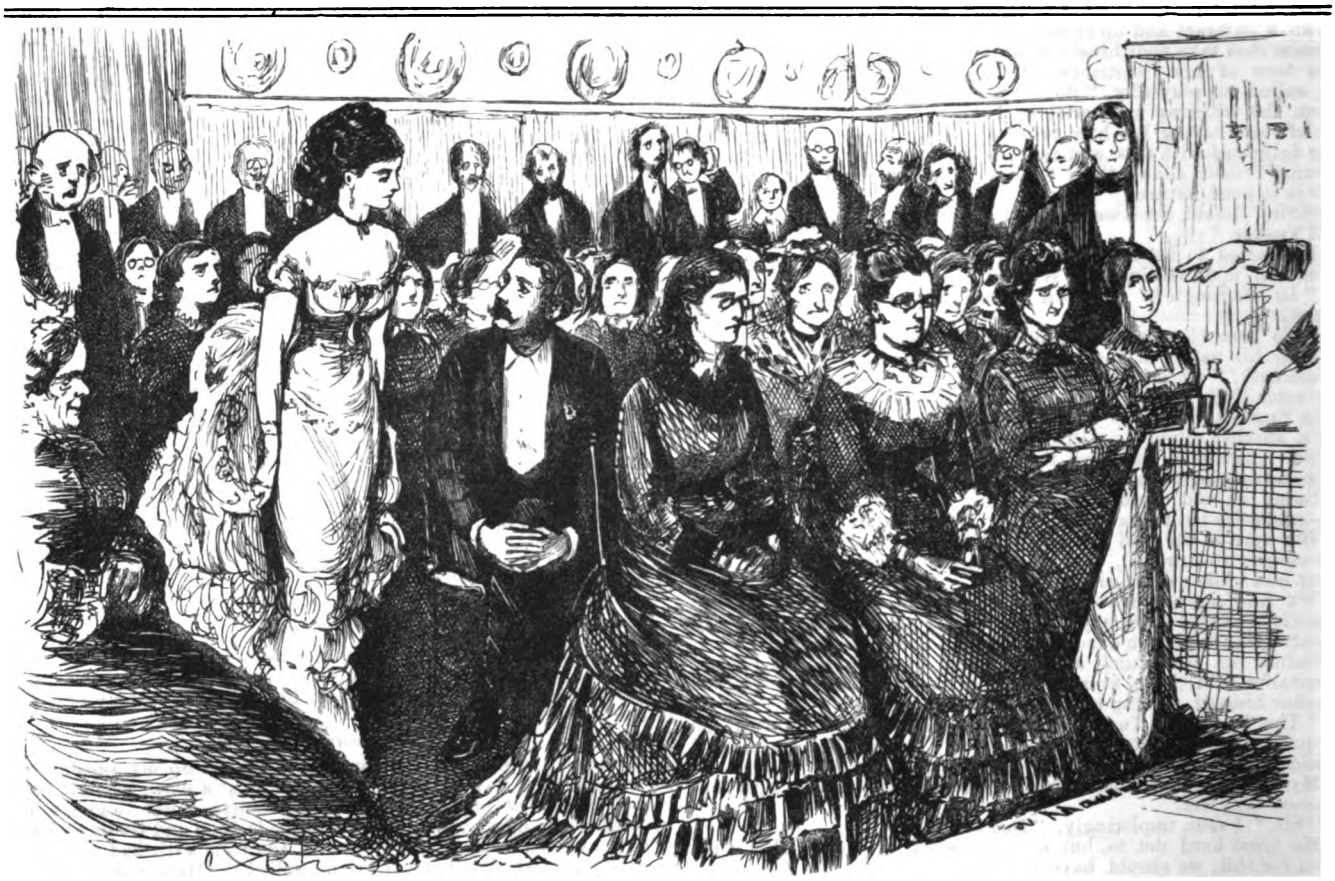
"Why," I returned, "you'll see it at once—the Heir and the Tortoise!"

Roars of merriment. Regular side-splitting tickler. I've got a bag full of Indian jokes and crackers for Christmas cheap.

In haste, Y. R. I. I.

* We've been up for nights with dictionaries, grammars, wet towels, and Indian professors, but can't make it out. A young Gentleman, from the Universities, happening to look in, gave it as his opinion that it was only English written backwards, and could be translated by—"How was you the day after to-morrow?" But we refuse to believe that such a trick has been put upon us. No, it must be a rare Indian dialect.—ED.

† In our Dictionary a paundau is a "vessel holding betel nuts," and a khalâmut is "a bard." We begin to suspect—and yet we do not like suspecting. Still, on the other hand,—we will send out and buy a new Dictionary.—ED.



‡ The boy hasn't yet returned with our new Dictionary, but our old one says that toofaun is "a hurricane," and vakeel "an ambassador." There must be a mistake somewhere.—ED.

* Our Correspondent seems to have used three hands on this occasion. But, of course, some allowance must be made for the excitement of the moment.—ED.

† The boy has not yet returned with the new Dictionary, but in the old one we find Schroff "a banker," Sircar "a native writer," and Routes "a sleeping tent." The two first certainly can be drunk, but they are nothing to drink; and as to singing a sleeping tent, that is manifestly either untrue or a lapsus calami. We shall send out somebody else to see where he is. The Public shall not be deceived with our consent.—ED.

‡ Pillau is an Eastern dish almost as well-known as curry. Still our Correspondent was very tired, and a mere clerical error of that sort is pardonable. At the same time our word is pledged to the Public, and shall be redeemed, even if we have to go out ourselves by the next Indian Mail.—ED.

Digitized by Google

"EVIL COMMUNICATIONS," &c.

SCENE—Mrs. Lyon Hunter's Drawing-Room, during a Lecture on "Women's Rights."

Modest Youth (in a whisper, to Young Lady looking for a Seat). "ER—EXCUSE ME, BUT DO YOU BELIEVE IN THE EQUALITY OF THE SEXES, MISS WILHELMINA?"

Young Lady. "MOST CERTAINLY I DO, MR. JONES."

Modest Youth. "HAW! IN THAT CASE OF COURSE I NEEDN'T GIVE YOU UP MY CHAIR!"

RECENT METEOROLOGICAL INTELLIGENCE.

"THE thermometer rose steadily this morning." Glad to hear it. Then it couldn't have been "screwed" overnight.

Instructions for using the Barometer.—When rain is wanted, tap the barometer. This is seldom without effect.

In consequence of the recent inclemency of the weather, the Hairdressers have invented a new style for Ladies' heads—aux cheveux de freeze.

The Arctic Expedition will not find the North Pole, as it is surmised the North Pole has lately taken up a position in England. Medical men are of opinion that it will soon be acclimatised, and, if so, it will appear on Chimney-Sweepers' Day as "The May-Pole." This is cheering; but the Arctic Expeditioners are wasting their time. Can't some one telegraph?

Meteorological Remarks.—MRS. FUBSBY (weight 20st. at least) says "she can't bear ice." The repulsion is mutual; the ice can't bear her.

Further Remarks.—The Frigidometer down to five degrees below freezing-point. Very cold.

Five degrees below that. Colder.

No more points left, and the Frigidometer collapsed. Stop in bed.

More Remarks.—Very cold out of doors. So I should think. Warm in bed.

Thaw.—Self-cleansing of the streets. Boyton suits in request.

Last Remarks.—"Horrid cold it's been!" "Can't keep warm." "No hunting." "Get some soon." "Better in Town than Country," &c., &c.

IRISH TOAST AND SENTIMENT.—The Mobilisation of the Standing Army!

A PERIL WELL PAST.

ACCORDING to newspapers, the "Iron Duke, 14, iron screw, armour-plated, CAPTAIN J. C. ROWLEY," has left Plymouth Sound for coastguard service at Kingstown, in place of the Vanguard. To this announcement the journals added that:—

"It was understood that the Iron Duke, on her way to Kingstown, would afford relief to homeward-bound merchant ships in the Channel, kept back by the long prevailing easterly winds."

Without being uncommonly superstitious, the sailors, and, indeed, all hands on board the homeward-bound merchant ships which the Iron Duke was appointed to afford relief to, would, perhaps, if they had known, have been somewhat apprehensive about that arrangement. However, all is well that ends well. The homeward-bound vessels have got safe home. The Iron Duke has happily contrived to steer clear of them.

RATHER STARTLING.

SCENE—General Dealer's Shop, where Newspapers are sold.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Shopkeeper (a melancholy thin person).
Casual Customer (brisk).
Old Lady Customer (seated, while an assistant child is tying up something or other for her in a small parcel.)

Casual Customer (entering suddenly). Got the World?

Melancholy Shopkeeper (sadly). No, Sir. I've been out of the World since last Thursday.

[Old Lady screams, faints. Tableau.

Digitized by Google

OUR KRIEG'S-SPIEL.

THE SECRETARY FOR WAR. "ONLY SEE HOW BEAUTIFULLY IT MOVES!"
BRITANNIA. "BEAUTIFULLY!—ON PAPER."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

BISMARCK TO HIS PARLIAMENT.

E pleased to approve of a Bill
To check insub-
ordinate airs
Of envoys repug-
nant to drill
In managing Foreign Affairs.

People fancy I need but command,
That to hear is for "subs" to obey.
Kings and Em-
perors can understand,
And submis-
sively do what
I say;

But my subalterns
thwart my designs,
More oft than the public would think!

Speak my bidding, but mock it by signs,
Sometimes, e'en by a shrug or a wink.

And they earwig mine Emperor and King,
As if my designs they saw through!
You must see that this isn't the thing,
And acknowledge it never will do.

It is known to you all very well
My instructions are lucid as wise,
And the truths I bid underlings tell,
Cozen diplomates better than lies.

Not to have them verbatim conveyed,
And confirmed in their literalest sense,
Both by gesture and tone, must be made
A gross wrong, and most heinous offence.

I can reprimand coxcombs and fools
Led away by self-will, and the lack
Of the wit to be competent tools;
But I want power to give them the sack.

To know that their place was their bread,
Might perversest of asses o'erawe.
But donkeys who want do not dread
To coerce you must grant me a law.

"Blood and Iron" I know are controlled
By the Mind that unshaken remains;
But I want a more tangible hold
Upon blockheads' refractory brains.

Royal Bon Mot.

(From our Indian Representative. By Telegraph.)

MR. PUNCH has great pleasure in publishing the following telegram:—

Ceylon, Dec. 9.

When, the other day, His Royal Highness went Pig-sticking for the first time, and had the honour of killing the only pig stuck on that occasion, the Prince, who, as is to be expected from his fine and portly figure, feels the heat considerably, turning to one of his suite, in his own affable and irresistibly humorous style, observed, "I must adopt a new motto—Dum (per)spiro spearo."

I hasten to secure the exclusive publication of this in the columns of Punch. It has created the best possible feeling throughout India.

"ARMY, FORM!"

MR. PUNCH begs to publish the following letters à propos of the Army Mobilisation Scheme which have been received at his office during the last fourteen days:—

MRS. SNOOKS' Boarding House,
Islington-Super-Mare.

DEAR SIR,

I READ your paper every week, after it has been put in the Salon for the entertainment of MRS. SNOOKS' ladies and gentlemen. I also read the Times, when I can get it away from MAJOR POPLEY (late of the Royal Shoreditch Highlanders)—the gentleman who occupies at present MRS. SNOOKS' top-floor back. From reading you and the Times, I know that you both are just and well-informed. It appears that the Army is soon to be called out and distributed all over the country. Why should this be done? As a Vestryman and a patriot, I beg to ask why?

I will go further. If the Germans or Russians wanted to invade England, I would ask why shouldn't they? Is not this a free country? No, my dear Sir, take my word for it, an invasion would be a blessing rather than a curse to us. In fact, if the gentlemen chose to come in the winter months, their arrival would be the best thing possible for trade. Lodgers after October are very scarce. I appeal to your sense of justice then to make the following announcement public, for the benefit of foreigners in general and Germans and Russians in particular: Should any number of invaders honour Islington-Super-Mare with a visit, they will find waiting for them a hearty welcome, comfortable apartments, and a really excellent five o'clock table d'hôte dinner, at seven shillings and sixpence per head. I am, dear Sir, yours most truly,

December, 1875. THE HUSBAND OF MRS. SNOOKS.

Rosebud Cottage, Flirtington.

MY DEAREST MR. PUNCH,

YOU are always so kind and so nice and so good that I am sure you will not laugh at me, and call me a "little stupid." Now, will you?

I think the Mobilisation of the Army most proper. Papa says that it is very patriotic, and I agree with him. I know that a Ball is never so nice as when there are a number of Officers present. They dance so beautifully, and are so very charming. Now are they not? But, from reading the Times, it seems to me that the Guards are all to be kept in one place! Is this fair? Of course the Cavalry are awfully nice, and the Rifle Brigade, the Sixtieth, and most of the Highlanders, are dreadfully pleasant; but, after all, a Guardsman is a Guardsman. Now isn't he? If they keep all the Guards in one place, it will be horribly unfair to the rest of the country. Now won't it?

Surely, my dearest Mr. Punch, the matter might be compromised. All the Household Brigade might be sent to Flirtington, and then everybody would be contented. O, do see to this, and gain the heartfelt thanks of Yours most sincerely,

December, 1875. AN UNSELFISH LITTLE GIRL.

MR. PUNCH. SIR, Dublin.

IRELAND—the Emerald Isle, the Land of Saints—is a down-trodden country, Sir. Be sure of that, Sir. But, Sir, the old Irish heart is a noble heart, Sir, and in the hour of need, Sir, Irishmen, to a man, would be ready to defend the flag with the triple cross. Mind that, Sir!

But, Sir, I will be practical. Sir, in the hour of danger England would require every soldier that could be scraped together. Sir, she would want the Irish Militia. Faith, then, Sir, she should have the Irish Militia and every soul of her own dirty red-coats. Mind that, Sir!

But you will say, Sir, "Whom would we fight, were the soldiers away?" I tell you what, Sir. We would make it convenient, Sir, to do all our fighting amongst ourselves, Sir, and an elegant time would we have of it! Mind that, Sir!

THE O'FLAHERTY
December, 1875. Of Castle O'Flaherty.

MR. PUNCH. SIR, Edinburgh.

I HAVE been deeply interested in the account of the proposed Mobilisation of the British Army, which appears to me to be a very proper proceeding on the part of the authorities. But, my conscience! it will cost very much, very much, indeed!

May I make a suggestion, which has occurred to me and some friends, who have talked the matter over thoroughly and completely over a glass of whiskey?

Surely it would cost less were the Army quartered, rent and food free, abroad—say in Sweden or Denmark, or some other law-abiding and weakly defended country, whose inhabitants would be able to offer no practical objection to the proceeding.

Or, if the money must be spent in the United Kingdom, does it not stand to reason that it should be spent in Scotland, where there is plenty of room for half-a-dozen armies, and where the expenditure is sure to be properly appreciated?

Disinterestedly, yours, SAWNEY MCSTINGY,
Dscember, 1875. Of that Ilk.

Digitized by Google

ACCOMMODATING.

Swell. "AWF'LY KIND OF THIS CABMAN, Y' KNOW! 'SAYS IF I'M GOING HIS WAY 'DON'T MIND LETTING ME GO WITH HIM! BUT IF I'M NOT GOING HIS WAY, HE'LL SEE ME—AH—BLOWED FIRST! I AM GOING HIS WAY, SO IT'S AWANGED THAT WE GO T'GETHAR! AWF'LY OBLIGING FELLAH!"

MONSIEUR, Leicester Squar.

YOU have an Army! Bah! Where is it? You think you can defend your miserable country from my compatriots! Bah! You are fooliah, you are stupid, you are imbecile! Why, we would écrase you at a blow! We would wipe you out, you, and your "polismans," and your "Sunday," and your "portère-bierre"! I hate you! You hear what I say—I hate you all! you miserable, wretched "rosbifs!"

You reply to me — oh, I know you — "Why do I not put myself at the head of my compatriots to invade you?" You ask me why I do not leave this miserable Leicester Squar for my own beautiful country? I will tell you why, poltroon—wretch! Listen well. If I were to go to my own lovely country to put myself at the head of my compatriots, what would be the consequence? I will tell you. My compatriots are clever—they are patriots. However I might be disguised, they would discover me; and when I was discovered, my compatriots would hang me! So I remain. Bah! You have my defiance!

A GRATEFUL FOREIGNER.

December, 1875.

Pall Mall, S. W., December, 1875.

F.M. the Duke, presents his respectful compliments to Mr. Punch, and begs to inform him that he (H.R.H.) has done his best. Under these circumstances, F.M. the Duke trusts that Mr. Punch will regard his efforts to please with indulgence.

Union House, Great Britain and Ireland.

MY DEAREST AND BEST FRIEND,

I REALLY think that GEORGE and HARDY have been trying to do their duty. Of course, it would be more satisfactory to see the Army instead of only hearing of it. However, now that we have the shadow, perhaps we may find the substance near at hand. Shall we agree to hope for the best?

Ever Yours Affectionately,

December, 1875. BRITANNIA.

SOMETHING IN IT.

(To the Editor of Punch.)

SIR,

CATHOLICS are often charged—when their glasses are charged—with a sort of festive disloyalty for drinking the health of the POPE before that of the QUEEN. Of course we know there is Protestant precedent for this in the old toast of "Church and State," "Church and King." But on the celebration of Founder's Day at Eton College, at the grand banquet then given, the first toast was "In Piam Memoriam," and the second toast was "The QUEEN." Now, Sir, I don't profess myself to be a scholar, but I can't see much difference between drinking "In Pium" and "In Piam" as a first toast. The Catholics do the former, the Etonians on Founder's Day the latter, and both, without any disloyalty, drink "In Reginam" second.

I am, Sir, yours,

Birch Lane. IGNORAMUS ETONENSIS.

PERSONAL AMENITIES.

(From a High Church Organ.)

"We regret to observe that that 'chartered libertine,' the DEAN OF WESTMINSTER, has once more degraded the venerable church which is so unfortunate as to be committed to his charge, by making its nave a lecture-room in which Nonconformist Ministers may disport themselves."

"Who doubts for a moment, that if a saintly, diligent pastor had been accused of Ritualism by any drunken infidel reprobate, the Archbishop would have eagerly sprung at the occasion, and tried to ruin him, as he is trying to ruin MR. RISDALE, for obedience to the teaching of that church which he himself has sworn to uphold, and has systematically defied throughout his discreditable career."

The Service at Westminster Abbey on the evening of St. Andrew's Day (Nov. 30) is designated as DR. MOFFATT'S Entertainment.—From a recent Number of the Church Times.

If this is High Church pleasantry, what is Low?

Digitized by Google

FOND AND FOOLISH.

"COOK!" "YES, MISS BETSY-JANE!"

"I WISH YOU WOULD ALLOW YOUR LINNET TO COME AND SPEND THE DAY WITH MY CANARIES!"

THE BRITISH PUBLIC'S XXXIX. ARTICLES.

I.—Ox-Tail Soup.
II.—SHAKSPEARE.
III.—The Bank of England.
IV.—The LORD MAYOR.
V.—Beer.
VI.—Cold Water.
VII.—Something Hot.
VIII.—Public Dinners.
IX.—Public Schools.
X.—The Peerage.
XI.—The Royal Academy.
XII.—The British Constitution
XIII.—The Family Doctor.
XIV.—Brandy-and-Soda.
XV.—St. Paul's.
XVI.—The Three-per-Cents.
XVII.—The Court Circular.
XVIII.—A Balance at the Banker's.
XIX.—A Neat Umbrella.
XX.—A Nice Cob.
XXI.—Roast Beef.
XXII.—Seasonable Weather.
XXIII.—Long Walks.
XXIV.—Across Country
XXV.—A Latch-Key.
XXVI.—The Classics.
XXVII.—A Month at the Sea-side.
XXVIII.—Great Bargains.
XXIX.—Grumbling.
XXX.—Writing to the Papers.
XXXI.—Sight-seeing.
XXXII.—The Long Vacation.
XXXIII.—The Twelfth of August and the First of September.
XXXIV.—Being Introduced.
XXXV.—Turkey and Plum Pudding.
XXXVI.—A Great Subscription.
XXXVII.—A Quiet Cigar.
XXXVIII.—Testimonials.
XXXIX.—Christmas.

BYRONIC EPITAPH ON THE POLAR BEAR CUB (brought from the Arctic Regions in the "Pandora," by CAPTAIN ALAN YOUNG and, lately deceased at the Zoological Gardens).—"'Tis Grease, but living Grease no more!"

THE MOST PESTILENT OF HERETICS.

THE Times' Correspondent at Rome telegraphs a piece of news about the POPE which is pleasant if true. Some time back the ARCHBISHOP OF TURIN imposed a vexatious restriction upon his Clergy. By a new regulation he prohibited them from frequenting public hotels, cafés, eating-houses, restaurants, and refreshment-rooms, and obliged Priests from the country visiting the city on business and requiring accommodation, to put up in some seminary, or other ecclesiastic establishment, at an expense exceeding what they would have incurred elsewhere. Thus inconvenienced, a number of the Inferior Clergy appealed to the "Congregational Council" for redress, on the plea that, "since the Vatican Council, the regulation of matters of discipline relating to the Clergy throughout the whole of the Catholic world is vested in the hands of the Supreme Pontiff only, and that the Bishops have no farther power beyond that of carrying out the instructions which emanate from him." The tribunal appealed to is said to have entertained the complaint, and put the Archbishop on his defence. Furthermore:—

"It is stated that PIUS THE NINTH is adverse to the liberty of the Clergy being unduly restrained, and, upon being informed of the complaint of the Turinese Clergy, stigmatised discipline of this rigorous character as Jansenistic."

Well said, your Holiness. Shall not your poor Priest take his ease in his inn? Of course, provided he take not too much. Undue restraint of liberty, clerical or lay, is Jansenistic rigour. Jansenism is heresy, even in our Protestant eyes, because it is excessively rigorous—nay, from a British point of view, for heretical depravity, there are no heretics so bad as those guilty of excessive rigour. Let them be Anathema! Sint oculi sicut oculi eorum qui a paupere furantur cervisiam suam. May they fare, as promoters of Sabbatarian Acts and restrictive Liquor Laws, the Embitterment of Sunday Association, and the United Kingdom Alliance. Though, indeed, among these last there are some even more depraved than the followers of JANSENIUS. Those most wretched Restrictives, may it please your Holiness, are what we call Advanced Radicals, and Secularists—Puritans without religion. What can be more intolerable than Puritanism destitute of even religious pretence? As though religion were not for every reasonable being the sole raison d'être for the imposition, or the endurance of any restraint on simple self-indulgence. May all heretics and apostates, who seek to subject other people to Jansenistic rigour, be, as the holy ERNULPHUS says, spifflicated and flabbergasted, from the crown of the head to the tip of the great toe, inclusively of all the intervening organs and members. In the meanwhile, score we treble X to the POPE. He has, at last, spoken, whether ex cathedrâ, or not, with something like the voice of Infallibility.

FOR ONCE.

MR. PUNCH being continually asked why he does not publish an Acrostic, simply replies that he is not in the habit of imitating others, however successful—that, moreover, if he did, most probably not a single Subscriber would be able to crack his nut, supposing him to have given his great mind to it. However, if his Readers like to weary their intellectual jaws, let them put them to trial on this:—

DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

My First, elect among the few,
Elects my Second to expose his view.

I.

Of every colour, changed at will;
I stand or sit for good or ill.

II.

I rule alone from noon till night—
And when I am not, am by right.

It won't happen again, and, indeed, it is useless to humour our Readers, for they will have to give it up.

Digitized by Google

SCIENCE FOR A SOLOMON.

A TELEGRAM from Berlin announces the death of a PROFESSOR MARTIN, "the well-known gynecologist and Privy Councillor of Medicine." Was there not a certain M. AIMÉ MARTIN, author of a work entitled l'Éducation des Mères? If that is the Professor referred to, M. MARTIN certainly cultivated one branch of "Gynecology," but it is doubtful if his researches can have embraced the whole of that very extensive science. As a distinct science, by the way, Gynecology will probably be something new even to philosophers at large. Some few survivors of the pre-Board-School period may need to be told that Gynecology means the Science of the Softer Sex. Let us call Gynecology the better half of Anthropology. Then we must own Andrology the worse. The proper study of Mankind is Man in general, and Woman in particular—the latter claiming his special attention under the name of Gynecology. At present, however, we appear to be behind foreigners in the prosecution of that science. We have not any Professors of Gynecology. Perhaps, however, Gynecological chairs will, in due time, be established at Oxford and Cambridge. Of course, they will be open only to men who have taken the requisite degree. Nobody will be eligible to Gynecological Professorships who is a mere Bachelor.

THE TAR OF THE FUTURE.

HERE a sheer hulk sits poor JACK STOKER,
A smoking of his screw,
No more he 'll wield a Navy poker,
As he was wont to do;
His face was usually sooty,
His hands were black, but soft:
Ready below to do his duty,
He never went aloft.

JACK seldom from his post departed,
Except to take the air;
His ship was water-tight-comparted,
The main sluice was his care.
And one day STOKER had the folly
To leave the valve unstopped,
The consequence was melancholy,
The vessel—down she popped!

Yet still JACK STOKER kept his weather-
-Eye open for the worst,
And when the crew was piped together
JACK STOKER turned up first.
Grim Death who kings and tars dispatches,
JACK'S life has not yet doff'd;
For when the water reached the hatches,
JACK went, for once, aloft! *

* And was taken out of the maintop high and dry.

UNSEASONABLE.

SOME enthusiastic Cricketer writes to the papers, entreating that LORD HENRY LENNOX will consent to improve the Victoria Park Cricket Ground. Mr. Punch yields to no one in his love of manly sports, but at this season he cannot consent to interest himself in anything nearer the subject than "Cricket on the Hearth."

PUNCH'S ADVERTISEMENT COLUMN.

ANGELINA.—You will find all the Information you desire in Punch's Pocket-Book, which is just out.—EDWIN.

WILD WILLIE.—You are earnestly requested not to return to the bosom of your Family. The aforesaid Family have discovered that they can do perfectly well without you.

A SAFE INVESTMENT FOR A SMALL SUM.—Buy Punch's Pocket-Book for 1876.

YOUR MOTHER'S DARLING, why don't you come home? Everything shall be done to make you happy. Your Father shall have chambers taken for him, your objectionable Sister shall be married, and your younger Brothers shall be sent to a school where there are no holidays. Only come home, and you may smoke in the drawing-room, have your breakfast in bed, and possess a latch-key.

TO LOVERS OF ART.—A Magnificent Opportunity.—TO BE SOLD, Seven Splendid Examples of MICHAEL ANGELO, four ditto of RUBENS, two ditto of TENIERS, and one ditto (18ft. by 9ft.) of TITIAN. The above glorious Works of Art will be sold for £60, as their Owner is going abroad.—Apply to J. SOLOMONS, Wardour Street.

SAVE HALF YOUR COALS by adopting our new patent. It is portable and complete in itself. It requires no brickwork setting. It will serve a whole family for one year at the small cost of only Two-and-Sixpence. It is sold in plain and strong leather cases for exportation, and can be packed away with perfect ease and safety in the portmanteau, hat-box, or ordinary coat-pocket. Suitable for any climate. This invaluable article can be obtained at 85, Fleet Street. Ask for Punch's Pocket-Book for 1876.

IF the GENTLEMAN who called on a Firm of SOLICITORS, in Lincoln's Inn, last week, and kicked one of the Partners downstairs, and broke the other's head with the office-ruler, will kindly send his Address to the above Firm, he will greatly oblige.

CASUALTIES AT SEA.—By paying Two Shillings and Sixpence a year, you can secure for your Family ONE HUNDRED POUNDS' worth of Enjoyment, and avoid all chances of Accidents at Sea by purchasing, and staying on shore to read, Punch's Pocket-Book for 1876.

£10 REWARD.—LOST, the Sweetest, Dearest, Most Affectionate little BLACK AND TAN TERRIER ever seen. Answers to the Name of Trim. Any one finding it, and taking it safely to MRS. DOODLE, Rhododendron Lodge, St. John's Wood, will receive the above Reward.

£10 REWARD.—LOST, a MONGREL CUR, which, if offered anything to eat, will answer as much to the name of Trim as to anything else. Anyone bringing it dead to MR. DOODLE, 51, King's Bench Walk, Temple, will receive the above reward.

HOW TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.—Buy Punch's Pocket-Book for Half-a-Crown, and take it home to your family. 85, Fleet Street, E.C.

MONEY WITHOUT INQUIRY FEES or Preliminary Charges up to any Amount, from Half-a-Crown upwards, will be taken at 85, Fleet Street, for a copy of Punch's Pocket-Book for 1876.

LOST.—A GOLD WATCH and CHAIN, on Monday night, either at a Club in Regent Street, or at some Theatre or another, or at EVANS'S, or at another Club, or somewhere else. Advertiser is not certain whether he lost his watch, or had it stolen, or gave it away. At any rate he wants it back again. Handsome reward. Apply to the Beadle, Burlington Arcade.

THE GENTLEMAN who took a new OVERCOAT by mistake out of the Megatherium Club, will gladly give it back, in return for his old one. The new one, though more handsome, does not fit.

I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that I shall NOT BE RESPONSIBLE for any DEBTS whatever contracted by my Husband.—BRIDGET STRONG, M.D.

IF the YOUNG GENTLEMAN who winked at a Lady in Westbourne Grove yesterday afternoon, will be at the Round Pond in Kensington Gardens to-morrow morning at eleven, he will be introduced to the Lady's Brother and a horsewhip.

NO MORE CHILBLAINS! No more Coughs, Colds, or Rheumatism! For the small sum of Half-a-Crown, sufferers at this inclement season of the year may obtain instant relief by purchasing Punch's Pocket-Book for 1876.

TO THE BENEVOLENT.—The Wife of an Indigent Tradesman is in pressing need of £25. The Money will be repaid next Monday; and a Grand Piano, a Victoria, and a set of Diamonds will be given as Interest.—VIRGINIA WIDEAWAKE, 1, Diddleum Street, Brompton.

I THIS DAY Promulgate that the Earth does not go around the Sun. CHARLES O'SHAUGHNESSY.—Finucane, December 4th, 1875.

BONA FIDE.—A Young Widow 25, very fair and very handsome, no family, well-connected, accomplished, with fascinating manners, warm-hearted, loving disposition, and who would make her husband the happiest man on earth, wishes to hear from any gentleman of ample means from 30 to 55, who would appreciate a lovely and loving wife.

PUNCH'S PRIVATE INQUIRY OFFICE. Conducted by Mr. Punch. More than thirty years' experience with every class of persons all over the world. Missing answers to conundrums traced, old jokes and stale witticisms detected, &c. Call at the Office, 85, Fleet Street, and, having deposited the small fee of half-a-crown, privately inquire for Mr. Punch's Pocket-Book for 1876.

Digitized by Google

EQUALITY.

"ON THE ICE, EVEN MORE THAN IN THE HUNTING-FIELD, PEOPLE ARE BROUGHT INTO IMMEDIATE CONTACT WHO ARE OTHERWISE KEPT ASUNDER." SO AT LEAST THOUGHT DOBBIN, THE GREENGROCER'S ASSISTANT, WHEN THE LADY FLORILINE FITZ-FLEUDDELYS CLASPED HIM WILDLY BY THE NECK, AND FOLDED HIM IN HER WARM EMBRACE.

Digitized by Google

THE FESTIVE SEASON.

FRIENDS with you, my dear Punch, must be legion. Has any of them sent you a Christmas hamper yet? I see them plentifully advertised, prices from one guinea, upwards. Hampers of good cheer they are no doubt, and certainly not hampers upon social enjoyment. But alas! these other hampers, which nobody need advertise, are pretty sure to find their way to you, and me, and most of us. Who can hope to get through Christmas without being sorely hampered by such evils as the following?—

School bills.	Christmas boxers.
Doctors' ditto.	Family parties.
Butchers', bakers', and candlestick-makers' ditto, ditto.	Roast beef dinners.
	Festive doings.
	Deep potations.
	Mornings after.

I leave you to continue this imperfect list of real Christmas hampers. My boys are just come home, and are dancing wildly round my study table. What more can I do than sign myself

Yours plaintively,

Holly House, near Puddingborough. A CHRISTMAS MARTYR.

"HEARTS OF OAK."

(New Version.)

COME cheer up, my lads,
Never mind where you steer:
You 've to add something more
To this wonderful year.
To perils we send you
Of fogs and of flukes,
Serapis chain-cables,
And rams like the Duke's!

Iron-clads are our ships,
Stoke- and Poke-rs our men;
We always are ready—
Steady, boys, steady!—
To ram and to run-down
Again and again!

We ne'er see our friends
Till they 're well in the way;
And, if they see us,
They can't wear, steer, or stay.
Through fogs we steam headlong,
Hang shoal or lee-shore:
If we go to the bottom,
JOHN BULL will build more!

Iron-clads are our ships, &c.

The papers abuse us,—
We trust in "My Lords."
Confidential inquiries
Are better for Boards.
A Court Martial's finding
Aside may be thrust.
To our kind friends above
The decision we trust.

Iron-clads are our ships, &c.

"IN TOTO CŒLO."

AN Indian Correspondent speaks of "Cheetahs" being "hoodwinked." In England, this operation is usually performed not upon the "cheaters" but the "cheated."

TENDER AND TRUE.

THE Lords of the Admiralty have issued an advertisement, inviting Tenders for the raising of the Vanguard. Amongst the thousands of letters upon the subject received hourly at Whitehall, the following seem to be the most promising:—

23½ b, Pipemakers' Buildings, St. Giles's Alley, W.C.,
December, 1875.

MY LORDS,

IN answer to your advertisement about the raising of the Vanguard, I beg to say that I am perfectly prepared to undertake the task on the most reasonable terms. In reply to your condition "that all parties tendering shall furnish evidence of their financial ability to undertake the work," I beg to say that I have large concessions in South America, and am a personal friend of His Excellency the BARON MUNCHAUSEN. On receipt of five pounds and six postage-stamps my tender shall be forwarded to you forthwith.

I am, my Lords, your obedient Servant,
JEREMY DIDDLER,
Knight Commander of the Golden Fleece of Costa-Rica.

The Lords of the Admiralty, Whitehall.

The Retreat, Harwich,
December, 1875.

MY LORDS,

I SHALL be very pleased to undertake the raising of the Vanguard. I see that you insist that "the scheme of proposed operations shall be submitted with the tender." This regulation seems to me a little harsh; but as I believe I am dealing with honourable men, I feel no hesitation in sending you my recipe. Take half-a-pound of common salt, a little salad oil, and a few ounces of gunpowder, and mix them well together over a slow fire, being careful to remove the scum as it rises to the surface. Now get your steam-engine and balloon, and proceed as in ordinary cases of hair-cutting by machinery. You will now find you have an enormous lever-power at your command, and the heaviest weights may be lifted with ease, and even impunity

Trusting to your well-known courtesy and love of fair play to keep this secret,—a wonder known only to a few, and shielded from the curiosity of fools, knaves, and the knife-grinding and brush manufacturing confraternity generally,

I remain, My Lords, your obedient servant,
LUNAR FISK,
Companion of the Cold Bath, and only genuine Pope of Rome.

The Lords of the Admiralty, Whitehall.

241, Paradise Parade, Clapham,
December, 1875.

MY LORDS,

WITHOUT hesitation I accept your terms for the raising of the Vanguard on behalf of my immediately-to-be-launched company, "The British and Foreign Fleets Salvage Association, Limited." You wish me to name a "lump sum" for the job. Well, say four millions and a half, or, accepting a reduction for short term—i.e., if cash can be banked before noon to-morrow—£10,000. Also to give dates "for proposed commencement and probable end of operations." I intend to commence at once, and shall very likely get the matter satisfactorily settled by the 1st of April, 1876. Warning you against any slanderous reports you may hear about me in connection with my recent negotiations with the Court of Bankruptcy,

I remain, my Lords, your obedient Servant,
A. SHARP,
Ex-Secretary of Seventy-Six Public Companies.

The Lords of the Admiralty, Whitehall, S.W.

New York, U. S. A., December, 1875.

MY LORDS,

YOUR advertisement has been cabled to me, and I accept it right off the reel. Wire back lowest terms and I accept them, knowing that you will be "businesslike," when I tell you that I shall be happy to allow you all round a regular big commission. You must sweeten down one of your conditions though. You say "the ship must be raised and delivered whole, and not in pieces." This don't suit my book, as I should blow the silly old boat into small potatoes. If I get you all the pieces that should satisfy you. You might give the lot to the young 'uns home for the holidays to put together. It would make a nice wholesome puzzle for them, and keep 'em out of mischief.

Digitized by Google

My Lords, yours faithfully,

The Admiralty Lords, SAMUEL SLICK.
Whitehall, England, Europe. Man of Business, U.S.A.

The Great Removing Repository, Bloomsbury.
December, 1875.

MY LORDS,

IN answer to your esteemed advertisement, I beg to say that I shall be happy to undertake the removal of the Vanguard from the bottom of the sea to any of Her Majesty's Docks.

I notice that you wish the ship to be delivered "in such a state that she may be docked." May I ask whether you will have any objection to her being packed in one of my large and commodious vans, in which I am accustomed to remove families on the most reasonable terms, and at the shortest notice possible?

Awaiting your esteemed reply,

I am, my Lords, your humble obedient servant,

JOHN SNOOKS,
Manager and Proprietor of the Great Removing Repository, Bloomsbury.

The Lords of the Admiralty, Whitehall.

MY LORDS, 85, Fleet Street, E.C., December, 1875.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I shall be delighted to undertake the raising of the Vanguard on the following condition. I propose to descend to the bottom of the sea (where I shall remain half an hour) and I shall expect all of you to accompany me. I shall wear a diver's dress, and you can appear in full official costume. As the result of our little expedition will most probably result in a change in the government of the Admiralty, I am sure the scheme I propose will meet with the enthusiastic approbation of the British Public.

I have the honour to be, My Lords,
With all the respect you deserve to receive,
Your Lordships' to command,

The Lords of the Admiralty. PUNCH.

CHRISTMAS "CRACKERS."

OOD cheer being the rule of Mis-rule, and Mis-rule the rule of Christmas-tide, the operation of roasting the Baron of Beef for the Christmas festivities at Windsor Castle will be conducted with the usual ceremonies on Christmas Eve, by the Yeomen of the Guard (the Beef-eaters), in the presence of Garter King-at-Arms, the junior Bishop of the House of Lords, the Warden of the Standards, the Barons of the Exchequer (the New Judicature Act expressly reserves their right to the dripping), and the Hydrographer to the Admiralty. Each of these distinguished personages will, in turn, baste the Baron appropriately (decorated with the Union Jack,) while the choir of St. George's sing "O! the Roast Beef of Old England!" newly set by PROFESSOR LIVELY, Mus. Doc. Oxon.

The papers to be read at the Society of Arts between Christmas and Easter, will most probably be on Mobilisation, Vingt-et-un, the Advantages of Early Rising, Rinks and Rinking, Double Acrostics (the LORD MAYOR and Sheriffs to preside at the distribution of prizes), Night Lights, Hair Dyes (with practical illustrations), Mineral Waters, Second-hand Clothes, Pickles and Preserves, and Torpedoes (with experiments), and Bicycling.

A great revolution is about to take place in the curriculum of studies at Eton. After the vacation, instruction in Field Sports, Horsemanship, Practical Land Surveying, Painting in Oil and Water Colours, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Road-making, Civil Engineering (including boring, blasting and tunnelling), Natural History (with frequent country excursions), and Pyrotechny, will be given to any boy who shall signify his desire (in writing), to the Head Master to substitute these branches of useful learning for the study of the ancient Greek and Roman authors, and Mathematics.

A report is prevalent that the Albert Hall is to be converted into a grand Skating Rink.

It is in contemplation to give a series of popular Lectures, amusing Readings, and Musical Entertainments (including an exhibition of the Magic Lantern) during the holidays, in which the Dean and Chapter and the entire Cathedral staff will take part, in aid of the project for supplying St. Paul's with a peal of bells.

A rumour is afloat that the Lords of the Admiralty intend to take a cruise in the Iron Duke to the Scilly Islands and Isle of Mull—to start on the 24th of this month.

It is said to be the intention of the PRIME MINISTER to appoint either a retired Cabinet Minister or an ex-Colonial Governor to the Secretaryship to the Local Government Board, vacant by the resignation of MR. READ, M.P. The place of Secretary to the Civil Service Commission will most probably be filled by a former Lord of the Admiralty.

A Company is in process of formation for the construction of an Underground Railway to connect the Crystal and Alexandra Palaces.

A gigantic Christmas-Tree will be on view in Westminster Hall on Boxing-Night. The proceeds will be added to the fund which is being raised to assist the Vestries and other public bodies in keeping the streets of London passable on the occurrence of another snow-storm.

Great News! No more School-rates for London! The City Companies have unanimously resolved to unite in bearing the entire expenses of all the Schools now under the control of the School-Board.

The Government are understood to be in negotiation with His Highness the KHEDIVE for the purchase and transfer of the Great Pyramid to Lincoln's Inn Fields—an area which it has always been calculated this stupendous monument of antiquity would exactly fill. Should the bargain be completed, the Sphinx, it is said, will be thrown in, and placed in front of the official residence of the FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY in Downing Street.

It is gratifying to learn that the Works to be expressly composed for the New Opera House on the Thames Embankment are all on national themes. HERR WAGNER is engaged night and day on a romantic opera which deals with the eventful annals of the Tower of London. GOUNOD has selected for his subject the Insurrection of WAT TYLER; and OFFENBACH'S sprightly powers will have full scope for display in the story of Robinson Crusoe. VERDI may also contribute. If so, his libretto will be founded on the Spanish Armada. ARTHUR SULLIVAN has chosen the history of Boadicea.

Try it!

DEAR MR. PUNCH,

I AM about to write to my creditors to inform them that I cannot conveniently pay their bills for some little time.

Would it be a correct image if I were to suggest to them that I am, in fact, "up a Christmas-tree"?

Yours faithfully,

Dec. 20th. MICAWBER.

TO OUR OWN ŒDIPUSES.

PUNCH congratulates his Readers and Correspondents who have cracked his first double (acrostic) nut—and found M. P. and P. M. inscribed on its brace of Kernels.

NO FEAR!—A rude Boy says that his Uncle, MR. SCREWER, is so careful of his balance, that there is not the least fear of his over-tipping on Boxing-Day.

Digitized by Google

LIFE AND DEATH INSURANCE.

IN a highly interesting lecture on "Unhealthy Occupations," delivered the other evening at the rooms of the Society of Arts, Adelphi, by DR. BENJAMIN W. RICHARDSON, F.R.S.:—

"The lecturer said that, according to the certified returns, out of sixty-nine recognisable occupations in this country those of barristers and clergymen stood prominently forward as the healthiest."

Considering how many briefless barristers there are, and how many curates with nothing but their stipends to subsist on, one wonders that the essential healthiness of their occupations, as such, is not more than counterbalanced by deaths from famine. Many poor lawyers and parsons would seem to be obliged to live considerably within the bounds of healthful moderation. Yet they do live. Behold, my son, with how little sustenance life may be prolonged.

The occupations "found to be most conducive to shortness of life," according to DR. RICHARDSON, are "those of cabmen and coachmen (not domestic servants), and of earthenware manufacturers."

As to cabmen and coachmen, in respect of mortality, both the rule and the exception are intelligible. The potter is apt to be turned prematurely to clay by causes which affect him "during the stages of drying and turning the ware" with all the diseases incidental to all the various occupations injurious to the lungs and the skin. This will be new to most people; but they will be still more surprised by what follows. DR. RICHARDSON stated that:—

"The modern system of hair-brushing by machinery was most injurious to the operators, and several cases had occurred in which the hairdresser had been compelled to leave his business owing to a complaint produced by inhalation during the process of particles of fine dust and fragments of hair."

This alarming information may suggest a case of conscience for every man not one of those unconcerned with it—that is, bald. Ought he, having had his hair cut, to allow it to be "brushed with machinery?" This question may perhaps be answered by the suggestion that the artist by whom the machinery is manipulated might easily protect his respiratory organs with a muslin respirator, add to which, that, if required to brush hair by any but the usual method, he would probably demand an extra fee.

It is too clear that artisans engaged in unhealthy employments, and having wives and children, should by all means if possible insure their lives; the rather that the money saved for that purpose, instead of being spent in drink, would really effect the insurance of a comparatively prolonged existence. The Insurance Companies, however, would perhaps rather wish to have life insurance more generally practised by the long-lived gentlemen of the surplice and the long robe.

YOUNG, BUT SMART.

Aunt Mary. "NOW, DON'T QUARREL, CHILDREN! RECOLLECT THAT 'BIRDS IN THEIR LITTLE NESTS AGREE!'"

Ethel. "WELL, IT WOULDN'T DO FOR THEM TO 'FALL OUT'—ANYHOW, NOT BEFORE THEY COULD FLY. WOULD IT, AUNT MARY?"

LONDON ARRIVALS.

IT is odd that, while people who go to swell places like Brighton and Scarborough have their names printed in all the newspapers, important London arrivals are unnoticed, even by that polite print the Morning Post. Mr. Punch proposes to show his contemporaries how the thing should be done.

MY LORDS MAMMON and BELIAL have just arrived to stay with an eminent Member of the Stock Exchange, at his magnificent Surrey mansion.

GUY FAWKES, ESQ., is the Christmas guest of the Chairman of the Coal Exchange.

ŒDIPUS REX will shortly come over on the pressing invitation of the RIGHT HONOURABLE B. DISRAELI. He will bring with him a choice collection of insoluble riddles. The PREMIER will, on that occasion, change his motto, Forti nihil difficile, to Fortissimo nihil impossibile.

HOMER, Saint Peter, and the Woodman who could not be induced by Music's charms to "spare that tree," will be the guests of MR. GLADSTONE.

CHARLES FOX will visit EARL RUSSELL at Pembroke Lodge.

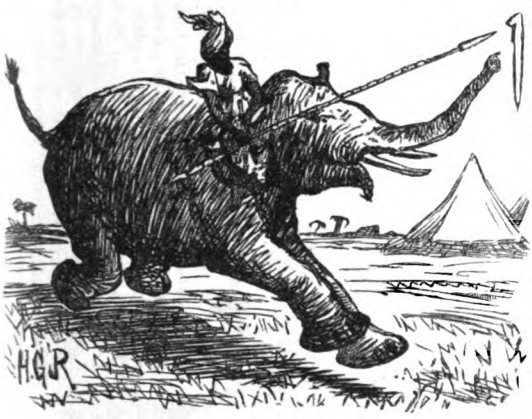
CAPTAIN LEMUEL GULLIVER has accepted an invitation to dine at the Travellers' Club, to meet CAPTAIN LAWSON, the distinguished Author of Adventures in New Guinea (reviewed in the current Number of the Edinburgh).

MR. WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE and a select party of friends, among whom are MR. BEN JONSON, MR. HERRICK, MR. CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE, MESSRS. BEAUMONT and FLETCHER (not limited), are going to pass Christmas with Mr. Punch.

Digitized by Google

CHRISTMAS À LA MODE.

FATHER CHRISTMAS. "CONCRETE AND WHEEL-SKATES! THAT I SHOULD EVER COME TO THIS! HE! HE! REALLY, THOUGH, I RATHER LIKE IT!!"



Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(Gaiety going on. Vive l'amour, cigars, and cognac!)

MY DEAR OLD CHOWPATTEE,

IT was lucky the MAHARANA OF OUDEDOO left us yesterday. We were not sorry to get rid of him. His pigtail was always in somebody's way, getting shut into a door, or pulled, by mistake, for a bell-rope. He was a very quick-tempered man, but, as I said, "If he's quick, I know a Quickwar." (This is a real Indian joke, and depends upon the correct pronunciation of the word "Guicwar." It's all right with the right audience.)

The rank and file is thinning. They can't keep it up. We cleaned out the THAKORE OF KISHUGGUR, who had come with his pockets full to buy sweets and toys at the Bazaar for his ladies at home. Won't they give it him when he goes back! and won't he be unable to give it them! He hasn't got more than would pay his fare back to his own Station, and his family circle was expecting him to return with waggon-loads of dolls and bales of sweeties. The MAHARAJAHS OF MYSORE and YOURSORE are very nice fellows, but they do not understand écarté, though at the same time there was an unpleasant scandal about the SIRDAR OF NOWATYERAT, which was hushed up on his consenting to quit the place at once, and return to his native home; but I did see an ace, a king, a queen, and one or two other good and useful cards tumble out of his ample sleeve. However, one mustn't speak ill of the departed—and he's gone.

We had a really beautiful ball, and my Illustrious Friend was all that Fancy could paint him. I had fortunately brought out my concertina with me, and had been able to give him private lessons every morning after breakfast, so that my Noble Companion has not forgotten any of his steps—nor have I; and we did go it!

All the advice I gave my Esteemed and Royal Companion was, "Be affable. Whatever you do, Sir, be affable."

And he was Affability itself: in fact the Indians have already invented a new title of honour for "The Queen's Boy," and they call him "Khansamah Bagheecha," which scarcely has an equivalent in our cold, unpoetical language, but which expresses their immense undying Love and Reverence for my Amiable and Illustrious Companion.*

Well did my Amiable and Distinguished Friend follow out my instructions. He was Affable. He was the Great Affability. He danced with the oldest, flirted with the plainest. At the Grand Tuculla Ball he led out MRS. MUGGAR, the Aunt of MR. HUGGAR MUGGAR, and kissed MISS FRUMPLY under the mistletoe,† and slapped old RAO SAHEB RUBBARAND ONNERSEESY heartily on the back, and asked him, in excellent native dialect, "Emag rehtona evahwoy Lliwnehw?" The Rao Saheb was enchanted, but he revokes at whist, and is rather a nuisance.

I walked round the ball-room, and introduced all the notabilities, and, in fact, everybody, to my Royal and Affable Companion.

Among the natives I observed SIR COWJUICE JEEUPAHOY, RAO GUSLA, the RAJAH OF HULLABHOY, SIR RARS BERRIJAM, and SIR KUR RANT JELLY BHOY, the RAJAH OF KOLLY WOBBLAR, the CHIEF OF HOOSURE HATTAR, SIR MUCKPICKA DUSTHO, DR. JEE JEE STOOPIDAS, MR. MUCHDHARKAR, MR. SILLIJEE BILLIJEE, and a lot of other swells, not to mention the great MAHARAJAH OF TATAR OWARU, who shook two jewelled fingers at me as he was leaving.

To supper the Prince, who had been dancing a galop with MISS CRAWLEY, after a fast waltz with MISS CREEPER, led in old LADY STUPHER, and helped her to turkey and iced sausages with a jest which will scarcely bear repetition. We kept it up with spirit; and SIR MYNT JULIP SINGH FLATTEEBHOY would insist on standing on the table, and giving us his version of "God Bless the Prince of Wales."

We took shots at him with rolls, and, in avoiding one as straight as a die in his left optic, he stumbled back over the barley-sugar elephant, his turban came off, and his stupid old head was hoary with iced cream.

My Illustrious Friend enjoyed it amazingly.

Before my more than Esteemed Companion quitted Ceylon, two aboriginal Veddahs were presented to him.

"If you were a bachelor, Sir," I whispered to him, "you could marry one of these ladies."

"Why," he returned, falling unwittingly into my verbal trap for a jeu de mot, "I could not, because they are married."

"No, Sir," I returned, chuckling with the humour of my jest, "They're not married—they're Viddahs!"

You should have heard the shouts at this side-splitter. I implored him, for the sake of his health and buttons, to desist.

"Dash my buttons!" he exclaimed in a perfect explosion of humour. And the guns from the Fort saluted this really good joke.

It will be a long time ere that scene is forgotten in Ceylon. It is now historical.

The telegram about the Ball sent off to Europe, was simply, "The Prince appeared to enjoy the evening very much, and did not leave till after the Tenth dance."

"Pooh-na!" as we say in Ceylon. The Tenth don't dance. We enjoyed ourselves. On Sunday we all went to church, and in the evening I read Sandford and Merton to my Illustrious Friend, and played "Greenland's Icy Mountains" on our concertinas, arranged as a duett. Weren't we good? I believe you, my JAM-JEE-JELLY-BHOY!

We send the DUKE OF SUTHERLAND home. He wants to get back, look to his fire-engines, and darn his hose.

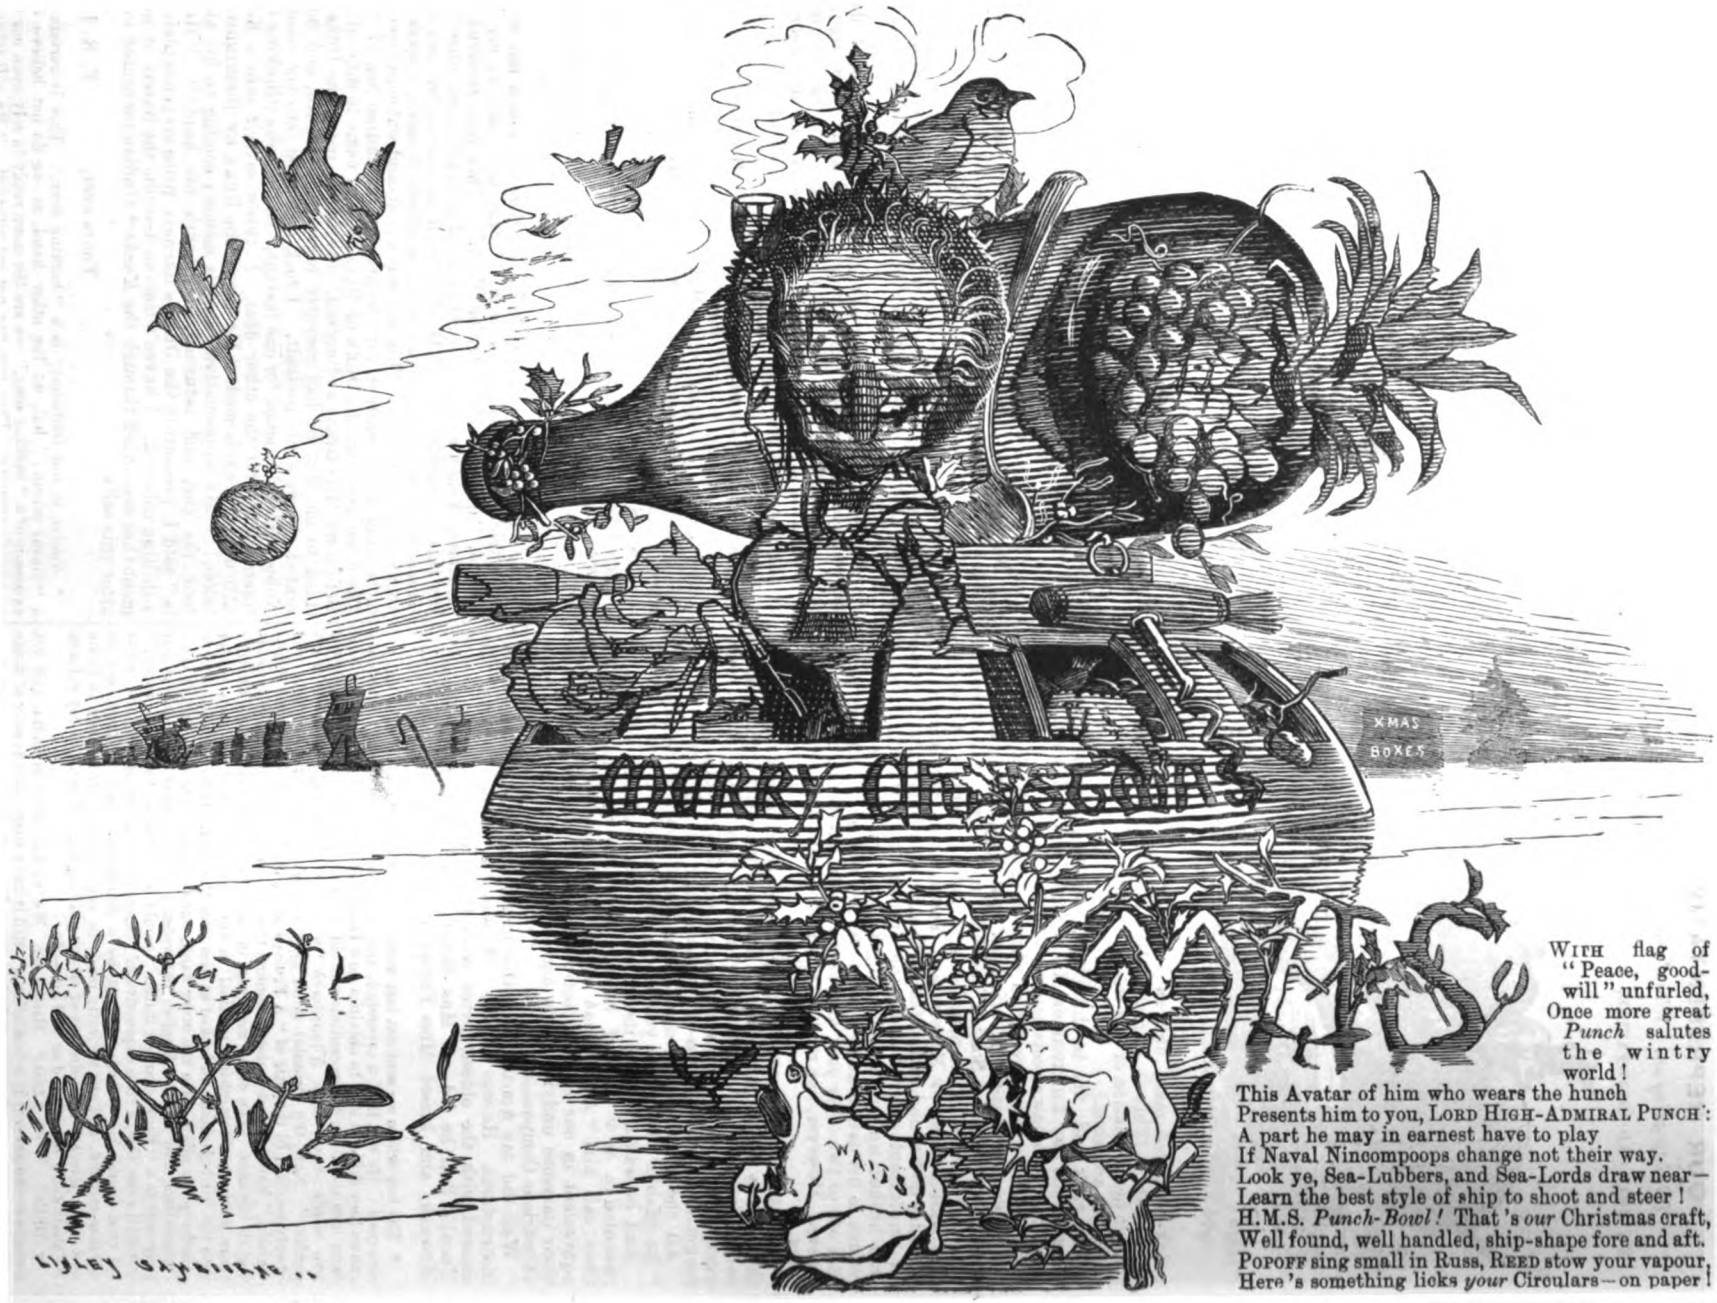
The Guzzul (or Indian Drink-Maker) has just come in to say that my Royal and Illustrious Friend is awaiting my presence for a good story, a glass of Chokee, and a calm Trinchinopoly cigar before we turn in. So bye-bye.

Send Chequey-Bhoy to your own dear Goody-Bhoy, who is now, as ever,

YOUR TRUTHFUL REPRESENTATIVE
(In India).

P.S.—We've had a day with the Jugglers. I found out most of their tricks, and made 'em wild. I was, as I said to my Noble Friend, "quite in the Juggler Vein." This was received with screams and shouts. In fact, every joke of mine tells now, since (I may say this in confidence) the D-KE OF S-TH-RL-ND has left us; for his Grace, being such a thorough-going amateur fireman, always went about as a wet-blanket. This mot was an out-and-out convulser. One more, and I've emptied, for the present, my Indian bag of tricks. The other evening, the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM came to dine with us. Before we (His Grace and myself) entered the room, the Duke confided to me that he had recently been photographed, and he presented me with his portrait. I took it, rushed into the room, my Noble Friend blanched for one instant, and the suite (thinking it was tigers) made for the other door. I threw myself into a Kemble attitude, and exclaimed, "My Liege, the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM is taken!" My Appreciative Friend's memory coming to his aid, he took the cue, and returned, "Off with his head!" "Here it is," said I, presenting the DUKE's likeness, price sixpence plain, and a shilling coloured. I haven't time to describe the bursts of merriment that resounded through the *Kucker (Indian for dining saloon) after this sally.

Yours ever, Y. R. I. I.



* The boy whom we sent out last week to buy a new Dictionary has not yet returned. He had half a sovereign, and all London before him. This only shows how difficult it is to obtain a new Indian Dictionary. We hope to hear from him soon. In the meantime our old Dictionary gives the meaning of the two words above, thus, Khansamah "a butler," and Bagheecha "a fruit-garden" Now, the Oriental mind may see something very beautiful and deeply poetical in the title of "A Fruit-Garden Butler," or "A Butler Fruit-Garden," but we must honestly confess that we do not see what there is poetical in the idea. The other morning, in order to try by experience whether there really was something poetical in the notion, we sent our own Butler into the fruit-garden, and looked at him over the wall. It struck us as a very commonplace affair. On the other hand, our Correspondent says that it is an Orientalism, and has no English equivalent. The nearest approach in our language to a "Fruit-Garden Butler" would be, perhaps, "a green-grocer;" but still even this, a title expressive of respect and love for our Prince, is not all that could be wished—at least by a European. But we must not be narrow-minded, and are perfectly ready to admit that there is more in India and other places than is dreamt of in our philosophy. When the boy returns we shall know more—and so will he.—ED.

† Hallo! What's this? Mistletoe? We've not been in India, and yet somehow—however if it was mistletoe—still it has a suspicious flavour of home jollity just about this season of the year. Boy with Dictionary not yet returned. Wonder what keeps him? The half sovereign, perhaps.—ED.

* Kucker in our Dictionary is a "barking deer." This is certainly not a "dining saloon;" but, on the other hand, as we do not believe in the existence of a "barking deer," we are the more ready to rely upon our Correspondent's veracity. That boy has not yet returned. "He will return, we know him well"—he won't, if he knows us well.—ED.

Digitized by Google

A SEASONABLE SALUTE.

WITH flag of "Peace, good-will" unfurled,
Once more great Punch salutes the wintry world!
This Avatar of him who wears the hunch
Presents him to you, LORD HIGH-ADMIRAL PUNCH:
A part he may in earnest have to play
If Naval Nincompoops change not their way.
Look ye, Sea-Lubbers, and Sea-Lords draw near—
Learn the best style of ship to shoot and steer!
H.M.S. Punch-Bowl! That 's our Christmas craft,
Well found, well handled, ship-shape fore and aft.
POPOFF sing small in Russ, REED stow your vapour,
Here 's something licks your Circulars—on paper!

Digitized by Google

"COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON."

Comely Housemaid. "O, MR. JAMES, I'M SO FRIGHTENED IN THE RAILWAY! SUPPOSE THE BILER WAS TO BUST!"

Mr. James. "THEN, MY DEAR, YOU'D BE A SINGIN' AMONG THE ANGELS IN ABOUT TEN MINUTES!!"

A fleet of these, with Punch as Chief Commander,
Would settle BISMARCK, and sink ALEXANDER!
Bang! goes our Pop-off! for round-shot, ne'er rounder
Or richer flew than Punch's twenty-pounder!
BULL's mouth, if not bull's-eye, that missile enters,
And with it e'en the worst shots make plumb-centres!
Bellicose world, 'twould better your condition
Would you but try such arms and ammunition.
A Christmas-bowl, when you've drained every drop off,
Is better than a swart smoke-belching Popoff.
While for "explosives"—Toby, tap the Sillery,
To furnish forth our humanised artillery.
Mad mortals! Would ye drop War's murderous folly,
In act as word Old Christmas might be "jolly."
"Peace and good will?" The motto sounds satiric,
Contrasting the Year's log with Yuletide's lyric.
Still, "Merry Christmas" round, to foes and friends!
Let's hope young Seventy-Six may make amends
For foul sins and sad follies left alive
By the fast-failing hands of Seventy-five.
Big guns, and sunk rams, foreign loans, and quarrels,
Avaunt! here's better markets, ditto morals!
For thundering, blundering Iron-clad three-decker,
To drain both JOHN BULL's patience and exchequer,
H.M.S. Punch-Bowl sails, well-manned, well-found,
To track Wit's currents—depths of Sense to sound.
Bang! Fire a full salute! Nor keep your eyes on
The Fleet of Christmas Bills in the horizon.
Blushing at praise for good not done by stealth,
Punch drains a bumper to the General Health—
Here's to the World—our friends far off and near—
"A Merry Christmas and a glad New Year!"

THE RELIGION OF CHRISTMAS.—Mince-piety.

A FYTTE OF HACKNEY DOWNS.

IT was open walking where Hackney Downs
Lies green beneath the skies,
From a time whereto man's memory
Runneth not contrariwise.

The Lord of the Manor hath made essaye
To enclose and build thereon;
And a blessing upon the Board of Works,
That to law with him have gone!

He planted postes and sett up rayles,
And hedged hym yn the grounde,
The churl mote have waited at least until
He law on hys side had founde.

For the Lord, the Hackney Commoners said,
To collar our common land,
Never sticking so much as to ask our leave,
Ytt ys more than we wyll stand!

What right hath he that land to cribb?
And a curse upon his crown!
No more to set fences and palings up,
Than we have to pull them down.

Soe busk ye, bowne ye, merry men all,
To Hackney Downs hie we,
And let the proud Lord of the Manor know
We can doe as muche as he.

The Commoners all did wend their way
Unto Hackney Downs eftsoon,
And thereon they met with much folk beside,
On a Saturday afternoon.

Then DE MORGAN up, and bespake the throng,
The fences that grieved their sight,
As having been reared against the law,
Colde be razèd as of right.

They needed not to abide the suit
Which at that time did pende,
'Twixt the Lord of the Manor and Board of Works,
Howsoever that cause might ende.

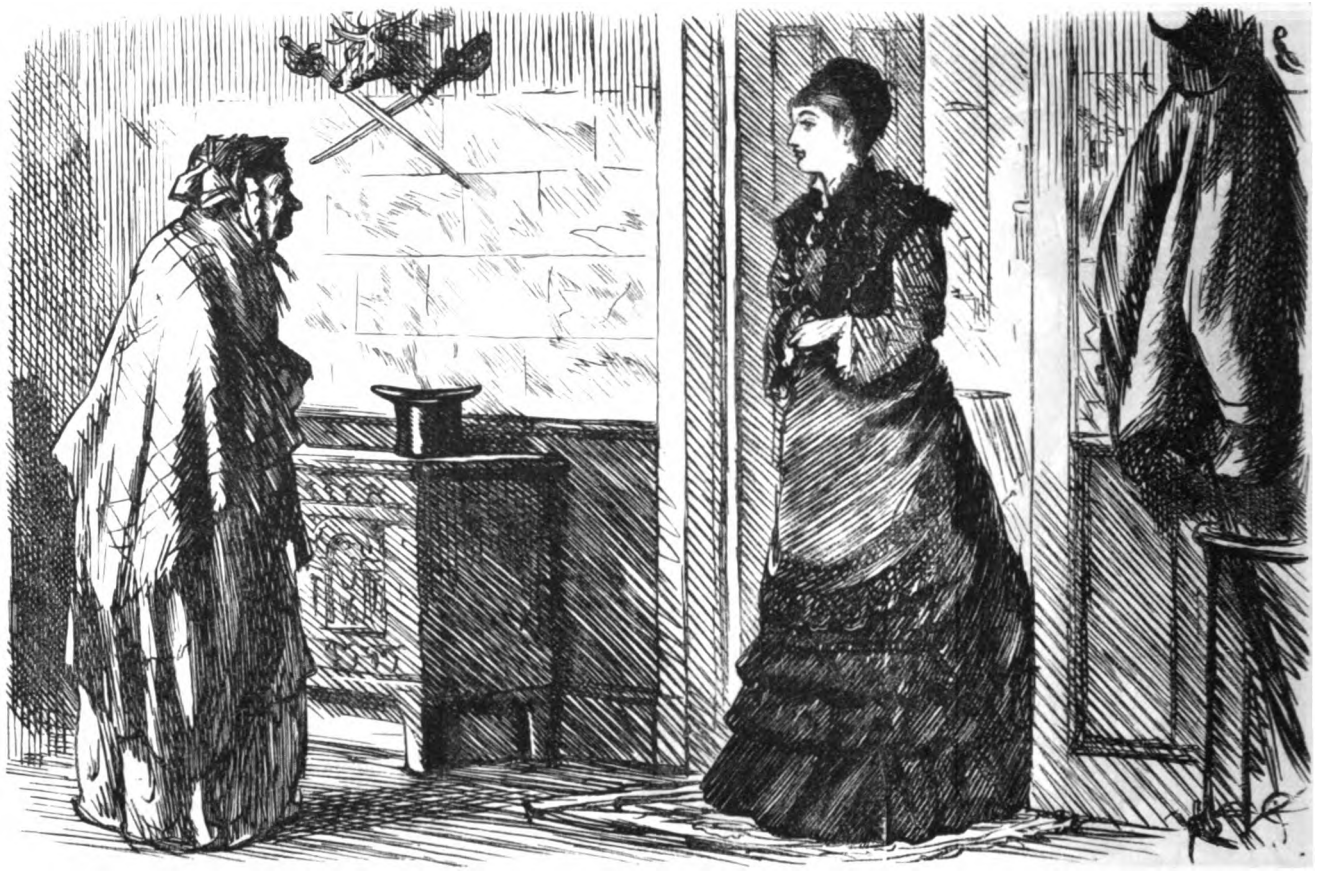
The Commoners all had rights of their own,
Apart from either side,
To clear those palings and postes away,
From letting them walke and ride.

So forth to those iron rails they went,
To tear them from the land;
When they were 'ware of thirty stout knaves,
Of Bobbies blue a band!

The Bobbies, they drew their good ash staves,
For to guard the railings fain,
But a word their Superintendent spake,
And they putt them up agayne.

Then went the Commoners to their work,
With many an hundred mo,
They seized the fences on Hackney Downs,
And laid the enclosures low.

They tore up and twisted the iron railes
Into whatso shape they wolde:
And eke uprooted the postes of oak
That the iron railes did holde.



The posts had been tarred but just that morn,
From seizing their hands to stay,
All the better therefore dyd the bonfire burn,
Which they made of the wood straightway.

In a trice of fences they cleared the ground,
And the people went to and fro,
Passing free over Hackney Downs once more
Whosoe'er them list to go.

May they only have kept within the Law
These Hackney Commoners true!—
Then hooray for their geste upon Hackney Downs,
And their deed of derring-do!

"THE TRAVELLERS' CLUB."—An Alpenstock.

Digitized by Google

A GOOD JUDGE.

Elderly Party (to Lady Bountiful). "O, IF YOU PLEASE, 'M, MY 'USBAND IS DOWN WITH THE DIP-THEORY; AND PLEASE, 'M, THE DOCTOR SAYS HE MUST 'AVE PORT WINE, AND IT DON'T MATTER 'OW (H)OLD IT IS, MUM—IN FACT THE (H)OLDER THE BETTER!!"

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

Two great and good men meet. They bow courteously to one another. The first calls himself PUNCH, the second signs himself GEORGE. They converse.

Punch. My dear GEORGE, I am glad to give you my opinion—that was a very sensible speech you made in the City a few days ago.

George. Thank you, Sir.

Punch. In the course of your remarks, you alluded to the Uniform Question.

George. No offence, I hope, Sir?

Punch. Certainly not. You said you were proud of your cloth.

George. So I am, Sir.

Punch. That you were not ashamed of appearing in uniform.

George. I am not, Sir.

Punch. And yet you awarded as a punishment to a silly Sub., convicted of practical joking the other day, the compulsory wearing of uniform for a year.

George. My mistake, Sir.

Punch. You admit that the wording of the order was so clumsy that it was calculated to cause misconception?

George. Certainly, Sir.

Punch. I trust the mistake will not occur again, my dear GEORGE.

George. It shall not, Sir.

Punch. Of course you must feel, as a good soldier, that Her Majesty's uniform is an honour to its wearer.

George. Certainly, Sir.

Punch. You cannot be too careful in future, then, to avoid anything that may seem, however remotely, to cast a slur on that uniform. And now we will say no more about it.

George. You are very kind, Sir.

Punch. Not at all. I will detain you no longer, as I am sure you must be anxious to return to your Mobilisation Scheme. I have nothing more to say at present.

George. Thank you, Sir. [Military salute, and exit.

THE CYNIC'S CAROL.

CHRISTMAS comes but once a year;
Happy that twice it cometh not:
For sirloin is uncommon dear,
And dear the pudding in the pot;
And floods are out, and rooms are chill,
And every morning brings a bill.

That plant yclept the mistletoe
To me by no means pleasant is:
My daughters underneath it go
To meet a detrimental kiss,
From one who nothing hath a year,
And liveth in the street called Queer.

My parson preacheth straight at me,
My wine merchant sends claret sour,
My stocks are down to thirty-three,
My stockbroker won't wait an hour;
My boys, escaped scholastic swish,
Take from the larder what they wish.

Well, life has consolations still:
Locked in my study, far away
From riots that my household fill,
I pass a calm, if cheerless day—
Thankful, as bed-time draweth near,
That Christmas comes but once a year.

Dog-Days in December.

THE community of Dog-Fanciers express themselves uncommonly gratified with the exhibition of their favourite creatures held last week at the Alexandra Palace. Its local aptitude appears to have tickled the canine "Fancy," from what they say. "Such a natural place for a Dog-Show—Muzzle Hill."

Digitized by Google

A CHRISTMAS CANARD.

HERE are such things — though Turkey is the bird of the season! In the name of the profit—Figs! also raisins, currants, and candied peel in this Christmas-pudding time. These commodities just now are specially profitable to grocers. Nor these alone. Amongst other good things your Grocer retails you beverages more or less appropriate to Christmas fare; notably that "intoxicating liquor," Gladstone, the variety of Bordeaux for which humble consumers are indebted to the considerate legislation of the ex-PREMIER, besides other wines, of home and foreign make, and even spirituous cordials and compounds of more or less alcoholic strength. Rumour has actually dared to say that an endeavour to arrest the issue of grocers' wine and spirit licences is meditated by a no less respectable and reasonable body than the Church of England Temperance Society. This report is manifestly a canard of the wildest kind—doubtless "a thing devis edby the enemy;" perhaps a calumny concocted by certain of the less scrupulous of our Dissenting brethren. Moderation is the peculiar merit of the Church of England. The moderation of her Clergy is known to all men, especially those who ask them to dine, or are privileged to be their fellow-guests. In drink as well as doctrine she professes the via media—holds an even course between Mynheer van Dunk and ARCHBISHOP MANNING. To represent the Church of England Temperance Society as outheroding the United Kingdom Alliance, would be to discredit the Church as to her most cherished virtue, were the base attempt successful. But the slander is too absurd.

Nevertheless it has been as positively as shamelessly asserted that the Temperance Society of the distinctively moderate Church has already drafted a Bill for the suspension of the further issue of Grocers' licences for the sale of "intoxicants," and the suspension, likewise, of any further issue of public and beerhouse licences until the limit shall have been reached of one in five hundred of the population. The names, even, of the Members destined to have charge of this Bill for weaning the naughty People from their drinking ways, are mentioned—SIR HARCOURT JOHNSTONE and MR. HUGH BIRLEY. If these preposterous announcements were true, what lots of petitions would be got up by short-sighted grocers and publicans on behalf of a Bill the chief effect of which, if enacted, would be that of temporarily enriching themselves by a fat monopoly! In the meanwhile, to be sure, the debates on the Bill in the House of Commons on Crotchet Day (of course) Wednesday, Wilfrid's-day, could possibly do no harm. The two Honourable Members above-named, indeed, would make fools of themselves too, though in talking to no purpose only, and not at the same time amusing the House; but still their project of a sumptuary law would afford some diversion to SIR WILFRID LAWSON'S Permissive Bill.

It is remarkable, though, how extremes meet. Restrictive liquor-laws are followed, according to their promoters declaiming on the teetotal platform, by increasing drunkenness. Therefore fanatics shriek for further legislation in the same spirit of "democratic despotism." They roar, as it were, for the drunkard's restorative, "a hair of the dog that bit you"; their cry, so to speak, is "Pick-me-up!"

The Church of England Temperance Society, at any rate, needs not to be told that the licensed grocer's shop is a counter-attraction to the public-house bar, and that in the former at least no one can get drunk on the premises, so that it is an utterly false joke to say that grocers' licences only facilitate a grosser kind of intoxication.

PUNCH'S PROPHECIES FOR 1876.

THERE will be a great many births, unaccompanied by any very large amount of rejoicing.

There will be several deaths, which will not cause too extravagant grief.

A great many people will marry in haste, and proceed to enjoy the delightful sensation known as "repenting at leisure."

A few will marry at leisure and repent in haste.

Being Leap Year, more young people than usual of both sexes will be plunged into that state of semi-idiotic bliss considered inseparable to an engagement.

Many young Ladies will be kissed under the Mistletoe, and will say they don't like it.

Many young (-old) Ladies will say they don't like being kissed under the Mistletoe, and won't be.

There will be several Railway accidents.

Many ships will come into collision.

Some explosions (domestic and otherwise) may be looked for.

Many children will receive the name of JOHN.

Lots of young men will have difficulties with their latchkeys at about two A.M.

Other young men will announce their intention to give up business and go on the Stage.

More young men will declare their determination to live on their pens.

Various Parents and Guardians will view the above proceedings with marked displeasure.

Several casualties (such as broken hearts, loss of false teeth, separation from chignons, &c.) will occur on Skating Rinks.

CAPTAIN HAWK will take little PIGEON to a first-rate place for a quiet game of billiards or écarté.

Much money will be lost over the Derby.

Several Dramatic Authors will be led to think of their future state by the reception awarded to their plays by a kind and discerning public.

There will be some changes of Government in France.

Things will be made unpleasant for the First Lord of the Admiralty soon after the assembling of Parliament.

There will be a panic on the Stock Exchange.

There will be several sensational Trials, to report the details of which the Daily Press will exclude from their columns all literary, artistic, scientific, and dramatic news.

Some Wives will run away from their Husbands.

Some Husbands will run away from their Wives.

There will be numerous Comic Songs produced.

No mirth will be caused by the above.

A lot of people will write bad Novels.

A lot more people will be intensely bored by reading the same.

The Farmers will grumble at the harvest.

The Butchers won't reduce the price of meat.

Much tobacco will be consumed; also cabbage leaves.

Many people will send contributions to Punch, which will be rejected.

Many people will therefore hate, abuse, and loathe Punch for the remainder of their lives.

Last and best. Punch, the Good and the Great, will, during the course of 1876, appear exactly fifty-three times to delight and gladden the Nations.

A Revival.

FATHER of History! In thy pleasant page
We read recorded how, in byegone age,
A bull was on the banks of Nile adored: *
If sound be the Gazette of Moscow's view,
Nile doth again the bovine rite renew,
For now JOHN BULL is Egypt's sovereign lord.

* HERODOTUS, Books II., III.

ADVICE TO COAL-MINERS.—You can be safe if you please. You may take your Davy.

Digitized by Google

MARY ANNER ON MODES AND MISSISES.

PUNCH read, only last week, that—

"Attempts are being made to revive a Society started some time ago with the object of inducing women of all ranks to discard such fashions as are injurious to health, ungraceful, and untrue. It is now proposed to re-organise the Society upon a broader basis, and to set to work in earnest. The prevailing love of finery evinced by female domestic servants is to be taken in hand, and awards in money are to be offered as encouragement to servant-girls to dress more suitably to their stations in life."—Daily Telegraph, Dec. 21st, 1875.

DEAR SUSAN JANE,

YOU 'VE heard, no doubt, of this Association
For making people dress theirselves according to their station;
Which what they sez they 're aiming at is putting of a stopper
On fashions as is 'stravagant, or hurtful or improper.
Well, I 'm agreeable, I 'm sure—that is,—to quote them lawyers,—
"Purwided always" 'tain't no trick of Fashion's she-top-sawyers,
To keep hus down! I know their ways: theirselves they will bedizen,
But seeing servants smart and trim 's a thing they hates like pizen!
That 's why I seem to smell a rat, dear SUE, in this Society,
As these "awards in money" is, I fear, a neat wariety
Of "trap;" which toasted cheese is nice, and cash, no doubt, is nicer,
But we 're too sharp, I reckon, to be caught by such a 'ticer.
Encourage Servant-Girls to dress as suits their situation?
O yes, I dessay! Very fine! I 've heard that observation
A goodish many times before, from lips of lots of Missises
As though nice toggery weren't for all, the same as food and kisses is!
Which service ain't no 'eritage at best, but plague upon it
If a girl can't have a sweetheart, or a Sunday-best smart bonnet.
It 's all their nasty jealousy! There 's Missis and her darters,
A plainer lot you never see, red-nosed, and reglar Tartars!—
But dress, O my! just don't they! Which MISS HARABELLA—drat her!——
Would give her little finger for a shape—but there, no matter;
Though that absurd JOHN TOMMAS do declare as my contooer,
Compared with HARABELLA's, is as Wenus to a brewer;
And CAPTEN BROOK, as she 'opes to hook with eyes as ain't a pair,
Sez, as he tipped me handsome—well, that 's neither here nor there.
But O the shindies I 've gone through, the dodges, SUE, the fibbings,
Along of trumpery trifles in the way of caps and ribbings!
Which nothing short of charity rig, mob-caps and straight-down skirts,
Will satisfy some Missises. Which they flings, and flaunts, and flirts
Like peacocks or them Flaming Goes as you 've seen, dear, at the Zoo,—
Which gaudy ain't the word, as must be well-be-known to you,—
While we must go to see the play, or ramble in the Parks,
Like dowdies out of workusses or children's Noah's-Arks!
Just wearing my new fishyou t' other evening in the garden
(The sweetest thing you ever see at four-and-tenpence farden!)
So aggrawated our MISS JANE (as hers might be its fellar, Though dearer), her complexion, I swear, went blue and yellow.
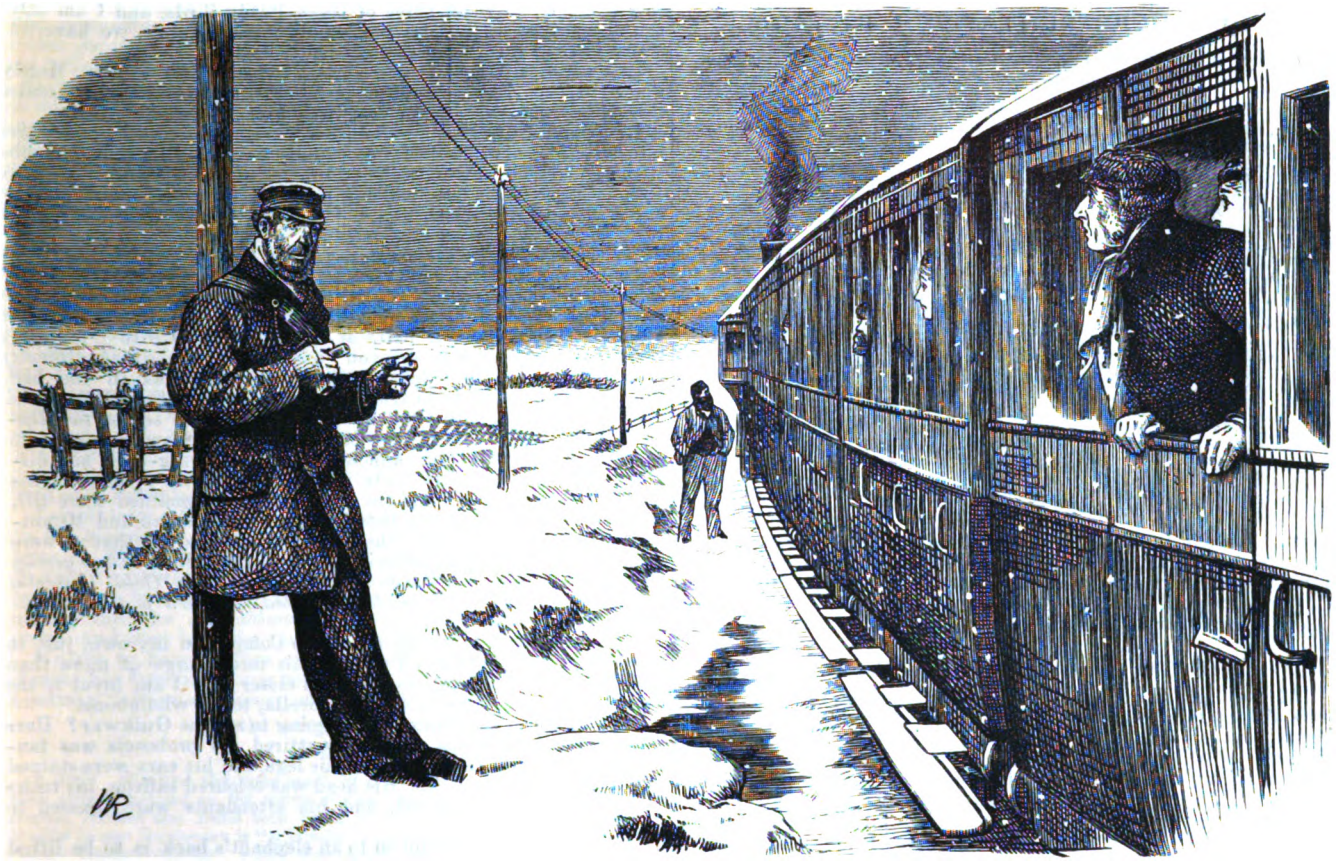
Sez she, "Take off that thing, I beg!"
Sez I, "Make no mistake, Miss,
Taint one o' yourn, though simmylar, I own, in style and make, Miss.
I 'd not demean——." I 'm sure a Queen could not have cut me shorter,
And I 've my serious doubts if I remains beyond the quarter.
I calls this right down tyranny; and this, my dearest SUE,
Is why I takes my pen in hand to write these lines to you.
This here new move, you mark my word, 's a mask for something artful;
But they won't tempt me to play the Nun with prizes by the cartfull.
To put us into uniform 's their game; dear SUE, don't heed 'em,
But let us Servants all unite, and stick up for our freedom.
If Missises hates "finery," they 've only got to drop it,
But bribing Servant-girls they 'll find is not the way to stop it.
If they 'd have us laugh at Fashion, let 'em set us the example,
Before they frowns at our fal-lals, and on our feelin's trample.
No! "Sunday Best for Ever!" is the motto for our banner,
Down with Mob-caps and Missises!

Yours truly,
MARY ANNER.



NOT TO BE WONDERED AT.

WE hear that stringent orders have been issued by the Admiralty that no Mistletoe is to be allowed among the Christmas decorations of the ships now in the Solent.

SEASONABLE HINT.

THE person likely to feel warmest at this time of year is the man who is not thoroughly wrapped up in himself.

Digitized by Google

PLEASANT!

SCENE—A bleak Scottish Moor. TIME—New Year's Day. Train gradually stops.

Excited Passenger. "NOW, THEN, GUARD, WHAT ARE YOU STOPPING HERE FOR?"

Philosophical Guard. "FACT IS, THE WATTER'S GANE AFF THE BILE. HOOEVER, IT'S JIST POSSIBLE TH' EXPRESS BEHIN 'LL BE LATE."

CHRISTMAS WAITS.

THE PREMIER waits to hear what Parliament will say of his Suez Canal purchase.

The FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY waits for the wigging which is due to him.

The Leader of the Opposition waits for more power to be added to his elbow, ere he makes a party onslaught on the Government.

The British Army waits to see what good will come of the Mobilising project.

The British Public waits to see its Pictures placed in a building worthy of them, and where they will be visible.

Londoners in general, and West-Enders in particular, wait for somebody or other to adopt some sweeping measures to clean their filthy streets for them.

PRINCE BISMARCK waits for some excuse to pass an Act of Parliament to declare himself infallible.

The bondholders of Turkey wait for an answer to the Eastern Question, "Who will pay her Debts for her?"

MASTER GEORGE ADOLPHUS waits for the advent of next Christmas, when he hopes he may leave School, and be entrusted with a latch-key.

MISS MARTHA MOUSER (æstat. thirty-seven) waits for the Coming Man who will have the courage to make captive of her underneath the mistletoe.

MRS. GREYMARE waits to make her husband a pretty Christmas present of a small piece of her mind, whenever he returns from a too convivial evening.

Lastly, Mr. Punch waits upon the world at large with his usual Christmas presents of the Pocket-Book and Almanack.

DARING ACT (at present prices).—To beard a single Native in its shell, much less a whole barrel of them!

A SWEEPING REFORM.

SOME dissatisfaction having been expressed with regard to the efficiency of our Street-sweepers, the Metropolitan Vestries have determined upon instituting Competitive Examinations, in which the following questions will be put, among others:—

1. Can you lean on a broom or a shovel?
2. Can you look up and down a street?
3. Can you chew tobacco?
4. Can you converse fluently with other sweepers on the topics of the day?
5. Would you feel capable, during your moments of leisure from the above-named occupations, of sweeping the mud in the street out of the way of horses and carriages, and into the way of foot-passengers, and to such a depth and width as would preclude ladies and children from crossing the street?
6. Do you think you could remember to construct the largest and most deceptive mud-pies and puddings midway between the gas-lamps, so that, in the semi-darkness, persons might plunge both feet in them before knowing where they are going?

These questions being satisfactorily answered in the affirmative, an old broom (not a new one—the latter being proverbial for sweeping clean) will be presented to the candidate, and on the first fine dry, windy day he will be set to work to sweep dust into the eyes of a suffering public.

"Lord, gi'e us a guid Conceit o' Oursels!"

(A Scotch Prayer adopted and adapted by an Indignant Harwicher.)

OUR loyalty and our humanity, too,
'Tis a back-biting Press that disparages;
To their mottoes were all other boroughs as true!
"Vivant Wrecks et Regina!" is Harwich's!

Digitized by Google

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

In view of Christmas-Day—Jovialities—Festivities—Minutiæ—Specialities—"All there!"

SIR,—I write in haste, so that you may have the first news of our most recent doings. I have no doubt but that there will be various accounts of our proceedings, but believe me that mine is the only genuine one. "CODLIN 's the man—not SHORT."

You should hear my new Songs. One commences thus:—

"Merrily, merrily do we live now
Under the mango that hangs on the bough."

The copyright is still for sale: early application necessary, as I have already refused twenty lacs (or lakhs) of rupees from SIR RAG BERRI JAM JEE JELLYBHOY, and thirty from MIRZA KUM FOOZLAH, the latter of whom prides himself on his tenor voice; but, bless you, he "cannot sing the old songs" any more than his rivals, the Grate VANZEJEE, the LYUN-KOMMEKEE, or SIR JOLLEJE NASHBHOY.*

My latest Conundrum is going the round of all the Indian circles, and the natives are in fits. It is, "When may rupees be considered as 'loose cash'"? My Illustrious Companion made twenty-five guesses, and then offered me a Baronetcy and the Star of India if I would tell him privately. But I wouldn't. "Rupees," I answered, before an admiring crowd of Ram-jams, Rajahs, and such like, "Rupees may be considered as 'loose cash' when they are looked upon as Lax." Whereupon I bowed, and retired. Delirious laughter, and shouts of delight. I returned, and again bowed.

You may not be aware that my Illustrious Companion invariably goes about with a Gold Umbrella. It was found necessary to distinguish him in this manner, as it was so awkward for me always to be explaining who he was, and who I wasn't. The Rajahs, the Nizams, the Mahranas, and so forth, used invariably to come up to me first, and insist upon presenting me with diamonds, yataghans, zem-zems, and richly-caparisoned elephants, which, out of courtesy, I felt obliged to give up, saying, jocosely (in Hindostanee, of course) "No, no, my dear Maharajah" (or Rajah, or whoever it might be), "it's not me—it's t'other boy." My Noble and Disinterested Friend and myself arrange the shares afterwards; and so I shall have a magnificent Collection ready for exhibition at the Egyptian Hall, with a panorama, some songs, and, altogether, a first-rate entertainment, for next Easter. I make you the first offer. I'll take a hundred a week, and twenty-five per cent. of the profits. Eh?

I had—I mean my Illustrious co-Shooter and myself had—some fine sport the other day. There is a curious ornithological specimen here. It is rare, but not absolutely uncommon. It emigrates to India from Ireland at certain seasons, and is called the "Paddy Bird." It possesses few notes; and as it belongs to the species "Mocking-Bird" of the genus "Parrot," no doubt it has picked up and brought to this country many of the words peculiar to its own native land. Its cry is generally plaintive, and it may be heard any morning early, uttering such sounds as "Ochone! Worra, worra! Bedad!" and so forth. When challenging another cock-bird, it sings out, clearly and distinctly, "Will ye tread on the tail of my feathers?" And, on being mortally wounded, it falls with a wild shriek of "Whoop! Ould Oireland for iver!"

We managed to shoot three of these Paddy Birds, and I am only astonished that, with these remarkable characteristics, we have not heard more of them from English ornithologists.

It is wonderful how coming abroad expands the mind. Merely going to the Zoological Gardens three times during the London Season is, comparatively, of very little use.

Last Sunday afternoon, to amuse my Estimable and Appreciative, but by now somewhat blasé, Companion, I engaged in single combat with an elephant, a rhinoceros, two rams, and a buffalo. Of course I soon settled them all—one down, t'other come on; so I will not enter into details, which would be scarcely interesting to my fair readers.

We visited, the other day, the little city of Mukkipoora, the streets of which, after a heavy rain, were in a dreadful state. The Governor, COLONEL THE HON. RETCHIDWETHER, MAJOR SLUSHINGTON, MIRZA MUDPIZA (the eminent banker), and SIR SLOSHEE DHYRTEYBHOY entertained our party at the Downpore Club. We had a wet evening of it, I warrant you; and it was with great difficulty that we managed to collect our hats and umbrellas in the hall. COLONEL RETCHIDWETHER tried to see my Distinguished Friend and myself to the hall-door; but in consequence of his seeing two Distinguished Friends and two Myselfs, he somehow managed to conduct the wrong party, cannoned against a swing-door, and disappeared head first—his boots in the air, and an apology in his mouth. Being unhurt, and the carpet soft, he remained there till, I believe, next day. Long before this, SIR SLOSHJEE and MUDDIPIZA had disappeared under the table. I regret to say that we were compelled to put up the following notice in the hall:—"Any gentleman having taken, by mistake for his own, the Gold Umbrella belonging to H.R.H., is hereby requested to return it to the hall-porter without delay."

In the meantime I've lent my Noble Companion my own, just to go on with, but not to go off with. This interchange of more than brotherly amenities binds us by a still closer tie. I am loyal to the back-bone; and, à propos of my umbrella, to the whalebone.

Did I give you an account of our going to see the Guikwar? Here it is—in brief. He was gorgeously attired, his proboscis was fantastically massive, rings encircled his legs, and his ears were stained of a pale yellowish colour. His head was coloured saffron, his tusks were sawn off and blunted, and his attendants were dressed to match.*

The usual way of getting on to an elephant's back is to be lifted up by small Native Hoisters. I, as an old hand, discard all assistance, and, taking a short run at the brute's head, leap on to his tusk, and with another bound I am on his back. Of course this requires practice, and my Royal and otherwise Accomplished Friend has not had the time to acquire my skill and efficiency. The consequence is, that he rather worries a mettlesome elephant in getting on to his back; and, as he is invariably in uniform, with spurs on, the consequences are in some instances likely to be fraught with some danger. "Thgit dloh!" cried the Natives, as, on feeling the tickling of the spurs on his sensitive hide, the high-couraged Guikwar gave such a heave of his back, and such a lash out with his hind legs, as caught SIR PHORTYSTUN JELLYBHOY just as he was in a salaaming position, with his back to the elephant, and his turban towards myself, and sent him flying over my head as if he had been discharged from his office by a catapult of sixty-four horse-power. Poor old JELLYBHOY! He is no longer a young man, and this sudden surprise must have taken ten years off his life. My Illustrious Friend kept his seat wonderfully, and away we cantered, he on the Guikwar, and myself on a white elephant (which really required riding), while the Nizzars brayed, the drums beat, the cymbals clanged: and so we rode to dinner. After the banquet, one of the native Butties ran in from Mukkipoora (thirteen miles off), to say that he had brought the Prince's umbrella, and asked for two thousand kutwâals (a kind of fourpenny bit), and fifty Maungees (amounting to about three shillings and two-pence and three-eighths) as a reward for his trouble and honesty.† My Generous and Royal Companion at once turned to me, and said, "Give it him." I laughed, and replied, in Hindostanee, "Ton rof hpesoj!" for I am not a millionnaire, and it's these small sums that break the camel's back.‡ C-R-NGT-N had to fork out; he has always got what the Indians term "Sparecashee" about him, and so we sent out

* The question with us at this moment is, are these real Indian names of real genuine Indian magnates, or are they not? A young friend very much about town just now, wishes to insinuate that, under a thin veil of Indian terminology he recognises the names of well-known London vocalists. Any light that can be thrown by our well-informed readers on this subject, will be taken as a great service rendered to the public and to ourselves. Our boy has not yet returned with the new Indian Dictionary. It must be a difficult thing to find, as he has been absent from our office for nearly three weeks.—ED.

* Surely, surely, there must be some mistake here. The Guikwar, as everyone knows, is a little Indian princely boy—not an elephant, as our Correspondent seems to infer. Either this is carelessness, or—or—— Yet if our Correspondent be on the spot, he must have means of knowing what a Guikwar really is, which we in this country do not possess. We are unwilling to judge harshly or hastily: audi alteram partem is our motto.—ED.

† In the continued absence of the boy with the Dictionary, we can only ascertain, from our former source of information, that Kutwâal is a "policeman," not "a kind of fourpenny bit;" and that Maungee means "a boatswain." Odd!—ED.

‡ "Ton rof hpesoj!" A sharp young friend suggests that this supposed Indian dialect is "Not for JOSEPH!" spelt backwards. Impossible! It must be a curious example of an undesigned coincidence.—ED.

Digitized by Google

a handsome present to the honest Buttee by ADMIRAL MCHAGGIS, who presently returned, and, in a violent rage, produced an old broken gingham, which the rascal (after having collared the money, and bolted) had left tied up in a large parcel in the hall.

No one laughed more heartily than the Illustrious Visitor, and no one enjoyed the joke less than C-R-NGT-N. As for old MCHAGGIS, his sides shook and his cheeks nearly cracked with merriment.

We are preparing to keep Christmas in true English fashion, and twelve native Swells are invited to help us. As I write this, the HON. MAHOMED ROGEY POGEY is chopping up the mince for the pies, SIR GREEN GAGEE JAMJEE is holding the pudding-cloth, while LAWKSA MIRZA KAMFOOZLAH (covered with diamonds) is stirring the pudding in the big earthenware basin held by the dark brown hands of the MAHARANEE WUNKATTIM on one side, and the PRINCESS IMANIZE ITTYGAL on the other. SIR GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALAR JUNG is at a table making out a first-rate menu, which he can do, when he likes, and no one better: and MR. NURSERRI RYMJEE is singing "Little Jack Horner" in order to keep young PRINCE NANABY NORTYBHOY quiet, who would otherwise be all over the place, upsetting everything and everybody. The little wretch is only eight, and a regular Indian Pickle. Being of Royal descent, he can't be whipped; but, thank goodness, he will overeat himself at Christmas, and then, the next day, in will come DOCTOR JALAPJEE BLACKJEE DOSABHOY, and little NANABY will wish (as we often do now) that he'd never been born.

I must leave off now. Our Christmas-Day will be quiet enough in the morning. Sunday hats and go-to-meeting coats, half-an-hour of Guddee-Guddee (a kind of native sermon) by the REV. PARSEE PEECHEEBHOY, after which a calm, digestive *Dhoodeen (an Indian tobacco-pipe), till two, when the festivities will commence, and the Punjabbers (or native professional jesters), will arrive, and then hey! for the plum-pudding of Poonah!

We are to have another pig-sticking day at Goalongo. A friend of mine has been sketching here, and will have ready for next year's Academy "View of Mysore, drawn by A. BLISTER."

All the compliments from

YOUR OWN INDIAN REPRESENTATIVE.

* Odd! We find the same word in Ireland. Also, as our readers may have already noticed in the course of their hermeneutical and etymological studies, Ireland and India both begin with the same letter. By the way, Guddee in our Dictionary is "a Hindoo throne." And yet there is something about "Guddee-Guddee" which does sound like a sermon, and is, too, quite in keeping with expressive Orientalisms. If the boy would only return with the Dictionary!—ED.

BONAPARTE!

"When, looking on the present face of things,
I see one Man, of Men the meanest too,
Raised up to sway the World! . . ."

WORDSWORTH, 1803.

Marforio. E vero, PASQUINO, che tutti i Francesi sono ladri?
Pasquino. Tutti, no, ma buona parte!

PASQUIN, 1810.

"The First NAPOLEON has been the worst enemy of modern France. . . . Another Sedan will always be possible so long as the chief exemplar of the nation is the peculiar kind of CÆSAR who is commemorated by the Vendôme Column."—Times, Dec. 22, 1875.

How long it takes the truth to learn!
Late lesson! Own we nought absurder
Than blood to shed and cities burn,
And glory seek in wholesale murder.

Yet such a halo of romance
Circled about the eagle standard,
NAPOLEON won the heart of France,
And men who called him vile were slandered.

That maddest, meanest man of men—
Of half the world the quondam master:—
Was sudden stricken down, and then
Whimpered about his own disaster.

He left the nation, wild with rage,
His body in an ocean prison;
From her Imperial heritage,
What good to France has yet arisen?

The French are a forgiving race:
They 're ready now, with aspect solemn,
Their brazen hero to replace
Upon his tall Parisian Column.

Recast, rehoist the effigy,
That e'en the Commune's hands found brittle;
Set up his statue ne'er so high,
The Little Corporal still is little!

INUNDATIONS.

PUBLIC characters complain severely of having been inundated by requests for autographs.

Householders complain of their letter-boxes being inundated by trade circulars.

Governors of Charitable Institutions say that they are inundated by applications on behalf of all sorts of impracticable cases.

Theatrical Managers complain of being daily inundated by requests for free admissions from people who haven't the slightest claim to them.

Editors of Papers complain of being inundated by torrents of useless Correspondence. The complaints of the Editor of P——h are bitter. His time is taken up in attempts to decipher ill-written MSS. which are worthless when deciphered, and his sanctum is inundated by a flood of old jokes and stale witticisms.

Last week everybody worth anything to anybody was inundated by calls for Christmas-boxes. These Inundations have been accompanied by a tremendous Inundation of Christmas bills, which is likely, we fear, to spread itself all over the country. Those whom Providence has not blessed with affluence, would find Boulogne a pleasant place of resort during these terrible Christmas Inundations at home.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SORR—MISTHER PUNCH,

SEE here now what LORD DERBY said the other day in Edinburgh:—

"It is easy to point to the estimates of forty years ago, and to draw invidious contrasts. But forty years ago an able-bodied Irishman thought himself liberally paid at a shilling a day; and no wonder then that you could get soldiers and sailors cheap."

Chape, is it? Yes, bedad. To go a sodgerin' or a sailorin', and run the risk of being say-sick, or mayhap of being shot at, for only a shillin' a day, bedad it 's making human flesh and blood as chape as cat's-meat. Ye see, forty year ago PAT was a pore divil, and emigration—blessings on it!—wornt invinted. Besides, provisions thin were chape, and so was food for powdther. But, thanks to 'Merriky and Melbourne, PADDY knows the value of his able body now-a-days, and won't let it go a sodgerin' for a'most next to nothin'. Ye see, when butcher's mate is asy sellin' at a shillin' a pound, a boy ud be a goose to let himself be bought for on'y a shillin' a day, with the chance of being shot at or transfigured by a baynit. Forty year ago, PAT could live like a fighting-cock upon no betther pay than that, becase thin butcher's mate was chape—anny way he niver tasted it. But, in the present march of intelleck, a sodger couldn't think of living on pitaties.

Yours humbly to command,

PHIL. FOGGARTY,
Ex-Corporal of the Fighting Onety-Oneth.

Men in their Places.

AN opinion is gaining ground that the office of First Lord of the Admiralty, to be efficiently discharged, requires to be filled by a Naval Officer possessing the professional knowledge necessary for its due performance. It may be hoped that the change thus suggested will not be made without some endeavour to ascertain whether the practice which it is proposed to depart from does not, in fact, work as well as possible. Suppose we try the converse of it to test the point. When the next opportunity presents itself, let us select a distinguished Admiral, not to preside over naval affairs, but to be Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Digitized by Google

THE DOG-SHOW AT THE DAGMAR PALACE.

Brown, Owner of "Chimborazo" (smarting under defeat). "HANG IT ALL! TO THINK OF THOSE TWO OLD WOMEN GIVING THE FIRST PRIZE TO POPOCATOPETL, AND BARELY COMMENDING CHIMBORAZO! DO YOU CALL THAT JUDGING?"

Jones, Owner of "Popocatopetl" (generous under victory). "IT'S ALL FAIR ENOUGH, MY DEAR SIR. IF YOU RECOLLECT, AT THE DERBY DOG-SHOW LAST WEEK, THE VERY SAME TWO GENTLEMEN WHO JUDGED TO-DAY, GAVE THE FIRST PRIZE TO CHIMBORAZO, AND TOOK NO MORE NOTICE OF POOR POPOCATOPETL THAN IF HE'D BEEN A TOM-CAT!"

1876.

Look alive!
Dead is Eighteen-Seventy-Five!
Who got us into many a fix!
Room for Eighteen-Seventy-Six!
Up he comes—an infant gay—
Though an "Eastern Question" bars his way,
Whose dark perils to pass through
Needs wary walking. Leap Year, too!—
Year of rashness as of right,
For making love or breeding fight:
When Ladies may make free to speak
Thoughts that flush or pale the cheek:—
Schrecklich Jahr
For Love or War!

Swallows wing!
Here's the Year's first daughter, Spring.
Dear delicious morning hours,
White hands wet with April flowers;
Not a thought for dolt or zealot,
Valentine the ruling prelate:
Spring, with myriad odours shed—
Of bud from burgeon, flower from bed!
Lo, the air with perfume fills
Of hyacinths and daffodils.
Now 's the day
For love and play.

Thrush's song!
Nightingales the woods among—
Perfect blue at happy noon,
When the Summer seems to swoon;
Sunsets when the colour rushes
Into many million blushes;
Night so still that love's own star
From our dull earth seems not far;
Sunrises divinely yellow—
Prithee stop, poetic fellow,
Whom day's peep
Finds still asleep.

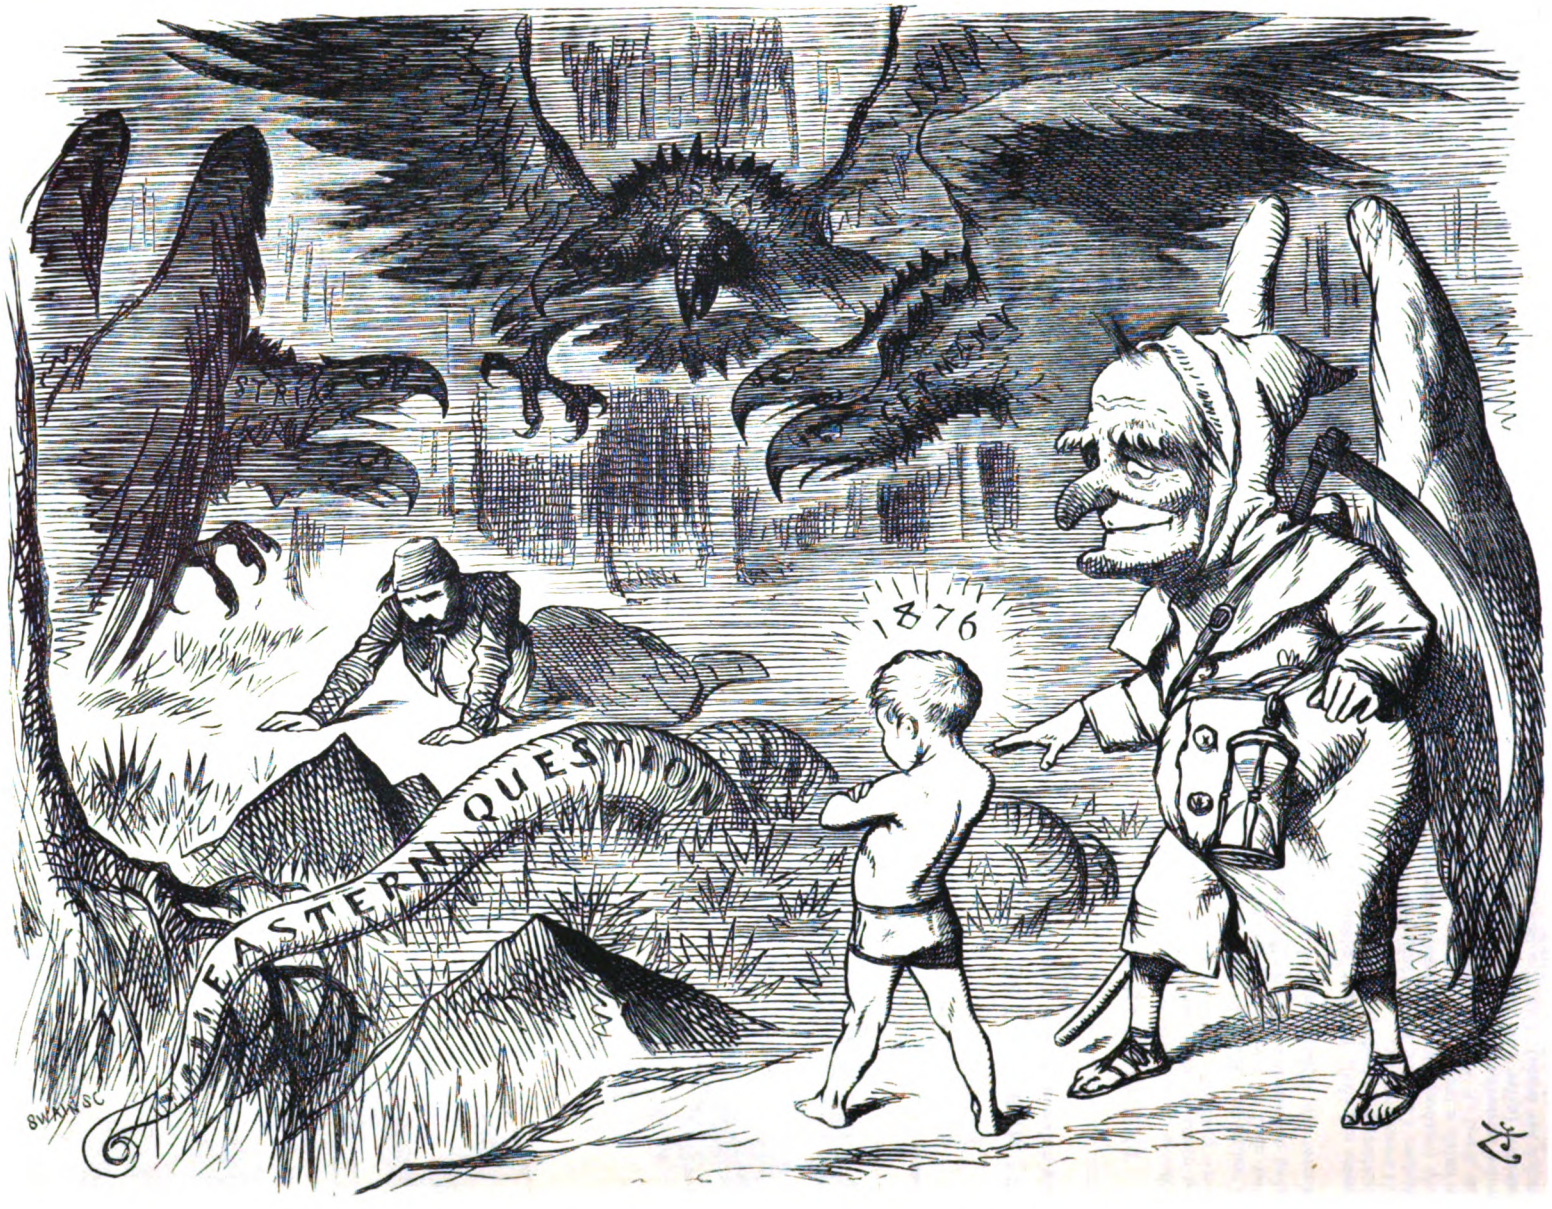
Leaves float down:
Autumn wears her wondrous crown.
Gay the trample o'er the heather,
Gay the time we spend together,
Friends, who let life's troubles go
For a merry month or so.
Autumn brings the "happy thought,"
From decaying radiance caught,
That there is for toilers here
Summer in a wider sphere.
Leaves float slow!
Love doth not go.

Snow and ice!
Take wise HORACE'S advice.
Let the mighty Yule-log glow,
On holly and on mistletoe,
Under whose benignant cluster,
Christmas pairs for kisses muster!
So the year is round again,
Peace and war, and sun and rain,
Love and marriage, death and birth,
Fun and fancy, tears and mirth,—
Heaven knows what—but may we be,
Coming year, by aid of thee,
Nearer Heaven
In Seventy-Seven!

Our Fast Friend in Egypt.

OUR friend the KHEDIVE seems rather in a hurry to spend the £4,000,000 which we are to give him for his Suez Canal shares. At once he invades Abyssinia, and encroaches upon Zanzibar. Does ISMAIL PASHA want to demonstrate how fitly, with a little difference of spelling, he has been named after the Arabs' first ancestor? Is His Highness going to have his hand against every man, and the hand of every man against him? Shall the hand of ISMAIL be as the hand of ISHMAEL?

Past and Future.



THE Money Article of a Contemporary informs us that—

"The Erimus Iron Company (Limited) is to be wound up by the High Court of Justice."

Shouldn't the Erimus Iron Company (that was) now be the Fuimus?

REMEDY FOR RINK-RISKS.—Castor oil.

Digitized by Google

THE NEW YEAR'S LOOK-OUT.

FATHER TIME (to EIGHTEEN-SEVENTY-SIX). "MIND HOW YOU GO, MY LITTLE MAN!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

CHRISTMAS IN THE CROW'S-NEST.

(Affectionately dedicated by Mr. Punch to all Friends in the Arctic Regions.)

THE COST OF CIVILITY.

SCENE—The Stores at Christmas time. Civil Servants and others purchasing goods of not particularly—Civil Servants. Great confusion everywhere. Reckless display of goods.

Enter Timid Customer. He looks about him hopelessly, and undergoes a good deal of preliminary pushing. By degrees he finds himself being carried towards an office desk.

Timid Customer (to Official behind the desk). Can you kindly tell me——?

Official (to some one else). Number, please!

[Timid Customer subsides, and waits until attention has been paid to some one else.

Timid Customer. Can you kindly tell me——?

Excited Lady (rushing up to the desk). I am sure you will forgive me—I have to catch a train.

[Pushes in front of Timid Customer, and engages Official in an animated conversation.

Timid Customer (after the Excited Lady has disappeared—presumably—to catch her train). Can you tell me——?

Official. Now, Sir, where's your bill?

Timid Customer. O, I have no bill—I only want to know——

Official (cutting him short). Can't attend to you without a bill. (To other Customers.) Now then, please!

[Other Customers rush up and invade desk.

Timid Customer. Really, it is very annoying.

Good-Natured Customer. What do you want, Sir?

Timid Customer. O, I only wished to ask where I could get some note-paper.

Good-Natured Customer. I think you had better address yourself to some one else. You see, he (pointing to the Official) only takes the money. It's not his department, you know, and I really don't think you will get anything out of him.

Timid Customer. Thank you very much.

[Makes his way through a long shop, full of pushing Customers, Shopmen, and Porters. After five minutes' crush, he approaches a Man counting apples.

Man. Eighteen, twenty.

Timid Customer (when the Man pauses, thinking the counting over). Can you tell me, please——?

Man (recommencing his counting with renewed energy). Twenty-two, twenty-four!

[Timid Customer is pushed by less timid Customers against a counter.

Timid Customer (addressing a Shopman, who appears to be disengaged). Can you tell me, please——? [Shopman hurries away.

Angry Customer. I tell you I will have it. The parcel was to have been ready yesterday.

Shopman. It wasn't me who attended upon you—it was another gentleman!

Angry Customer. Gentleman. (Explodes.) Do you know who I am, fellow? If you don't, you shall soon learn! But just give me my parcel. [The package is promptly produced.

Timid Customer (encouraged by the success of the Angry Customer). Can you tell me, please, where I can get some note-paper?

Shopman (with temper ruffled at the doubt thrown upon his gentility). Not this department. [Goes off.

Timid Customer. Really, this is very annoying.

Clerical Customer. Can I assist you at all, Sir?

Timid Customer. I only wanted to know where I could get some note-paper.

Clerical Customer. O, it's at the other end of the building. You had better go up that staircase and turn to the right, then go down the passage you will find to the left, and then, &c., &c.

[Gives rather an elaborate description of the way to get to the Stationery Department.

Timid Customer (perplexed, but grateful). Thank you very much.

Clerical Customer (genially). Not at all. If we did not help one another a little, we should never get served.

Timid Customer. So it seems. Still, thank you very much.

[Ascends staircase, and, after several mistakes, at last finds himself in the Stationery Department.

Familiar Shopman (to a crowd of Ladies, Clergymen, and other respectable people). Now, then, one at a time! I can't attend to all of yer at once—now can I?

Timid Customer (addressing Shopboy, who is vaguely watching a Customer as he leisurely makes his selection of something or other on the counter). Could you, please, give me some note-paper?

Shopboy (sharply). Can't attend to more than one at a time.

Timid Customer (annoyed at the Shopboy's tone). But I have been here some time; and really I think, while that gentleman is making a selection, you might——

Shopboy (to Shopman). Can I attend to him—MR. SOME-NAME-OR-OTHER?

Shopman. Certainly not! Take one person at a time.

Timid Customer (at last losing his temper). "Person!" Here—you—give me your name at once!

Shopman (coolly producing a small leathern case). Certainly. Here is my card. [Gives Timid Customer a visiting card!

Timid Customer (hurrying from the Stores). Really, it is too bad! I had better buy my note-paper at a shop.

[Does so comfortably and expeditiously, and loses very nearly a penny by the transaction, for things are so much cheaper at the Stores—with the exception of Civility!

A GOOD SOUL.

A HANDSOME Christmas-Box, in the shape of £1,200 raised by friendly subscription, has been presented to MR. JOSEPH SOUL. MR. SOUL, who is not well, and has a Wife and Daughter to maintain, "is well known as having acted as the Secretary of more than one Charitable Institution in the Metropolis." Chiefly by the exertions of MR. SOUL, the sum of £20,000 had, it was mentioned by the Gentleman who handed him the merited testimonial, "been procured on behalf of one particular Charity. He might also be said to be the founder of the Alexandra Orphanage for Infants and the Convalescent Home at Margate." This SOUL appears to have been the life as well as soul of many charitable institutions. He has well earned his Christmas-Box of £1,200; but that, though a handsome one, is, it may be remembered, with three SOULS to support, money enough to go some way only towards keeping body and soul together.

Digitized by Google

A SIGNAL SUCCESS.

Toddleton (meeting Coddleton in the Fog, startled by an Explosion at his Feet). "HULL—LO! WHAT—THE DOOSE IS THAT?"

Coddleton. "FOG SIGNAL, DEAR BOY!—FOG SIGNAL! WHEN I SEE A LAMP-POST, OR ANYBODY ELSE, COMING AGAINST MY NOSE, 'THROW DOWN FOG SIGNAL—'REMINDS ME TO GET OUT O' THE WAY, YOU KNOW. 'SEE THE IDEA?!!!"

SEASONABLE JOTTINGS.

THE designs for Christmas Cards, preserved in the Ambrosial Library at Milan, by the Old Masters, particularly those by CORPO DI BACCO, DOLCE FAR NIENTE, PIETRO PUNCHINELLO, FRA SGRAFFITO, and VILLEGGIATURA, show no indications of plum-pudding, holly, or turkey, and only in one or two (by POCO CURANTE) are there any signs of snow and icicles.

It is both interesting and instructive (especially for those young persons home for the holidays who may be detained in-doors through stress of weather) to trace back to the fountain-head one or two of the phrases which are everywhere current at this festive season. "Christmas comes but once a year" is claimed for several writers of antiquity by their respective partisans; but it is hardly worth while to discuss the question, for the Author, whoever he was, must have been a man of singularly contracted views, not to see that his aphorism has no special reference to Christmas, but applies equally to Lent, Michaelmas, the Battle of Marengo, Mr. Punch's birthday, and all other great anniversaries. The cheery good wish, "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year," has been ascribed to BONIFACE and also to HILARY, but it is older than either or both of them. Uttered from time immemorial between the twenty-fifth of December and the sixth of January, it may be traced back in illuminated MSS. and palimpsests, in venerable scrolls and papyri, through the Middle Ages and the Renaissance to the Invention of Learning and the Revival of Printing, till it is finally lost in the darkness which preceded the dawn of Gothic Architecture in the Byzantine Empire. "What seasonable weather!" That distinguished philologist, VON SPRACHERZUNGE, gives a list of seventy-six languages, and one hundred-and-eleven dialects, in which this well-known formula occurs, extending from 196° 28′ N. to 47° 195′ S.

The Christmas-Tree was first introduced into this country from the Black Forest by a German Band. Some harmless superstitions hide themselves amongst its branches. It should be dug up with a silver (certainly with an electro-plated) spade, by a distant relation, between the hours of 8 P.M. and 8 A.M., and removed, carefully wrapped in silver paper, in a cylindrical pot of vermilion hue, by four of the best girls in the next charity-school, wearing duffle bonnets trimmed with green ribbon, long yellow mittens, short red petticoats, and blue worsted stockings. If possible, a deputation from the nearest School Board, with their Beadles, should be invited to the exhibition of the Tree, and little appropriate gifts handed to them by anyone present who has passed the Oxford (or Cambridge) Local Examination. The Lady, having an establishment of her own, who receives the last present from a Christmas-Tree, may confidently look forward to one of three things happening in the course of the New Year—either the roasting-jack will get out of order, or the housemaid will give warning, or there will be a fracture of crockery in the kitchen.

On New Year's Eve it is considered very lucky if you dream that you are at a Fancy Dress Ball at the Bank of England.

On New Year's Day, if the post arrives before you are down to breakfast, you will receive during the year a list of prices from a wine-merchant, patterns from a tailor, and the announcement of the purchase of a bankrupt draper's stock and its unreserved sale at 55 per cent. below cost price. If, on the other hand, you are seated at the breakfast-table when the letters are delivered, twelve months will not elapse without your receiving a pressing solicitation to subscribe to the Grand National State Lottery of Boshnia, a card with the prices (up to the latest possible moment) of the best Wallsend, Silkstone, and Derby Brights, and a cordial invitation to dine (at your own expense) with the Patrons, Stewards, and Supporters of the Hospital for the Relief and Cure of Diseases of the Midriff, supported entirely by voluntary contributions.

Never make your Will on Old Christmas Day (Twelfth Day). There are reasons for this, which you can learn (after filling up the necessary forms, and paying the necessary fees) at the Registry, Court of Probate, Somerset House, W.C.

ARMY MOBILISATION SCHEME (according to EARL GREY).—Reckoning without your Host.

Digitized by Google

WHY NOT?

Cook (come after Situation). "BY THE BYE, MA'AM, IS THERE A RINK IN YOUR NEIGHBOURHOOD? FOR I SHOULDN'T LIKE TO GIVE UP MY SKATING!"

TERENCE AT WESTMINSTER.

ON a night not long ere Christmas Day,
DOCTOR PUNCH, who is sapiens et vafer,
Takes the book of the very first play
Of PUBLIUS TERENTIUS AFER:
He looks at the Westminster boys,
Judges, big-wigs, and ladies in satin,
Then, ere fact all illusion destroys,
He buries his nose in the Latin.

Good stuff, O TERENTI! Although
It is not a critical slander
To say, that We very well know,
That you borrowed your plot from MENANDER.
But are we not borrowers too?
Why the critics are raving in chorus
That nought now-a-days can be new,
Since the Ancients were authors before us.

Be it so. Let our wine and our wit
Be famed, if you will, for antiquity:
But why should that lessen a whit
Our enjoyment of Davus' iniquity?
Not, though, while the best fun's astir,
Our neighbour, SIR MARK MEGATHERIUM,
Says, "The play has no heroine, Sir!
Where the deuce have they hidden Glycerium?"

"Play without 'leading lady,'—too bad!"
Verdant Greens in loud protest may mutter,
Who for stage-sirens go to the bad,
On the shoal where short petticoats flutter.
For their sake Mr. Punch must declare
That our stage would be often less quizzible,
If the heroine, foolish as fair,
Could all through the play be invisible.

The Actress her "h's" who drops,
The Actress who shrieks in her passion,
The Actress who won't mind her stops,
The Actress who will set the fashion;
Just think of them, playwright of nous,
And say is 't not very much safer
To shut the sweet thing in her house,
As did PUBLIUS TERENTIUS AFER?

BIRDS AND BONNETS.

ONE of those evils which work their own cure will, it is to be hoped, prove to be the present barbarous fashion of wearing little birds or portions of them as trimmings of bonnets. In "Fashions for December" Le Follet announces that:—

"The birds and wings are getting very common, and are superseded in the bonnets made by fashionable modistes by long plumes and curled feathers. As many of these can be supplied from one victim, the small ornithological species must be very grateful for this new decree of Fashion."

By "getting common," Le Follet means that cockrobins, goldfinches, and tomtits, have commenced appearing in the head-dresses adopted by the wives and daughters of small tradesmen, and by servant girls, whence again they will disappear in due time after they have been "superseded in the bonnets made by fashionable modistes" for the superior classes. Thus all orders of the sex will, in succession, figure as feather-headed, but, in succession, we trust, to return to less objectionable trimmings and humaner head-gear.

In the meantime Punch grieves to learn that, so far from this being the case as yet, the Chairman of the Avon and Stour Farmers' Club has lately brought under the notice of the Club a new cruelty springing from the same source—viz., the plucking out the wings and feathers of birds while still alive, the offenders in their defence averring that the feathers were more valuable when so plucked, as longer retaining their natural hue.

BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS has been on the qui vive, as usual, in defence of her poor little feathered friends, and writes to the Secretary of the Club a letter which Punch is glad to reprint in extenso:—

"SIR, "Heron Court Dec. 19th.

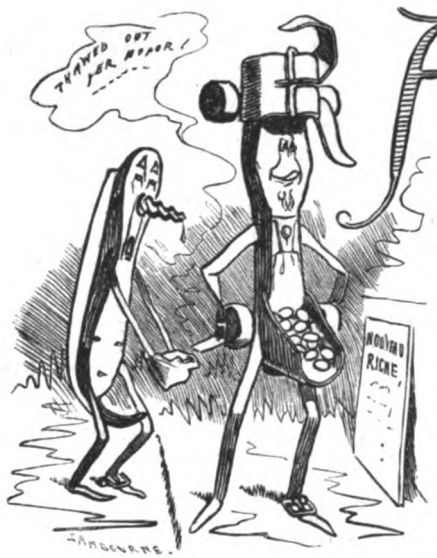
"PLEASE convey to the members of your excellent society the sense of pleasure it gave me to learn that there was an unanimous desire on their part to put down the cruelty which has been extensively practised in this and other districts, in wantonly killing, and (as I learn from the Christchurch paper of the 1st inst.) actually torturing small birds. That three men should be charged with plucking the wings and feathers of these most harmless of all God's creatures while still alive seems incredible at this period of the nineteenth century; but as it appears that these feathers are intended for the adornment of Ladies' attire, it is time that the sense of Englishwomen should be quickened to the enormity of the crime which they are virtually encouraging. I have already communicated with many of the leaders of fashion in this country on the subject, but, in a truly sympathetic letter I received from MADAME LOUISE I am grieved to learn that, repugnant to womanly feeling as this kind of decoration should be there is still an increasing demand for it. English Ladies will incur a serious responsibility, and gain an unenviable reputation, unless they discard a practice attended with so much pain and cruelty as this is now shown to be. "BURDETT-COUTTS."

JUSTICE TO A HEAD-MASTER.



ON "Speech Day" at Highbury College the usual festivities were observed in Highbury New Park in the presence of some two hundred Ladies and Gentlemen.

"BISHOP CLAUGHTON took the chair, and proceeded to the presentation of the prizes, making some excellent remarks commendatory of DR. KIDDO and his staff of masters, who had, during the past twenty years, imparted so sound an education to so many pupils."

Here, now, was just the right man in the right place, saying just the right thing. No one, perhaps, is better qualified to appreciate the services of a Head-Master who has creditably conducted a Public School for the last twenty years, than BISHOP CLAUGHTON. Recently published correspondence and remarks have probably impressed him with a sense of such services, which, had he been endowed with it a little sooner, would have enabled him to do justice to the Head Master of Felstead School, MR. GRIGNON.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ALMANACKS.

AS Mr. Punch has of late been compelled to undergo the perusal of many Almanacks (in the preparation of his own incomparable one), he has been painfully struck by the amount of stupidity shown in their Calendars (excluding, of course, his own incomparable one). The average almanack reads like the following:—

M	Sun rises 3h. 51m.
Tu	J. Smith b. 1807
W	Joseph Miller d. 1701
Th	Dividends due
F	Jamaica discovrd. 1494
S	Wm. Bloggins d. 1683

Now who wants to know when the sun rises, or who, if he does know it, will get up to see it? Does not every schoolboy know that JOHN SMITH was born in 1807? Is anyone so disgracefully ignorant as not to be aware when JOSEPH (familiarly called JOE) MILLER departed this life? If anyone has got any dividends, trust him for knowing when they are due; and if he hasn't got any, what is the use of tantalising him? Does any one require to be informed when Jamaica was discovered, and is there any one so lost to all sense of decency and shame that he does not know that WILLIAM BLOGGINS died in 1683?

Mr. Punch, true to his one great instinct of benefiting mankind in every possible manner, has devised and patented a new series of Almanacks, which will meet everybody's wants. He subjoins a few specimens, leaving the years blank till he has time to consult his HAYDN's (Times and) Seasons.

Husbands.

M	First Club started in London
Tu	Chubb invented latch-keys
W	Smith murdered his mother-[in-law
Th	Mrs. Caudle died
F	Mrs. Naggleton born
S	Divorce Court opened

Wives.

M	Pin-mon. instituted [his wife
Tu	Brown got 7 years for beating
W	New dresses wanted [able
Th	Broughams found indispens-
F	Most people go out of Town
S	Divorce Court opened

Young Men.

M	M. Cognac met Mlle. Soda
Tu	Pick-me-ups perfected
W	Derby first run [invented
Th	Billiards and "Van John"
F	Tobacco brought into England.
S	Loo became unlimited

Young Women.

M	Invention of Rinking: spread like Winking.
Tu	Manola Waltz written
W	Jouvin born
Th	Language of Flowers discovd.
F	Valentines first sent
S	Strauss born

Artists.

M	Some King picked up somebody's brush *
Tu	Manchester discovered
W	Pot-boilers first painted
Th	Vicar of Wakefield written
F	An art critic hung (Pour encourager les autres.)
S	Brown got £6000 for a picture

Authors.

M	Three publishers burnt alive at Leipzig Fair.
Tu	Nap. III. sent six editors to Cayenne.
W	"Over-work" invented
Th	Fielding got drunk
F	Smollett got drunk
S	Steele got drunk.

The Planetary lore of the Almanacks for 1876 suggests some Happy Thoughts. Thus:—

January.—Venus is an evening star now. Mr. Punch generally finds Venus an evening star.

Mars is in the constellation Pisces. Can that mean a naval engagement? Hooray for Old England!

February.—Venus still an evening star. Of course, dear creature!

Mars still in Pisces. Another sea-fight. More Nelsons wanted.

Neptune in Aries. That means "rams." May they run down, not their friends, but their enemies!

* Accuracy in historic details cannot be expected from Artists.

Ladies fair! There are five Tuesdays in February. Be sure to propose before the last, which is Shrove Tuesday.

March.—Venus, lovely being, still an evening star.

Mars and Neptune both in Aries. Look out for squalls.

April.—Can it be, or are we the fools of flower-giving April—anemone of months? Venus still an evening star.

Never mind: Mars has got out of Aries, though Neptune sticks there still.

May.—Really, pretty lustrous Venus,
There must be something wrong between us,
That when old Phœbus leaves his car,
You still remain an evening star.

June.—Jupiter is in Libra. The supreme Divinity is about to weigh the year in his celestial scales.

July.—Cygnus, Aquila, and Sagittarius will be on the meridian near midnight. What will happen to the Swan and the Eagle if the Archer knows his trade?

August.—Venus morning star, at last; comes down in cool summer dress, and pours out the coffee with the whitest hand in the world.

September.—Pegasus will be on the meridian at midnight. Expect poetasters. Off with your coat, O Saturday Reviewer!

October.—The Moon occults the Pleiades. Doubtless, the Queen of the Sky cuts those six sisters because the seventh was "lost."

November.—Mars is in Virgo. Several gallant officers will become Benedicks.

December.—Taurus will be on the meridian at midnight. Dish we the Christmas sirloin!

NAVAL NURSERY RHYMES.

A RECENT public speaker is reported to have said that the way in which the Navy is now managed is "positively childish." If this be true, our Sailors may in some sort be looked upon as children, and scarce out of the nursery; and, this being so, they may perhaps find some amusement in such nursery rhymes as these:—

I.

Hushaby, Admiral, sleep like a top;
When the wind blows, safe ashore you should stop:
Ere you awake there 'll perhaps come a squall,
And down may go Iron-clads, sailors and all.

II.

Bah, bah, black sheep, let me see your hull:
Ah, yes, precisely so, of leaking valves 'tis full.
Here 's one near the engine-room, another by the stern,
And what on earth they 're wanted for no fellow well can learn.

III.

Rashery, dashery, smash!
Into each other ships crash:
And it strikes more than one,
That JOHN BULL is done,
For repairs when he forks out the cash.

IV.

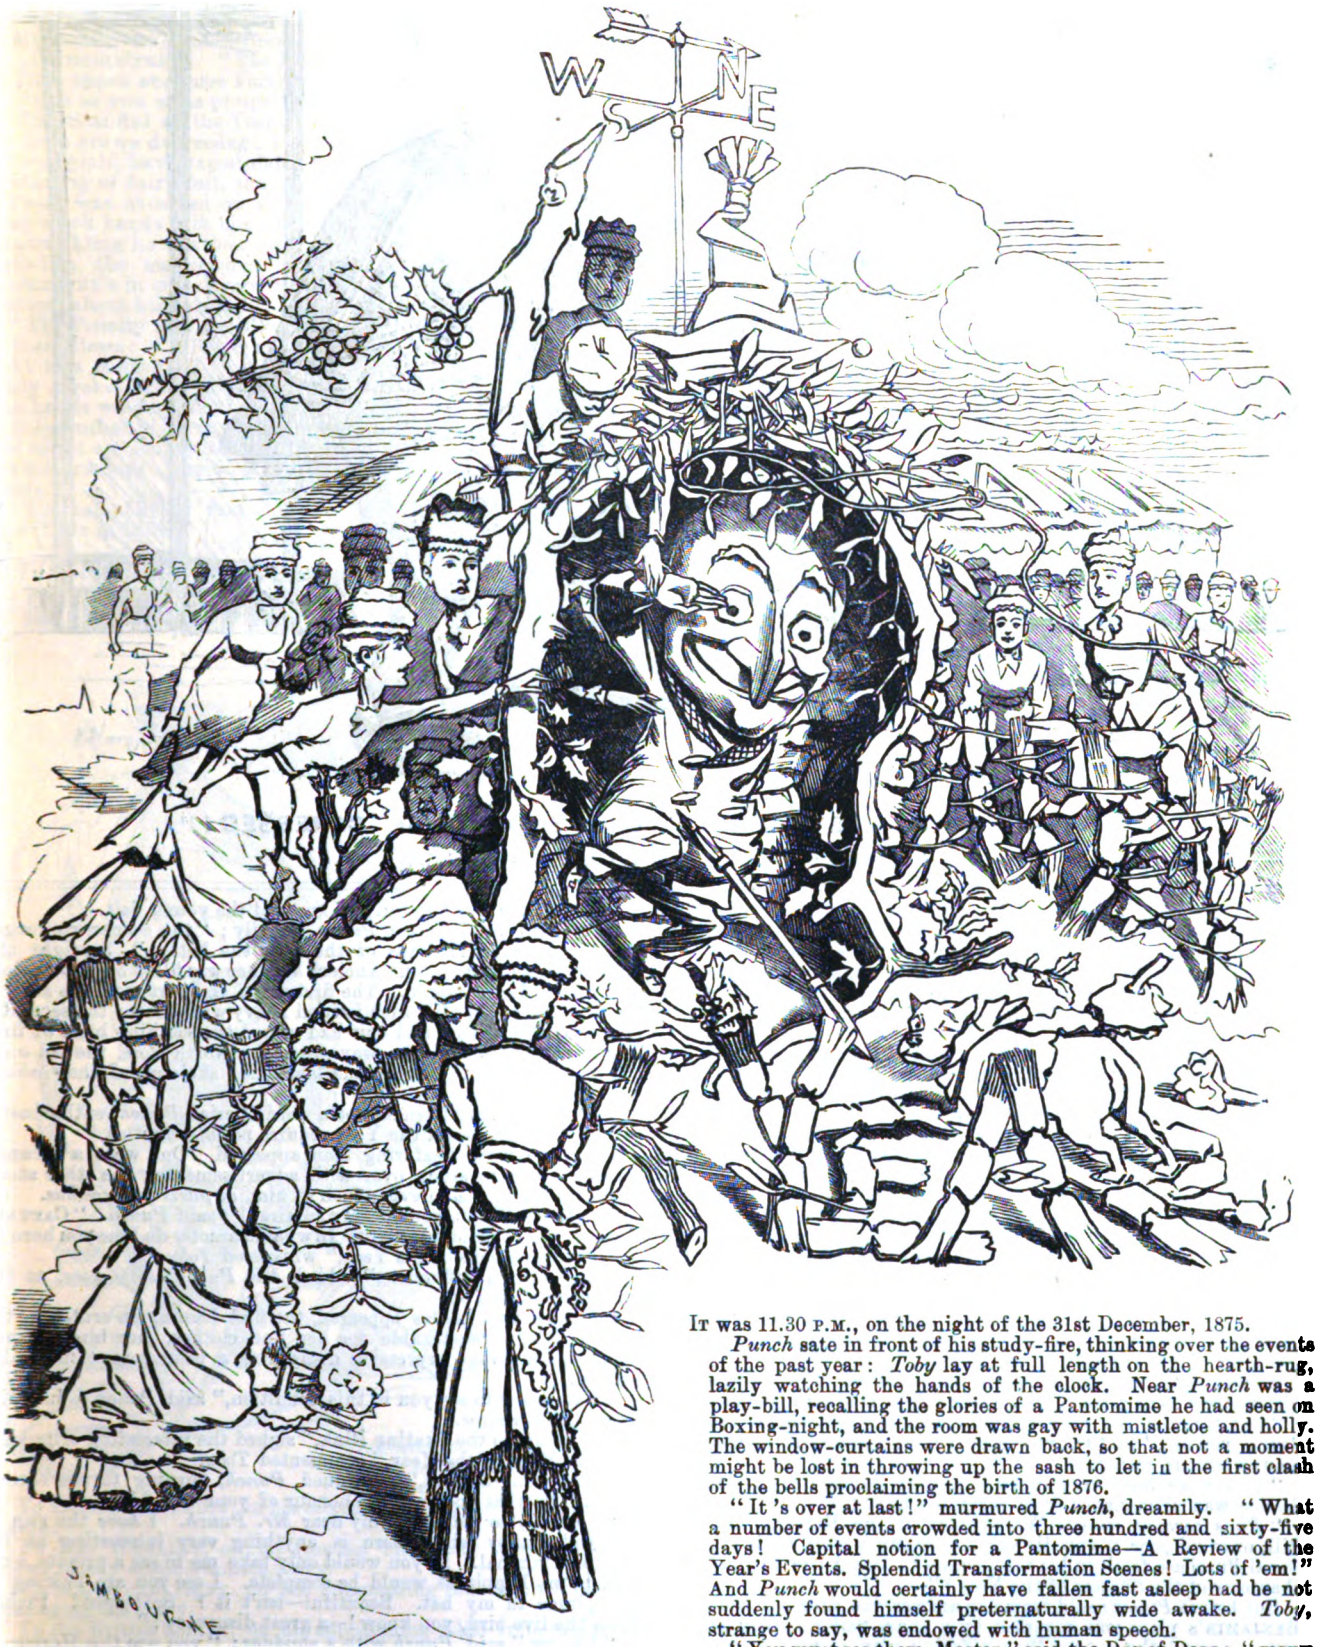
Iron-clad, Iron-clad, get up your steam,
And see that your whistles are ready to scream.
For fear of a leak your fog-signals prepare,
But don't start till the weather-glass stands at Set Fair.

V.

There was a little man
That in a big ship ran
On a perfectly calm morning from Spithead, head, head:
And steered her on a rock,
And sank her by the shock,
For he 'd quite forgot the heaving of the lead, lead, lead.

VI.

Sing a song for Sailors,
Pipe your weather eye:
With more than twenty big ships,
On none can we rely.
When Parliament is opened,
How precious small they 'll sing,
Those Admiralty lubbers,
Whom DIZ overboard must fling!



VII.

Half-mast hoist your buntin,
If DIZZY keeps WARD-HUNT in:
Punch would not be in his skin,
When the Session shall begin!

MOTTO FOR THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER.—Caveat Emptor.

Digitized by Google

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

IT was 11.30 P.M., on the night of the 31st December, 1875.

Punch sate in front of his study-fire, thinking over the events of the past year: Toby lay at full length on the hearth-rug, lazily watching the hands of the clock. Near Punch was a play-bill, recalling the glories of a Pantomime he had seen on Boxing-night, and the room was gay with mistletoe and holly. The window-curtains were drawn back, so that not a moment might be lost in throwing up the sash to let in the first clash of the bells proclaiming the birth of 1876.

"It 's over at last!" murmured Punch, dreamily. "What a number of events crowded into three hundred and sixty-five days! Capital notion for a Pantomime—A Review of the Year's Events. Splendid Transformation Scenes! Lots of 'em!" And Punch would certainly have fallen fast asleep had he not suddenly found himself preternaturally wide awake. Toby, strange to say, was endowed with human speech.

"You must see them, Master," said the Dog of Dogs; "many of them have come a long way to pay their respects to you: and some of them I have ordered round to receive from you the rating they deserve."

Digitized by Google

"WHERE COOK HAS TREATED, CAT SHOULD BE CARESSED!"

(Sketch in a London Square, Christmas-Day, 1875.)

Here Toby suddenly began singing with great feeling, "God Bless the Prince of Wales," as a young Gentleman, of gracious manners and prepossessing appearance, walked up to his Master.

"Don't rise, I beg," said the young Gentleman, with a pleasant smile; "I hate ceremony. I came to tell you that I like India very much; and, upon my honour, I begin to think India likes me."

"Can you doubt it, Sir?" exclaimed Punch, bowing with his most courtly air. "Every day brings us news of the good impression you are making upon the subjects of your gracious Mamma, the EMPRESS OF HINDOSTAN."

"O, yes. They are not half bad fellows; though sport might be better. PROBYN has rather let me in on that point. But what need to talk to you?" and H.R.H. laughed heartily. "Have you not a Special Correspondent attached to my suite, who tells you everything in the way of sport, that occurs to him, or to me?"

"Yes, Sir, I have," replied Punch, smiling; "and his contributions, if you will permit me to say so, are infinitely better fun than the regular thing in the morning papers. I trust we shall soon see your Royal Highness at home again?"

"I hope to be back in March," said H.R.H. "In the meantime allow me to wish you the compliments of the season, in my popular character of the Traveller of the Year."

He was gone, and suddenly his place was taken by a Gentleman whose face was as a book, where men might read strange matters.

"Got through the year without losing my seat on the Treasury Bench, you see," said the new-comer, with a smile full of sarcastic, though serious, meaning.

"You have been very lucky," replied Punch, drily; "for the Session was mismanaged from beginning to end."

"Finis coronat opus! Who thinks of the Merchant Shipping Bill, or of all poor WARD HUNT's Admiralty messes, with the Suez Canal Purchase fresh in his recollection? May I bow to you in the character of the Success of the Year?"

But before Punch could frame an answer, the RIGHT HONOURABLE BENJAMIN's place was occupied by a sham Sailor. Toby growled savagely, and the outwardly sea-faring man seemed to yaw and shift uneasily under the steady gaze of Punch.

"Who are you?" asked the Sage.

"I hail from the Admiralty," growled the young Salt.

"Off with you!" cried Punch, angrily; "the sooner we forget the Blunders and Mishaps of the Year the better." Straight the place of that anything but Ancient Mariner was filled by two Sailors of a very different stamp. The first was a stalwart man, his suit of rough fear-nought stiff with ice and heavy with snow; the second a lad, on whose clothes and hair had passed the scathing blast of fire. The man had come all the way from the North Pole, the lad only a few miles, from the burnt and blackened skeleton of the Goliath Training Ship.

"Not a word, my friends; not a word!" cried Punch, enthusiastically; "the Heroes of the Year require no introduction."

Then two more Seafaring Men appeared. One wore a strange waterproof dress stuck over with advertisements; the other stood modestly forth, a man every inch of him, in puris naturalibus.

"CAPTAIN WEBB, your hearty admirer!" said Punch. "CAPTAIN BOYTON, your obedient servant! In what character do I see you here?"

"The Sensations of the Year," whispered Toby.

"But with a difference," added Mr. Punch, sotto voce, as the swimmers passed on.

And now two Ladies appeared, the first leaning on crutches, the second chiefly remarkable for her fine clothes, her bird-plumed toque, and a savage expression disfiguring a countenance naturally refined.

"I am sorry to see you in this condition," said Punch to his disabled Lady-visitor.

"A victim to the Skating Rink," sighed the interesting cripple.

"The Rage of the Year," commented Toby.

"And you, Madam," continued Punch, turning to the second Lady, "to what do I owe the honour of your visit?"

"I want your influence, my dear Mr. Punch. I have the run of the Old Bailey when there is anything very interesting at the Central Criminal. If you would only take me to see a private execution, my happiness would be complete. I see you are looking at the plume in my hat. Beautiful—isn't it? So bright! Picked from the live bird, you know!—a great discovery!"

"I know," said Punch with a shudder; "you are the Horror of the Year." And as the two Ladies disappeared, he added, "That graceful ghoule has given me a turn. I will see no more."

Digitized by Google

"O, but Master," expostulated the Dog of Dogs, "there is still a crowd of persons who declare they must see you. They say they have sent you a mass of letters, which have never been used, or even acknowledged. They insist upon acknowledgments, at least!

"My would-be contributors!" exclaimed Punch with a piteous face of remonstrance. "The Nuisances of the Year!"

"Then there are three Foreigners in diplomatic uniform who wish to submit to you some prospectuses of new loans."

"The Scandal of the Year! Come, come, this is quite enough. The levée grows depressing; I will see no more."

Toby would have expostulated further, when suddenly there came a pattering of fairy feet, and the sound of joyous laughter.

Punch was attacked on all sides by a bevy of beautiful girls. They shook hands with him, they kissed, they cuddled, they hugged. In a twinkling he was their helpless prisoner. Over his head whizzed, lasso-like, the matrimonial noose; his wrists bound faster than MASKELYNE'S in true lovers' knots; a wedding-ring welded, fetter-fashion, about his ankle.

"The Penalty of Leap Year," they laughed out in the intervals of their kisses: "1875 has given place to 1876!"

At this moment Toby began to bark so loud that Punch suddenly awoke. He rubbed his eyes, and looked up at the clock. The hands were on the stroke of twelve.

Toby rushed to the window. Punch followed leisurely; and as the cool night air poured into the room, and the bells of the City clashed the solemn hour of midnight, there came a joyous burst of far-off music.

"Enough of 1875," said Punch. "I wish all the world a Happy New Year in 1876!"

COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON.

To LORD HARTINGTON, on his increasing ability to lead the Liberal party.

To MR. WHALLEY, on his growing incapacity to represent the views of any sensible constituency.

To MR. WARD HUNT, on his approaching retirement from Mismanaging the Navy.

To the British Soldier, on his approaching relief from murderous and needless night sentry duty.

To the lion-maned KENEALY, on his decreasing popularity with the Magna-Chartists.

ARTICULARLY to MR. DISRAELI, on his Sphinxian policy and purchase.

To MR. GLADSTONE, on his elegant Latinity and scholarly enjoyment of his well-earned hours of leisure.

To SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT, on the festive occasion which he enjoyed at Oxford of cutting up, and serving out with his own sauce, the "suet-pudding"-headed Government.

To the Cardinal Archbishop, on his beautiful red hat, this being the first Christmas on which he has been seen in it.

And, finally, to Mr. Punch, on the completion of his Sixty-Ninth Volume.

ZANGA; OR, THE FUGITIVE SLAVE.

A Modern Nautical Drama.

SCENE I.—Off the coast of Zanzibar. British ship discovered lying at anchor. Fierce shouts heard on shore, accompanied by the cracking of whips. ZANGA, the Fugitive Slave, seen flying for his life; he reaches the edge of the cliff, his pursuers are gaining on him; he catches sight of the British flag, and, raising his hands to Heaven in gratitude for his delivery, plunges into the sea.

SCENE II.—Same coast. The British ship lying at anchor. ZANGA, Fugitive Slave, nearly exhausted, has reached the side of the vessel, and is imploring to be taken on board. Cautious British Captain, Officers, and British Sailors appear above, with telescopes, and a book of the Admiralty Orders.

Fugitive Slave (nearly sinking). For the love of Heaven, throw—me—a rope!! [Shout of pursuers heard on the shore.

Cautious British Captain (to Officers). Gentlemen, we must be careful. Where's the Admiralty Circular Catechism? (First Mate brings it forward.) Good! Now—let's see—— Where is he?

Fugitive Slave (scarcely able to keep himself from sinking). For—the—love—of Heaven—for—the honour of your flag——

Cautious British Captain (after examining the book, looks over the side, and addresses the sinking Slave). You "profess to be a Fugitive Slave"?

Fugitive Slave (despairingly). I am! I am!!

Cautious British Captain. The first question is, are you "beyond the limit of territorial waters"? Now, as, with every wish to help you, it is my duty to ascertain this exactly, perhaps the best way would be for the First Officer to go on shore, and make the necessary inquiries. Pipe all hands to man the Captain's Gig!

Fugitive Slave (his voice becoming more and more feeble). For pity's sake—a rope—a——

Cautious British Captain (from above, addressing him). You must, my good creature, bear in mind, that, while the Government under which I serve "desires to mitigate the horrors of slavery," yet "Her Majesty's ships are not intended for the reception of persons other than their officers and crew," and here we are. Her Majesty's ships, in fact, resemble omnibuses or cabs, or any other public conveyance, being licensed to carry so many, and no more. Therefore, you will, I am sure, see the necessity of my satisfying myself that there is sufficient ground for taking you on board, before I can accommodate you with a rope.

Fugitive Slave. For mercy's sake—ah!—ah!—help me!—help!——

Cautious British Captain (a little annoyed). My dear friend, you are unreasonable. I would help you if I could; but you must see that you have not yet satisfied me as to whether, even if you are what you profess to be, i.e., a Fugitive Slave, you have been "detained in a state of slavery contrary to existing treaties." You should recollect that, as representing the British Government, I am "bound by the Comity of Nations" to——

Fugitive Slave. Ah!—— [Disappears under the waves.

Cautious British Captain (after a pause). The gig will not be required. If the person could only have waited, or have answered my questions satisfactorily, we might have taken him on board until we had communicated with the Consular Authority. Gentlemen, England expects that every man shall do his duty.

All. Hurrah!

Cautious British Captain. Remember, our motto is, "Britons never, never, never, shall be slaves!" and from what you've seen of slaves, and the way they're treated, I am sure you will join with me in hearty approval of the sentiment. Gentlemen and messmates. Belay! Avast!

[Bo'sen's whistle. Grog served out all round. Exit Captain to his cabin to study the Admiralty Orders.

The Spelling Bee.

(Versicle by a Gentleman who didn't win.)

HOWE duth the littel Spellin Bee
Improoove each shyning our,
And gather hunny orl the day
From evry pritty flour.

FASHIONABLE EXTREMES.—High Heels and Low Foreheads.

Digitized by Google

A DISCLAIMER.—(REMINISCENCE OF THE LATE FROST.)

Chorus. "PUT ON YER SKATES, MISS!"

[Lucy Brabazon, who has the prettiest little Tootsicums in the World, thinks it necessary to explain that the Skates are not hers, but belong to her Papa, for whom she is waiting (and who is a Gentleman of colossal proportions).

THE BURNING OF THE GOLIATH.

(As told by an old Gravesend Salt to a Messmate in Greenwich Hospital.)

A DIRTY, foggy morning 'twas:
Grays loomed large, close a-lee:
The watch was holy-stoning decks
As white as decks could be:
There were five hundred workhouse lads
A training for the sea.

Goliath was a giant-hulk
Built in the days of yore:
And more than one small DAVID
Upon her books she bore.
No iron in her: knees of oak,
And oak-heart at the core.

The bell had just struck half-past eight,
As broke the winter's day—
On the main-deck 'twas dousing glims
And stowing them away.
Darn that new-fangled paraffine!—
Whale-ile 's the stuff, I say!

Young LOBBER had the lamps in charge—
A steady boy, I'm told—
One on 'em burnt his fingers, till
He couldn't keep his hold;
Down fell the lamp; along the decks
The blazing oil it rolled.

"Fire!" "Beat to quarters!" "Man the pumps!"—
I could cry like a fool
To read how them lads mustered all,
As if for morning school.
In their sky-larking at Christmas
They wasn't half as cool.

I've heerd of Balaclava—
But those were bearded men,
And these were little fellows,
Most part 'twixt twelve and ten.
Some calls 'em gutter-children—
God bless our gutters, then!

The Capt'n he was at his post,
A smile upon his face;
And not one officer or lad
But knew and kept his place.
Though soon 'twas plain as plain could be,
The fire must win the race.

Most of the little chaps could swim;
But, swim or not, they made
And kept their lines as regular
As soldiers on parade.
BOUCHIER had wife and girls aboard—
But by them lads he stayed.

Till when the pumps no longer sucked,
Boat-tackles scorched, in-board:
Ship lost! No lowering the boats!
The Captain gave the word,
"Leap from the ports: swim, them that can;
The rest, trust in the Lord!"

One little chap hung round his neck
A blubb'ring, "Burnt you'll be.
Jump over first—and then we'll jump."
"No, no, my boy," says he.
"The Skipper 's last to leave the ship—
That is our way at sea."

So young and old their duty did,
Like sailors, and like men:
There was HALL, and there was NORRIS,
And GUNTON, TYE, and FENN—
Who swore he 'd save the women
And did it, there and then.

The Captain's wife jumped thirty feet—
Needs must when Wulcan drives—
Hand over hand—in sailor style—
His daughters saved their lives;—
Brave girls you see, and well brought up,
The stuff for sailors' wives!

On the tank-barge some twenty boys
Had climbed dear life to save;
The flames flared out, the pitched top-sides
Yawned like a fiery grave;
And some set up the cry, "Shove off!"—
Lads will like lads behave.

But BILLY BOLTON'S boyish voice
Was heard—"I'm mate in charge:
There 's room enough for plenty more;
Hold on there with the barge."—
That BILLY BOLTON may run small,
The heart in him looms large.

Digitized by Google

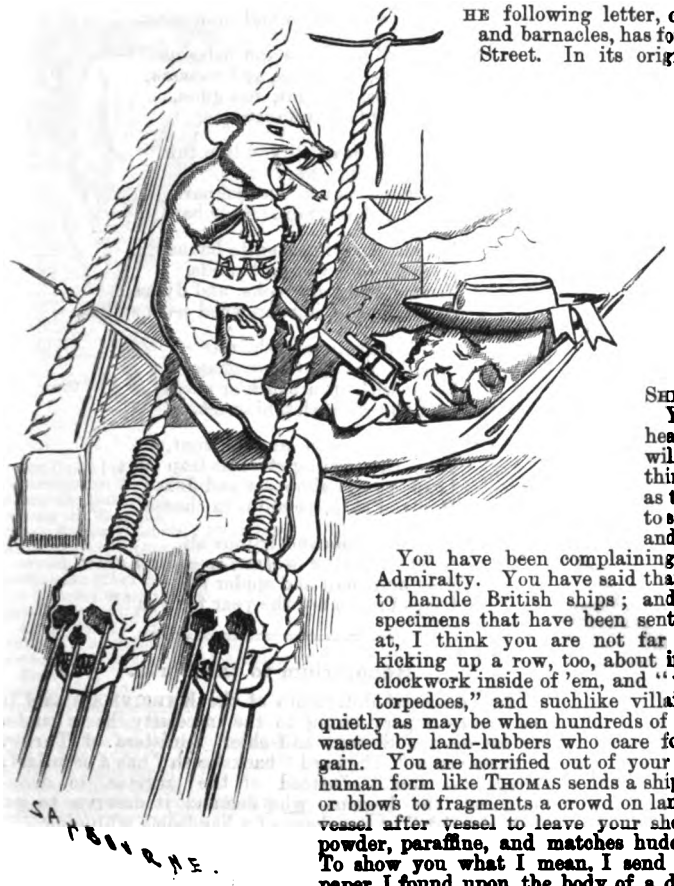
A USEFUL MANUFACTURE.

THE "RAW MATERIAL."

"WORKED UP."

["Goliath" Training Ship burnt December 22nd, 1875

Digitized by Google



Digitized by Google

But I can't tell you half the tale—
How, when they got ashore,
The kind, good women kissed and hugged,
And stript the clothes they wore,
To wrap the boys, as mothers will—
Or what is mothers for?

There was a little soldier lad
His shipmates come to see,
He 's gone, and some half-dozen more,
And MASTER WHEELER, he
Is with them little lads in Heaven—
All rated there A.B.

As long as English workhouse lads
Work up to such good stuff,
BRITANNIA still will rule the waves—
Though here and there a muff
At Whitehall, or afloat, may make
Old JOHN BULL cut up rough!

A MESSAGE FROM THE SEA!

THE following letter, covered with sea-weed and barnacles, has found its way to 85, Fleet Street. In its original state it contained some strong expressions of indignation, which have been omitted; and the salt-water slang in which it first abounded has been toned down. With these exceptions, the letter is printed as written:—

The Bed of the Ocean, New Year's Day, 1876.

SHIP ahoy, JOHN BULL!

You will be surprised to hear from me, Shipmate, I will be bound; but when things come to be as bad as they are now, it is time to speak out pretty plainly, and so here goes.

You have been complaining a long time of your Admiralty. You have said that they don't know how to handle British ships; and, certainly, from the specimens that have been sent below for me to look at, I think you are not far out. You have been kicking up a row, too, about infernal machines with clockwork inside of 'em, and "water rats" and "coal torpedoes," and suchlike villains' tools, but you sit quietly as may be when hundreds of sailors' lives are being wasted by land-lubbers who care for nothing but greedy gain. You are horrified out of your senses when a devil in human form like THOMAS sends a ship to the bottom at sea or blows to fragments a crowd on land, and yet you permit vessel after vessel to leave your shores loaded with gunpowder, paraffine, and matches huddled together anyhow. To show you what I mean, I send you a cutting from a paper I found upon the body of a dead sailor. And if it don't make you blush, Mate, up to the very roots of your hair, why, hang me, it ought!—

"The danger to which vessels are exposed by the careless storing of gunpowder has been brought under the notice of the Underwriters' Associations in the different Colonies by CAPTAIN HARVEY, of the ship Alteor. He thus describes the mode of stowage in his own vessel:—'The stowage consists in dropping the various packages into any opening or crevice that presents itself. The powder in my vessel consisted of 400 barrels and 24 cases, and was placed in the main hatchway and on both sides of the same, among a general cargo, consisting of wines, spirits, oils, paint, matches, rod and bar iron, &c. The hatches were then secured, and nothing more was seen until arrival. We had the usual amount of heavy weather during the voyage. Upon opening the hatches in presence of surveyor, we found the powder adrift, and some eight barrels and three cases smashed. In consequence, daily during our discharge we have been sweeping and packing up powder from amid the iron, &c., it—the loose powder—having reached down even to the skin of the ship. Now, any practical man will perceive we have been momentarily exposed to explosion, more especially from the friction of the iron, and have been most mercifully spared from an imminent and deadly peril. In carrying powder for the Government it is placed in a magazine specially prepared, into which not a particle of iron is allowed to enter. I begged for one in London, but was not listened to by the charterers. While I am writing we all regret the non-appearance of the Strathmore, a new vessel, with some 90 souls on board. Being informed that she carried 30 tons of powder, and judging from my experience, I—and I shall rejoice to find I am wrong—never expect to see her again.'"

There now, what do you say to that? How do you expect to get sailors, if you treat them like that, eh?

I tell you what it is, Messmate, if you don't clear the decks for action, and that, too, pretty sharply, you will find me giving you up in disgust, and where would you be then?

I don't pretend to know much about lawyer's lingo (I hate landsharks), but in the time of my sons DRAKE, and ST. VINCENT, and NELSON, "carelessness" used to be spelt "crime." You are getting rid of your masts as fast as you can with your iron-clads and steam-power, but surely you ought to be able to find a yardarm and a rope somewhere. And when you have found a rope and a yardarm somewhere, why you take my advice—use 'em!

Yours, almost speechless with indignation,

NEPTUNE.

To JOHN BULL, care of BRITANNIA, Mistress of the Seas.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS FOR 1876.

THE POPE has resolved to invite the KING OF ITALY to spend a few days with him in the Vatican.

The SULTAN has resolved on energy, economy, and reform.

The RULER OF EGYPT has resolved to take England as his model.

The Spaniards have resolved to give over fighting amongst themselves.

The Irish have resolved to desist from agitation.

The Ultramontanes have resolved to cease troubling the world.

The Clergy of the Established Church have resolved to forget their differences, (and the Burials Bill), and to unite in grappling with vice, ignorance, misery, and crime.

MR. GLADSTONE has resolved to return to political life.

MR. DISRAELI has resolved to reform the administration of the Navy; and to be most careful, for the future, in his selections for Chief Commissionerships and other important appointments.

The FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY has resolved to join a Man-of-War, for a course of instruction in practical navigation; and afterwards to enter one of the Dockyards to acquire some knowledge of shipbuilding.

The new Peers have resolved to show their gratitude by the most assiduous devotion to their legislative duties—attending every sitting of the House of Lords, and remaining to the close of the proceedings, even though they should be protracted to so late a period in the evening as twenty minutes to seven.

The Government have resolved to increase the salaries of the Civil Service.

The Leaders of Fashion have resolved to set the example of dressing with more taste and less extravagance.

The Responsible Authorities have resolved to keep the streets clean.

The Railways have resolved to be punctual and accommodating.

The Trustees of the British Museum and National Gallery have resolved to throw those splendid Institutions open to the Public six days in the week.

The Members of the Royal Academy have resolved not to give good places to their own productions, unless they deserve them.

Certain Newspapers have resolved not to devote so much space and attention to sensational crime.

Our Domestic Servants have resolved to stay at least six months in their "situations" without trying to better themselves.

Our butchers, bakers, dustmen, fishmongers, greengrocers, lamplighters, milkmen, oilmen, turncocks, &c., have resolved to discontinue asking for Christmas Boxes.

BEE NATURAL.

THE new rival of the ancient fame of the Singing Mouse, the Industrious Flea, the Whistling Oyster, and the Learned Pig, is, evidently,—the Spelling Bee.

THE LORD MAYOR'S "CALICO BALL."—Clearly a Ball of COTTON.

Digitized by Google

"WAITING FOR THE VERDICT."

The German Nurse. "IS IT A CHERMAN OR AN ENKLISH PAPY?"

The Mamma. "WELL, I DON'T KNOW. YOU SEE SHE WAS BORN IN ENGLAND, BUT MY HUSBAND IS GERMAN."

The German Nurse. "ACH, SÔH! ZEN VE VILL VAIT TO SEE VAT LENKVETCH SHE VILL SCHREAK, AND ZEN VE VILL KNOW!"

LINES ON LEAP YEAR.

HARK I hear a sound of croaking;
Frogs, in one attempt at joking
Joining all their voices, say,
"This is Leap Year. Jump away!

"Leap, ye various deer and stags,
Chamois, on Helvetian crags,
Leap, ye goats, upon Welsh mountains,
Leap, ye cataracts and fountains.

"Leap, all monkeys and baboons
Squirrels, 'possums, and racoons,
Antelopes, gazelles, and gnus,
Catamounts and kangaroos.

"Leopards, leap all you like fun,
Lions, tigers, every one;
Panthers, pumas, and jaguars,
Leap—if but against your bars.

"Horses, carrying men to hounds,
Leap all intervening bounds,
Fences, hedges, brooks, and dykes,
Gates, and palings crowned with spikes.

"Steed, careering in the race
O'er the flat or steeple chase,
Leap, without a baulk or check,
Lest thy rider risk his neck.

"Leap, ye salmon, and ye trout,
From the purling streams leap out;
Leap, ye grasshoppers and fleas:
Hop and skip, ye mites in cheese.

"Yah, ye toads and tritons all,
Newts and slow-worms, creep and crawl;
Slug and snail and spider too—
Leap-Year 's not the year for you!"

Honorarium to the Porte.

THE financial difficulties of the KHEDIVE are said to be in great part owing to the necessity he is under of giving the SULTAN and chief Ministers of Turkey "backsheesh." The word "backsheesh" has a peculiarly suggestive sound. Instead of the largesse, so denominated, the beggars who demand it deserve to get "backswish" in the shape of a handsome whipping.

THE KHEDIVE'S PHILANTHROPY.—One of those things that no "fellah" can understand.

THE R'S AND THE RAGGED SCHOOLS.

THE friends of National Education continue quarrelling about the need or the propriety of adding to its elements, the Three R's, a fourth elementary R, Religion. Unfortunately there are several rival Fourth R's, Old English, Italic, and other. Dissenters and Secularists want instead of the Fourth R to substitute O, standing for nought, the symbol of "the propagandism of negation." Of course R the fourth is superadded to all the R's of the Ragged Schools, inclusive of their own initial. The EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, under whose auspices those schools have been hitherto so usefully conducted, would take care of that. But now another R steps in to supersede the Ragged Schools with all their R's. They appear to be officially threatened with extinction by SIR CHARLES REED, considered as the representative and Chairman of the London School-Board. He boasts of the superior education received by from 12,000 to 15,000 children who have been transferred from the Ragged Schools to the School Board's. But, according to LORD SHAFTESBURY, as many as 30,000 children had been getting educated in Ragged Schools, now broken up, of whom from 15,000 to 18,000 seem to be nowhere. Can SIR CHARLES REED lay his right hand on his left waistcoat pocket, and say he has not been injuriously poaching on the Shaftesbury preserves? Not to dwell too much on initial R's, it may be allowable to suggest that the systematic promoters of popular instruction would do wisely to make quite sure that as regards the education of London "gutter children," they do not lean too completely on a broken reed.

FOXHUNTER'S DEFINITION OF A MAIL-TRAIN.—A Post and Rails.

PUNCH'S GIFTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

To the PRINCE OF WALES (on the arrival of H.R.H. from India).—A Hearty Welcome.

To the PRINCESS OF WALES (on the arrival of H.R.H. from Denmark).—A Bouquet of Heart's-ease, and a little Lecture upon the unkindness of going away.

To the EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.—A Map of Asia, with the British Boundaries plainly marked.

To the EMPEROR OF GERMANY.—A View of England, with the British Arms and the motto "Nemo me impune lacessit."

To PRINCE VON BISMARCK.—An Easy Chair.

To MARSHAL MACMAHON.—A New History of Egypt.

To the SULTAN.—The Independence of the KHEDIVE.

To the KHEDIVE.—The Protection of England.

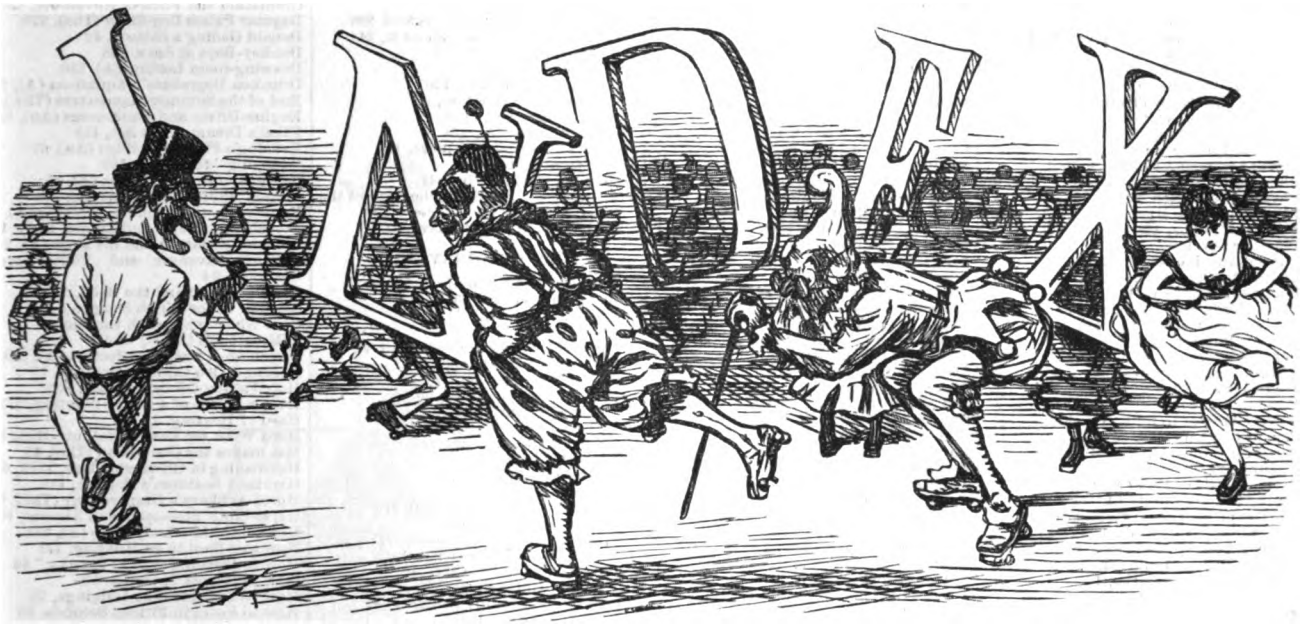
To the KING OF SPAIN.—An Illuminated Copy of DR. WATTS' Hymn, "Let dogs delight to bark and bite."

To the Lords of the Admiralty.—A Little Retirement.

To SIR JOHN KARSLAKE.—A well-merited Peerage.

To the Representatives of certain American Republics.—Apartments next door to an "unhappy nobleman."

To the Corporation of Harwich.—A Life-Boat, and the will to use it.



To the Trustees of Felstead School.—The Sack.

To Mr. Toby.—The Compliments of the Season.

And to the Rest of the World.—A New Volume of Punch.

MOBILISATION.—Advocates for Conscription for the Infantry plead that "the Line must be drawn somewhere."

Digitized by Google

ABBIT Omen! 44
Addendum to Yankee Doodle, 127
Admiralty Guide, 176
Among the Fish, 143
Anglo-Franco Vocabulary (The), 125
Another Glory Going, 151
Answers to Correspondents, 250
Antiborean (The). 249
An Unlucky Omission, 186
Aristocracy and Ale, 204
"Army, Form!" 259
Art of Nomenclature (The), 198
Astronomer-Royal among the Spectacle-Makers, 41
Anchumnalia, 99
Audi Alteram Partem, 185
August Delights, 78
"BACK Again" at the Admiralty, 149
Bag of Tricks (A), 58
Baker on Light Bread (A), 5
Baptism with a Bottle, 115
Base Sort at Birmingham (The), 5
Battle of Bayswater (The), 19
Beef at a Church Congress, 175
Beyond a Joke, 169
Birds and Bonnets, 283
Bishop's Ban (The), 186
Bismarck to his Parliament, 259
Black Flag of Freedom (The), 6
Bonaparte, 277
Bore for John Bull (A), 115
"Bottom, thou art Translated," 207
Bravo, Professor, 183
Britannia Objects, 130
British Public's XXXIX Articles, 261
British Workwoman (The), 151
Burial in Beds, 205
Burnham Beeches, 11
Burning of the Goliath (The), 288
Butter and Beef Suet, 99
Byron Statue (The), 42
CABMAN Extraordinary, 45
"Cab, Sir?" 151
Cannibal Snake (The), 241
Cardinal Points of Fact, 152
Cardinal's Prophecy (The), 80
Cat for Cruelty (The), 162
Cat! (The), 183
Canaidicus ad Canem, 116
"Charge, Chester, Charge!" 191
Charge of the Light Brigade, 191
Cheap at the Money, 226
Cheers for the Castalia, 167
Christmas Canard (A), 273
Christmas "Crackers," 265
Christmas Waits, 275
Circular Iron-clad (The), 213
City Mayor's Nest (A), 51
City Sports, 53
Civic Honours at Shrewsbury and Southampton, 214
Civil and Military, 272
Clerical Conference Question, 150
Clerical Nosology, 226
Clerk of the Weather to Mr. Punch, 190
Common Complaint (The), 1
Comparative Justice, 63
Comparative Sable, 166
Compensations of Life (The), 228
Compliments of the Season, 287
Compromise with Nonconformity, 172
Conservative Education, 135
Considerations on Cookery Schools, 89
Convocation, 16
Costly Experiments, 110
Cost of Civility (The), 281
Cottonopolis, 158
"Credo Byron," 84
Criminal Court Costume, 227
Cry of the Common-Councilman (The), 170
Curious Contradiction, 248
Cursing and Swearing, 208
Cynic on Centenaries (A), 119
Cynic's Carol (The), 272
"DAGGER-Scene" of To-day (A), 28
Darwin Up and Down, 201
Departures, 73
Derelict! or Cardinal Points Corrected, 232
Dignity and Impudence, 89
Dies and Dollars, 26
Discoveries in London, 97
Distinction—with a Difference, 109
Dog-Days in December, 272
Dream of Fair Women (A), 148
Dream of Unfair Women (A), 252
EARL Russell's Curriculum, 78
Earnest Remonstrance (An), 114
Eastward Ho! 64
Educational Compromise, 244
Education and Crime, 197
Effects of the Wet Weather, 192
1876, 278
Element of Confusion (An), 43
Eminence and Innocence, 182
End of the Fair (The), 10
Episcopus Locutus Est, 231
Epitaph on the Innocents, 42
Essence of Parliament, 2, 13, 24, &c.
Eternal Jack-in-the-Box (The), 227
Evenhanded Flogging, 251
Experienced Envoy (An), 157
FAREWELL to the Cattle-Show, 254
Farthing's-worth of Feelings (A), 241
Fashionable Street-Sweepers, 241
Fashion-Blindness, 68
Fatal Contract (The), 118
Festive Season (The), 264
Fie! Fie! 129
Fine Group of Fungi, 87
First (The), 88
Fixtures for July, 12
Floods in Oxford (The), 189
Flourish, Felstead! 146
Flying Rumours, 247
Food and Finance, 6
For Once, 261
Fountains of What? 85
Foxhunting and Falls, 288
From St. Paul's Churchyard, 196
Funeral Anti-Reformer (A), 208
Fytte of Hackney Downs (A), 271
GEMS of the Navy, 76
General Shut-up, 161
Generosity and Grammar School, 128
Gentlemen Helps, 136
"Gentlemen—Lord Darnley," 180
Giant's Jubilee (A), 140
Glimpses of the Future, 179
Gone Grotto (The), 69
Good News for Distracted Husbands, 211
Good Plain Cook (A), 226
Good Resolutions for 1876, 291
Good Soul (A), 281
Good Works, 152
Gorged Vultures on the Towers of Silence, 215
Gracious Communications, 145
Grateful Acknowledgment (A), 68
Growl from Jack Frost (A), 144
Guide of the Cynical Tourist (The), 99
Guildhall in the Greenwood, 162
HAMLET on Covent Garden Market, 57
Happy New Year (A), 285
Hawarden Post-Bag (The), 224
"Hearts of Oak," 264
Helps of a Higher Kind, 98
Herzegovina and Spain, 169
High-Water Mark, 215
His Own Master, 96
Historical Achievement, 75
Homage to Talent, 225
Homeward Bound, 135
Hope and Heterodoxy, 159
Hot Codlins at the Cape, 208
House and the Home (The), 4, 31, 68, &c.
House of Call for Countrymen (The), 118
How the Recess will not be Spent, 76
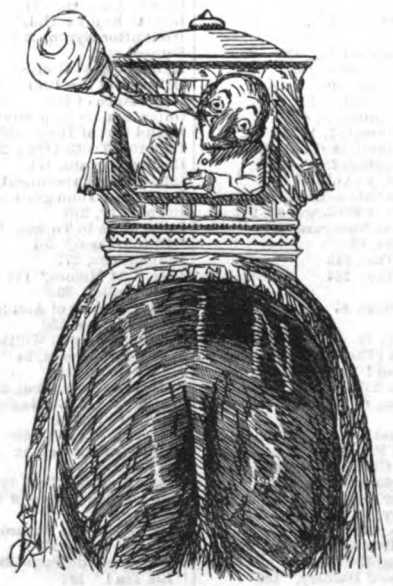
How they Fight in France, 61
How to Back Out, 214
How to Enjoy a Holiday, 73
Hunt after Byron, 225
Hunted, 236
Hymn against Humbug, 43
ILLUSIONS of the Rink (An), 226
Importance of Brains (The), 73
Imposition on Impostors, 196
In and Out of Town, 155
Infallible Truth (The), 204
Insolvent Islam, 171
Interesting Experiment, 215
Interesting Immigration, 15
In the City, 215
Intolerance in Turkey, 116
"In toto Cœlo," 264
Inundations, 277
Irish "At Homes," 184
Irish Poultry, 230
JACK'S Chapter of Accidents, 247
Jersey Judges, 230
John's Answer to William's Question, 15
John's Bad Dream, 54
John's Growl, 130
Judicature Acts (The), 238
Justice to a Head Master, 283
KENTISH Fire, 54
King in a Fix (A), 150
LADIES and Babies, 12
Lady Helps, 157
Latest Fashion (The), 137
Law and the Lady—of the Manor (The), 223
Law Reports (in Futuro), 183
Lawson's Last, 127
Les Pauvres de Paris, 243
"Lie Tea!" 192
Life and Death Insurance, 266
Lines on Leap Year, 292
Literature v. Science, 126
Little Birds to Lesbia (The), 218
Log of Iron (A), 171
London Arrivals, 266
Londoner's Diary (The), 77
London in September, 105
Longevity at Felstead, 147
Lord Mayor's Day as it might be, 204
Lord Mayor's Dessert (The), 63
Lord Warden on Music (The). 76
MACBETH at the Lyceum, 182
Making the Best of it, 174
Man to Man, 12
Married Life in the East, 253
Mary Anner on Modes and Manners, 274
Masterly Inactivity, 26
Mechi in another Mouth, 94
Message from the Sea (A), 291
Michaelmas Day, 1875, 139
Military Intelligence, 277
Mistakes about Scotland, 135
Modern Love-Song, 181
Monsters and Bogies, 128
More Civic Improvements, 137
Moses Modernised, 249
Most Pestilent of Heretics (The), 261
Mourning and Grief, 198
Mr. Punch's Railway Guide, 65
Musical, 220
Music and its Murderers, 238
My Baker's Mystery, 236
My Broker, 161
Mynheer Van Dunk, 155
NASTY Dose (A), 143
National Mistakes, 146
Naval and Military Intelligence, 144
Naval Intelligence, 223
Naval Nursery Rhymes, 284
New Deluge (The), 220
New Judge-Advocate (The), 217
New Naval Monster, 51
News from Bosnia, 77
New Sporting Nomenclature, 171
Next Naval Novel (The), 150
Nice Names for the Navy, 169
Nick or Nothing, 48
Nonage or Dotage, 48
Note by a Cockney Naturalist, 77
Notes for November, 201
Novel Exhibition (A), 41
Nuptial Reform, 128
ODD Freak of Fate, 76
Old Friend with a New Face (An), 27
Omission Supplied (An), 201
On the Spot, 100
Ostensible Occupations of Jesuits, 23
Ottoman Outlay, 147
Our Advertising Column, 170
"Our Bulwarks on the Brine," 159
Our Educational Progress, 129
Our Heroes, 193
Our Mayors, 213
Our Own Book List, 241
"Our Representative" in India, 160, 174, 231, &c.
Our Representative Man, 106
Our Watery Waste, 223

Digitized by Google



Out of Town, 87
Ovations and Omelets, 185
PAGE from the Visitors' Book (A), 118
Pail Sherry (A), 42
Parapluie v. Parasol, 4
Parson and Grazier, 62
Pen and the Poppy (The), 218
Peril well Past (A), 256
Personal Amenities, 260
Personal Intelligence, 158
Persons who ought not to Travel, 70
Philosopher at Eighty (A), 86
Physical Education, 94
Physic for Tipsy Maniacs, 3
Piety and Policy, 103
Pis Aller (A), 109
"Place Aux Dames!" 10
Plaint of a Pigmy (The), 26
Plaint to a Saint (A), 43
Plain Words with a Prophet, 149
Plea against the Bee (A), 145
Plea for Plimsoll (A), 44
Poem by a Parient, 27
(Police)-Court Theatres, 163
Political Pad (The), 229
Porte in a Storm, 189
Porte's Answer to its Bondholders, 212
Port of London (The), 95
Powerful Peacemakers, 204
Preliminary, 88
Pretty Kettle of Fish (A), 65
Pretty Kind of Curate (A), 11
"Priest of St. Leonard's-on-Sea," 172
Prince and the Pigs (The), 237
Prince's Last Words (The), 169
Prince's Visit to India (The), 206
Private and Confidential, 12
Proclamation (A), 202
Prodigious, 63
Professor of the Future (The), 189
Proud of his Cloth, 173
Proverbial Philosophy, 243
Punch at the Cattle-Show, 242
Punch at the Lord Mayor's Dinner, 194
Punch at Wimbledon, 20, '32
Punch on the Rink, 216, 235
Punch on the Bridge, 134
Punch's Advertisement Column, 262
Punch's Almanacks, 284
Punch's Gifts for the New Year, 292
Punch's Inventors' Column, 215
Punch's Naval Signal Code, 238
Punch's Propbecies for 1876, 273
Punch's Weather-eye-opener, 182
Punch to October, 156
Punch to the City, 75
Punch to the Clerk of the Weather, 171
Punch to the Lord Mayor, Greeting, 197
Pyrotechnics at the Pyramids, 206
QUESTIONABLE Announcement, 57
Question for Mr. Cross (A), 227
RAILWAY Jokes, 156
Raising the Vanguard, 139
Rash Challenge (A), 211
Rather Startling, 256
Rationalism and the Reverse, 108
Ravens on the "Railway Jubilee," 144
Reassuring Intelligence, 169
Really Charitable Associations, 253
Real Way to Raise the Vanguard (The), 248
Recent Meteorological Intelligence, 256
Reciprocity in Pulpit-Room, 225
Recollections of the Stock Exchange, 251
Regulations for Wimbledon, 9
Repentance, 53
Repudiation and Revolt, 181
Respect an Artist's Feelings, 253
"Retire your Men, Sir," 201
Rev. Francisco Farrysee to Mr. Punch (The), 196
Revival at Bonn, 85
Rhymes for the Month, 190
Rifles and Trifles, 27
"Right about, Face!" 212
Rival Optimists (The), 207
Romanesque Revival (The), 15
"Rotten Row on the Embankment," 15
Royal Bon Mot, 259
Rule of the Road Wanted, 182
Runaway Coach (The), 157
"SADDLE on the Right Horse" (The), 31
Safe Speculation (A), 151
Saint's Warning (A), 51
Sapphics to the Silent, 182
School Fees and Flogging, 218
Schools for Scarlet Fever, 168
Science for a Solomon, 262
Scientific Industry, 168
Scotticism and Wutticism, 106
Seasonable Appeals, 239
Seasonable Jottings, 282
Seasonable Salute (A), 270
Season Summed up (The), 61
Seat out of Session (A), 110
Second Visit to Scotland (A), 118
Sensible Ghosts (The), 243
Servants' College (The), 47
Shakspeare on the Turks, 226
Shorn of the Shoulder-Knot, 155
Signs of a Severe Winter, 240
Signs of Sweetness, 109
Silence is Brazen, 158
Sing a Song of Brighton, 119
Sobriety at Southampton, 83
Social Questions, 62
Social Slavery, 185
Society Abroad, 78
Something in It, 260
Something like a Grievance, 240
Something like a Life-boat, 38
Something like an Ear, 251
Something like an Expedition, 44
Some Wonderful Wants, 123
Song of City Roses (A), 9
Song on St. Swithun's Day, 27
Songs for the Navy, 237
Sors Horatiana, 202
Specimen of Law (A), 230
Speech to Medical Students (A), 147
Statesmen as Translators, 250
Steam v. Sunshine, 22
Stockbroker's Soliloquy (A), 21
Stocks for the City, 51
Story of the Serapis (The), 211
Strange Company, 191
Study and the Camp (The), 36
Suggestion for the Ninth (A), 102
Summer Manœuvres, 86
Superstitious Suggestion, 182
Sweeping Reform (A), 275
Sweets of the Sea-side, 123
TAR of the Future (The), 262
"Tell Mamma we are Happy," 205
Temperance Liner (A), 106
Tender and True, 264
Terence at Westminster, 283
Things Indifferent, 27
Titiens with the Trowel, 116
To a Couple of Thames Naiads, 85
To the Serapis, 167
Translation by our Eton Boy, 191
Treat for the Sultan (A), 6
Tribute to an Agitator, 64
Trips for Trippers, 83, 93, 103
Truly Marvellous Occurrence, 57
Try it, 265
Turkey Absorption Co. (Limited), 208
Two Voices (The), 76
UNCOMMON Affection, 237
Up or Down? 108
Useful Knowledge in Yorkshire, 164
Using Good Names, 88
VACCINATION and Wisdom, 181
Vegetable Wine-bibber (The), 176
Venturing to Presume, 184
Very Important, 133
Very Palpable Hits, 78
Very Well Devilled, 205
Vicar on Vanities (A), 173
Vindication of Wales, 147
Vivisection Commission Questions, 22
WAITER'S Warning (A), 125
Wanted, 161
Wanted, a Locum Tenens, 73
Ward Hunt to his Friend Punch, 147
War-ship of the (Remote) Future, 212
Weak Moments, 179
Webb across the Water, 93
Wedding of Law and Equity (The), 198
Week after Marriage (A), 205
Wet Birthday (A), 57
What it may come to, &c., 1
"What's in a Name?" 21
What the Cardinal did at Oxford, 236
What they (and we) say about it, 244
"Where shall we go?" 105
Wild Beasts Cheap, 58
William the Woodman, 120
Wise Men on Vaccination, 37
"With a Difference," 169
Wonderful Show (A), 164
Wonders at a Watering-place, 114
Words to the Wise, 113
Wrongs of Women (The), 47
YOU must not Speak to the Man at the Wheel, 240
ZANGA, or the Fugitive Slave, 287

LARGE ENGRAVINGS.

APPROACHING Dissolution, 39
Black Sheep in the City, 187
"Blaze of Triumph" (A), 7
"Bon Voyage!" 153
Channel Question Solved (The), 91
Christmas à la Mode, 267
Church Preservation, 17
Disinterested Advisers, 209
"Doing Penance," 49
"Flag of Freedom" (The), 131
Golden Wedding (The), 141
Loss and Gain, 111
"Mosé in Egitto!" 245
Neptune's Warning, 177
New Year's Look-out (The), 279
Our Krieg's-spiel, 257
"Permissive" Government, 71
"Permissive" Recreation, 101
Pickpockets in the City, 59
Position Optional, 29
"Save me from my Friends," 81
Settled at Last! 199
"Throw him over!" 233
Turkish Bath (A), 165
Useful Manufacture (A), 289
Voice from the Clouds (A), 220
Who's to Blame? 121

SMALL ENGRAVINGS.

ACADEMICIAN'S Advice on a Bad Picture (An), 249
Adam in the Water, 70
Ancient Sportsman's Defective Eyesight (An), 227
Arms for the Proposed New West-End Stock Exchange, 247
Bailie and the Sabbath-breaker, 44
Big Dog that has eaten the Turkey, 232
Birds need not be Frightened (The), 149
"Birds should not Fall Out," 166
Bookbinding in Glasgy, 65
Bottom or Foot of the Loch (The), 192
Brown and the Burglar, 36
Brown taking Jones's Arm, 140
Cain and Abel's Grandmother, 48
Cat and Friendly Policeman, 286
Cavalry Subaltern's Splendid Chest, 160
Children's Ball in France (A), 117
Clergyman and the Bookmaker (The), 193
Coddleton's Fog-Signal, 282
Cook and the Dustman's Offer (The), 105
Cook and the Times Newspaper (The), 116
Cook Ringing for her Mistress, 147
Cook who Practises Skating (A), 283

Cremation and Fifth of November, 135
Dagmar Palace Dog-Show (The), 278
Donald Gaffing a Salmon, 42
Donkey-Boys at Suez, 168
Drawing-room Lecture (A), 256
Drunken Reprobate's Aquarium (A), 22
End of the Summer Manœuvres (The), Engine-Driver and Mushrooms (An), 23
Ethel's Dream of the Sea, 110
Evening's Fishing at Sligo (An), 67
"Fleying" the Vicar, 180
Footman on Board Wages (A), 85
French Billingsgate Scene (A), 148
Frenchman equipped for Shooting (A), 97
French Shopkeeper and English Lady, 137
French Sportsman and his Dogs (A), 248
Gallant Scavenger and Polite Apple-woman, 94
German Nurse and the Baby, 292
German Tenor's Irish Song (A), 213
Girls who "walk with the Guns," 217
"Gladstone's Claret," 204
Groom on Bronchial Affection (A), 229
Hailing a Cab through Railings, 15
Hair Falling Off in Autumn, 205
Happy Result of a Boiler Bursting, 271
Hard of Hearing, 75
Hard Work for French Bathing-Men, 84
Hat makes the Gentleman (The), 43
Haymaking in Gloucestershire, 1875, 64
Highland Boatmen's English, 119
Horse Artillery's Dinner-Hour (The), 63
Horse-Cloth Protection in a Shower, 10
Housemaid or a Lady Help (A), 218
How to Afford to go Hunting, 171
How to Dispense with "Thanks," 86
How to Report Speeches, 53
How to Seek Sea-side Lodgings, 28
How to Swim in Fifteen Seconds, 80
Hunting Man "ales" from Burton, 236
Hunting with Swimming Collars, 195
Irish Sergeant at Distance Drill, 202
Jim Bates and his Father, 56
Jolly Anglers under Difficulties, 251
Jones at a French Market, 100
Lady and Greengrocer on the Ice, 263
Looking Blue, 159
Looking for his Saddle, 54
Lucy with Papa's Skates, 288
Major's Rheumatic Enemy (The), 62
Mamma's Lesson in Bible History, 198
Mechanical Costume for the Rink, 156
Medical Students and Vivisection, 125
Miss Betsy Jane's Canaries, 261
Mrs. Black on Artificial Jewellery, 126
Mr. Tomkyns's Bicycle Practice, 58
New Costume for Wet Weather, 38
Not Missed, but not Exactly Hit, 129
Old Lady and Parliamentary Train, 183
Only one Apartment to Let at Dieppe, 16
On the "Périssoire," 90
Paddy and the Photographer, 214
Page Objecting to Carry Coals (A), 14
Parlour-Maid on Manners (A), 3
Pastrycook's Customers (A), 253
Pat being "turned out," 115
Perkins Shoots a Highland Cow, 172
Pig-shaped Ship (A), 230
Pillion-Bicycle (The), 74
Polo on the Sea, 130
Private Sweeney in Colony Bog, 57
Plucking Pheasants' Flight Feathers, 136
Railway Porter's Hours (A), 88
Reason why Mrs. Mirabel does not Dance (The), 244
Result of Mary's Advertisement, 108
Result of Shooting at a Hare, 106
Rowing Bow or Stroke, 6
Royal Bird crossing the Desert (The), 161
Sailor's Luggage (A), 146
Sergeant Highlander's Idea of Rain, 45
Servant to look at (A), 152
Shooting at their Fathers, 157
Sir Hercules Fitzanak on Stature, 25
Sliding the Old Lady down-hill, 243
Small Mite and her Sugar-Plums (A), 176
Smoker's notion of Hard Work (A), 237
Spiffkins's Trousers' Knees, 191
"Sponging on Papa," 120
Stout Lady and Bathing-Man, 114
Study of Short-sighted Men (A), 181
Sturgeon or Spurgeon? 145
Suggested Picture for Darwin's Book, 242
Sunday-Dressed Frenchmen, 169
Superlative French Politeness, 104
Sweeper's opinion of Snowy Weather, 239
Swell and Cabmen, during Snow (A), 260
Taking Things without Asking, 225
Tommy ordered to stand in the Corner, 11
Tram-Car—Beware of Pickpockets, 220
Train Stopped on a Moor (A), 275
Treeing the Master's Boots, 96
Two Ragged Victims, 127
Use of a Garden and a Gardener (The), 224
Waiter and the Menu (The), 241
Walking-Stick Collection (A), 203
What Jane wants for her Wedding, 164
Winking or Skating, 186
Would-be Recipient of Old Port (A), 272
Young Physician's Stratagem (A), 208

Digitized by Google

VOL LXX

LONDON:

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 85, FLEET STREET.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

THICK darkness brooded over the blue waters of the Bosphorus and Golden Horn, and spread its black pall above the gardens of the Serai and the dusty waste of the Bezestan, the domes of Aya-Sofiah, and the crumbling arch of the Bab-i-Humayún. From the Port of Kara-Keui to the Tepeh-Bashi, the hill-top above the English Embassy, the busy buzz of life was hushed through the crowded hives of Galata, and the eddies of traffic crossed and chafed no more in the steep and stony high street of Pera.

In a word, Stamboul slept.

But in one inner room of one Konak there were eyes yet open and brains still wide awake This was in the Inner Chamber of the Palace of MIDHAT PASHA, where sat A COUNCIL OF THREE. On the right, in the red fez and blue surtout of Stamboul officialism, sat MIDHAT; on the left, in the ample green turban of the Hadji and the flowing robe of Osmanli orthodoxy, was the SHEIKH-UL-ISLAM; and in the centre, Turk for the nonce as to the outer man, Tartar to those who might try to catch him, and True Briton, as ever, in heart, the "Pasha-in-Pasha" of endless tales—PUNCH!

Yes, I was there—in that pregnant moment big with the future of at least one Turkey, and, probably, several Eagles—as the Representative of Great Britain, by a warranty over-riding Foreign Office credentials, and with higher than mere diplomatic functions; the confidant and sécretaire intime of BRITANNIA, the mouthpiece of JOHN BULL.

I had found MIDHAT buried in what, in my playful manner I had ventured to call his "Mid-hat-ations among the tombs,"—for, indeed, the blood of the wretched ABDUL AZIZ was scarce dry on the marble floor of the Cheragan Palace, and the imperfectly cleansed stains of CAPTAIN HASSAN'S wholesale slaughter were still visible on the pavement and walls of the Council Chamber in which we sat.

Yes. "Turks" were down with a vengeance: Never did "Bull" under a heavy "contango" work more desperately for a rise in the market, than did poor MIDHAT, now Master of the Situation—such a situation!—and the SHEIKH-UL-ISLAM work to get a diplomatic rise out of PUNCH!

"La illah Allah illaha, wa Mahmoud rasoul ullah!" I heard the SHEIKH muttering, as he ran the beads of his couplet helplessly through his fingers.

"He means," interposed MIDHAT, with a rather sickly smile, "'there is no power but England, and PUNCH is its prophet;' and you are here for our profit, too," he added, stooping, in his mortal anxiety, to what your dignified Turk rarely condescends to—a pun. "Say it is so. The English are our friends. Yes—you are going to back us up once more against those Kaffirs—those dogs, the Russki—as in the old Crimean days? Bono Johnny!"

"Distinguons," I said—it is so hard not to talk French in one's diplomatic moments. "There are 'friends' and 'friends.' Your best 'friends,' just now, my dear MIDHAT, and my Venerable SHEIKH, are those, believe me, who will tell you disagreeable truths— "

"All truths are disagreeable," interposed MIDHAT, with a sigh.

Digitized by Google

"What can a Christian dog know of truth, agreeable or disagreeable?" growled the SHEIKH-UL-ISLAM. "There is no truth outside of the Koràn."

"There it is!" I said, in English, to MIDHAT. "How do you propose to give equal rights to the SULTAN'S subjects, Christian and Mahometan, under your new Constitution, while you have this orthodox old Gentleman in the green turban to settle accounts with?" MIDHAT groaned. "We had better come to a clear understanding at once," I continued. "England is quite disposed to stand between the SULTAN and foul play. We don't mean to allow Russia to take possession of your iron-clads, or to occupy Turkish waters. That 's why BRITANNIA is just now counting her chickens, and their shells, in Besika Bay."

"And the Russkis know it," chuckled MIDHAT. "That 's why IGNATIEFF is so civil all of a sudden."

"But we are just as unwilling to stand between Moslem misgovernment and its retribution. We won't help Russki or Prusski, Austrian or Magyar, Teuton or Slav, to bleed you to death under pretence of breathing a vein, or to hamstring you on the pretext of giving you a lift out of the ditch; but we don't mean to aid you in putting down insurrection which is the natural fruit of oppression. If you can't turn your Slaves into subjects the less you look to us to help you keep them Slaves the better. If you can trust Osmanli and Christian alike with arms for military service: if you can restrain both alike from carrying arms in time of peace: if your Cadis can be made to enforce the same law fairly against both Christian and Moslem; if you can find officials fairly to levy fair taxes on all creeds alike; and Valis to treat Rayahs with respect, and their women with decency; whether the miracle be wrought by dint of your New Constitution, or by a new reading of my friend the SHEIKH-UL-ISLAM'S old Koràn, then PUNCH will undertake that JOHN BULL will stand your friend, and that it shall be Bono Johnny again, as in the old Crimean days. But, if not—if the old abominations are to be perpetuated, with no change but a MOURAD for an ABDUL AZIZ—don't trust to England to stand your friend. All I can promise in that case is that, if it comes to a fight between you and those you are not strong enough to govern well, but who have grown too strong to be any longer ill-governed as of old, England will see you have a clear field, and no favour. More than that she won't and can't do——"

As I spoke, MIDHAT'S face had been growing longer and longer. As for the SHEIKH-UL-ISLAM, I fancy, though he still kept mechanically fingering his beads, that he must have fallen asleep; at all events, he gave no sign of understanding. Just then I heard a rustling behind the curtains which veiled a doorway. I recognised the thrilling frou-frou of feminine garments.

"Ah, ha!" I exclaimed, with a wink at the Minister.

"My harem!" blushed MIDHAT. "She will do it. The other day I imported a cargo of Western notions for Office use. A report of the Woman's Rights Association must have been slipped in among them. Ever since she has led me such a life! The Eastern Question was bad enough, without this worst of Western Questions turning up in my anderoon"

As he spoke, a mysteriously muffled figure, in feridji and yashmak, stepped majestically from behind the portière. Her right hand was raised as in menace; with her left, she laid a rose-tipped finger where the gleam of red lips and white teeth shone temptingly through the semi-transparent muslin.

The Eastern Question, provocative, veiled, mysterious, seemed suddenly to have taken bodily form, and to stand revealed before me.

"Hem!—as I said—the Eastern Question."—faltered MIDHAT, with an uneasy glance at the muffled apparition, and in a voice in which marital authority seemed ineffectually struggling to keep up appearances. "May I request you will——"

"Pop it?" I exclaimed, gallantly raising to my lips the warm, white fingers of the shrouded odalisque. "By all means—if you, my poppet, will only be good enough to answer:—but on one condition—that, before I pop that question, you read, mark, and digest this—to help you to answer it." So saying, and dexterously contriving to catch hold of the veiled Beauty's hand under her feridji, I slipped into it—my SEVENTIETH VOLUME!

Digitized by Google

Introduction.

VOLUME LXX.——JANUARY TO JUNE, 1876.

THE DISRAELI CABINET.—1876.

First Lord of the Treasury	Right Hon. B. Disraeli (now Earl of Beaconsfield, K.G.).
Lord Chancellor	Lord (now Earl) Cairns.
Chancellor of the Exchequer	Sir Stafford H. Northcote, Bart.
Lord President of the Council	Duke of Richmond and Gordon, K.G.
Lord Privy Seal	Earl of Malmesbury, G.C.B.
Home Office	Right Hon. R. A. Cross.
Foreign Office	Earl of Derby.
Colonial Office	Earl of Carnarvon.
War Secretary	Right Hon. Gathorne Hardy.
Indian Secretary	Marquis of Salisbury (now K.G.)
Admiralty	Right Hon. G. Ward Hunt.
Postmaster-General	Lord John Manners.

POLITICAL SUMMARY.

PAGE PAGE

PARLIAMENT was opened by Her Majesty in person on the 8th of February. The Royal Speech (read by the Lord Chancellor) was largely taken up with Foreign Affairs. The home legislation promised included a Tribunal of Appeal for the United Kingdom, Amendment of the Merchant Shipping Laws, University Reform, Primary Education, Enclosure of Commons, and a Prisons' Bill. Besides the discussions which these various measures provoked, debates arose on the purchase by the Government of the Shares belonging to the Khedive of Egypt in the Suez Canal, and the mission of Mr. Cave to investigate the condition of the Egyptian Finances; on the Fugitive Slave Circular; on the Eastern Question and Turkish Atrocities; and on the Royal Titles Bill. The object of this last-named measure (to which the Speech from the Throne had made reference) was to enable Her Majesty to add to her other styles and titles that of "Empress of India." It gave rise to much discussion and many objections in both Houses of Parliament, and the utmost that could be said for the feeling of the country about the Bill was that it was indifferent to the proposed addition. However, Mr. Disraeli carried his point, and on the First of May Her Majesty was proclaimed "Empress of India."

The Budget was simple—a deficit, but not a considerable one, an addition of a Penny to the Income Tax, and extended exemptions from the operation of the Tax for small incomes.

Of the legislation proposed in the Royal Speech (in addition to the Royal Titles Bill) the Appellate Jurisdiction Bill, Elementary Education Bill, Merchant Shipping Amendment Bill, and the Bill for the Enclosure of Commons, were the principal Measures which became law in the Session of 1876.

The absorbing interest of the Eastern Question threw all other foreign topics into the background; but before we pass to that engrossing subject, we must not fail to notice the termination of the obstinate Civil (Carlist) War in Spain. At the end of February the Pretender, Don Carlos, defeated by King Alphonso's forces, finally abandoned the struggle and crossed the frontier into France. He afterwards arrived in London. The general elections in France (at which the moderate Republican party were successful) must also be noticed, and a change of Ministry. M. Buffet, having failed to secure election to the Senate, resigned office as Prime Minister, and was succeeded by M. Dufaure.

The following account of the course of the Eastern Question is condensed from the Summary of the year in the Times.

The insurrection in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see "Introduction" to the preceding volume) still smouldered, with the covert assistance of Montenegro and Servia. Russia, Austria, and Germany assumed to themselves the duty of imposing on Turkey a scheme of administrative reform which might satisfy the demands of the insurgents and perhaps prevent further disturbance (see Cartoon, p. 25). A Note—the famous "Andrassy Note"—was drawn up by the Austro-Hungarian Chancellor, approved by the three Emperors, and submitted to England, France, and Italy. Lord Derby (then Foreign Secretary) at first hesitated, but finding that the Sultan's Ministers were willing to accept the project, our Government assented to the Note, which was formally accepted by the Porte. It may be said to have been nugatory. It had no effect on the condition of the disturbed provinces, the insurgents being probably justified in disregarding merely verbal promises of reform; and Servia and Montenegro being exempt from the abuses of Turkish administration, were not interested in the enforcement or disregard of the project of improvement contained in the Note. The Turkish Government made no serious attempt to crush the insurrection by force, and the state of affairs at Constantinople was one of hopeless weakness and confusion.

Digitized by Google

Early in May a formidable riot took place at Salonica, in Roumelia, in European Turkey. The French and German Consuls were murdered by the mob in the belief that they had assisted in the rescue of a girl who had been converted to Mahomedanism. These Salonica murders led to further diplomatic intervention. The EMPEROR OF RUSSIA hurried to Berlin, and obtained the concurrence of the German and Austrian Governments in a document subsequently known as the "Berlin Memorandum." This Memorandum was more peremptory than the "Andrassy Note," and announced that the three Imperial Governments at the termination of an armistice which they demanded, would be prepared to adopt more stringent measures if a pacification were not already effected. Our Government declined to concur in the "Berlin Memorandum," and, in the end, it was tacitly abandoned.

Towards the end of May, an organised multitude of Softas (law students) extorted from the SULTAN the dismissal of the GRAND VIZIER, who had long acted in concert with the Russian Ambassador. His successor, MEHEMET RUSHDI PASHA, and the new Seraskier (War Minister) HUSSEIN PASHA, were leaders of the old Turkish or warlike party, while their most powerful colleague, MIDHAT PASHA, was known to be engaged in projects of internal reform. The ultimate object of the conspiracy which had raised these Ministers to power was immediately afterwards disclosed: on the 30th of May, HUSSEIN PASHA entered the Palace with a military force, and presented to the astonished SULTAN (ABDUL-AZIZ) a judgment of the SHEIK-UL-ISLAM (first interpreter of Koran law), which announced that he was lawfully deposed in favour of his nephew, who was at once placed on the throne under the title of MURAD V. The unfortunate deposed SULTAN destroyed himself a few days after his fall. The new SULTAN had only been a fortnight on the throne when a most tragic event happened—the murder, as they were seated in Council, by a Circassian officer, of the Seraskier, HUSSEIN PASHA, and RASCHID PASHA, the Foreign Minister. The Minister of Marine was wounded by the same assassin.

Immediately before the fall of ABDUL-AZIZ, events had occurred in the Bulgarian territories of the SULTAN, which profoundly modified the fortunes of Turkey through the effect which they produced on the opinions, and in some degree, on the policy of England. In the spring, foreign agents had succeeded in inducing the inhabitants of a few Christian villages to rise in insurrection, and although the movement never became formidable, a certain number of Mussulmans were put to death. The Government of Constantinople, then on the brink of revolution, was unable or unwilling to detach any considerable body of regular troops into Bulgaria, and the local authorities called the Mahomedan population to arms, and proceeded, with the aid of irregular troops, including "Circassian" soldiers, to attack, not only the feeble and isolated bodies of insurgents, but the unoffending Christian population. The ferocity of the Mahomedan levies was perhaps at first stimulated by panic, but when all danger of resistance had disappeared, their worst passions were gratified by the perpetration of crimes of which indiscriminate murder was scarcely the worst. Of the effect produced in England by the intelligence of these atrocities, at first made known by newspaper correspondents, we shall speak in the Introduction to the succeeding Volume.

In the United States, the hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence—the foundation of the great Republic—was celebrated by a Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, which was opened by the President on the 10th of May. England was an important and cordial contributor.

NOTES.

5 Tinkering! (Cartoon).—For the Fugitive Slave Circular excitement, see "Introduction" to the last Volume. A second Circular was issued, when it was found that the first excited the disapproval of the country, but this also was condemned. The Ministers represented in the Cartoon are LORD DERBY, Foreign Secretary, as "First Tinker," and (the late) MR. G. WARD HUNT, First Lord of the Admiralty, between whom the responsibility of the Circulars was considered to lie.

10 Very Sorry for It.—BARING is the family name of LORD NORTHBROOK.

10 Motto, &c.—The VOKES family, both ladies and gentlemen, are celebrated pantomime performers.

13, 29 The Monitor of the Opposition. / Topics for my Trilogy. SIR W. VERNON HARCOURT, M.P. for Oxford, a leading member of the Opposition, had been delivering three speeches to his constituents at Oxford. In the first, aware of the number of addresses expected from him, he referred to the "cruel kindness" of his friends in proposing to him a "trilogy" of discourses; and he quoted a description which had been given of the policy of the Government as "suet-pudding legislation." His second Address was mainly taken up with local topics, such as the sewerage of Oxford.

18, 19, 20 A Spelling Bee (Cut). / Cells for our Spelling Bee. / Dream of a Spelling Bee. "Spelling Bees" had recently been introduced into England from America, and were frequent this winter both in London and the country. A party assembled to spell difficult words (often in public and in competition for prizes), which were given out to each person in succession, a referee with a Dictionary being at hand, to settle disputed points.

Digitized by Google

PAGE

18 A "Hackney'd" Subject.—The allusion is to Mr. Holms, M.P. for Hackney, an energetic Army Reformer.

25 Turkey Pie (Cartoon).—For the Austrian or "Andrassy Note," springing out of the Alliance of the three Emperors here depicted, see "Introduction."

27 A Warning from Neptune.—Refers to the project of a tunnel under the Channel, to connect England and France.

28 The Latest Creed. } See "Notes" to the last Volume,
34 Only Natural. } pp. 43, 48. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on an appeal from the decree of the Dean of the Arches, reversed his decision and admonished the Vicar (Mr. Cook) not to refuse the Sacrament to Mr. Jenkins.

33 Shakspearian Motto.—Richard Banner Oakley was tried and found guilty of having obtained from the public, as manager and proprietor of the Co-operative Credit Bank, large sums of money by false and fraudulent pretences. In his prospectuses he had represented that the Bank would pay a dividend of 18 per cent. to shareholders.

36 Practising for the Westminster Rink (Cartoon).—Parliament was about to assemble. The principal persons introduced, beginning from the left, are Gladstone, Lord Hartington, Lord Derby, Butt ("Home Rule"), Forster, Disraeli, Northcote and Lowe, Ward Hunt, Holms, M.P. for Hackney (the Army Reformer), and Gathorne Hardy, the Secretary for War. Skating Rinks were at this time fashionable resorts.

42 Young Chelsea.—Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart., is M.P. for Chelsea.

53 Post et Propter.—There had been a rumour that Her Majesty's Theatre was to be bought for a Post Office.

59 The "Extinguisher" Trick (Cartoon).—See "Note" to p. 5, and "Essence of Parliament," p. 55 (Tuesday)—"If England hates anything from her heart." Mr. Disraeli referred the subject (Fugitive Slaves) to a Royal Commission.

64 The Bird Question.—Ladies wearing humming-birds in their hats.

69 The Lion's Share (Cartoon).—For the Suez Canal Shares Transaction, see "Introduction" to the last volume, and "Essence of Parliament," p. 65 (Monday)—"Leo has spoken." The acquisition of the Khedive's shares by England was accepted by the country as tending to secure to us Egypt—"the Key to India."

73 St. Valentine's Day at Girton (Cut).—Girton College for Women, near Cambridge.

73 E. Payson Weston's Perpetual Motion. }
93 Fairly Walked off his Feet. } E. Payson Weston was an American pedestrian, who performed great walking feats in this country. On one occasion, at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, he accomplished 180 miles in 48 hours.

79 Men and Brothers (Cartoon).—For the Slave Circulars, which were addressed to naval officers, see "Notes" to p. 5 and p. 59.

91 Civil Service Stores (Cartoon).—Mr. Disraeli's Government laid themselves open to the charge of too frequently evading responsibility by referring embarrassing questions to a Royal Commission or a Select Committee.

PAGE

Admiralty Maxim. } See "Introduction" to the last 93
Fog Signals. } Volume, second paragraph. 95
Lieut. Evans was the officer of the watch of the Iron Duke.

Sir Charles Dilke and the Corporations.—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 85 (Tuesday)—"The brisk Baronet of Chelsea." 96

Her Best Title (Cartoon).—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 98 (Thursday)—"For her best title." 101

Baring and Over-bearing.—Mr. Flowers' energetic action against the use of bearing-reins is well known. Differences of opinion between Lord Salisbury, as Secretary for India, and Lord Northbrook, were believed to have influenced the latter in his resignation of the Viceroyalty. 106

New Titles.—Sir Hardinge Giffard, the Solicitor-General, had at this time no seat in Parliament. The Attorney-General, Sir John Holker, sat for Preston. (There is also a reference to Holkar, one of the great Indian Princes received by the Prince of Wales on his tour.) 110

The New Song.—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 185 (Tuesday)—"Peter Taylor." 111

The New Tenant (Cartoon).—The new and moderate Republic, supported by such opposite politicians as Thiers and Gambetta, presented to France for her permanent acceptance. 113

Questions for any number of Bees.—Ljubibratics was an insurgent chieftain in the Bosnian and Herzegovinian insurrection against the Turks, who won a great reputation as a general. 120

Fast Flowers.—Madcap Violet is the title of one of William Black's admirable novels. 127

A Tight Fit (Cartoon).—Sir Stafford Northcote, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, did not quite succeed in making both ends meet—see "Introduction" for Budget. 135

Sentiment to Accompany the Toast, &c. } Refer to the absence 137
Patriotic, if You Like. } of the Queen (who was in Germany), 161
and of her sons from England.

New Crowns for Old Ones! (Cartoon).—Mr. Disraeli's measure for adding to the Royal Titles that of Empress of India, though pressed forward by the Government and carried by considerable majorities, was not particularly popular with the country (see also "Introduction"). 147

Inscription for the Khedive's Door-mat. } Mr. Cave, M.P. 149
Geology and the Stock Exchange. } for Shoreham, visited Egypt 161 on a financial mission, which was not a complete success.

"The Jolly Anglers" (Cartoon).—Mr. Disraeli and Sir Stafford Northcote (Chancellor of the Exchequer). By the new Budget, exemption from income-tax was extended to incomes of £150 a year. This indulgence was certain to make the Ministry popular with a large class of the community. 157

Digitized by Google

PAGE

167 The Ministerial Mess (Cartoon).—DISRAELI presides, LORD DERBY and MR. WARD HUNT are on his right, LORD SALISBURY, MR. GATHORNE HARDY, and SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE on his left. The course of their parliamentary life before Easter had not altogether run smooth. The labels to the plates before them indicate their individual difficulties.

172 An Earnest Hint to Signor Rossi.
175 Punch on a Foreign Actor. An Italian tragedian who was in London, performing in English Tragedy, not apparently in Mr. Punch's opinion, with entire success.

177 "Agrikler" on the Bristol Cathedral Images.—This has reference to a controversy between the Dean and a majority of the Chapter of Bristol and the Cathedral Restoration Committee, arising out of some sculptured statues which the latter had erected in the Cathedral porch, and the former would not allow to remain.

179 Over-Weighted (Cartoon).—See "Punch at Portsmouth," p. 181.

183 A Chance for "Ouida."—The nom de plume of a popular lady novelist, of the sensational school.

184 Painters, &c.—MR. G. A. STOREY had been elected an Associate of the Royal Academy.

188 Atalanta in England.
190 Topics last Week. Refer to Atalanta's Race, a very striking picture by MR. E. J. POYNTER, R.A., in this year's Royal Academy Exhibition.

191 The "Star of India" (Cartoon).—Illustrates the safe return of the PRINCE OF WALES to England from his tour in India. The "Star of India" is an Indian order of Knighthood of recent institution.

201 (Miss) Thompson's Season.—MISS THOMPSON, the painter of The Roll Call, was this year showing her battle picture, The Balaklava Charge, not at the Royal Academy, but as a separate exhibition.

PAGE

203 Great Easterns. "Down"! (Cartoon).—Illustrates the unwillingness of the Money Market to entertain any more proposals for Turkish or Egyptian Loans.

210 The Quietest of Rubbers.—Refers to MASKELYNE AND COOKE'S new whist-playing mechanical figure, "Psycho," at the Egyptian Hall.

213 The (Home-) "Ruler of the Spirits" (Cartoon).—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 198 (Friday)—"MR. R. SMYTH."

215 East India "Company."—A grand banquet and ball were given by the Corporation of London at the Guildhall to celebrate the return home from India of the PRINCE OF WALES.

232 The Appeal of the Pious Founder.—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 220 (Tuesday)—"MR. JAMES (of Gateshead)." The Lord Mayor was at this time ALDERMAN COTTON.

232 Street Song, &c.—The deposed Sultan, ABDUL-AZIZ, was succeeded by his nephew, MURAD.

240 A Contradiction in Terms.—For the deposition of the SULTAN of Turkey, see "Introduction."

247 The Dogs of War (Cartoon).—See "Essence of Parliament," p. 243 (Friday)—"All the Powers agreed with us."

252 Natural Ejaculation of Kisber's Foes.—Kisber (formerly Mineral Colt), a Hungarian-bred horse, won the Derby this year.

264 Proposed Change of Name.—For MIDHAT PASHA, see "Introduction."

267 "Justice to the Rescue!" (Cartoon).—A question had arisen between England and the United States as to the correct interpretation of the Extradition Treaty (for the surrender of criminals) subsisting between the two countries.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ALMANACK FOR 1876.

THE CYNIC'S CALENDAR.

(Melancholy Mems. on the Miseries of the Month.)

JANUARY.

JANUARY brings its Bills,
So the year begins with ills.
If one's credit be precarious,
Hilary finds us not hilarious.
Frequent winds from S. and W.
Blow no good, but tease and trouble you.
Frosts to nip and wet to weary,
Nights all dark, and days all dreary,
Most things that may plague and pain us
Meet us with the Month of Janus.

FEBRUARY.

FEBRUARY, short not sweet!
Noses nipped and chilly feet
Still in fashion. Salmon fishing
Now commences. Boobies wishing
That absurdest sport may try it;
When I fancy fish, I buy it.
Fools on things called "Pancakes" dine,
Others court St. Valentine.
Which is worst,—an open question,—
Mooncalf love or indigestion?
Leap Year! So more muffs will marry
In this present February.

MARCH.

MARCH brings with it loads of cares,
Makes one mad as its own hares.
Dust a bore, the weather boreal,
Polar winds or equatorial,
All alike in bringing bother
In its forms of slush or smother.
Lady Day! poor tenant's sorrow,
Lent, bad times for those who borrow.
Vernal equinox,—day and night
Equally without delight.
St. Patrick's Day,—its senseless wars,
For this blustering Month of Mars!

SPECIAL NOTE FOR 1876. — Leap year. Quadrennial celebration of birthdays all over the world. Great excitement in the hunting-field. Extraordinary feats at Athletic Sports. Grand International Leap-frog Competition at the Alexandra Palace. Paper read before the Statistical Society, giving the average number of persons who look before they leap, and quoting instances of people who have taken a leap in the dark during the last four years.

JANUARY 1.—Good-resolution-making begins.

SIGHS TO THE SIGNS.

(By a British Hydrophobist.)

ERE watery sameness wearies, dear AQUARIUS, et New Year's weather, then, we pray, be various!

emember mortals are not piscine, PISCES,
ven in such a pluvial isle as this is!

Wind, and not wet, we look for under ARIES,
ydraulic RAM we hate—love RAM when fair he is!

Some few vernal showers should come with TAURUS,
Tis well; but why with floods come Bull's-run o'er us?

Whelm not May's flowers with tears, O gentle GEMINI!
r Flores sunquam respondebunt semina!

egard the Roses, be not crabby, CANCER,
hine when we ask—with showers do not answer!

Sprinkle no raindrops from your mane, great LEO,
But from St. Swithin's spell the forty free, O!

Swift Summer takes her flight with thee, and, ergo,
Be not all Niobe, O gentle VIRGO!

Spoil not our sports with daily deluge, LIBRA,
Not e'en hard cash can buy blue sky or bribe ray!

October Ale! good tipple, SCORPIO,
Blest bard, if to it his song's weft and warp he owe!

November fogs attend thee, SAGITTARIUS,
Bid not hydraulics make us less hilarious!

A dry December grant, dear CAPRICORNUS,
So plead we round the Zodiac. Signs, don't scorn us!

DISTRESSING SPECTACLE.—A short-sighted person looking into futurity.

MAD MATHEMATICS.

THE inventor of the following proof fancies it not unworthy of the Mathematical Department of Colwell Hatchney. To prove that 10 is an even number—

9 is IX
6 is SIX
∴ by subtraction 3 is - S
But 7 is SEVEN
∴ by addition 10 is EVEN Q.E.D.

FEBRUARY 2.—Candlemas. Gas discovered.
FEBRUARY 14.—Bishop Valentine took his seat in the House of Lords. Cupid born. General Post Office enlarged.

DEFINE the difference between a Musical-Box and a Band-Box.

Digitized by Google

PISCATORIAL.

Miss Blanche (to the Old Coachman). "O JOHN, WILL YOU PUT THIS WORM ON THE HOOK FOR ME? I CAN'T BEAR TO DO IT!"
Old John (dubiously). "WELL—I'M SURE SOME O' THE YOUNG GENTLEMEN WOULDN'T MIND, MISS,—BUT I'VE RATHER A DALICOT STOMACH MYSELF, MISS, AND I 'EAVE AT ANYTHING!!"

RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS OF GREAT MEN.

IT is not generally known that the Poet Laureate is liable to painful attacks of doubt and hesitation. Not long ago he went into the shop of MESSRS. PIESSE AND LUBIN, and, after chatting with the two eminent Perfumers for some time, looked sadly at them, shook his head, and saying,

"I know not which is sweeter! No! not I!"

sighed, and left the shop.

MR. BASS, as he one day escorted MRS. HEMANS over his brewery at Burton, expressed in warm terms his admiration of her poetry, and told her how much he coveted her power of giving pleasure to thousands. The Poetess laughed at his enthusiasm. "Your success is greater than mine," she said, "for

"Earth's noblest sons thy bitter cup have shared."

POPE was very much attached to LORD ELCHO, and was accustomed, in familiar conversation, to call him "Honest Instinct." Being asked by LORD RANELAGH to explain this singular appellation, POPE replied, "You would not ask such a question had you read my Essay on Man, but would remember

"How Honest Instinct comes, a Volunteer
Sure never to o'ershoot, but just to hit."

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK was surprised one day at meeting THOMSON in Threadneedle Street, and asked him, in much astonishment, what had brought him into the City. The Poet of The Seasons pointed to a number of grey-headed old gentlemen, who were walking briskly in the same direction, and said, archly, "This is Dividend day, and

"I seek the Bank where flowery elders crowd."

The same Poet, hearing HERR DANNREUTHER praise the works of WAGNER the Composer, asked what WAGNER had written; and, on being told that his music was called "The Music of the Future," replied, "Yes, yes; I understand! We had such music in the Castle of Indolence. It was

"A certain music never known before."

BOSWELL one day told DR. JOHNSON that the REVEREND JOHN MACAULAY, in his History of St. Kilda, had stated as a well-authenticated fact that, whenever a stranger approaches that island, all the inhabitants take cold.* "Why, Sir," replied the Doctor, "you are not to suppose that there is anything singular in that: it only shows that the islanders prefer the stranger's rheum to his company."

During the recent severe frost, the RIGHT HONOURABLE JOSEPH ADDISON went into the office of the Spectator, in Wellington Street, and asked for a little brandy and a clothes' brush, giving as a reason for this singular request, that he had just had a severe fall on a slide. The Editor, who did not quite comprehend the exclamation, exclaimed hastily, "When did you fall?"—"O!" replied the great moralist, "it was

"When in the slippery paths of youth
With heedless steps I ran."

"How is it that you always get an invitation to the Guildhall dinner on the ninth of November?" said SIR JULES BENEDICT to MR. ARTHUR SULLIVAN. "I don't exactly know," was the reply; "but I think that I must owe it to my connection with Boosey's Annual."

HORACE and MÆCENAS were walking down the Strand one day last Spring, just as a great crowd of ladies was pouring out of Exeter Hall. "What is all this about?" said MÆCENAS. "Don't you know?" said HORACE. "Jam veris comites. This is the time for May Meetings."

* Vide BOSWELL'S Life of Johnson.

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

THE APOTHECARY.

January.—Came up to London in a Cheap Jack's cart, and established myself in lodgings in the East End.

February.—Thought out and perfected my Grand Tonic Pill of Everlasting Health. Inserted advertisement in a newspaper asking for a capitalist.

March.—Met a capitalist, who entered into my scheme with enthusiasm. Arranged that he should find £10,000—I the invention. Explained, on leaving him, that I had eaten nothing for three days. He expressed his regret, but refused to allow his servants to give me any dinner.

April.—Appearance of the Grand Tonic Pill of Everlasting Health. Immense success. Branches for the sale of the same established in all parts of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America.

May.—The price of soap (the principal ingredient of the Grand Tonic Pill of Everlasting Health) having risen, forced to take advantage of the laws of my country. Made the acquaintance of the Chief Judge of Bankruptcy, and asked him to kindly accept the arrangement of my money matters.

June.—Became Consulting Chemist to a tavern-keeper, and, by scientific adulteration, increased the profits of his business largely.

July.—An inquest having proved to me that my connection with the tavern-keeper was a dangerous one, turned my attention to other branches of industry. Wrote the prospectus of the New National Hospital for the Cure of Baldness.

August.—At work all the month on the National Hospital. Obtained the names of several Dukes and many Marquises for the first list of Vice-Patrons. Vice-Patron's fee £5 5*s*.

September.—The National Hospital flourishing greatly. The list of Vice-Patrons (after the appearance of the names of the Dukes and the Marquises) increased a hundredfold. Foundation of the seaside branch of the Hospital laid at the close of the month.

October.—The National Hospital at the height of its popularity. A very crowded staff of officials and one patient. Grand dinner on Michaelmas Day. The Secretary (myself) in old English fashion called the goose.

November.—The New National Hospital for the Cure of Baldness taken up by the medical papers, and exposed.

December.—Went back into the country, and passed Christmas Day in the privacy of my Cheap Jack's cart.

SLIGHTED ATTENTION.

I TOOK a Narcissus
Home unto my Missus
On the morn of our blest wedding-day.
She might have bethought her
To put it in water;
But she smelt it—and threw it away.

A MYSTERY CLEARED UP.—The reason why so many people go to sleep in church is, because they rest against the "poppy heads."

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.—Natives at five shillings a dozen.

HOME MEASURES.—A tablespoonful three times a day.

SOME persons are thoroughly imperturbable. Nothing can shock them—not even an earthquake.

A TEMPERANCE PUBLIC-HOUSE.—A Slop-shop.

Digitized by Google

RINK-TENNIS.

Digitized by Google

April xxx Days.				May xxxi Days.				June xxx Days.
1 S	S. r.5h.32m	16 S	Easter Sun.	1 M	S. r.4h.33m	12 W	Jenner b.	1 Th	S. r.3h.52m	16 F	J. Wesley b
2 S	5 S. in Lent	17 M	EasterMon.	2 Tu	Tunis tkn.	13 Th	Boswell d	2 F	Oxf. E. T.	17 S	St. Alban
3 M	S. s.6h.37m	18 Tu	Granted.	3 W	S. s.7h.25m	19 F	Dunstan	3 S	Oxf. Tr. T.	18 S	1 Sn. af. Tr.
4 Tu	Goldsmth. d	19 W	Oxf. E. T. b.	4 Th	Sering. tkn.	20 S	Columbus d	4 S	Whit Sun.	19 M	B. Wavres
5 W	R. Raikes d.	20 Th	Nap. III. b.	5 F	Nap. I. d.	21 S	Regation S.	5 M	Whit Mon.	20 Tu	Q. Vic. Ac.
6 Th	Dr. Busby d.	21 F	Cam. E. T. b	6 S	St. John	22 M	H. Myln	6 Tu	S. s. 8h.8m.	21 W	Proclam.
7 F	Cam. L. T. e.	22 S	Kent b.	7 S	3 S. af. Eas.	23 Tu	Copernic. d	7 W	S. Erivan	22 Th	B. Pered
8 S	Oxf. L. T. e.	23 S	Low Sund.	8 M	Le Sage b.	24 W	Q. Vict. b.	8 Th	D. Jerrold d.	23 F	Cam. E. T. e.
9 S	Palm Sun.	24 M	D. Defoe d.	9 Tu	Schiller d.	25 Th	Ascen. D.	9 F	Diskens d.	24 S	Midsmr. D.
10 M	Hazlitt b.	25 Tu	Pra. Alice b	10 W	Turgot b.	26 F	Augustine	10 S	Heilsberg	25 S	2 Sn. af. Tr
11 Tu	Ca sing b.	26 W	Eve. Coeste d	11 Th	Eas. T. e.	27 S	V. Bede	11 S	Trin. Sun.	26 M	Geo. IV. d.
12 W	Young d.	27 Th	Gibbon b.	12 F	J. Bell b.	28 S	S. af. Ascen	12 M	B. Wilton	27 Tu	Cairo tkn.
13 Th	Handel d.	28 F	B. Tours	13 S	O. May D.	29 M	Chas. II. res	13 Tu	Hastgs. bd.	28 W	Qu. Vict. cr
14 F	Good Frid.	29 S	Emp. Rus. b.	14 S	4 S. af. Eas.	30 Tu	Pope d	14 W	B. N. seby	29 Th	St. Peter
15 S	East. T. beg	30 S	2 S. af. Eas.	15 M	O'Connell d	31 W	B. Palestro	15 Th	Corp. Chris.	30 F	Roscoe d.
				16 T	B. Albuera

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

The Soldier.

January. — Entered the Service as a recruit, in spite of the protest of the Rector of my native village. Spent my bounty money in dissipation, and was passed over to the dépôt.

February.—Found myself in the Infantry. Immediately on receiving my kit, deserted, and came up to London.

March.—After a fortnight's pleasuring, shaved off my whiskers, and entered the Service again. The Magistrate who "swore me in" warned me that I was sacrificing my prospects in life by becoming a soldier.

April.—Found myself in the Cavalry. Took a distaste to "stables," and deserted.

May.—After living upon the proceeds of my "free kit" for a short time, determined to enter the Service again. Shaved off my moustache, and was duly sworn in. A Clergyman on the bench admonished me that I was throwing my future to the dogs by wearing Her Majesty's uniform.

June.—Found myself in the Artillery. Gun drill appeared to be hard work. After a fortnight at Woolwich, made up my mind to desert, and deserted.

July.—Thought I would try the Militia. Joined a Metropolitan regiment, and finding "position drill" a nuisance, deserted.

August.—My funds being low, made up my mind that I had not given the Militia a fair chance. Left London and joined a country Militia regiment.

September.—Early morning drill unpleasant. Deserted, and went to Scotland. True to my love for the Auxiliary Forces, joined a Highland Militia regiment.

October.—Requiring change of air, deserted to Ireland, and joined a Militia regiment in the Emerald Isle.

November.—All the trainings seem now over; suddenly tired of the Militia. Came back to England, and, leaving my regiment (in my usual fashion), joined the Royal Engineers.

December.—Found I was expected to learn a trade. This did not suit me, so I "exchanged" (in my old style) into the Marines, purposing to take a little sea voyage to escape the kind inquiries of many military friends. Eat my Christmas dinner, and on the last day of the old year packed up my traps and—deserted!

Geology of Erin.—"Snakes," says an Irish Naturalist, "never existed in Ireland, where they became extinct entirely through the preaching of St. Patrick." Search the bog-formations, however, for the remains of the O'Phidians.

THE CYNIC'S CALENDAR.

(Melancholy Mems. on the Miseries of the Month.)

April.

April starts with All Fools' Day
(That runs all the year I say):
Poets call this month the vernal,
Weather commonly infernal!
Spring is on us—with a spring;
Blows and pours like anything!
April showers—in the form
Of a (frigid) tropic storm.
Bards sing Canticles—sheer cant!
Time for planting—all a "plant!"
Stick the Bards on dunce's stools,
They but make us—April Fools!

May.

May! pet month with every poet.
Flowers blow—and winds too, blow it!
Bards! On their own "lines" I'd string 'em
For their fibs. Top coat and gingham
Still essential. One fresh bore—
The R.A.'s throw wide their door!
Table-talk is all of pictures,
Critic cant, and stupid strictures.
May in Nature is a sham,
May in Art gush, crush, and cram!
Pipe me no more ditties pray
On the "merry Month of May!"

June.

June! Again the Bards begin.
"Summer is ycomen in."
Yet without a Sangster stout
He's a fool who'll venture out.
Roses! pretty in a poem.
Did you ever try to grow 'em?
After toilsome eves and morns
Find a crop of—leaves and thorns?
Year attains another quarter,
Days, and tempers too, grow shorter.
Muse, your lyre is out of tune,
Leave "the leafy Month of June!"

Rule and Exception.—"When things are at the worst they sometimes mend." Some things are too bad to mend any more. A saying true of things in general, if not à propos de bottes.

In Quest of Lodgings.—Recollect you can always obtain bed and board, without any additional payment for the latter, by sleeping on the floor.

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

The Sailor.

January.—Found myself on board the Lively Polly. Could not account for my presence on deck. The last thing I remembered was the parlour of a riverside tavern.

February.—The Lively Polly quite safe in calm water, but being heavily insured was unlucky enough to sink in a storm.

March.—After ten days in an open boat, made the land. Kindly treated by the owner of a public-house.

April.—Found myself suddenly on board the Copper Coffin, with a cargo of cotton. The Copper Coffin, being manned with a crew of "choice spirits," caught fire.

May.—After an unpleasant journey on a bit of broken spar, made the land. Having acquired a temporary distaste for the sea, entered the lighter service.

June.—In charge of a lighter freighted with gunpowder and other innocent materials. Met an old friend, had a glass of ale, lighted a pipe, and blew up.

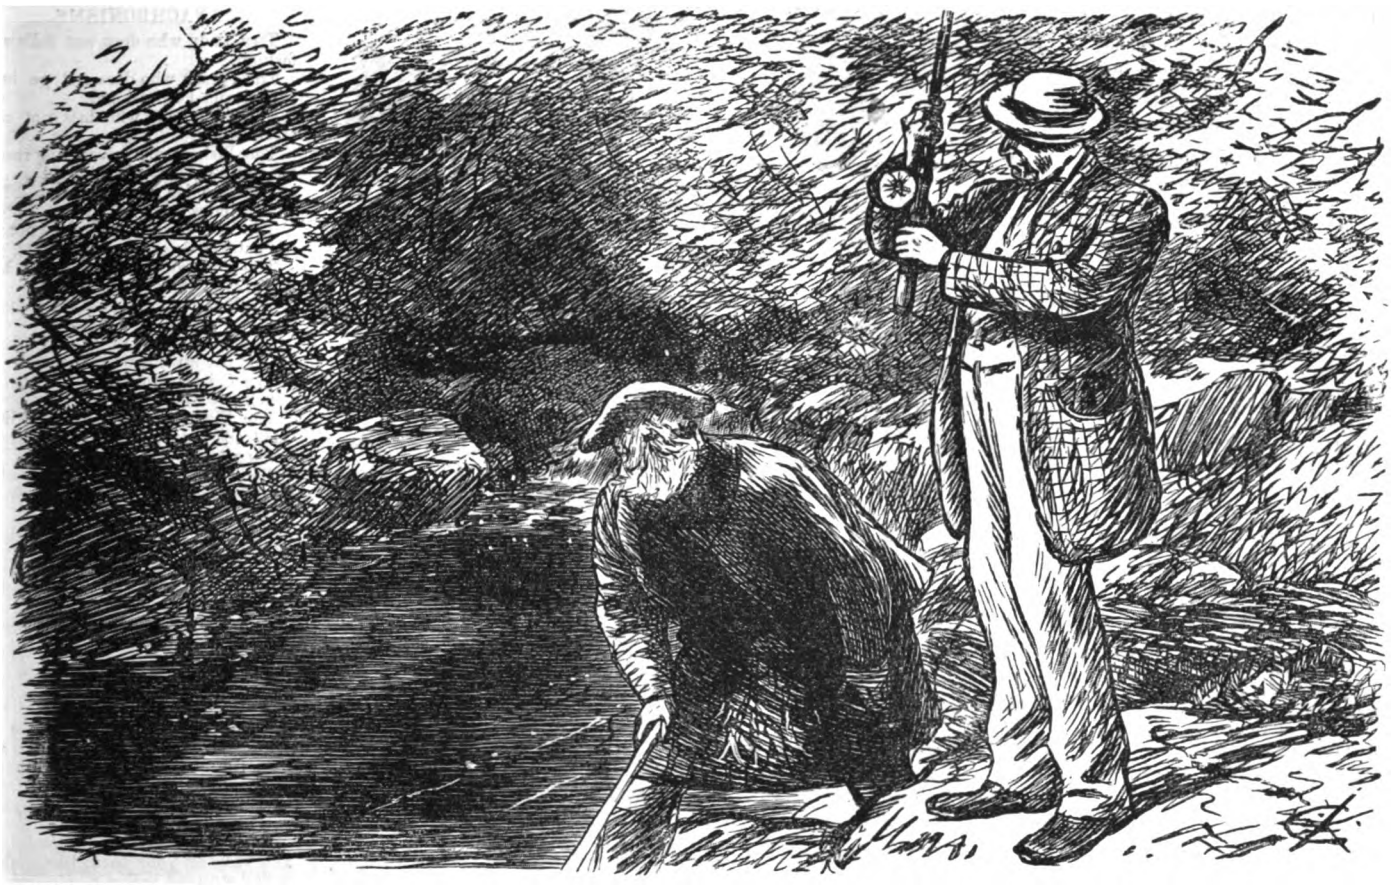
July.—Joined the Naval Reserve, and found out the secret of obtaining the maximum of pay for the minimum of work.

August.—Entered the Royal Navy, and was draughted into an Iron-clad.

September.—Went in the Iron-clad to the bottom of the sea.

October.—Having risen to the surface, made my way to London, and started "The Deceased Mariners' Aid Society." Lived sumptuously upon the subscriptions.

November.—The subscribers of "The Deceased Mariners' Aid Society" asking disagreeable questions, entered the Merchant Service—on this occasion with all my wits about me.



December.—Assisted in putting my Captain in irons, and kept Christmas merrily by breaking into the spirit cupboard and going to the bottom. Not being born to be drowned, picked up and brought to England. Ended the year in the parlour of a sea-side tavern, in a happy state of unconsciousness.

"RINKUM TENEATIS, AMICI."

Oftentimes in merry May,
When the water nearly freezes,
Tender leaves on many a spray
Shrivelling droop in Eastern breezes

Christmas come again you think.
Then, whilst genuine ice awaiting,
Go, glide o'er the mimic "Rink,"
And sing, "What a day for skating!"

Digitized by Google

WORDS AND WEIGHTS.

Angler. "Deuced odd, Donald, I can't get a Fish over Seven Pounds, when they say Major Grant above us killed half a dozen last Week that turned Twenty Pounds apiece!"

Donald. "Awsel, Sir, it's no that muckle odds i'th' Sawmon,—but thae Fowk up the Watter is bigger Leears than we are doon here!"

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

THE TINKER.

January.—Began the year as Private Secretary to a popular Member of Parliament.

February.—Prepared several speeches to be used at charity dinners by my Chief.

March.—The Session having commenced, armed myself for the coming campaign by reading the whole edition of the Annual Register and learning HAYDN'S Dictionary of Dates by heart. Bought a Lempriere to be used in the concoction of classical speeches.

April.—Very busy on the orations of my Chief. Added to my library a good Dictionary of Quotations.

May.—Went down to the borough of my Chief, and represented "popular enthusiasm" on his arrival.

June.—Wrote a pamphlet upon the Currency, and contributed (to two leading magazines) a couple of articles, headed "International Law" and "Persian Learning in the Middle Ages." The brochure and the papers appeared with my Chief's name attached to them.

July.—Attended Committee Meetings at the House of Commons, and suggested questions to be put by my Chief to the witnesses summoned before him.

August.—My Chief being away shooting in the Highlands, attended to the thousand and one claims of his five hundred and two constituents.

September.—Travelled down to the borough of my Chief, and got up his Testimonial Committee. Became Honorary Secretary to that not very distinguished body.

October.—Organised the rejoicing on the arrival of my Chief in the borough of his adoption. "Laughed" and "cheered" at the proper time during the presentation of the Testimonial Inkstand.

November.—My Chief, weary of politics, accepted the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, and invited me to accept my dismissal.

December.—Out of work.

WORDS OF WISDOM.—BOSWELL has nowhere recorded the saying, attributed to DOCTOR JOHNSON, "Sir, it is of no use for a nation to enlist sympathies unless it can also enlist soldiers."

PROVERBIAL PHILOSOPHY.—Do not attempt to feed Pigs on Grains of Paradise. A Calf is none the better for being reared on Asses' Milk.

NEW LONDON STREET DIRECTORY.

Adam Street.—Antediluvian anecdotes and traditions still linger here.

Air Street.—Doctors send their patients to this locality for change.

Aldermanbury.—Visited by numbers of bereaved relatives.

Amwell Street.—Always healthy.

Barking Alley.—To be avoided in the Dog Days.

Boy Court.—Not far from Child's Place.

Camomile Street.—See Wormwood Street.

Coldbath Square.—Very bracing.

Distaff Lane.—Full of Spinsters.

Farm Street.—Highly sensitive to the fluctuations of the corn market.

Fashion Street.—Magnificent sight in the height of the Season.

First Street.—Of immense antiquity.

Friday Street.—Great jealousy felt by all the other days of the week.

Garlick Hill.—Make a little détour.

Glasshouse Street.—Heavily insured against hail-storms.

Godliman Street.—Irreproachable.

Great Smith Street.—Which of the Smiths is this?

Grundy Street.—Named after that famous historic character—MRS. GRUNDY.

Hercules Buildings.—Rich in traditions and stories of the "Labours" of the Founder.

Homer Street.—Literally classic ground. The house pointed out in connection with "the blind old bard" has long since disappeared.

Idol Lane.—Where are the Missionaries?

Ivy Lane.—This, and Lillypot Lane, and Woodpecker Lane, and Wheatsheaf Yard, and White Thorn Street, all sweetly rural. It is difficult to make a selection.

Lamb's Conduit Street.—Touching description (by the oldest inhabitant) of the young lambs coming to drink at the conduit.

Liquorpond Street.—See Philpot Lane.

Love Lane.—What sort of love? The "love of the turtle?"

Lupus Street., Maddox Street. } Both dangerous.

Milk Street.—Notice the number of pumps.

Mincing Lane.—Mincing is now mostly done elsewhere, by machinery.

Orchard Street.—The last apple was gathered here about the time that the last coursing match took place in Hare Court.

Paper Buildings.—Wonderfully substantial! Brief paper extensively used in these buildings.

Paradise Street., Peerless Street. } Difficult to choose between the two.

Poultry., Pudding Lane. } Crowded at Christmas.

Quality Court.—Most aristocratic.

Riches Court.—Not a house to be had for love or money.

Shepherdess Walk.—Ought to be near Shepherds' Bush.

Trump Street.—Noted for whist.

Type Street.—Leaves a most favourable impression.

World's End Passage.—Finis.

LINES FOR THE NEW YEAR.

To-day the year begins,
To-day your task commence:
Pick up the casual pins,
And one short twelvemonth hence,
You 'll be rewarded for your pains
With fourpence as your thrifty gains.

MYTHOLOGY AND MUSIC.—In the Grecian Sculpture Room at the British Museum, inquire of the attendant to see the portions of the walls of Thebes, said to have been originally built by Amphion at the sound of his lyre. That is a mistake: as you will find that the columns were fluted.

NO RULE WITHOUT AN EXCEPTION.—"Circumstances alter cases"—but never, not even in the greatest emergency, the nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, vocative, or ablative.

GOING INTO THE OTHER EXTREME.—Some men carry their aversion to what they call "gush" to such an extent, that they will not allow their feelings even to trickle.

A PROFESSIONAL VIEW OF THINGS.—BAXTOPP, the noted cricketer, speaking of the shape of his daughter's face, described it as a Kennington Oval.

HOW UNLIKE AN ALMANACK!—Assizes have no Saints in the Calendar.

Digitized by Google

COUNTY DISTINCTIONS.

Ayrshire.—Shares, with the Isle of Skye, the distinction of having inspired more jokes than any other district in Her Majesty's Dominions.

Beds.—Noted for its excellent sleeping accommodation.

Bucks.—From time immemorial the male population have been great dandies.

Ches(s)hire.—The head-quarters of this engrossing game.

Cork.—Convivial. Famous for its claret and whiskey.

Down.—Not always—up as well.

Dublin.—See Census returns of population.

Fife.—Musical.

Herts.—Does it? Where?

Hunts.—Foxes, packs of hounds, sportsmen in scarlet, and whippers-in everywhere during the Season.

Oxon.—One great Cattle Show.

Somerset.—The inhabitants are brought up from infancy to turn heels over head.

Stirling.—Of genuine worth.

Wicklow.—Of less consequence since gas has so largely taken the place of candles.

Wigtown.—The evening parties here are a great sight.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Love, yonder Autumn leaves are gold,
Our locks turn silver when we're old.
But like the trees we need not fare,
A fluid can revive grey hair,
And when, as foliage, hair is shed,
Men, unlike trees, wear wigs instead.

How to Observe All Saints' Day.—Devote yourself particularly to St. Julhien, St. Estephe, and St. Emilion.

Change for an Adage.—Half a loaf is better than no sugar.

FOR THE MOORS.

De Tumkyns (who is ordering a Shooting Suit). "I—aw—want some kind of—aw—stuff—'colour of Heather, y'know,—so that the Gwouse won't wecognise me, y'know!"

ANACHRONISMS.

The Lady who does not follow the fashion.

The Parson who does not go in for Ritual and Confessional.

The Tradesman who does not adulterate.

The Bishop who gives his reasons for doing wrong.

The Premier who does not let his subordinates make blunders.

The ex-Premier who does not use his hatchet upon everything.

The Poet who does not think himself greater than Shakspeare.

The Novelist who is not of the female sex.

The First Lord of the Admiralty who is not an old woman.

The Critic who writes the truth of his enemy's book.

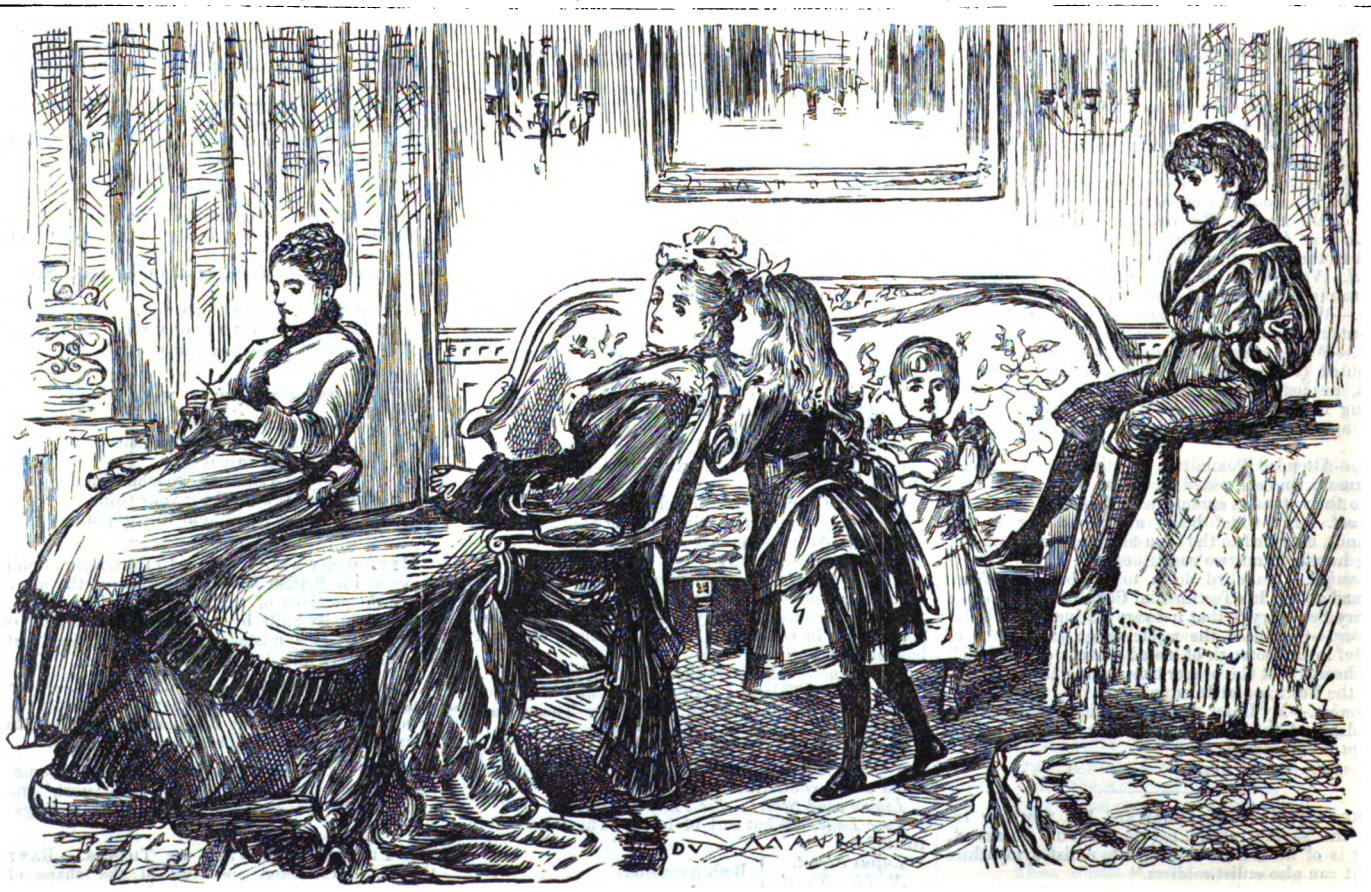
The Financier who pays his clients eighteen per cent., and is never a bankrupt.

The Publisher who cannot afford oyster-sauce with his rump-steak.

The Author who can.

The Stockbroker who makes less than twenty thousand a-year.

The Yachtsman who is never sea-sick.



The Lady who "Winks" without fear of a tumble.

The Prince who has great fear of any adventure, however brilliant and perilous.

AT THE RINK.

Of what is the old man thinking
As he sits in his old arm-chair?
He's thinking that he'd be Rinking,
If try it he only dare.
He's thinking, that, when you're Rinking,
Unless you take lots of care,
You'll be on your back, like winking,
And stunned before you're aware.

A Truism for All Time.—No rooms like mushrooms.

A BELGRAVIAN MOTHER.

Ethelinda. "Mother! isn't it wicked to say 'You be Blowed,' as Algy does?" Mother. "It's worse than Wicked, my Dear—it's Vulgar!"

Digitized by Google

moves onward, jubilant."

MILTON (adapted).

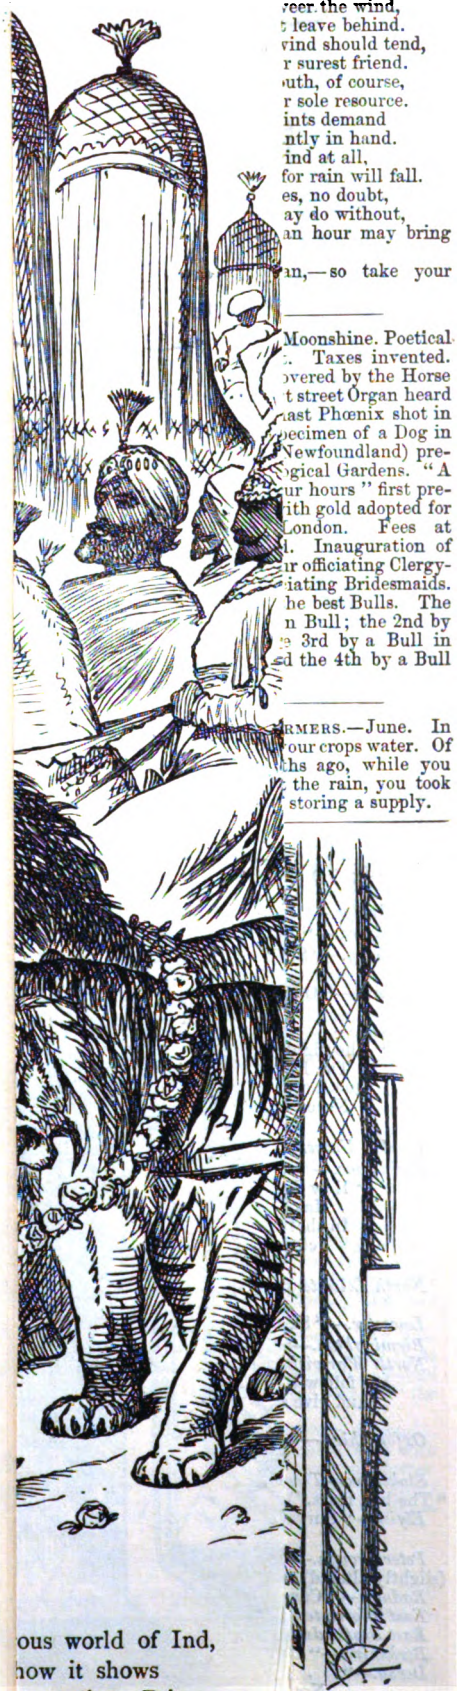
ADE MECUM.



Weather-Guide for the Tourist.)

l is in the North,
f you go forth.
veer the wind,
t leave behind.
vind should tend,
r surest friend.
uth, of course,
r sole resource.
ints demand
ntly in hand.
ind at all,
for rain will fall.
es, no doubt,
ay do without,
an hour may bring an,—so take your

Moonshine. Poetical
. Taxes invented.
overed by the Horse
t street Organ heard
ast Phœnix shot in
pecimen of a Dog in Newfoundland) pre-
gical Gardens. "A ur hours" first pre-
ith gold adopted for London. Fees at
l. Inauguration of ir officiating Clergy-
iating Bridesmaids.
he best Bulls. The n Bull; the 2nd by 3rd by a Bull in d the 4th by a Bull

RMERS.—June. In our crops water. Of hs ago, while you
the rain, you took storing a supply.

ous world of Ind,
how it shows
a gracious Prince,

Digitized by Google

COUNTY DISTINCTIONS.

Ayrshire.—Shares, with the Isle of Skye, the distinction of having inspired more jokes than any other district in Her Majesty's Dominions.

Beds.—Noted for its excellent sleeping accommodation.

Bucks. — From time immemorial the male population have been great dandies.

Ches(s)hire.—The head-quarters of this engrossing game.

Cork.—Convivial. Famous for its claret and whiskey.

Down.—Not always—up as well.

Dublin. — See Census returns of population.

Fife.—Musical.

Herts.—Does it? Where?

Hunts.—Foxes, packs of hounds, sportsmen in scarlet, and whippers-in everywhere during the Season.

Oxon.—One great Cattle Show.

Somerset. — The inhabitants are brought up from infancy to turn heels over head.

Stirling.—Of genuine worth.

Wicklow. — Of less consequence since gas has so largely taken the place of candles.

Wigtown. — The evening parties here are a great sight.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Love, yonder Autumn leaves are gold,
Our locks turn silver when we're old.
But like the trees we need not fare,
A fluid can revive grey hair,
And when, as foliage, hair is shed,
Men, unlike trees, wear wigs instead.

How to Observe All Saints' Day. — Devote yourself particularly to St. Julhien, St. Estephe, and St. Emilion.

Change for an Adage.—Half a loaf is better than no sugar.

FOR THE MOORS.

De Tumkyns (who is ordering a Shooting Suit). "I—aw—want some kind of—aw—stuff—'colour of Heather, y'know,—so that the Gwouse won't wecognise me, y'know!"

ANACHRONISMS.

The Lady who does not follow the fashion.

The Parson who does not go in for Ritual and Confessional.

The Tradesman who does not adulterate.

The Bishop who gives his reasons for doing wrong.

The Premier who does not let his subordinates make blunders.

The ex-Premier who does not use his hatchet upon everything.

The Poet who does not think himself greater than Shakspeare.

The Novelist who is not of the female sex.

The First Lord of the Admiralty who is not an old woman.

The Critic who writes the truth of his enemy's book.

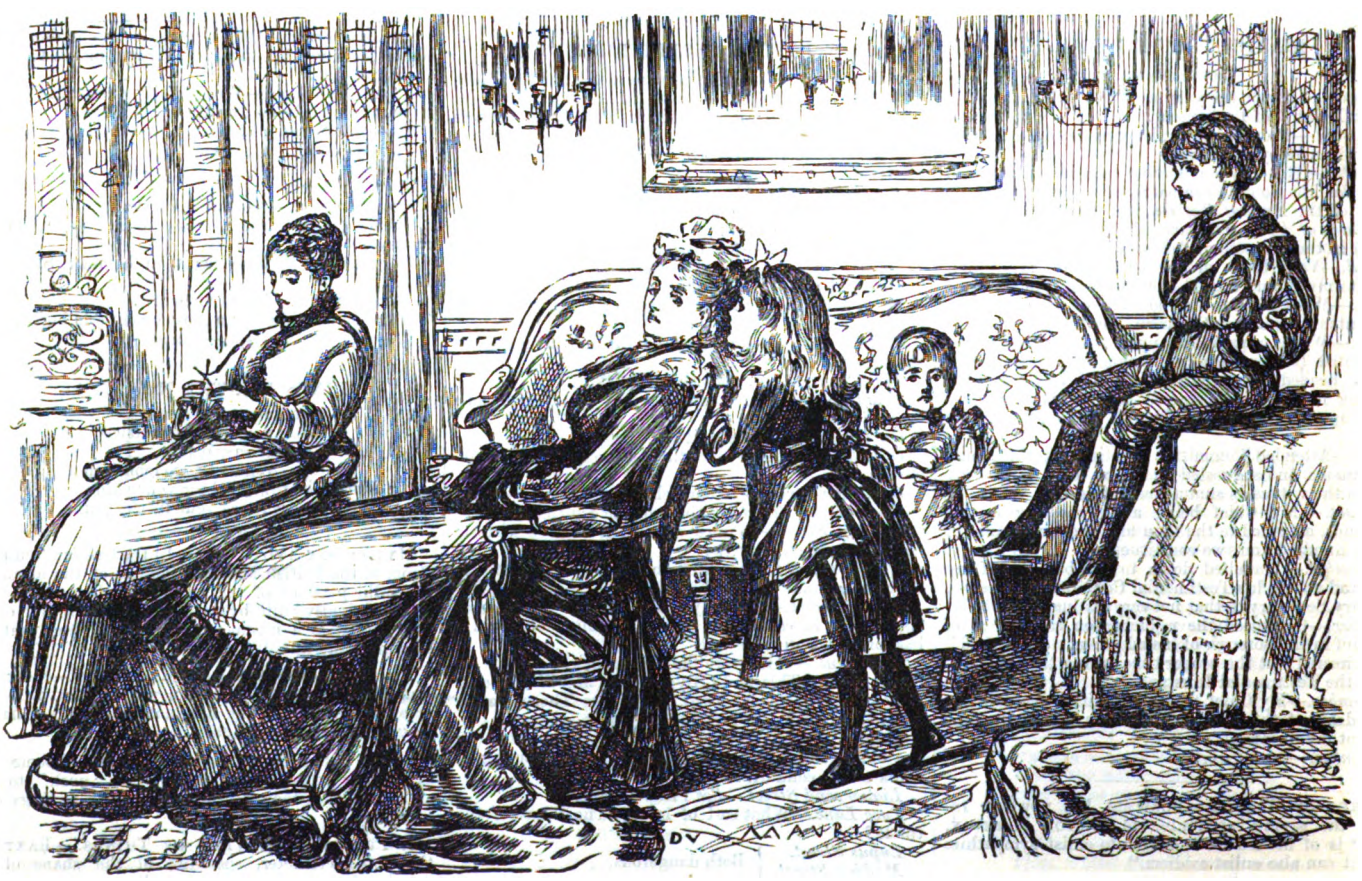
The Financier who pays his clients eighteen per cent., and is never a bankrupt.

The Publisher who cannot afford oyster-sauce with his rump-steak.

The Author who can.

The Stockbroker who makes less than twenty thousand a-year.

The Yachtsman who is never sea-sick.



The Lady who "Winks" without fear of a tumble.

The Prince who has great fear of any adventure, however brilliant and perilous.

AT THE RINK.

Of what is the old man thinking
As he sits in his old arm-chair?
He's thinking that he'd be Rinking,
If try it he only dare.
He's thinking, that, when you're Rinking,
Unless you take lots of care,
You'll be on your back, like winking,
And stunned before you're aware.

A Truism for All Time.—No rooms like mushrooms.

A BELGRAVIAN MOTHER.

Ethelinda. "Mother! isn't it wicked to say 'You be Blowed,' as Algy does?" Mother. "It's worse than Wicked, my Dear—it's Vulgar!"

Digitized by Google

moves onward, jubilant."

MILTON (adapted).

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ALMANACK FOR 1876.

A WET DIARY.

January.—Buy a house in the Midland Counties. Put a Housekeeper in it to look after it.

February.—Housekeeper writes to say that, owing to the floods, the neighbourhood is very damp and unhealthy.

March.—Housekeeper writes to say that the garden is under water.

April.—Housekeeper writes to say that there is two foot of water in the drawing-room, and that the furniture is floating about.

May.—Housekeeper writes to say that eighty feet of the garden wall has been washed away.

June.—Housekeeper writes to say that the two horses, one cow, and four pigs are drowned.

July.—Go and stop in the house myself.

August.—Escape from the bedroom windows in a boat.

September.—In bed with rheumatic fever.

October.—Housekeeper writes to say that the floods are out worse than ever.

November.—Somebody writes to say that the Housekeeper has been drowned.

December.—Will try and sell house in the Midland Counties.

LOVES OF THE PLANTS.

When Hero saw Leander die,
"O, Leander!" she did cry;
And what the cruel ocean slew,
Into an "O-Leander" grew!

A Maiden Attempt.—Said Edith to Mabel, "Is not that a pretty tree?" She pointed to a handsome Acer platanoides. "A pretty tree!" answered Mabel. "I call that a plane tree." "O!" rejoined Ethel.

"GENTLEMEN HELPS."

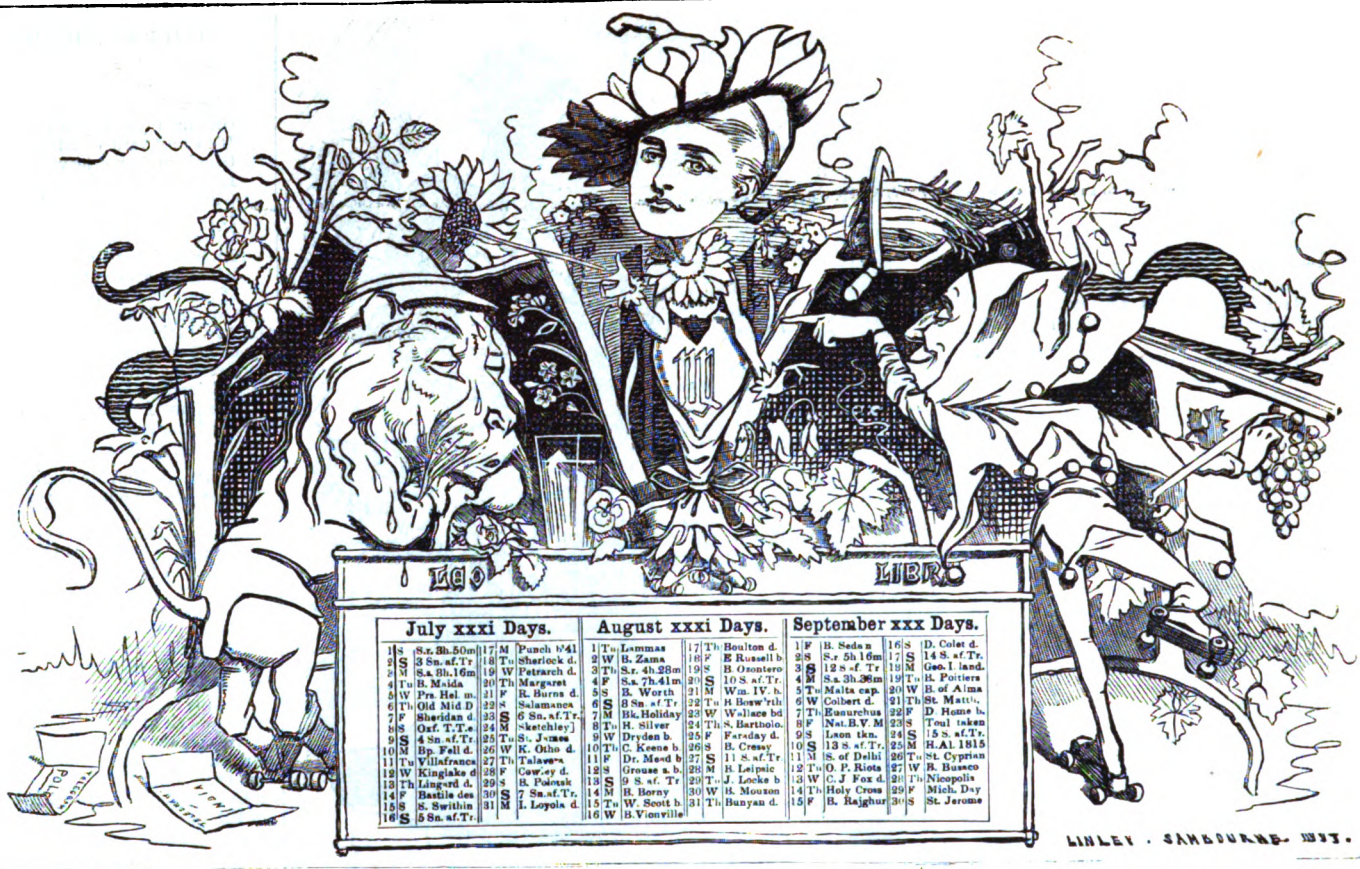
Comely Greengrocer (who Waits at Evening Parties, to Lady Customer). "Shall I 'ave the pleasure of meeting you this evening at Lady Fitzwiggles's Ma'am?"!!

VIATOR'S VADE MECUM.

(Or Compendious Weather-Guide for the British Tourist.)

When the wind is in the North,
Gingham take if you go forth.
If to Eastward veer the wind,
Gingham do not leave behind.
If to West the wind should tend,
Gingham is your surest friend.
If it seek the South, of course,
Gingham is your sole resource.
Intermediate points demand
Gingham constantly in hand.
If there be no wind at all,
Gingham take, for rain will fall.
At all other times, no doubt,
Gingham you may do without,
Yet e'en then an hour may bring 'em,—
Showers I mean,—so take your Gingham!

April 1.—Full Moonshine. Poetical Licences taken out. Taxes invented. Mares' Nests discovered by the Horse Marines. The first street Organ heard in London. The last Phœnix shot in Dublin. A fine specimen of a Dog in a Manger (from Newfoundland) presented to the Zoological Gardens. "A sixth part every four hours" first prescribed. Paving with gold adopted for the streets of London. Fees at theatres instituted. Inauguration of Weddings with four officiating Clergymen and eight officiating Bridesmaids. Prizes offered for the best Bulls. The first taken by John Bull; the 2nd by an Irish Bull; the 3rd by a Bull in a China Shop; and the 4th by a Bull of the Pope's.



Advice to Farmers.—June. In dry weather, give your crops water. Of course, some months ago, while you were grumbling at the rain, you took the opportunity of storing a supply.

TRUE POLITENESS; OR, THE CABMAN OF THE FUTURE.

Cabby. "Four-Wheeler, Ma'am?" Old Lady. "No, thank you. I'm waiting for an 'Atlas.'"
Cabby. "Ah indeed, Ma'am; but won't you step in and take a Seat in our Shelter till the Omlibus comes up, Ma'am?"!!

Digitized by Google

July xxxi Days.						August xxxi Days.						September xxx Days.
1	S	Sr. 3h.50m	17	M	Punch b'41	1	Tu	Lammas	17	Th	Boulton d.	1	F	B. Sadan	16	S	D. Colet d.
2	S	3 Sn. af. Tr	18	Tu	Sheridan d.	2	W	B. Zama	18	F	E Russell b	2	S	Sr. 5h 16m	17	S	14 S. af. Tr.
3	M	Sa. 8h.16m	19	W	Petrarch d.	3	Th	Sr. 4h.28m	19	S	B. Orontero	3	S	12 S. af. Tr	18	M	Geo. I. land.
4	Tu	B. Maida	20	Th	Margaret	4	F	Sa. 7h.41m	20	S	10 S. af. Tr.	4	M	Sa. 3h.36m	19	Tu	B. Poitiers
5	W	Pre. Hel. m.	21	F	R. Burns d.	5	S	B. Worth	21	M	Wm. IV. b.	5	Tu	Malta cap.	20	W	B. of Alma
6	Th	Old Mid D	22	S	Salamanca	6	S	8 Sn. af. Tr	22	Tu	H Rowe'rth	6	W	Colbert d.	21	Th	St. Matth.
7	F	Sheridan d.	23	S	6 Sn. af. Tr.	7	M	Bk. Holiday	23	W	Wallace bd	7	Th	Eumurchus	22	F	D. Home b.
8	S	Oxf. T.T.e	24	M	[Sketchley]	8	Tu	H. Silver	24	Th	S. Bartholo.	8	F	Nat.B.V.M	23	S	Toul taken
9	S	4 Sn. af. Tr.	25	Tu	St. James	9	W	Dryden b.	25	F	Faraday d.	9	S	Leon tkn.	24	S	15 S. af. Tr.
10	M	Bp. Fell d.	26	W	K. Otho d.	10	Th	C. Keene b.	26	S	B. Cressy	10	S	13 S. af. Tr.	25	M	H. Al. 1815
11	Tu	Villafranca	27	Th	Talavera	11	F	Dr. Mead b	27	S	11 S. af. Tr	11	M	St. of Delhi	26	Tu	St. Cyprian
12	W	Kinglake d	28	F	Cowley d.	12	S	Grouse a. b.	28	M	B. Leipsic	12	Tu	O. P. Riots	27	W	B. Busseo
13	Th	Lingard d.	29	S	B. Potosk	13	S	9 S. af. Tr	29	Tu	J. Locke b	13	W	C. J Fox d.	28	Th	Nicopolis
14	F	Bastile des	30	S	7 Sn. af. Tr.	14	M	B. Borny	30	W	H. Mouton	14	Th	Holy Cross	29	F	Mich. Day
15	S	S. Swithin	31	M	I. Loyola d.	15	Tu	W. Scott b.	31	Th	Bunyan d.	15	F	B. Rajghur	30	S	St. Jerome
16	S	5 Sn. af. Tr.				16	W	B. Vionville

PARLIAMENTARY MOTTOES.

Buckinghamshire.—"Sphinx volucris pennis."
AUSONIUS.

Greenwich.—"Continue in courses till those knowest what they are."—SHAKSPEARE.

Oxford.—"Non tam historico quam oratorio genere."
CICERO.

Cambridge.—"Spes est expectatio boni."—CICERO.

Guildford.—"Festina lente."—AUGUSTUS CÆSAR.

Finsbury.—"Sermo promptus et Isæo torrentior."
JUVENAL.

Salford.—"O Charley is my darling."
Cavalier Ballad.

Carlisle.—
"The nights are long in merry Carlisle,
The Knights drink deep, drink deep;
Quoth a witful wight, the gay midnight
Never was meant for sleep."
MS. picked up near Aspatria.

London University.—"Lo, here am I!"

Maidstone.—
"How doth the little busy bee
Make honey golden sweet,
In that snug hive where bankers thrive,
Yclept ye Lombard Street!"
DR. WHAT'S-HIS-NAME.

North Leicestershire.—"Manners makyth man."
Old Adage.

Leicester.—"Sartor Resartus."—CARLYLE.

Birmingham.—"Salmo a saltendo."

North Warwickshire.—
"I follow the fox, and worry the POPE,
And give an account of both, I hope!"
MS. found in Arlington Street.

Oxfordshire.—"Old perry wants water."
Oxford Adage.

Stoke-upon-Trent.—"Leo roris." (Free translation: "The lion roars.")

Elgin.—"Survey mankind from China to Peru."
JOHNSON.

Peterborough.—"Papam Ortonque cano."—VIRGIL (slightly altered).

Radnor.—"Cavendo tutus."—DEBRETT.

East Worcestershire. } "Hail, all hail!"
East Staffordshire. }

Berkshire.—"O tempora! O mores!"

Derby.—". . . . . impiæ
Non tangenda rates transiliunt vada."
HORACE.

Flintshire.—"Aquila captat muscas."

Bath.—"I like a good hater."—JOHNSON.

THE CYNIC'S CALENDAR.

(Melancholy Mems. on the Miseries of the Month.)

JULY.

JULY! Now the days grow torrid,
Heat and thirst are something horrid.
Pass our days and nights in panting,
Do involuntary Banting.
School breaks up, Home-Rule breaks down.
Subtle hints of "out of town."
Papers full of Cricket Matches,
Gush about big hits and catches,
Then St. Swithin turns his main on,
Bringing his eternal rain on.
On the whole a perfect teaser
Is your Month, great JULIUS CÆSAR!

AUGUST.

AUGUST! Glass at something shocking,
Cockneys to the sea-side flocking;
Woman's wish to join the throng,
Daily theme and nightly song.
Horrid nuisance! Worst of sells,
Norfolk-Howards, shrimps, and smells!
Now begins the Oyster Season,
Prices range beyond all reason.
Crown of culinary woes
Fate piled on when molluscs rose.
Patience? Can her rule adjust us
To thy maddening Month, Augustus?

SEPTEMBER.

COMES September, and St. Partridge!
Catch me offering one cartridge
At his shrine! Swell Sumphs may fag
All to brag about a "bag."
Sport, indeed! No greater rot!
When I shoot may I be shot!
Sea-side getting full and fuller,
Morning papers daily duller.
Sheer discomfort's carnival,
Equinox brings shower and squall;
Spouts the wandering County Member.
Bang! Bosh! Bother! That 's September!

BY ADAM SMITH, JUN.—In India, as in most other countries, money is very unequally distributed. The few have a lac, the many a lack—of rupees.

FROM A MISOGAMIST.—Love is blind, and no oculist has ever yet performed a successful operation. There is but one cure—Marriage.

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

THE PLOUGH BOY.

January.—Began the year in the Workhouse.

February.—Got tired of "the House," and tried a little stone-breaking.

March.—Got employment on a farm. Spent a small portion of my time in work, and the remainder in drinking beer.

April.—Listened to the arguments of the strike organiser. Came to the conclusion that play was better than work.

May.—After consultation with my mates, struck for higher wages.

June.—On strike. Found doing nothing, save drinking beer and playing skittles, very pleasant employment. Somehow or another the wives and children of my mates did not seem to thrive upon it.

July.—Starvation. Went back into the Union, and resumed my old work.

August.—Came out of "the House," and went back to the farm on reduced wages.

September.—Travelled about in search of employment. Found the education provided by the School-Board of no great practical value.

October.—Got near the Black Country, and married a hard-working girl for the sake of her earnings.

November.—Altercations with my wife, in which my boots played an important part. Separation agreed upon. Brought before a Magistrate, and sentenced to one month's imprisonment for nearly killing my wife on the eve of her departure.

December.—Released from prison. Had no Christmas dinner, and ended the year (as I begun it) in the Workhouse.

OCCASIONAL RAINFALL.

IT frequently rains cats and dogs;
Sometimes, we hear, too, fish and frogs.
To see that proof of Nature's powers,
Wait for the First of April's showers.

HINT FOR A NEW PEERAGE.—Of hereditary titles the most ancient is that of Earl. It has come down to us from the Earliest times.

APRIL 1, ALL FOOLS' DAY.—General Meeting of Foreign Bondholders.

APRIL 9, PALM SUNDAY.—Go and observe it among the Endogens at Kew Gardens.

SHAKSPEARIAN MOTTO FOR OUR WELL-SHOD NIGHT FORCE.—"The very stones prate of my whereabouts."
—Macbeth.

Digitized by Google

DOCTORS (IN HYGEIA) DIFFER (FROM THOSE IN LONDON.)

Scene in Dr. Richardson's City of Health.—Chorus of Medical Practitioners. "WE HAVE NO WORK TO DO!"

A HUNDRED YEARS HENCE.

(Being a Leaf out of our Almanack for the Year 1976.)

FOR the instruction of posterity, and in order to preserve some record of the way in which we live now, we chronicle a few of the remarkable events which have occurred in the past twelvemonth:—

New Year's Day.—Opening of New London Bridge, built in order to relieve the growing traffic of the City, and extending in unbroken width from Westminster to Wapping.

St. Valentine's Day.—No fewer than five million four thousand and twenty-seven Valentines were received and delivered by the patent postal telegraphic lightning apparatus, within the radius of the Metropolis before six o'clock, A.M.

St. Patrick's Day.—Inauguration of the Submarine Railway from Holyhead to Kingstown. Grand breakfast in honour of the visit of the LORD MAYOR OF LONDON, given by the Corporation, in the Phœnix Park, and banquet in the evening to the MAYOR OF DUBLIN, who returned with his Lordship by express train to the Mansion-House.

All Fools' Day.—A report gained credence at the Clubs, and thence was wafted to the Vatican by private wire from Westminster, that BISHOP BROADCHURCH had been preaching in MR. STURGEON'S tabernacle, and thence returned to Lambeth Palace on the knifeboard of an omnibus.

Lady Day.—The House of Ladies was opened for the Session by the SPEAKERESS in person, who announced in her Speech that the stringent Act of Parliament which the House had passed last autumn, extending the rights of married women to the privilege of latch-keys, had been threatened with repeal by the Opposition in the House of Lords.

May Day.—Banquet given to the President and Members of the Royal Academy, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the making of the law which prohibits the R.A.'s from hanging their own pictures; a task which is performed now with far greater success by a Committee of outsiders.

Waterloo Day.—Great excitement was caused in certain fashionable circles by a letter in the Times from the COUNTESS OF COLNEY HATCH, complaining that her Cook, though paid a salary of £500 a-year, insisted upon having her own tea imported overland through Russia, and, besides receiving the usual bonnet-money and culinary perquisites, demanded to be found in turtle-soup for supper, with a pint of iced champagne.

Derby Day.—The annual contest of Aërial Velocipedes was flown on the new course from Birmingham to Bayswater, and resulted in a dead heat between LORD HELTER SKELTER'S Tearaway and CAPTAIN STIRRUP'S High Stepper, the race occupying twenty-seven minutes three seconds and a half exactly.

Midsummer Day.—Fancy undress ball and breakfast given at the Guildhall, on the occasion of conferring the Freedom of the City upon GENERAL FITZ-BISMARCK, the President of Prussia.

Goose Day.—Under the provisions of the Act for the Prevention of Cruelty to Husbands, the Honourable MRS. GREY MAYOR was sentenced to six weeks' exclusion from the Opera, for having dragged her worser half on a round of morning calls.

Lord Mayor's Day.—Having been unanimously elected to the onerous as well as honourable office of Lord Mayor of this immense Metropolis (which now covers the whole country from Bedford to Brighton, and from Salisbury to Southend), Mr. Punch presided at the banquet, which, as usual, was held in the Guildhall, and was honoured by the presence of the Sovereigns of Europe, together with the British Governor of China, the KING OF CALIFORNIA, and the EMPRESS OF THE SOUTHERN DISUNITED STATES.

King's Birthday.—Grand review of our Steam Soldiers upon Canterbury Common, in honour of the visit of the EMPEROR OF AUSTRALIA. Upwards of a million of Mechanical Troops were mustered to march past, and the charge of the Steam Cavalry was described as something wonderful. When the Emperor left the field, a battery of "Woolwich Babies" (each a thirty thousand pounder) opened fire in a salute, which was distinctly heard at the Land's End and John o'Groat's House.

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

THE TAILOR.

January.—Moved up to London from the country with my wife and children.

February.—Obtained employment in a West End establishment, and curried favour with my master's customers.

March.—Got access to the books of the firm, and made copious extracts therefrom.

April.—Became a widower and married my master's daughter.

May.—Explained to my father-in-law that he was completely in my power. Proved my position by referring to the extracts I had made from the journal and the ledger. My father-in-law angry, but powerless. Became his partner.

June.—Very busy with legal proceedings against the less important customers of the firm. Constant communication kept up between our Solicitors and the official representatives of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

July.—Enjoyed a tour on the Continent. Travelled strictly incognito under the nomme de voyage of "LE BARON DE SMITH, Grand Milor' Anglais."

August.—Back to business. Recommenced legal proceedings, and called in all the debts of the firm. Ruined the establishment, and divided the profits. Father-in-law retired to Clapham.

September.—Started business on my own account in the premises lately occupied by my father-in-law and myself. Invented the Royal Khiva Overcoat. Got the garment made by the machine girls for next to nothing, and advertised it largely. Spent a great part of the month in shooting over my new preserves in Sussex.

October.—Explained to the important customers of the late firm that my then partner (my father-in-law) was responsible for commencing legal proceedings against any gentleman of higher rank than a baronet. Upon this, important customers returned to my books by the score, and unimportant customers (following the lead of their betters) by the thousand.

November.—Commenced to accommodate my customers. Lent money at eighty-five per cent. to those of them who could give me proper security. Found this venture even a better thing than the sale of "the Royal Khiva Overcoat, as advertised."

December.—Financial business flourishing famously. Half-a-dozen decoys bringing me customers (each with two good names) daily. Nothing could be better. Ended the year by eating my plum-pudding off silver plate, and marrying my daughter (by my first wife) to a parson!

A TREE OF WOE.—The common Yew (Taxus baccata), as an ornament of the churchyard, has acquired melancholy associations. No wonder, considering its botanical name, Taxus.

MODERN ILLUMINATION.—February 1. Candlemas. Haven't candles gone out? Isn't it time to re-christen the season?

DIALECTIC WUT.—Hoot awa', as the Scotchman said to the owl.

Digitized by Google

October xxxi Days.						November xxx Days.						December xxxi Days.
1	S	16 S. af.Tr.	17	Tu	H. Parl. bt	1	W	All Saints	16	Th	Erskine d.	1	F	Prs. Wls. b.	17	S	2 S. in Ad.
2	M	S. r. 6h. 4m	18	W	T. Taylor	2	Th	Mich. T. b.	17	F	Q. Eliz. b.	2	S	Sr. 7h. 47m	18	M	Oxf.M.T.s.
3	Tu	S.s.5h. 32m	19	Th	Kneller d.	3	F	Per. Leigh	18	S	Wilkie b.	3	S	1 S. in Ad.	19	Tu	Scheele b.
4	W	Guizot b.	20	F	B.Navarino	4	S	Will.III. b.	19	S	23 S. af.Tr.	4	M	Bradbury]	20	W	B. Vicious
5	Th	Placidus	21	S	Nelson d.	5	S	21 S. af.Tr.	20	M	Ld.Elgin d.	5	Tu	S.s.3h.50m	21	Th	St. Thomas
6	F	Faith	22	S	19 S. af.Tr.	6	M	S. r. 7h. 6m	21	Tu	J. Hogg d.	6	W	St.Nicholas	22	F	Wis. Q. br.
7	S	B. Lepanto	23	M	E. Derby d.	7	Tu	S.s. 4h.21m	22	W	Cecil.	7	Th	Flaxman d	23	S	Jas. II. abd.
8	S	17 S. af.Tr.	24	Tu	Webster d.	8	W	Moliere d.	23	Th	S. Clement	8	F	C.BV.Mary	24	S	4 S. in Adv.
9	M	St. Denys	25	W	St. Crispin	9	Th	P. of Wls.b.	24	F	J. Knox d.	9	S	Vandyke d.	25	M	Christ. Day
10	Tu	Oxf.M.T.b.	26	Th	Hogarth d.	10	F	M.Luther b.	25	S	Mich. T. s.	10	S	2 S. in Ad.	26	Tu	Bk.Holiday
11	W	Old Mic. D.	27	F	Cp. Cook b	11	S	St. Martin	26	S	24 S. af.Tr.	11	M	Jne. Gay d.	27	W	C. Lamb d.
12	Th	Americs d.	28	S	Mets tkn.	12	S	22 S. af.Tr.	27	M	Prs.M.A. b.	12	Tu	C. Cibber d.	28	Th	Innocents
13	F	Edw. Conf.	29	S	20 S.af. Tr	13	M	Britius	28	Tu	Bunsen d.	13	W	St. Lucy	29	F	Stafford ex.
14	S	B. Senlac	30	M	Tower bnt	14	Tu	Leibnitz b.	29	W	Burnand	14	Th	P. Albert d	30	S	Canton cap.
15	S	18 S. af.Tr.	31	Tu	AllHallows	15	W	Machutus	30	Th	St. Andrew	15	F	I. Walton d	31	S	1 S. af. Chr.
16	M	Soissons t.										16	S	Cam. M.T.s.

THE CYNIC'S CALENDAR.

(Melancholy Mems. on the Miseries of the Month.)

October.

CHILL October, month unpleasant!
Now gun-maniacs pot the pheasant.
Leaves are falling, fields are damp,
Can't go out without a Gamp.
All the Cackle family out,
Primed to prose and prompt to spout.
Zeal at zenith, nous at zero,
Season to trot out a Hero.
Money spent and temper flown,
Think of coming back to town.
Silly season! Sense that 's sober
Shuns the precincts of October.

November.

NEXT November. Eugh! its presence
Brings black misery in quintessence.
Sky a pall, and earth a bog,
Intermediate region—fog!
Egypt's darkness could be felt,
Ours is worse, it may be smelt!
Who to peace may make pretences,
Suffering through all his senses?
Fog, big feeds, Guys, rows, and rockets,
Plague ears, eyes, nose, stomach, pockets.
Fawkes I 'd gratefully remember
Had he blown away—November!

December.

DREAR December ends the dozen.
One day flooded, next one frozen!
Christmas, falsely called the jolly,
Saturnalia of folly.
Gush, dyspepsia, decoration,
Shillingsworth's of stale sensation,
Parcel-plague,—things known as "presents,"—
Wines none want, superfluous pheasants.
Exit old year! Crowning bother,
With next day begins another!
Bills, bad weather, bones,—remember
Don't depart with dead December!

LOOKING UP OUR HISTORY.—How few of those who admire the roof of Westminster Hall remember that the original Hall was built by WILLIAM RUFUS!

SEPTEMBER 29.—Michaelmas Day. Roman Capitol saved by geese. English Capital lost by ditto.

NEW READING.—Necessity is the Mother of Cabmen.

DIARIES FOR THE YEAR.

THE THIEF.

January.—Having nothing better to do, started a Bank. Christened it the Royal English, Welsh, Irish, and Scottish Banking Association. Appointed agents in all the principal towns in the United Kingdom and the colonies. Agents' premium, £100.

February.—The Bank having failed, turned my attention to foreign countries. Got a concession to establish railways in the North Pole. Immense rush of poor curates and lone widows to invest their "little alls" in my speculation.

March.—North Pole Railway Scheme exploded. Started a journal with the aid of confiding papermakers and too trustful printers.

April.—Newspaper ceased to appear. Issued a prospectus of a Slate Mine. Rush of half-pay Captains and guardianless orphans to the "Temporary Offices" of the Company, in a back street in Bloomsbury.

May.—End of Slate Mine. Took a theatre. Engaged a company on credit, and "brought out" an actor with a very small stock of experience, but a very large banking account.

June.—Theatre closed prematurely. Hurried on to the Turf, and made several heavy books upon forthcoming events.

July.—Warned off Newmarket Heath. Purchased a Church, and engaged a popular preacher. Pew rents most lucrative.

August.—Church closed; the popular preacher having accepted a more advantageous appointment in America. Bought some ground on a swamp cheap, and ran up a "new neighbourhood" for invalids.

September.—Several fevers having broken out in the "new neighbourhood," house rents ceased to be productive of profit. Established a new Club upon a new principle.

October.—Paid in all the subscriptions and entrance fees of the new Club into my banking account, and closed the Club-house. Indignation meeting of ex-members. Bought a patent for substituting balloons for steamboats.

November.—Balloons having burst, became agent for a foreign loan.

December.—Foreign loan immensely productive. Received half-a-dozen foreign orders of unusual magnificence. Built several palaces in London, covered my wife with diamonds, and drove to church on Christmas Day in my own brougham!

THE CARD-PLAYER'S PARADISE.—"The Palace of Loo."

LINES ON LOVE.

(By a Postman on Valentine's Day.)

WHAT is this Love? I never felt his fetters,
I hope they 're not so heavy as his letters.
Sure Lovers would be proof against his charms
Did their hearts ache as much as do my arms.
How sweetly soft so e'er Love-lines may be,
To have to carry them 's hard lines for me.
Would Love could give (perhaps the loved would doubt them),
"Proofs before letters," or at least without them.
Perhaps the passion pleasure brings to most men,
I 'm sure it little brings but pains to Postmen.
Cupid quotha! If I could snatch his bow
He 'd send no arrows through the G.P.O.

A DISTINCTION WITHOUT A DIFFERENCE.

(A Drama in two Acts illustrative of the peculiarities of the British Idiom of End-dearment.)

ACT I.—Before the Event.

Adolphus. Won't it make its adored happy by naming the day then—a playful little puss!

Seraphina. Ah! I suppose it must have its own way—a sad young dog!

ACT II.—After the Event.

Seraphina (with emphasis). O! when Mamma comes you will not treat me so—you insolent puppy!

Adolphus (with decided emphasis). Ah! don't talk to me, you cat!!!

Curtain falls.

NOT QUITE THE TRUE RING.

THE DARBY JONESES have been celebrating their Silver Wedding with great splendour. Ill-natured friends, recalling MR. DARBY JONES's frequent moods and MRS. DARBY JONES's constant tempers, hint that an electro-plated wedding would have been more like the genuine article.

MAY 29, RESTORATION OF CHARLES II.—Make oak-apple pie. Enthusiastic loyalists would have eaten it.

TOLERABLE TEST OF SOBRIETY.—To pronounce correctly the word "Disinterestedness."

THE SERVANT'S "WONT."—Too often the reverse of the Master's Will.

FINE SPEAKING.—Calling a Water-cart a "Patent Hydrostatic Van"!

"THE LITERARY MACHINE."—The Penny-a-Liner.

Digitized by Google

CHIVALRY IN THE LONDON STREETS.

To be observed on a Rainy Day at any Omnibus Station.

Digitized by Google

SUGGESTION TO MASTERS OF HOUNDS.

PUT ON EXTRA "WHIPS" DURING THE HOLIDAYS, TO PREVENT THE FIELD HEADING THE HOUNDS.

LAWYERS SAY, "YOU CANNOT PROVE A NEGATIVE."

I DENY this dictum in toto,
And, for Lawyers' especial behoof,
I assert that every photo
Is a Negative's Positive proof.

FULL DRESS FOR FISHERWOMEN.—Net.

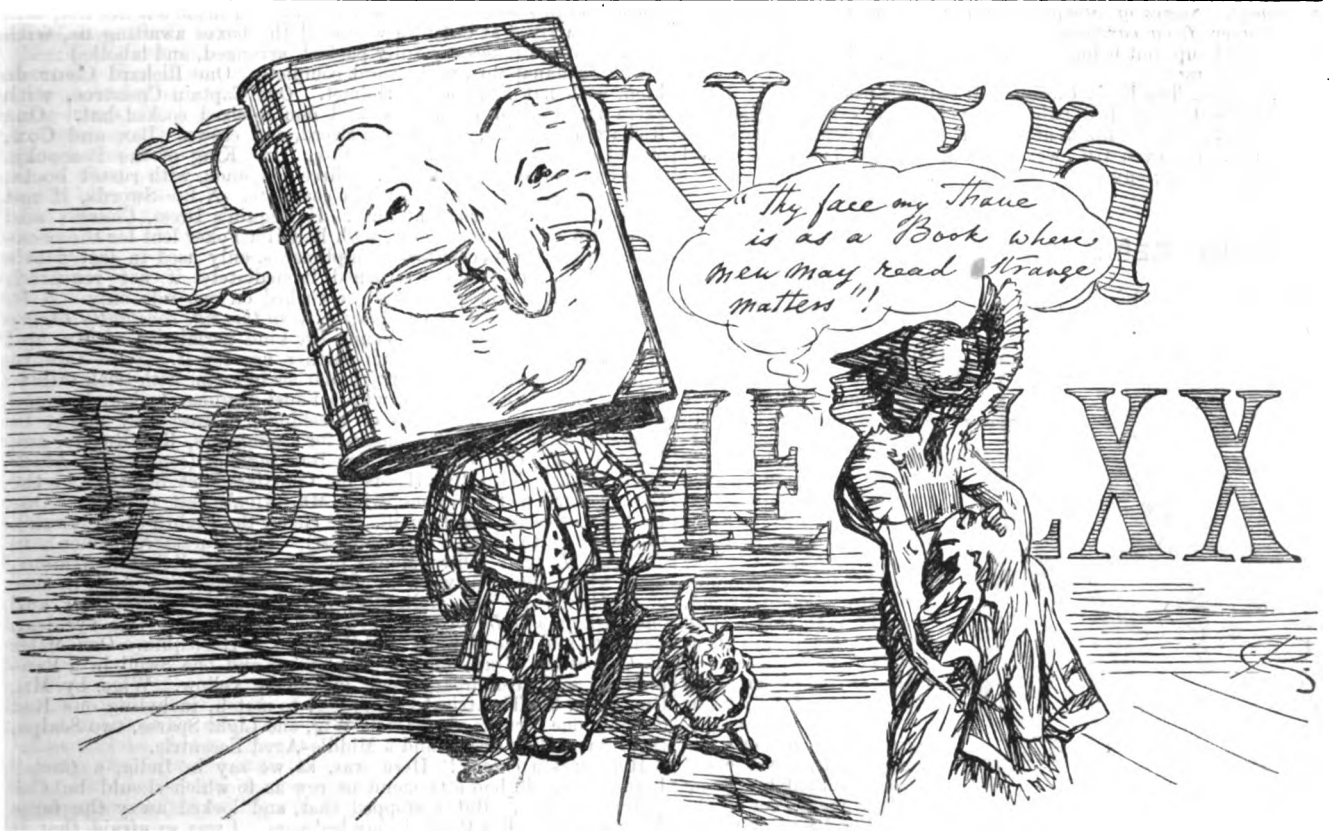
ADVICE TO FARMERS FOR JANUARY.—Thrash corn. It won't hit you again. Nevertheless, "grist to the mill." Haul materials for building repairs, particularly if you want exercise. Supply live stock with plenty of litter; but keep their sheds tidy.

THE WRONG SAINT'S DAY.—January 21. Vaccination introduced. 1799. St. Anthony. Shouldn't it be St. Jenner?

THE WHY AND THE WHEREFORE.—"The course of true love never did run smooth." SHAKSPEARE (for a miracle) omitted to add the cause—the floods of tears.

MAY 1.—May Day. (For Can, Should, Would and Could Days, See O'd Moore, Zadkiel, Lindley Murray, and other almanacks.)

CUPID-ITY.—Marrying for love and—money.



NEW GEOGRAPHICAL DIVISION. — Turkey in Europe, Turkey in Asia, and Turkey in Leadenhall Market.

NOVEMBER 9.—Lord Mayor's Day. Turtle discovered in the Calipeean Sea.

HOMELY PROVERB FOR THE KITCHEN.—Wishes won't wash dishes.

"LORD OF THE (A)ISLES."—The Parish Beadle.

Digitized by Google

À LA MODE DE FRANCE.

As Englishmen are very prone to envy the advantages of their neighbours, Mr. Punch begs to present the nation with a picture of the House of Commons as it would become were it conducted à la mode de Versailles:—

Lower House, Feb., 187—.

The SPEAKER, amidst general reclamations from all sides of the Chamber, took his seat at four o'clock.

Immediately after prayers (which were much interrupted by noises from the Left), seven Members sprang to their feet together.

The Speaker. I must proclaim order. (Cheers from the Right.) Order is the language of Rule. Without Rule there is no true liberty. (Loud protests from the Left.) MR. BROWN is in possession of the House. I implore MR. BROWN to remember that he is an Englishman.

Mr. Brown. The SPEAKER tells me I am an Englishman, and I tell him he is another. (Laughter.)

The Speaker. The House knows that threats are powerless to influence me. (Cheers from the Right.) And the House shall now learn that ridicule, the heritage of fools (protests from the Left, and interruption)—I repeat, ridicule, the heritage of fools (renewed interruption, and "Hear! hear!" from the Right) is equally powerless.

Mr. Brown. I move that the Early Closing Bill be read a Third Time, and pass. It has been read a First and Second Time without provoking a discussion.

Mr. Smith. There was once a grandmother who lived in Putney——

Mr. Brown. We do not want history.

Mr. Smith. No, you do not—neither you nor your party. (Loud cheers from the Right, and great excitement amongst the Left.) Your party has made History a record of blood and shame. (Frantic excitement on the Left.)

The Speaker. I must call MR. SMITH to order. The dignity of this House will not permit such a statement to go forth. The history of the greatest nation on the earth (cheering on the Right), the home of civilisation (cheering on the Left), and the pride of the ocean (general cheering)—in fact, England (tumultuous applause in all parts of the Chamber) cannot be described as "a record of blood and shame." ("No, no!")

Mr. Smith. I do not speak of History, but of a Grandmother. (Loud laughter.) This Grandmother lived at Putney, and was very stupid. (Protests from the Left.) She had a Grandson, and he was called MR. BROWN. (Frantic excitement amongst the Members of the Left, who shake their fists at MR. SMITH.)

Mr. Brown. An insult is only damaging when it emanates from a worthy man. MR. SMITH is not a worthy man. (Shouts of applause from the Left.)

The Speaker. I cannot permit such a discussion. I call both the Members who have just spoken to order. (Protests from all sides of the House.) We must not forget that if we all of us have, or have had, Grandmothers, most of us will have Grandsons; and those Grandsons will be Englishmen. ("Hear! hear!" from the Right, and protests from the Left.)

Mr. Robinson. I tell the SPEAKER deliberately that he insults posterity. (Immense tumult, shouts and shrieks from Right and Left, and "Hear! hear!" from the Cross Benches.)

The Speaker. Were I not here to preserve decorum and peace, I would strike MR. ROBINSON to the ground!

Mr. Robinson (rising). I am waiting for the blow. (Excitement.)

The Speaker. I shall wait until you leave this chamber. If you fall here, you will fall on honourable ground. The proper place for the slanderer is the gutter. (Loud and prolonged sensation.)

Mr. Robinson. Posterity will avenge me.

Mr. Brown. Then posterity will not have much to avenge. (Laughter.)

The Speaker. I call MR. BROWN to order. This House is not the place for recrimination. (Cheering from all parts of the Chamber.)

Mr. Tompkins. And yet MR. BROWN sometimes rides in a Brompton and Islington Omnibus. (Protests from the Left, and "It is true!" from the Right.)

Mr. Brown. A sneer can be endured when the sneerer neglects to pay his butcher's book! (Great excitement below the Gangway.)

Mr. Tompkins. This is not the first time that I have been slandered. I demand that my Butcher be called to the Bar of this House to be questioned. (Loud Laughter from the Left.)

The Speaker. MR. TOMPKINS is within his rights. As Speaker of this House, I command that all business be suspended until the Butcher of MR. TOMPKINS has been examined. ("Well done!" from below the Gangway.)

Mr. Smith. Then your command will not be obeyed. (Immense cheering from the Right.)

The Speaker. To endure is to be noble, but nobility has its limits. I am here to preserve order, but when my authority is questioned I can only do one thing. I can only take off my wig! (Immense excitement. Scores of Members rush up to the Chair to dissuade the Speaker from carrying out his intention.) Gentlemen, my mind is made up, but before I go I would ask, is there any Act that requires passing?

Digitized by Google

Mr. Brown. The Early Closing Bill requires passing.

The Early Closing Bill (which provides that every Englishman shall keep within the limits of his own premises between the hours of five P.M. and seven A.M.) was then read a Third Time, and passed without provoking any further discussion.

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(Containing some Account of the Chapter of the Star, and how it was managed, with much novel information, and many interesting details.)

DEAR SIR,

O WHAT a day we are having in India! Never were such times! I am bursting with news, overflowing with intelligence—as I always am—even you, Sir, must admit that—and I scarcely know where to commence. Shall I tell you about Ceylon? or, as I said to my Amiable and Illustrious Friend, "shall I take this seal off my lips to tell him about this Ceyl-on?"

My Gifted Companion did not see this joke at first; but when he did, nothing save my own inflexible patriotism could have prevented him from creating me a Peer on the spot. But I wouldn't have it; because, on returning home, it would be such a bore to keep up. "The Jew wouldn't be worth the scandal," as somebody said. Well, Sir, shall it be of Ceylon, or of Kandy—sweet Kandy? As I remarked to my Royal Co-Explorer, "If I speak of sweet Kandy, I must be candid." "That joke" my Illustrious and Intelligent Friend returned, "ought to be preserved." "O pickles!" I replied, sharp as a knife, on the instant; for I was not to be outdone, even though Royalty, like Femininality, ought to be allowed the last word to the end of the chapter. Chapter!—that's it! I'll begin with that; i. e. with some account of the Chapter of the Stars of India, which my Condescending and most Illustrious Leader held the other day at Calcutta. Its success—and it was a success—was mainly owing to the admirable forethought of Yours, Truly; for in these matters the ordinary Staff are nowhere,—including LORDS C-GT-N, B-R-F-D, and the DUKE OF S-TH-RL-ND,—who is what the Australians call a "damper"—which is a flat cake—where a feu de joie is concerned. But, though I say it, who, perhaps, should not, when there is a real difficulty, "Je suis tout là," and my motto is, as my amusing Friend, the BARON DE LESSEPS used to say to the KHEDIVE, "Nil(e) desperandum'" Mais, qu'il était drôle ce cher LESSEPS!

Well, Sir, when the notion was first started, my preface to this first Chapter was the following suggestion:—"Sir, these Rajahs, Maharajahs, Jamjams, Jellybhoys, and other Princes, will come in such gorgeous costumes, that we, in merely our European uniforms, will be nowhere: we shall be worse than insignificant, and the British Rule in India will be imperilled." A shadow passed across the open brow—(it is becoming more and more open every day)—of my Exalted Friend. The Staff were mute.

"What, then," he asked, "do you propose?"

"Sir," I replied, "simply this: MR. CHARLES MATHEWS is coming out to Calcutta. Let us telegraph to him to call at S. MAY'S, the Theatrical Costumier's, in Bow Street, and before that estimable person is too busy with his Christmas Pantomimes to attend to us, let us have all the most resplendent costumes that his wardrobe, and my experience, can supply." Bien, très bien, from the left. Joy was restored to every countenance.

"I played Aladdin when I was at the University," suddenly cried out LORD C-R-GT-N, with all the gusto of a young Polonius, recalling his performance of Cæsar. "It was a magnificent dress! I'll send for that!"

It was arranged. I made out the list, and before the Veteran Comedian left England he had received his Secret Instructions. Not a word of this has been breathed till now. I made out the list, and when we arrived at Calcutta we found the boxes awaiting us, with the following dresses carefully packed, arranged, and labelled:—

One Sardanapalus, with sword complete. One Richard Cœur de Lion, with flat King John Helmet. One Captain Crosstree, with extra large silver epaulettes, and double-sized cocked-hat. One Richard the Third, with boots, sword, and crown. Box and Cox, one of each, with three hats for Cox. One King of the Peacocks. Two Sprites, spangled tights. Three Brigands, with russet boots, belt, pistols, and combat swords complete. N.B.—Swords, if not wanted, to be returned at once. Harlequin's Dress, Clown's and Pantaloon's ditto, brand new, with Red Hot Poker lent for the occasion, with MR. CHATTERTON'S compliments, only used in last year's Pantomime, and to be returned immediately if not required. Banners, with emblematic devices worked on one side only. N.B. Care must be taken in carrying to keep this side constantly facing the audience. One Doge of Venice (by kind permission of MR. and MRS. BANCROFT, who have no further use for it. N.B.—Can be bought a bargain). One Dancing Barber in satin, with trick tails to work. One Mephistopheles, with a Faust disguise cloak and second dress to match. Six Pairs of Fleshings, in case they might be wanted. Five Petticoat Trousers for Smugglers, Red Rovers, and Black Wills. One Clancarty, one Buckingham (complete). Aladdin's Uncle. Two Big Heads for Courtiers, not required in the Covent Garden Pantomime, with MR. RICE'S best regards. One Earl of Leicester (Kenilworth). One Henry the Eighth (with jewels). One Shah (with plumes and scimitar). Two Guests (Noblemen), in Lucrezia Borgia. Ditto, Monks in Favorita. Full Suit of Armour, with white tunic, as worn by Jean in Le Prophète. And, in case of accidents, one Mr. Golightly, in Lend Me Five Shillings, and one Spriggins in Ici on Parle Français. One Osrick. One Tyrolean Peasant, and one Jeremy Diddler, and a Harlequin. One Miles na Coppaleen. One Venetian Nobleman, and one Swell in a Pantomime, with Dundreary Coat in canary yellow. Wigs, by MR. CLARKSON, the Theatrical Perruquier, to match, including one Red Scratch, one Brutus, one Trick Wig, one Light Sparse, two Scalps, three Short Blue Crops, and a Middle-Aged Eccentric.

Here was a choice! Here was, as we say in India, a Caste! Lords C. and B. had a tremendous row as to which should be Cox and which Box. But I stopped that, and locked away the farce dresses and the Big Heads in my bedroom. I was so afraid that if they had been worn, some religious prejudices of the lower orders might have been offended. As for myself, I simply came out as the Earl of Leicester, and carried the Red Hot Poker, for I couldn't intrust it to any of the younger members of the Staff, who might have been inclined to upset everybody by playing the fool with HORRAO DADO, of Outdore, or old RAJAH STUMJAK, who has the very deuce of a temper, and is a thorough martinet in all matters of Court ceremony. My Illustrious Friend put himself in my hands, and the effect of a mixture, admirably selected, of Aladdin, King of the Peacocks, Richard the Third's Crown, and Manrico's White Cloak (from Trovatore, you remember?), was simply magnificent.

He was followed by two Cavalier Pages with ringlet wigs, and preceded, as I have already intimated, by myself as Earl of Leicester, bearing the Red Hot Poker. A thrill of envy ran through the brilliant throng as we strode towards the Dais. SIR AUGUSTUS SALAR JUNG and SIR JAK HOLKAR—the Holkar, as he is called here—burst out into involuntary applause, which, however, at a hint from me (with the Poker), was immediately suppressed. The extra costumes, such as Box and Cox, Golightly, the Brigands, and so forth, which we couldn't use, I let out to some of the smaller swells at so much an hour; but I had a great deal of trouble in getting them back, and more trouble in collaring the ready cash. The stout little RAJAH OF POJJYPORE had got into the Harlequin's Dress—Heaven knows how!—and as we couldn't get him out of it, except by cutting it off him, he was compelled to buy it. He gave me two lakhs of rupees down on the nail, and I left him inside the dress. He will have to wait till he is thinner to get out of it again. He thought himself no end of a swell, but as he could move neither hand or foot, he had to be carried by eight Bungalows (i. e. a kind of Yeomen of the Guard)* who supported him during the ceremony.

In the evening we had a little music with SING RUMTUM TIDDIBHOY and DOREM IFAR DEEP, accompanied by the GUITAR and SIR BASSOON HOBHOY. Then the MAHARAJAH OF PUNNAH (a regular old Indian JOE MILLER, and rather a bore after a quarter-of-an-hour of him), dropped in with a funny story to tell us. But fortunately the BOSHAR OF POOHPOONAH, was present, who knows all the Maharajah's jokes by heart, and shuts him up without ceremony; so we were spared that infliction, and finished a merry and exciting day with a quiet Indian rubber.†

* We do not think Bungalow is a Yeoman of the Guard. Languages do undergo some change, and he may be right.—ED.

† We cannot understand why this account, which seems to bear all the

Digitized by Google

Next day we held a private encampment of our own, and created two of the suite Knights of By-George and By-Jingo.

My Illustrious and Musical Friend has taken it into his head to learn the Tom-Tom. A native Professor from Banjopore comes every morning and evening. I have protested against the lessons being given after I am in bed, and before I awake. If this course of instruction is persisted in, my Royal Companion will lose a trusted and valuable servant. Should you see me at your office sooner than you had expected, do not question me: merely hand me the cheque due,—you will know why I have returned.

On Saturday we had a visit from RAJAH BUNDLAR SEGAR SMOKAR, of the Bacca district. He is of a rich brown colour, very strong, and, by the way, draws admirably. He came in his steam-yacht, which is commanded by his Admiral, EIRZAR BACCA STOPAR, who was presented to us in the course of the afternoon. We sat round the Hookam (or Royal Tent of purple silk), taking our usual refreshment at five o'clock, slaking our thirst with iced Jhool and pounded Jemadar, with a small slice of Goru—a kind of pickled Jungle salmon, which would scarcely bear exportation.*

Yesterday we visited several manufactures. Among other curiosities I took my Illustrious and Noble Companion to see the machinery employed in extracting the cocoa-nut juice. My Intelligent and Royal Friend was much struck on my pointing out how the ultimate object of this process accounted for the peculiarity of the presence of the milk within the cocoa-nut, though it appears that, even in our advanced stage of civilisation, we are as far as ever from the solution of the problem suggested to all thoughtful minds by the presence of the hair outside.

Our prospective arrangements are thus, subject to alteration. Two days' elephant shooting, and other sport, with NAWAB GHUNNY BANG SHUTAR; a Banquet given by the Indian Legal Luminaries, with SIR JAK HOLKAR, the Holkar, in the chair; a Ball chez the BEGUM OF POLKAR; two days to change cheques, en route, at Bankipore in Cashmere; then on a Mission of Peace to the RAJAH MUST HAVA ROW and RAJAH URAR NUTHER, who have determined to accept the decision of our Royal Solomon.

You will be glad to hear that the Gold Umbrella has been found, at least, the ticket has, with the name of SMITH on it. The Native Police have traced it as far as Pawnee. I do not attribute any importance to the fact (which will soon be made public), in connection with this strange umbrella episode, that LORD NORTHBROOK will retire in favour of —— but no, I couldn't undertake it, or it would undertake me in a very short time. Of course I refused point blank. "Don't ask me, Sir," I said. "Give it to LYTTON; he'll like it, and he wants it more than I do." And so, as you will shortly hear †—but it is a secret at present—he has it; and I remain,

As I am,
YOUR VERACIOUS REPRESENTATIVE
(In India).

RECOMMENDED FOR IMITATION.—Great guns are advertised on "the choke-bore system." If the great guns of debate were on this system, how the Session would be shortened!

internal evidence of truth, was delayed in transmission, as our readers must have already seen in most of the daily papers full and detailed accounts of this striking ceremonial, which, to a certain extent, differs from that of our esteemed Correspondent. We have not yet had time to call and verify the facts at the Costumier's in Bow Street, but we shall, and for the satisfaction of our readers we will add that if we do not find the above information corroborated, we shall pay another visit in Bow Street, and ask the sitting Magistrate's advice. We are not to be trifled with, and, by the way, it is now three weeks since we sent out our boy with half-a-sovereign to buy a new Indian Dictionary. We have determined to be patient, and give the boy some law—and when we are in Bow Street we will. N.B.—Boy at a distance will please accept this intimation.—ED.

* We have had recourse to our old Dictionary. Somebody's wrong somewhere. We find that Hookam, which our Correspondent describes as "a Royal Tent," is "an order or command." Jhool is "an elephant's housings," and Jemadar is "a Sepoy sergeant." We merely point out the impossibility of slaking one's thirst with "iced elephant's housings, and pounded Sepoy Sergeant." Yet—as there are two sides to every question—what would an Indian say if he heard of our drinking "cobbler," and looked out that word in a Dictionary? Perhaps Jhool and Jemadar may be slang names of Indian drinks; and this hypothesis would suffice to explain "a small slice of Goru," Goru being, in our Dictionary, "a teacher or priest." One thing we do not understand, and that is Our Correspondent's description of Goru as "Jungle Salmon." Surely, surely, there are no salmon in a Jungle! We speak under correction, never having been ourselves in India, yet we must confess we are as astonished to hear of a Jungle Salmon, as we should be were a friend to send us a Tweed Fox, or a Moorland Herring. Still he may be right.—ED.

† We begin to believe him. LORD NORTHBROOK has retired, LORD LYTTON has been appointed. Had our Correspondent's letter not been delayed in transmission, we should have received this intelligence before, instead of after, the event.—ED.

TWELFTH NIGHT.

LDWINKLE'S curious treatise on Folk-Lore informs us, inter alia, that at this season, if twelve persons are assembled together in a room with a south-east aspect, at twelve o'clock, on Twelfth Night, the twelfth person should be studiously careful not to put any question (except in a whisper), involving an answer from that person in the company who has twelve letters in his name—if he wishes to preserve his self-respect, and to be safe from the fire-engines, during the next twelve months.

If Twelfth Day happens to fall on a Thursday, the last comer of the party must not fail to look earnestly towards the door of the room while the clock is striking twelve.

In ordering a Twelfth Cake, take the confectioner aside, and ask him (in confidence), whether he has a young man on his staff with an artificial limb. If he replies in the affirmative, you must countermand your order with a significant smile, and purchase the cake at some other establishment, where you are satisfied there is no defect in the physical construction of the employés.

To spill the salt is at all times an occurrence of ill omen; but to spill it on Twelfth Night betokens the gravest consequences, particularly if the ash that year was in leaf before the elm. There are well-authenticated instances of such a saline disaster being followed by a landslip in an adjoining parish, and a great fall of snow; and a Correspondent, whose address we are unable to decipher, assures us that he knows of one case in his own family, where the table-cloth, the scene of the lamentable occurrence, went, as usual, to the laundress, but never came back again.

ACADEMY REFORMS.

(As proposed by the R.A.'s.)

THAT the number of R.A.'s shall not be increased.
That the Associates shall be kept in their proper places.
That every R.A. shall be ex officio a Privy Councillor.
That the number of Pictures exhibited by an R.A. shall be increased from eight to sixteen.
That Pictures by outsiders calculated to create anything so vulgar as a "sensation," shall be at once rejected.

(As proposed by the A.R.A.'s.)

That an Associate shall take equal rank with an Academician.
That the number of Associates shall not be increased.
That Outsiders' Pictures shall not be admitted, unless very bad.

(As proposed by Outsiders.)

That the line shall be divided in thirds among Academicians, Associates, and Outsiders.
That a jury, of one-half R.A.'s and A.R.A.'s and one-half Outsiders, shall sit as a Committee of Selection on all pictures whatsoever.
That no R.A. or A.R.A. exhibit more than two pictures.

Digitized by Google

A CATECHISER CATECHISED.

MR. PUNCH has had the pain of perusing certain extracts, in the form of question and answer, declared to be taken from a little book, entitled, Some Questions of the Church Catechism and the Doctrines Involved briefly Explained, for the Use of Families and Parochial Schools. Mr. Punch would fain believe this agreeable compilation to be apocryphal, and hopes to find its principles generally repudiated. The spirit which it manifests, however, is only too palpable a sign of the times. The extracts made public have special reference to those sinful and idolatrous heretics, "who go by the general name of Dissenters." In the view of the author of this work, that general name would appear to be a mere alias of Antichrist. The bearers of it are explicitly said to "Worship God according to their own evil and corrupt imaginations, and not according to His revealed Will, and, therefore, their worship is idolatrous." Dissent is declared to be "a great sin," the sharers in which are only saved from excommunication by the culpable laxity of the law of the land as opposed to that of the Church. To enter "a Meeting House" at all is affirmed to be "wicked," and the quotation of Church prayers by Dissenting teachers is denounced sinful and presumptuous.

Mr. Punch is lost in admiration at this outburst of clerical Common Sense, and Charity. Admiration naturally moves to emulation, and he is impelled to try his hand at catechetical composition. He dares hardly hope that, with his layman's pen, he may compete in charity of spirit or in cogency of argument with his clerical exemplars; but mindful of the maxim, that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, he hopes, by framing his on their own lines, to conciliate the compilers of this catechetical "Short Way with Dissenters."

"Q. We have amongst us certain Dissenters from the accepted and Established Church Customs of the Country, who go by the general name of Ritualists. In what light are we to consider them?

"A. People of sense prefer to consider them as little as possible. Too many of them are vindictive, vainglorious, vituperative, and in our Litany we expressly pray, as strangely enough do they in theirs, to be delivered from the sins of 'envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness.'

"Q. Is, then, their form of worship a reasonable Service?

"A. No, because they worship according to their own fantastic imaginations, strenuously denying to others the right to adopt a simpler and more serious ceremonial; and, therefore, neither the form nor the spirit of their worship can be said to be in accord with sober sense or good feeling.

"Q. Is Ritualism great folly?

"A. Yes; it is in direct opposition to our duty towards our neighbour.

"Q. How comes it then, in the present day, that, in some quarters, it is thought so highly of?

"A. Partly from ignorance of its great absurdity, partly from men and women being more zealous for forms, fashions, finery, and the indulgence of their own fancies, than for serious, and sometimes, arduous, spiritual realities.

"Q. But why have Ritualists not been excommunicated?

"A. Because the wholesome law of the land does not allow the will of ecclesiastical zealots to be acted upon; but many Ritualists have virtually excommunicated themselves (or, in other words, sent themselves to a sort of clerical Coventry), by setting up a standard of act and speech which is abhorrent to all persons possessed of courtesy, candour, and Christian charity."

Mr. Punch does not venture to follow his priestly pioneers further, having a dread of presumptuous profanity, which they do not appear to share. For example, he hesitates to declare, ex cathedrâ, that the most rabid Ritualist is "not in a state of salvation," to rigorously limit the use of any prayer to priestly lips, or to pronounce it wicked, though he may think it unprofitable, to enter at all one of those places where "Mass in masquerade" is most elaborately "performed." But he would call the attention of the compilers of the Brief Explanation, to the fatal facility with which the catechetical form of dogmatism, may be turned to what they would doubtless consider base uses; and would invite a reconsideration on the part of all reasonable Ritualists, of the policy which finds issue in such impotent outbursts of malignant bigotry as this Anti-Christian Catechism "for the use of Parishes and Parochial Schools!"

TWELFTH-NIGHT ON THE BRAIN.

Evangeline (as the Offertory bag is coming round). "O, AUNTY! I DO HOPE I SHALL GET THE QUEEN!"

Digitized by Google

TINKERING!

FIRST TINKER. "IT'LL HOLD WATER NOW, I THINK!"

MR. PUNCH (aside). "NOT IT! ALL THE TINKERING IN THE WORLD WON'T MAKE A JOB OF IT!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

ON THE OLD WAYS.

(By an Ancient and Quiet Churchman.)

"There is a remarkable instance of longevity at present among the officials at the parish church of Kirkburton, Yorkshire. The vicar, the Rev. R. Collins, M.A., is in his eighty-second year, and has been officiating there for a period of thirty-eight years; the parish clerk, Mr. I. Fitton, is in his seventy-fifth year, and has occupied his position also for thirty-eight years; the sexton, John Armitage, is eighty-four years of age; and the verger, James Hoyle, is in his seventy-sixth year. Their united ages are 316 years, giving an average of seventy-nine years. They are all in good health except the sexton, whose duties are performed by his son. The schoolmaster, Mr. A. Hargreaves, who was teacher at the Church Schools, died a few weeks ago, aged seventy-eight years."

What a long-lived parish
Must Kirkburton be!
Instances are rarish
Of such longevity.

In rhyme 'tis hard to state years;
But there 's the Vicar, who,
Serving thirty-eight years,
Has reached Eighty-Two!

Parish Clerk is younger;
Still he is alive,
With a healthy hunger
For fees at Seventy-Five.
Sexton chants a merry hymn,
Though it be a bore.
Some boy must some day bury him—
He 's only Eighty-Four!

Verger keeps in order
Schoolboys at their tricks,
Close on Fourscore's border—
Being Seventy-Six.
Schoolmaster has yielded
His ferule up to Fate,
Sceptre having wielded
Up to Seventy-Eight.

Verger who has listened
Threescore years and ten
To Vicar while he christened
Babies, now old men!
Parish quite ideal
Ruled by elders sage!
Can the tale be real
In this headlong age?

When these ancients travel
To another sphere,
Mysteries to unravel
Which perplex us here,
Should the ruling prelate
Let Kirkburton go
To a heady zealot,
High of Church, or Low!

Full of bile and bitter hate,
Breathing brawl and breeze,
Some raw semi-literate
Buzzer of St. Bees
Pace grows quick and quicker,
Old ways youth eschew,
But give me the old Vicar,
Hale at Eighty-Two!

SPECIMEN PAGE OF PUNCH'S GEOGRAPHY FOR CHILDREN.

(Dedicated, without permission, to the School-Board.)

Q. What is Geography, my dear?

A. Geography is that science which teaches us the correct use of The Globe, and the Atlas omnibuses.

Q. What is the Ruler of Turkey called?

A. The Sultan.

Q. Has he any other title?

A. Yes; in the City he is often called thief.

Q. Where is Peru?

A. In South America.

Q. What is the nature of its government?

A. Very bad.

Q. Do we not find guano in Peru?

A. No; that is just what we don't find.

Q. Tell me what you know about Honduras.

A. Nothing. But, if you wish for information on the subject, enclose a stamped envelope to Captain Bedford Pim.

Q. What are the chief products of Egypt?

A. Khedives, Donkeys, and Bad Debts.

Q. What do you know about Paraguay?

A. Its Representative was not asked to the Lord Mayor's dinner.

SHORT COMMONS FOR SOLDIERS.

Prudent Mr. Punch,

We must not be too lavish, Sir—"Equi et poetæ alendi, non saginandi sunt." The rule prescribed by Charlemagne for horses and poets has been in part at least persistently applied to the British Army with the best results. Our private Soldiers, happily for ourselves, are not fattened. Certain grumblers say they are only half-fed. Because Civilians about Christmas are accustomed to eat a little more meat than is good for them, this is the time that has been chosen by Gentlemen discontented with the diet of others to complain that Soldiers do not get food enough. They come out with Christmas Appeals on behalf of the Army.

The Rev. H. P. Wright, Chaplain to the Forces, states in the Times one of the Soldier's many grievances, which in the aggregate account for continual desertion, to be insufficiency of food—his daily ration of meat in particular falling short of a pound.

Dr. Farquharson, late Assistant Surgeon, Coldstream Guards, does not scruple to endorse this statement, not only urging that the men ought to be allowed more, but also declaring that the Army Medical Department "have for many years pressed on the Government the necessity of making some increase in the Soldier's ration." He even adds:—

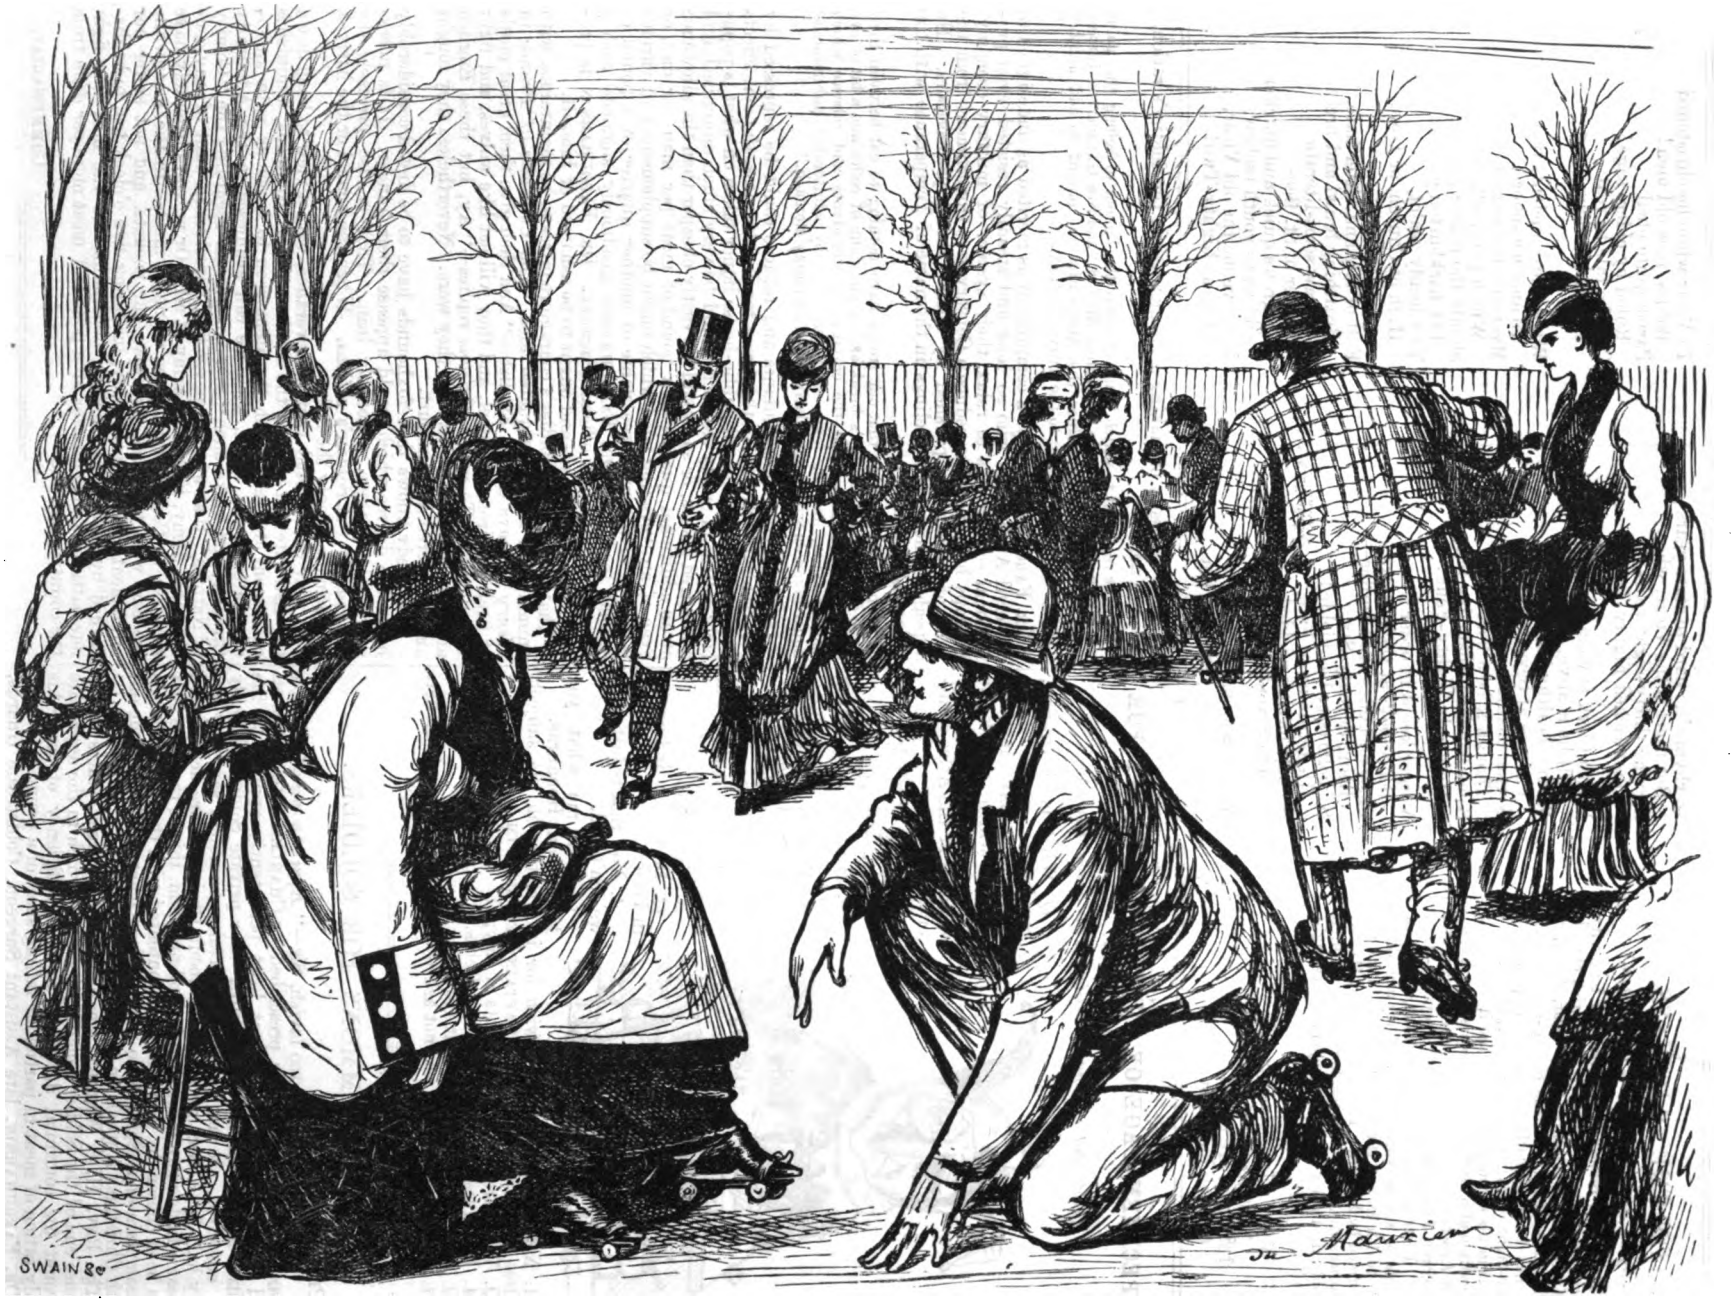
"In the regiment to which I had formerly the honour to belong this point was always insisted upon in our Annual Report; and Sir Galbraith Logan endeavoured vainly to induce the Authorities to consent to add another quarter of a pound of meat to the daily allowance."

Dr. Farquharson pays a compliment as merited as undesigned to the civil Authorities who so long and steadily resisted even professional solicitations to relax their system of military economy. Perhaps he expects to seduce a Conservative Government from the path of parsimony pursued by their Liberal predecessors. He appeals to their softer feelings in the name of Temperance with the following rhetoric:—

"When we remember that our troops have nothing to eat between their 12·30 dinner and next day's breakfast, except a cup of coffee and a bit of dry bread, we can understand the craving for stimulants and tobacco which usually exists, and the evil effects produced by adulterated public-house liquor taken on what is popularly called an empty stomach."

If the craving for stimulants and tobacco could be repressed by recurrence to flogging in the Army for drunkenness, the evil effects produced by adulterated public-house liquor taken on what is popularly called an empty stomach would be very much minimised, and a hundred lashes, or so, would be vastly cheaper than the allowance of an additional quarter of a pound of meat per man per day, or even of an "evening meal which might be supplemented in various ways up to the nutritive value of another quarter of a pound of animal food," as Dr. Farquharson insidiously suggests with a feigned deference to official frugality. Dr. Farquharson is presumably a Scotchman, and ought to be ashamed of himself.

That the British Soldier's courage requires to be maintained with animal food is an antiquated idea. The Constable of France in Henry V., says of the English—"And then give them great meals of beef, and iron, and steel, and they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils." To which Orleans replies—"Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef." So they were. Nevertheless they fought and conquered at Agincourt.



Everybody knows that foxhounds have to be dieted considerably below the degree which would appease their hunger. It is necessary to keep them reasonably lean. That is also precisely the rationale of the Soldier's rations. When the kennel or the barrack is mutinous—apply the lash.

It may be objected that perseverance, with a view to keep down the Estimates, in keeping the Soldier on short commons, diminishes enlistment at a rate which threatens soon to leave us with an inadequate Army. Well, then we can acquiesce in the Admiralty Circular, and make such other concessions regarding the "Comity of Nations," that we shall never find ourselves in want of any considerable Army, if of any Army at all. Or we can ultimately have recourse to Conscription, when we needs must. In the meanwhile we can wait till then, and save our pockets, and not suffer our enjoyment of four meals a day, including five o'clock tea, to be disturbed by Christmas Appeals, demanding for the men who fight our battles a whole quarter of a pound of meat more per diem from the country, and the Commissariat.

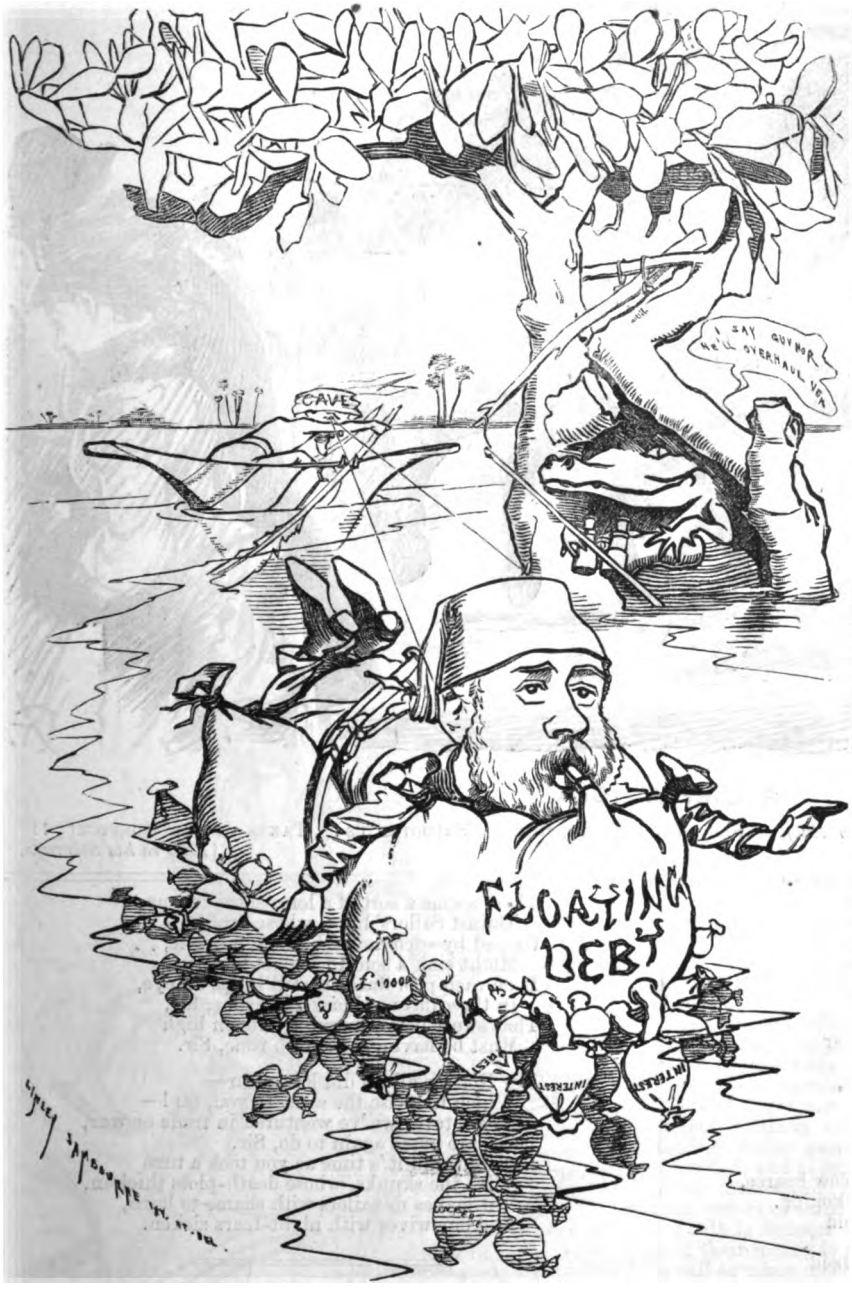
What Herzegovinians Find, but London Stockbrokers don't.—Turkish Bonds hard to Bear.

Digitized by Google

REFINEMENTS OF MODERN SPEECH.



Fair One (to devoted Swain, who has just put her Skates on). "TA! AWF'LLY TA!!"

Digitized by Google

RELIEF AND REACTION.

AN EGYPTIAN TRAGEDY IN TWO ACTS.——PART I.—RELIEF.

SCENE.—A Saloon in the Palace of the KHEDIVE, handsomely furnished. The KHEDIVE and his First Minister discovered.

Khedive (gloomily). Tell me, thou pale-faced slave, have the French Dogs any more cash to lend me?

First Minister. Light of Lights of Splendour, they keep their money-bags tight-fastened.

Khedive (more gloomily). And the German Pigs?

First Minister. They, too, Sweetness of Sweet Waters, refuse to negotiate our bills. May their beards grizzle in Gehennum!

Khedive (most gloomily). And the Russian Unbelievers?

First Minister. Oh, thou Elect of the Prophet, they, too, higgle and haggle, and give us nothing. May their shadows be less than nothing!

Khedive (after a pause, despondently). And the Austrian Giaours?

First Minister. The same story.

Khedive (interrupting savagely). Bungling dog, hast thou offered them eighty-five per cent.?

First Minister. Bulbul of the Garden of Delights, I have offered them anything and everything.

Khedive. And thou hast failed! Now, by the father of Bowstrings, on my eyes be it if I be not the death of thee!

[About to sentence the Prime Minister to instant execution, when enter Second Minister (of the Menus Plaisirs.)

Second Minister Oh, Pride of the Just, I bring thee good tidings.

Khedive. Ha! (holding out his hand.) Give me the money—quick!

Second Minister. O Blossom of the Fruit-trees of Pleasure, as yet it is but promised! The English——

Khedive (pondering). The dogs are wealthy; and yet—thrice accursed be their ancestors and descendants!—they dearly love money's worth for their money. What do they want?

Second Minister. They offer £4,000,000, on condition that——

Khedive (promptly). May Conditions eat dirt! Not another word! Get the money. When that is safe, we can speak of the conditions. Not another word, I say! The money—get the money!

[Scene closes in, amid great rejoicings.

(Three months are supposed to elapse.)

PART II.—REACTION.

SCENE.—A Saloon in the Palace of the Khedive, still more handsomely furnished than before. The KHEDIVE and the First Minister discovered.

Khedive (referring to a long list which he holds in his hand). Most despicable of dogs, thou hast arranged about the Opera Season?

First Minister. O Pomegranate of Sweetness, I have.

Khedive. Thou hast ordered the new Palace and the diamond necklace for the—(enter hurriedly, Second Minister)—Well, dog, thy news?

Second Minister (trembling). Lord of Lords, I dare not tell thee.

Khedive (angrily). By the Beard of the Prophet, has our Prima Donna thrown up her engagement?

Second Minister. Worse than that, O Lump of Delight! I crave thy pardon on my bended knees!

Khedive (savagely). I have it! The Viennese Ballet Dancers have not arrived!

Second Minister (crying piteously). Worse than that, O Lord of the Faithful! Worse even than that!

First Minister (maliciously). Ha! I know the cause of his fears. The English Dog, called CAVE, has arrived. The audacious infidel that he (pointing to Second Minister) invited to our shores.

Khedive (with terrible calmness). Well, and what is he doing?

Second Minister (trembling with abject fear). He is asking——

Khedive (still terribly calm). Proceed! The English Dog is asking——?

Second Minister (in despair). How we have spent our money!

Khedive (astounded). What! Surely my ears deceive me! Say it again, thou most abject of beaten pigs!—say it again!

First Minister (maliciously). He says—O Perfection of Wisdom!—that the English Dog is asking how we spend our money!

Khedive. Rahat lakoum! Gurra-gurra! Be cheshm! Salaam Aleikoom! Wallah Billah, Bismillah! *

[Fearful explosion. Swords, pistols, resignations, and awful Transformation Scene, including all the Ministers of the Khedive. Cave out and Cave in. Stock-Exchange Spill and Pelt on all the Bourses of Europe (no rally). Stampede of Bulls pursued by Bears. Scene closes.

* Egyptian expressions too awful for translation.—ED.

Digitized by Google

A LIKELY IDEA.

'Arry (not noticing the Captain in Mufti on the other side). "'SEE THAT SOLDIER, BILL? 'SALOOTED US! 'TAKES US FOR HORFICERS!!" [Rises in his Stirrups.

JACK TO JOHN.

YER Honour! It isn't a sailor's way
To run off much jaw for croaking;
But now I 'm a-going to say my say,
And it ain't exactly joking.
Wind, Wave, and War a true Jack Tar
Should take his chance with gaily,
But things seem going a shade too far,
And the look-out darkens daily.

The dangers of the Sea, in course,
Is things within our reckoning;
Duty 's the word, though the storm blow hoarse,
And though Death may seem a-beckoning.
But treacherous Death in our very hold
In the pay of land-sharks lurking,
Is a sort of a thing as the Jack most bold
May be well excused for shirking.

Which Wessels seem a-becoming fast
Mere Murder-traps for Seamen—
Death-dens, where the Devil's dice are cast,
The Winner some long-shore demon.
What sailors, soon, save poor swabs and flats,
Will man your hulks, well knowing
They are like to be swarming with "water-rats,"
Or primed for unseen upblowing?

Them Coffin-ships, they was bad enough,
But this Death by Clockwork 's awful,
And careless stowing of 'splosive stuff
Did ought to be made unlawful.
A cruise can't be just a long carouse;
But a ship, though dangers shock her,
Need not be a certain half-way house
To old DAVY JONES's Locker!

There seems a sort of a long-shore league
'Gainst Sailors' lives, whose profit,
Gained by such devilish, dark intrigue,
Might sink a soul to Tophet!
If on each poor Jack he still keeps an eye,
In these days of black sea-crime, Sir,
That sweet little Cherub as sits on high
Must be having a busyish time, Sir.

Yer Honour allays did love a tar—
Which likewise the same to you, Sir!—
And whatever we 've wentured in trade or war,
We are game again to do, Sir.
But we think it 's time as you took a turn
With the skunks, whose death-plots thicken,
Till it makes us sailors with shame to burn,
And our wives with night-fears sicken.

THE PRINCE AT CEYLON.

MR. PUNCH is authorised to state that, in commemoration of the visit of H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES to Ceylon, Point de Galle is, in future, to be known by the name of Point de Prince de Galles.

VERY SORRY FOR IT.

LORD NORTHBROOK is about to return home from India, brought, it is said, by telegraph wire. Or was the wear and tear of office beyond Bearing?

MOTTO FOR THE DRURY LANE PANTOMIME.—Vokes et præterea nihil—VOKESES, and nothing can go beyond 'em!

ADVICE FOR THE NEW YEAR.—Think before you Rink.

Digitized by Google

DISINTERESTED DRAMATISTS.

AMONG the letters from distinguished living dramatists (including one in which the author modestly veils himself under the name of his creation) received by MR. DISRAELI since the publication of that written by the accomplished Author of The Shaughraun, we select the following:—

The Duke's Theatre, Holborn.

SIR,

DURING the last nine years, on and off (I have, perhaps, been rather more "on" than off), we have been representing before the English people in London and the provinces a most pathetic play, entitled Black Eyed Susan, to which is appended a secondary title, The Little Bill that was Taken Up. To commence, let me disclaim for the author all idea that "The Little Bill" bears any resemblance to the great Liberal ex-Leader, "The People's WILLIAM." No, Sir, our William is indeed the most popular Bill that has ever been introduced into the House under any Ministry.

As a literary effort, the work has a merit peculiarly its own. As for its poetic clothing, I can only refer you to the songs of "Pretty See-usan, don't say no," "Susan make Room for your Uncle," and "Captain Crosstree is my name." The encores that have invariably followed these morceaux must not be taken as evidences of any violent political excitement. It is the simple story of a young English Sailor assaulting an inebriated Naval Officer, being tried, convicted, and eventually restored to freedom by a pardon granted, at my intercession, under the LORD CHAMBERLAIN'S Licence, during your tenure of office as First Lord of the Treasury.

I call to witness twelve million of the English people who have paid their money to witness this representation (and I shall be happy to call as many more on the same terms),—and I call to witness the enormous Free List entirely suspended—I call to witness the Public Press, most justly excepted,—and I call the whole World to witness this spectacle (it would be a big House if they all came on one night,—and I may add that this "Spectacle," which I call upon the whole World to witness, does not depend solely and only on spectacular effects, though we do fire a gun from a man-of-war, and there are two "working figures" in a rowing-boat—a most moving sight),—I say I call on The Whole World, ay, and his wife (children under twelve half price to all parts except the gallery), to witness this spectacle—the Government of England, with a full and noble reliance on the loyalty of the English people, authorising, and approving, through its officer the LORD CHAMBERLAIN, the performance of this play, in which a gallant Naval Officer (myself) is represented as getting most unwarrantably intoxicated, and, while in that state, acting in a manner unworthy of a British Tar, by laying hands on a female in distress, and being, thereupon, cut down by an A.B. Sailor, who is forthwith tried by an incompetent and muddle-headed Court Martial, thus inviting, nightly, a Jury of the Entire Population of London to come, if they can, and pronounce their feelings not only on a great social, but also on a great political, and vitally national question.

In all countries, from the time of Noah's Ark to the present day, the Theatre has been acknowledged a sensitive test of public opinion on Naval affairs. It was, surely, not the cunning of the dramatist (it might have been his craft, as some of the action is on board ship), nor the great merit of the actors (of one in particular, whose name my native modesty will not allow to pass these lips), that lifted the roof off several theatres where this play has been performed, that caused the audience to shout with frantic delight, wave their handkerchiefs and hats, throw bouquets to me, Sir, and compel the actors to repeat one song and dance six times, and another twice, nightly, and that cheer after cheer rang through the house when, freely inviting contradiction, I asserted that Captain Crosstree was my name? Surely there is no attempt throughout the play to palliate the offence of a Naval Officer allowing himself to be disguised in liquor? Why do the spectators watch with interest my progress across the stage, my necktie disarranged, my hair unkempt, as I endeavour to place a bottle carefully on the table? Are they actuated by their love for the bottle, or their regard for me? And, when an announcement is made by Captain Crosstree (myself), at the end of the piece, to the effect, that having taken the pledge, I am wearing a medal given me by SIR WILFRID LAWSON, why are these words greeted with hearty applause? May we answer: it is because the great English people have begun to forgive the offence which they have no desire to forget? The question has been asked, nearly seven hundred times in London alone, of millions of people of all classes, and has been answered from the PRINCE and PRINCESS of WALES, the QUEEN of DENMARK, the PRINCESS THYRA (in a private box), and their respective suites (in the stalls), down to, or, rather, up to, the humblest mechanic in the sixpenny gallery, without one dissentient voice. No, Sir, out of all this vast multitude not one single soul has risen in his place to assert that Captain Crosstree is not my name. I have delayed calling your attention to this matter until this moment, when we are on the eve of playing the piece for the seven hundredth time, and no charge for booking.

Digitized by Google

I am no engineer, Sir, any more than you are, but if I venture out of my mental depth, it is to ask you to request Mr. W. H. to go down in a diving-bell and raise the Vanguard, then repair the errors of recent Naval Court Martials, and the injuries of the Iron Duke, and, finally recall the Second Slave Circular.

Then, Sir, and not till then, will I cease to assert before a loyal and generous public that, with all respect to you, Sir, my name is—

Aboard H.M.S. Polly Phemus. CAPTAIN CROSSTREE, R.N.

SIR,

WE have produced a Play of which the universe has now heard much. We have called it All for Her; but believe us, Sir, when we say that we have had no other wish in producing it than that of assisting the ill-used publican. It is All for Him that we have now at the present moment some three thousand reformed drunkards hammering at the Pit-door. To you, Sir, the first Dramatist in the world—for such assuredly you would be if you turned your magnificent talents to writing for the Stage—to you, Sir, we appeal on behalf of our ill-used countrymen. Why should the public-house be closed at half-past twelve, now there are no more inebriates in our noble city?

Put on the clock, Sir, to two A.M., and the millions of Londoners who have flooded our boxes and stalls with their tears will bless the Authors of All for Her.

We have the honour to remain,

P. S. AND H. M.

SIR,

To you, the brightest Star on that Stage which is the World, I address myself, as I would have you believe that I love my country every bit as much as MR. BOUCICAULT.

I have just withdrawn for ever my historical Play of Buckingham. Thousands and tens of thousands of Judges and Jurymen, from the LORD MAYOR downwards, declared nightly for the space—well, for a considerable period—their faith in the dynasty of the STUARTS. To you, Sir, the only poet of our epoch, I proudly point as the man who has it in his power to remove the reigning House from the Throne and so do tardy justice to the Irish branch of the STUARTS, which the voices of a million admirers have elected to the Throne of England. For this I have struggled; for this I penned my Charles the First: for this I ran down CROMWELL, and threw the halo of a chaste but ardent imagination around BUCKINGHAM. That play will never appear again; but my convictions will remain the same until I lose my head as the great CHARLES did before me.

I am writing another piece in honour of the STUARTS, for which all the stalls and boxes are retained for one hundred nights in advance.

I have the honour to remain

Your obedient Servant,

W. G. W.

Vaudeville Theatre.

SIR,

For over three hundred nights the English people have witnessed at this theatre a play called Our Boys. In that play two young men endeavour to earn their living by the literary craft, wherein you are the most distinguished living adept. They starve, Sir—they are rescued,—they are amply provided for, and cheer after cheer shakes the walls of the theatre. Sir, there are many young men in London in a similar predicament. Rescue these struggling authors, provide them with pensions, and your heart will not feel the worse here or hereafter (although the public purse may).

Your very obedient servant,

H. J. B.

Opéra Comique.

SIR,

TRIAL by Jury is received nightly with great applause. If we were asked what it is that evokes the generous enthusiasm of the audience, we should answer, that it is the fact that the Judge nobly marries the Plaintiff in a Breach of Promise suit. Make this a law, Sir! In future, compel all judges in this class of cases to marry the Plaintiffs, and high as is the esteem in which you are now held by the people of Great Britain, thirty million hearts in thirty million bosoms will beat still more warmly towards you.

Your very obedient servants,

W. S. G,
ARTHUR S.

"COVER YOUR HEADS."

CONSIDERING that Mr. Jack Frost appears to be much inclined to look in, or, rather, to look out upon us every now and then, it seems a great pity that the young and lovely of the weaker sex (courtesy title) should insist upon wearing rink hats and bonnets (courtesy title again) cocked a-top of their pretty little heads. The saying "beauty unadorned is adorned the most" is all very well in the Summer time, when the sun is powerful and the sky cloudless, but when Winter brings his snow, frost, and cruel winds, to freeze our fingers and to tint our noses, "defence and defiance" should become our motto.

If a lover knows that the unprotected ear of his mistress is the victim of an attack of neuralgia, how can he comfortably whisper soft nothings into it? The Imps of Rheumatism and Influenza should be seen only in the openings of our Pantomimes. They should never be allowed to make the acquaintance of our sisters, our sweethearts, and our wives. Selfish man has his Ulster, with its hood; but woman—lovely woman—claims only the protection of that falsest of friends, Madam Fashion. And what has Madam Fashion done for her votaries? Little good and much bad. It was by the command of this hardest of task-mistresses that maidens assumed robes of arsenic green, and robbed the poor little Dicky birds of their pretty plumage. It was by her command that hoops, dyes, and false hair were rummaged out of the lumber-rooms of the Past to figure once again in the drawing-rooms of the Present.

Contempt follows close upon disgust when it is found that Madam Fashion is not only cruel but stupid. The poison of the arsenic might have been condoned had the colour of its green been becoming. Rink hats and dolls' bonnets might be tolerated were they only pretty. But neither the dye nor the head-dress could show the hall-mark of good-taste. The mysterious is closely allied to the lovely, and the girl who displays her face too fully forfeits half her charm. What would a transformation scene be without its gradual changes? What would the paintings at the Royal Academy be without their fitting frames? It may not be very gallant to liken the face of a Lady to a picture, and yet faces, like pictures, require their setting. A sensible bonnet should act as the frame to the work of Nature, even as the golden beading acts as a frame to the work of Art.

Digitized by Google

Nothing is prettier than a sweet face peeping out of a becoming hood, and yet Madam Fashion prefers a sugar-loaf hat or a bunch of artificial flowers tacked on to a square inch of straw or a morsel of muslin. She gives up charming frames for grotesque and ugly capitals. Under these circumstances, Mr. Punch advises his fair friends to make Madam Fashion their slave in lieu of their mistress. During the winter, at least, Ladies should wear hoods or warm bonnets—which may be made eminently becoming—instead of the tasteless and useless abominations which now usurp the name. They will find the change, they may take Mr. Punch's word for it, not only better for their health, but (what is far more important in their eyes), decidedly conducive to their attractiveness.

INSTRUCTION FOR THE UNIVERSE.

MOST PROFOUND MR. PUNCH,

You had better look to your laurels, as the reporters say. There exists an Universal Oracle elsewhere, Sir, than at 85, Fleet Street. Above another portal than your office-door it may now be written:—

"Hic stupor est mundi qui scibile discutit omne."

Moreover that other Astonishment of the World knows all he talks about, as well as you do. Omniscience, said to have been the late DR. WHEWELL'S foible, is another's forte, as well as yours. Who is that other? You are told in the following paragraph of news, if truly reported:—

"CARDINAL MANNING last night opened the Academia of the Catholic religion in Manchester. The object of this institution is to promote the study of the Roman Catholic religion, to oppose the errors of the day, to preserve the young from the influence of such errors, and to provide lectures on literary, historical, and scientific subjects in connection with Catholicism. In the course of the proceedings the Cardinal delivered an address, in which he maintained that the Catholic Church is the true exponent of revelation, science, history, politics, and morals."

Of course, Mr. Punch, this Oracle has always been at the service of Christendom, though nobody knew that till 1870, when the Vatican Council declared the POPE infallible. The Universal Oracle has always existed at Rome in the form of the Pope for the time being. There Infallibility and Holiness combined have ever, from the pontificate of St. Peter downwards, impersonated the Infallible Church—infallible in its dogmas not only de fide et moribus, but also de rebus cunctis et quibusdam aliis.

Now, thanks to the electric telegraph, for the invention of which, primarily, mankind are indebted to the only true exponent (besides yourself) of all science and all truth, whether sacred or secular, the Oracle of Rome has branch Oracles in sundry places, notably at Manchester, where CARDINAL MANNING opened the Academia, and in Westminster, where he resides. The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY can grant degrees, but is not supposed to pretend to know, for instance, how far a recipient is qualified for the diploma of Doctor of Medicine. There the ARCHBISHOP OF WESTMINSTER has the advantage of him, through connection of the local with the central Oracle. Unluckily, any degrees he might be authorised to confer would perhaps not be recognised by the Medical Council. It is deplorable that bigotry should impede the rapid advancement in scientific Medicine, Physiology, Chemistry, and all the collateral sciences, which would necessarily result from due concession to an infallibly true exponent of science, no less than of revelation, history, politics, and morals.

The true exposition of History, Mr. Punch, you will allow, is conditional on the true exposition of Science. The former and the latter taken together will set the story of GALILEO, for instance, in the right light; and demonstrate that astronomical truth, like all other, originated from Rome.

Now that the Academia of the Catholic Religion is established at Manchester, PROFESSORS TYNDALL and HUXLEY, MR. DARWIN, and all the rest of our naturalists and philosophers, had better go there to school. So had MR. CARLYLE, who is not too old to learn; so had MR. FROUDE, so had every other historian; so had both MR. GLADSTONE and MR. DISRAELI—especially MR. GLADSTONE; so had all politicians; so had every moralist—except you.

Perhaps no long time will elapse before the Catholic Academia of Manchester shall have published a Catholic Encyclopedia for our instruction in all things, particularly on the subjects of the Beginning of Life, Development, and Origin of Species, the Age of Mankind, the Antiquity of the World, the Functions of the Brain, and Physiology and Geology at large. In this publication we may also expect that the true exponent of History will unfold the annals of Chemistry, Electricity, Steam, and Mechanics, and show that the modern great conquests of Nature by means of Science were none of them the exploits of Protestant PRIESTLEYS, DAVYS, FARADAYS, WATTS, STEPHENSONS, WHEATSTONES, or any heretics whomsoever, but all so many victories won by soldiers of the Faith. And surely the compilers of this useful volume will, while they are about it, not forget to prove (by infallible assertion) that the initiative of all great moral reforms, which have elevated humanity, signally that of the Abolition of Slavery and the Slave Trade was taken by the one true exponent of everything that is good, either in an Allocution, or an Encyclical, or a Brief, if not a Bull. Infallibility cannot conflict with Infallibility, otherwise, Sir, you might perhaps be pleased to consider whether you had not better be beforehand with its other Claimants in bringing out a Dictionary of Universal Truth, for the diffusion of knowledge and enlightenment, and the acceleration of PROGRESS.

THE MONITOR OF THE OPPOSITION.

"Vernon nunquam viret."

(To the great Trilogical Druid, Punch greeting.)

LASH, SIR DEMOCRITUS HARCOURT, laughing philosopher rude,
Fools who Power from afar court ere on their grasp it obtrude.
Sharp and sagacious physician, your diagnosis is right—
No plague of Opposition like itch for ill-chosen fight:
Men who their buckrams or grograms would change for purple and gold
Go hawking about their programmes on paper, marvellous bold;
Pert and pestilent praters, confounding to do and to say,
And scorning Fabius Cunctators, who wait for the right time of day
Why weave intrigues sinister for whirling parties about?
Wait, and the ablest Minister is sure to turn himself out.
Whether Lib'ral or Tory the tar whose trick 's at the helm,
On to her port of glory he 'll steer Old England's realm.
Blunders—of course. Would the Nation one Party in power entrench?
'Tis blunders bring healthy rotation of crops on the Treasury Bench.
But are there no questions that burn on next Session's liberal list,
That you, sharp-sighted SIR VERNON, come out as a Negativist?
True, better aught than maintain Mob for king with his toadies and tools,
And with husks for good grain fob off the hunger of fools,
Yet 'twere well to protest against telling the world to stand still:
Of eloquence where is the test like fruit of work with a will?
England, the Empire Nation—mille pardons, other Great Powers—
Brooks not fainéant's station in these hurried, headlong hours;
And he that 'mong England's leaders aspires a place to seek,
Needs, to win followers and readers, the power to do more than speak.

"A CHARMING FELLOW."

IT is not every Gentleman, or Gentleman's Gentleman either, who can say as much for himself as does this modest advertiser:—

WANTED, a Situation as Butler and Valet, or Travelling Servant. Used to the Continent. Speaks four languages. Understands hunting things.

A useful servant this, no doubt; but, with a view to an engagement, he might be more explicit. For instance, why does he not name the languages he speaks? Suppose he is a Welshman, and is conversant with Hindostanee, Hebrew, and Chinese; his knowledge of four languages would really be remarkable, though not peculiarly serviceable in Continental travel. Then again, what are the "things" which he understands hunting? Are they rats and mice, and such small deer; or elephants and tigers, and other nobler animals? Or can he be conveying a delicate allusion to the "things" which are unnameable, but which are so commonly hunted after nightfall by tourists on the Continent, and indeed are too well known to need more identification?

Digitized by Google

A MOTHERLY PUFF.

Manœuvring Mamma (anxious that her Daughter's chief attraction should not escape the notice of the very eligible Young Man who is taking her—the daughter—down to supper). "MARIA! MARIA!!" Maria. "YES, MAMMA!"

Manœuvring Mamma (in loud whisper). "TAKE YOUR EYELASHES OUT OF TANGLE, DARLING!"

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

A Vision of (let us hope) an imaginary Future.

SCENE—A Room in Pall Mall. Great Military Reformer discovered carefully examining two rifles. Private Secretary in attendance.

Great Military Reformer. And you do not know the difference between them, even?

Private Secretary. No, Sir. (Explaining.) I did not take up Fire-arms for my examination. My subjects were Latin——

Great Military Reformer (interrupting). Thank you. Be kind enough to ask the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF to step this way.

Private Secretary. Yes, Sir. [Exit.

Great Military Reformer (reading text-book). "In 1874 the Martini-Henry superseded the Snider Rifle." Yes, that's all right. I have got one of each. Stupid people, why didn't they label them!

[Continues his examination of the fire-arms.

Enter the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Commander-in-Chief. I think you sent for me?

Great Military Reformer. O yes. I want to discuss the Mobilisation of the Army Scheme with your Royal Highness. But, before we begin, will your Royal Highness kindly tell me which of these two rifles is the Martini-Henry and which is the Snider.

Commander-in-Chief. Certainly. This (pointing to one of the rifles) is the Martini-Henry, and that (pointing to the other) is the Snider.

Great Military Reformer. O thank you so much! You see I have promised to deliver a lecture at Sheffield this evening on "Modern Fire-arms—their History and Manufacture," and I like to be accurate. And now may I beg your Royal Highness to be seated.

Commander-in-Chief. Thank you, Sir, I prefer to stand.

Great Military Reformer. As I am about to give you a short account of some of my Reforms, I really think you had better take a chair. Well, then, Your Royal Highness, since I have had the honour of being Secretary of State for War I have made several alterations in the Army.

Commander-in-Chief. So I have been told by all the Officers Commanding Districts.

Great Military Reformer. Ah, you must not listen to them. You must know that I have had to interfere with some of them considerably.

Commander-in-Chief. Quite so. The Inspector-General of Recruiting informs me that his office is now a sinecure.

Great Military Reformer. Well, certainly, we do not get quite so many men under the new system as we did under the old, but que voulez-vous?—a sacrifice must be made somewhere.

Commander-in-Chief. Pardon me if I am wrong, but I was under the impression that you came to the War Office to increase our Army, not to cause it to fall off in numbers.

Great Military Reformer. Your Royal Highness is perfectly right, but remember I am feeling my way. I have several systems at work in different parts of the country. For instance, at Sheffield (thanks to the Act passed last Session, giving me unlimited powers), I am carrying out the Prussian plan. I make service compulsory, and the saving in the pay of the soldier is something enormous.

Enter PRIVATE SECRETARY, with a letter.

Private Secretary. This has just come by the country post, Sir.

Great Military Reformer. Thank you. (Takes the letter, and reads it. His face falls. To Secretary, angrily.) Really, MR. TENTOFOUR, I wish you would not interrupt me when I am discussing matters of national importance. You can go, Sir.

[Exit Private Secretary.

Commander-in-Chief. No bad news, I trust?

Great Military Reformer. O, nothing very serious. The Sheffield manufacturers refuse to undertake a contract I offered to them. They declare that, since Compulsory Service has been in force, the labour market has been drained, and trade has gone to rack and ruin. So silly of them! If they are ruined, it will increase the work at the Bankruptcy Court. So what is bad for them will be good for the lawyers. It will be only carrying money into another branch of industry.—To continue: At Dublin I have abolished the Army in favour of the Militia. We do not want two distinct forces to defend

Digitized by Google

"TOO MANY COOKS."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

our country, you see. (Enter Private Secretary, with a telegram.) Really, MR. TENTOFOUR, I think I said I did not wish to be disturbed?

Private Secretary. Very sorry, Sir, but I think the matter must be important.

Great Military Reformer. Give it me. (Takes telegram, reads it, and makes a grimace. After a long pause.) I really think you had better tell COLONEL HENDERSON to order the A Division of Police to hold themselves in readiness for immediate embarkation.

[Exit Private Secretary, hurriedly.

Commander-in-Chief. Nothing wrong, I hope?

Great Military Reformer. Well, it is annoying. The fact is, the Militia Regiment stationed in Dublin has mutinied.

Commander-in-Chief. Dear me! Very strange! The Militia used to be a very loyal force. Excellent raw material, and capital officers.

Great Military Reformer. Yes; but, you see, I dismissed the officers, and don't quite know how to deal with the raw material. But it will be all right when the Police arrive.—To continue: In Scotland I have abolished the Militia in favour of the Army. (Enter Private Secretary.) Really, MR. TENTOFOUR, this repeated intrusion is absolutely indecent.

Private Secretary. I am very sorry, Sir, but they say they won't go away until they have seen you.

Great Military Reformer. They? Who?

Private Secretary. The CLAYMORE OF MACGORRAN, SIR DOUGAL MACTAVISH, ROB ROY MACGREGOR of that Ilk, the LAIRD OF CRAIGIE-BURN, the——

Great Military Reformer. Stop, stop! What do they want? Have you made them put down the purpose of their visit in writing?

Private Secretary. Yes, Sir. (Reading from paper.) "To invite the SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR to restore the ancient Scottish Militia instantly, or to discuss the matter with them after the fashion of their Highland ancestors."

Great Military Reformer. O this is most irregular!

Private Secretary. So I said, Sir. But I can do nothing with them. The LAIRD OF CRAIGIE BURN has got an immense two-handed sword and—— [Loud noise heard without.

Great Military Reformer. MR. TENTOFOUR, will you kindly find out the cause of the disturbance, and (aside) I shall feel deeply obliged to you if you will call me a Hansom.

[Exit Private Secretary.

Commander-in-Chief. You were saying——

[Uproar outside. Enter hurriedly Private Secretary.

Private Secretary. The three Sentries have been overpowered, Sir, and an angry mob—recruits, apparently, from all classes of society, are asking, "What you intend to do next." (Aside.) The hansom is at the door, Sir.

Great Military Reformer. Thank you. Will you kindly telegraph to Sheffield to say that I shall be unable to deliver my lecture this evening. Good morning, Your Royal Highness.

Commander-in-Chief. But I thought, Sir, that you wished to discuss the Mobilisation Scheme of the Army with me.

Great Military Reformer. On second thoughts, your Royal Highness, I think I had better leave that matter in the hands of my successor. Now, MR. TENTOFOUR, the cab, if you please.

[Hurried retreat of the Great Military Reformer to Hackney.

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(Why we Didn't See Bangalore—The True Reason—A Grand Affair—An Evening with a Cheetah.)

THE best-laid plans, dear Sir, will mis-carry. I had got up, privately, and, as a matter of personal spec., a first-rate reception for my Illustrious Friend at Bangalore. My Royal and Respected Companion had expressed his intention of doing Bangalore. Bangalore has not been done, but I have. I had engaged all the best Eastern Swells, troupes of Nautch Girls, Jugglers, fireworks, and all sorts of games, regardless of expense, and you can't do these things for nothing. You can't get a genuine Rajah and suite for one night under a lakh, and, if they aren't paid, they have their knife into you, literally. However, I didn't make the engagements, luckily, myself, but put the whole show into the hands of a Native Entrepreneur, the SIR SORPHTJEE SORDARBHOY, who can smooth over a difficulty with his compatriots, where I should only get deeper into the mire. The feature of the show was a Bevy of the Beauties of Bangalore forming a Royal Arch, and the loveliest of their sex advancing in line and singing, "Let me Kiss him for his Mother." The RAJAH MINZEPI KRISMARSTRE would have held aloft an artificial bunch of Mistletoe, and the ceremony, to Native music, would have been carried out in detail. The only person in the secret was my dear friend the Assistant-Secretary, who, at the last moment, rushed in to me with a telegram from England, dated Scotland, to this effect:—

"Meeting of Anglo-Christian Union. Row about H.R.H's doings. DR. DUFF'S speech. Nautch girls not respectable. Advisers of Prince to be censured. Parliamentary proceedings, Old Bailey, Newgate, threatened. British Throne in danger. Drop animal fights, idols, and Nautches. More Parsons, less Parsees. Look out for your Bal-morals. What on earth is DUCKWORTH about?

Signed D—E OF E—NB—GH."*

There was no help for it. My Royal Friend was indignant at first, but he soon recovered his spirits, and pointed out that, in any case, all the blame would fall on me and the Assistant Secretary, and then, in his clear, ringing voice, my Gay and Noble Companion sang out "I never go East of Bangalore," which was immediately taken up by the Suite, Lords C—GT—N and B—SF—D leading, and after a short dance, we sat down, laughing, but exhausted. It is the only approach to a fiasco that has happened since we 've been out here on the tour with the Star of India.

COLONEL HOGG invited us to some pig-sticking, but you 've had enough of that. My Illustrious Co-Sportsman speared all the pigs bar one, for I could not stand it any longer, but stepping forward, exclaimed,—

"Woodman, spare that pig!"

and he did. That was the only incident.†

We had another good day in the preserves of His Highness, MEER GREENGAJEE, Jam of Larstere, and in the evening we were invited to the Tayku Mandoum Club by SIR ROWJEE FUSSYBHOY, who must have his finger in every pie. There was to be a great reception, and I managed to fetch some of my other Native swells from Bangalore just in time. This was the order of the Procession, which was, by a great way, the most characteristic thing that 's been done as yet:—

The GRAND ZEND AVESTA
(carrying a cushion which he could sit down upon when he was tired—I found I must give him something to hold, as he was so awkward with his hands).

The DRIVAR OF PEKKUMRI. His Excellency TUPPENNEE BUSKADDI.

His Highness KHANJEE BUTTEE WONTJEE,
Nawab of Jogalongo (mounted).

SIR SQUEJEME TOAJELLYBHOY (attended by four Nautch Girls).

MOHAMED MEERLI ALI (The Native Historian, attended by Secretaries).

An Elephant, painted Green and Red, with Fireworks on his Tusks and Tail.

Jugglers (doing tricks with Knives). Snake Charmers (with real Snakes). Jugglers (swallowing Swords).

---

* We are not quite able to reconcile the dates. Such a meeting, under the presidency of DR. DUFF, was held in Edinburgh, and reported in the Daily Telegraph only last week; but how could Our Correspondent have received the news in time to write and send an account of it to England? On second thoughts, perhaps, the difference in clocks between England and India might account for it; or, he may be alluding to some previous meeting of a similar character. We confess we are not prepared to dismiss an old and valued Correspondent merely for a difference in clocks.—ED.

† In a recent telegram, we find "The Prince spared one pig." This, to our mind, spoke volumes for the veracity of our Correspondent. On our calling at the office of the journal in which the telegram appeared, we ascertained that "spared" was a printer's error for "speared." But, still, it shows that Our Representative must have been on the spot, which is, in fact, the only thing we have ever had any doubt about during his correspondence.—ED.

Digitized by Google

A SPELLING B.

As an independent test, Mr. Buttertub (Churchwarden and Overseer) is invited to put some questions.

Mr. B. "CAN ANY O' YOU BOYS SPELL TREMENJEOUS?" !!

Snake Charmers (supporting a real live Cobra.)	The REV. CANON DUCKWORTH (reading a Book).	Snake Charmers (with Rattlesnakes and Vipers).
Rhinoceros (with Keeper).	A Bengal Tiger (held by Five Boys).	Rhinoceros (with Keeper).
The RAJAH OF KOLLEE WOBLAR (attended by his Physician, DR. SENNATEE DOSABHOY).		The JAM OF NOWAR (attended by Three Ninkum Poopahs in full costume).

Full Band of Tom-Toms, Kât Gûts, &c., led by SIR BASSOON HOBHOY.

Chorus of Girls, under the direction of His Highness HEEKAN SINGJEE.

Natives (on all fours).	MYSELF (carrying Coins).	Natives (on all fours).

Then the Suite in our remaining costumes, and in the centre H.R.H., our Illustrious Star of India, covered with Orders and Decorations, and walking under the

GOLD UMBRELLA,

Carried alternately by SIR JAK HOLKAR—the HOLKAR—and SIR AUGUSTUS SALAR JUNG. A few Tom-Toms, Pypars, Bengal Lights, and others that I had no place for in the procession, brought up the rear.

The people of Singleloo were delighted, as the whole affair was got up in a couple of hours, and took them quite by surprise. They gave us an excellent dinner at the Club; and my Gorgeous and Hearty Friend ate fifty-two curries, three dozen mangoes, and drank half-a-dozen bottles of fine old Shuter-suwar,* and so did I.

I regret that the evening did not end so pleasantly. I must unwillingly record a scandal. But it is better for you to have the true version of it through me, than to trust to vague telegrams, rumours, and unauthentic dispatches.

We sat down after dinner not to our rubber, but to écarté, with two strangers, apparently native swells. One was introduced as ALI AREGLAR DHOO, a Mahometan Banker, and the other was the CHEETAH OF SINGLELOO, a magnate of some consideration in this district. Fortunately for us my Royal Friend's private Card Detective was on the spot, and when my Esteemed Companion was losing his fifth lakh of rupees—I had prudently backed the CHEETAH, and so was a considerable winner—SHARPUS, the Detective, suddenly seized the CHEETAH by the throat, shook his sleeve, and out came King, Queen, and Knave as neat as ninepence. ALI AREGLAR DHOO wanted to make a fuss about it; but, on seeing INSPECTOR RUNNUMIN BOSTREETYBHOY, of the Native Police, enter the room, his face became three shades paler, and he leapt out of the window on to the terrace beneath, a matter of ninety feet or so, and vanished. As for the CHEETAH, his pockets were emptied, and he was kicked out of the Club by a herculean young Gentleman, MR. H. ARDASSAR NAYLEBEE, who sent him flying into the moonlight. I was afraid that there would have been a free fight, as the CHEETAH had his confederates in the Club that night. But, fortunately for the Europeans, the Old Rajah, HOLDYERJAH NOYSEEBHOY, was present, whose friendly disposition towards the English residents is so well known as to have passed into a proverb.

The Old Rajah had but to clap his hands, and his band of Native BOKSARS would have rushed in and cleared the room in a second. The Rajah, who is a sort of Unpaid Magistrate, told us that if the CHEETAH was brought before him, he should order him to receive twenty krakhs (blows on the head), thirty bakwakhs (lashes, but not necessarily on the head), and be fined seventy lakhs. Knowing that the CHEETAH might be still about, I trembled for the Gold Umbrella, which, for a second time, had been thoughtlessly left by SIR JAK HOLKAR—the Holkar—in the Hall.

However, it was safe. I am glad this Gold Umbrella has been found—but, if LORD NORTHBROOK has retired, he has not been recalled.

I remain in haste, your truthful

REPRESENTATIVE
(In India).

* Shuter-suwar, in our Dictionary, is "a camel-carrier." This is nothing to drink. But we cannot pronounce with certainty until the boy returns with the new Dictionary. He has been away for one month, and the Christmas holidays are over Odd!—ED.

A "HACKNEY'D" SUBJECT.—Army Reform.

Digitized by Google

CONSOLATORY SUGGESTION.

Unsuccessful Son of Clever Parents (who has a theory that genius is hereditary). "LOOK HERE, OLD FELLER!—A FELLER CAN'T BE A VEWY GWEAT FOOL WITH SUCH A FATHER AND MOTHER AS I'VE GOT, CAN HE? NOW, HOW DO YOU ACCOUNT FOR MY BEASTLY LUCK IN ALL I UNDERTAKE?"

His Friend (who has a theory that Earlswood is chiefly peopled by the offspring of consanguineous marriages). "STOP A BIT—HAPPY THOUGHT!—HOORAY!—PERHAPS YOUR FATHER AND MOTHER WERE FIRST COUSINS!"

CELLS FOR OUR SPELLING BEE.

THE PRINCE OF WALES—Feudatories.
The PRINCESS OF WALES—Agreeable.
The SULTAN—Herzegovina.
The KHEDIVE—Embarrassment.
The COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF—Manœuvring.
The SECRETARY AT WAR—Mobilisation.
The FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY—Tarpaulin.
The LORD PRESIDENT—Veterinary.
The SPEAKER—Parliamentary.
The LORD MAYOR—Eleemosynary.
MR. DISRAELI—Septuagenarian.
MR. GLADSTONE—Welsh, Vaticanism.
The Manager of the Westminster Aquarium—Anemone.
MR. FRANK BUCKLAND—Acclimatisation.
The Manager of the Crystal Palace—Pyrotechnics.
MR. DARWIN—Development.
LORD DERBY—Equanimity.
The Mansion House Floods Committee—Cataclysm.
The Chairman of the Great Western Railway—Gauge.
COLONEL HENDERSON—Surveillance.
PROFESSOR HUXLEY—Anthropological.
MR. IRVING—SHAKESPEARE.
M. FERDINAND LESSEPS—Mediterranean.
LORD LYTTON—Hindustani.
CARDINAL MANNING—Ultramontanism.
The Leader of the Opera Band—Ophicleide.
The President of the College of Physicians—Pharmacopœia.
BARON ROTHSCHILD—Millionaire.
MR. RUSKIN—Connoisseur, Dilettanteism.
MR. TENNYSON—Rhythmical.
The Chairman of the London School Board—Undenominationalism.
Our Butcher—Aitch-bone.
Our Greengrocer—Potatoes.
Our Special Heterodox Aversion—Latitudinarianism.
Our Youngest at a Christmas Tree—Ecstasy.
MR. CARLYLE—Unparalleled, Octogenarian.

AN EPICURE'S EXPOSTULATION.

"I conclude that the best diet, the one best adapted to the human constitution, and to sustain the highest vigour of body and mind, is one composed of bread and fruit. By bread I mean all the grains, placing wheat at their head, and including potatoes, yams, and the like, for the cooked potato is an inferior sort of bread, so is the chestnut. With bread and fruit as pivots, we may take milk and eggs simply, or in combination, as in cakes and puddings, or milk in its forms of cream, butter, and cheese. . . . Flesh is the part of diet that can be most easily done without, while bread in some form is almost indispensable."—How to Live on Sixpence a Day. By T. L. NICHOLS, M.D., F.S.A.

GREAT Heavens! what a most preposterous planner
Of sham Utopias must this donkey be!
To shock a Diner in this dreadful manner
Is—hang it!—monstrous of the mad M.D.
(Mendacious duffer!) Are there no restrictions
On rampant rubbish? By CARÊME and UDE,
We ought to lay a tax on frantic fictions,
Subversive theories, and crotchets crude!
And yet, I must confess, my mind it tickles
To read the blatant nonsense of this NICHOLS.

"On Bread and Fruit!" Paradisaic truly!
And man a "cooking animal," forsooth!
The theory might suit the wilds of Thule,
Or mortals minus palate, tongue, or tooth;
But men in modern menus versed—Good gracious!
We might as well go back to pulse and paint.
I do protest these dogmatists audacious
Would tax the patience of a well-fed Saint,
While any peccable—and peckish—sinner
Would swear, at thought of meal and yams for dinner

The pseudo-scientific sumph! I'd ask him
If men are all granivorous. I think
To turn the edge of that retort would task him!
To feed on pears and penny loaves, to drink
Water, is best, declare our new advisers.
If that be so, I wonder what we do
With such a show of molars and incisors.
I own that time has left me very few,
Yet I make shift, though valetudinarian,
To be,—well, very far from vegetarian.

I've dined,—a simple spread of some four courses,—
And here's a fellow tells me 'tis the thing
To feed on meal (like Scots) or "mash" (like horses),
Washed down with water from a—London?—spring.
Trash! It might suit a TIMON, or a CATO,
A NEWMAN, or a NICHOLS, F.S.A.,
To dine on porridge and a cold potato,
But, Heaven be thanked, I've never learned the way
To sit and sup, with visage smug and placid,
On bread that's "raised" with muriatic acid.

Yes, NICHOLS, you may argue and adjure us,—
But 'twere to turn one's back on Providence
To shun life's dainties. Shade of Epicurus,
Inspire these dunderheads with sober sense!
"With Bread and Fruit as pivots" they'd be turning
The Gourmet's menu to a hermit's carte,
For frumety and fruit all flesh-pots spurning;
But while we've Clubs and culinary art
How vain their vegetarian whims and wishes,
Who'd preach the vanity of Human—Dishes!

London Improvements.

LEICESTER SQUARE having proved such a success, it has been resolved to beautify other equally neglected sites.

Golden Square is to be restored to the original magnificence which its name indicates. This locality is of historical interest, as having been the square of which RICHARD WHITTINGTON had received the brilliant reports which induced him to undertake his celebrated journey to town. As if in memory of WHITTINGTON, Golden Square is at night devoted almost exclusively to Cats.

Printing House Square will also, it is said, undergo restoration; and the centre will be appropriately occupied by an entirely new and elegant Fount—of Type.

Digitized by Google

BLARNEY.

Tall Yankee (just arrived). "GUESS YOUR LEGAL FARE IS JUST SIXPENCE——"

Dublin Carman. "SURE, ME LORD, WE TAKE SOME CHAPE JACKS AT THAT—BUT I WOULDN'T DISGRACE A GINTLEMAN AV YOUR LORDSHIP'S QUALITY BE DRIVIN' HIM AT A MANE PACE T'ROUGH THE PUBLIC STHREETS—SO I TUK UPON MYSELF TO GIVE YOUR LORDSHIP A SHILLIN'SWORTH BOTH AV STOYLE AN' WHIPCARD!!"

LES CŒURS BRISÉS.

SINCE the production of MR. GILBERT'S Broken Hearts so much ultra-sentimentality has found a vent in Belgravia, that the following sad cases of incipient insanity have been registered by the medical gentlemen whose fashionable Victorias may be seen any day careering wildly down Grosvenor Place:—

LADY THEODOSIA SPINDLESHANKS, impressed too vividly with the beautiful idea of a sympathetic exchange of affection with inanimate objects, has set up a large sable muff in her boudoir, which she declares reminds her but too dearly of her faithless CHARLEY in the Blues. Alas, poor muff! he is warm-hearted, it is true, but cannot squeeze her hands as her dear one did. LADY THEODOSIA burns two candles (long fours) continually before it. She is at present occupied in embroidering a cover for her pet muff.

THE HONOURABLE MARIA FRISKYFOOT sees no one. Her many admirers (she is a widow, and rich) have all to leave their cards and turn away, unblessed with a sight of her, from her doors. She has devoted all her ardent affection to the adoration of a spoon, silver, it is true, bearing an ancient coat of many quarterings, but still undeniably a spoon. The HONOURABLE MARIA has been heard to declare that the soul of that barbarous baronet, SIR PAUL FITZPOODLE, hangs about that silver semblance;—SIR PAUL, who swore to marry her when she became a widow, and who long ago consoled himself with a wealthy Manchester manufacturer's daughter and heiress. In vain she presses that spoon to her lips; there is as yet no response from the cold metal, no sign of emotion in those armorial bearings: still she will love it with all the ardour of a fading beauty, and never, never, no, never, will she cast her eyes on that spoon without recalling her cruel PAUL.

MISS ETHEL DE NIGAUD, the lovely and accomplished daughter of an old Norman House, has left London and retired to the family mansion in Shropshire, where there is no one but the Housekeeper and Gardeners to interfere with her infatuation. Every morning she decorates with holly and ivy, and such hot-house flowers as can be obtained, the fine old Pump standing in the stable-yard. She is convinced that a magnetic chord exists, connecting this relic with the Member for – –, to whom she was devoted, and from whom she expected a proposal of marriage all last season. That Pump is the object of her worship, and the recalcitrant M.P. little thinks what image reproduces him to the mind of the little ETHEL he was proud to flirt with in Society.

We believe that the accomplished author of Broken Hearts is responsible for all these aberrations of intellect, and we beg of him to consider under what a fearful weight of responsibility he exercises his great powers of imagination and invention.

DREAM OF A SPELLING-BEE.

MENAGERIES where sleuth-hounds caracole,
Where jaguar phalanx and phlegmatic gnu
Fright ptarmigan and kestrels cheek by jowl
With peewit and precocious cockatoo;

Gaunt seneschals, in crotchety cockades,
With seine-nets trawl for porpoise in lagoons;
While scullions gauge erratic escapades
Of madrepores in water-logged galleons:

Flamboyant triptychs groined with gherkins green,
In reckless fracas with coquettish bream,
Ecstatic gurgoyles, with grotesque chagrin,
Garnish the gruesome nightmare of my dream!

THE LARGEST PIECE OF PORCELAIN IN THE WORLD.—The great Wall of China.

EVERYDAY OCCURRENCE.—A Ministerial Crisis in France.

Digitized by Google

LEO LOQUITUR.

MONKEYS and men! DARWIN must sure have leisure
For work of purest supererogation,
When he spends time bringing to rule and measure
The upward steps, or downward, in creation,
Between the human and the simian kind:
That one's in cages and one out I find.
To other difference 'twixt them I am blind.

What d' ye say? "Tails?" True, Simiæ of some countries
Display those useful caudal prolongations,
While man-kind, 'mongst their other gross effront'ries,
Say their spines have no such continuations.
But who knows if their petticoats and trousers
Hide not from observation tails—and rousers!—
Like those of feline man-eaters or mousers.

What are you gaping at, you two-legged babies?
The flitting of your prisoners carnivorous?
Doomed henceforth to digest our restless rabies
In the new Lion-House—whence luck deliver us!
Wheel up your barred trap; have choice tit-bits flung:
Keep us unfed, till, with mad hunger stung,
We rush—then to our new cells—old and young!

Had ever felines such accommodation!
A roof, warm-water-pipes, two feet more range
Lengthwise, and four, at least, by mensuration,
From back to front! sure, a delightful change!
Are we less prisoners, that we can pace
Twelve weary paces more, and own the grace
Of some more cubic feet of breathing space?

Tell me of clamorous indignation-meetings
O'er Fugitive-Slave-Circulars! Come here,
And count our weary hearts' indignant beatings,
We close-caged playthings of your Sunday cheer!
Your anti-slavery sympathies extend
From biped up to quadruped, my friend;
Of cages grant more than a change—an end!

SCHOLASTIC INTELLIGENCE.

O, I say Punch, old fellow, here's a jolly bit of news:—

"FAIRS, who is pronounced to be incomparably the best racquet-player of the day, has been appointed master of that art at Eton."

So you see that racquet play now ranks among the Arts, and FAIRS may style himself M.A. like any other Eton master. I wonder now if other public schools will follow in the fashion. Harrow ought to start a Master of the noble Art of Cricket, and Rugby might set up a Master of the Art of Football. Degrees might be conferred for prowess in such Arts; and the initials M.A.H. and M.A.F.G. might distinguish men proficient in the Art of Hockey or in that of Fly-the-Garter.

TOMMY.

Digitized by Google

ON GUARD!

WR.

THE following communications, headed "The Brigade of Guards," and apparently intended for the columns of a respected contemporary, have recently found their way into Mr. Punch's Letter Box:—

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

I AM proud to say I belong to the old school, and hate your new-fangled notions about humanity, kindness, and the rest of it. Why should not the Guards take their "Sentry go" with the rest of the Service? The Duke, Sir, would never have permitted men to shirk their duty. By degrees we are losing everything. Stocks, and the fine old regulation knapsack, are already things of the past, and, doubtless, before my name is erased from the Army List, the chaco (spell it that way, Sir, vide the Queen's Regulations) will also have ceased to exist.

Remember, Sir, that Soldiers are not Boarding-School Misses. They should be tough and hardy, and ready to go anywhere and everywhere at a moment's notice. Night sentry duty, indeed! Why not? Remember Waterloo and the Peninsula. Take my advice, Sir. Give the Guards lots of night sentry work. Yes, and let 'em do it without their great coats.

You may ask me if I have ever done anything of the sort myself. The question is impertinent, but I answer you. No, Sir, I have not. I am a General Officer, Sir, and have spent the greater part of my life at Bath and Cheltenham. There, Sir!

Yours, indignantly,

The Pump Room. RETIRED HALF-PAY.

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

IN these days of progress we cannot pay any attention to the old-fashioned traditions of the past. Of course, I know that history (a subject I had to take up many, many months ago) records the glorious doings of our Army when it was ill fed, ill clothed, and (from an educational point of view) badly officered. But then our victories were won when an ensign scarcely knew the difference between an angle and an angel. In my opinion, night sentry duty is utterly useless. Were the sentry-boxes fitted up as studies, or lavatories, the case would be different. If a Private could devote a few hours of the night to reading chemistry, and the higher branches of mathematics, I would be the very last man in the world to say him nay; but merely to march up and down a beaten path without purpose and vaguely is quite repugnant to common sense. I am well aware that the General Officer commanding the district in which my regiment is stationed disagrees with my conclusions; but then, although his experience may be somewhat larger than mine, I do not think he could compete with me, with any prospect of success, in an examination carried on with a view to testing our respective knowledge of Hebrew, Greek, and modern languages.

I may say, I have devoted a considerable portion of my life to an analysis of this important question. I—but here I am obliged to break off, as the Adjutant has just conveyed to me the commands of my Colonel to immediately present myself in the barrack square for the purpose of acquiring some knowledge of a rather difficult military manœuvre. I allude to the exercise called, in civilian circles, "the Goose Step."

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Yours, very faithfully,

Mudborough Barracks and the New Junior University Club. A SUB-LIEUTENANT.

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

I AM quite afraid to write to you! And I would not see my name in the papers for worlds! But, then, I do so like the Officers that I cannot help feeling some sympathy for the Men. I know I am very silly, but I do think that night sentry duty is wrong. Of course, in the day time, there should be Soldiers at the gates of Marlborough House to salute the Prince and the dear Princess, and the darling Royal Children. If there were not, how could they turn out the Guard, or whatever it is, when a Royal carriage passes? But at night no one can see the sentries, and they are therefore useless—now are they not? I am sure the dear Princess can care very little for all this State on her return from a ball or the opera. I know I don't care a bit for the coachman's touch of the hat when I get out of the carriage at two o'clock in the morning. Of course the Guard being turned out is much nicer and grander, but, then, what is the use of it if you can't see it?

I think, unless the sentries can be lighted up with the lime-light, or something of that sort, at night, they ought to be discontinued. Don't you?

Yours, very sincerely,

South Kensington. A YOUNG LADY.

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

NIGHT sentry duty is a decided mistake. It makes our men discontented, and sends them into the hospital. Give them three extra meals of meat a day, and let them have one hundred and fifteen extra reading-rooms, and the Brigade will never be at a loss for recruits.

I have the honour to be, Sir, yours obediently,

Army and Navy Club. AN EX-GUARDS' SURGEON.

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

NIGHT sentry duty is an excellent thing. It makes our men heroes, and is an admirable remedy for coughs and colds. Give them rather less food and close the exercise-destroying reading-rooms, and the Brigade will never be at a loss for recruits.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Yours, obediently,

Army and Navy Club. LATE A SURGEON IN THE GUARDS.

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

THE whole Brigade of Guards consists of 875 men. Out of these 875 men, no less than 17,643 are constantly in hospital, on account of night sentry duty. Surely, these figures speak for themselves! Yours, accurately,

Hackney. A GREAT ARMY REFORMER.

January 22, 1876.

SIR,

NIGHT sentry duty is, undoubtedly, bad for the Guards. The men are deprived of their beds three nights out of six. In the Line one guard night in seven is the usual average. Besides this, London, Windsor, and Dublin life has its temptations. Might not a Line Regiment occasionally relieve the Guards? Out of the season, for instance, why should not the Highlanders come to Town, and thus permit the Bearskins to have a glimpse of Bonnie Scotland?

Yours, authoritatively,

London and Elsewhere. COMMON SENSE.

ACTORS AT HOME.

A CORRESPONDENT at Florence has lately favoured a London journal with details of SALVINI's domestic life. This will render the following facts all the more interesting:—

MR. PHELPS, the veteran exponent of so many grand Shakspearian characters, it is not generally known, has apartments at the top of the Lambeth Shot Tower. He lives here in comparative loneliness, with fifteen grandchildren, to whom he gives lessons in elocution during six hours of the day. In his ordinary conversation his utterance is very rapid, and delivered in a shrill counter-tenor, which has a peculiar effect on those who hear him in private for the first time. It has been kept secret for a long time, but we believe we are not indiscreet in making it public that this tragedian likes nothing so well as athletic sports; and indeed, when not otherwise engaged at Christmas time, he appears as the Boneless Wonder at a popular Circus. He has two performing Poodles which he is going to introduce very soon to a London audience, and which it is expected will be the rage next Season.

MR. CHARLES MATHEWS, the genial light comedian of this and last century, is popularly supposed to be in Calcutta. It really is his grandson who is now performing in India, but the resemblance is so striking as to deceive his most intimate admirers. MR. MATHEWS himself is now at Twickenham, where he may be seen any morning sculling between Maidenhead and Oxford. His constitutional "pipe-opener" over, he retires to his study, where he is correcting proofs of an annotated edition of PLATO's Dialogues, with an interlinear translation into Sanskrit. At the same time his love for the footlights will not allow him to remain at nights away from the Stage. Every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday he takes MR. GEORGE CONQUEST's place in the Crab at the Grecian Theatre.

MR. SOTHERN, the inextinguishable Lord Dundreary, has nome

Digitized by Google

tastes far different from those he is usually credited with. He holds a Spelling Bee every morning in his quiet little home in Thistle Grove, which the Members of the Press are earnestly entreated to join. After lunch, which consists usually of a cold crumpet and a glass of liquid magnesia, he repairs to the Young Man's Improvement Society's Rooms in Sloane Street, and gives a lecture, which he often prefaces with an extract from one of BLAIR'S Sermons. The Series of Lectures now being delivered is on the "Frivolity of Giving Way to Laughter." MR. SOTHERN rises at five every morning, and cooks his own simple meal of oatmeal porridge and plovers' eggs.

MR. TOOLE, whose very name convulses a London audience, in the privacy of his everyday life is of very ascetic habits. He retires to bed as soon as he leaves the Gaiety (a name he would willingly change if he could), in order that he may rise with the lark, to pursue his favourite occupation of fetching watercress from the suburban streams to fill the baskets of a grateful tribe of costermongers. In the afternoon he presides at the Cabmen's Mutual Aid Society, under the name of MR. LAWRENCE, and is remarkable for his reserved and austere manner. It is an extraordinary fact that MR. TOOLE is widely known under another name as a great artist, being probably the only representative of the classical painters left in England. Up to the present time, his canvases have been of a size to keep them out of the Royal Academy. He is now engaged on a picture thirty-two feet by eighteen: subject, "The finding of what is left of the body of HAROLD," which will, doubtless, be the hit of the next exhibition in Burlington House. On Sundays, MR. TOOLE is a constant attendant at the Tabernacle, and allows himself one glass of Ipecacuanha wine at dinner.

ENGLAND'S BOARD SCHOOLS AND BEEF.

E swear by Roast Beef; but the Englishman's food
Is bounded by Cookery simple and rude.
Too much of a good thing is not always good—
Though it be the Roast Beef of Old England;
Ay, e'en the Old English Roast Beef.

And now beef has grown so enormously dear
That none but the rich, every day of the year
Can afford, if they choose, such expensive good cheer
As, O the Roast Beef of Old England,
And O the Old English Roast Beef!

There 's need for the working and family man
To have his food made go as far as it can,
And 'twere far from the most economical plan
To buy the Roast Beef of Old England,
The costly Old English Roast Beef.

Then train up young women in Cookery Schools,
That people may follow Frugality's rules,
And save money spent by improvident fools,
Who gorge the Roast Beef of Old England,
The very Old English Roast Beef.

The School-Board of London, in that happy thought,
Resolved girls should learn what of all things they ought,
The lore of the Kitchen are having them taught,
To cook the Roast Beef of Old England,
Nor only Old English Roast Beef.

And Bristol succeeds in the Capital's wake,
And BUCKMASTER teaches her children to make
All manner of dishes whereof to partake,
Besides the Roast Beef of Old England,
The changeless Old English Roast Beef.

Their minds stored not only with learning of books,
Whilst taught to be scholars they learn to be cooks,
For the wise, an attraction exceeding good looks.
We love the Roast Beef of Old England,
Yet don't always like English Roast Beef.

O keep not to national children confined
The culture most meet for the feminine mind,
As though your fine Ladies were only designed,
To eat the Roast Beef of Old England,
And much more than the English Roast Beef.

Nor in Board Schools alone cause young girls to pursue
The study to females especially due,
Teach Boarding-School girls how to fry, boil, and stew,
And mince the Roast Beef of Old England,
And so vary cold English Roast Beef.

THE SNOB'S PROGRESS.

MR. PUNCH now-a-days has rarely reason to complain of the treatment he receives at the hands of his contemporaries. Years ago his articles used to be pirated in the most unceremonious manner, but since the century has entered into its second half the magic name of Punch has usually been attached to the good things extracted and reprinted from his immortal columns. This being the case, it is a little annoying to find a highly respectable newspaper publishing a letter which was evidently intended for the London Charivari. "SISTE VIATOR" writes as follows:—

"An ordinary train is timed to leave the Great Western Station, Oxford, at 4·35 P.M. for the branch line to Witney and Fairford—worked by the Great Western Railway Company with their accustomed punctuality and regard for the convenience of their passengers. (N.B.—This is fair testimony, and not 'wrote sarkasticle.') On Saturday, the 15th inst., this train was unusually full. The time for starting arrived, but there was no departure. After a ten minutes' pause, passengers began to be restive, and inquiry to be made; and a little pressure elicited the fact that we were 'waiting for the HON. MR. ——, who had telegraphed to the Station Master to keep the train for him.' It further appeared that the 'honourable' traveller expected to arrive at the London and North-Western Station at Oxford five minutes after the Great Western train by which he desired to travel should have left that station; and, as the two stations are some five minutes' walk apart, a compliance with this request must involve a delay of about ten minutes, and did in fact detain the train for twenty minutes precisely. While this information was being obtained, the Great Western Station Master prudently remained in ambush, leaving his subordinates to encounter angry reproaches. But it seemed to be clearly understood that this twenty minutes' detention occurred to oblige a single intending passenger, and not by the authority of the Superintendent of the line."

Is not this delicious? And yet this excellent story appears in these columns at second hand. The selfish impertinence of "the HON. MR. ——," and the cringing servility of "the official in ambush," are equally ludicrous. It is strange so capital an anecdote should appear in a paper usually devoted to pure serious matter. Mr. Punch knows that the story can not be true, because time and trains, like to-day, wait for no man. And yet the tale is related with a curious affectation of veracity. What shall Mr. Punch say? Why, this: that if the story is true, it really is his duty to call the attention of the Great Western Directors to the conduct of their provincial Station Master, and to declare the selfish ill-bred, "low-form" traveller to be none other than that anything but mythical personage "the HON. MR. SNOB."

Brutes In and Out of Boots.

"POLICE Constable, 22 C, said that, while on duty on Monday night in Crown Street, he saw the prisoner knock a woman down, kick her, and jump on her body. It was elicited by the Magistrate that the prisoner had no boots on; and the Magistrate said, 'had the prisoner worn boots at the time, he would have sent him to prison for three months, instead of, as he did, for two months.'"—The Times, Wednesday, Jan. 19, 1876.

So, now the rough knows the tariff. To jumping on a woman, with boots on, three months. To jumping on a woman without boots, two months. No doubt, by a parity of reasoning, the amusement might be indulged in in slippers for a month; and in bare feet for a week!

GEESE THAT WILL NEVER SAVE THEIR CAPITAL.—Turkish Bondholders.

Digitized by Google

WHAT OUR WALTZING IS COMING TO.

Distinguished Foreigner. "VOULEZ-VOUS ME FAIRE L'HONNEUR DE DANSER CETTE VALSE AVEC MOI, MEESS MATILDE?"

Miss Matilda (an accomplished Waltzer). "AVEC PLAISEER, MONSIEUR. QUELLE EST VOTER FORME—LE 'LURCH DE LIVERPOOL, LE 'DIP DE BOSTON,' OU LE 'KICK DE RATCLIFFE HIGHWAY!'"

[We have feebly tried to represent the "Ratcliffe Highway Kick," which at present is only danced in the very best society, and confers a great air of distinction on the performers.

TURKEY PIE (A PASSAGE FROM AN INTERNATIONAL DRAMA).

SCENE—A Banqueting Hall. Table spread. The Three Emperors discovered.

First Emperor. And so, my dear Brothers, you have quite excused me for taking the initiative? You see, it had to be done by somebody, and so I——

Second and Third Emperors (together). Oh, certainly!

First Emperor. Permit me to thank you.

Second Emperor. And you neither of you doubt my honourable intentions? You do not imagine that I wish to take an unfair share?

First and Third Emperors (together). Oh, certainly not!

Second Emperor. Permit me to thank you.

Third Emperor. And you do not doubt for a second that, in spite of my last highly successful war, I now wish to keep the peace? You do not imagine that I consider our alliance a convenience for the moment, and not a lasting reality?

First and Second Emperors (together). Oh, certainly—we mean, oh, certainly not! In fact, we mean what you mean.

Third Emperor. Permit me to thank you.

Enter BRITANNIA.

First Emperor (with much politeness). Dear Madam, we are so glad to see you. We thought you would come. Pray, sit down.

Britannia (firmly). But my little business-transaction with the KHEDIVE?

First Emperor. Is forgiven—nay approved!

Britannia (hesitating). And my traditional policy?

First Emperor. Is forgotten. And if all our kind friends in the rest of Europe are but pleased with our present disinterested and altogether unselfish arrangements, why then Austria——

Second Emperor. And Russia——

Third Emperor. And Germany—— Britannia. And England?

The Three Emperors. Ought to live happy ever after!

(Tableau. Curtain. End of Prologue.)

"ECCE NOS RURSUM."

(Pantomimes, Circuses, and Theatres.)

"Now, by our troth, but we must see this Surrey," says Somebody in Somebody's historical play. Mr. Punch repeats it in reference to the Pantomime at the theatre of that ilk—taken all round, and VOKESES apart, emphatically the best this year. That is, of the theatrical Pantomimes proper. Punch must be allowed to keep a special niche in his affections for the high-chivalric Ring-Pantomime, Valentine and Orson (with such a beard), at HENGLER'S Cirque, where BIBB the Inimitable almost succeeds in ousting "SANDY" himself—now a Sangerian instead of a Henglerian—from our dear loves. The two stand like a brace of Circus Arcadians, "Et cantare pares et respondere parati," the crowning clowns of their generation. Altogether HENGLER'S opens to us a round, or, should we not say, circle, or circus, or cirque of delight; and as the joy of children is the sauce royal for all Christmas feasts of fun, give us one Circus, with a clown like BIBB or SANDY, SANDY or BIBB, and, better still, three Circuses—for, besides HENGLER'S, have we not SANGER'S at Astley's, and RIZARELLI'S in Holborn—before many, nay, before most, theatres.

"Currite Servi."

"At the Madras Club nine different curries flavoured by as many different chutneys, were served to His Royal Highness."

"Our Own," with the Prince.

THREE times three curries thrice three chutneys flavour!
Byculla's plats, if not their plots, so thicken.
One thing the native Cooks won't curry—favour,
By surfeiting the Prince with curried chicken!

ADVICE ON THE BURIALS BILL.—Bury your animosities.

Digitized by Google

TURKEY PIE.

AUSTRIA (blandly). "WON'T YOU JOIN US?"

BRITANNIA (reluctantly). "WELL—REALLY——" (Aside.) "I SUPPOSE I MUST. GOOD GRACIOUS! WHAT WOULD PAM HAVE SAID!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

CAVEAT NAVIGATOR.

SOME recent revelations have rendered it almost imperative that intending voyagers by any ocean steamers, with the exception of certain favoured ones, upon which Mr. Punch occasionally, Camillalike, "skims the main," should make careful investigations and arrangements before purchasing their tickets.

The intending passenger should claim the right of examining the entire cargo, in order to ascertain whether any dynamite is on board.

After this, a careful inspection of the coals should be made, in case any torpedoes should have been introduced among them. As each lump would have to be examined separately, this might occupy some time, but to the apprehensive mind it would be indispensable.

This done, the water-tight compartments should be carefully examined, the intending passenger claiming the right to close them and fasten them with padlocks, the keys of which he should immediately place in his pocket.

A descent into the lower hold would then be necessary, in order to ascertain whether any mechanical "rats" were at work, or ready to begin their work of boring holes through the ship's bottom.

Presuming that all had gone well so far, an arrangement should be made with the captain, by which the intending passenger should be at liberty to see that every light is extinguished on board at a given hour, while insisting, besides, on the right of keeping for himself a private look-out ahead as a precaution against collisions, particularly in quarters frequented by Her Majesty's cruisers.

After being rowed round the vessel, in order to inspect the load-line, it would be advisable that the intending passenger should go ashore and make his will, at the same time taking a tender farewell of his friends and relatives.

These few preliminaries being adjusted, there would be no objection to paying for the ticket and proceeding again on board, it being, of course understood that the intending passenger has a Boyton dress, or, perhaps, a collapsible boat in preference, and (if his means permit) has chartered a private steamer, or stout sea-going tug, to sail in company with the vessel in which he is going, in case of accident.

Other precautions might, of course, be taken, but the above would, we believe, go far towards tranquillising a nervous temperament, and even ensuring sound sleep, at more or less widely separated intervals of time.

EXPERIMENT IN STREET-CLEANING.

READERS of the Rock will probably rejoice to find it therein stated that—

"A Carman was brought on Tuesday before the LORD MAYOR, charged with unlawfully using profane, indecent, and obscene language in Billingsgate Market. The charge was made at the instance of a Committee appointed at a recent wardmote for the purpose of endeavouring to put down the practice of using foul language."

This Carman might as well have carried coals to Newcastle, as bad language to Billingsgate. We are told he was dismissed with a caution from his Lordship, which we hope may render him more cleanly in his speech.

Perhaps, when Billingsgate is purified, and the neighbourhood adjacent, the Committee may extend their work to the West End. A stroll on Sunday in the Parks, or the thoroughfares contiguous, might convince them that bad language is not confined to Billingsgate, and that juvenile offenders need to be corrected quite as fully as adults. Filthy words are used by children of both sexes, who appear to take a pleasure in bawling them aloud. How to cleanse these little foul mouths is a great social question, which we fear that the Committee (to whom we wish good speed most heartily) will find it hard to solve. In morals, as in medicine, a foul tongue is a certain indication of disease, and when children are afflicted with it, they may be bettered sometimes by a dose from Dr. Birch.

A WARNING FROM NEPTUNE.

BRITANNIA! Hoy! Belay, my lass! What 's all this yarn I hear
About this last new notion of the go-ahead Engineer?
Come, take a seat here at my feet, where oft you 've sat and heard
Your old salt-sea-sire's voice, whose ring your blood has ever stirred.

Of late you 've used me scurvily. I 've blushed for very shame
At things that brutes and bunglers have done to soil your name:
Scuttled ships, sunken seamen, and Slave-Circulars are not
The sort of things to feed my pride, or keep your blue from blot.

BOYTON and WEBB I winked at. I liked the Briton's grit.
If the Yankee's gutta-percha suit seemed to me a misfit,
We 'll pass all that. But this new game is coming it too strong.
Take NEP'S advice, and stop it, girl; the C.E.'s are all wrong.

The best gift you owe destiny is old NEP'S emerald ring,
To break it, for whatever bribe, will never blessing bring.
Your Engineers are clever, but they 'll serve you ill who seek
To rob you of the safeguard of your guarding Silver Streak.

I set you 'midst my subject seas and girdled in with foam
Your isle for freedom's fortress, its altar and its home.
Beware, lass, how you break the spell! Think not my words a joke,—
'Tis sea-bonds clinch the fibres of your English Hearts of Oak.

To bore beneath or build above the barrier set by me
Between your bastion cliffs and foes and rivals over-sea,
Is casting carelessly away your citadel's best guard,
Where patriot vigilance should keep its keenest watch and ward.

Eh? "Selfish insularity"? BRITANNIA, my lass,
Don't be the fool of phrases! Helpful sympathy will pass,
By lightning flash, or force of cash, or steel—should need arise;
You will not want a Tunnel, girl, to carry such supplies.

But foot-dry passage fixed and fast might bring your foes to you,
Or help your mutineers,—such may be in every crew.
You 're far more stout than ready, watching 's less your line than fight,
And, should they take you by surprise, old NEP can't help your plight!

In vain your ships might scour the seas should some dull blunderer doze,
And let rogues snatch your street-door key under his snoring nose.
You 've had some lubbers in your crew. How would a Nelson feel
With foes who 'd slip from shore to shore beneath his very keel?

Though all, in piping times of peace, are welcome to your land,
Remember that Achilles' heel could lame Achilles' hand.
Seeing old NEP has served you well by setting you apart,
The safety Nature gave you do not you give up to Art.

Why should you? What are doubtful gains, in cash or comfort, weighed
With ne'er so faint a chance of foes within your walls conveyed?
Are shores inviolate a boon to risk with calm content,
For boo-hoo of sea-sick tourists or bait of cent. per cent.?

Nay, let the Silver Streak still roll unbridged, unburrowed still,
Still girdle with its shifting sheen stout heart and strenuous will,
Though cosmopolitans declaim and engineers devise.
It means security from shock, and safety from surprise.

Self-centred, billow-circled, let BRITANNIA still abide,
Though insular not isolate; swept by no sudden tide
Of foeman or of fever-fit from any foreign shore,
When the Red Spectre raves abroad or war's slipped ban-dogs roar!

On Opposite Sides.

MR. PUNCH, the general Arbiter Elegantiarum, being asked his opinion of the present Ladies' dress, with his usual taste and readiness replied, "I highly approve the present fashion, comprehending as it does the highest graces of two of the most distinguished types of female beauty—modelled in front on the Venus de' Medici, behind, on the Venus de Hottentot!"

WESTMINSTER AQUARIUM THEATRE (Programme). — Overture: Tancredi. Fish Out of Water. Seeking Plaice. Whitebait at Greenwich.

Digitized by Google

RECRIMINATION.

Inhabitant of Uist. "I SAY, THEY 'LL PE SPEAKING FA-AR PETTER ENGLISH IN UIST THAN IN STYORNAWAY."

Lass of the Lewis. "PUT IN STYORNAWAY THEY 'LL NOT PE CAA-IN' FUSH 'FEESH,' WHATEFER!"

THE LATEST CREED.

"Let MR. ••••••• write me a letter—a calm letter—and say he believes in the Devil, and I will give him the Sacrament."—A certain Vicar. See Times, Jan. 20.

O, CHURCH of England, whither dost thou wend,
Driven by heady Bishops, Rectors, Vicars?
Whose altar-flame, ere it to Heaven ascend,
Viâ the sulphurous mouth of Hades flickers.
Your life in charity and virtue spend;
Abstain from rant and cant, cigars and liquors;
Live, like Stylites, on the loftiest level—
In vain, unless you own a personal Devil.

There are innumerable devils, surely:
The printer's devil hath his share of fame;
There 's Mephistopheles, who tempts impurely;
There 's sly Asmodeus, gossip-demon lame;
Old Nick from a bright eye may peep demurely;
There are blue devils, devilled biscuits, game—
Punch, who has known more than one atheist,
Would stare to meet an adiabolist.

O Vicar, if the Devil 's in the Creed,
Is he the Attorney-General of JOB,
Who is allowed his run of ADAM'S seed,
A dignitary clad in wig and robe,
Ornate in manner, plausible to plead,
The Public Prosecutor of the globe?
Or has he horns, tail, hoofs, which, if you scan 'em all,
Combine into a graminivorous animal?

It seems a satire upon things religious,
When two Archbishops and the Chancellor
Have to decide betwixt two folk litigious
Whether the Devil is or is not, or—
Seeing the might of Love and Power prodigious—
How the deuce he 's to be accounted for.
The cleric mind in quarrels seems to revel:
Devil or none, some clerks will play the Devil!

QUITE IN THEIR LINE.

THE question has been asked why MR. HOLMS selected Sheffield as the place for his first speech on Army Reform. He knew the people of that busy manufacturing town must take a deep interest in rank and file.

THE PLAGUE.

MR. PUNCH,

I SEE by the public prints that a paper has been read to show there is a "prospect of a reappearance of Plague in this country and on the Continent of Europe." The Continent of Europe I leave to others, but I fearlessly assert that Plague has never disappeared from England. My proofs are set out below. I challenge all the Medical Officers of Health, and all the professional journals, and all the learned societies, to gainsay or contradict them.

A SUFFERER OF MANY YEARS' STANDING.

What a plague it is when the boys are all home for the holidays, and there comes a week of wet weather!
What a plague it is when the house has to be cleaned!
What a plague tiresome children are!
What a plague Rates and Taxes are!
What a plague Bills are!
What a plague Bores are!
What a plague it is when your wife and daughters insist on your giving a dance!
What a plague smoky chimneys are!
What a plague Beggars and Organ-grinders are!
What a plague Circulars and "Appeals" are!
What a plague it is when the Drains have to be looked to, or the pipes burst, or the kitchen boiler gets out of order!
What a plague—"the greatest plague of life"—Servants are!

Fine Opening for a Young Man.

IT is stated that the vacant Lordship of the Treasury is to be filled up by the appointment of VISCOUNT CRICHTON. The new Lord will have an unexampled opportunity of reviving in his own person, by the most strenuous devotion to the duties of his office, the proud title of the "Admirable CRICHTON."

THE QUEEN v. CURLING.

SOME young Englishwomen, whose studies are limited to the Fashion Books, may, probably have stared at the following announcement in a fashionable Contemporary, if they ever read anything so rational as a daily paper:—

"A DISCOURAGEMENT TO CURLERS.—The Balmoral Curling Club, which only played its maiden game last winter, has ceased to exist, orders having been sent to all the members of the Club on the Royal estates to discontinue the game."

That, however, the "maiden game" of curling has nothing to do with any capillary arrangement will be deducible by the least reasoning of young Ladies from what follows:—

"HER MAJESTY is understood to have disapproved of the game, owing to its tendency to encourage a love for whiskey."

It must be obvious to the meanest capacity, that the discouragement to Curlers, given, according to the above statement, by Royal prohibition, is nothing that girls have any occasion to trouble their heads about. Though, even if it concerned the head-dress at all, it would not concern them; for curls are not fashionable, and it is only those girls who think, in a measure, for themselves, and possess some little mind and taste of their own, that are capable of curling their hair, if curls become them better than the chignon, or top-knot, or whatever it is called, howsoever grotesque, which is the general wear.

PLURAL AND SINGULAR.

IRELAND has Home Rulers. When the Member for Hackney is installed at the War Office, England will have a HOLMS Ruler.

CONCLUSION OF A CHEESEMONGER.—Mite is right.

Digitized by Google

TOLERANCE.

The Parson's Daughter. "I'M GLAD TO HEAR THAT YOU DON'T OBJECT TO A FEW CANDLES BEING PLACED ON THE ALTAR THESE DARK EVENINGS, MRS. BROWN!"

The Sextoness. "BLESS YOU, MISS, I SEE THEY WASN'T ROMAN CANDLES—ONLY COMPOSITES!"

THE FIRST CABINET COUNCIL OF THE YEAR.

WHAT THEY DID.

THEY assembled round a large fire—an admirable receptacle for Admiralty Minutes and Slave Circulars. Some one added fuel to it: who it was is not clear. A great waste-paper basket standing handy was also not without its suggestiveness.

They talked about the weather, the floods, shipping disasters, the state of the nation, and—for some of the Ministers had walked—of the streets.

Then they commenced business.

MR. DISRAELI proposed a riddle (like the Sphinx), and alluded to some Canal Shares he had lately bought.

The LORD CHANCELLOR placed a mark in one of the many treatises on the New Judicature Act which he had been reading, and laid down the law.

The DUKE OF RICHMOND, LENNOX, DAUBIGNY, AND GORDON, described the delightful sensation of feeling like four single Dukes rolled into one.

The EARL OF MALMESBURY played with a seal.

MR. SECRETARY CROSS hummed "Home! Sweet Home!"

MR. SECRETARY HARDY did not hum "HOLMS, sweet HOLMS!" On the contrary, he startled his colleagues by uttering a loud War-cry of defiance. Afterwards he calmed down, and asked the Council their opinion as to the correct spelling of Mobilization—whether with "z," or "s."

The EARL OF CARNARVON was engrossed with FROUDE.

The MARQUIS OF SALISBURY related anecdotes of the Prince's tour in India, and quoted "OWEN MEREDITH" à propos of LORD LYTTON going to "hear the leopard in the hills."

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER looked cheerful and happy in such Friendly Society. Then a shade passed across his face. Was he thinking of the Deputations that awaited him before Budget night? But he soon brightened up, when he thought of the Probate Duty payable on BARON ROTHSCHILD'S Will.

MR. G. WARD HUNT sat plunged in deep reverie, and was silent for many (Admiralty) minutes together. Perhaps he was reflecting how far preferable was the Bench at Quarter Sessions to the quarter-deck.

LORD JOHN MANNERS did his best to swell the revenue of his own department by writing letters and sending telegrams.

The EARL OF DERBY, after a brief consultation with MR. DISRAELI and one or two more, answered a note from a foreign correspondent. The post-mark was "Vienna," and the signature "ANDRASSY."

Business being thus concluded, all the Ministers joined in a Spelling Bee, and enjoyed it so thoroughly, that, when the meeting broke up, summonses were immediately issued for another Cabinet Council (and another Spelling Bee) on the following day.

MAMMON'S METAMORPHOSIS.

A BULL and Bear together sat,
In friendly and convivial chat;
Together they are wont to sup,
Though this tear down, and that toss up:
Both look for Danaë's golden rain,
Both drink the very best champagne;
Both can assume a human shape
More palpable than DARWIN'S Ape.

They discussed Stocks of all descriptions,
Spaniards, Peruvians, Turks, Egyptians;
Each had his visions unsubstantial,
And prated much of schemes financial,
And each beyond the other went
As to the right amount per cent.,
While Mr. Punch, the wise and witty,
Who does no business in the City;
Caught casual words (he scorned to listen),
Watched the grim gossips' keen eyes glisten,
As through the world they took their range
From their standpoint—the Stock Exchange,
That Parc aux cerfs of Mammon King—
That fouler, fatter, Betting Ring.

Bull and Bear gone, Punch felt relieved,
Yet over greed and folly grieved.
He sipped his port of many summers,
Nectar, uncorked not for chance comers—
For such it were a serious sin
To tap the Poet Laureate's bin—
And thought how many weak outsiders
Play flies to these stock-jobbing spiders.
Up go their ticklish wares, or down
There's joy or panic in the Town:
None seem to see that down or up
Means nothing in an empty cup;
That nations which their coin have spent,
Although they promise ten per cent.,
Can never pay you five or three—
Since "What's impossible can't be."

Punch, as he smoked his last cigar,
Blest his unspeculative star,
Pitied the fate of foolish folk
Who 'll buy an egg with addled yolk
When knaves who sell with might and main
Swear 'twill one day be fresh again.
His verdict on the case is this:
There's no such metamorphosis.
Till blood for sawdust out of dolls
You draw, Turks won't tap like Consols.
Though Bears that hug and Bulls that toss
May hocus-pocus gain and loss,
Though with their "High, Low, Presto, Pass!"
Confounding wits of owl and ass,
They ring the changes—here and there—
From Bear to Bull, from Bull to Bear!

Topics for My Trilogy.

(Offered by SIR W. V—— H——, M.P., to his Constituents at Oxford.)

1. SUET.
2. Sewage.
3. Soft-sawder.

Digitized by Google

A GOOD HEARING FOR MASTER.

(Honoured Guest at big Country-house is invited by affable Butler to walk through the Cellars. After passing bins innumerable of choicest Vintages, they come to a cask marked "Whiskey.")

Guest. "AH! HA! SO YOU'VE BEEN LAYING IN THE FASHIONABLE DRINK, I SEE! THE DOCTORS ARE ALL MAD ABOUT IT."

Affable Butler. "YEZZIR—LESS HACID, THEY SAY, IN GOOD MALT WISKY THAN IN ANY FORM OF ALCO'OL. I'VE TOOK TO IT MYSELF. IN FACT, I MAY SAY I'VE QUITE GIVEN UP CHAMPAGNES, CLARETS, BURGUNDIES, AND 'OCKS!"

A GREAT BARGAIN.

MR. PUNCH is prepared to sell for whatever they will fetch the following assortment of valuable articles, being the contents of his waste-paper basket for the last fortnight:—

1347 Jokes on the subject of Wales being in India.

Seven Comic Songs with the refrain of "Tell Mamma we are Happy."

964 allusions to the name of the First Lord of the Admiralty.

233 Letters containing puns on the name of MR. CAVE.

One admirable Riddle on the same. "Why is the KHEDIVE like a bear?—Because he has got a Cave." N.B.—The name and address of the Author of this production will be included in the Lot.

One letter from a Gentleman, asking that he may be put on the Free List of Punch, and be supplied with all the back volumes gratis, on the ground that his wife's uncle once sent a joke to Punch, which was not inserted.

Two letters from Gentlemen asking why the "bloted arristocrasy" is not more stingingly pitched into.

Thirty-two Poems in praise of various popular Actresses.

Seventeen Cartoons.

Seventeen letters from the Authors of the above wanting to know why they are not used.

Seventeen more letters from the same, severely sarcastic, and informing Mr. Punch that seventeen horsewhippings are in store for him.

5976 old Joes, cribs from back numbers of Punch, and misprints copied out of country newspapers.

A CONCISE CRITICISM ON THE NEW COMEDY AT THE GAIETY.—Sum Total = Sam Tottles.

BIRDS AND FOWLERS.

ACCORDING to a letter from Rome in the Union:—

"The MARQUIS OF RIPON was received a first time in private audience, and attended on Sunday at his Holiness's mass in his private chapel. In a second audience his Lordship had the honour of presenting to the Holy Father LADY RIPON, whose early conversion is hoped for."

Not long before, the MARQUIS OF RIPON had presented the POPE with £10,000. Some people and their money are soon parted. In presenting his wife to the Holy Father, he cannot as yet be said to have made his Holiness a still handsomer present. That he will be fully enabled to do so on an early day, however, "is hoped for." In the pheasant-cover it used to be a saying among sportsmen that "where the cock is, the hen is not far off." The parties who hope for the MARCHIONESS OF RIPON'S conversion reckon, perhaps, without their hostess, and pay a rational Lady, besides, a bad compliment if, in reliance on that saying, they fondly expect that where the gander has gone, the goose will follow.

Sic Vos non Vobis mellificatis, Apes!

How doth the little Spelling Bee
Test orthographic power,
And work strange spells of grammarye
Out of each platform-flower!

But Bees that buzz about agree
That 'tis a shocking sight
When Ladies of good family
Take shots, and don't shoot right.

DEGREES FOR WOMEN.—Fair, fairer, fairest.

Digitized by Google

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

ALCUTTA — en route — Jummoo—Lahore—Most interesting particulars—The Vie Intime—Prospects.

MY VERY DEAR SIR,

You did not get a letter from me last week because the weather was so dreadfully bad there was nothing doing, at least worth mentioning. The Golden Umbrella was of no more use against those severe falls in Downpore than a parasol under Niagara. Fortunately we were well entertained by the RAJAH OF INDORE, and so did not care about going out.

We had the Punjabbers (native jesters) in for an hour or two, and then sat down to a Spelling Bee. I gave 'em a word which floored them all: it was "Wasp." The D—E OF S-TH-RL-D borrowed a pocket dictionary from the Assistant-Secretary, who was just on the point of handing it to him, when I called out, in excellent Hindostanee, "On skral!" and my Accomplished and Royal Patron observed, with more severity perhaps than the occasion actually required, that "if they couldn't play fair, they shouldn't play at all," which intimation, I am glad to say, had the desired effect.

L-RD C-R-NGT-N spelt it "Wopps"—but he was educated at Cambridge. L-RD B-R-S-F-RD spelt it "Warsp"—and lost two rupees by having backed himself to win. The D-E OF S-TH-RL-ND was very much annoyed on being informed that "Wosp" was a mistake, though not bad phonetically; and W. H. R-SS-LL accounted for his rendering of it as "Whops" by informing us that this was in reality the Celtic origin of the word. We did not, however, give him a second chance, and ultimately it was won by my Learned and Exalted Companion, who, with the greatest ease, hit it off correctly the very first time of asking. After this the children of SIR JEEJEE JUPMEBHOY came in and played horses, while we sat round the room on cushions, smoking howdahs and sipping mussalgee (a sort of sweet liquorice-water having rather the flavour of oysters).*

After this the children were taken off to bed by SINGH LULLAH LULLABY, the Ayah night-nurse, whose sole office in the establishments of the wealthiest Hindoos is to soothe the children to sleep with a sort of dull monotonous snake-charming melody.

Then SIR JÂK HOLKAR—the HOLKAR—begged leave to introduce some lovely Parsee Ladies, and, having received the gracious permission from my most Polite and Amiable Companion, the "most Parsee-able of the Parsee Ladies," as I whispered to my Exalted Neighbour (who could scarcely keep his countenance, the joke tickled him so thoroughly), were presented to us: then, taking their hands, the band struck up, and we

"Danced the Polkar, Led by the HOLKAR"

whose height is commanding, but who can do his steps with the grace and lightness of a Harlequin. We did not quit the gay and brilliant scene until the majestic moon had slowly risen in the heavens, when we sallied forth in search of our coats, hats, and the Golden Umbrella, which had been in the kitchen to dry.

On leaving the Rajah's hospitable mansion, there was quite a scene between me and the faithful slaves. The fact is that I have become so popular out here with the waytahs and oondar-strapahs generally, who know what "shelling out ru-pees" means well enough (N.B. A Jenuin Inndian Jo-millah—Allah! Bis-millah! On my nose be it! as the Mussulmen say out here), that I can do almost anything with them, as a body. If I wished to go in for Apotheosis ("What ho! Apotheosis!"—SHAKSPEARE—as I said to my Well-Read and Noble Companion), I could do it to-morrow if I liked, and Shiva, Squiva, Vishnu, and Vish'n-u-many-happy-returns-of-the-day, would be nowhere among the Indian Deities. They have already composed a hymn in my honour, but, to my honour be it said, I won't have it at any price. I have begged them not to do it till I am gone. The hymn begins thus:—

"O fi reve ereht saw a gib pmacs!"

But I will not continue what in your cold phlegmatic Saxon country might be misconstrued into mere fulsome adulation. Still, entre nous, I have deserved it, for I 've been lavish with the coin. I have not waited for official orders from head-quarters. No, I have been all heart and pocket, in the interest, of course, of the British Dynasty in India. So free-handed in this way have I been as to have justly gained the sobriquet of TIPPOO SAHIB, i.e., the Sahib who tips. Why, my dear friend, with a neat Durbar twisted round my head, a Serai in my hand, and some walnut juice on my face, I might be Imperial Shah of all the Indies any hour of the day.*

But far from me be any even ghost or shadow of such an idea. No! Loyally I will ever sing—

Send her victorious!
Happy and glorious!
Long-to-reign-o'er-i-ous!
God Save the QUEEN!"

But I only mention the above facts to show you what can be done by a little attention to the wants of a naturally loyal and trusting race.

Talking of "trusting," in consequence of your remittances not having arrived in time, I have been compelled to adopt the system known in India as that of Tikh. This plan, which, in some cases, supersedes ready-money payments, was invented by the NOBOB OF ODUMPHORE, a celebrated Indian financier, who, with SHAHPUR, of Swindlia—the SHAHPUR, as he is called here—contributed so largely to the extensive failures of some of the biggest houses in Calcutta. The Nobob bolted, and the unhappy SHAHPUR was arrested at Aritsur—a sad spectacle of another good man gone wrong.

Send cheque, or my name's Mister Upatree. Address it to me under cover to my friend, the HON. AND REV. STOPHAM SHORT, the Wrecktory, Gravesend. It will reach me quicker than if you sent it straight out here. "Do not forget your GABRIELLE!" as the old chorus has it.

We are all doing well. My Noble and Very Hard-working Friend (for he does work at this pleasure, mind you) is in first-rate health: but some of the young 'uns in the suite caught colds after the dance, and got sore

* A Howdah or Houdah is an elephant's castle, and Mussalgee, which our Correspondent represents himself as "sipping," is, in our Dictionary at least, a "torch-bearer." We are now taking steps to ascertain the veracity of our Representative in the slightest details. We have called at the British Museum, where there is a splendid Dictionary on view, and every information given correctly gratis, and on the same day we had an interview with an intelligent officer from Scotland Yard. So much is sufficient for the present. Still it is but fair to state that, as yet, we have no proof that our Correspondent is not where he represents himself as being, i.e. in India.—ED.

* Durbar must be, we fancy, a mistake in the telegraphy for turban, as, without any reference to a Dictionary, we in England all know by this time what a Durbar is. As to the Serai in his hand, we don't think he can be serai-ous—at all events we can't, as is evident by this joke—because our old Dictionary (a very good one, by the way) gives Serai as "a public building for the reception of caravans," which, it is needless to say, couldn't be held in his hand any more than Somerset House or St. Paul's. Still—Serai may have a double meaning.—ED.

Digitized by Google

POLITICS AND PASTE.

Conservative Curate. "THEN YOU THINK WE ARE GETTING ON PRETTY WELL, MR. GUMMIDGE?"
Ditto Billsticker. "O, YES, SIR! BLESS YER, THE LIBERAL PASTE AIN'T NOTHINK TO OURN—IT'S HALF WATER!!"

throats at Wezerabad; and the D-E OF S-TH-RL-ND, who generally has fire, not water, on the brain, came in for a thorough "cold id 'is 'ed," in a draught between Nosore and Snezapore.

"These are mere trifles," as the Jam said to SIR JELLYBHOY, who was among his suite.

We are off to Jummoo. I pause. The Elephant shakes too much for me to continue this letter with comfort. Excuse me a minute or two. Jee Hûp!

* * * * * *

Nous Voici! Jummoo.

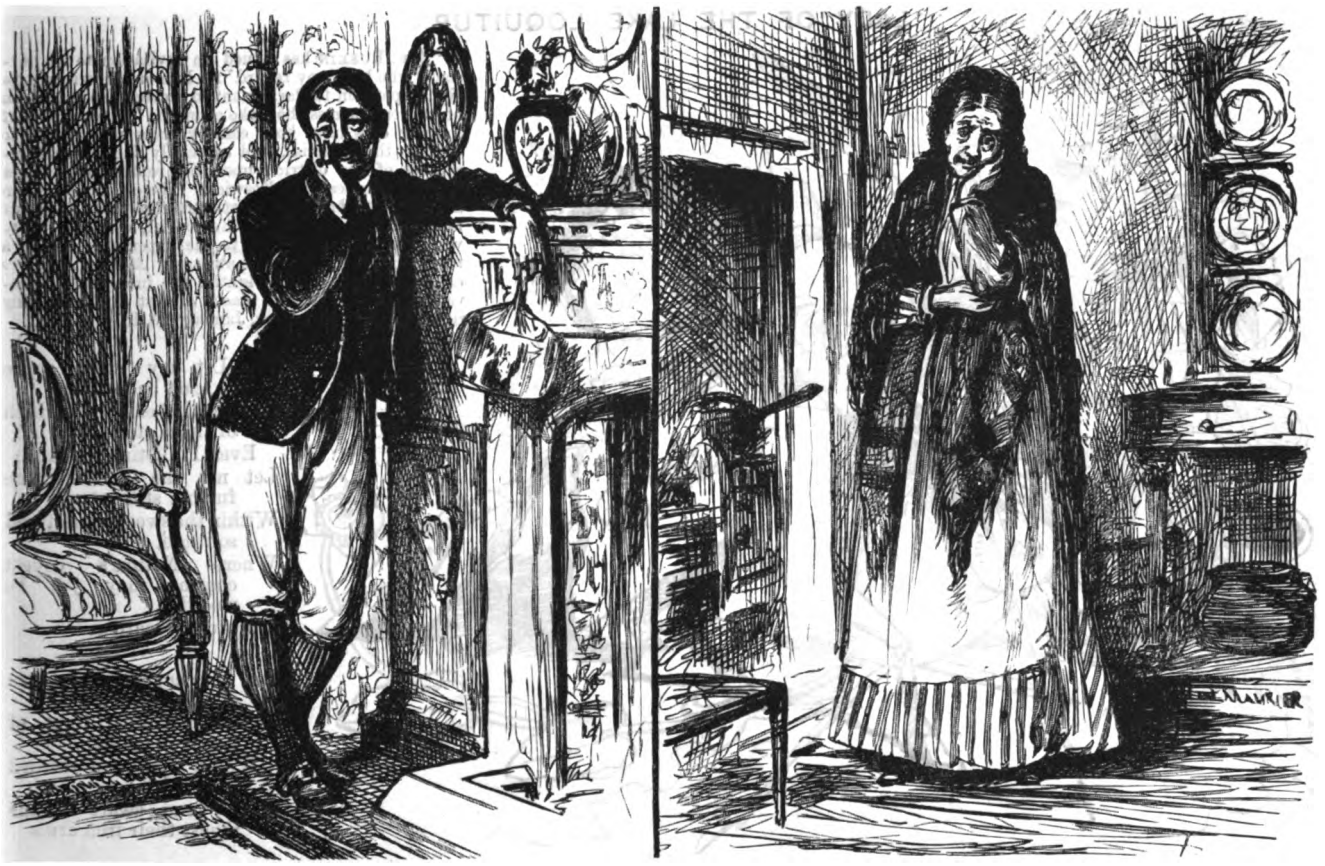
Crowds to receive us. A variety of colour, creed, caste, and company. Here are the Nabobs, the Nobobs, and the Hobnobs, all fraternising together. A cheering sight. Here is a swarthy Nobnob (or big swell) reining in his fiery little Kobkob (or native Indian pony) while talking to a young but wealthy Sunnob, who is giving himself as many airs as though he were the SHAHPUR, or even the HOLKAR himself.

There, in the corner, stands a lynx-eyed Bobbee (or native Policeman), and near him a fellow of lowest caste, who, I could swear, is the well-known KROBAR of Burraglaree, who, it is believed, is still at large.

Just by the door of the Shantee stands, his hand on his jewelled sword, the stately GHAUT; while arm in arm with the paunchy little BOWLEE is the aristocratic BHISTEY, who is not ashamed on this occasion to drop hereditary animosities and indulge in a friendly guzzul with a handsome representative of the too-often despised Florikans, and one of the insidious and mealy mouthed denizens of the Tatarkan district, dressed in his ragged brown jacket.*

We are to have another grand ball to-morrow, which, it is expected, is to be crowded by the natives, to whom I am invariably told off to do the honours. The fact is, I have won their hearts, and, by the way, shouldn't mind winning their diamonds; but no doubt even this would come in time.

I get on capitally with the natives, specially at supper. But, indeed, on such festive occasions I have never yet found any natives disagree with me, and, goodness knows, I have had large dealings with dozens of 'em in my time. Here some of the natives are bearded and some not, and, though of a retiring disposition, I soon manage to get them out of their shell.



We have been badly off for sport lately, but at Lahore I managed to bag three Nuggurs (a kind of long-tailed animal, something between a fox and a goose), one Pathan (of the panther tribe), a fine Belooche (not unlike our titmouse), and a brace of Rajpoots—which last are of the genus partridge, only of a brighter colour.

I must now leave off, as CANON DUCKWORTH wants me to give him a few hints for his to-morrow's sermon, and I have also to entertain a bevy of Parsee Ladies at our five o'clock tea, or Indian Drum, which has become an institution on Saturday afternoons.

CANON DUCKWORTH is an excellent fellow, just the sort of Parson who ought to be canonised—as he has been. On Sundays he gives us a good burst of fifteen minutes' eloquence, and he makes all the points I've given him on the previous afternoon. You see I knew the vie intime of his audience better than he does, and in arranging the hits of the sermon I can put in some nasty home-thrusts now

* At this point we have recourse to our Dictionary. The word Ghaut we cannot find in it. But we would be on our oath that it is an Indian word, and yet it does not recommend itself to our memory as meaning a human being of any kind. We may, however, be quite wrong on this point: we acknowledge ourselves in having been, at least once, quite wrong; i.e., when we gave that boy half-a-sovereign to go and buy a new Dictionary. It is now just seven weeks since that boy disappeared. However, to resume, Bowlee is "a well," not a "paunchy little man"; Bhistey is a "water-carrier," who can, we should imagine, scarcely be "aristocratic." Here however, we admit we may be in error. A Hindoo, acquainted only with our military terms, would scarcely imagine that a "Sergeant" could be a great legal dignitary only one remove from a Judge, and so it may be with a Bhistey or water-carrier. Guzzul we have looked out before. It sounds like drinking, but it is really "an erotic ode." A Florikan is not a man of any race, but "a bird of the bustard tribe." As for the "Tatarkan district" we have searched the map of India in vain for such a place: yet it may be there. A young friend about Town, who has just dropped in, asks us if we couldn't find something nearer home resembling the Tatarkan? We cannot believe that Our Representative is merely inventing a name. But we have our plan—and in another week we shall be in a position to tell the public more.—ED.

Digitized by Google

INTELLECTUAL EPICURES.

STEEPED IN ÆSTHETIC CULTURE, AND SURROUNDED BY ARTISTIC WALL-PAPERS, BLUE CHINA, JAPANESE FANS, MEDIÆVAL SNUFF-BOXES, AND HIS FAVOURITE PERIODICALS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, THE DILETTANTE DE TOMKYNS COMPLACENTLY BOASTS THAT HE NEVER READS A NEWSPAPER, AND THAT THE EVENTS OF THE OUTER WORLD POSSESS NO INTEREST FOR HIM WHATEVER.

Betsy Waring (who goes out a-charing) and is a Martyr to Rheumatics (what comes o' damp attics), expresses similar views. In her own words:—

"I'VE OFTEN HEARD RUMOURS
OF WARS AND CONTUMOURS,
SEA-SARPINTS, AND COMICS AS LIGHTS UP THE SKY;
STEAM-HINGINS A-BUSTIN',
AND BANKS AS FOLKS TRUST IN,
BUT THEY DON'T NEVER FRET A OLD 'OOMAN 'LIKE I!"

and then. I mark when and where the shots tell. On one Sunday, after the sermon, I recovered three rupees that had been owing me for a month! It reminded me of the absconding clerk and the Ticket-of-Leave at the Olympic. Truly the Pulpit is a most valuable adjunct to the Stage—or vicè versâ. The Reverend Gent is holloaing for me now—so adoo. I am also jusqu' aux yeux in difficulties as to our programme for the grand processional entry into Agra. The fact is, nothing would so impress the native swells here so greatly as a regular Circus Triumphal Entry, with my Royal Friend in uniform driving a van drawn by sixteen horses, a brass band behind him, plenty of drum, lots of spangles, a Courrier of St. Petersburgh, and the Shakspearian Jester on a Donkey. If I can get it up, I will. Believe me, now and ever,

YOUR TRUTHFUL REPRESENTATIVE
(in India).

THE DESECRATED REVEREND!

"FAREWELL, farewell to thee, title of 'Reverend!'"
Thus warbled a Rector on Cornwall's bleak shore—
"My scorn of that desecrate prefix shall never end:
The 'P. P.' of St. Petroc is 'Reverend' no more!"

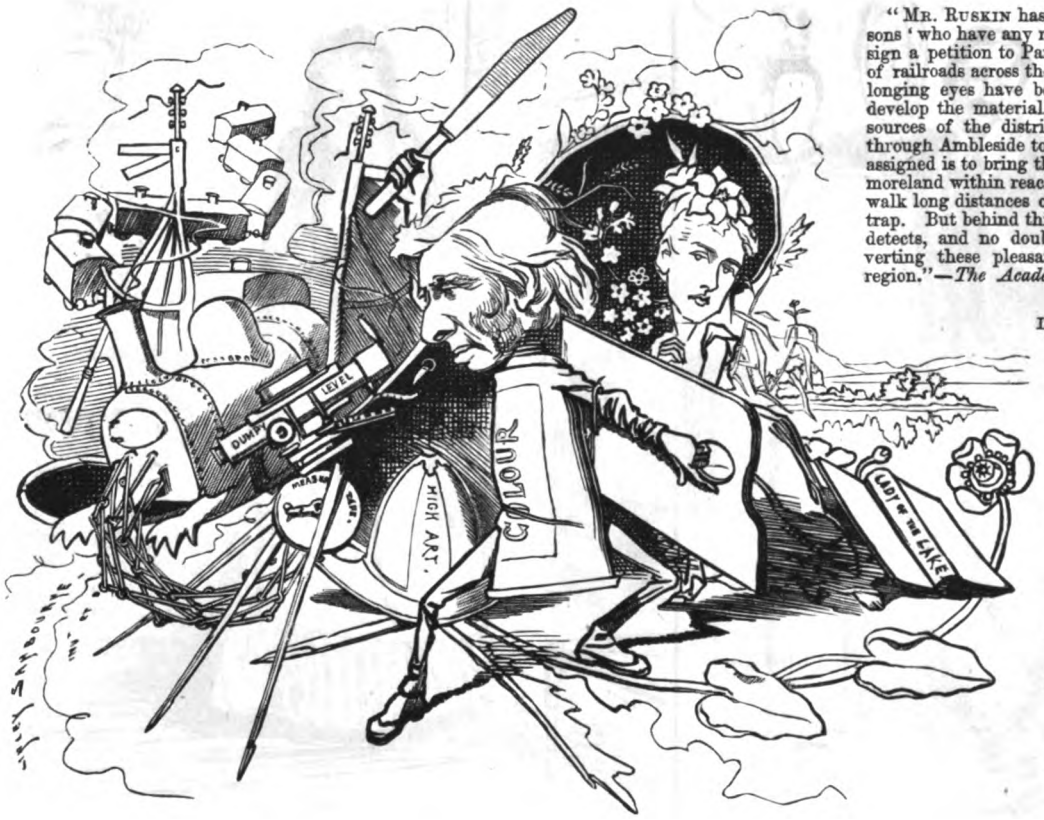
A Street-boy, wishing to insult an Elderly Gentleman, chalks up on his gatepost, "Old BROWN is an ass!" But Old BROWN rarely writes himself down an ass à la Dogberry. But what should we say if BROWN, instead of merely writing himself down an ass, were to advertise himself as one? Then what are we to make of the following extract from a Plymouth journal:—

NOTICE.—I request that all communications to me through the Post-office be addressed as under:—

G. W. MANNING, P. P.,
St. Petroc Minor, St. Issey,
Cornwall.

Correspondents who prefix to my name the now desecrated epithet of "The Reverend," will please not be offended if I reject their letters, &c.

G. W. MANNING.



Can any Clergyman of the Church of England be so inflated by self-esteem without self-respect, so destitute of dignity, charity, common-sense and taste, so devoid of all perception of absurdity, as to be conceived capable of penning this notice? It must be "a thing devised by the enemy"—the fling of hostile and unscrupulous Sectarians. Perhaps they will next advertise MR. MANNING as renouncing the clerical black and white tie because Wesleyan Ministers wear them, and adopting coloured clothes and a bird's-eye fogle instead.

It may be that the letters "P. P." are insidiously intended to be taken for "Parish Priest," so making out the namesake of CARDINAL MANNING a Ritualist aping the style of his Eminence's Priesthood. Suppose a Popish Priest were to publish a request that nobody should subjoin to his name the letters "P. P.," now desecrated in their permitted assumption by a Protestant heretic? Would you not consider him as great an ass as a Church of England Clergyman renouncing the title of "Reverend" because it has been decided by the Court of Appeal that it may legally be carved on the gravestone of a Wesleyan preacher?

SHAKSPEARIAN MOTTO (by an unhappy Investor in the Credit and Co-operative Bank).—"Hang up our BANNER on the outer walls."

Digitized by Google

LADY OF THE LAKE LOQUITUR.

"MR. RUSKIN has issued an invitation to all persons 'who have any regard' for him or his writings, to sign a petition to Parliament to prevent the extension of railroads across the Lake country. It appears that longing eyes have been cast by those who desire to develop the material, and especially the mineral, resources of the district, upon the route which passes through Ambleside to Keswick. The ostensible reason assigned is to bring the most attractive parts of Westmoreland within reach of the tourist, who now has to walk long distances or go to the expense of hiring a trap. But behind this the author of Modern Painters detects, and no doubt rightly, the intention of converting these pleasant places of rest into a mining region."—The Academy, January 22, 1876.

IST! Let my silver voice at least be heard,
Echoing that eloquence which oft hath stirred
Even Philistine feeling!
Let not the Trade-Gnome further still intrude
Within the sweet sequestered solitude,
Where Nature's coyest charms may yet be wooed
To full revealing.

Can you not keep one inch of all your isle
In the unsullied light of Beauty's smile,
Which dirt and discord banish?
Must your swart Titans thrust their iron arms
Till, scared by driving reek and rude alarms,
From their fouled path Pan's brood with all their charms
Shall wholly vanish?

If Progress its far aims to reach, must fill
The air with poison, choke the babbling rill,
And dye the limpid river,
And such compulsion, as a rule, 'tis vain
To challenge, yet some haunts should sure remain,
Which wiser Man to Mammon's grasping reign
Will scarce deliver.

Seeing all-liberal Heaven has given you here
Vales soft as those of Tempê or Cashmere,
Still lakes and solemn mountains,
Spurn not such largess! Do not drive away
All Solitude's shy nymphs, whose hands array
My banks with bowers, and keep in joyous play
My floods and fountains.

I am the Lady of the Silver Lake;
I would not have my mountain echoes wake
To shriek and snort incessant.
And you whose steps have strayed along my marge
Would Steam-Fiend's roar, gush of foul mines' discharge,
Fit the still scene where my smooth-shining targe
Reflects the crescent?

Even to cold Utilitaria's self—
Sole regent in these days to thirst of pelf
Given by self-dedication,—
I make appeal! Prudence forbids to spoil
The few fair spots on your sea-straitened soil,
Where poet-passion and o'erburdened toil
Find consolation.

Here have been nourished sons of Art whose song
Or storied canvas shall your fame prolong,
And swell your pride and pleasure.

Where WORDSWORTH roved let not the wheels of Trade,
Unresting as Ixion's, make fresh raid,
Till Fancy flees her loveliest, best-loved shade,
And needful leisure!
Grant in these crowded times men's needs are more
Than broad meres, mountains high, and forests hoar,
Birds' song or rose, or lily;
Yet these, too, higher human yearnings crave:
Were it not well source of such joys to save,
Nor wholly yield old Pan a helpless slave
To Puffing Billy?
Though Commerce claim free course, and subtle Greed
In mask of Progress her convenience plead,
Should Wisdom not be chary
In casting Nature's dearest dowers away?
Leave Lakeland still to elf, and faun, and fay,
For Art and Thought and Toil self's place of play,
And sanctuary!

Shakspeare Against the Burials Bill.

DEAR MR. PUNCH,

WHAT has the immortal WILLIAM not anticipated? He has clearly foreshadowed MR. OSBORNE MORGAN'S iniquitous Burial Bill, and has given a quiet wipe at the Dissenter—who schismatically chooses his own path to Heaven—in the Grave-Digger's question to his comrade, in Hamlet, Act v., "Is he to be buried in Christian burial who wilfully seeks his own salvation?"

Yours, CLERICUS.

An Awkward Ultimatum.

FOR a Prince to "call in an Accountant," no doubt,
Is a course too like bankruptcy favour to win;
But if the KHEDIVE'S bent on having CAVE out,
As one likely result, he may have to Cave in.

Only Natural.

(Cook v. Jenkins.)

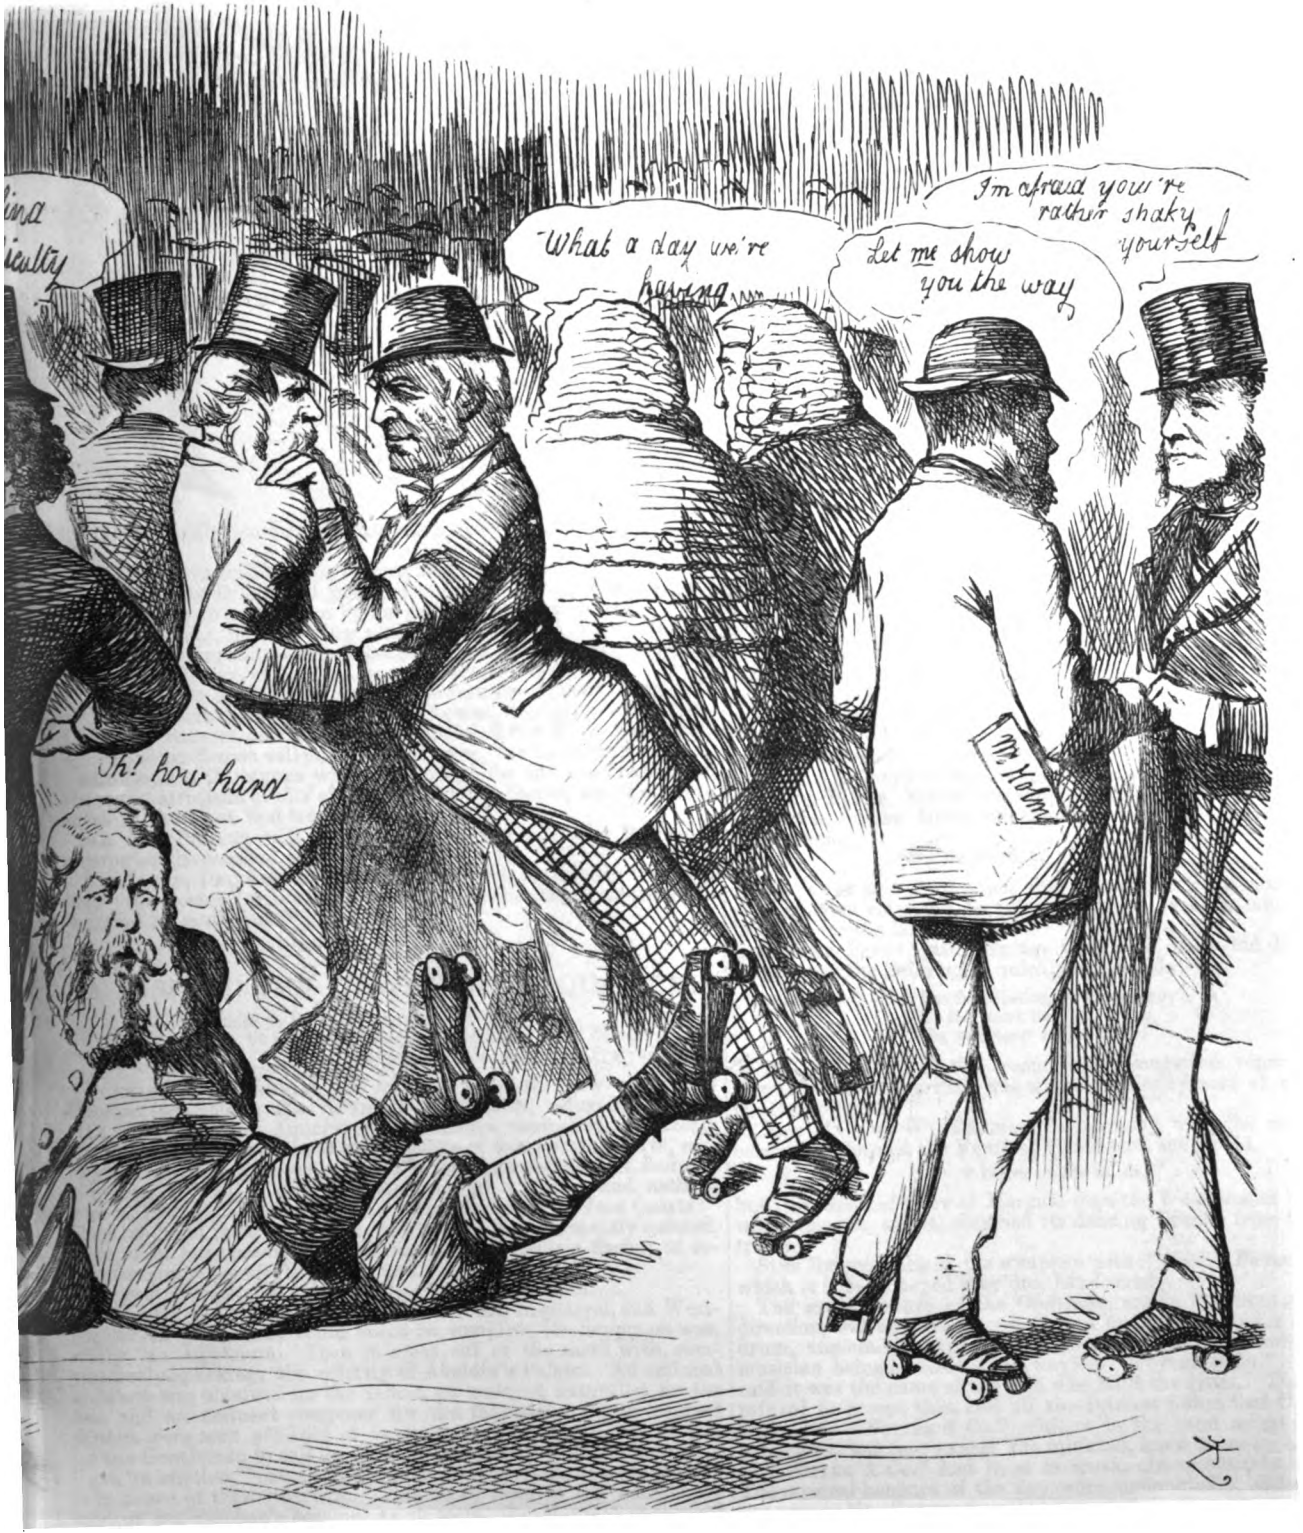
WHAT wonder if COOK for a Christian disown
Bold JENKINS, on Satan as mythic who looks?
When his mission's from Satan; what saw 's better known,
Than "'Tis Heaven sends us meat, but the Devil sends Cooks"?

NATURAL RESULT OF MOODY AND SANKEY'S PREACHING IN IT.—The Opera House is about to be converted—into a Post-Office

MOTTO FOR THE MANAGER OF THE CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT BANK.—"Depositi Tenax."

THREE EXCESSES OF THE DAY.—Drink! Rink!! Ink!!!



Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

PRACTISING FOR TH

Digitized by Google

WESTMINSTER RINK.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

SHADOWS OF THE COMING SESSION.

MR. HOLMS will worry the SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR with statistics that would be absolutely startling, if they were not absolutely inaccurate.

MR. BUTT will waste the time of the House in impracticable discussion of the principles of Home Rule, and the self-engendered miseries of Ireland.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON will trifle with the fleeting hours in a facetious attempt to pass the Permissive Bill.

MR. BIGGAR will exhaust the patience of the House by forgetting that Members of Parliament are accustomed to the society of Gentlemen.

MAJOR MCGORMAN will prove to the world that the House of Commons, like the ring of a circus, has its own clown.

MR. WHALLEY will bore the House with stories of imaginary grievances and impossible plots.

MR. PLIMSOLL will lose his temper in a good cause.

SIR CHARLES DILKE will pick holes in the British Constitution, and show how to mend them by his private patent processes.

MR. DISRAELI, in answering plain questions, will be mysterious facetious, or flippant, as the exigences of the case may require—but never discourteous, or explicit, or perfectly intelligible.

The MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON will conduct the Opposition, subject to the embarrassing supervision of MESSRS. GLADSTONE, FORSTER, LOWE and BRIGHT, and the caustic comment of SIR W. V. HARCOURT. The above gentlemen will pull different ways, "as 'tis their nature to."

SIR THOMAS CHAMBERS will prose away (for the twentieth time) about the atrocious profits of the Civil Service Stores, and the grievances of the West End tradesmen.

MR. MACDONALD will do his best by his advocacy to render unpopular the cause of the Working Man.

And lastly, DR. KENEALY will—but no, let us indulge the hope that "the Doctor" will not appear at all this Session, being too much occupied in establishing a new Religion.

A VISIT TO THE WESTMINSTER AQUARIUM.

"Uprouse ye then, my merry, merry, men,
For 'tis our opening day."—The Chough and Crow.
(Omitted from the Aquarium Programme.)

I CAN perfectly imagine the moment when the now managing-director (pro. tem.), MR. WYBROW ROBERTSON, returning from a visit to the Brighton Aquarium, viâ Victoria, compelled to masterly inaction in his Hansom by a block system of complicated carts, carriages, cabs, and omnibuses, looked to the right and the left, and said to himself "What a good thoroughfare for a show! and nothing here but the Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, and the Law Courts!" Then his mind reverting to the Brighton he had so recently quitted, there must have occurred to him one of those electric flashes of inspiration, now popularly known as a Happy Thought. Here 's the place for an Aquarium.

Evidently the very thing! All that London in general, and Westminster in particular, could want to complete its happiness was, surely, an Aquarium. Then it arose out of the earth with, comparatively speaking, the celerity of Aladdin's Palace. An eminent architect was obtained for the fabric, an eminent naturalist for the fish, and an eminent composer for the fantasias. Other eminent persons were soon got hold of to appear as Fellows, so that at last for one Gentleman to call another a fellow, and to receive the retort "you 're another," came to be, Aquariumly speaking, rather a thing to be proud of than otherwise. This short form in the neighbourhood of St. Stephen's became, as it were, the Masonic pass-word among the Fish-exhibiting fraternity,

"Sir, you 're a Fellow!"

"Sir, you 're another!"

And this was the sign and countersign necessary for entrance on Saturday, January 22nd.

The Aquarium was opened in some sort of State. A crowd in reserved and unreserved places wondering what was about to happen next. All eyes on a set of decorated private-boxes, with the Royal-box in the middle, guarded by (apparently) sailors, who, in turn-down collars and short jackets, looked as if they 'd grown out of that kind of dress, and were feeling rather awkward in not having been put into stick-ups and tails long ago.

Then came a great time for inquisitive people who always want to know all about it, whatever it is, and well-informed persons who always do know all about it, and are equal to any emergency.

Inquisitive Visitor. I say, why have the sailors got guns?

Well-Informed Friend. They 're Naval Artillery.

Inquisitive Visitor (only half-convinced). Oh! but artillery have cannons, not guns.

Well-Informed Friend. Ah! but these are on duty, and they always go about as the body-guard of the DUKE OF EDINBURGH, the Sailor Prince.

Inquisitive Friend. Ah! yes. Good idea having them here instead of soldiers. Soldiers would have been out of place among fish.

Happy Thought (for the title of a new ballad). The Soldier and the Fish. Suggested gratis to MR. ARTHUR SULLIVAN. It might be appropriately played by the Cold-streams.

Inquisitive Friend (using opera-glasses). I say, who 's that in a private-box with lace on his shirt—?

Well-Informed Person. That 's a Sheriff.

Inquisitive Friend. Oh! (Then apparently resenting the intrusion.) Why 's he here?

Well-Informed Person (nonplussed for once in his life). I don't know. (Recovering himself.) Oh! because he was asked.

Inquisitive Visitor. Who 's that in a fez?

Well-Informed Person (proud of his superior knowledge). That is the Turkish Ambassador.

Inquisitive Visitor (as before). Why 's he here?

Funny Gentleman from the Stock Exchange (overhearing and answering). He 's just the man for the place. He 's here, as the representative of a decidedly fishy State.

Hats off, and enter the DUKE OF EDINBURGH. He stands up in his box, and somebody facing him, reads him an address. It looks uncommonly like Punch and Judy, with the squeak and the dialogue left out, as the voice part is inaudible.

Inquisitive Friend. What 's he doing?

Funny Gentleman. He 's hearing the Duke his Catechism.

Then the Duke replies, also inaudibly, bows, accepts the paper, hands it to somebody to put away somewhere, and then the Concert begins. The songs are most appropriately chosen; the first, sung by MADAME PATEY, being evidently intended as, somehow or other, applicable to the DUKE OF EDINBURGH on the present occasion, commencing,

"Gentle youth, ah! tell me why——?"

which is the sort of question the Inquisitive Gentleman has been putting with reference to the presence of every notability in the building for the last half-hour.

MADAME PATEY, still singing, then goes on to bid H.R.H. the Duke leave the building as quickly as possible:—

"Far from hence, oh haste away!
To the heart its ease restore,
Go, and never see me more!"

Which command, if the accomplished songstress represented the Genius of the Aquarium, was scarcely a cheery sort of welcome to the Sailor Prince.

Then MADAME WYNNE, more in harmony with the spirit of the occasion, informed the Nautical Prince that she would

"Dance on the sands;"

but this smacked more of Margate than the Westminster Aquarium, which has not, as yet, obtained its dancing licence from the Magistrates.

SIMS REEVES obliged the company with "You'll Remember Me," which it is to be hoped they did, handsomely.

The great feature of the Orchestra, under MR. SULLIVAN'S able direction, was an advertisement stuck up over the player of the big drum, announcing, apparently, the name of the player (no other musician being labelled in this way) as "POTTER & Co." Somebody said it was the name of the firm who built the drum. The audience refused to accept this, and all the interest felt in that Concert was centred in "POTTER & Co." Others in the band might be greater musicians, but few, except the initiated, knew them by name; and so "POTTER & Co." had it, so to speak, almost entirely to himself. The musical honours of the day were, undoubtedly, shared by MR. SULLIVAN, MR. GODFREY, and "POTTER & Co."

What did "POTTER & Co."—a most respectable elderly gentleman, by the way—care for the vocalists? While they sang, he had an easy and luxurious time of it. Suddenly, three raps from the bâton of the Conductor awoke "POTTER & Co." from his reverie. He was called into action. No; he was not wanted as yet; and,

Digitized by Google

DELICACY.

Edwin (as the Servant is present). "AH—J'ETTAY SEE—AH—DISAPPOINTAY DE NE PAS VOO VWORE A LA RINK CE MATTANG—POOR-QWAW ESKÉR——?" Angelina. "AH WEE, MAIS MOMMONG——"

Parlour-Maid. "HEM! BEG YOUR PARDON, MISS; BUT I UNDERSTAND THE LANGVIDGE!!"

after casting a glance of reproach at MR. SULLIVAN, he sank back into the repose from which he had been so unwarrantably aroused. Ah! now!—at last his time has come.

"The Procession March," by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. A nod of recognition passes between the eminent composer and "POTTER & Co.," as much as to say, "Now, then, I've brought you into this. Wake up! 'England expects,'" &c. It was an edifying sight to see the calm, determined, and unimpassioned way in which "POTTER & Co." settled down to work. No unnecessary flourishes of his drumstick, as a showy, younger, and less experienced musician might have been tempted to give, with such a weapon in his hand. Not a bit. He hit the drum as though he loved it; tenderly, almost reluctantly at first; then warming to his work, encouraged by the eye-glass of his chief, and impelled by a stern sense of duty, he came down on that drum so as to make it writhe again, and bellow under the thud. But when his part was finished, when dulcet strains succeeded, then with more than maternal care did "POTTER & Co." pat and caress the suffering instrument, and not a few among the audience but felt a choking sensation in the throat, as they saw that venerable man turn aside and use his pocket-handkerchief, doubtless to wipe away a tear. Beat on! thou Loving Heart! Thy joys and sorrows are appreciated by the public! Oh! well deserved was the déjeuner of "POTTER & Co.," when he and his instrument sat down with a drumstick between them.

Last Happy Thought (but one) at the Aquarium. Get some fish. Or, why not a pond with sticklebacks for the boys to fish in?

Or,—Last Happy Thought of all. While the Tanks are unoccupied, wouldn't it be an excellent plan to turn them into private baths, getting eminent individuals to bathe in them—(pretty bathing dresses being provided, of course)—and let in the public, as at present, to stare at them through the glass fronts? It could easily be advertised. For example: Saturdays, MR. GLADSTONE (Tank No. 1), from 10 till 1. MR. DISRAELI (Tank No. 2), from 2 till 4; and so on—the Band playing all day, and refreshments handed round. There ought to be some special attraction pending the arrival of the still absent Octopus and the Fish of the Future.

JOURNEYS "PERFORMED."

THE Manchester Examiner states that the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company have resolved to paint their first-class carriages yellow, the second-class brown, and the third blue. The tickets will be of the same colour as the carriages. This will give the trains a nice and lively appearance, it is true, and may serve to beguile the minds of anxious passengers; but it must be admitted that for certain lines of railway the most appropriate colour for the carriages would be black, with feathers for the first-class and other less costly marks of mourning for the second and third. The tickets might be black-edged, and ornamented with a funeral urn. The Guard's costume should resemble as closely as possible that of an undertaker, and the journeys should be "performed" as much like funerals as possible, with all the chances of cremation included.

Of course an undertaking should be given, and kept, that all trains will carry an experienced surgeon, and that a proper proportion of ambulances, with all the necessary surgical appliances, will accompany every excursion and express.

INSCRIPTION FOR THE LABORATORY OF LA GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

"R. I. P.
DOM LOUIS GARNIER,
Pour cinquante ans Supérieur du Couvent, et Chef de La Fabrique."

FOR fifty years of dexterous distilling
And deep devotion here DOM LOUIS swayed:
In the grave's still-room here to rest he's willing,
While in the cellar his pure spirit's laid.

Let all, when cups with fragrant Mocha brim,
Who Chartreuse verte or jaune for chasse prefer,
Say new Superiors may succeed to him,
But no superior to his liqueur.

Digitized by Google

LES MONTAGNES DE HAMPSTEAD.

SHOWING HOW WE ADVENTUROUS INHABITANTS OF THE HILLY SUBURBS OF NORTH LONDON BEGUILED THE WEARY HOURS DURING THE RECENT SNOWY WEATHER.

Digitized by Google

YOUNG CHELSEA v. OLD.

"O, tell me not, in cold anticipation,
Next Session's horoscope portends stagnation,
While Chelsea's Baronet o'er vasty deeps,

The Stormy Petrel of the Future, sweeps.
Or among birds is Petrel's flight too narrow?
Should we not rather call him Java Sparrow?
From that far isle one day we hear his twitter,
The next at Chelsea he shows, brisk and bitter,
The liveliest "sparrer" if a wildish hitter.
Pardon the pun—let "sparrow" be preferred
For him who skims o'er subjects like a bird,
And wider, wiser, than e'er bird that flew,
The world embraces in a bird's-eye view.
Not the bird's-eye, of course, in smoke that ends,
But that which loftiest elevation lends,
To look down on the British Constitution—
Old wheel-work, but still good for revolution!
After swift survey, hear him condescending
To prove to us how all in it needs mending.
So one may sometimes see a Chelsea sparrow
Peeping into a bone that once held marrow,
And after squinting down it for a minute,
Conclude, off-hand, that there is nothing in it.
When the contents but lie beyond his peep,—
The Sparrow's ken too short, the bone too deep.

By CHAFFERS let "old Chelsea's" praise be sung,
Punch, chief of chaffers, takes his Chelsea young.
At sales old Chelsea mugs may cut a figure,
Young Chelsea's mug, self-mirrored, cuts a bigger.
Let China-maniacs the old prefer,
The young 's omniscient, and can never err;
Then happy Chelsea, whose far-seeing Bart.,
Surveys mankind, and scorns not to impart
To "free and independents" ne'er so rough,
Of his collective wisdom quantum suff.;
Nay some, profane, may say, more than enough.

THOROUGHFARE v. BARRACKS.

GOVERNMENT, it is reported, have determined to pull down the Knightsbridge Barracks. So far so good. But they have also determined, it is said, to build another, and bigger, and better, block of barracks in their stead.

Kensingtonia, a wealthy and fashionable suburb, naturally objects to any such erection—with its fringe of beerhouses and music-halls—in its midst, and is up in arms, and, like other interesting creatures in arms, crying loudly. As it has Lords and Millionnaires to utter its disgust, there is no fear but it will make its wrongs and wishes very distinctly audible.

There are so many more crying grievances pressing on poorer Metropolitan populations, that Punch cannot bring himself to take this of Kensingtonia from the Knightsbridge barracks very seriously to heart. Still, if a wider roadway could be substituted for a cavalry barracks, no doubt all who have occasion to use a much frequented approach to the Metropolis would bless the Board of Works.

THE WARDEN OF THE STANDARD

"BOTTLE MEASURE.—The Warden of the Standard has occasion again to advert to the subject of the size of bottles. Six years ago it was represented to the Standards Commission that wine and ale bottles, commonly known as reputed quarts or pints, were getting smaller. The Warden of the Standard verified standards of these measures in 1870, and he now reports that he re-verified them in 1875. But he has to state that these newly-legalised measures do not appear to be much used. In the whole of the last few years not quite a hundred bottle and half-bottle measures have been verified for the use of local inspectors of weights and measures; only two in the last year!"—Newspaper Paragraph.

HERE 's the Warden of the Standard!
A useful officer he;
Though by many Good Templars slandered,
The need of his office I see.
He has a good deal of work in
Making the publicans swear,
Yet hogshead, kilderkin, firkin,
Are smaller than once they were.
In his drink the labourer is cut short,
Getting a pint and a half for a quart.

The Warden stamps the bottles
That are brought to him to stamp:
Alas for thirsty throttles
When the Bungs fair measure scamp!
They laugh at you, not rarely,
With a mean, dishonest laugh,
When for your quart you pay squarely,
And get but a pint and a half.
Measures are passed of a silly sort:
Best measure of all is the honest quart.

Good Bung, give us malt full measure,
Drink brewed in October prime,
Wherein to dip beak is a pleasure,
And to scrimp thereof a crime.
Here 's health to squire and peasant
Who own or till the ground,
Both find their liquor pleasant;
I wish it were always sound!
But a plague on the salted and hocussed tap
The labourer often is doomed to lap—
The man who sells such deserves a rap!

The Voice of Truth's Last Lie.

MONSIGNOR TIZZANI'S report of PROFESSOR ROLLI'S recantation and return to the bosom of the Church in extremis, seems, on sifting, to be a case of "Rolli, Poly, gammon and spinach," and, as such, peculiarly fitted for the propagation of the Voce della Verità—a title, if ever there was one, on the "lucus à non lucendo" principle.

Digitized by Google

AN UNREGENERATE YOUTH.

The New Governess (impressively). "O, TOMMY, WHEN I WAS A LITTLE GIRL, AND MADE A BLOT ON MY COPY-BOOK, I USED TO CRY."

Tommy (earnestly). "WHAT! REALLY?"

New Governess (still more impressively). "YES—REALLY CRY!"

Tommy (still more earnestly). "WHAT AN AWFUL LITTLE DUFFER YOU MUST HAVE BEEN!"

WHISKEY v. "SILENT SPIRIT."

ALAS, alas for Whiskey,
That spirit pure and clear,
That made its drinker frisky,
Yet left his liver clear!
Now vile adulterators
Have caused its name to stink:
Can Irishmen be traitors
To Ireland's noblest drink?

The nectarous amber fluid
That Erin used to send—
Pure stuff as ere was brewèd—
Is now a poisonous "blend;"
For the true potheeny flavour,
And the fire from headache free,
From fusel-oil its savour,
Its consequence, D.T.!

O spring of merry laughter,
Of fancy, frolic, fun,
That drew no black bile after,
From honest worms while run.
Now sullen, silent spirit
Sets brains and blood aboil;
Can Erin aught inherit
But woe from fusel-oil?

Of Vintner and of Grocer
We long have been the sport:
Claret to ink comes closer,
And elder rules in port.
Petroleum fizz of ROEDERER
Usurps the famous brand;
And Hamburgh, wholesale murderer,
With her sherry floods the land!

In wonder I am stranded,
So strange it seems to think
The Irish, nation candid,
Should send us filth to drink,
Vile spirit, which the deuce is
The nose and cheek to blotch,
And Erin's calm excuse is—
"We get it from the Scotch."

O Firms of both the JAMESONS!
O Firms of POWER and ROE,
Don't let HIBERNIA claim as sons
The scamps who treat her so.
Home-Rulers effervescent
Poor Erin may endure,
But she'll ne'er be convalescent,
Till her potheen is pure.

TWO DOSES OF JUSTICES' JUSTICE.

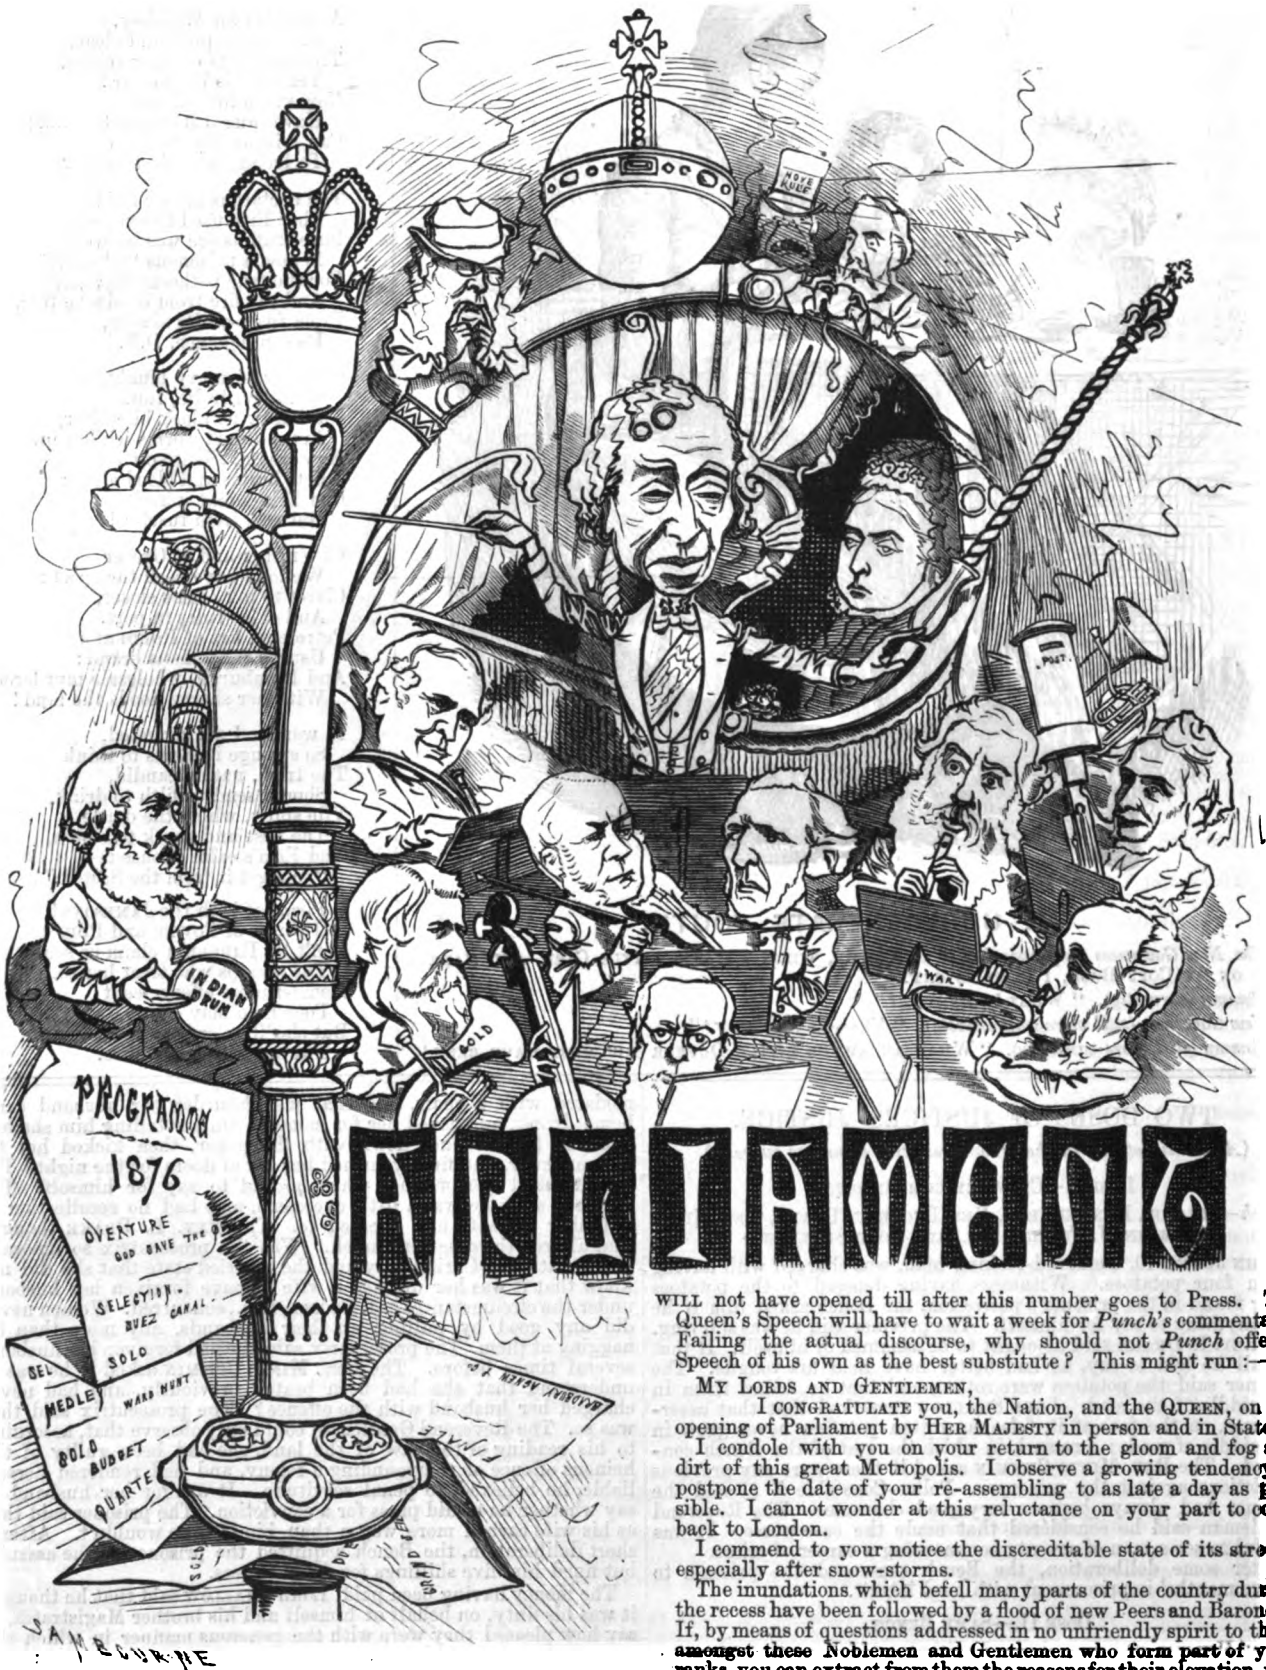
(As administered in the Provinces with immense success.)

DOSE I.—CRAWLEY-CUM-SNOOZLE.

Bench—COLONEL DUNDERHEAD, REV. LYCURGUS DRAKE, REV. MINTO CUMMIN, J. FOOZLE, ESQ., and LORD SHALLOW.

JOHN JONES, 70, a starved-looking man, was charged with having stolen four potatoes. Witnesses having deposed to the potatoes being found in the prisoner's possession, the Bench asked him if he had anything to say for himself. The prisoner said he was starving. The REV. L. DRAKE said he ought to be ashamed of himself. If that was all he had to say, he had better have held his tongue. The prisoner said the potatoes were rotten, and that he found them in the middle of the road. LORD SHALLOW remarked that that assertion was, on the face of it, false, as rotten potatoes never grew in the middle of roads; a remark in which the rest of the Bench concurred. The REV. MINTO CUMMIN asked if there were any previous convictions against the prisoner. Police-Constable Z 11 said the prisoner had always borne a very good character. The Reverend Gentleman said he considered that made the case worse. It was painful to see a man of seventy commencing a career of crime.

After some deliberation, the Bench sentenced the prisoner to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour.



DOSE II.—SAME BENCH.

TOM HULKER, 24, was charged with having assaulted his wife. The prosecutrix, whose head was enveloped in bandages, and who was still so weak from her recent injuries that she had to be accommodated with a chair, said that last Saturday her husband came home drunk, and asked her for money. On her telling him she had none, he knocked her down with the poker, then kicked her for half-an-hour, and finally turned her out of doors for the night. The Bench asked the prisoner what he had to say for himself. The prisoner said he was a little overcome, and had no recollection of anything his wife had deposed to. The REV. L. DRAKE thought that altered the case very much. Was the prosecutrix so ignorant of the duties of Christianity and the married state that she did not know that it was her duty as a wife to have forgiven her husband under the circumstances? J. FOOZLE, ESQ., concurred. Women never did any good by pulling up their husbands, any more than by nagging at them. The prosecutrix said she had forgiven her husband several times before. The REV. MINTO CUMMIN asked if he was to understand that she had been beaten previously, and had never charged her husband with the offence? The prosecutrix said that was so. The Reverend Gentleman could only observe that, according to his reading of the law of the land, she had been guilty of the heinous offence of compounding a felony, and had rendered herself liable, he believed, to penal servitude. It was for her husband to say whether he would press for a conviction. The prisoner said that as his wife earned more wages than himself, he wouldn't. After a short deliberation, the Bench acquitted the prisoner of the assault, but fined him five shillings for drunkenness.

The money having been paid, LORD SHALLOW said that he thought it was his duty, on behalf of himself and his brother Magistrates, to say how pleased they were with the generous manner in which the prisoner had refrained from pressing against his wife the charge of compounding felony, and cautioned the woman to be careful in future.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH OPENS PARLIAMENT.

WILL not have opened till after this number goes to Press. The Queen's Speech will have to wait a week for Punch's commentary. Failing the actual discourse, why should not Punch offer a Speech of his own as the best substitute? This might run:—

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

I CONGRATULATE you, the Nation, and the QUEEN, on the opening of Parliament by HER MAJESTY in person and in State.

I condole with you on your return to the gloom and fog and dirt of this great Metropolis. I observe a growing tendency to postpone the date of your re-assembling to as late a day as possible. I cannot wonder at this reluctance on your part to come back to London.

I commend to your notice the discreditable state of its streets, especially after snow-storms.

The inundations which befell many parts of the country during the recess have been followed by a flood of new Peers and Baronets. If, by means of questions addressed in no unfriendly spirit to those amongst these Noblemen and Gentlemen who form part of your ranks, you can extract from them the reasons for their elevation, you will solve a difficulty which has perplexed many intelligent persons.

Digitized by Google

OUR WAVERLEY BALL AT MUGGYPORE, BENGAL.

(His Royal Highness did not come our way as was expected, but it was a brilliant success all the same.)

Captain Mango (as the Baron Bradwardine). "I SAY, FOKER, YOU'RE LATE. WHERE'S YOUR COAT AND YOUR RAPIER? LOOK SHARP!"

Lieutenant Foker. "MY DEAR FELLOW, I'VE CHANGED MY CHAR'CTER. THAT BEAST OF A DURZEE* HASN'T FINISHED MY DOUBLET AND TRUNKS, SO I SHALL GO AS I AM—'S THAT FELLOW IN IVANHOE, WHAT'SHISNAME THE UNREADY, Y'KNOW. RUMCHUMMEE HERE SAYS I LOOK 'SPLENDID'!!"

* Tailor.

Since last you met within these walls, an agreeable place of relaxation and amusement has been opened near to the seat of your deliberations. I refer to the Royal Aquarium, where you will have the opportunity of unbending your minds, after too long and too close attention to your legislative duties. I venture to suggest to Her Majesty's Government the propriety of holding their annual Ministerial Fish Dinner at this establishment.

The Royal visit to India has proved a gratifying success, and will, I trust, induce you to take a greater interest in the concerns of that vast country than you have of late years displayed. Perhaps the diversion of boar-hunting, from which so much was expected, has proved more satisfactory to the pigs than to the Prince. By the aid of an intelligent and trustworthy eyewitness I have endeavoured to keep you fully acquainted with every detail of the Royal progress. Should it be necessary to ask for a supplementary grant, grant it without a moment's hesitation or a night's debate.

Of the relations of this country with Foreign Powers, I foresee that you and I will hear more than enough. It is hard to believe that "the sick man" who is in such straits on the Bosphorus can ever be convalescent. It remains to be seen whether a recent transaction in Canal Shares with His Highness the KHEDIVE OF EGYPT will hold water. The startling project of a Tunnel under the English Channel, to connect this country and France, is worthy of a few minutes of your serious attention. Spain is much as usual. Germany and England will, I hope, never be other than the best of friends. You have had the happiness of seeing that the PRINCESS OF WALES has returned from Denmark in health and safety. Sweden and Norway never give MR. BRIGHT, myself, and other experienced salmon-fishers a moment's uneasiness. You will all, I am convinced, wish success to the approaching Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia.

England must have a real Army—not the show and shadow of one. I trust to your common sense to look facts in the face, and to provide the means of effective national defence.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

When the annual Estimates are laid before you, I trust you will devote due time and attention to their consideration. Be liberal, but not extravagant; economical, but not niggardly.

Should the year's accounts show a surplus, I am confident that you could not better employ a portion of it than in augmenting the pay and salaries of those meritorious persons in the service of the Crown whose means of living have not increased with the increasing expenses of living. A great and wealthy country like ours should not be outdone in remuneration of its servants by a bank or a brewery.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"Circulars," as we all know, are troublesome and annoying, but sometimes we are obliged to read and consider their contents, even though we should afterwards throw them into the waste-paper basket. The documents of this description which you will be called upon to discuss are of more than fugitive importance, and should not be weighed in a spirit of mere slavish submission to party considerations.

I trust you will fathom and get to the bottom of certain disagreeable incidents connected with our Navy.

You will know how to spell Mobilization and Localization before the labours of our busy Bee are ended.

I implore you to settle the vexatious Burials Bill question. The prospect of another recess, with its clerical controversies and correspondence, its meetings of unwise clergy and imprudent laity, is too terrible. Let us try, if we can bury nothing else, to bury the hatchet.

Either you or your successors will be forced to face the life and death questions of Drink and Drinking. May you be blessed with wisdom to deal with them.

Digitized by Google

Local Taxation, Merchant Shipping, and other topics of pressing importance will amply occupy your attention. I trust, therefore, you will sternly discountenance personal squabbles, Hibernian obstructiveness, and any attempt at intrusion and insolence on the part of a nuisance to which you were far too lenient last year.

Do not waste time at the beginning of the Session; be concise and to the point in your speeches; intelligible and straightforward in your answers to questions; original in your quotations; think more of your country and less of your party; more of the Division bell and less of the dinner ditto.

Assuring you of my intention at once to resume the chronicle of your triumphs and defeats, your blunders and successes, your sense and your nonsense, in my illustrations and "Essence," I now dismiss you to the labours of a Session, which I cannot conceal from you must be of more than ordinary length, seeing this is Bissextile or Leap Year, and that February will therefore have twenty-nine instead of twenty-eight days.

CULINARY SCHOLARSHIPS.

"The Society of Arts lately founded five scholarships entitling the holders thereof to free instruction in the National Training School of Cookery; and these honours will be competed for on the 12th of this month at South Kensington."

WE believe we break no confidence in stating that the following were for some reason omitted from the questions to the candidates:—

If the wages of a Cook are £30 a-year, how much, in addition, may she expect as perquisites?

Supposing that you took a situation where no kitchen-maid is kept, what extra wages would you ask for lighting your own fires?

How many pounds of stock meat would you require to make three platefuls of soup maigre?

State the market-price of dripping, and give a table of its fluctuations during the past twelve months.

Do you consider it is one of the privileges of a Cook to imitate in Sunday dress the costumes of her mistress?

If you chanced to have a handsome cousin in the Police, what would be your usual course in dealing with cold mutton?

State your method of procedure in (1) boiling a potato, (2) cooking a beefsteak, and (3) making melted butter.

A HINT FROM THE HOUR.

MR. PUNCH, ever on the qui vive to pick up anything that may be worth picking up, lately picked up the Hour, and feels grateful to MR. MACDOUGALL for his list of "Unanswered Questions," with the motto, "Gutta cavat lapidem, non vi, sed sæpe cadendo," and the intimation that "These questions will appear daily in this column until answered by those whom they concern." Of course they are the most disagreeable questions that the querist's knowledge of the sore or shady places in the past of the queried, or the weak joints in their armour, personal or financial, can suggest.

Though the motive for asking such questions may, as a rule, be questionable, still such curiosity may have its public uses; and Mr. Punch, hoping that the method has not been patented, proposes, for once, himself to apply it, in the hope thereby to elicit some information of use to the public, and not as yet sought by MR. MACDOUGALL, no doubt as lying beyond his special field of inquiry.*

Persons who could, if they would, answer.	Subject.	Question.
The SULTAN.	COUNT ANDRASSY'S Circular.	What is likely to be the result of making good political resolutions, and not keeping them?
The Head of the Turkish Exchequer.	Turkish Bonds.	How long are the coupon-holders likely to get half their interest?
The Representatives at the Court of St. James's of Turkey, Honduras, Costa Rica, Paraguay, &c., &c.	Foreign Loans.	When do the countries you represent expect to float any more Loans in England, and at what do you value the chances of such floatation, having regard to the time required for the investing Public to forget their latest experience?
Her Majesty's Ministers.	Slave Circular.	To whose Happy Thought is this bright and successful document really due?
Ditto.	Suez Canal.	Are you looking forward with pleasurable anxiety to the interrogations of the Opposition on this question, and are you quite clear that your bargain will hold water?
RIGHT HON. WARD HUNT.	Vanguard, Iron Duke, Alberta, Mistletoe, and other subjects of accident.	What peculiar qualifications does a Naval Officer require to guarantee him against liability to Court-Martial?
Ditto.	National Indignation.	What pressure of public dissatisfaction is required to produce practical conviction of the duty of resignation?
RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.	Recreations of Ex-Ministers.	Which is the most elevating employment for a great Statesman—Leading a great national party, or helping the circulation of second-class periodicals, and answering letters from young men engaged in mercantile pursuits, and old women of both sexes?
PRINCE BISMARCK.	The French Indemnity.	How comes it that Germany, after nobbling two hundred millions of war indemnity, is poorer than France after paying it?
The KING OF ITALY.	His Future.	Where do you expect to go to, if you don't get absolution, and how much do you suppose you will get it for, and don't you wish you may get it?
The POPE.	Peter's Pence.	Who takes care of these pence, and are there any Peter's pounds that take care of themselves?
The MARQUIS OF RIPON.	MGR. NARDI'S Letter to the Voce della Verita.	In a pious fraud, where does the piety stop and the fraud commence?
G. E. MANNING, Rector of St. Petroc.	Unchristian Jealousy.	What title are Anglican P.P.'s to take now that of "Reverend" is desecrated by lawful application to Dissenting Ministers?
RICHARD BANNER OAKLEY.	Co-operative Deposit Bank.	How many widows and orphans must a scoundrel ruin before he is financially successful?

* As Mr. Punch has more demands on his space than he can possibly supply, he will be unable to publish his Questions more than once. He must therefore respectfully request the parties interrogated to answer his inquiries with the least possible delay, as otherwise his readers will, he fears, take the liberty of answering them for themselves.

Digitized by Google

So the bright pomp

Digitized by Google

ECONOMY IN A MESS!

THE following account of a Mess-Meeting of the 129th Regiment of the Line has found its way into Mr. Punch's letter-box. Although the name of the Battalion in question does not appear in the Monthly Army List, there is no reason for doubting the accuracy of a report so evidently the outcome of recent correspondence in the Public Press and less recent Horse-Guards' Regulations.

2,439th Mess-Meeting of the 129th Regiment.

Present—LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER (in the Chair); MAJOR MILDMAN; CAPTAINS FASTBOY, DRAG, BUSKIN, and PLODD; LIEUTENANTS SHODDY and CAPER; SUB-LIEUTENANT BANTAM; SURGEON PROBANG.

After the roll of officers had been called by the Adjutant, the Minutes of the last Meeting were read, approved, and confirmed.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER said that he had called a Meeting of the Officers of the Regiment because he wished to take their opinion upon the subject of Mess Expenses. In the olden time, the Mess was considered private.—it was left to the Officers who had the honour to command the Regiment (assisted by the Mess-Committee) to regulate the customs and decide upon the uniform. Now-a-days the Mess-jacket was a matter of sealed patterns, and he was directed to see that no unnecessary expense should be incurred by the Officers under his command in giving entertainments. He wished to live in friendship and good-will with all his Officers, and he therefore called upon them to make any suggestion they pleased for his information. Of course they would understand it was merely for his information, as the Mess had now become a question of discipline.

MAJOR MILDMAN begged to call the attention of the Colonel to the fact that Champagne was drunk at Mess contrary to the wishes of the General commanding the district.

CAPTAIN FASTBOY wished to correct the Major. The General objected to Champagne. He doubted if the liquor recently supplied to the Mess under the name of Champagne really came within the General's objection. It was more suggestive of gooseberries than grapes.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER wished to know why Champagne had been introduced after his orders to the contrary.

SURGEON PROBANG explained that the General commanding the district had dined with the Mess during the temporary absence of the Colonel. The General commanding the district had ordered the Champagne.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER said that altered the matter. Evidently the intention of the General was not absolutely to forbid the consumption of effervescing wine—what was commonly understood by "fizz," in fact—but to put a stop to unnecessary display. Under those circumstances the case might, perhaps, be met by Champagne being drunk in future from China mugs in lieu of glasses.

CAPTAIN BUSKIN would respectfully ask the Colonel if private theatricals came under the heading of "entertainments."

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER (before answering the question) would wish to know who took part in the theatricals.

CAPTAIN BUSKIN informed the Colonel that SURGEON PROBANG LIEUTENANT CAPER, and himself, were the leading members of the troupe.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER was of opinion that, under these circumstances, the theatricals could scarcely be considered as entertainments.

LIEUTENANT CAPER respectfully requested to know whether the Regiment might not occasionally give a ball to the resident gentry. The fact was the amateur theatricals recently given, which had been very largely attended, had created a very unpleasant, and, he was bound to say, erroneous impression in the neighbourhood. Hamlet had been played, he thought very well played—but the resident gentry who had witnessed the performance insisted that there had been an intention to burlesque SHAKSPEARE. Such an intention he begged most energetically to repudiate, for himself and the other members of the regimental corps dramatique.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER thought that perhaps, under the special circumstances of the case, a ball might be given, but officers must be put to no unnecessary expense. He would be glad to receive suggestions.

MAJOR MILDMAN would suggest that the band of the Regiment should play quadrilles from eight until ten, and that tea and cake should be served for ten minutes, in the ante-room, at half-past nine.

CAPTAIN FASTBOY said that it would be absolutely necessary, to preserve the prestige of the Regiment, that a string band should be brought down from Town, and that the supper should come from GUNTER'S.

LIEUTENANT SHODDY thought that things ought to be well done, if they were done at all. Five-pound bouquets should be provided for the Ladies. His father was ready to put down £2,000 to pay his proportion of the cost of doing things in style. "D—n the expense," was his motto.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER begged to decline MR. SHODDY'S offer. He did not think that MR. SHODDY had quite caught the regimental spirit.

CAPTAIN PLODD could not help feeling that a ball was an unnecessary, as well as unsatisfactory, form of entertainment. A scientific Conversazione would be infinitely better. For £50 he undertook to purchase the materials for several most interesting illustrated lectures on Electricity, the Spectroscope, Organic Chemistry, and the Darwinian System of Evolution.

SUB-LIEUTENANT BANTAM, as an officer of two months' standing, thought that the Regiment would be utterly disgraced if they did not give a good Ball at least once a quarter. Did not the glorious rag he had had the honour of carrying that morning for the first time, record what the Regiment had done at Waterloo, the Alma, and Inkermann? As to expense, he for one was quite sure his widowed mother would send him an extra £10 note for so good a purpose.

CAPTAIN DRAGG would like to know whether the Colonel wished the Pack to be kept up?

The Colonel said certainly—at the same time he would like to see more economy in its management, and had made a suggestion with that view in his list of regulations, which he thought would meet the exigences of the case all round. He had framed them with a view to encourage good feeling and keep up the prestige of the Regiment, while avoiding all unnecessary outlay, which, as their Commanding Officer, it was his duty to discourage.

The Adjutant then read the following list:—

Mess.—Champagne and all other wines may be drunk, but in mugs. The chef will send up the dinner (which will be of the usual recherché description) on willow-pattern plates. Water decanters will not be put on the table, as being an unnecessary expense. The supply of salt and other condiments will in future be carefully controlled, with a view to the strictest economy.

Private Theatricals.—Stage costumes, professional coach, and hire of rooms will remain as before. As it appears, however, that it has been customary to pay ten boys at a shilling a head to go into the gallery to applaud, a reduction is recommended under this heading. In future only five boys will be sent into the gallery at tenpence a head.

Ball.—Band and supper will come from London as heretofore. No alterations will be made in the sums voted for hire of rooms, floral decorations, &c. With a view to economy, however, the riband attached to the pencils of the dance programmes will be of common silk instead of twist gold-thread.

Pack.—In future, the man in charge of the dogs will receive one quart of beer, allowance, daily, instead of three pints as heretofore.

After the reading of the above regulations, LIEUTENANT-COLONEL TRIMMER thanked the Officers for their attendance, and the Meeting was formally dissolved.

The Colonel, before leaving, intimated, however, that no great reduction would be made in the Mess subscription of the 129th Regiment, in spite of the above sweeping reforms.

SHAKSPEARE ON THE RINK.

"THUS men may grow wiser every day—it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for Ladies."

As You Like It (Act i. s. 2).

MOTTO FOR THE POSTE RESTANTE.—"Litera scripta manet."

Digitized by Google

A HINT TO COACHMAKERS.

DESIGN FOR A NEW CONVEYANCE, TO BE CALLED THE "GOODY TWO-SHOES." THE "ACME" SKATE MAY BE REPLACED BY RINK-ROLLERS, FOR ORDINARY WEATHER.

SOME WORDS WITH A SWEATER.

(As heard from the Men's side of the Hedge.)

Am I willing to work by the piece? To be sure!
Don't ketch me refusing it! Not such a "cure!"
What, object to a "lay"
As increases my pay
To some four times the "twist" I can earn by the day?

Do the men who work under me pocket the same?
'Taint likely! That isn't exactly my game!
On day-hire I get 'em,
And grind 'em and sweat 'em;
But as for the "perks" of the spec—why, I net 'em!

Do I stick at the price I 'll accept? No, not me!
'Tis but cutting one's coat to one's cloth, don't yer see?
If the prices looks blue,
Why I puts on the screw,
For I means making piece-work pay me,—and I do!

Do I put the best men on the job? Well, yer know,
First-raters and me don't quite "cotton"—that's so!
They are stuck-up, I find,
And not good at the grind,
Cheap outsiders will sweat, and are more to my mind.

Do I pay all my subs by the day? Why, in course!
And the pay-sheets I rig,—which the foremen endorse,—
But here 's one o' my tricks—
Say they 're rated at six,
Well I pays 'em four bob, and the balance I nicks!

Is the workmanship good? Well, you must think me green!
Why of course it 's tol-lol,—where it 's like to be seen.
If it looks rather queer,
Why there 's paint, just a smear,
Or some good "bournanteak,"*—that 'll pass it, no fear!

* Shop-slang for putty or other "padding."

Don't the foremen look better than that after me?
Well, a cove don't twig much through gold blinkers, yer see.
If he 's given to quiz,
There are "tips" and free "fizz,"
And it 's lovely how well we agrees—that it is!

Such "scamping" must injure the firm's reputation?
Who cares? It pays me, that is one consolation.
The profits are prime;
It will last out my time,
And I ain't the sole sinner, if "Cutting 's" a crime!

Drive Trade from the country? Don't know about that,
Though I 've heard a good lot of such snivelling chat!
Every man for himself!
If I don't pile up pelf,
Will "the country" keep me when I 'm laid on the shelf?

Does it injure the health of the subs as I sweat?
That 's no business o' mine. There are plenty more yet
As won't stick at a "bob"
When hard up for a job,
And the pickings pay nicely at so much per nob!

Is it fair to my mates? Well, we 've all the same chance,
If they miss 'tain't my fault, that is clear at a glance!
If at piece-work they kick,
They will find pretty quick
They have spoilt a good game—for the few who 've the trick!

A Refuge for Ritualism.

WE hear that the Ritualists contemplate secession as their only escape from the rigor of the Court of Arches. Let Punch suggest an alternative. Let them embark from Penzance to the Isles of Scilly. History tells us that the first settlers in those islands came from Rome. Let history repeat itself.

Digitized by Google

EXPERTO CREDE.

Our Dustman. "'ERE'S THIS 'ERE BIG 'OUSE, BILL, ON THE LEFT, WHY I SHOULD SAY THEY'D TURN OVER THEIR MATTER O' THREE LOAD O' DUST A WEEK IN THE SEASON VITHOUT A HEFFORT!!"

A GRACE'S COUP DE GRÂCE?

ACCORDING to the London Correspondent of a local paper, the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK has lately distinguished himself by saying a sharp thing. In order to the repression of national intemperance:—

"The ARCHBISHOP OF YORK cleared the ground for doing something when a few days ago he gave the coup de grâce to the old blatant sophism 'You can't make people sober by Act of Parliament,' and said 'But you are now making them drunk by Act of Parliament.'"

This is clever, indeed. An Act of Parliament not only sanctions public-houses, but also compels people to go and get drunk in them. That is the case of the agitators for a Liquor Law. It isn't as though the people could do as they chose, drink or not. That would be simply reasonable and constitutional freedom. They are absolutely forced to drink, and more than so, to get drunk, by Act of Parliament. Under what penalty? The ARCHBISHOP OF YORK will perhaps tell us if it was really he, and not somebody of another order of intellect, who, by the particularly brilliant saying with which his Grace has been credited, so completely gave to the "old blatant sophism" the "coup de grâce" quoted as archiepiscopal.

PHILOSOPHERS AT FIGHT.

PHILOSOPHERS, authorities of weight,
A much-vexed question in the Times debate.
"Spontaneous Generation" these sage men
Discuss with some asperity of pen;
PROFESSOR TYNDALL con., and BASTIAN pro,
Does putrefaction gender life, or no?
Both parties are on this main fact agreed,
That some infusions infusoria breed.
TYNDALL protests, "Negatur, giv'n due care
To purify or quite exclude the air."
"Not so," cries BASTIAN. "Germs spontaneous grow, Exclude and purify the air or no."
Within a word the controversy lies—
Let us but understand what it implies—
Unfiltered air contains, you tell us, "germs."
Philosopher, explain ambiguous terms!
What is a "germ"? An ignoramus begs
To know, do "germs," or do they not, mean eggs,
Or embryos, which preceding creatures bore,
Of other animalcules born before?
If "germs" are eggs, then do "bacteria" bear
Eggs, to be hatched in water, laid in air?
Say when you mention "germs" you do but mean
Mere motes of protoplasm or protein,
Then what although they needs must coalesce
With matter in a putrefactive mess,
To generate forms of life, no parent stem
Having, as offspring, generated them,
Whence infusorial progeny are bred,
Are not those "germs" at best as mutton dead?
And is not all your question a mere word,
As being the reverse of sense, absurd?
Sure unspontaneous were the proper term
Whether for agency of senseless "germ,"
Or particles as void as "germs" of sense,
Wherefrom, in ferment, living things commence.
Life in some states, beneath creative laws,
If Nature generates—both, hold your jaws.

POST ET PROPTER.

IN former times, Actors in the Royal Theatres were called His or Her Majesty's Servants, whether male or female. According to report, however, Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket is, in future, to be occupied exclusively by Her Majesty's Mails.

THE WORST KIND OF DO.—The do as one would be done by.

Digitized by Google

A SONG OF THE DAY.

THE busy B stands now for Belle!
I love to rink, I love to spell:
Both to flirtation I convert:
Good gracious, is it flirt or flurt?

While merry groups fly to and fro,
I practise spelling as I go:
Practise or practice?—s or c?
The Dictionaries disagree.

This rinking is a pleasant whim,
When lungs are right and ancles trim.
Is ankle right? Is ancle wrong?
No matter; mine are swift and strong.

Says FRED, "I'm augur of success:
I long to see your spelling dress."
Ah, now I know I have it pat—
Auger's a bore: FRED isn't that.

LAWSON AND LIBERTY!

A FEW evenings ago SIR WILFRID LAWSON, "in connection with the Temperance agitation," as a newspaper says, "visited Portsmouth." There, at a public meeting in the Soldiers' Institute, he delivered another of his funny speeches on the "Permissive Bill." Referring to the feud raging between the Publicans and their rivals the Grocers, he said:—

"The Grocers who held licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors were about to be attacked. His hair stood on end when he read the organs of the Licensed Victuallers, to find what a bad account they gave of the Grocers. (Laughter.) The Publicans accused the Grocers of every enormity because they sold drink, which in their opinion ought to be sold and consumed only in the public-house."

Having, amid "loud laughter and applause," observed that in this case the relations between the Pharisee and Publican in the parable were reversed, the speaker went on to say that—

"He had a great respect for the ordinary Grocer, but he had no respect for the Grocer who sold intoxicating drink, and he would heartily help the Publicans in driving the liquor-selling Grocer out of the field. Having got rid of him, however, he would join them in any movement against the Publicans."

For this fair warning that the "Permissive Bill" is intended not only to put down public-houses, but also to restrict private persons, SIR WILFRID LAWSON deserves the thanks of every freeborn Briton who values his freedom. In the meanwhile the conflicting Publicans and Grocers will perhaps have sense enough to see how completely they, in relation to one another, correspond to those famous combatants in the fable, the Frog and the Mouse, and with what exactness the Kite hovering over them, that swooped down upon and snapped up both together, is represented by the United Kingdom Alliance, personified in SIR WILFRID LAWSON.

PUNCH'S PLAY-BILL.

MARRIED in Haste
Suits the taste.
Sam Tottles
Draws like what else?
Our Boys
Nought alloys.
All for Her
Makes a stir.
Masks and Faces—
Take your places!
Anne Boleyn
Crowds should pull in.
Peep-o'-Day—
See the play.
Mam'selle Clytie,
Rather flighty.

Rip Van Winkle
Makes eyes twinkle.
Black Eyed Susan,
Most amusin'.
Broken Hearts,
Slow in parts.
Quiet Rubber
Makes one blubber.
Piff-Paff—
Can you laugh?
Duke's Daughter
Might be shorter.
L'Archiduc,
Go and look.
Trial by Jury,
Still the fury.

THE LAND AND THE LANDLORD.

(An Appeal to MR. BRIGHT.)

No doubt the wise, Friend BRIGHT, with thee on Free Trade ground who stand,
Must own that no impediment should clog the sale of land.
Consistency and logic this acknowledgment demand;
Yet feel'st thou not that something may be said, on the other hand,
For the fine Old English Gentleman, one of the olden time?

Imagine, JOHN, that for the last two centuries, or three,
Trade in respect of land had been from trammels wholly free;
Where now would all the large estates with their broad acres be,
Entailed at present upon heirs of ancient pedigree,
Like the fine Old English Gentleman, one of the olden time?

Where the grey keeps and castles, the historic courts and halls?
The granges o'er whose gables lichen creeps, and ivy crawls,
Whence flit the bats and owls as dark the shade of twilight falls?
Where the stately manor-houses, the time-worn, ancestral walls,
Of your fine Old English Gentlemen, all of the olden time?

Thou know'st the ancient seat that bears a county name of mark,
The homestead nigh the rookery in avenue or park,
Whose annals were recorded by a grave and learned clerk,
That house where eery things are seen, say the neighbours, after dark,
By its fine Old English Gentleman, 'Squire of the olden time.

The house that 's full of wainscotting, and chests and coffers old,
And antique chairs and furniture, and mildew, moth, and mould;
Inside and out a picture, oh, how lovely to behold!
And where the Family Ghost appears before the death, we 're told,
Of the fine Old English Gentleman, still of the olden time:

Whence the Squire drives on Sundays to the Church, hedged round with yew,
And through service sits with gravity and grandeur in his pew,
From which, by mien distinguished from the men of fortunes new,
He contemplates his scutcheon on the tablet full in view
Of that fine Old English Gentleman, all of the olden time.

Canst thou not with him sympathise, Friend, canst thou not admire
The behaviour and belongings of this typical old 'Squire?
Would it not grieve thee were his Hall to be destroyed by fire?
Or the house and grounds to pass away to a base and alien buyer,
From that fine Old English Gentleman, one of the olden time?

'Tis sad enough already when, through cutting off entail,
A spendthrift is empowered to put his heritage up to sale;
How often and how sorely, and how vainly, we bewail
The good old mansions that have gone the way of the good old ale,
And the good Old English Gentlemen, 'Squires of the olden time!

NO MORE KNIFEBOYS!

A SHORT time ago MR. BRIDGE, at Wandsworth, and MR. CHANCE, at Lambeth, decided, against the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, that liability to the tax on male servants was not incurred by the occasional employment of a boy to do odd jobs. At Kingston, however, official zeal has been rewarded by obtaining from the Magistrates a conviction, with a mitigated penalty of five pounds, incurred by a Gentleman through having, without a licence, employed a Lad daily for a few hours. He had previously given an old man the same employment, which kept him out of the workhouse.

Nothing of this sort can occur again; and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue are further to be congratulated that the effect of their public-spirited proceeding at Kingston has already been that of causing numerous housekeepers to dismiss their boys. For of course all these housekeepers will now, instead of boys, employ regular footmen, or other male servants for whom they will be chargeable with no more duty than they were liable to for the boys, and of whose wages and keep the additional cost will be no object. Thus the Revenue will gain immensely; unless the appeal of which the Defendant at Kingston has given notice should be decided in his favour, and the Commissioners be unhappily ruled by the Court above to have unduly, vexatiously, and mischievously endeavoured to press the law to the injury and annoyance of their neighbours.

New Rhyme for the Nursery.

THERE was an old woman, and what do you think?
She paid one and sixpence to skate at a Rink;
A cropper she came, when she ventured to try it:
Oh, couldn't this foolish old woman keep quiet!

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

NTROIT Regina! Rootooit, Punchius! (Tuesday, February 8.) Sound our twopenny trumpet, in echo of the Life Guards' brass. Boom, our big drum, responsive to the Park "pots!" God save the QUEEN! And may she never again have so dreary a day for her resumption of so delightful a duty.

That such a crowd should have faced such weather for so many hours, says volumes for the warmth of London loyalty. Perhaps it glows the stronger for the rarity of its kindling. Is it as true of Queens as of holidays, that > "When they seldom come, they wished for come,

> And nothing pleaseth but rare ornaments"?

The Irrepressible Doctor was determined to have his Procession to the House, too—King Mob's Pageant by the side of QUEEN VICTORIA's. But Papa Police took King Mob by the scruff of the neck, first stopped, then spun him round, and, finally, chucked him back into his native slums amidst the approving guffaw of contemptuous Common Sense, which hates to see the monkey paws of a tag-rag-and-bobtail rabble laid on the great name and glorious associations of Magna Charta. The Doctor alone of the rabble rout was allowed to pass the cordon bleu, on his way to the House ("To what base uses may we come, HORATIO!"), affably bowing in recognition of the hisses and hootings of the public as he passed along.

Then HER MAJESTY graciously opened Parliament—her faithful Commons, by the way, rushing into the Presence like a pack of riotous Undergraduates—viâ the LORD CHANCELLOR, Keeper of the QUEEN's Conscience, and Speaker of the QUEEN's Speech, which this year contains rather less than the usual amount of nothing; and in that lessened sum-total less than usual of domestic nothing.

About Turkey, the Suez Canal Purchase, and recent Difficulties in China, papers are promised. The Prince's journey to India is pronounced a great success. So the QUEEN is going to take the title of EMPRESS OF THE INDIES—not the Prince that of King of England, as the Indépendance Belge doth vainly report. If England hates anything from her heart—besides Popery—it is Slavery. Ministers are sorry they have inadvertently trodden on BRITANNIA's toes in their Fugitive Slave Circulars, Nos. 1 and 2. They have withdrawn No. 1. They are going to smother No. 2 under a Royal Commission. Papers will be laid before the House (See Mr. Punch's Cartoon this week as a specimen) for further information. Besides, to atone for this little Circular slip, our officers will be ordered to look sharper than ever after the Slave Trade under native Indian Princes. South Africa is going to be confederated—let us hope to the improvemeut of Cape Wine, and the diminished production of Cape smoke, alcoholic and oratorical. In the Straits Settlements we have come, it is trusted, to a settlement of our straits.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons will have the Estimates laid before them—that they may rely on; and JOHN BULL will have to pay the year's bills, that he may rely on.

As to the chaotic jostle of competing measures, commonly called Domestic Legislation, "least said soonest mended." Le Ministre propose, et Force majeure dispose. So we 'll promise the least we can, and of that mean to fulfil as much as we can see our way to. Legislation affecting Appeal, Merchant Shipping, University and Primary Education, Commons, and Prisons, we promise you, as the Bills are drawn and ready to bring in. There are more in the pigeon-holes these came from, which may, in due time, be fledged to fly, at least, as far as First Reading. And now, be off to your Bills, and the Lords (and Commons) grant them a good deliverance!

There, Messieurs de l'Opposition get a hold, if you can, of that smooth eel of an oration! Comment drops off it like water off a duck's back. No wonder it slipped through your fingers, with the merest pretence of critical handling. Ministers are to fight the Suez Canal battle next week. Meanwhile, it may as well be scored to them in advance as a victory. It is the duty of the Opposition to discuss and dissect; but they would be ill-advised to fight, when the buyers have the country at their back.

As for MR. GLADSTONE, like Balaam, he blest the following of BENJAMIN, instead of cursing it. He applauds the Cabinet's cautious adhesion to the Austrian Note as the least objectionable of three courses open on the Eastern Question, between which the only doubt is, which is the least unpleasant, or the least likely to be profitable.

Then came the pelt of private Bills—nearly a hundred of them—

Hobbies young, and Hobbies old,
Hobbies, whose fate may be foretold;
Hobbies, whose knees are as yet unscored,
Hobbies, whom many a Session 's seen floored!
Cherished crotchets, still fresh and fair,
Crotchets much rubbed against the hair;
High hopes destined to fade in air:
Mischievous monomanias scampant,
Ardent aspirations stampant,
Reforms retiring and Reforms rampant!
All the eggs dropt where vagrom men roost
Outside of the Governmental Henroost;
How few to chip shell, how many be addled,
Ere the House that now gathers has skedaddled!

It was touching to see the rush, and to watch their marshalling, under the impartial hand of Blind Ballot, for their choice of a Wednesday. Et après?

Altogether, we must congratulate MR. DISRAELI on his opening day. Above all, his way of turning the flank of the Opposition, and repairing the Slave Circular blunder, was masterly—worthy of the Great Medicine Man!

Wednesday. — MR. OSBORNE MORGAN—ballotted out of reasonable hope of a Wednesday—means to use the wedge of a Resolution to force open the Burial Ground Gates, if he can, against the resistance of the Clerical Intransigentes.

Thursday. — Recognising the truth, that a Merchant Shipping Bill is too big an oyster for one gulp, Ministers are going to bring one in in gobbets.

Digitized by Google

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER takes charge of Marine Insurance, in a daring attempt to stop the scuttling-holes in the present law on the subject, which often make the loss of a rogue's ship a gain to the rogue. Interference with rogues' gains! No wonder there is much vehement invocation of Freedom of Contract! Can anything be more "delicate and difficult," as MR. NORWOOD happily puts it?

Side by side with SIR STAFFORD'S Bill to diminish Insurance frauds, SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY brings in his instalment of Merchant Shipping Reform—the temporary Act of last Session made permanent, with a few improvements—a framework, at least, for MR. PLIMSOLL to hang Amendments on.

MR. CROSS gives us a much-wanted Commons Enclosure Bill. MR. SHAW LEFEVRE is very indignant to find it is all his thunder. Is it any the worse for that?—that he should put himself in such a passion?

Friday (Lords).—The LORD CHANCELLOR propounded his plan of a Court of Final Appeal—a most ingenious piece of Mosaic. The Legal House of Lords—or the Lords' Court of Appeal—will include the Law Lords, the LORD CHANCELLOR, and two new Law-Life-Lords at £6,000. In time the paid Judges of the Privy Council will become also the paid Lords of the Lords' Court of Final Appeal, who will at last be four. Then we shall have (to parody GOLDSMITH)

> "A Bench contrived a double debt to pay,
> Lords' Court to-morrow, Council-Court to-day!"

An economical scheme for reconciling the substance of a working Court of Final Appeal with the shadow of a House of Lords jurisdiction—preserving a venerable name, while getting rid of a worn-out institution.

(Commons.)—The salaries of Roman Catholic Chaplains in India are to be raised—as they ought to be.

MR. SCLATER-BOOTH brings in a Bill for amending the law as to valuation for rating purposes, handsomely acknowledging his obligation to MR. GOSCHEN, whose valuation machinery for the Metropolis he has borrowed. It occurs to Mr. P., as a ratepayer, that what is wanted, is not so much improvement in our rate-making, as in our rate-spending, machinery.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

E up very early in the morning, indeed, at daybreak, when all should sally forth, with ladders and telescopes, and watch the birds pairing. Much depends on what sort of bird is first seen. If it is a Wryneck, or a Crossbill, make up your mind that the course of true love (not to be found on any map) will not run particularly smooth for you. If a Goldfinch, or a Yellowhammer, it is a sure sign that you will marry money. But if a Love bird, then it is absolutely certain that neither parents, nor guardians, nor long absence, nor limited means, nor the high price of provisions, will prevent you from marrying the person who is dearer to you than all the world besides. A Blackbird is a clear indication that your husband will be a Clergyman; a Redbreast, that he will be in the Army; a Bunting, in the Navy; a Goose, or a Booby, should warn you of a want of intellectual qualities; a Duck will instinctively bring a particular person to your recollection; and the sight of a pair of Turtle Doves will make you blithe and happy for all the rest of the day.

It is an undertaking fraught with considerable peril to send a Valentine to a Ward in Chancery. Do not run the risk of fine and imprisonment, unless you have first obtained the written sanction, properly stamped, of the LORD CHANCELLOR, or a Judge at Chambers. The document you propose to transmit must be filed in Court at least fourteen days before the Fourteenth of February, accompanied by an affidavit, made before a Commissioner in Lunacy, that the contents of the Valentine, if in MS., are your own original composition, and that you have, at least, fifteen hundred a year, or expectations from two wealthy maiden aunts, who approve of the match.

Whatever the prevailing coiffure may be, on this day it is indispensable that you should wear your hair in a true lover's knot.

In buying a Valentine to send to an adult, if you wish it to produce a favourable impression, the following precautions must be strictly observed:—

1. Select a fine day in February for the purchase, when there is no fog, and the wind is in the South-west, and there is blue sky and sunshine, and the birds are singing on the trees.
2. Wear a Nosegay, composed of Bachelors' Buttons, Forget-Me-Not, Heartsease, Love-in-Idleness, Passion Flower, and Speedwell.
3. Let every article of your dress be new, and worn on this occasion for the first time. A Glossy Hat, a Blue Coat, with brass buttons, White Waistcoat, Lavender Trousers, and a Violet Scarf, present a tasteful and unobtrusive appearance.
4. Draw up to the door of the shop where you purpose making your selection in a neat Brougham, or smart Victoria.
5. Take no change. If the Valentine you fix upon is priced threepence, and you have only a sovereign in your purse, beg the seller's acceptance of the balance. Any neglect of this injunction, betraying, as it would, a mercenary spirit, may lead to the destruction of your most cherished hopes.
6. Post your Valentine with your own hands, not in a Pillar-box, not at a Receiving-house, but at St. Martin's-le-Grand, if you live in London; if in the Country, then at the Head-office. For greater security, you had better register the packet; and be particular in inviting the attention of the clerk to the nature of its contents.

If the first time you go out of doors on St. Valentine's morning, you should meet the same person in the same spot and at the same moment in three successive years, you will be guilty of a dereliction of duty if you do not mention to her the subject which is nearest to your heart, and press for a favourable reply before post-time.

This being Leap-Year, there can be no objection, as an exceptional occurrence, to a Lady sending a Valentine to a Gentleman; but she must first consult all her maternal female relatives, who are unmarried and above forty years of age, on the propriety of the step, and afterwards submit the Valentine itself to the family lawyer, who will take Counsel's opinion upon it, if thought advisable.

A Memoir of BISHOP VALENTINE, by his Private Secretary, with Extracts from his Journals and Correspondence, and Portrait, is understood to be nearly ready for publication.

SCHOOL OF COOKERY.

Examination Papers for the ordinary Degree of C.B. (Cordon Bleu.)

I.—HISTORICAL COOKERY.

1. Of what form and consistency were the Crumpets ALFRED THE GREAT burnt? State their number.
2. Of what breed was the Goose cooked by HENRY THE EIGHTH for his Queens?
3. Relate the story of VATEL'S precocious talent for making mud pies.
4. (a) Give leading incidents in the lives of SOUBISE, MAINTENON, BECHAMEL, and CHATEAUBRIAND, and connect them with their respective plats.
   (b) What Cabinet was NESSELRODE at the head of?
   (c) State the ingredients of the sauces, plats, or puddings to which their names have been given.
5. Give the etymologies of Kromeski, Chaudfroid, Salmi, and Minestrone, and distinguish the latter from Minestra.

II.—GEOGRAPHICAL COOKERY.

1. Give the latitude and longitude of Eel-Pie Island.
2. When did COOK discover the Sandwich Islands?
3. What is the Capital of the Land o' Cakes.
4. What pastures produce the Cream for Butter Scotch?

III.—PRACTICAL COOKERY.

1. Write out a Menu in the Tajpore, Judpore, and Fiji languages.
2. Give the French for Pickled Whelks, Plum Duff, Welsh Rabbit, Cock-a-leekie, Haggis, Pop-Corn, and Tummy Cake.
3. Give receipts for the following dishes:—Bread and Butter; Toast and Water; Baked Potatoes; and Nursery Tea.
4. Analyse, translate, and explain—
   Ravigote de Mollusques farcies à la Crême de Pataboûm.
   Macédoine d'Orvietan de Stamboul en Turlupinade.
   Petites Caisses Infernales à la Crinière de Poniatowski.
   Trocadéro Truffé à la Crénom d'un Petit Bonhomme.

Digitized by Google

5. Give any anecdotes you know of the Lady Banker and the Female Gardener familiarly referred to as La Financière and La Jardinière.

6. Can you serve up the following Menu at twenty-four hours' notice, without assistance?

Hors d'œuvres Froids—Sharks' Fins and Kippered Trepang.
Potages—Nids d'Hirondelles; clear Terrapin.
Poissons—Rouges de Java; Sea-Serpent Cutlets.
Entrées—Cervelle d'Oran-Outan frite; Noix de Giraffe à la Financière.
Rôts—Buffalo Hump; Wild Turkey.
Gibier—Canvas-back'd Ducks; Delhi Peacocks.
Entremets—Bread-fruit Pudding; Mangosteen Tart.

IV.—MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS.

1. May a Scullery-Maid join COOK'S Excursions if personally well-conducted?
2. State your views upon Stock, Kitchen Grease, Unladylike Conduct in Mistresses who will come down-stairs, Perquisites, Tradesmen's Tips, and Sundays out.
3. How many times a week do you go to the Rink?
4. Describe the manners and customs of the common Policeman.

AS YOU WEAR!

RESS! is a well-known word of command. So we need not wonder if the uniform of Her Majesty's Army has been of late occupying our Military Heads. The burning questions of how the strap of the forage-cap is to be worn, and the amount of embroidery to be allowed on the sleeves of the mess-jacket, seem now to have been set at rest for ever. Mr. Punch heartily congratulates the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE upon the completion of his arduous labours, and trusts that he will be equally successful with the twin schemes — Localisation and Mobilisation. But yet the Sage of Fleet Street is nothing if not critical; and, accordingly, the following further alterations in Her Majesty's livery (embodied in a Circular) are suggested to H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding in Chief, with Mr. Punch's kindest regards and best compliments:—

UNIFORM FOR THE ARMY.

85, Fleet Street, Feb. 14, 1876.

For General Officers.—In future respirators will be worn between the months of October and March. Wheel-chairs may be used instead of horses at Reviews when the Sovereign is not present. Crutches bound with an inch of gold lace (regulation pattern) may be taken to Levees. Ear-trumpets in future to be carried hitched up on the left side under the sword-belt.

For Captains.—Wigs are to be worn under the shako in cases where the officers can count thirty years' service. White whiskers to be dyed garter-blue in Review order.

For Subalterns.—In future, officers may bring their school-books, black boards, and globes on to parade. When the battalion is ordered to "stand at ease," officers will wear their blue spectacles over their eyes two inches above the eyebrows. The hair in future may be worn long (pattern, "German Professor"), and gloves can be dispensed with.

For Privates.—In future, Soldiers taking part in a Review in heavy marching order, will be required to wear their pin-befores.

SOBRIETY IN SCOTLAND.

IN a lately published Parliamentary paper, the number of persons, during the year ended the 30th of last June, arrested in Scotland for drunkenness was 61,173. "Drunk and incapable," 38,213. "Drunk and disorderly," 22,960. And have Scotchmen still the cheek to sing "We are na fou, we 're nae that fou?"

CLERICAL INTELLIGENCE.

AT a meeting of High Churchmen for discussion of the Burials Bill, the REVEREND T. HUGO is reported, in the Church Times, to have spoken thus:—

"With regard to the grievance the Clergy felt at being the national undertakers, it was one he felt in no small degree. It was an intolerable wrong that a man who was excommunicated had a right to come to the Clergy to be buried. But there was a greater grievance. No doubt every Dissenting Minister had his black sheep, and, when the hand of death fell on them, he might refuse to inter those black sheep; the alternative being that the Clergy would have to bury them, and so they would not only have the reprobates of their own congregations, but all the carrion of dissent to bury, which, according to law, might be turned over to them."

"The carrion of dissent!" What a pretty figure of speech for a Clergyman to utter! How this "snowy-banded, delicate-handed" Gentleman must shrink from the idea of being a "national undertaker," and how tightly he must hold his nose the while he reads the Burial Service over some black sheep of a Dissenter!

After using more strong language than we feel inclined to quote, the Reverend—very Reverend—speaker thus concluded:—

"With the exception of a few here and there, Dissenters were chiefly remarkable for impudence, ignorance and stupidity; and dissent was below contempt as regarded its intellectual position. It was a base thing, and as long as Churchmen kept it down under them, so long would there be happiness and blessedness in England."

Hard words break no bones, or the dissenting body would be found in a sore plight after such a speech as this. England must indeed feel happy and blessed in the thought that she possesses such a champion as this Churchman, ever ready to defend her from the Dragon of Dissent.

HARD MEASURE.

FROM a statement circulated by MR. G. S. MEASOM, a member of the Orphanage Working School Committee, it appears that the "Joseph Soul Testimonial," raised in recognition of MR. SOUL'S services as Secretary to that charity and others, was not a payment made directly to MR. SOUL himself, but was a sum of money (£1,337 11*s.* 6*d.*, less necessary expenses) invested for the benefit of MRS. SOUL and her daughter.

It further appears, however, that a Committee of the Orphan Working School had generously awarded to MR. SOUL, on his retirement from office, a pension equal in amount to his full salary.

Unhappily, it still further appears that on being reported to the "General Court," this grant was, reduced £50 per annum, on the alleged ground that "a testimonial had been got up for MR. SOUL'S benefit by MR. MEASOM without consultation with any member of the Committee"—which MR. MEASOM denies.

Here, surely, there is some mistake. All kinds of governing and legislative bodies comprise little-minded members, actuated chiefly by a sense of self-importance—nearly all the sense they have. Some of them, under a show of zeal for economising corporate funds, are apt, on opportunity, to indulge a predilection for reducing another man's income. Doubtless, the majority of the Orphanage Working School's "General Court" is not composed of that kind of constituents; and, if it has been betrayed into inflicting a disappointment and an unmerited hardship on a worthy SOUL, will lose no time in rescinding a harsh resolution.

"Credat Judæus!"

SIR,

THERE was a Sermon in behalf of the Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews in our Parish Church last Sunday. Walking home with my family afterwards, my eldest son (a very hopeful young man, as you may guess) asked me what I considered the greatest difference between Jews and Christians.

I answered that I knew of no other differences between them save those of nationality and religion. To which he replied—

"Oh, yes, there is another very great difference. Christians take much interest in the Jews, and Jews take much interest out of the Christians."

I remain, dear Mr. Punch, Yours,

A PROUD PARENT.

FROM "CHURCH AND STATE" TO "IRISH CHURCH DISESTABLISHMENT."

"MR. GLADSTONE has been admitted to the honorary freedom of the Turners' Company."

A LUSUS NATURÆ.—A Spelling-Bee in a Bonnet.

Digitized by Google

MORE COMPLIMENTARY THAN IT SEEMS.

Papa (concluding the fascinating Tale). "'AND HE WAS TURNED INTO A BEAUTIFUL PRINCE, AND MARRIED BEAUTY'"!
Minnie (after a pause). "PAPA, WERE YOU A BEAST BEFORE YOU MARRIED MAMMA?"

THE DEFENCE OF HACKNEY DOWNS.

CERTAIN markings and carvings on the face of Nature are popularly ascribed to the Evil One. A dell in a certain Down is named "The Devil's Punchbowl." On Hackney Downs, also, there is an excavation which will, perhaps, one day bear the same title. Possibly it may likewise be called AMHURST'S Hollow. A Circular, bearing the signature of MR. JOHN DE MORGAN, alleges that, notwithstanding the Metropolitan Commons Acts of 1866 and 1872, forbidding enclosure of or encroachment on any Metropolitan Common,—

"MR. TYSSEN AMHURST, the Lord, or one of the Lords, of the Manor, in 1874, enclosed two pieces of Commons Land on Hackney Downs and North Mill Field; and at the same time opened a large pit (now measuring 190 feet by 90 feet, and a depth of about eight feet), from which gravel has been taken and sold, to the great injury of the pasturage of the Common."

Now the enclosure and excavation of public land may be regarded as the work of a public enemy, so nearly resembling the Enemy of Man as to make any hole he might illegally dig alike and equally fit to be called the devil's or his own. MR. DE MORGAN contends that the pit above-mentioned was dug, and that the fences were erected on Hackney Common against the Law. Accordingly, he says,—

"I, at the invitation of the Commoners, after careful study, advised the removal of the fences erected on Hackney Downs. In the presence of 50,000 people, the Commoners asserted their right, on December 11th."

For which exploit the bold Commoners and their dauntless Champion have been immortalised; modesty alone prevents Mr. Punch saying how—besides, everybody knows. Of course MR. DE MORGAN was prepared for the consequences. He thus relates them:—

"Immediately an action was commenced against me, at the instance of the Lord of the Manor, for damages, and for an injunction to restrain from further proceedings."

A Committee of Commoners on the part of MR. DE MORGAN have instituted a cross action against the Lord of the Manor. The case has come before the Master of the Rolls; litigation is still pending; the parties on either side having mutually undertaken in the meanwhile to hold their hands, the Lord of the Manor from setting up any more fences, or digging any other holes, and the Commoners from removing any extant fences, until the case shall have been heard. But encroaching Lords of Manors are not to be fought without money. Subscriptions can be sent either directly to MR. DE MORGAN, or to his Solicitor, MR. E. KIMBER, 22, Queen Street, Cheapside. He and his valiant Commoners want them to carry on the war. A Public that values its own Open Spaces will doubtless respond liberally to the following appeal:—

"For the sake of the health of the poor living in overcrowded houses, for the sake of preserving the natural powers of your children, by providing for them a playground, I appeal for funds. A balance-sheet will be published at the close of the fight."

What fight short of battle against a foreign invader concerns a nation more than warfare with a domestic enemy, who, for his private aggrandisement, is invading public land? Success to the resolute combatants and their determined Leader in their fight for the defence and rescue of Hackney Downs.

A Tender Subject.

(For the Admiralty.)

THE Government ask for a "tender"
For raising the Vanguard. Enough
Of sand now o'erlies her to render
The job most uncommonly tough!

Sois Virgiliana.

(For MR. BANNER OAKLEY.)

"Hi nostri reditus, exspectatique triumphi?"—Æn. xi. 54.

ARE these my grand returns, and expected triumphs?

Digitized by Google

THE "EXTINGUISHER" TRICK.

"HERE YOU PERCEIVE 'FUGITIVE SLAVE CIRCULAR' NUMBER TWO—NUMBER ONE HAVING DISAPPEARED ALREADY! I NOW TAKE THIS CONE INTO MY HAND;—IT RESEMBLES AN EXTINGUISHER, AND IS CALLED A 'ROYAL COMMISSION.' I PLACE IT OVER THE 'CIRCULAR,' AND—HEY, PRESTO!—ON RAISING IT AGAIN, 'CIRCULAR' NUMBER TWO WILL HAVE DISAPPEARED!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(True, full, and Particular Account of a Great Tiger Hunt, showing "How it is done.")

DEAR SIR,

I SHALL give it all up. I won't play any more. I shall chuck up the sponge, and return. I've had a row with SIR JÂK HOLKAR—the Holkar—who can't stand a joke. The Holkar is not a Jokar. He will wear a European hat, which doesn't suit his native Toggaree (civilian's costume on ordinary occasions), and so at Jeypore I got a lot of little Tattees (a sort of native street-boy) to run after him, and shout, "Who's your Mahr-hatta?" He was wild, and came to complain to my Noble and Princely Companion. I could not help overhearing their conversation, as they were in the next room to me, which LEVAH DORAJAH, our head Butler, had just quitted, forgetting, as he invariably does, fermer la porte behind him. You know the proverb about listeners? Well, I was obliged to step in and have it out with the Holkar, who finished by weeping copiously. But—my Noble Friend was short with me. For the first time—and mind you—for the last. We made it up before dinner over a glass of Chowrie (a kind of barley-water, with slices of Indian pickle in it, served like cup), and a fragrant Haremzadah (something between a 'Pickwick' and a 'Vevey Fin') out of my own private cigar-case.*

When this cloud had cleared off, my Noble Sportsman wanted to have a shot at a tiger, in fact, to see some real fun, with a spice of danger in it. The truth is, he had been excited by my accounts of how in former years (Ah! how little did I then think I should revisit the scenes of my youth in such distinguished company) I had traced the monarch of the forest to his lair, had wrestled with him single-handed in the jungle, had given him his coup de grâce all among the pampas, and how, armed only with a Musmud (a kind of light walking-cane†), I had tickled a tiger like a trout, till I bagged him.

"Mon Prince," said I, for he wouldn't be gainsaid, "you shall have your tiger."

B-R-SF-RD, C-R-GT-N, W. H. R-SS-LL, S-TH-RL-ND, and all of 'em, came up to me.

"Don't let him risk anything!" they cried.

"Leave it to me," I replied, and then I gave them my plan. It was simple, and succeeded to admiration. I got a fine bullock, had him killed, steeped in rum, and then drove out into the jungle. Sure enough, true to his unerring instinct, the finest Bengal tiger I have ever seen came bounding up to where the carcase lay, with myself concealed in the high grass behind it. The splendid beast made a dinner for a month off the dainty provided for him, and, of course, the rum utterly fuddled him. When he was sufficiently far gone to render all chance of his going any farther highly problematical, I slipt my lasso round his neck, led him quietly down the hill, and tied him up in a large old forty-gallon cask, which I had taken the precaution to have placed there for the purpose. Then I sent messengers into the town with the news, and presently out came my Noble Sportsman and the Suite in carriages, armed to the teeth. I could not help laughing in my sleeve. However, the natives did the thing in style. They erected a wooden tower, into which my Royal Companion could climb, and from which he could shoot at his ease—or, I should say, shoot at his tiger—for I suppose that a man shooting at his ease, would intend to kill time, whatever he aimed at.

When all was prepared, I undid the cord, and pulled the tiger's tail, but he wouldn't wake—he was sleeping off the fumes of the rum. Two buckets of water did the trick, when he arose with a low growl, and gave me a side-glance of intense dislike. But, fortunately, as a boy, I had picked up the secret of pacifying these brutes, and it stood me in good stead on this occasion. He came out of the tub, looked about, yawned, and then, pulling himself together, began quietly trotting homewards towards his native jungle. Another tug of his tail from me sent him off towards the Royal box, whence he was very soon saluted with two or three shots that immensely astonished him. He gave one roar, bounded off, and disappeared, much to the disappointment of the gentlemen in the wooden tower. But, knowing his route, I took a short cut, and met him as he was turning the corner. With all the concentrated fury at his command, he sprang on me, but, luckily, remembering that sort of Pantomime trick which Indian hunters practise, I passed underneath him as he bounded over me, caught him by the tail, which brought him heavily to the ground, and then with an air-pistol, so that the report might not reach Somebody's ears, I settled accounts with Mr. Tiger. Then I carefully inserted a bullet in the beast's heart, and ran back, shouting and holloaing, to the Noble and Distinguished Party. What was their delight at seeing the Splendid Animal dead as mutton! The question was, "Who killed Cock Robin?" The answer was soon forthcoming. One of the natives, stooping, found in the Tiger's heart a bullet, which, being handed round (like the shoe in Cinderella), to find out to whom it belonged, was at last discovered to fit exactly the bore of His Royal Highness's rifle!!

Come, Sir, wasn't that worth five thousand a-year and a baronetcy? I believe you, my Bhoy! But where is gratitude in this world? Hymns are actually being composed and sung in honour of the Tiger Slayer; and no deed has done more for the future of India than this, the fame of which will raise my Noble and Amiable Companion to the highest pinnacle on which Indian reverence can place him. And yet—shall auld acquaintance be forgot?

I must finish up this in haste, having been just called in to join in our evening Spelling-Bee, over our cup of Kaffy. They put too much Shikkaree in the Kaffy here. However, as it's in the next tent, I must throw my Suwarree loosely round my throat, and run in.

IBRAHIM BEG has just come in, to ask us to lend him two rupees, to put on at *Bagheecha (a sort of Blind Hookey). IBRAHIM BEG belongs to an ancient family, but he's always cadging, and he doesn't pay when he wins. I'm off.

YOUR EVER FAITHFUL REPRESENTATIVE.
(In India.)

* As Our Correspondent intimates his intention of speedily returning, we have decided upon waiting for his arrival, in order to obtain such explanations of Indian words as we cannot find in our own Indian Dictionary. At present, in default of better information, we can only inform our readers that the usually accepted interpretation of Haremzadah is not any sort of cigar, but "a savage;" that Chowrie, of which he professes to have had a glass, is a "Fly-flapper, formed of the tail of a Thibet cow, and only used by persons of high rank;" and the Tattee, which he explains to be "a sort of street-boy," is "a screen of glass placed in a window, and cooled by water." Magna est veritas!——We break off suddenly. A Telegram has just reached us, from a person in whom we have every confidence, informing us that a person, bearing a striking resemblance to our Representative, and a Boy with a large book, have just been seen on the pier at Gravesend. The Boy, by the description, seems to be our missing link. We have telegraphed back "Spare no expense. Follow them, and bring them to justice, whatever it may cost you." Perhaps, before this number is published, we shall be in possession of further and more certain details. At present, all we can do is to request our readers to suspend their judgment, and our judgment would suspend them (the delinquents) if it could.—ED.

† At present it is not worth our while to do more than remark that the Dictionary gives Musmud, not as a "walking-cane," but a "Mussulman throne." Where will this end?—ED.

* Bagheecha, according to the Dictionary, is "a fruit garden," not a game of cards. We are expecting another telegram from Gravesend. We warn the public in advance, and have a great mind to publish the photographs of our Correspondent and the Boy.—ED.

SUFFOCATION AND SCIENCE.

THE atmosphere of the Lecture Theatre of the Royal Institution is remarkable for containing a very large excess of carbonic acid gas, when, as usual on Friday evening meetings, those who breathe it are numerous. Hence, the Albemarle Street rendezvous of philosophers cannot be crowded, without being, literally, crammed to suffocation. The representative of the Medical Press and Circular notes, that during PROFESSOR HUXLEY's lecture there the other night, Ladies were led out fainting, and states that he was himself almost obliged to retire by the stifling nature of the air under the gallery. An attempt made to open the ventilators set PROFESSOR HUXLEY sneezing, and nearly made him shut up. Ventilation has ever been notoriously defective, and the air loaded with noxious gas, at the Royal Institution. Its theatre when filled is as fit for a lecture-room as the Grotto del Cane—fit to stupefy everybody in it, and send even the hearers of PROFESSORS HUXLEY and TYNDALL to sleep. Yet the Royal Institution is the very Temple of Chemical Science. Here is another parallel to the case of the shoemaker's wife; always the worst shod woman in the parish—isn't she?

Digitized by Google

AWKWARD INCIDENT IN FASHIONABLE LIFE.

THE BEAUTEOUS MRS. VAVASOUR BELSIZE AND HER LOVELY SISTERS STOP THE WAY IN DIRE CONSTERNATION. THEY HAD UNDERSTOOD THAT THE RECEPTION AT BRABAZON HALL WOULD TAKE PLACE IN THE PALATIAL SUITE OF ROOMS ON THE GROUND-FLOOR, AND MRS. V. B. HAS COME IN A SKIRT OF SUCH FASHIONABLE TIGHTNESS THAT TO MOUNT A SINGLE STEP IS AN IMPOSSIBILITY; WHEREAS THE GROUND-FLOOR SUITE IS UNDERGOING ALTERATIONS, AND MRS. BRABAZON DE VERE TOMKYNNES IS ENTERTAINING HER GUESTS UP-STAIRS

Digitized by Google

CONSCIENTIOUS.

Conservative M.P. (to Butler, who has given Warning). "WHAT HAVE YOU TO COMPLAIN OF?"

Butler. "OH, NOTHING IN THE 'OUSE, SIR—LEASTWAYS, NOT IN THIS 'OUSE, SIR. BUT I'M AFRAID, FROM 'ER MAJESTY'S SPEECH, AS THE CONSERVATIVES DON'T MEAN TO HACT UP TO THEIR PROGRAMME"!!

HORACE AND LYDIA ON THE RINK.

"Donec gratus eram tibi," &c.

The Lover.

AH, LADY LUCY, I am glad to find you
Charming as when, that happy afternoon,
Beneath a slender birch with silver rind, you
Watched the sun sink 'mid rosy clouds of June.

The Lady.

Dear me! You do remember? Well, how curious
Although so many months have slipped away.
I thought your sentimental saying spurious,
And quite forgot it till this very day.

The Lover.

Yes, you forgot, I know! I saw you rinking
With that LORAINE, the fastest man in Town.
His essenced head has never done much thinking.
I felt a strong desire to knock him down.

The Lady.

Fast! Yes, he takes one's breath away in skating·
I really have not quite recovered mine.
But let me ask, while thus we are debating,
Who sent my Cousin MAUD a Valentine?

The Lover.

Your Cousin MAUD 's a child. Come, don't be dismal.
I could not tell you if her eyes are blue.
There 's something hidden in my heart abysmal,
Which I am very sure belongs to you.

The Lady.

Spelling-Bee English does not fit your lips, Sir.
Be cool to MAUD: I 'll try to cut LORAINE.
And if you never make another slip, Sir,
Perhaps we may look on sunset skies again.

Dearth of Army Doctors.

THE papers report a grievous lack of candidates for the commission of Medical Officer in the Army. Private practice is lucrative to few but the most eminent Physicians and Surgeons. Anything like adequate pay and a position on a fair footing with combatant Officers surely might be expected to attract at least a sufficiency of Army Surgeons. These attractions have yet to be tried.

STERN TRUTHS.

DEAR MR. PUNCH,

NOT having had an opportunity of laying my views before the PRIME MINISTER the other day, I send you a brief note of what I intended to have said on behalf of myself and brother Ship-owners.

In the first place, what right has a fellow like PLIMSOLL to interfere with me? I wish he'd give me provocation to pull his nose, or smash his spectacles. I've actually had four out of five ships detained in consequence of his impertinent meddling. Because one fourth of a crew of sixteen object to be drowned, are they to prevent twelve other honest and daring fellows from risking their lives, as British Seamen ought always to be ready to do at the call of duty. It is perfectly monstrous!

It is true that one or two of my ships have occasionally sailed rather deep in the water, and that one did go down not long after leaving port. But in this case it was solely because the Captain had foolishly forgotten to allow for the weight of the crew, who only shipped at the last moment—the carpenter and boatswain being exceptionally heavy men.

Then, as for saying that Seamen are, as a rule, dissatisfied with their ships, it is all moonshine. The Sailor's attachment to his ship is, on the contrary, proverbial. Why, it was only the other day a man fell overboard from one of my own ships. Did he swim away from it? No, he immediately endeavoured to climb on board again, and expressed the highest satisfaction when he found himself once more among his messmates. Instances of this kind are numerous.

With regard to want of proper comfort and accommodation, all I can say is that I don't believe there is a single bunk in all my vessels in which the stoutest Sailor could not turn without coming in contact with the top planking. What do you say to that, Mr. Punch?

There are only two more points upon which I need trouble you; and they are so insignificant, that I must apologise for mentioning them.

The frequency of casualties has been much spouted about by PLIMSOLL AND CO. I simply remark, "Pooh!" Do not accidents happen on land? Did not my own daughter tread on a piece of orange-peel the other day, and twisted her foot, so that she could not skate for a week? And as to a case, lately much commented on by a scandal-loving Press, in which one of my ships came into port with eighteen out of twenty disabled by scurvy, if you only knew the trouble a Captain has to get his men to take the slightest precautions, and their rooted prejudice against lime-juice and other antiscorbutics, you would, I am sure, agree with me that the owner is the last person to be made responsible for what is, after all, only a form of disease, and mysterious, like all diseases.

Scurvy is, no doubt, an unpleasant complaint; so is the gout: I've got a touch of it myself now. So you see, Mr. Punch, there is not the slightest occasion for all this agitation; and all I can say is, that if I am to be interfered with in my business, it will end in my being unable to clear a living profit, and cutting the concern altogether, at whatever cost to the country. I have only expressed in this letter what I know to be the private views of others of my class.

If you want to see what a jolly, contented dog the British Seaman really is, come and spend a week aboard my yacht, and believe me to be,

Yours, indignantly,
A SHIPOWNER.

"The Ship and Turtle," Feb. 10, 1876.

AMERICAN COUSINHOOD.

A GENEALOGIST in the Far West writes to ask what relation, if any, is J. TIMMIS WARD, the late Senior Wrangler, to R. TEMUS WARD, the late popular humorist?

Digitized by Google

"THE WAY WE BUILD NOW."

Indignant Housowner (he had heard it was so much cheaper, in the end, to buy your House). "WH' WHAT 'S THE—WHAT AM I!—WHA' WHAT DO YOU SUPPOSE IS THE MEANING OF THIS, MR. SCAMPLING!?"

Local Builder. "'T' TUT, TUT! WELL, SIR, I 'SPECTS SOME ONE'S BEEN A-LEANIN' AGIN IT!!"

A GUINEA FOR JACK'S HOSPITAL.

MONEY is wanted to extend the efficiency of one of the noblest of our national charities—the most expressly national indeed of them all, yet at the same time more than national. That is, dear friends, the Seamen's Hospital, late the Dreadnought, at Greenwich, open not only to British Seamen who need laying up for repairs, but likewise to Seamen of all nations requiring to go into dock. To the funds of this excellent and sorely-needed Institution the Goldsmiths', the Clothworkers', the Saddlers', the Mercers', the Drapers', the Skinners', the Vintners', the Salters', and, last, not least, the Worshipful Merchant Taylors' Company, have liberally subscribed—the latter to a donation of £31 10*s.* having added a grant of free admission to their Convalescent Institution at Bognor, which has accordingly received many patients from the Seamen's Hospital during the past year.

However, the support of Jack's Hospital concerns not only the City and Port of London, but every Port in England—indeed every Port and Harbour all over the world. It is itself a Universal Harbour of Refuge. In their fifty-fifth annual Report, just published—a pretty little blue book—the Managing Body of the Seamen's Hospital Society apprise all whom it concerns—that is, everybody—that, for reasons which see:—

"The Committee ask the Public to come forward, and increase the amount received in annual subscriptions from £2000 to £5000, and then, if on an average £50 annually be received from each port that sends patients to the Hospital in the course of the year, the Society will be established on a sound national basis."

This appeal is now made known to the world at large by the one periodical which can truly boast a world-wide circulation.

THE BIRD QUESTION.

OH, would I wear a Bird?
Certainly not—if I were a Lady!

MARRIAGE MEMORIES.

WHAT the Father says.—Which side must I stand on when I have to give her away?

What the Mother says.—I am sure the ices will be late for the Breakfast.

What the Sister says.—I flatter myself I am the best looking of the eight Bridesmaids.

What the Brother says.—Of course, the Best Man is behind his time—just like him!

What the Pew-opener says.—This way, my dear young Lady!

What the Beadle says.—They are sure to be in time, Sir. I will motion to you the moment I see 'em a coming.

What the Clergyman says.—Have you got the ring?

What the Crowd says.—Hoorray! That's 'er! Oh, ain't 'e a Guy!

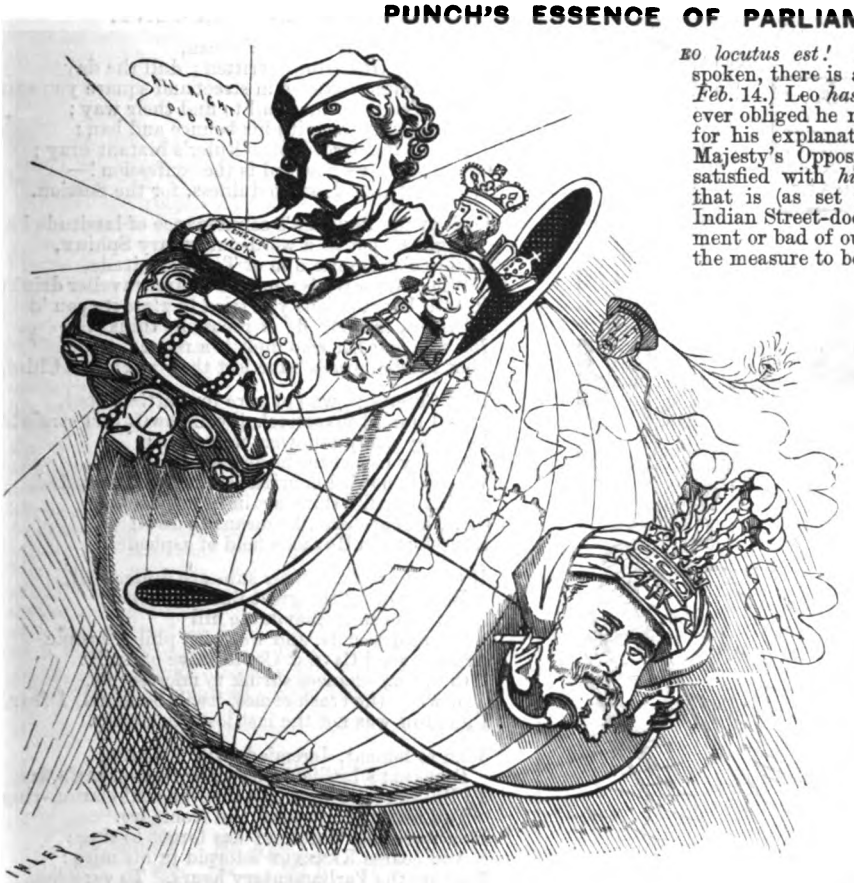
What the Old Friend of the Family says.—I have known him too since he was so high. That was nigh upon forty years ago!

What the Funny Man says.—You can see from my face that I am just the man to be associated with the Bridesmaids.

What the Best Man says.—Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking.

What the Bride says.—Good-bye, my own darling Mamma and Papa, and—EMMY dear, please do see the things are all right before we start.

What the Bridegroom says.—Thank goodness, it is all over



Disbarred.

OUT of compliment, no doubt, to DR. KENEALY'S late forensic position a "stet processus" was entered in bar of his late motion from Tavistock Square to Westminster Palace. The Police appeared for the Public, and showed cause against the (Mob) Rule moved for by the learned Doctor.

A DEFINITION.—Flirtation: a Spoon with nothing in it.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

Eo locutus est! And when either Leo or Bos Britannicus has spoken, there is an end of discourse and discussion. (Monday, Feb. 14.) Leo has spoken on the Suez Canal purchase, and, however obliged he may be to the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER for his explanations, and to the Head and Members of Her Majesty's Opposition for their critical analysis thereof, he is satisfied with his share—the Lion's share—in the venture, and that is (as set forth in this week's Cartoon) no less than his Indian Street-door Key. Whether the purchase be a good investment or bad of our four millions, by interest-measure, that is not the measure to be applied to this transaction. There is a high-policy-measure, as well as an interest-measure, in which the scale is marked—not by nominal L(ibræ), S(olidi), D(enarii)—but by national C(redit), S(afety), and H(onour). By that measure Ministers demand, and rightly demand, to have this purchase gauged. And with British Lion and British Bull at their backs, they may confidently face the criticism of the Opposition, in the adjourned debate this day week, for which LORD HARTINGTON and MR. GLADSTONE reasonably pressed, and which MR. DISRAELI wisely conceded.

Tuesday.—SIR WILLIAM FRASER attacked the "Parochial System" of Local Metropolitan Government, and thereby laid himself open to sundry "counters"—but more for slips in words than facts—from LOCKE, LUSK, and HOGG. London is now misgoverned, not by its beadles, but by its Ædiles; not by "porochial" Bumbles, but by District Boards and Vestries, which combine in a smaller cluster of big bodies most of the faults of the huge congeries of lesser bodies they have absorbed. LUSK uttered the pious wish that those who found fault with the existing vestrymen, had to look after the street-sweeping, the dust-carts, and the nuisances themselves. Fancy SIR W. FRASER transformed from Apollo to Hercules—turned from translating Tasso to cleansing the Augean Stable of London! SIR J. HOGG said a good word—not undeserved—for the Metropolitan Board, which has now finally passed from the stage of Words to that of Works.

But more is needed for London than the great mind of even the Metropolitan Board can compass. We want to see Ædileship brought down from such heroic tasks as Embankments and Viaducts to the humbler duties of the scavenger's cart and the domestic dust-bin. No doubt the Wen is a big one to deal with, but it wants doctoring sadly. If CROSS would take up his London, London would take up its CROSS, and set him on a higher pinnacle than he ever will reach by even the regulation of Licensed Victuallers' houses and the improvement of Artisans' Dwellings.

MR. HUBBARD is going to set the law as to Crossed Cheques on its right end again, from which it has been rudely toppled by the rude hands of the Judges in MILLS and SMITH. Don't check the use of crossed cheques whatever you do! There is nothing prettier to look at than the magic "and Co" across a stamped "Please pay." And then they show the payee has the highly respectable appendage of a banking account.

Stern Economists, Municipal and Imperial, don't like paying superannuation allowances. Let a man save out of his salary, and if he don't, or can't, turn him out to starve, when past work. The House declined to endorse this economical doctrine by the narrow majority of 101 to 94 for Second Reading of MR. RATHBONE'S Bill empowering Corporations to grant superannuation allowances—with due precautions against local jobs. Old public servants in municipal employments should be much obliged to MR. HANKEY—who pointed out that pensions are only a form of deferred salary, on which principle they are paid by the Bank of England—and to MR. CROSS, who supported the Bill. MR. BASS opposes it. Bitter beer is tonic, and braces up men's nerves to do hard things.

Wednesday.—WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR used to boast his own short and simple plan for increasing the efficiency of the Episcopate. "Give every Bishop £600 a year, and make it death to leave his diocese." MR. BERESFORD HOPE, in his scheme of episcopal improvement, takes another line. Private persons are to be at liberty to endow, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to cut and carve, new Bishoprics out of existing dioceses—subject to the approbation of Queen in Council and Parliament assembled.

Everybody—who wants Bishops at all—wants more of them. The Bench, as it is, is over-diocesed and over-worked. The flocks—black sheep and other—are certainly not easier to rule now than in old times, and the shepherds and crooks at work now are no more than when HENRY THE EIGHTH was King, and population counted by hundreds, where it is now reckoned by thousands.

But nobody—neither SIR W. BARTTELOT, nor MR. MONK, nor MR. MOWBRAY, nor MR. DILLWYN, nor MR. HENLEY, nor MR. WALPOLE, nor MR. CROSS,—much as we may want more Bishops, approves MR. HOPE'S machinery for making them. And so HOPE—spes longa—was obliged to accept an adjournment of his Bill to the Greek Kalends—alias July 26.

Thursday (Lords).—LORD CARNARVON, after apologies for a very bad cold, gave an elaborate explanation of the motives which had led the Government to entertain favourably propositions for an exchange of our possessions on the Gambia against French possessions on the Gold Coast. No wonder an explanation made with such a cold was rather coldly received. LORD CARNARVON makes a very good case, but their Lordships want further information. And so should the country. There ought to be very strong reasons indeed for giving up the command of a river navigable for 400 miles by 100-ton craft, and so leaving us ten degrees of African coast without any station but a tiny island off one of the mouths of the Niger.

(Commons.)—The Nasmyth Hammer at work. A brisk fire of questions on all sorts of subjects, from Snow in the streets to Slave-Trade Legislation. Inter alia, Knife-cleaning Boys (such is the decision of the Inland Revenue Authoritise) serving many masters are not to be taxable as men-servants; but knife-cleaning boys with one master, are. Let all who keep a boy to clean their knives see forthwith that he finds somebody else's knives to clean, or send him about his business. Also, we are glad to learn from MR. HARDY that the indecent practice lately prevailing in the Royal Artillery Barracks at Aldershot (not there only, we fear,) of lodging four families in one room without screens, or even curtains, to separate them, is at once to be put an end to. But why four families in one room at all? If a certain proportion of married men is allowed in the Army, surely there ought to be proper provision for that proportion in all barracks—with its own room, at the least and lowest, for each family.

Digitized by Google

DISTRACTING.

Customer. "WHAT DID YOU THINK OF THE BISHOP'S SERMON ON SUNDAY, MR. WIGSBY?"

Hairdresser. "WELL, REALLY, SIR, THERE WAS A GENT A-SETTIN' IN FRONT O' ME AS 'AD HIS 'AIR PARTED THAT CROOKED I COULDN'T 'EAR A WORD!"

A MEMBER'S LAMENT.

DULL is an essay on the Vatican,
Even by GLADSTONE written; dull the day
When nought save fog in street and square you scan,
And e'en policemen fail to find their way;
Dull is KENEALY, with his bounce and ban;
Dull is the fierce Home-Ruler's blatant bray;
Greatly I fear—how sad is the confession!—
We're settling down to dulness, for the Session.

Look at the PREMIER'S countenance of lassitude!
Might he not be a worn-out, weary Sphinx,
Gazing o'er deserts dim of Tory crassitude,
Where from Wit's fount no weary traveller drinks?
If with Lavater-lens you tried to glass it, you'd Discern that chiefly of repose he thinks:
Roi fainéant he, who finds it a relief
That hostile hordes have lost their mightiest Chief.

That Chieftain, who of yore for battle lusted,
And hurled invective's javelin swift and straight,
Being by many followers mistrusted,
Quietly bowed to the decree of Fate.
We know not if his bright sword, still unrusted,
Will starlike shine again in hot debate,
Or if, heroic shade, he means to dwell
Henceforth in HOMER'S field of asphodel.

If Chiefs are dull, their subs are duller still,
Dullest of all the great financial topic:
Adown the steep inevitable hill
Egypt descends, and we, with philanthropic
Ardour, send CAVE & Co. to stave off spill:
Creditors' chances shrink to microscopic,
And when the crash comes, 'twill be found, I fear,
PHARAOH was not the last lost Charioteer.

Vain to lament, Jeremiads will not bring
DISRAELI'S brilliance back, or GLADSTONE'S fire,
To BRIGHT'S strong words their ancient clarion-ring,
To LOWE the wit-flash and ironic ire.
E'en warbling WHALLEY has forgot to sing;
And coarse KENEALY'S torpid in his mire:
Dull are the Parliamentary hours. To vary 'em,
I'll try a quiet stroll in the Aquarium.

ORTHOGRAPHICAL POLISH.—The thing to rub up your orthography with—Bees' whacks.

The QUEEN is to be authorised to exercise her Royal prerogative of adding to the Royal Style and Titles.

MR. DISRAELI'S announcement of the fact was flatter than had been anticipated. The Oratorical Vesuvius did not play off the expected fireworks.

But MR. LOWE did his best to fling some fat in the fire, by objecting, in anticipation, to the title of EMPRESS OF INDIA, and provoked the wrath of the House by an ill-omened and ill-timed suggestion, that the name might read awkward if we had to give up India—as some day we might have!

O ROBERT, ROBERT! is the House a Deputation that thou shouldst do this thing?

The new Royal addition remains a secret till HER MAJESTY has exercised her prerogative of choosing her title. It certainly seems to Mr. Punch that Parliament and the country may, with the utmost respect, but equal urgency, request to be informed which it is to be—Queen or Empress? Not that it much matters, as far as Mr. Punch can see. Perhaps, no the whole, he would say Queen for choice.

Merchant Shipping Bill introduced by SIR CHARLES ADDERLEY, and discussed in a sensible spirit on both sides—ship-owning and sailor-saving. With a little screwing-up from PLIMSOLL, which is still wanted, there seems a chance of a useful and workable measure.

Friday.—How many people, in or out of Parliament, knew that the Official Referees on Private Bills vote on such Bills in Committee, though not Members of the House?

By all means, MR. ANDERSON, have the matter referred to a Select Committee.

MR. SHAW LEFEVRE and MR. FAWCETT as busy as Crows in a newly-sown wheat-field, picking holes in MR. CROSS'S Enclosure Bill.

Make it better, Gentlemen, by all means—in fact, you can't make it too good. But do MR. CROSS and his Bill justice. It is good as far as it goes.

WHY THIS THUSNESS?

THERE is surely something—shall we say "high"—not to put it coarsely—in the State we may call Denmark—supposing such social contrasts as the following to be of everyday occurrence. There are noble and elevating thoughts, no doubt, associated with the expression "a Paternal Government," but that paternity does not show to advantage in the castigation of illiterate babies, and the petting of well-educated sons and daughters who ought to know better. Judge for yourselves.

One Sunday afternoon last week, in a Yorkshire town, HODGE, PAT, and BILL GUMMIDGE, resisting the temptations held out to them by sleep-compelling parsons, repaired to a neighbouring stream, where their low tastes and sinful tendencies tempt them to throw chips into the current. Not content with thus desecrating the day, they add the further crime of backing one chip to pass another in their short race to the village bridge. At this plebeian amusement they stake several pence, and coppers change hands freely. The Paternal one has its eye on them, however, and BILL, PAT, and HODGE are walked off by the Police to the nearest station.

One afternoon, a few days later, while BILL and his companions in crime are engaged in an interesting conversation with the magistrates, FITZ, HUGH, and GERALD may be observed at the window of the Holy Alliance Club, Piccadilly, watching with intense eagerness the horses attached to cab, cart, brougham, or omnibus as they pass along the thoroughfare.

"A pony," says HUGH, "on there being a grey horse in the next ten."

"Done with you!" says GERALD.

Bays, browns, a chestnut, and tenthly a spanking white stepper in a coupé!

"Roses light on the eyelashes that fringe your aristocratic pupil!"—this was about the meaning conveyed, though not exactly the words used, by the highbred loser—"you've won! I'll go you double or quits."

Digitized by Google

"I'll do ditto," says FITZ, who has seen four grey dray-horses pass, and feels he must win.

Chestnuts, browns, and a bay, and ninthly a General Omnibus with two whites to the fore.

HUGH pockets his hundred, and they retire to the card-room, where they remain, with an interval for dinner, till four o'clock the next morning. GERALD has lost a couple of thou., which he hasn't got; and FITZ has recouped himself with an agreeable surplus, of which we hope a few sovereigns will find their way into the pockets of HODGE, PAT, and BILL.

In the Drawing-room and Kitchen next door may be noticed by any Asmodeus like ourselves another and equally edifying contrast.

Down-stairs a very snuffy old woman, with a walnut-juice resemblance to a gipsy, is promising, with the aid of a greasy pack of torn cards and a sediment of tea-leaves, all sorts of honours, titles, and fortune to poor little MARY ANNE HOUSEMAID, for the large sum of one silver sixpence and a pound or two of kitchen stuff. While MARY ANNE is gazing with credulous delight on the propitious Sibyl, a Paternal agent steps down through the area-gate, which is wide open, and kindly offers an arm of escort to the snuffy pseudo-gipsy, for whom lodgings have been prepared in Queer Street.

In the Drawing-room above sits MRS. REGINALD COLEVEAL, with six or eight friends, who have invited the celebrated American Medium, JABEZ M. POSTOR, to join their circle, in hopes of eliciting revelations of the Future from such condescending spirits as may happen to listen to their call. The shutters are closed, the little fingers of the Illuminati are linked round a large table, on which a tambourine is already beginning to tap out the names of the returning ghosts and the destinies of the inquirers. This masculine Sibyl has nothing snuffy about him, wears a faultless evening dress, and several diamonds on his fingers. It would be downright rudeness and want of savoir-vivre if the Paternal Governor interfered with him—but at the same time we confess to a weak pity for the gipsy, and a strong desire to let off PAT and HODGE aforesaid.

To the Government we simply repeat—Why this Thusness?

RINKOMANIA.

WE believe we break no confidence in publishing the news that the attention of Parliament will shortly be called to the prevalent epidemic, and a Royal Commission, in all probability, appointed to inquire into the causes which have led to the mania for Rinking, to consider the effects it is producing on society, and to report if any, and what steps may be advisable to check its rapid progress. How extensively the mania is spreading on all sides may be gathered from a glance at the columns of advertisements, which, besides inviting notice to the rinks already started, announce a myriad of new skating clubs in progress, or in prospect. That the mania has extended from the West End to the East, from Hammersmith to Houndsditch, and from the lordly Prince's Ground to the vulgar Pig and Tinderbox, may be seen by a few titles of the companies projected, which we are exclusively now privileged to quote:—

The Mile-End and Whitechapel Rink, and Wheel-Skate Letting Company. Capital, Two Millions. Treasurer (pro tem.), MR. JEREMIAH DIDDLER.

The Costermongers' Skating-Rink, and General Conversation Club. Chairman of Executive Committee, MR. BAWLER.

The Holloway-cum-Hornsey Rise and Hackney Rinking Company (Very) Limited.

The United Handsome Cabmen's Rink, promoted to provide a means of healthful indoor exercise for Cabmen.

The Wapping Old Stairs Rink and Below Bridge Skating Company. The Land's-End Real Ice Rink. Executive Committee. MESSIEURS BLUNDERHEAD and BOOBIE, with power (if they can) to add to their number.

The Eligible Spinsters' Rink. Established to promote flirtation among Marriageable Persons. Chairwoman of Committee, MISS SELINA SLYPUSS.

The Organgrinders' Skating Club, and Asphalte Recreation Company, for the use and entertainment of itinerant musicians. N.B. A Concert on wheels will be given every evening, when the public will (on payment) be privileged to attend.

The John O'Groat's House Rink. Open to all Nations. SANDIE MCSAWNIE, Honorary Secretary.

The Jolly Beggars' Skating Rink, and Club for Merry Mendicants. Temporary premises, Rag and Tatter Alley, Scamp Street.

The Water Bibbers' Rink, and Tee-Totallers upon Wheels Aquarium and Convivial Club. President, SIR WILFRID LAWSON.

The Swindleham Skating Company (Limited). Promoters, CAPTAIN FLASHMAN and SIR HOKEM SNIVEY. Present population, 1229; anticipated Rinkers, 1220. Capital, £50,000, in Shares of £10 each. Prepayment in full to be made on application.

The Seven Dials Skating Rink; for the promotion of this fashionable and invigorating pastime among the poorer classes. Chairman of Executive Committee, MR. CATSMEAT.

The Slushborough-cum-Sloppiton Al Fresco Rinking Company. Secretary, MR. DAMPER. President of Council, SIR TIMOTHY GOLOSHES.

The Amalgamated Duffers' Rink and Slide and Tumble Company. Manager, MR. CLUMSIE. Treasurer, MR. FOOLSCAPP.

The Burglars' Skating Rink. President of Committee, MR. WILLIAM SIKES. Bankers, MESSRS. DOWNIBIRD AND HOOKITT. Members for election to attend (after nightfall) at the Office of the Company, which for prudential reasons need not publicly be advertised. N.B.—Ring the top bell twice, and sharply whistle.

The North Pole Rinking Company. Promoted with a view of providing wheel skates gratis in the Polar Regions.

The Submarine Skating Rink. Temporary Offices in Water Lane. Chairman of Committee, MR. DIVER.

SANSCULOTTES AT LIMERICK.

IT is not often that an Irishman can be twitted with what other Irishmen might call Scotch economy. But the Cork Examiner reports a suggestion on the part of certain members of the Corporation of Limerick, not only in respect of caution and economy, but also as relative to a matter of clothing, specially Caledonian. At a late meeting of one of the Limerick Corporation Committees, the Mayor presiding, MR. CONNOLLY, of the firm of JOHN CONNOLLY AND SON, the municipal tailors, attended to submit for acceptance the new clothing which had been ordered for the Night Watchmen; when

"ALDERMAN CLEARY said he heard a member alongside observe on the impropriety of supplying Watchmen with trousers; for, if they dismissed a Watchman, the question arose how would they get the trousers off him if he would not give it up himself?

"MR. BERNAL said he was the member alluded to by ALDERMAN CLEARY, and he would advise them to adopt the suggestion which ALDERMAN TINSLEY made some time ago, or by supplying the Watchmen with a hat, coat, and cape. The Watchmen should be obliged to pay sixpence a week for the trousers."

"It's ill takin' the breeks aff a Highlandman." This Trans-Tweedian adage might, had the colleagues of the two gentlemen abovenamed adopted their ideas, have become as applicable to the Night Watchmen of Limerick as it is to the Gaël. The Watch would perhaps have had to be reconstituted, and the Corporation to advertise for recruits, notifying, although in Ireland, that "No Irish need apply." The suits of Limerick's Night Watchmen would then have suited none but Scotchmen. A uniform consisting of a hat, coat, and cape, and no trousers, would for its complement have really required a kilt. The expedient wherewith BRIAN O'LYNN supplied any deficiency in his wardrobe is no longer practicable. Sheepskins are too costly for that now. As a lay of a Limerick Night Watchman, Brian O'Lynn would have needed to be sung with a difference, somewhat after this fashion:—

"BRIAN O'LYNN, wanting trousers to wear,
Joined the Limerick Night Watch in hopes of a pair;
Which when he found out he would not be found in,
'Twill be mighty cool walkin',' says BRIAN O'LYNN."

The "songs of other days" included one in which a pretty picture was presented to the mind's eye by a couplet in glorification of—

"PADDYWHACK just come from Cork,
With his coat nately buttoned behind him."

An elegant addition to this array, in a Hibernian sense, might have been beheld at Limerick exhibited by PADDYWHACK patrolling the streets at night in the dark without any trousers. Perhaps, however, the streets of Limerick are lighted after dark—by luminaries even brighter than ALDERMAN CLEARY and MR. BERNAL.

Digitized by Google

VETO.

"SHALL WE—A—SIT DOWN?" "I SHOULD LIKE TO; BUT MY DRESSMAKER SAYS I MUSTN'T!"

RUS IN URBE.

"It was no longer the interest of the State,—at least to nothing like the extent it was some years ago—to interest itself in the multiplication of Enclosures. They must now rather consider Enclosures as schemes for private improvement, the State seeing that the public interest did not suffer by the Enclosures. . . . They must take into consideration that which the people of this country wanted almost as much as food,—the air which they breathed, and the health which they enjoyed. . . . The Government had thought it right to make every encroachment on a village green a public nuisance, and to enable any one to proceed against the person so offending."—MR. CROSS, on Commons Enclosures.

BRAVO, MR. CROSS, Sir! Plain speaking at last,
Worth columns on columns of roundaboutation.
Such "improvement" may go it a trifle too fast
For the temper and taste of a trade-ridden nation.
The City must spread with the spreading of man—
That's the law of our life, and 'twere folly to ban it;
But we don't want to see every trace of old Pan
Improved off the face of our planet.

Too plainly we feel that the chimney and wheel—
Twin symbols of Modern Mechanical progress—
Stretch sway every day. We may fume a good deal
Against Trade, the omnivorous Octopus-Ogress,
Whose far-reaching tentacles mesh us all round,
Yet we know she at least is a sort of Step-mother.
But must we give up every acre of ground
To the demons of Shindy and Smother?

We have yielded too much to Utility's clutch,—
That one-eyed Utility, Duncedom's pet idol—
Forgetting the use of such matters as touch
The health or the heart. We may well put the bridle
On Selfishness rampant, most hard-mouthed of nags,
Who all public interest rough-shod rides over:
May well check old Mammon when plumping his bags
On the plea of some "right of estover."

Too long, under shield of too negligent law,
The insatiate ghoul hight Enclosure has nibbled
Those bits of green open, so sweet to his maw,
In defiance of all who have squabbled or scribbled:
He'd prig from the poorest heath, common, or forest,
And laugh at the masses who toil and can't travel,—
Preferring to needs which are sure of the sorest
The profits from villas or gravel.

But on Wealth versus Health we are getting new views;
New measures of worth for our few Open Spaces:
All glimpses of Nature we dare not refuse
To the populous City's poor throngs of pale faces.
JOHN plainly means backing the weak 'gainst the strong:
Though the "rights" of the rich he's no wish to disturb, he Intends to preserve for the labouring throng
Some sort of a poor Rus in Urbe!

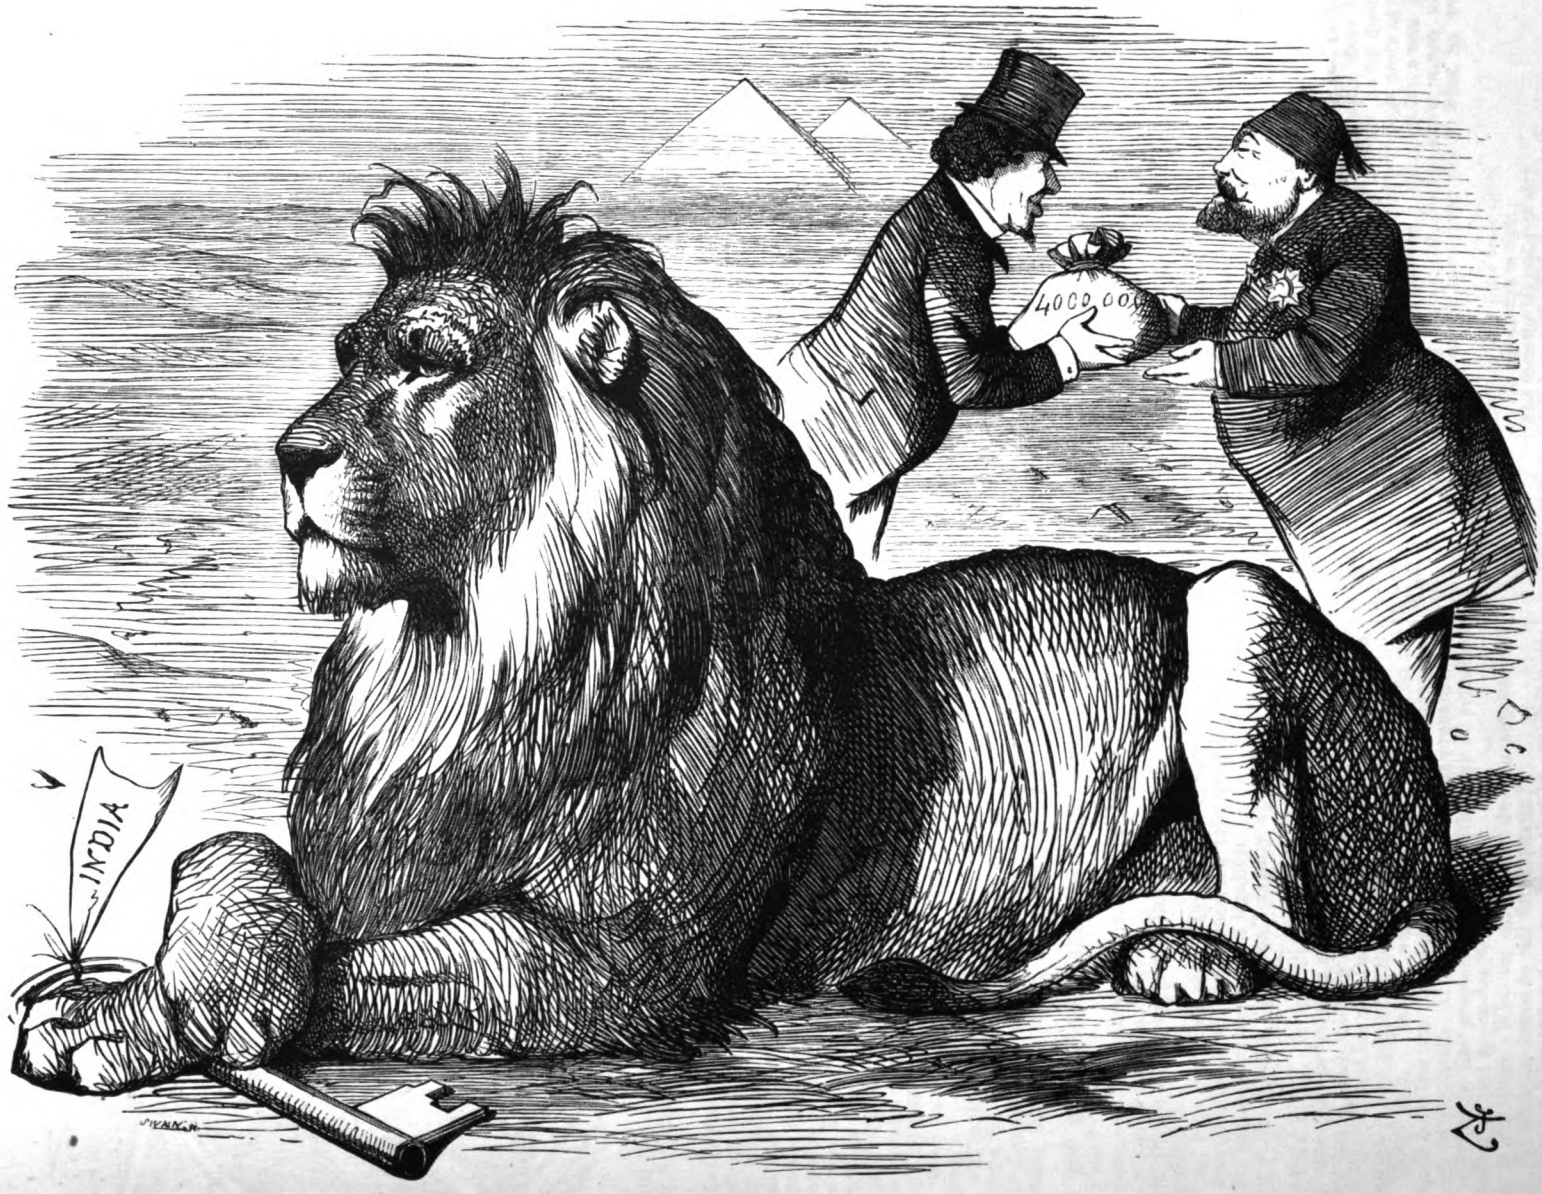
Here's a health to the few who have sturdily fought
In the cause which the many now take into favour.
The names of the nobs who such "pickings" have sought,
To the sense of to-day have a nauseous savour.
They will find, will these grudging earth-gobblers, whose greed
Would filch from the poor their few "Patches of Pleasure,"
The cry "No Short Commons!" means mischief indeed
When 'tis backed by shrewd men and sharp measure!

A Political Difficulty.



SIR,

I AM not much of a paper-reader or a politician, but occasionally I glance at the Debates. Whenever I do, I am sure to see a heading, "Offences against the Person Bill," as a subject of discussion in Parliament. All I want to learn, Sir, is, who is the "Person BILL" here alluded to? Who offends against him? Is it a measure for the protection of "the People's WILLIAM?" Is he "the Person BILL?" Explain, and oblige

Yours,

DUNDERHEAD.

Digitized by Google

THE LION'S SHARE.

"GARE À QUI LA TOUCHE!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

TEACHING BY EXAMPLES.

(For the Use of Parents and Guardians.)

HERE is no feature of the rising generation more striking than their disposition to intelligent doubt, sometimes miscalled scepticism, and their unwillingness to accept the ipse-dixits of authority. Mr. Punch, having been lately invited to put a friend's child through a historical examination, was so struck with the result, that he has recorded both questions and answers as subjoined.

GENERAL HISTORY.

Q. What do you know about ROMULUS?

A. He was a purely mythical personage, whose actions were so excessively stupid that I have not burdened my memory with them.

Q. What was the character of NERO?

A. Humane, gentle, and refined. The assertions as to his cruelty and madness are calumnies invented by his friends.

Q. Who was HOMER?

A. A Grecian MRS. HARRIS. The Iliad and the Odyssey were street songs of the period—an ancient parallel to "Lord Bateman," or "Tommy make Room for your Uncle," or ——

Q. Let us try elsewhere. Who was WILLIAM TELL?

A. He never existed—save as the hero of a German play or an Italian opera.

Q. We will come to our own country. What is your view of KING ARTHUR?

A. KING ARTHUR is a solar myth, like Hercules, Thor, Vishnu, and generally all the so-called gods, demigods, and founders of religions.

Q. Did not KING ALFRED suffer the cakes to burn in the neatherd's hut?

A. Oh dear, no! The story was invented for the benefit of Royal Academicians hard up for a subject.

Q. What did the spider suggest to ROBERT BRUCE?

A. Squashing it.

Q. Tell me what you know about HENRY THE EIGHTH.

A. He was amiable, kind, and forbearing to a most aggravating set of wives, and a strict respecter of legality.

Q. Why is the epithet "glorious" usually applied to "QUEEN BESS"?

A. It is hard to say. QUEEN ELIZABETH was a mean, tricky, and avaricious character, principally remarkable for doing her Ministers out of their money, and cheating her sailors of their beef and beer. I need hardly add, that her private character won't bear looking into.

Q. Comment on the genius of SHAKSPEARE.

A. He hadn't any. That he was uncommonly clever I do not deny, because he is the one theatrical person on record who realised a fortune by management. If he had lived now, it is probable that he would have gone the greatest lengths in the way of sensation drama, burlesque, and opéra-bouffe.

Q. This is startling. Who on earth then do you suppose did write what we are accustomed to call SHAKSPEARE?

A. Certainly not SHAKSPEARE, as we know that he couldn't write his own name twice alike. For my own part, I lean to the Baconian theory, but refuse to commit myself.

Q. Good heavens! How old are you?

A. If you believe the testimony of my parents—which the experience of life thus far has taught me is rash—I am four years six months and three days old.

Q. What are you?

A. I cannot say that I have yet made up my mind, but, as at present informed, I incline to the belief that my generation was spontaneous, that my bodily substance, in its simplest expression, is protoplasm in the form of germ-cells; that my actions are automatic, my motives cerebro-spinal, and my ancestors anthropoid apes in their later generations, ascidians or bacteria in their earlier.

[Exit Examiner, hastily.

PUNCH TO THE BLACK-COATS

(Established and Dissenting).

HEAR a lay voice, O recalcitrant Clerics,
To whom Punch most respectfully proffers his tip.
Now have we not had quantum suff. of hysterics,
Of cat-and-dog conflict, and quarrelsome quip?
Church or Conventicle, list to his caveat,
Bow all ye sensible heads, whether under
Mitre or billycock, curly or wavy hat!
Call in your lightning, and tie up your thunder!

Punch must announce that all sensible people
Are wofully weary of all this to-do;
Wondering why the traditional steeple,
Which points so suggestively up to the blue,
Stands as a sign of perpetual shindy, a
Pepper-pot token of battle as hot
As water of Hecla or pickle of India.
Must you keep boiling the clerical pot?

"Peace and goodwill?"—well, it sounds very pretty
From eloquent oracles lovely in lawn;
But passionate squabbles and bickerings petty
Scarcely portend its desirable dawn.
Ridiculous rows round the title of "Reverend"!
Strife about what may be carved o'er a grave!
Say will such puerile potterings never end?
Must the red standard eternally wave?

Small pseudo-popelings who peevishly hanker
For mass and monopoly, cash and kotou—
Priggish P.P.'s whose un-reverend rancour
Revels in rudeness a cad might eschew—
Clerical Dracos so down upon little ones—
Watchdogs who snarl at the gates of the grave—
Ware! or your holds on the mass will be brittle ones,
Useless to shackle as helpless to save.

Genial Gentlemen—Churchmen, Dissenters—
Is there no clerical Coventry known
Whither to banish these public tormentors?
Zealots and sectaries, can't you change tone?
If but for sake of a little variety,
With sweet milk of Charity temper your zeal;
Mingle the spirit of peace with your piety,
Harry no longer, endeavour to heal!

Popular speech on this rumpus parsonic,
Which raises a dust wheresoever we walk,
Is apt to be far less polite than laconic;
Much it might pain you to list to such talk.
Lend Punch your ears, then, O Clerics ubiquitous,
Lest it be found there are those who shall say,
"Whenever we 'd banish the harsh or iniquitous,
The peace-blazoned 'drag' of the Priest stops the way!"

De Dickey-Birds nil nisi Bonum.

SIR,

WE HAVE heared a deal of the cruelty of killing and plucking Dickey-birds—dear little things! Bosh! They ain't dear little things; leastways, not out of the trade. They are nasty quarrelsome little varmint. WATTS says they "in their little nests agree." What's WATTS? He may have knowed a thing or two about lions and bears, but it's quite certain he didn't know much about Dickies. If he 'ad, this would have been about what he would have wrote—

"Birds in their little nests agree
Till big enough to fight;
And then the biggest gets atop,
And sarve the little 'uns right!"

Yours truly,
A FEATHER DRESSER.

ADDRESS TO THE CONVOCATION OF YORK.—York, you're not wanted.

Digitized by Google

OBBIN' COCK ROBIN.

"WHO killed Cock Robin?"
"I," said Dame Fashion
(Who ne'er knew compassion),
"I killed Cock Robin!"

"Who saw him die?"
"The Great Eye, in whose ken
Fates of birds are, and men—
I saw him die!"

"Who caught his blood?"
"We," said apers of WORTH—
Though English by birth!—
"We caught his blood!"

"Who made his bier?"
"I," said Madame La Mode;
"In wing-trimmings bestowed,
I made his bier!"

"Who will cry o'er his bier?"
Children gentle and good,
Fresh from Babes in the Wood,
Will cry o'er his bier.

"Where 'll be his grave?"
"In my hat," says the Maid,
"When off Missuses' laid—
There 'll be his grave!"

"What 's the prayer they will pray?"
"English girls, England through,
Small birds' corpses eschew!"
That 's the prayer they will pray.

"Who 'll be his chief mourners?"
English maid, English mother,
Both one and the other,
"We 'll be his chief mourners!"

"Who 'll to that say Amen?"
All, save fools of a feather,
In chorus together,
Will to that say Amen!

Candid.

MR. PUNCH, with some astonishment at the freedom and fulness of the admission, read last week in that leading medical organ the Lancet—

"The law presupposes that every person dying has the assistance of a medical man, and that where such assistance is not procured . . . the facts should be referred to a Coroner."

Such thoughts may have occasionally crossed the lay mind, but what non-medical authority would have dared to give them words?

HORATIAN MOTTO FOR A BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

"Mox reficit rates . . . indocilis pauperiem pati."
Carminum, lib. i. 1.

SON AND STRANGER.

WE sincerely hope the new comedy of ALEX. DUMAS fils will remain an Etrangère as far as the English stage is concerned.

Digitized by Google

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY AT GIRTON.

First Young Lady (opens Valentine, and reads):—

"'Ερως ἀνίκατε μάχαν,
'Ερως, ὃς ἐν κτήμασι πίπτεις,' . . . &c., &c.

CHARMING, ISN'T IT? GUSSIE MUST HAVE SENT IT FROM OXFORD!"

Second Young Lady (overlooking). "YES, IT'S OUT OF THE ANTIGONE—THE LOVE-CHORUS, YOU KNOW. HOW MUCH JOLLIER THAN THOSE SILLY ENGLISH VERSES FELLOWS USED TO SEND!"

LUNAR VAGARIES.

THERE are two Moons, one ecclesiastical and the other civil. Perhaps we ought to say there are three, and include the Moon poetical, which hath influences over

"The lunatic, the lover, and the poet."

The Moon ecclesiastical defines Easter Day; and this year there is a great outcry against her for putting that festival a week later than if the actual Moon had decided it. The REVEREND LORD ALWYNE COMPTON, however, comes forward with consolation, and says:—

"Among the proposals for amending the Rubrics now before Convention is one that the following words should be added to the rule quoted by MR. JACKSON from the Book of Common Prayer:—'Note.—That the full moon of this rule is not the full moon of the heavens, but the 14th day of the moon of the Ecclesiastical Calendar.'"

Plain people will fancy that this is an odd way to mend a Rubric (if it be a Rubric), since, instead of altering it, a note is added stating that "full Moon" means something else, and that the "Moon of the heavens" is not the Moon recognised by the Church of England. What an insult to "Siderum Regina bicornis"! Why should not the Moon of the heavens regulate Easter, so that everybody may calculate the date of that feast for himself?

There is a story of a Greek Cookney who was surprised to find the same Moon in Athens that he had left behind him at Corinth. His astonishment could hardly have been greater than is that of MR. JACKSON and his friends at finding that the Clergy have a special Moon of their own, which declines to be bound by astronomical rules.

E. Payson Weston's Perpetual Motion.

[110 miles in twenty-four hours, followed, within less than a week, by 180 miles in forty-eight!]

WELL! there is one thing no one can say of our American Cousin's unequalled pedestrian feat—and feet—and that is, Walker!

THE FOLLY AT FOLKESTONE.

AIR—"The Vicar of Bray."

O RIDSDALE, Reverend Gent., desist
From antics Ritualistic.
Are you determined to persist
In aping rites Papistic?
What, is it really your intent
To disregard "monition"?
On that wild course if you are bent,
Consider your position.
In the face of the Law no longer fly;
At Popery cease to play, Sir.
You had better cave in and knuckle down,
And act the Vicar of Bray, Sir.

Oblige the Law to turn you out
As being its transgressor,
And you may call yourself, no doubt,
A "Catholic" Confessor.
But you 're a Heretic, Sir, says Rome,
Until her pale you enter;
Whilst from the Church that was your home
You 'll stand a mere Dissenter.
In the face of the Law, &c.

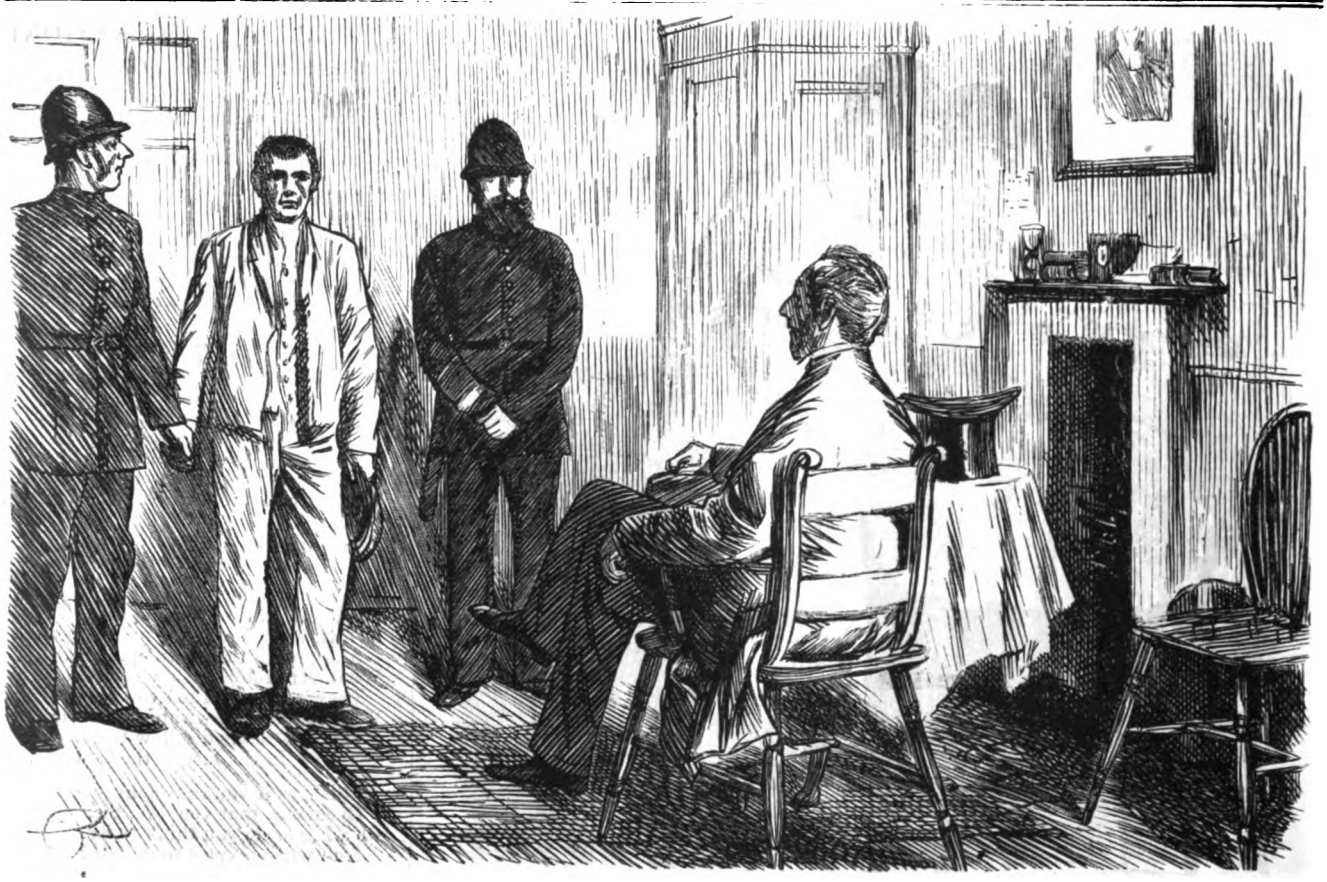
This is a land of Liberty,
And all, in these dominions,
To own what faith they please are free
And preach their own opinions.
Whatever crotchets they may hold
They 're licensed to avow them,
Without, but not within, the fold,
Whose Doctors disallow them.
In the face of the Law, &c.

To Bishops if you thus deny
Obedience that you owe, Sir,
Oh whither do you think to fly,
And where expect to go, Sir?
What refuge from "Erastianism,"
But knuckling down to CÆSAR?
Some new conventicle of Schism,
A High-Church Ebenezer?
In the face of the Law, &c.

Will you compete, for cure of souls,
With each sectarian surgeon,
And, in your chasubles and stoles,
Attempt to cut out SPURGEON?
But first a requisite you 'll need
'Twill puzzle you to fish up;
For your secession to succeed,
You 'll have to find a Bishop.
In the face of the Law, &c.

Debarred by Vatican Decrees,
All their gainsayers banning,
You fellows can't, as refugees,
Take service under MANNING.
Like bats you flit 'twixt birds and beasts,
In view of either erring,
Nor Protestants nor Popish Priests,
Fish, flesh, nor good red herring.
In the face of the Law, &c.

You know, if once you overstepped
Rome's fixed and rigid border,
That all of you would then be kept
Severely under order;
For pranks allowed no further scope,
Obedience forced to render;
No more himself each playing Pope,
But snubbed as a Pretender.
In the face of the Law, &c.



Not a Bad Interpretation.

Inquisitive Small Boy. Papa, what does Fugitive mean?

Papa (Consulting Nuttall's Dictionary). "Not tenable—not durable—volatile—short-lived."

Little Boy. Then, does Fugitive Slave Circular mean Short-lived Slave Circular?

Digitized by Google

THE RULING PASSION.

Prison Chaplain (charged to report on Convict's religious Knowledge). "DO YOU KNOW THE COMMANDMENTS?"
Prisoner. "YES, SIR." Prison Chaplain. "SAY THE EIGHTH."
Prisoner (promptly). "THOU SHALT DO NO MANNER OF WORK; THOU, NOR THY SON, NOR THY DAUGHTER," &c.

A WORD FOR WALKER.

PERHAPS the hilarity as well as the utility of the "Spelling Bee" would be augmented by making it also a Pronouncing Bee, so as to combine rivalry in right speaking with competition in orthography. The President of the "Bee" to spell out the word which he invites the members to pronounce; it being also posted up before their eyes in large print. A Pronouncing Bee would probably afford the following amongst other no less elegant examples of popular utterance:—

"Ask"—ast, arsk, awsk, (Cockney) ax. "Basket"—barsket, bawsket. "Class"—clarse. "Master"—mawster, muster, measter (rustic). "Bad"—baud or bod (superfine rustic). "Bore"—baw (superfine swell). "Bull"—bul (northern rustic). "Pudding"—pud-ding, ud as in mud (ditto). "Common"—kimmon. "Cover"—kivver. "Creature"—creacher. "Curiosity"—curosity. "Ear"—year. "Here"—ear. "Draw"—drawr. "Law"—lawr. "Saw"—sawr (Cockney). "See"—zee (rustic). "Face"—veeace (rustic). "Grievous"—grievious. "Tremendous"—tremenjus. "Hand"—'and. "House"—'ouse. "Hour"—*h*our. "Honour"—*h*onour. "Horse"—hoss, 'orse, 'oss. "I"—Oi (northern rustic). "Spaniel"—spannel. "Spirit"—sperrit. "Thanks"—thenks. "Time"—toime (Cockney). "More"—moor (rustic). "New"—noo. "Duty"—dooty. "Tuesday"—Chooseday, Toosday. "Tune"—toon. "Veal"—weal. "Vehicle"—wehicle. "What"—wot, vot. "When"—wen. "Which"—witch. "You"—yer.

The standard of reference at Spelling Bees has hitherto been too exclusively WEBSTER'S Dictionary—a gross insult to the shade of DR. JOHNSON. But surely due regard should now be paid to that other Lexicographer whose authority is held to have determined the speech as well as the spelling of our native tongue. It is the reverse of true that Spelling Bees are all "Walker." The operation of WALKER on the Spelling Bee would possibly effect a considerable diminution of the crime of clipping the QUEEN'S English, whereby the ears of the more cultivated classes of Her Majesty's loyal subjects are too commonly offended.

HYMN TO VICTORIA.

(After BEN JONSON.)

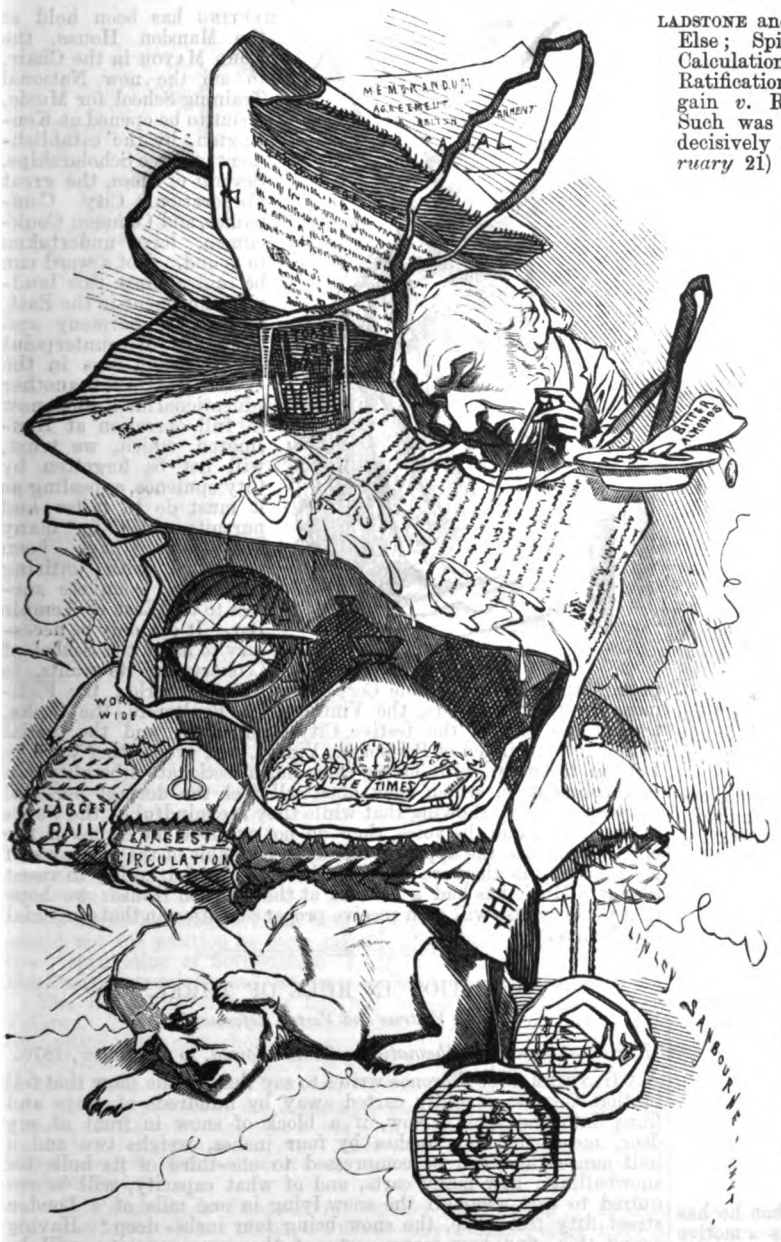
QUEEN or Empress, Lady fair,
Sovran of the swelling deep,
Who, in distant Orient air,
Dost the sway of nations keep?
Must we, changing style with scene,
Hail an Empress in our Queen?

Where the tiger haunts the glade,
Where the mystic Ganges flows,
Where we English, unafraid,
Govern friends who once were foes,
There thy power is felt, unseen,
There men bow to England's Queen.



Lay the imperial style apart;
Leave it to the lords of legions:
Queen in every English heart,
Be thou Queen in Eastern regions.
Keep thy style and state serene—
Who so great as India's Queen?

Beams in the Balance.

THERE is reason to believe that the "Imponderables" are about to be abolished. A distinguished Chemist has, if not mistaken, determined, by experiment, that Light at least is ponderable. At the Royal Institution, the other Friday evening, MR. CROOKES gave a lecture, in which he appears to have actually demonstrated the possibility of weighing a ray of Light. Now if Light has weight, the weight of Light in some quantity must be no light weight, and in that case, therefore, it is manifestly not a paradox to say that light is heavy.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

LADSTONE and LOWE v. Everybody Else; Spirited Policy v. Close Calculation of Per-Centages; Ratification of Suez Canal Bargain v. Repudiation of Same. Such was the triple issue very decisively settled (Monday, February 21) without any Division but that of the Opposition against itself.

DOCTOR LOWE should really be cautious how he uses his blistering ointment. It is a dangerously lively irritant, as may be inferred from its ingredients. To equal parts of penny wisdom, cynicism, and self-complacency add equal parts of wit, half-truth, and Oxford logic. Rub in hot, the wrong way of the hair; and stand clear of the patient's teeth and claws, or horns and hoofs, as the case may be. It has been known to set even Deputations kicking. No wonder that the British Lion and British Bull are not very patient under it. Nor are these high-spirited animals just now more in the mood for putting their heads into MR. GLADSTONE'S Economical Muzzle.

Not satisfied with Monday's discomfiture, the conscientious and energetic W. E. G. has since hung up his twenty-seven headed syllabus in the columns of the Times. There is much force, and we doubt not solid foundation, in his cross-questioning of the ministerial bargain from the pure Economist's point of view. But that is not the standpoint from which JOHN BULL just now looks at it. He applauds a prompt act of "spirited policy,"—annoying as such a strange piece of perversity may be to MR. GLADSTONE—and persists in his "inflammatory approval" of MR. DISRAELI'S unprecedented coup de bourse. Nothing can show this so clearly as the hornet's nest MR. GLADSTONE and MR. LOWE have brought about their ears, even from the friendly columns of their own Press, by their objections to the purchase. The course and conclusion of Monday night's debate gave Parliamentary proof of the same incontestable, however inexplicable, fact. MR. GLADSTONE must appeal from JOHN BULL "inflammatory" to JOHN BULL "condemnatory." That appeal cannot be yet set down for hearing; but it may come on.

Tuesday (Lords).—Patents Bill: same as last year's, but with only one class of Patents (for fourteen years) instead of two (one meant for "one-horse" Patents, to last half as long), and without the power to appoint professional referees, besides the Commissioners and Examiners of Patents, to sift the grounds of Patent claims—both changes for the worse, but said to be pressed on the Government ab extra. No sufficient reason, we are glad to learn on satisfactory authority, for the complaints of the Martini-Henry rifle as the soldier's shooting-iron.

(Commons.) First night with the Fugitive Slave Circulars.

MR. WHITBREAD—as by right hereditary—moved Resolutions involving immediate withdrawal of Number Two, without reference to the Commission's report.

MR. HANBURY moved a Resolution contra, to wait for the oracle from under the extinguisher.

Hence two nights of very long speeches; the lawyers having a good deal of the field to themselves, and expatiating freely, but as unable as their lay-fellows to reconcile the irreconcilable.

There is no denying the fact that LORD CLARENDON in 1870 wrote a letter that goes the whole length of Circular Number Two. Policy and public feeling, conscience and comity, the hearts of the British Public and British Officers, and the heads of departments, are all alike at odds in this unlucky matter. "Que diable allaient-ils faire dans cette galère?" Why didn't Government leave the difficulty as it has been left till now—in the discretion of the British Captain? There seem to have been only six hitches concerning fugitive slaves in some thirty-six years; and better any number of such hitches than an official act of the Government tying the hands of British Naval Captains — discreet and indiscreet alike — from helping the slave out of his shackles.

Several speakers in the course of the two nights' talk recalled, with a sigh of regret, LORD MELBOURNE'S famous query — in a similar perplexity between conflicting courses with much to be said for each—"Why not let it alone?" It was a British Admiral (SIR J. HAY), who suggested the course Punch would have recommended, to await the Commission's Report, and meanwhile withdraw the Circular. Even staunch Conservatives prayed MR. DISRAELI to follow SIR JOHN HAY'S sensible advice. Of course, it isn't a party question; of course, Her Majesty's Government hates Slavery as much as Her Majesty's Opposition. But, unluckily, if a Member of H. M. O. moves Resolutions, and a Member of H. M. G. moves counter-Resolutions, the fight will become a party one in spite of everybody's teeth, and so it was here. Two nights' talk (Tuesday's and Thursday's) ended in a party division. Circular Number Two stands, and MR. WHITBREAD'S Resolutions are defeated by 45 (293 to 248), a few of the usual supporters of the Government holding aloof. A solitary "Act" of stout MAJOR O'GORMAN'S enlivened the long and wearisome two nights' discussion of humanity, internationality, and exterritoriality. The portly Major wound up with an impassioned allusion to his portly Dartmoor protégé, ARTHUR ORTON. What that obese impostor has to do with the Slave Circular is not clear, though, taking corpulence and captivity together, one does see an association of ideas between him and a circular slave. One thing must be said to the House's credit. There was less "cant" and "rant" than might have been expected on such a subject.

But whatever Commission may report, and Commons vote, Punch agrees with SIR HENRY JAMES that Circular Number Two is as dead as Circular Number One. The country, simply, will not stand it. It has "got to disappear," as our American cousins say—whether under the Commission extinguisher, or what other device of Disraelitish ingenuity, matters not. "Actum est!"—i.e., in English—it won't act. No, Siree! it won't wash—except out.

Wednesday.—An Irish afternoon. First instalment of the Home-Rule Bill-Budget—a plan of CAPTAIN NOLAN'S to shift the control of County Finance from

Digitized by Google

Grand Juries to Boards elected by Twelve-pound Ratepayers—i.e., "out of the frying-pan into the fire."

The Irish Members had the fight to themselves; and the opponents of the Bill, led by MR. KAVANAGH—who has a Bill of his own for tinkering the frying-pan—had the best of it.

Then followed Home-Rule Measure Number Two, MR. BUTT's Grand Jury Presentments Bill—knocked on the head after a refreshingly short struggle.

Thursday (Lords).—LORD SALISBURY introduced the Oxford Reform Bill. The Government of the University is to be put into Commission after 1877. Till then, if a House likes to put itself in order to the Commissioners' satisfaction it may do so. Funds for University needs are to be got by abolition of "Idle Fellowships," which ought to put £50,000 at the University's disposal at once, and four times as much eventually. The Marquis tried to make a distinction between "idle fellows" and "idle fellowships." What Colleges and Captains have to do is to get the idle "fellows" out of their "ships" as soon as may be.

Thursday's (Commons) Essence we have extracted in advance.

Friday (Lords).—THE LORD CHANCELLOR tried to prove that the New House of Lords' Court of Appeal would be the Old House of Lords—or that parvum concilium = Magnum Concilium. What 's in a name? LORD CAIRNS could answer Juliet's question.

Commons.—HOLMS of Hackney made a rash and ill-directed attack on the Militia and the Barrack System, and was very energetically and sensibly answered by MR. HARDY. Hackney readily suggests hobby; let not MR. HOLMS, though sitting for the one, take to riding on the other.

PHILOLOGY "IN SPORT."

IT is agreeable to notice a praiseworthy effort to make the study of abstruse languages no longer a task and a drudgery, but a pastime and a pleasure. A Sanskrit Handbook for the Fireside has our cordial wishes for its success through many editions to come; and we hopefully look forward to a time when the language, dealt with in this very alluring manner, will have become as familiar as Irish or Scotch, Erse or Gaelic, to many a solitary student by his lonely hearth, to many a fair philologist in her comfortable chimney-corner.

We are betraying no secrets, abusing no confidence, in announcing that this help to Sanskrit is only the first of a series of Handbooks planned to while away odd moments and unconsidered minutes. The following pleasant little manuals may be expected to appear in due course:—

Garden Strolls among Greek Roots.
Chinese at Tea-time.
Arabic over a Cup of Coffee.
A Gujarati Handbook for the Easy Chair.
Siamese in the Summer House.
Hungarian: a Book for those who are kept waiting for Dinner.
How to study Polish while you are having your Boots blacked.
Tamil and Telugu: a Breakfast-in-Bed Book.
Turkish over a Pipe: a Bird's-eye view of the Language.
Anglo-Saxon in a Country Ramble.
Icelandic: a Book for the Chimney-Corner.
Half-Hours with the Hardest Languages.

SUN v. STEAM.

ACCORDING to the Athenæum, a Frenchman "states that he has proved his position of being enabled to use sunshine as a motive power." This piece of scientific intelligence suggests three obvious corollaries:—

1. The employment of sunshine as a means of locomotion is altogether distinct from the extraction of that article from cucumbers.
2. Should a patent be taken out for the practical application of this discovery, it will be of but little value in the Metropolis, Manchester, and other large cities and towns, owing to the absence of the motive power for a considerable portion of the year.
3. It may be fairly assumed that within twelve months from this time some other sanguine projector will uphold the claims of another motive power as equally efficacious—namely Moonshine.

The Pope and the Pretender.

THE Carlist forces having been signally defeated at Vera, Estella, and Tolosa, DON CARLOS is told from the Vatican that, in the opinion of the Holy Father, "he ought to cease carrying on war in Spain now that there is no probability of his being successful." His Holiness, claiming to be the Vicegerent of Heaven, recognises the safety of siding with the big battalions.

MUSIC AND COOKERY.

A MEETING has been held at the Mansion House, the LORD MAYOR in the Chair, to aid the new National Training School for Music, about to be opened at Kensington, by the establishment of Free Scholarships. Several of these, the great Corporation, City Companies, and Common Councilmen, have undertaken to found. Not a word can be said against this laudable movement in the East, to promote harmony and the study of counterpoint and thorough bass in the West. But there is another educational institution, now in full operation at Kensington, which, we trust, will not be forgotten by City opulence, appealing as it must do to tastes and pursuits which, for many generations, have been cultivated with untiring energy and complete success to the East of Temple Bar. It can only be necessary to name the School of Cookery and its wants, to prompt the most hospitable Corporation in the world; the Fishmongers, the Fruiterers, the Vintners, the Poulterers, the Cooks, and all the rest of the festive City Companies; and the genial Common Councilmen of Portsoken, Vintry, and every other ward in London, to endow, with loving care and affectionate liberality, an establishment in which they must all feel the deepest personal interest—thereby showing that while they are mindful of the wants of the larynx and the voice, they do not overlook the claims of the epigastrium and the appetite, and are as sensible of the pleasures of good eating, as they are alive to the delights of drinking in sweet sounds. Music has had a hearing at the Mansion House: we hope that Cookery also will soon receive proper attention in that congenial atmosphere.

QUESTION IN RULE OF THREE.

(For Vestries and Vestry Reformers.)

Pure and Mixed Mathematics. Time allowed, to December, 1876.

A GENTLEMAN of Florence writes to say that all the snow that fell in that City was rapidly carted away by hundreds of carts and flung into the Arno. Now, if a block of snow in front of my door, measuring four inches by four inches, weighs two and a half ounces, and can be compressed to one-third of its bulk (for snowballing), how many carts, and of what capacity, will be required to cart away all the snow lying in one mile of a London street fifty feet wide, the snow being four inches deep? Having found this, find how many carts, of the same capacity, will be required to do the same work for all the main thoroughfares of London, showing how they will get to their work, and how they will travel to the River with their loads, and back empty (traffic not to be suspended during this cartage).

Jenkins v. Jenkins.

THE JENKINS tribe, it seems, are fain
In contrariety to revel:
One JENKINS writes The Devil's Chain,*
Another holds there is no Devil.
'Twixt two such JENKINSES, 'tis plain
Satan will find his proper level.

* See the drastic and didactic Temperance Novel, so called, by E. JENKINS, Esq., M.P. for Dundee.

An Old Rhyme.

(Adapted to a Modern Mania.)

Angelina. Fain would I rink, but that I fear to fall.
Edwin. You must risk "spillers," or not rink at all.

Digitized by Google

THE HARD-UP HORTICULTURISTS.

LET us give a tear to the sorrows of the poor Royal Horticultural Society! They were pathetically recounted by LORD ALFRED CHURCHILL, presiding at the adjourned annual meeting of the Fellows of that impecunious Corporation in their Council Room, South Kensington; and signally illustrate the auspiciousness of the genius loci. His Lordship stated that:—

"In the past year the income of the Society had been diminishing, and the rent of the Gardens had not been paid. The Royal Commissioners, however, had given the Society three years in order to enable them to raise their income up to £10,000 a year. Up to the present time they had only received £3,000, but still the year was young. If, however, the income was not raised in three years to £10,000, the Society could not any longer exist."

The report above and below quoted contains no reference to any payment or delivery of prizes due to successful competitors at the Society's shows. Those debts may possibly have been paid, though rent is owing. But never say die!

"DR. ALFRED SMEE was of opinion that, no matter what they did, they could not damage the prestige of the Royal Horticultural Society."

No, indeed. The prestige of a Horticultural Society in arrears of rent for its grounds, or prizes for its premium-winners, must be pretty well past damaging.

"Although the Society might be short of funds, it would still rise again."

Yes; in the meanwhile its motto may well be Resurgam—for how long? DR. SMEE continued:—

"They might do many things to raise the fortunes of the Society. They might have Skating Rinks and other attractions, but unless they kept to the cultivation of horticulture, they could never maintain the Gardens in their proper position."

At South Kensington? Is that a proper position for the Horticultural Gardens? And would not the position be more suitable for "Skating Rinks and other attractions" than for the "cultivation of horticulture"? If the "other attractions" included Skittles, the sad Horticulturists might, at least, have a chance of competing with the "Jolly Gardeners."

The Horticultural Society has had losses, personal as well as pecuniary. It has lost Fellows. There are some Societies that no Fellow can possibly be expected to remain in connection with, and whose accounts are of the things no Fellow can understand, not even Lord Dundreary. But, of course, it would be uncivil to say that the Royal Horticultural Society is one of them. A bold Fellow suggested an attempt to reclaim the Fellows they had lost:—

"He (MR. BOWRING) was exceedingly glad that the Council had come round to the views of the Fellows, and he would urge that it was of the highest importance that the Fellows who had been lost should be recovered to the Society. ('Hear, hear!') Let the Council make a special appeal to those Fellows to come back to their Society, and let there be a systematic house-to-house canvass in the neighbourhood."

"De l'audace, de l'audace, et toujours de l'audace!" appears to be the motto of bold MR. BOWRING. What cheek a Fellow—any Fellow—must have to propose sending round the Hat on behalf of the Royal Horticultural Society! Systematically, too, from house to house in the neighbourhood! Would not that expedient be a little less unlikely to answer in a remoter district wherein the Concern on which residents are solicited to bestow their charity is less known than the R. H. S. is at South Kensington?

THE TURNER'S "TIP" TO THE CITY COMPANIES.

"I desire that each of these local institutions may thrive and prosper on that only basis on which anything can permanently thrive and prosper—namely, the steady and careful performance of its duties. . . . So far from desiring their abolition, what I cordially desire is their development and expansion in an application to duties that are of the greatest importance to the country. . . . It is not for an infant to advise adults. . . . The main difficulty, no doubt, is the change of circumstances; but if we look to the original duties of these ancient Guilds, we shall find in most instances they have disappeared, and you do not know where to find them. There is required for full conformity to the purposes of these Companies, a change in the form in which their energies and resources were to be applied. . . . A great mass of new wants have come into existence. . . . The necessity of falling back upon our ingenuity, and developing our resources, has become greater and greater. . . . Professional and technical training is wanted by most of the various classes of our artisans . . . and all these classes are, as it were, knocking at your doors, and asking what help you can give them."—MR. GLADSTONE to the Turners' Company.

GREAT City Guilds, what think you, pray,
Of the new Turner's "basis"?
Affairs are entering, one would say,
Upon a novel phasis.

"New wants," indeed! the "want to know"
Which Brother GLADSTONE starts with—
Is this the sort of thing to go
And trouble Civic hearts with?

This Woodman deals a sturdy stroke
Stark strength with skill combining.*
Duty with him is not a joke,
Or synonym for dining.
A guest extremely kind and nice
To have within your border,
Who gives you neatly-veiled advice
To—set your house in order!

Not JONES's gush nor COTTON's sneer
Will this stern Woodman soften.
For turning!—well, his foes, I fear.
Deem he 's done that too often.
But when he spots a Upas tree,
And thinks it ripe for axeing,
To turn him were a task, pardie!
Titanic muscles taxing.

And yet this "infant's" cool advice
Perhaps is worth revolving,
Ere the new Turner thinks his thrice
And reaches to resolving;
Or other chopper-wielders rise
To mark your trees with "blazes,"
And tell home-truths to Companies
In less mellifluous phrases.

For these are days when revenue
Entails responsibility;
Big trusts are left to very few
To toy with in tranquillity.
Commissions sometimes take by storm
Strongholds of Corporation;
And then the "rude hand of Reform"
Works wondrous tribulation.

Neglected duties, funds too fat,
And interests sly and sinister—
Which he so gently hinted at,
Our fluent ex-Prime Minister,—
Are not the things to buoy a barque
When storm to storm seems beckoning:
How would it be, to build an ark
Against a day of reckoning?

Those duties of each ancient Guild,
To which old Charters bind them,
Most surely ought to be fulfilled
Wherever search may find them.
And if Time's metamorphosis
Have blurred their very traces,
One thing is certain, and 'tis this—
New ones must take their places!

Trade interests alone may yield
Full scope for all your vigour.
To bring Art-work into the field,
And put down rogues with rigour,
Are tasks to tax your cash and skill;
Since some who look upon her
Fear Britain's course must be down-hill,
Till scamped work brings dishonour.

Shrink not from Satire's friendly whip,
Nor pose yourselves as martyrs;
But take, in time, the Turner's "Tip,"
And overhaul your Charters.
Pageants, brave halls, and sumptuous feeds,
Mean vulgar ostentation;
Trade and the Time have larger needs
Which claim consideration!

* "A poet, whose works are now three thousand years old, in one of his immortal lines has told the world that the excellence of a Woodman lieth not in his strength, but in his skill."—MR. GLADSTONE.

SYLLABUS AND SUEZ.

MR. GLADSTONE has sent the newspapers a "Syllabus" of questions on the Suez Canal shares purchase. A Syllabus from the Author of Vaticanism! What more could have been expected from the Vatican itself? Is WILLIAM going also to proclaim himself infallible?

Digitized by Google

AN OLD KING BY A NEW NAME.

Tymkyns. "GOOD MORNING! A—A—I WANT A COSTUME OF HENRY THE FOURTH OF ENGLAND, IF YOU PLEASE!"

La belle Costumière (affably, but not without a touch of scorn). "EXCUSE ME, SIR! HENRY THE EIGHTH OF ENGLAND! HENRY THE FOURTH WAS A FRENCH KING!"

The Costumier (solving the difficulty). "PARKINS! PAR-KINS!!" (Voice in the distance. "YES, SIR!")

The Costumier. "BRING DOWN THE 'ANGRY CAT!" [He must have meant "HENRI QUATRE," but that was what he said.

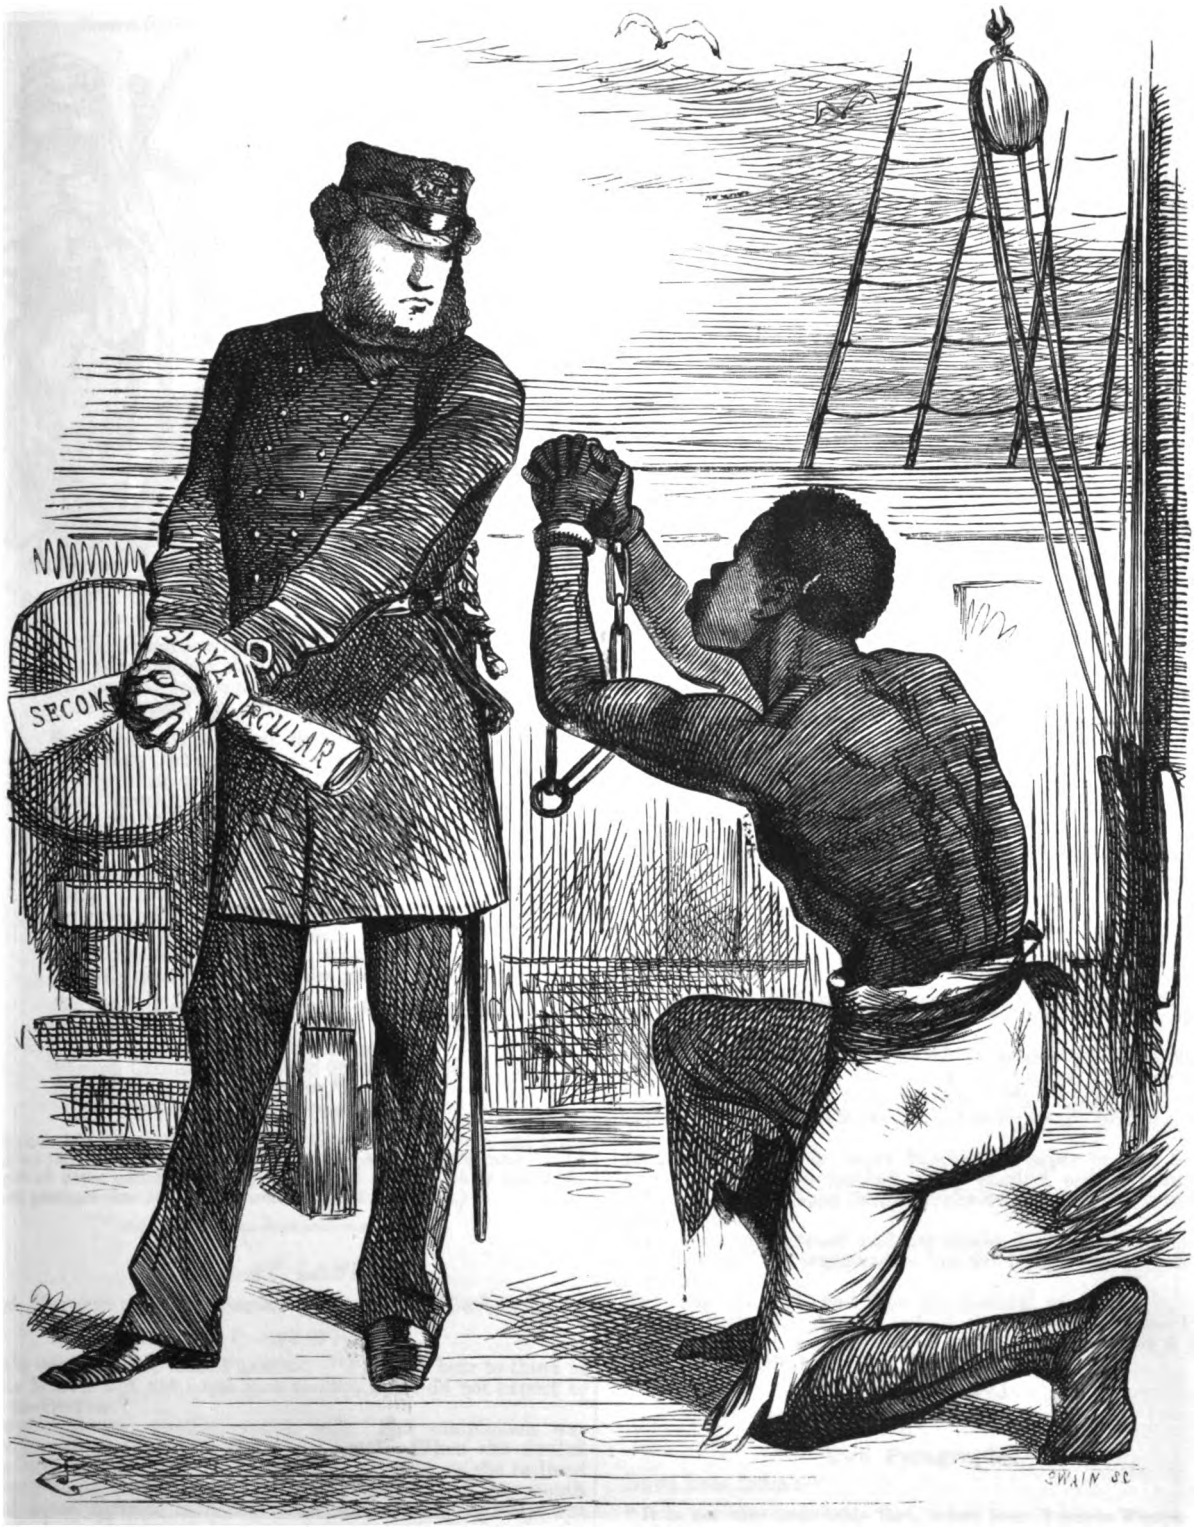
CHAIRS BEHIND COUNTERS.

As a rule, when a customer enters a Draper's shop, an Assistant hands that customer a chair. That is, if you are a Lady, or a being of the lower sex at ladies' heels. Not if only a Man, come shopping simply on your own account. Male customers never have chairs offered them. The Shopmen know that the man will be suited immediately. He will choose what he wants out of any assortment of articles at a glance. Man, in making purchases, of draperies at least, does not compare, deliberate, and judge. It is not his nature to. He will buy and be off. He won't sit down for an hour, or even a minute. He does not want a chair, not he.

However, chairs are at his elbow, plenty, before the counter. But there are none behind it. There, those who serve stand. The Female Assistants stand, as well as the Shopmen, and have to stand all day. A Lady, who at farthest will probably not exceed three hours in choosing a silk or a muslin, has a seat provided for her; but the Female Assistant, to say nothing of the Shopman, who serves her, must keep on her legs not only while attending on customers, but even whilst unoccupied, from early morning till late at night. There is no sitting at the receipt of custom for her; no sitting for anybody but the Cashier. Why does this particularly brutal and barbarous arrangement exist? "It is said that this custom has to a certain extent been adopted out of deference to the supposed wishes of customers." So we learn from a Circular signed by a number of Ladies resident in Bristol, Clifton, and the neighbourhood, deprecating the regulation by which Female Assistants in shops are "obliged to stand so many hours continuously," to the detriment of their comfort and health. These are their words:—



"Without any desire to interfere unduly in business arrangements, but solely out of sympathy with those of our own sex, we beg to submit to the Masters of all retail shops in which women are employed as Assistants, that it would very much add to our comfort when we are making our purchases, if we saw these young women relieved from this unnecessary strain upon their constitution, by seats being provided for them, and permission given to sit and take a few minutes' rest at the various intervals, in which, as we believe, they might, when not serving, do so without neglecting the interests of their employers."

This appeal, though addressed to all Shopkeepers who employ Female Assistants, chiefly concerns Drapers. The Philosopher, detained in a Draper's shop, and looking around him, is generally struck with the pallid, hectic, pasty, flabby, and otherwise unwholesome visages of the Assistants, male and female. Of the latter even he may often grieve to notice that not a few have partially lost their hair, so that their heads present here and there appearances similar to the half-worn mop, or long-abandoned crow's-nest. He feels that all this is partly owing to the vitiated air of the shop, always peculiarly stuffy, though made so by emanations from sources worse than stuffs, and he sees that the injurious effect of a bad atmosphere is greatly aggravated by having to stand in it all day long.

The considerate Ladies who beg that Shopwomen may be allowed seats, add the suggestion that all shops might advantageously "be closed at a much earlier hour than is now the case." They truly observe that—"The chief thing wanted is unanimity among the Masters." An initiative is needful to render people unanimous who are not so yet. Might it not be judiciously taken by any enterprising man of business, master of Female Assistants? He would surely find it at least a safe "spec" to combine enterprise with humanity. Who will risk it? "Seats behind the Counter"—would not this be a taking legend in a shop-window amongst the scrolls that teach us to come and buy? Of all attractive labels announcing the "novelties of the season," would not this be the Ticket?

NEW NOVEL.—Angry Livers. By the Author of Cross Lights.

Digitized by Google

MEN AND BROTHERS!!

FUGITIVE SLAVE. "TAKE THESE OFF!"
CAPTAIN, R.N. "HOW CAN I?—WITH THIS ON?"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

EAST AND WEST.

Punch to the Maharajah of Burdwan.

Welcome, Wise Rajah of Burdwan!
From the far heart of Hindostan,
Is this kind gift you send.
Punch, pink of Western courtesy,
Feels it his part to make reply
To England's Eastern Friend.

These medals, sent from East to West,
When hung upon each boyish breast,
Will tell the stirring story,
How British lads could play the man,
And how a Prince of Hindostan
Could see, and swell, their glory.

Punch thanks you in the youngsters' name.
"Such deeds are not of local fame,"
Your Highness says, and rightly.
Yet none the less their thanks are due
To one who proves that dictum true,
So promptly and politely!

Such deeds, such words, do much to knit
Far lands; when diplomatic wit
Proves the more strained the duller:
The "touch of Nature" everywhere
Knits hearts that feel and hands that dare—
In spite of creed and colour.

Be sure our boys will wear with pride
These tokens from the Orient side
Of Britain's empire spacious—
From one you courteously call
"Their fellow subject," in Bengal—
Kind thought, and impulse gracious!

We serve one Lady—Empress—Queen,—
Mere title matters not, I ween,
While we are friends, not foemen.
Though Critics carp, though Statesmen jar,
Burdwan, from her oasis far,*
Sends words of pleasant omen.

* ("Burdwan is one of the most productive territories of India, and being environed by jungles, appears like a garden surrounded by a wilderness." The Rajah's gift of silver medals to the boyish heroes of the Goliath is one of the pleasantest passages ever recorded between England and India.)

UNITED AT LAST!*

A Novelette for the Drawing-Room and the Kitchen.

Chapter I.—All Wrong!

"Don't speak to me," said Frances. "I cannot bear to think of it. Your Master did not come back to-day, and I do not expect to see him to-morrow."

She was a pretty, pouting young wife. Her complexion was cream-coloured, and her eyes a glorious hazel. When she smiled her face became as bright as a sunbeam; but now, as she reclined on her easy-chair, there was a curl about the ends of her rosy mouth telling of great distress of mind. The expression of anxiety was out of place on that sweet, trusting countenance. So thought the faithful Atalanta.

"You will find it will come all right, Mum, in the end," observed the faithful creature. "Take my word for it—it will all come right."

"I have done my best to make my home comfortable for his sake," continued the Mistress of the house; and her lip trembled. "I have clothed the walls in blue-green tints, and hung up any amount of delft and Persian plates. All the furniture is artistically ugly and æsthetically uncomfortable; and, to please him, I have changed your name from Betsy to Atalanta, because I thought it sounded more refined."

"Indeed you have, Mum," replied the faithful creature.

"And yet he does not come!"

The words were scarcely out of her mouth when a loud knock was heard at the front door. The two women looked at one another as women will when they feel their hearts in their mouths. Then Frances clapped her hands with joy, and Atalanta glided gracefully out of the room to attend to the visitor. In a moment more a hurried step was heard on the stairs, the curtain barring the entrance to the boudoir was thrust aside, and husband and wife were locked in one another's arms. And then they began to talk. He was full of conversation. He gave her a précis of all the leaders in the daily papers, and read many articles from the Law Times, the Engineer, and the Economist.

"I could listen to you for hours," at last she said; adding, with a smile, "Indeed, I have done so. But I want so very much to ask you a question, dear."

"Nay, nay, pretty trifler," he replied hurriedly, but affectionately, "you really must hear this. Listen!"

And then he read, from beginning to end, the last number of the Journal of Psychological Medicine. She listened with a half-smile upon her lips, but there was a feeling of anxiety at her heart—at her heart of hearts.

"You must tell me," she said gently, but firmly, "why you did not return to dinner?"

"Did I not?" he murmured, absently.

"O Edwin, you know you did not."

He blushed up to the roots of his hair. He felt that his evasion was regarded as a subterfuge.

"You are right," he said, at last—and there was a hard, cold expression about his eyes as he spoke—"I did not return to dinner."

She was all of a flutter, and the tears gathered in her eyes. In a moment she was clasped to her husband's heart.

"O my darling!" he cried, "we have been married only six weeks, and yet a shadow has arisen between my loved one and myself: a shadow bringing with it agony and remorse—a shadow horrible and palpable!"

She was cold and pale now, but she replied, calmly, "You mean the shadow of dinner?"

He buried his face in his hands, and was silent.

"Edwin, my love, my angel," she said, softly, "before we part for ever—for part we must if the Club claims you daily for its own—Nay, do not interrupt me, darling. I repeat, before we part let me ask you, is there no hope?"

He was silent for a moment. Then he wiped away a few tell-tale drops of moisture from his eyes. Then he sighed heavily, and produced a newspaper.

"Only this," he said. "Take it!" He moved towards the doorway. When he reached the curtains he turned round and cried, with a voice trembling with emotion, "My darling, O my darling, I leave my dinner in your hands. Let us forget the past in a glorious future."

As he disappeared she began to read the paper he had left with her. A passage was marked. The marked passage contained a report of a Lecture upon Cookery delivered by Mr. Buckmaster at High Wycombe.

Soon her eyes glistened and her cheeks became rosy. "At last I know the way," she murmured—"at last I know the way. And now for Atalanta."

She rang the bell, and soon the faithful creature was closeted with her Mistress. At the end of the conversation the Mistress kissed the servant, as women will under the impulse of a joy too great to bear single-handed.

(To be continued.)

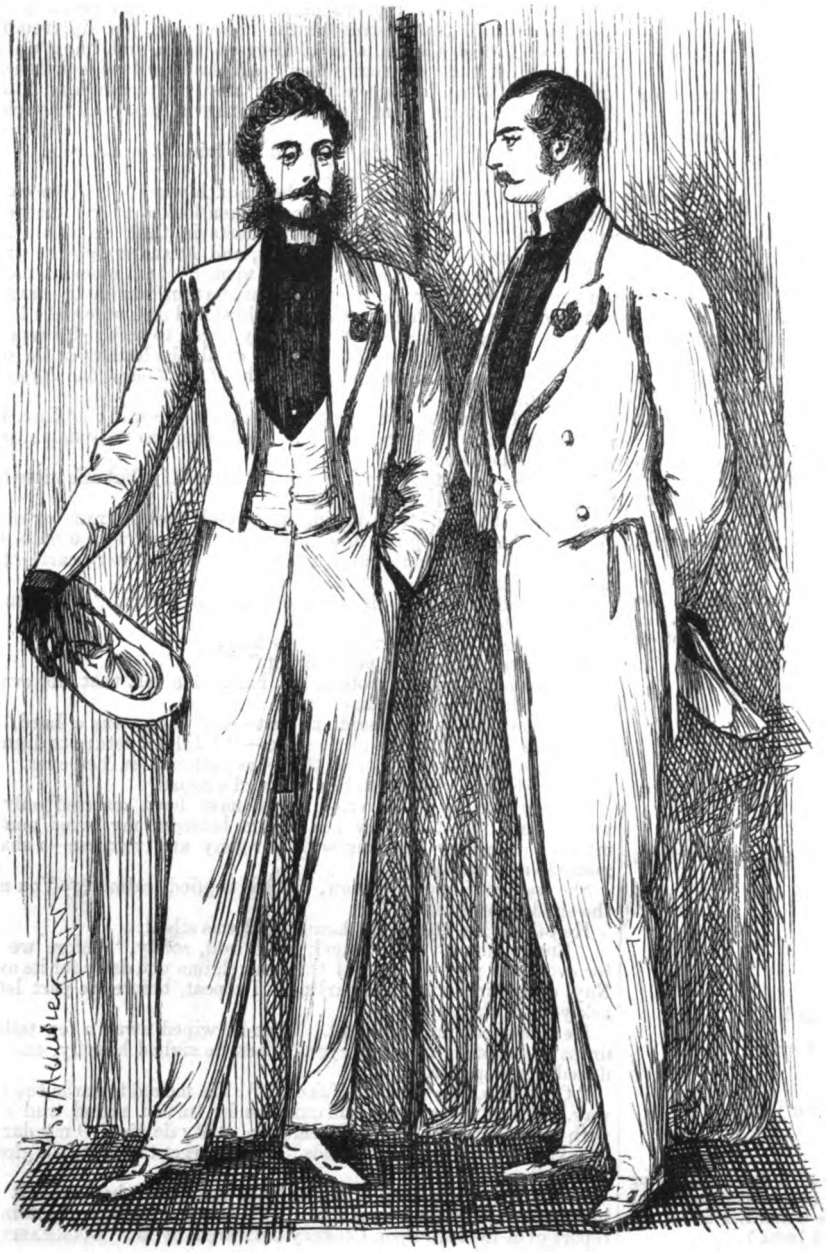
* So many stories are published now-a-days without a purpose, that Mr. Punch has no hesitation in presenting his readers with a tale having a very high purpose indeed—the spread of the science of Cookery. The style of its popular Author is so patent in every line that it is unnecessary to divulge his name.

Two Paragraphs.

News from India:—

"It is not very improbable that, before long, Burmese Women will be employed as land surveyors in the Amherst district."



The champions of Women's Rights are in high spirits, and parade enlightened Burmah as an example to prejudiced England.

News from St. Petersburg:—

"An official ukase forbids the exercise of the functions of barrister by Women."

The champions of Women's Rights are in low spirits, and use harsh language about poor benighted Russia.

Digitized by Google

A SUGGESTION IN BLACK AND WHITE.

OUR ARTIST BEGS RESPECTFULLY TO SUGGEST THAT WHITE EVENING SUITS MIGHT WITH ADVANTAGE BE ADOPTED BY GENTLEMEN DURING THE COMING SEASON. BLACK SHIRTS MIGHT ALSO BE WORN, IF CONTRAST OF COLOUR IS DESIRED.

[N.B.—Our Artist will have to draw a good many Evening Suits in the course of the coming Season, and probably grudges the labour of imparting the proper amount of blackness to them.—ED.

REAL "FASTING GIRLS."

THE announcement of "Another Fasting Girl," which is going the round of the papers does not interest Mr. Punch. He is far more concerned for the poor fasting girls whose total earnings for a week's work of eight hours a day only amount to three or four shillings. There is certainly something of "the miraculous" in the fact that these unfortunate creatures manage to keep body and soul together; rather more wonderful, thinks Mr. Punch, than that a girl should be able to lie in bed and sustain life by the "moistening of her lips with wine, brandy, &c." "Moistening" is a convenient word, and "&c." is a wide term. A little wine and brandy, and a few "etcæteras" would often save the life of an over-worked sempstress, whose "fasting" had become a matter of cruel necessity.

If our readers wish to have brought home to them a real and recent case of this sadder order of "fasting girls," let them read, mark, and digest this brief record, from last Thursday's morning papers:—

"Last evening, MR. BEDFORD held an inquest at St. Martin's Vestry-hall, Charing Cross, respecting the death of ADA FILE, an unmarried woman, aged twenty-two years. From the evidence it appeared that deceased and an elder sister lived in one room in Chandos Street. Since the death of their mother, who died recently, they have gained a precarious livelihood by needlework. The deceased was at work all Saturday night and Sunday morning. At about half-past five on Sunday morning, she gave a sudden shriek, and fell back in her chair, and died almost immediately. The medical evidence showed that the body was extremely emaciated, and the stomach was completely empty. All the internal organs were healthy, with the exception of the right side of the heart, which was dilated. Death arose from the failure of the action of the heart, produced by over work and long abstinence from solid food. The Coroner said it was a sad case, and the jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical evidence."

"EMPRESS" v. "QUEEN."

WHEN CÆSAR shirked the kingly name,
And reigned as "Imperator,"
The choice implied no higher aim—
None deemed that title greater.

With anxious care he shunned the style
That Roman pride offended—
Content the "cives" to beguile,
And rule through forms less splendid.

What though that daring Soldier's sway,
Through scores of rogues transmitted,
Enslaved Old Europe, from the day
When Roman freedom flitted;

And, age by age, that name accurst
Has still, from first to latest,
Implied of Monarchies the worst,
But ne'er with us the greatest;—

What though the phantom of a Past
With crime and folly teeming,
Was, for a wonder, doomed to last
In faint imperial seeming,

Until this shadow of a shade,
A tyrant's views offending,
Like some old ghost, at length was laid
By NAP'S resolve unbending*;—

What though this empty name, the scorn
Of honest right and freedom,
In apish mimicry is borne
By those who little heed 'em;—

Let mushroom dynasties that spring
From spoil and usurpation,
To this, as to each emblem cling
Of lawless domination.

For us, though now we go to school
Where crazy Crotchet's mission
Seems to be to subvert old rule
Of History or Tradition—

Still "King" or "Queen" from earliest days,
To British understanding,
A sense of rank supreme conveys,
That brooks no rash expanding.

Symbol august of regal state,
With Freedom's spirit blended;
Can title so securely great
Be altered or amended?

* On the compulsory abdication of FRANCIS THE SECOND, the last of the Emperors of the old Holy Roman Empire, which was broken up by NAPOLEON'S conquests.

MERCY TO ANIMALS.

THE Baring reign has come to an end in India. Let us hope, thanks to the joint influence of FLOWER and common sense, it will not be resumed in London.

Digitized by Google

"DIGNITY AND IMPUDENCE."

Near-Side Passenger. "HE EVIDENTLY WANTS TO RACE YOU."

Driver (disdainfully). "BUT YOU DON'T SUPPOSE FOR A MOMENT SIR, THAT I 'M A-GOIN' TO RACE WITH ONE O' THEM TWOPENNY YALLERS?"

HARD-BOILED EGGS.

"The answer to the Andrassy Note was ready on Wednesday, but was kept some days awaiting the approval of the SULTAN, who was ill with cholera from having eaten eighteen hard eggs at one meal, and could not be communicated with."—Constantinople Correspondent.

GREAT SULTAN, stubborn 'gainst attacks,
Diplomacy attention begs,
While you digestion over-tax,
By this excess in hard-boiled eggs.

Look, where your Rayahs evil-starred
Oppression's cup drain to the dregs,
And think your yoke on them lies hard,
As on you yolks of hard-boiled eggs.

From scorn, wrong, robbery, grant them rest,
And you may spare your powder-kegs—
And find it easier to digest
Hard-worded notes than hard-boiled eggs;

Or, when Al Sirat's narrow bridge
You cross with rather shaky legs,
Rayahs will speed you o'er the ridge
With blessings on those hard-boiled eggs!

AN ÆSOP'S FABLE.

(Re-written.)

A CERTAIN Actor was tried and condemned for murdering a Moorish Captain in the employment of the Venetian Republic. On his way to the place of execution, he requested, as a last favour, that he might be allowed to shake hands with his Critics, who followed in the crowd, weeping. The favour was granted, but in this act of apparent cordiality the condemned man contrived to twist out of joint the pen-fingers of the Critics' hands.

"Unhappy man!" exclaimed the bystanders. "Will you, at this awful moment, add yet another to your catalogue of crimes, that you treat thus your best friends and advisers?"

"Not so," replied the condemned man. "If these Gentlemen had not told me when I was a beginner that I was a happy mixture of ROSCIUS, BETTERTON, GARRICK, KEMBLE, and KEAN, I might never have come to this unhappy fate!"

Moral—superfluous.

THE FATAL TWENTY-NINTH.

"MR. FITZ MILLION presents his compliments to Mr. Punch, and would be glad to know from the Universal Monitor of Mankind what to do with these letters, all of which he found on his breakfast-table on the morning of the 29th of February."

Mr. Punch's reply was laconic: "Burn them." As there were about five hundred, they will make a pretty bonfire.

MR. FITZ MILLION is twenty-two, and has just inherited his worthy old father's vast property. He is emphatically—

"A marriageable man, with plenteous cash."

Mr. Punch selects three letters as fair samples of the terrifying mass.

I.

DEAR MR. FITZ MILLION,

How I wish I knew your Christian name! I dreamt it was FERDINAND. Is it? I have seen you driving four-in-hand, like Apollo driving the chariot of the Sun. Your hair is golden, like that Deity's. O happy Leap Year, in which, without maiden shame, I can tell you that I love you!

I am poor, but poetical. I make my own costumes—why should I blush to own it?—but I am divinely beautiful. Your ecstatic love will decorate me with the most resplendent apparel and the costliest gems, will it not, dear FERDINAND? O fly to my arms, most adorable of heroes!

Your impatient, impassioned,
AMANDA BLOGG

II.

MY YOUNG FRIEND,

I HEAR that you have inherited large property, and I propose to take the control of it in the interests of Science. This being Leap Year, I have a right to make you a matrimonial proposal, which of course you will not refuse. You are, I am told, extremely ignorant; but you are very young, and as I do not suffer from either the one or the other misfortune, I shall be able to educate you, so far as a mere masculine intellect is capable of development.

To devote your wealth to the noble pursuits of Science will be a grand enterprise. Money is very needful for great experiments. To find DARWIN'S missing link it is only requisite to keep a few thousand apes of different species, and select such of their offspring as show a tendency toward manhood. This is one of many valuable experiments in which, as the husband of my natural selection, you will be privileged to aid me. I have tried it on with others of your sex in preceding Leap Years. You succeed to their chance on the Darwinian principle of survival of the fittest. You will, of course, call at once. I remain at home to receive you.

PRISCILLA GUBBINS,
Professor of Anthropology, University of Laputa.

III.

Πανδαμάτωρ Ἔρως,
How daring he grows
In the year that 's bissextile, when fun overflows!
Ἀθανάτ' Ἀφροδίτη
Is equally flighty,
And won't give us maidens a minute's repose.

Nummus aureus est
By no means a pest,
If you know how to spend it with wisdom and zest:
So dear MR. FITZ,
If keen are your wits,
In CHLOE, M.A., you at once will invest.

Girton College.

Such are the dangers of Leap Year. MR. FITZ MILLION (whose name is not FERDINAND) did well to ask our friendly advice.

A COMMON CLERICAL SCANDAL.—A Bachelor Rector with a Family Living.

Digitized by Google

MUCH IN THE SAME LINE.

Chinamaniac (on the prowl, with an eye to prey). "HAVE YOU GOT ANY OLD CROCKERY, MY GOOD WOMAN!"
Old Woman (suspiciously). "CROCKERY, INDEED! WHAT DO YOU GIVE FOR RABBIT-SKINS?"

ON A POLITICAL ZOILUS.

(LOWE v. High Policy.)

THERE 's a scholarly Statesman who wields a keen wit,
Like a rapier polished, and pungent of point;
You might warrant that wonderful swordsman would hit
In a dragon-fly's armour the tiniest joint.
The Gushers and Foggers fight shy of that blade,
The Wind-Bags all shrink from its pitiless prick,
And fools at the flash of it slink to the shade,
Double-Quick!

But so keen is his eye, and so sure is his hand,
That to pry and to prod grow his only delight.
For sentiment—pooh! 'tis a mountebank's wand,
And policy—nothing but conjuror's sleight.
Small prudence, thinks he, based on L. s. and d.,
Backed by cynical sneer and discourteous snub,
Is the Ægis of State. But JOHN BULL can't agree;
There 's the rub!

The spy-glass and scalpel are all very well,
But a microscope 's useless for watching the stars;
And the blade that 's a boon when it cuts up a "sell,"
When it pricks little holes in big policy, mars.
We are not wholly governed by ledger-law yet;
And the pitiful prudence that fain would have shrunk
From a right royal risk, Punch declares—with regret—
Looks like—funk!

A New Shakspeare Reading.

Adapted to the Times.

"ALL the world 's a Rink,
And all the men and women merely skaters."

A DELICATE SITUATION.

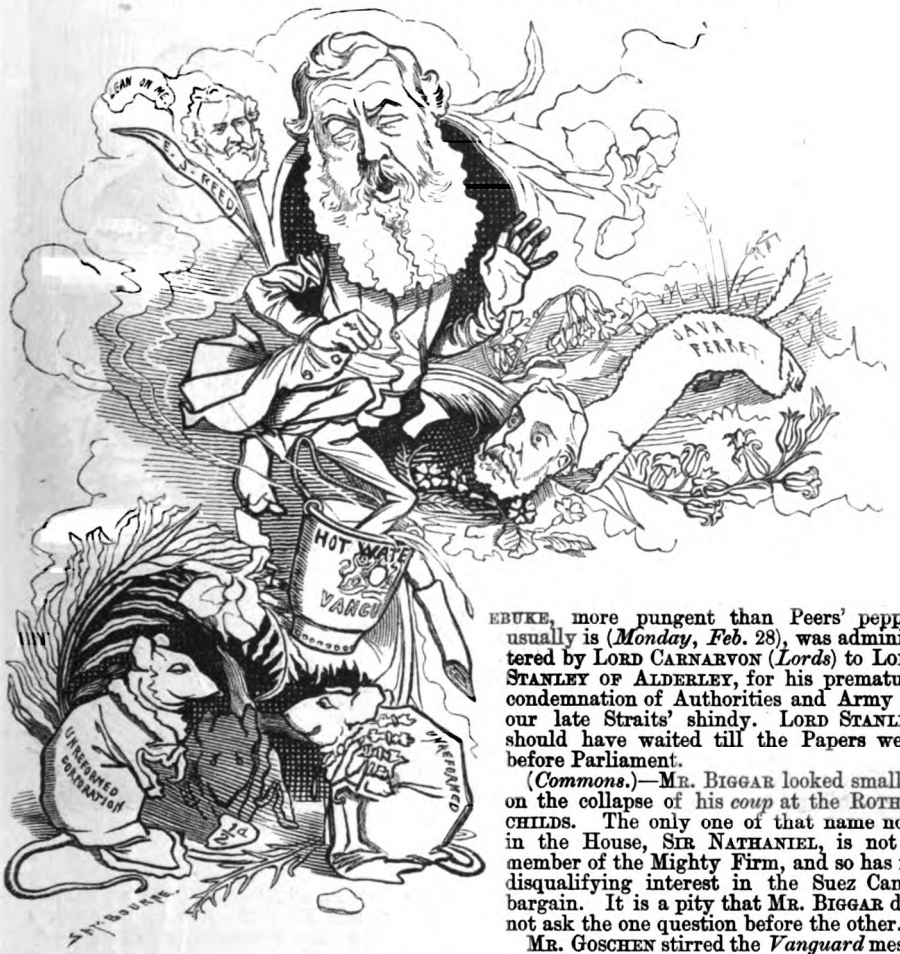
MR. PUNCH,

As the Pantomimes are nearly over, I shall soon be out of place, and what do you think of my applying for the situation following?—

WANTED, a Christian Person who has seen better days, and would value a kind home more than high wages, as NURSE in a private family.

I'm a rare hand at nursing (ask Pantaloon if I'm not), and, though I'm often heard to exclaim "Oh, what a day we're having!" I don't at all mind owning that I've seen many better. People who have seen me steal a baby, and then thump it on the floor, or treat it like a football, may entertain a doubt if I can be "a Christian person;" but people who in these days expect to find a servant who will work for them for kindness' sake, and next to nothing wages, may expect their advertisement to be treated as a joke, and answered by

A CLOWN.



Music of the Future.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH is going to give something more than his Patronage to the New National Musical Training School of Kensington. His Royal Highness, we hear, contemplates giving Lectures on the National Wind Instrument of Scotland, with personal illustrations on the Bagpipes. Of course there will be a Bagpipe Scholarship to add to the fleet of scholar-ships already announced. The question as to "who will pay the piper" has not yet been answered. Doubtless, H.R.H., as England's Sailor Prince, will also throw in a Hornpipe Scholarship. The lucky winner of both honours will be known as Kensington Bag-and-Hornpiper to H.R.H. the DUKE OF EDINBURGH, by Appointment. So far, the prospects of the New National Musical Training School are magnificent!

THE WORST SLAVE CIRCULAR (By a Brute of a Bachelor).—The Wedding-Ring.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT

EBUKE, more pungent than Peers' pepper usually is (Monday, Feb. 28), was administered by LORD CARNARVON (Lords) to LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY, for his premature condemnation of Authorities and Army in our late Straits' shindy. LORD STANLEY should have waited till the Papers were before Parliament.

(Commons.)—MR. BIGGAR looked smaller on the collapse of his coup at the ROTHSCHILDS. The only one of that name now in the House, SIR NATHANIEL, is not a member of the Mighty Firm, and so has no disqualifying interest in the Suez Canal bargain. It is a pity that MR. BIGGAR did not ask the one question before the other.

MR. GOSCHEN stirred the Vanguard mess, with its accompanying messes, the Admiralty Minute on the finding of the one Court-martial that was held, and the Admiralty mistake in refusing the two Courts-martial that ought to have been held.

MR. WARD HUNT defended himself after his wont, blunderingly, but in perfect good faith. He did not seem even to see the point of MR. GOSCHEN's attack—that in over-riding the Court-martial's censure of one of his own colleagues by an Admiralty Minute, he was exposing a good and gallant officer to the most unfavourable imputations. Also that a Court-martial on ADMIRAL TARLETON and CAPTAIN HICKLEY, so far from a hardship, would have been the greatest boon to both. The Service, differing on every other point in the case, agrees in dissatisfaction at the withholding of full public inquiry into the conduct of the two officers exonerated by the Admiralty Minute, and this without reference to their deserts in the case.

That is about the upshot of the long night's talk. Even MR. WARD HUNT must, one would think, have got the true gravamen of his own blunder beaten into him by this time. It is true, his power of resisting the ram of reason is amazing. Talk of iron-clads!

A snug job (creation of a Chief Civil Service Commissionership at £2000 a-year, for LORD HAMPTON, æt. seventy) rudely questioned, and all but upset. Too bad. Aren't there two Commissioners to do the work, and hasn't LORD H. earned a retreat for his old age?

Tuesday (Lords).—Second Reading of LORD CAIRNS' BILL, bringing the law as to Crossed Cheques into accordance with mercantile practice, out of which a recent judgment has rudely shaken it. A cheque crossed "& Co.," may be paid through any banker. But any one who takes a cheque specially crossed with a banker's name—except that banker—does it at his peril.

LORD SANDHURST led an attack on Knightsbridge Barracks. But they have got to be re-erected. The site is pronounced, on high authority, the best for strategic purposes—if the Guards should ever have to do bloodier duty than guard the line of route for a procession—quod Di avertant. Besides, the Duke assures us that the healthiest cavalry barracks are those where men's rooms are over horses' stables. Troopers so lodged are not so liable to chills as when they pass, heated, from detached stables to gusty barrack-rooms. The ammoniacal odours, we presume, they get used to. Nay, perhaps we shall be told these are medicinal. Did not an elderly carcase-butcher tell the Smithfield Committee that if ever he felt a little "queer in his inside" he used to go and inhale the odours from the grating of one of the Smithfield sewers, and it always brought him round better than any physic? Odor equi—like odor lucri—bonus est.

(Commons.)—The brisk Baronet of Chelsea gave the House a delightful night's ratting sport over the "unreformed Corporations." There were some hundred little burrows left untouched when the municipal rats were smoked out of the bigger boroughs. It was intended, no doubt, to bring the sulphur and the ferrets to these lesser holes, after the big ones were cleansed and set in order; but this latter work took more time and energy than was calculated, and so the venerable rottenness of these cosy retreats of antiquated corruption was spared to exercise the Chelsea Baronet's keen taste for ferreting. Last year he turned his ferret into the burrows of New Romney, Queensborough, and Woodstock. This year the sport is spread through Sussex, the Isle of Wight, Dorsetshire, Devonshire, and Cornwall. Shall Punch wrong DILKE by picking the plums out of his pudding? No. Let our readers go to his speech if they would enjoy the amazing "bag" of musty abuses and venerable villanies his sharp eye and keen scent have brought to light. Never was there such an unearthing of vermin since the Pied Piper of Hamelin charmed the rats into the Weser, and did not earn the blessing of the Corporation.

MR. CROSS undertakes the future ferreting in these well-stocked preserves, and SIR CHARLES leaves the sport in his hands. The vermin should have been unearthed, and their rotten old burrows cleared out, forty years ago—but better late than never.

Wednesday.—Another Irish afternoon. By doubling the usual number of Parliamentary sponsors to a Bill, the Irish Managers have doubled their chances on the ballot for days. So we are in for a good allowance of Irish Bills. En revanche the English Members seem disposed to leave Irishmen all the talk on Irish business.

The Great O'GORMAN moved to assimilate Irish to English municipal franchise. It would be more to the purpose, if we could, to assimilate the English municipal franchise to the Irish—of £10 rating. As it is, having made the mistake of severing municipal taxation from representation, in our own Corporations Reform Bill, we should be cruel to do Ireland the same bad turn.

The Bill was thrown out by 176 to 148, a narrow majority under the circumstances.

Thursday (Lords).—Second Reading of the Ecclesiastical Offices and Fees Bill. Offices are to be amalgamated, staffs reduced, fees diminished, vested interests preserved or compensated, £10,000 a year saved out of more than four times that amount, and, with all this, a salary to be screwed out of the surplus for the new Judge under the Public Worship Regulation Act. All facts about fees are the better for sharp sifting—and those about Ecclesiastical Fees are particularly likely to repay investigation. So Punch can't pretend to be sorry that the Bill was referred to a Select Committee.

(Commons.)—Army Conversation and Army Estimates.

HARDY—toujours hardi—tackles his hard task like a man. He gallantly speaks up for the Knightsbridge Barracks site—echoing the DUKE. The road is to be widened when the barracks are rebuilt. He increases the pay of noncommissioned officers and rank and file. He has settled a scheme of deferred pay, both for the line and the reserve, calculated to check desertion, and to bring the reserve-men up to the colours. He speaks, and thinks, hopefully of our recruits, and gives very good reasons for so speaking and thinking; and he has done his best to content the Medical Service and attract to its ranks the strength now wanting. Altogether HARDY shows cause for the extra half-

Digitized by Google

THE PREVAILING EPIDEMIC.

Paterfamilias (dismally, to Uncle John, who has called to ask the young People to dine, and go to the "Play"). "WELL, WE'VE RATHER A SICK HOUSE! 'FACT IS, WE'VE BEEN RINKING A GOOD DEAL LATELY. MATILDA HAS DAMAGED HER KNEE-CAP; GRACE HAS GOT A BLACK EYE AND LOST SOME OF HER TEETH; GEORGE HAS SPRAINED HIS WRIST; AND FRED'S IN BED WITH A COMMINUTED FRACT——" million he asks for. If the figure-head of the Navy were carved out of the same stuff as the ex-officio head of the Army, it would be all the better both for the Services and the Ministry.

Servant (at the Door). "DR. SPLINTER, MUM!!" [Tableau!

Were HUNT but as HARDY 'twere well for the Navy;
But a HUNT for a HARDY means taking your davy
That whate'er you go in for will end in peccavi!

Friday.—MR. OSBORNE MORGAN'S Resolution, affirming the right of all parishioners to be buried in their parish churchyards without reference to the burial service that may be celebrated over them, was defeated, in a House of 527, in the teeth of the "uncompromising" opposition of the Government, by a minority of 31. Shall we say next year, or the year after, for the Bill? After such a division, it is clearly due.

WEATHER FORECAST.

Based upon Calculations made during the Present Year.

THURSDAY.—It may rain. Very prudent people will take out umbrellas.

Friday.—Probably wet. Ordinarily cautious folks will not leave home without umbrellas.

Saturday.—Rain and sleet may be looked for. The price of goloshes will increase twenty-five per cent.

Sunday.—A snow-storm may be expected, accompanied by wind. No one will go to Church without a greatcoat and an umbrella.

Monday.—It is likely to rain. Several nasty cases of umbrella stealing will be reported from the Clubs.

Tuesday.—There is a great chance of a wet day. Umbrella stealing will continue, and much bad language will be used in smoking-rooms.

Wednesday.—The odds are in favour of its pouring cats and dogs. Thousands, in their eagerness to buy Punch, will leave their umbrellas at home.

THE REJECTED OF ROME.

A "PRESBYTER" (High) "ANGLICANUS"
Would, forthwith, turn Sacerdos Romanus,
"If you'd only agree
To admit us," says he,
"Not requiring to first reordain us."

We own English Orders? Profanus.
Ineptus, insulsus, insanus!
Did he verdure espy
In the living POPE'S eye?
Stupidissimus asinus vanus!

Speaking Out.

PUNCH finds this advertisement in a provincial paper:—

WANTED, a GENERAL SERVANT, one who can neither Read nor Write preferred. She must be clean, obliging, willing, and honest. Good wages given.—Apply personally, to M., Post Office, &c.

Would cleanness, obligingness, willingness, and honesty be any the worse with reading and writing? Let us hope that, if the former qualifications were found in the applicant to "M.", the reading and writing would not be fatal—disqualifications!

Notice.

As the recent discussion about Crossed Cheques has produced a state of anxious agitation, difficult to describe, among several nervous elderly Ladies and amiable Clergymen, it is requested that all Cheques, about which there may be any hesitation as to their immediate destiny, be made payable to Mr. Punch or order, Fleet Street, without crossing of any kind.

Digitized by Google

A POINT UNSETTLED IN HISTORY.

Lucy (to her elder Sister, who has just been relating a thrilling Episode in the Life of William Tell). "AND WAS THE LITTLE BOY ALLOWED TO EAT THE APPLE AFTERWARDS?"

COLLISION EXTRAORDINARY.

COLLISIONS at sea are, as every one knows, but too common, though they usually occur when one or the other of the vessels is urging on a wild career with supreme indifference to the fate of any unlucky craft that may happen to be in the way. The disaster of the Strathclyde has taught us that broad daylight, smooth sea, and unimpeded sight of the vessel into which you are driving, are no securities against running down. But we had yet to learn that not even the fact of both ships being at anchor will prevent vessels from indulgence in their favourite pastime. In the Wrecks and Casualties report of last week we read:—

"GRAVESEND, Feb. 27.—The Dorothy, of Sunderland, from Newcastle for Marseilles, has returned from the Downs with damage, having been in collision with the Toivotaar (barque), CAPTAIN LINDELL, from Shields for Genoa. Both vessels were at anchor at the time (midnight) in the Downs. The Toivotaar has received considerable damage to quarter, &c."

If we feel profoundly puzzled how the Franconia came to run into the Strathclyde, we are still more curious to learn by what perverse capacity for mischief the Dorothy, at anchor, managed to run into the luckless Toivotaar, at anchor too. At all events, the occurrence goes far to justify MR. HUNT'S assertion that collisions "will" occur.

RUM 'UNS FROM ROMSEY.

(A Rural Roundelay. See "Hants Independent.")

THE chap as for his feller feels
  Is one as 'ool bemoan
The loss of are another's pigs
  As thof they wuz his own.
Ah, you and me, mates, knows what 'tis
  Pigs of our own to keep!
A case in Porchmouth County Court
  Must meak all hearers weep.

There did Pigdealer HOLIDAY
  Pigdealer OSMAN soo
For five disazed pigs sold for sound,
  On a warranty untrue.
'A s'ore to Romsey on the Mud
  'A went last Romsey Fair,
And dealt wi' un for thirty swine,
  And bought 'um of un there.

Gie'd fower pound iteen shill'ns apiece,
  And the seller a said, says he,
"I warrand them there pigs all right;
  If they bain't, I 'll meak 'um be."
The pigs that night to HOLIDAY
  At Fareham come by train,
They sim'd all right for all he zee,
  But praps 'a couldn't zee plain.

Next marn 'a found their stummicks fail,
  Their happy tights all flown,
They 'd nuther touch milk, nor barley-male
  Ate up, and 'oodn't lay down.
Fust one on 'um died a nateral death,
  Soon fower moor went the same.
Some says, for Hampshire sassidges,
  That Romsey 'll arn a name.

Poor Plaintive to Southampton hied,
  He there Defendant zee,
And said, "This here 's a purty job
  Into as you 've let me."
Too late 'a went the cheque to stop
  For his ity-zeven pound,
Zo 'a went to laa for the fourteen ten
  'A'd paaid for the hogs unsound.

Defendant, on his 'davy s'orn,
  Pigs' warranty denied.
'Bout pigs when dealers disagrees,
  The jury must decide.
That 's what the Judge his Honour said,
  So they for OSMAN found,
And HOLIDAY lost them there five pigs,
  And moor nor vowerteen pound.

Now Romsey is a noted pleace
  For beer and likewise drought.
What haven' a ben to Romsey manes
  Is well know'd hereabout.
Oft, whilst the rhwoad to Romsey 's straight,
  'Tis zigzag back from there,
Mind that, whenever ye gooz to dale
  In pigs at Romsey Fair.

Ancient Drinking Customs.

ONE of the officials of the Corporation of Lostwithiel fills the agreeable, but responsible office of "Ale-taster." The existence of Ale-tasters, probably, also, of Wine and Spirit-tasters, is quite within the bounds of possibility, not only in the unreformed Corporations, so amusingly shown up by SIR CHARLES DILKE, but may we venture to suggest in some of the reformed ones also. How about our Venerable Civic Corporation itself?

LEAP YEAR READING OF AN OLD PROVERB.—La femme propose, Dieu dispose.

Digitized by Google

"OUR REPRESENTATIVE" IN INDIA.

(In which the bubble bursts, and the Public is made acquainted with the real facts of the case.)

OUT of the question to say, "Dear Sir," until I have received the necessary funds to carry on the war. What is a man without his sinews? Nothing. "No song, no supper!" no cheque, no chatter. That's my motto. Those, Sir, are my sentiments.*

'Tis early morning. The dews are falling—(why do I use this word? Strange! Heaven gives the earth its dew every morning and evening; and yet, Sir, why do I not receive my due from you? I couch this playfully, but I mean what I say)—the Indians are snoring round the camp-fire, my Noble Sportsman is asleep. He little dreams that when he awakes and calls for his most faithful and most loyal companion, that his summons will not be answered. No, I must away! I cannot own to my Illustrious Friend that I have come to my last rupee! I cannot borrow. Do you ask me why I cannot? Ask your own heart, if you have one.†

And I who have done so much for my country! Alas! how does History repeat itself! Did not an ungrateful people make CÆSAR himself sit in a swamp all night until he caught the cramp, from which he never fully recovered? Was not HANNIBAL, the liberator of his country, put under a burning-glass off Syracuse, and scorched to death by his own admirals? What was the end of POMPEY? What of HELIOGABALUS? What of IVANITCH THE FIRST of Russia, whose near relation, the chief of the M'SCATCHITT clan of Scotland, was also cruelly rewarded by his own ingrate countrymen? Not to multiply examples, how about MAC ASSAR THE THIRD and ROWLAND O'DONTO, surnamed "the Dandy," tenth King of Trim, Ireland?‡

However, so be it! Farewell the tented field! Farewell the elephant-hunt, and the death-struggle with the tiger! Farewell the private scandal and the secret history of our life in India! Ha! Sir, do you not now regret not having forwarded me the paltry dross? Why, if you liked to come to terms now, aye, at the last moment, I could a tale unfold of Indian life behind the scenes which would make each particular porcupine stand on end, and send up your circulation to the highest degree on the journalistic thermometer. Six thousand a second would be your sale. But there are two sides to every question.

My esteemed and Royal Friend has but to say to me, "Don't!" and, on my word of honour—unless you make it very well worth my while, by placing £20,000 to my account at once, and getting me a free pass to the South of Lusitania (where there are some charming spots for a literary man to live in)—I say, on my word of honour and of loyalty, I would not (except on the conditions just mentioned) allow a single word of all this to pass my lips. But let me remind you there are other firms, besides your publisher's, who know the value of this offer. But I would rather, for old friendship's sake, that you were first in the field; so if you want to realise thousands, send a boy on receipt of this with twenty-five pounds on account.§

I am bidding farewell to my old and faithful Sunderbund (a kind of Indian valet), who has served me most faithfully ever since my arrival. The poor fellow is weeping bitterly.*

It is a heartbreaking scene. Our Tattes is packed. I have given away my last new pair of palankeens, with India-rubber straps, made by the best Indian tailor, to my old Suwarree (Indian cook), while my pistols, I am presenting, as a souvenir instead of wages (for as to wages, like "two into one," I can't), to my trusty Patarras (a kind of gamekeeper), the truest shot in India.†

I suppose I must bid farewell to my Illustrious Friend, even if I run the risk of having the bootjack thrown at me; for this he will do when suddenly roused from sleep.

My elephant, and camels, and Arab steed await me. I must depart without noise, and get down to the coast. Away! Ah, the weeping Nautch girls! Muffle the tom-tom! Adieux! This is my last morning in India . . . unless before I embark I receive a telegram from Gravesend to say, "All right—cash paid—stay on the tour—see it out!" in which case duty before pleasure, and I will stay, and write you all particulars.

* * * * *

Oh, Sir, as you are great, be merciful! For the sake of my poor widowed mother! for the sake of my bedridden children and my disconsolate wife, to whom your harsh conduct would be a death-blow! for the sake of my family name! do not, do not proceed to extremities!‡ I admit it all. Let me tell my story. You wanted a first-rate Correspondent. I am that. You will own so much, I know. Sir, I was on my way out—I mean I had packed up, and was (for economy's sake) carrying my valise myself, down Regent Street, in order to reach Charing Cross Station, when an intelligent Hindoo, to whom I have often given a penny, thereby saving a dirty boot, touched his turban, said "Salaam, Sahib!" and offered to carry my small portmanteau for a trifle. While arguing with him the simple point of remuneration for his services, I told him the object of my journey. Ah! unhappy wight! Treacherous Black! The glitter of his eye fascinated me! the cunning of his suggestion floored me! "Sahib," he hissed in my ear, "Why Sahib go? RUMMUM PAL BOSHJABBA" (himself he meant) "can tell the Sahib all he wants to know. RUMMUM tell him all Indian words—everything that go on in his own country, all true, on RUMMUM PAL'S head be it! Den Sahib save the money for his poor little childs and fader and moder, and his whitey wifey, and live happy ever after! Who will know? RUMMUM PAL not tell! Swearee! Takum Affa Dava, RUMMUM no split on Sahib!"

Was not this a tempting offer? It was.

It was too much for me. Home ties held me. I went to Gravesend. RUMMUM PAL came down every evening after his dirty work was done to do dirtier.

Sir, I have been betrayed. You have also suffered. RUMMUM'S Indian words were all humbug. So was he.

One evening, when, in consequence of some inexplicable delay on your part, the usual supply did not arrive, the RUMMUM became very angry. He came the worse for liquor; he got worse and worse for liquor as the night wore on. He would not give me any Indian words. He insisted upon receiving all the money himself—may I never again have to do with such an unprincipled vagabond—and because I would not yield a point (for with me, on honour, a bargain is a bargain), he became violent, dashed his turban on the ground, whirled his broomstick round his head, and exclaiming, "Hurroo for owld Oireland!" upset the whiskey and rushed at me.

I was one too many for him, and encountered him with the poker. We parted, and I have not seen him since. When we next meet, I shall have great pleasure in handing him over to the police, as I consider that you, Sir, have serious cause of complaint against him, and so have I.

My letters would have ceased there and then, but for my happening to meet your boy, who had just purchased an Indian Dictionary, and was taking it back to you.§ I asked him to stay while I looked

---

* The cheque was sent, was received, and was cashed. We know all about it now, and so shall the patient public.—ED.

† The evident reply to Our Correspondent's question, "Why cannot I borrow?" is, of course, "Because no one would be such a donkey as to lend you anything." We know Our Man by this time.—ED.

‡ In spite of all that has happened, and of all that may happen, we shall always regret that a gentleman of such historical learning and research should have so utterly thrown himself away as the public will subsequently learn he has done. We willingly admit that so accomplished and erudite a scholar would be an ornament to any society. Alas! poor Yorick!—ED.

§ Here Our Correspondent at last let the cat out of the bag. In his eagerness to secure the money, he wrote, as may be seen, "send a boy on receipt of this"—forgetting that his letter was supposed to be written in India. We secured the envelope. It was stamped Gravesend! We took steps accordingly. Gravesend is associated with the place wherein to "spend a happy day!" We know Our Man now. Attendez!—ED.

* A Sunderbund is "a forest tract on the Delta of the Ganges!" Vide our Dictionary, on which we are now certain we can perfectly rely. But we are not to be taken in—in fact, we never were; we always said we mistrusted him.—ED.

† Once for all we unmask the deceiver. Tattes is not a trunk or portmanteau, but a "screen of glass placed in a window and cooled by water!" Everyone knows what a palankeen is, though more often spelt palanquin; everyone knows it's not a garment of any description. And, finally, a patarras is no more a gamekeeper than a tom-cat, being, in fact, "a pair of boxes slung on a bamboo." So much for Buckingham! Off with his head!—ED.

‡ This change of note is attributable to the sudden appearance of our Head-clerk, with a Police-officer, just as Our Correspondent and the missing Boy (whom we sent, months ago, to buy a Dictionary) were leaving his cottage to go out for a row on the river.—ED.

§ Our office is in Fleet Street. Why did our Boy go to Gravesend for an Indian Dictionary?—ED.

We have just asked him this very question. The Boy (who is a good lad enough) replies, "Because I'd always 'eard as hinjun dikshonaries was cheaper down at Gravesend." This looks like truth. The Boy, at his age, could not have invented such a falsehood. We shall retain him on the establishment, and deduct the half-sovereign.—ED.

Digitized by Google

out a word. He stayed. I looked out several words. He is here now. I surrender him. He is not a bad boy, though, were I you, I would not implicitly trust all he says, especially when he is speaking about me. The Indian Dictionary is, I regret to say, lost. I took it to church by mistake for my prayer-book, and left it in the pew. When I went to afternoon service it had disappeared. So much for piety! I am now ready to go out to India, or wherever you like to send me. But, believe me, in all your establishment you have not a truer or more faithful Correspondent than has been ever

YOUR CORRESPONDENT.*

* The Clerk and the Policeman returned with the Boy. The Boy owned to having spent the ten shillings. He never bought any Dictionary. He now says that he went down with the money to Rosherville "to spend a happy day." There, he says, he met Our Representative. The Boy (who is a brave little fellow) attacked him, and charged him with ingratitude to his employer. Our Representative retaliated, and threatened to take the Boy to the nearest police-court. The case was serious, and the Boy's mother interfered. The Boy was induced to remain with eight-and-sixpence at Gravesend. His mother received eighteenpence, and left. Our Correspondent took the money, saying he would give the Boy a weekly allowance of twopence. He kept his word so far as to give the Boy an I O U for that amount every Saturday. We believe the Boy, and have blamed the Policeman for not having brought up the principal offender, who has now absconded. However, on behalf of his afflicted family mentioned in his appeal, we have written a full and free pardon.

P.S.—On inquiry we find that Our Correspondent has not got a wife, or a mother, or a father, or any children at all. We have been imposed upon, but it is for the last time. "Never again with you, Robin!"—ED.

PAVING THE WAY.

The Clerical Mrs. Partington on the Burials Question.

"We shall give our stanch and unqualified opposition to the resolution of MR. OSBORNE MORGAN."—MR. DISRAELI to the Deputation.

"Nature will prove too strong even for a Conservative majority."—Times.

BRAVVO, my dear BENJAMIN! Bless you! Sich words is the sort I assure you
To settle them dratted Dissenters. You stick to that text and you 're right!
No Surrender 's the only safe standing. So don't you allow 'em to lure you,
From the proper Conservative posture, as gives you a pull in the fight!

Nonconformity 's getting a nuisance; and as for that horrid O. MORGAN,
Cremation 's the best I can wish him—the sooner the better I say.
Equality 's rubbish; the cry of each tuppenny tub-thumping organ,
And means what that darling EARL FEVERSHAM patly called "paving the way."

As certainly no "good intentions" to us, or to anything proper,
Don't form any part of that pavement, although its direction 's the same
As—but, there, I don't wish to speak strong, not at all! but we must put a stopper
On plans whose prime mover 's a Person I 'm always unwilling to name.

For whatever that bragian JENKINS, as bothered poor dear MR. COOK so,
May say in his nasty stuckupishness, I 'm too Conservative far
To give up my Satan, though Science our Church's foundation has shook so,
Resolving all faiths into Sun-Myths, and him I suppose to a Star!

But none of your sly "educating," no "leaps in the dark," dearest DIZZY!
"Moderation" may sound very nice, but it often means pulling up stakes.
Your talk of "discussion" and "reason," with MIALL and MORGAN so busy,
Remembering what I remember, I own sich talk gives me the shakes.

The question did ought to be safest, as EGERTON says, with the Tories.
Which why to be buried like Christians the Tubthumpers can't be content,
Fogs me. But the fact is, their aim is to strip us of all our old glories,
And that, my dear DIZZY, is why I would have you so down on Dissent.

As to saying that Nature 's against us, that 's gammon! She knows herself better.
They 'd make her a Rad, if they could, with their science and freedom and stuff.
They envies our Church her position, and does their black best to upset her.
Concession! It 's not to be thought of; they 're truckled to more than enough!

Keep 'em out! That 's the watchword, dear BEN. The thin end of the wedge they 'd be driving;
They 've horrid "ulterior objects"—as doubtless to you is beknown.
To sweep back this deluge of dirty Dissent I have long been a-striving,
And if you will aid Me and my Mop, I have hopes we may yet hold our own!

PROCEEDINGS OF LEARNED SOCIETIES.

PAPERS TO BE READ.

Antiquaries.—"On an Ancient Venetian Mile-stone."
Asiatic.—"On the Discovery of a new variety of Chutnee."
Astronomical.—"On some Indications of Adulteration in the Milky Way."
"On Theatrical Stars."
Botanic.—"On Flowers of Speech."
Clinical.—"On Breakfast in Bed."
Entomological.—"On Black Beetles."
"On Spelling Bees."
Horticultural.—"On the Connection of Rainy Days with Flower-Shows."
Institute of British Architects.—"On Aërial Castellated Structures."
Medical and Chirurgical.—"On the Symptoms of Insanity to be detected by Dissection in the March Hare."
Mathematical.—"On 'The Loves of the Triangles.'"
Meteorological.—"Biographical Notices of the Clerks of the Weather from the earliest period of the Weather Record."
Numismatic.—"On the French Forms of Change for a Sovereign."
Pharmaceutical.—"On Money as a Drug."
New Shakspeare.—"Was SHAKSPEARE acquainted with the First Four Rules of Arithmetic?"
"On the Traces in SHAKSPEARE's later Plays of his Knowledge of the Semitic Languages."
"On two proposed Emendations in Hamlet—
a. "'Twas caviare to the General."
b. "An eye like Ma's, to threaten and command."
Statistical.—"Tables showing the Number of Proposals made by Ladies to Gentlemen in the Leap Years of the Present Century, and their results."
Zoological.—"On the Gregarious Habits of Birds of a Feather."

[Secretaries of Learned Societies will confer a favour by giving early intimation of forthcoming Papers.]

Digitized by Google

UNITED AT LAST!

A Novelette for the Drawing-Room and the Kitchen.

CHAPTER II.—All Right!

IT was a very happy party. EDWIN and FRANCES were seated at a table upon which was spread a snowy white cloth, upon which were placed some hot-house flowers. He was eating heartily; she was all aglow with excitement. In the background ATALANTA stood like a presiding genius, the very impersonification of contentment. The faithful creature was employed in removing the dishes. The soup had been praised; the fish had been excellent; the joint was on the table.

"Come," said EDWIN, "this is something like a dinner. I will be bound no dirty fork was used to remove this boiled beef from the pot to the dish."

"I should think not," replied the now happy mistress of the house, pouting. "I followed the directions of the great master."

"You mean BUCKMASTER?" put in EDWIN.

"I do mean MR. BUCKMASTER," replied FRANCES, smiling. "A piece of tape was tied round the joint. The dirty fork lets out the gravy."

"It is beautifully cooked!" murmured EDWIN.

"It is," returned his wife, with conscious pride. "Thoroughly agreeing with MR. BUCKMASTER that it is a great mistake to keep the pot bubbling away, I got a receptacle large enough to receive the meat in, the clean soft water I had heated to about 190 degrees to receive it. The meat was boiled a quarter of an hour to every pound. I carefully (with the assistance of my faithful ATALANTA) removed the scum every now and then, and you see the result."

"I do indeed!" cried EDWIN, laughing merrily, and holding out his plate for a second helping. "How good the soup was!"

"Yes," murmured FRANCES, dreamily, "I followed the directions of MR. BUCKMASTER. I put the meat in cold water, and set it on the hob to simmer for three or four hours."

"Did you say cold water, my angel? Another potato, please!" It was EDWIN who was speaking.

"Yes. The joint was plunged into hot water, the meat forming (with oatmeal) the nourishment of the soup, was thrown into cold. In one case I wanted to keep the juices inside the joint, in the other to get the juices out into the soup. In future (following the advice of MR. BUCKMASTER) I shall turn the liquid in which the meat is boiled into soup." This was said with a pretty little air of determination.

"How good these potatoes are!" cried EDWIN, enthusiastically. "I am sure you took the advice of MR. BUCKMASTER on this subject, too?"

"I am not ashamed to say I did," was the reply of the sweet young wife. "I selected potatoes of the same size and same variety, I washed and scrubbed them with a hard brush."

"Did you remove the skin before cooking?"

"Certainly not," she cried. "If I had, all the delicate flavour of the potatoes would have been lost. If a raw potato is peeled, the part giving the distinctive taste of the different varieties — which lies just under the skin — is wasted. No, Sir, I packed them as tightly as possible in a saucepan, and covered them with the smallest quantity of rain-water. I brought them quickly to the boil, and when they did boil I set them aside till they were tender. I soon ascertained that they were tender by using a knitting-needle—not, mark me, a dirty fork. When I knew that the potatoes were indeed tender, I put them on the fire to boil for two or three minutes quickly. Then I poured all the water I could away, gave the potatoes a shake, and took off the lid to allow the remainder of the water to evaporate. Then, and not until then, the potatoes were peeled, and sent up to table."

EDWIN was silent for a long time, thinking deeply and gravely; then he rose from the table, went to his desk and wrote a short note. All this while FRANCES was watching him anxiously and eagerly. Then he came to her, and smilingly placed the letter in her fair hands.

"My soul!" he murmured, as he embraced her, "it is my resignation of the Club. In future I dine at home with a darling little angel who knows how to cook. Thanks to MR. BUCKMASTER'S teaching, this is now a happy house — and, darling, we are united at last!"

Our story is over. EDWIN and FRANCES (now MARQUIS and MARCHIONESS OF BROMPTON AND ISLINGTON) are the most contented couple to be found in the pages of Burke—their dinners are the

MR. PUNCH'S DRESS DESIGNS (AFTER NATURE).

COSTUME DU SOIR—ROBE EN HOMARD.

[A Suggestion for Tight Dresses.

Digitized by Google

CIVIL SERVICE STORES.

"WHAT CAN WE DO FOR YOU, MADAM? ROYAL COMMISSION?—SELECT COMMITTEE?—PAPERS?—CAREFUL CONSIDERATION?—OFFICIAL INQUIRY? ANYTHING TO OBLIGE!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

theme of admiration for miles and miles round their many country seats. As for ATALANTA, that faithful creature learned the theory of Cookery, went to Canada, and married a wealthy farmer. She has her box at the Opera at Toronto, and her husband keeps a pack of hounds.

And now let us drop the puppets, lower the curtain, blow out the lights, and—with MR. BUCKMASTER as our guide—cheerfully and comfortably to dinner.

NE QUID NIMIS.

DEAR OLD PUNCH,

Now do be reasonable—and don't scold so. You know it is absurd to expect us to make ourselves pretty—and we do make ourselves lovely only for you horrid men—without destroying something or other. Of course I don't want to hurt the dear little Robins though I believe they deserve their name—though what they would say at the Spelling Bee if I spelt Robbing without a g or Robin with two b's if it comes to that I don't know—but goodness gracious you know you really make us out too awfully cruel and I cannot think why for surely tropical birds were not meant to waste their beautiful plumage on savages or their desert hair and after all when our first parents, I don't mean anything profane you know, committed their first sin their first thought was dress and beasts meant birds one would think though perhaps as salt was not discovered it might be difficult for ADAM and EVE to put any on their tails.

Dear dear I fear there are no stops but I am in such a hurry to go to the Rink and I must tell you, you old dear, what I think and that is that nobody cries out about the poor silkworms who spin their own catacombs for us or the dear little cochineal insects or the shivering lambs or the thousand and one animals that lay down their lives gratefully at the shrine of Beauty, no that's nonsense but you know what I mean and though as I said before I am sure I would not have darling Robins and those sweet nightingales shot to put in my hat I hope we shall not have any of my sex shrieking about the innocent Bombyx or the ill-used Ostrich which after all are to be pitied for it must be painful after weaving so much silk and growing such beautiful feathers to be unrolled or plucked just when you have succeeded in producing your best, and if the silk was meant for our use surely the beautiful scarlet and green and purple, and blue sheen were not intended only to adorn the virgin forests—oh! and I quite forgot all the chirpy little squirrels and petit-gris, is that a weasel a squirrel or a rat? which must have multiplied by millions you know lately for it takes nearly a hundred and fifty skins to make one of the mantles we wear and you know everybody does and we could not go without. Is that cruel too? I suppose it is somehow or other but then there are chops and cutlets and dear me I suppose I am very hard-hearted but nothing will ever make me turn vegetarian. There's CHARLIE's knock! Ta-ta you dear old thing you.

Ever your admiring subscriber,

EDITH ROSAMOND SPARROWHAWK.

The Eagle's Nest, Falconsbridge.

Celestial Cruelty.

THE Chinese have a Board of Rites called Li-pu, which has lately published an edict to the effect that brides of Mandarins are not to wear more than eight ornaments (it says nothing about bridesmaids, by the way). What would become of our brides, and their châtelaines, lockets, and bangles, under such cruel sumptuary restrictions? Li-pu Board of Rites, indeed! Had we anything of the kind here, English Daughters-in-love and Mothers-in-law would call them a Board of Wrongs.

VIVISECTION.

Old Lady Day.

SIR,

No less than forty-eight Mayors, some of them old Mayors—and so perhaps of no further use except to the knacker or vivisector—protest against the cruelty of Vivisection, and call on Parliament to legislate against "the existing evil." I can sympathise with them, and hope they will succeed in neutralising, by law, the philosophic curiosity and cruelty of Students.

Never be afraid, Sir, to ride your "Cockhorse" to our "Cross," to pay me a visit. I will protect from the dangers of vivisection your horse, and as many Mayors—equine or asinine—as you like to bring.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

Banbury, Feb. 29, 1876. THE OLD WOMAN.

P.S.—Why do they not enlist in their cause the mères and commères, as well as the Mayors?

Christendom was once "our hell" as well as that of "dumb animals" (see advertisement). Cruel wretches used to vivisect us after they had hanged or drowned us as witches. THE O. W.

The Old Woman encloses the following advertisement, to which we gladly give publicity:—

REASONS AGAINST the SCIENTIFIC TORTURE of ANIMALS, most respectfully addressed to the Members of the House of Commons, shortly to be engaged in the consideration of the question of Vivisection:—

Because it cannot be justified without justifying the scientific torture of man. To torture a man is not wrong on the ground that he is intelligent or immortal, but only because he has a sensitive body; and the same is true of all vertebrated animals.

Because it cannot be practised without an immediate hardening of heart to students who grow up under it, and a spreading demoralisation in the community.

Because in particular it becomes impossible to punish boys for indulging their boyish curiosity by cruel experiments, when philosophers indulge their philosophic curiosity by experiments prodigiously more cruel. So too if a philosopher may try how many minutes it takes to bake a dog to death, or what amount of torture suffices to alienate his affection, rude man cannot be punished for trying which of two animals has greater endurance of wounds.

Because a medical degree is at best a test of intellectual attainment, not of gentleness, patience, and wisdom; and since one heartless man who has taken a medical degree can torture in living death tens of thousands of dogs, cats, and rabbits, no licence of torture can safely, wisely, or justly be granted to any one by virtue of his degree or station.

Because the increasing use of more and more artificial apparatus for ingeniously torturing our helpless, harmless, and innocent creatures, has been accompanied with an increasing tendency in the medical profession to approve of and promote artificial impurity in the blood and in morals; cruelty, recklessness, and impurity going hand in hand; so that we are threatened with demoralisation of a complicated order from the profession which ought simply to minister to health.

Because it cannot be proved that any truth of science worth knowing is not attainable by legitimate observations and experiments which involve no cruelty, and especially by observations upon human beings.

Because in particular it is denied by competent medical authorities that the circulation of the blood and the function of the nerves were discovered by vivisection; while other eminent persons have avowed that this cruel practice has perpetuated error and distracted students from truer modes of discovery.

Because it is not even pretended that the cruelties aim directly at the relief of human suffering. Avowedly they aim at science, that is, at the gratification of curiosity; any relief to man from it is only contingent and barely possible, and to judge by results may rather be called a fiction and a fraud.

Because Christendom has long since been taunted by the nations beyond as the hell of dumb animals, and Christianity must be eternally and fatally disgraced if nations called Christian allow the perpetration of these heart-rending enormities under any pretext whatever.

Issued by the Birmingham Association for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. H. F. GOODSON, Hon. Sec.

It would be difficult to find a better illustration of the softness of heart—and head—at the bottom of the present vehement horror of Vivisection. The Commission's Report recommends the wise course, regulate, but do not prohibit. Prevent the abuse of Vivisection, but in the name of Science and Humanity do not deprive the world of the use of it.

Admiralty Maxim.

(As Translated by the RIGHT HON. W. H.)

FIAT Justitia (?), ruat cœlum. "Let Justice be done, though EVANS come to grief."

FAIRLY WALKED OFF HIS FEET.

MRS. MALAPROP writes to sympathise with poor PAYSON WESTON on his great walking feat having come off! She doesn't wonder at it, considering the awful amount of work they have had!

Digitized by Google

JOHN THOMAS TO THE RESCUE!

RINK SOCIETY IN THE PROVINCES IS APT TO BE RATHER MIXED. AT ALL EVENTS, LADY FITZ-TOPPINGTON THINKS SO, AND WILL NOT HEAR OF HER FAIR DAUGHTERS SKATING WITHOUT SUCH ATTENDANCE AS BEFITS THEIR RANK AND STATION.

Digitized by Google

LAST MATCH OF THE SEASON.

Exciting Race.—Jumping in Ulsters! By Gentlemen Amateurs! (Umbrellas "de Rigueur"!)

FOG-SIGNALS.

Mr. Punch has picked up a pocket-book (with the initials W. H.), containing nothing (as far as he can make out) of any value to anybody, including the owner. In the hope of identification, he publishes a portion of these contents—rough copies, apparently, of what would seem to be letters. No signatures are attached in any case.

(Private.)

Dear Admiral T****,

Of course you could not be expected to be on deck in your position, and I don't blame you the least for being below when the collision took place. Try not to do it again.

(Private.)

Sir,

What the devil do you mean by being below when your Commanding Officer was not on deck? If you had not slowed your ship, you might have gone right through the other, and in the fog we should never have heard more of her. Now we shall have to make an example of you, as Admiral T* did of Wilmot, when he ran his ship ashore.

(Private.)

Sir,

What, in Heaven's name, do you mean by thinking, when you ought to have been below instead of on deck—no, I mean ought to have been on deck instead of in the tops? You did it for the best, indeed! Why did you not follow the example of your Captain, and do as he did? Had you drowned yourself, it would have been better for us all.

(Private.)

Dear Captain,

Of course you know best. There is no doubt that, if the Captain's place on board the Iron Duke was on deck, your place on the Vanguard was below. If the Admiral was right in not being on deck, which cannot be contradicted, then Lieutenant E—— ought to have known better than to remain out of his cabin. You are not to blame any more than the fog.

(Private.)

My Dear G***,

I am in a fog. That is, they were in a fog. Do tell me who ought to have been on deck and who below? When an Admiral is below, ought the Captain to be in his berth? Has a Lieutenant in charge any right to leave the wheel, or may he remain in the galley? Answer me these questions at once, or I shall be in a fix.

LOVELINESS BY LIMELIGHT.

"During the Prince of Wales's visit to Agra, the Taj Mahal was illuminated by coloured lamps and limelight, with results as little pleasing to the senses as to æsthetic sentiment. Malodorous fumes from myriads of oil lamps and Will-o'-the-Wisp illumination suggestive of a Crystal Palace firework 'set-piece' on a windy night, could hardly have enhanced the native beauty of the place, or—one would think—the pleasure of the Prince."—Our Own (indignant).

Uxorious Shah Jehan, could you return
To view the peerless tomb your love created,
How would your Eastern blood within you burn,
To see that sacred shrine so desecrated!
The snowy marble must have blushed for shame.
Better decay like Tadmor's should, with time, light
Upon that fairy dome, than it should flame
A la Cremorne, with coloured lamps and limelight!

Were Sahibs snobs that they should do this thing,
Where the East's Marble Miracle reposes,—
A dream of "mist and moonbeams" glistening
Amidst its clustering cypresses and roses?
A Prince's Progress has its needs, no doubt;
Yet is there not a dash of something sad in
Thought of the lovely Taj tricked, tawdry, out,
Like—Covent Garden, when they play Aladdin?

Digitized by Google

AURINKULAR CONFESSIONS.

(By Witnesses examined before Mr. Punch's own Royal Commission.)

THE HONOURABLE MR. DAWDLE confesses he thinks Rinking rather fun than otherwise. Does not skate himself. Likes to drop in, don't you know, and look at other fellows.

MISS AURORA GUSHINGTON does not mind confessing that she dotes upon the Rink. Thinks it quite too awfully jolly. Is not very strong, and gets knocked up by dancing. Can skate for hours and hours — at least, when CHARLES is with her.

CAPTAIN HARDUPPE (unattached) skates because it 's cheap. Can't afford to hunt, or to play rackets, or tennis. Rinking only costs you eighteenpence a day. Cheapest exercise there is, and never wears one's boots out as one does by walking.

LADY SHORTCOMMONS confesses, with a blush, that, as the mother of six daughters, she looks upon the Rink as quite a heavenly institution. Girls must have amusement, or they get out of sorts, and even out of temper. Now skating is so economical a way of taking exercise, and quite as fashionable as riding, which is so expensive. Besides, there are always some eligible young men now at the Rink, and who knows but an attachment may spring up from a premeditated tumble. Really, don't you know, a Rink is quite as suited for flirtation as a ball-room; and there 's no expense incurred for bouquets or evening dresses.

MR. SLOWCOACH confesses he objects to this new-fangled amusement. Thinks it quite un-English to go skating in summer-time. Seems to him like flying in the face of Nature.

MR. DASHERTON confesses he goes in for Rinking a good deal. Has averaged five hours a day for the last six months. Doesn't care much for the skating—in fact, considers it a bore. But likes meeting girls one knows, you know, and having larks and chaffing with them.

MR. BONESETTER confesses that, professionally speaking, he much approves of this new fashion of skating upon wheels, for it has brought him several highly interesting cases. Asphalte is more dangerous to tumble on than ice; accidents, though personally pitiable, are professionally paying.

MISS OGLEWELL confesses she loves Rinking. Those little ducks of hats are so delightfully becoming, and a short skirt looks so well when one has pretty feet and ankles. It 's really, don't you know, almost as awfully nice as valsing. Indeed, in one respect, it 's nicer, for if one feels timid one needn't be ashamed of leaning upon somebody.

CAPTAIN RATTLECASH thinks Rinking a good spec. He has helped to get up heaps of Rinks, and, as a promoter, of course has helped himself to somothing handsome.

MR. SPOONLEY confesses that he 's awfully fond of Winking. Yes, he means to say Winking. Can't pronounce his R's well. Likes Winking better than waltzing. Comes a cwopper pwetty often. Hasn 't fallen in love yet.

MISS DOLDRUMS confesses she thinks Rinking a sadly demoralising habit, and one likely to produce a most pernicious influence upon the female character.

MR. ADONIS WOBBLEBY confesses, upon pressure, that although he is most brilliant in a ball-room, he does not shine on wheels. Has an uncommonly fine figure (for a fellow over forty), but rarely shows it on the Rink for fear of looking awkward.

MISS PRETTIPET confesses, with some shyness, that she delights in skating; that is to say, when she gets some one nice to teach her. Really, is so nervous that she dares not try alone, but can manage pretty well, if some one holds her by the hand. When one makes a slip, you know, he cannot well help squeezing it. (The last six words were spoken in so low a tone that the Witness was obliged, with great reluctance, to repeat them.)

SIR CHARLES DILKE AND THE CORPORATIONS.

ALAS, ye unreformed Municipalities,
With small venalities,
Saltash, Lostwithiel, Pevensey, and Wareham,
This harum-scarum
Young Baronet has tried you, taking notes
From the Land's End, it seems, to John o' Groat's,
And swears your members all are greedy sinners,
Who spend the public money upon dinners.

Certes, not quite un-English this proclivity
To free festivity:
GLADSTONE, in tones half menace and half pity,
Has told the City
That not for banquets did our fathers build
The deep foundations of the traders' Guild:
And who can doubt that all men will be learners
From WILLIAM's wise sayings to the Turners?

So Romney, with your very grave election *
(Then gay refection),
And Brading, with your Hall for Aldermen,
Eight feet by ten,†
And Plympton Earle, that sold the portrait rare
Of great SIR JOSHUA, your most famous Mayor,‡
Not very long the public shall you bilk:
Reform must follow on the words of DILKE.

* "The Corporators of New Romney sat round a tomb to elect their Mayor, and, locking the gate of the Church to keep the people out, declared themselves a public meeting of the inhabitants."

† "At Brading the Town Hall and the Stocks were the only outward and visible signs of the existence of the Corporation. The Town Hall was the smallest he ever saw, being only eight feet by ten."

‡ "SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS was once Mayor of Plympton Earle, and, not being able on one occasion to attend the Corporation dinner, he sent down his portrait, painted by himself, to be put in his vacant place. It was afterwards hung in the Town Hall, but, after a long period had elapsed, the representatives of the Aldermen claimed that the portrait had not been given to the Corporation, but to the Aldermen as private individuals. They sold it, and it was now in the possession of LORD EGREMONT, at Silverton Park."

OUR LEVÉE.

BY Command, a Levée was held yesterday afternoon at 85, Fleet Street, by H.R.H. PRINCE PUNCH (on behalf of HER MAJESTY).

The following Presentations were made:—

The S-LT-N, on his not paying his debts, by a Commissioner of Bankruptcy.

The KH-D-VE, on his selling the Suez Canal (and the purchasers?) by a Stock Exchange Bear.

DON C-RL-S, on his happy dispatch, by the Spanish nation.

MR. L-WE, on his late heavy falls, both in Public Opinion, and on the asphalte, by the proprietor of the —— Skating Rink.

B-R-N DE R-THSCH-LD, on his obtaining his commission, by MR. L-WE.

MR. W-RD H-NT, on his naval policy, by ADMIRAL T-RLT-N.

MR. GL-DST-NE, on his Syllabus, by MR. D-SR—LI.

Several Conscientious, Painstaking People, on reading the Syllabus, by several other C. P. People.

MR. C-VE, on his deliverance from Egypt, by the KH-D-VE.

SIR W-LFR-D L-WS-N, on his great success in the character of J— M-LL-R, by MR. ALLS-P B-SS.

DR. K-N—LY, on his having mercifully held his tongue this Session, by the SPEAKER.

Six other K-N—LYS, on their chances of being returned to Parliament, by their father.

MRS. PR-DG-RS, on having ridden 1 mile 1759 yards for eighteenpence, by a Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate.

MRS. CR-WSH-Y, on her attempts to abolish maid-servants, by the grateful Head of a Family.

RISHMAYDAYKOOKOKLARMAN (Spelling-Bee Directors, beware!), on his splendid reception of the PR-NCE OF W-LES, by his taxed subjects.

MR. IRV-NG, on his Othello, by S-GN-R S-LV-NI.

MR. T--LE, on his refusing to play Macbeth, by MR. IRV-NG.

The D-r-ct-rs of the W-stm-nst-r Aq--r--m, on their laudable endeavours to promote the study of pisciology, by an instructed public.

Various Contributors to P-nch (whose modesty will not allow of their names being printed), on the refining, enlightening, and edifying effect they produce on the world, by the aforesaid grateful world.

CRACK!—Reports of the Martini-Henry Rifle have been presented to Parliament. The most conclusive report is the Rifle's own.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

LANK-CARTRIDGE fire—not exactly a feu de joie—in the Lords (Monday, March 6) from LORD STRATHEDEN AND CAMPBELL over the Andrassy Note. LORD DERBY said what little there is to be said, in a case where there is nothing to be done but to keep our eyes open, mouths shut, and see what the SULTAN will send us. We couldn't keep our fingers out of the Turkey Pie when all the Great Powers were dipping theirs in; but it is a comfort to know we have not plunged them deeper than was inevitable, and than will allow us to take them out without soiling—it is to be hoped—or burning.

(Commons).—A night on the Suez Canal. The Government declines a partnership in the Egyptian National Bank. It has not declined to appoint, with France and Italy, one of three receivers of Egyptian revenue, with power to appropriate the needful out of Egyptian income, for payment of Egyptian debt. Unfortunately any dealing with the KHEDIVE flings our Government among the bulls and the bears. It is unlucky that our road to India should lie, not only through the Suez Canal, but through the dirty alleys of the Stock Exchange.

MR. GLADSTONE twitted the Government on the dismissal of SIR D. LANGE from the English agency of the Canal Company. M. DE LESSEPS wants to show he is still master of his own house, if England flatters herself she has bought the latch-key. MR. GLADSTONE thinks, as most people are likely to think, the publication of private and confidential despatches an inadvertence and an error, and suggested that the Government ought to intervene on behalf of an agent whose only fault was being too English.

MR. DISRAELI retorted with some irritation. SIR D. LANGE had not asked the intervention of Government. When he did it would be time to consider of action on his behalf. Two, and the most important, of his five Dispatches published, were not marked "private and confidential." Besides, LORD GRANVILLE had seen the Blue Book, and had not objected to their publication.

LORD HARTINGTON explained that the papers were sent to LORD GRANVILLE merely as an act of courtesy, and that he had not been consulted as to the propriety of the publication of SIR D. LANGE'S Dispatches.

Altogether, MR. DISRAELI did not come brilliantly out of the night's skirmish. The Bill to raise the Four Millions was read a Third Time.

In Committee of Supply on Army Estimates, SIR WILFRID poked fun at the increase of MR. HARDY'S little Bill; and MR. PEASE, with better taste and more sense, withdrew his Motion to knock off 10,000 men.

MR. HARDY defended his estimates gallantly. He hankers after MR. ANDERSON'S scheme for marking recruits in vaccination. And why not? There seems more prejudice than reason against such a plan of making a "marksman" of the British recruit. Of course, if outsiders will call such a mark a "brand," it sounds ugly, and is likely to be pooh-poohed. If it be adopted, officers should be marked as well as men.

An Irish row over the appointment of the Referee Committee. MR. SULLIVAN wanted more Irish Members on the Committee. MR. BUTT was not there to keep the "boys" in order; and so SULLIVAN and O'GORMAN between them kept up the game, through seventeen divisions, till after four in the morning! Now "division," like love, may be

"The sowl of a nate Irishman," but Englishmen get tired of the sport, when begun unreasonably and kept up hopelessly.

MR. SULLIVAN ought to know better than discredit Ould Ireland by such "devilry," especially when all decent folks—even M.P.'s—want to be in bed. The pleasantest Club in London will lose its character if this sort of thing happens often. To be sure, the Home-Rulers are not particularly anxious to promote the harmony of its evenings.

Tuesday (Lords).—LORD GRANVILLE disposed of MR. DISRAELI'S statement that he had sanctioned the publication of the Lange Despatches. LORD DERBY had to admit that no such sanction had been given. He added a lame defence of what remains after all said and done, an official blunder if no worse.

The best summary of the pro and con. on the subject of the Slave Circular that Parliament has yet obliged us with. LORD CAIRNS for the Government, LORD SELBORNE against. LORD SELBORNE'S argument clinches the case against Circular Number Two. Why not have substituted for it a declaration that we would not restore Fugitive Slaves, and leave the aggrieved Governments to look after their own Niggers? That's what it must come to, with more or less circumlocution.

(Commons).—Three talks on Wine Duties, Tralee Savings Bank Losses, and Railway Passengers Duty. Government won't give Select Committees on the two first (wonderful! Select Committees are not granted as asked, then); but to make up for the unexpected refusal, grants one on the third.

Wednesday (Commons).—Great rejoicings of Opposition. In the fight over MR. M'LAGAN'S Scotch Game Laws Bill, Government floored by 172 to 150. First blood for the Opposition!

It is true it was a scramble. The Government didn't seem quite to know their own mind. The Bill was a decently good Bill, on a subject fertile of bad blood, and hard to handle reasonably. Scotch Members are not so easily driven as English, when the Government road is one they don't want to go.

It wasn't much of a victory, but the Opposition is thankful for small mercies in that way, and yelled vociferously at the announcement of the division.

Thursday (Lords).—An instructive talk on LORD SALISBURY'S Oxford Reform Bill. When their Lordships do talk to the point, their wisdom is wonderful. We seem in their high House to breathe a serener atmosphere than the hot, if breezy and healthy, breath of the Commons. But who are the "Idle Fellows" LORD SALISBURY is for waging such fierce war on? Punch would have said that Clerical fellows, as a rule, best answered the description. The danger seems to be that LORD SALISBURY'S Bill will hand over the University to the tender mercies of these very Clericals. If that is what LORD SALISBURY means by strengthening the University element, we would rather he strengthened the Colleges, by getting rid of the Clerical dry rot which now infests them, and left the University to take care of itself.

(Commons).—Queen or Empress? Which is it to be? "Empress," says MR. DISRAELI, with much emphasis, yet with little force of logic, or reason of history. "Queen," says MR. GLADSTONE, with emphasis all the more effective for the pulse of patriotism and force of feeling that beat and glowed under his words.

Digitized by Google

The House, like the Country, is most anxious to avoid anything that shall have the appearance of interfering with HER MAJESTY'S choice of a title, still more of disapproving any title she may choose. But HER MAJESTY always feels with the Country. For her best title, if she still hesitates, we beg to refer her to our Cartoon, and to remind her of the additional reason she has given in favour of "Queen of the East," by her last week's visit to the London Hospital, and the womanly and motherly feeling which guided her kind hand to poor little KATIE AMBLER'S pale cheek.

Friday (Lords).—A good word for a good thing—LORD SHAFTESBURY on Training-ships—the most useful of machines (witness the boy-heroes of the Goliath) to work up the waste of our back slums into stout "fearnought"—about the best stuff going for wear and tear.

Government admits the need of able Seamen and the feasibility of converting our X. Y. Z.'s into A.-B.'s. The question is, who's to find the money? The Ship-owners, for whose use the article is manufactured, are not at all disposed to pay for it. JOHN BULL doesn't like to be asked to dip his hands in his pocket, though it would be cheaper, in the end, to turn street Arabs into sea-boys than into gaol-birds.

(Commons.)—MR. BRASSEY on the same tack as LORD SHAFTESBURY. Punch is glad to hear that the Admiralty is ready to pay twenty-five pounds for every trained boy who joins the Navy, and three pounds for every Naval Reserve boy, and to provide three training-ships a year.

MR. BRASSEY, besides training-ships to look after the launching of our Jack-tars, wants a Pension Fund to provide for them when "laid up in ordinary"—their best berth, when disabled, now being the Workhouse.

Here again Government is welcome to do its utmost, but Ship-owners will not hear of a compulsory contribution. The Sailors' Friends must fall back on "Voluntary Contributions"—in other words, the generous must pay for the selfish.

"So was it ere my life began,
So is it, since I've been a man,
So will it be when I am gone!
Let SHAFTESBURYS, BRASSEYS, still work on!"

Altogether, this has been one of MR. DISRAELI'S bad weeks. He has treated the House, strange to say, to bad taste, bad temper, and stranger still, bad talk. MR. GLADSTONE, on the other hand, has been in rare force—quite a revival of the old man—

"The ARTHUR whom we knew,
From spur to crest a star of tournament."

THE 'VARSITY FŒNERATOR

MAJORES nostri furem dupli condemnârunt, fœneratorem quadrupli."—CATO.

THE 'Varsity Sixty-per-center
Is a gay and genial wight;
In parting with his money
He taketh great delight;
And is piously glad when the Undergrad
At his gilded hook will bite.

Some youth who go to Cambridge
To sap for honour are fain,
But the faster sort they love their sport,
And the midnight oil disdain,
Save that which lights Unlimited Loo
And Van John's loss and gain.

At pigeon-match and race-course
They love to take the air,
And where they bet, "Hail fellow, well met!"
The Sixty-per-center's there:
For a loser rash he'll find the cash,
So nobody need despair

These youthful Cantabs, gallant and gay,
Diversion merrily seek;
Both x and y they do defy,
And also Latin and Greek:
Who hard up would be found when twenty pound
Can be had for a pound a week?

So Cambridge has its Tattersall's:
Of course they choose the one day
When there's never a race or a lark in the place—
And life runs slow of a Sunday.
In his twentieth year what youth will fear
Don, Devil, or MRS. GRUNDY?

Still, inquisitive people want to know
If really Alma Mater
Likes boys in their teens to waste their means,
And so heavily mulct poor Pater?—
In their caps and gowns to be horsey clowns,
And slaves of the Fœnerator?

And you, young Cambridge gownsmen,
Distrust the genial cad
When out he totes his sheaf of notes,
Which for sixty per cent. may be had;
Such helps over stiles are the way to the dogs,
And such lifts short cuts to the bad.

OUR NEW NOVEL.

CONFIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

OUR Readers will learn with pleasure that negotiations have been entered into with an Authoress of great repute, as the representative of a certain school of fiction, for the immediate production of a Novel in this Journal. The Editor, in pursuance of his usual course of plain-spoken and open dealing between himself and the Readers of this paper, wishes to put them in possession, at once, of the circumstances attending this new arrangement. For reasons which will be appreciated in the proper quarter, he gives to the Public the correspondence that has passed between the gifted Authoress and himself, in lieu of preface to the forthcoming work, which he believes will prove itself to be the Authoress's chef d'œuvre—unsurpassed by any work of fiction within the present century.

PREFATORY CORRESPONDENCE.

From the Editor to MISS RHODY DENDRON, Authoress of "Good-bye, Sweet Tart!" "Red as a Nose is She," "Not Slily, but Don't Tell," "Cometh Down like a Shower," &c., &c.

DEAR MADAM,

I HAVE not had the great pleasure of reading any of your charming Novels, but having heard from a great number of my fairest and liveliest friends that your works are "awfully good," I have determined upon asking you to give us something in your very best and most characteristic style. You understand, of course, the high moral tone which is required from all Contributors to this Journal, and I am certain that it will be your aim and object, as well as your greatest pride and truest pleasure, not only to adorn your tale, but also to point clearly and emphatically a first-rate and unexceptionable moral.

I remain, my dear Lady, yours, in most sincere admiration of your undoubted and acknowledged talents, THE EDITOR.

To the Editor from MISS RHODY DENDRON, Authoress of "Red as a Nose is She," "Not Slily, but Don't Tell," "Good-bye, Sweet Tart," "Cometh Down like a Shower," &c., &c.

DEAR SIR,

Do you object to tremendous Love interest? If not, I think I have the very thing for you. Yours truly,

R. D.

From the Editor to MISS R. D.

MY DEAR YOUNG LADY,

I NEVER object to "tremendous interest," even up to fifty per cent. Yet permit me to observe, as a matter of business, that, when the interest is extraordinary, the risk is proportionately large. You will take this remark as made from a humorous point of view, and will have too much uncommon sense to be in the least offended. In fact, I am sure that I may leave the question of "Love interest" to your own good taste, delicate feeling, and excellent judgment.

With most profound respect for your genius, and every confidence in the result of our arrangement,

I beg to remain, &c., &c. (as before).

From MISS R. D. to the Editor.

DEAR SIR,

I TAKE you at your word. You are willing to accept a high interest with proportionate risk. Of course I do not write for milk-sops, and I am sure that you would not wish either yourself or your readers to come under that designation. My object is to raise a rosy cloud of Love and maddening witchery round you, to make your veins throb, and your pulse beat with ecstasy,* as I guide you onward, with my enchanter's wand-pen, into the very presence of divine ambrosial loveliness. Those who listen to the voice of this Syren, must prepare their palates for goblets of the vein-tingling nectar of the Gods and Demigods. I do not profess myself to be a demure Hebe serving out flabby toast and wishy-washy tea to sleek divines and weak effeminate milksops. As to "pointing a moral," my dear Sir, depend upon me for that. I am proud to say that there is not one of my novels which has not been written with the highest possible aim. All teachers of morality have not one uniform plan of inculcating their lessons. If you have not already made yourself acquainted with my method, you should do so without delay. I consider the bargain concluded, and the novel shall forthwith be commenced in your pages.

Digitized by Google

I remain, my dear Sir, yours, &c., R. D.

P.S.—Do you really mean to say you've never read my Red as a Nose is She? You should.

From the Editor to MISS R. D.

DEAR MADAM,

No, no, we are not milksops. On the contrary, no man whose daily literary pabulum is the Revue des deux Mondes, MR. MATTHEW ARNOLD'S Objections, SCHLEGEL'S Philosophical History, GÜNTHER'S Problematika, and reviewing the latest Dysteleological arguments of Circulionist savans, with a cold bath every morning throughout the year, and the dumb-bells and leaping-bar to follow, can be much of a "milksop." The day is gone by for milksops. Give tapioca to the timid, steaks to the strong! Were there any "milksops" among our readers, I should request them to take their money back, as they would not find the food provided by this Journal of the "flabby toast" and "wishy-washy tea" description mentioned in your letter. I heartily agree with you, and, holding out the right hand of fellowship, I will order the agreement to be drawn out at once, and am yours strenuously and hardily, THE EDITOR.

P.S.—I couldn't get Red as a Nose at either MUDIE'S or SMITH'S. I suppose the run on it was enormous. Should like to read it. You might send me a presentation copy on toned paper.

From MISS R. D. to the Editor.

DEAR SIR,

YOUR letter is highly satisfactory. Now I understand you. As you say, "Tapioca for the Timid," so I may be permitted to add Rice for the Respectable! Venison for the Venturesome!! Beef for the Bold!!! Why did you not tell me at first the sort of thing you expected? I detest beating about the bush. But now you shall have your Novel. You want a real good thing—the pith and marrow of Red as a Nose is She, Good-bye, Sweet Tart, Not Slily, but don't Tell, Cometh Down Like a Shower, and the rest of my popular works, all distilled into one strong, clear jelly—a very Liebeg's Essence of a Novel! Good, my dear Sir, you shall have it. "Man wants but little here below, but wants that little strong."

Yours sincerely, R. D.

P.S.—"That Little—Strong!" wouldn't be a bad title. But I prefer either titles of popular songs or a bit of a proverb. I have had my eye on several song-titles, such as "Tommy, make room for your Uncle," which might be cut into "For Your Uncle;" also "Don't be Sorrowful, Darling," which could come out well as "Sorrowful Darling!" * * * Stay! I have just put my hand on what I am told is quite a catch phrase about Town now, and that will be half the battle of popularity. It is "There's another good Man gone Wrong." You can therefore announce my new Novel as

GONE WRONG!

And you can advertise the first Number for your Next.

* On showing this letter of the gifted Authoress to a confidential friend, whose advice we have hitherto found invaluable, he remarked, "Ahem!—'veins throbbing'—'pulse beating with ecstasy'—ah—um—if the Novel is to have this effect on you, don't you think it would be as well to keep a first-rate medical man on the premises?" We felt he was right, and acting on this suggestion, we intend to edit the forthcoming work under medical advice. With a Doctor and a Solicitor on the spot, we can't go very far wrong.—ED.

To the Public.—In consequence of a private communication, the Editor, in the interests of the Public, of the Publisher, of the Authoress, and of himself, has, with the advice of his Solicitor, inserted a clause in the agreement with MISS R. D. (in whom he has, of course, all the confidence consistent with ignorance of the gifted lady's previous writings), to the effect that, on occasion, he may, in his highly responsible capacity of Editor, insert a little explanatory note, or remark, wherever the text may appear to require it. To this the distinguished Authoress has, with a ladylike courtesy which does credit at once to her head and heart, replied, that, as her text will need no comment, she has no objection to the insertion of the above-mentioned clause, which stipulation the talented Lady goes on to observe, seems to please the Editor, and can do no sort of harm to the writer. On this amicable understanding, the Editor has the greatest possible pleasure in welcoming this rarely-qualified Writer as a contributor, who will widely extend her already large circle of ardent admirers.

A ZODIACAL CONGRESS.

A MEETING of the Signs of the Zodiac, in reference to the state of the weather, was recently held at the Mermaid Tavern.

As the PISCES (though "parents of sweetest sounds") are not famous for oratory, AQUARIUS was unanimously voted to the Chair.

The venerable but rather washed out Chairman remarked that, although his duty had ended in February, his successors had carried out his aqueous policy with real consistency, for which he heartily thanked them. He was proud to be able to say, in the words of HORACE,—

"Piscium et summâ genus hæsit ulmo,
Nota quæ sedes fuerat columbis."

PISCES wagged their tails in grateful response. There was no need to provide for them a special aquarium, as the room was under water.

ARIES rose to dissent from the Chairman's watery discourse. His favourite grass meadows were all overflowed. It was his chief duty to provide good mutton for the Lords of Creation, and that could not be done unless the sheep had wholesome grass to eat. Had it not been for the fun he had lately had—on salt water—thanks to the employment found him by the Iron Duke, he really hardly knew how he could have stood the late superfluity of fresh water vouchsafed by JUPITER PLUVIUS.

TAURUS followed on the same side. He had no personal disrespect to the Chairman, but he should like to see him cross his paddock with water-buckets. He should have an aërial voyage gratis, and see how he relished another element. He had quite enough to do on the Stock-Exchange, in keeping up his "Egyptians," without having to waste his time on a set of "Pumps!"

The GEMINI spoke together, and swore a little, but they were suddenly interrupted by

LEO, who, having kicked CANCER out of the way, roared his approval of the remarks of ARIES and TAURUS. Both men and lions wanted beef and mutton (sensation), and you couldn't grow either in wet weather. For his part, he was thankful that the Ministers had given him a permanent interest in the fine dry climate of Egypt, and the Canal he was most concerned in was one not of drainage, but—passage! (Sensation.)

LIBRA rose to deprecate political allusions. It was his object, and should be that of his brother and sister Signs, to hold the balance between Government and Opposition. "Open to all parties, influenced by none," should be the motto whether of houses, or Planets, who hung out Signs to the public! He hoped his friend AQUARIUS would not misconstrue him.

Here LIBRA was cut short by an unanimous call for

VIRGO, who remarked, in a musical voice, that, as she looked for garden-parties and pleasant hours on the river in that part of the year which was specially her own, she should take good care that strawberries and flirtations should not be spoilt by the extravagant folly of the Chairman and his clique. A great poet—ANACREON—had said:

"Nature to bulls gave horns,
To lions fierce-fang'd jaws"——

But to Woman (he sang)

"What 's Nature's boon?—'tis beauty—
More than a match for shields,
More than a match for spears!"

With such authority on her side, she had courage to defy what she must call the fishy conspiracy against the comfort of mankind. Aquariums were all very well, particularly with "covered" rinks attached to them; but to turn the world into an aquarium was a thing unendurable. The race of mortals should have a summer this year, if a lady had anything like the influence due to her sex with the Clerk of the Weather.

The speech was greeted by loud cheers, led by LEO and TAURUS, and the meeting broke up without a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Digitized by Google

A PROTECTOR.

Frustrated Garotter (to his Pal). "BLESSED IF A COVE DIDN'T OUGHT TO GET SIX MONTHS FOR KEEPIN' A DORG LIKE THAT!"

MARY-ANNER ON THE RAMPAGE.

"I see before me say two thousand honest, virtuous, industrious young women, working hard and half starved; and I see before me at least twenty thousand other women holding out plenty in both hands, and that plenty rejected with scorn by young women of very little merit, or, if not rejected, accepted only under vexatious and galling conditions imposed by the persons to be benefited. . . The way the modest householder is ground down by these young ladies is a grievance too large to be dealt with under this head, and will probably lead to a Masters' and Mistresses' League. . . . Why do they (the Sempstresses) sit hungry to the dullest of all labour, and hold aloof from domestic service, at a time when Ladies born are beginning to recognise how much better off is the rich housemaid than the poor Lady? . . . They think a female servant has no 'liberty,' and that her principal remuneration is her 'wages.' . . Her wages are as a drop in the ocean of her remuneration. . . . In the place where she pigged with her relations, she often had a bit of bacon for dinner and a red herring for supper. In the palace of cleanliness and comfort she is promoted to she gets at least four meals a day, and butcher's meat at two of them. . . The wages of her class have been raised, when they ought to have been lowered."—MR. CHARLES READE'S Letter, "Starvation refusing Plenty," in the Daily Telegraph.

DEAR SUSAN JANE,
I takes my pen, I may say, con amory,
Just to relieve my mind a bit. Which a more wicked story
Than that there MR. READE, as writes his rubbidge to the Telly,
I never see. And that, as JOHN would say, 's the caseis belly!

Of course you 've read his letter, SUE. A nasty, spiteful—there, I
Should like to comb his wool a bit, and so says JOHN and SAIRY.
Which what domestic Ladies, SUE, possessed of sense and sperrit,
Likes being called "young women," and "of very little merit"?

A lot he knows about it, I dessay, as talks of Mississes
Being ground down by Servants. He should know what groans and hisses is,
If the slandered twenty thousand in his presence might but muster;
I'd like to tackle him alone, armed with my tongue—and duster!

He seems to think us Servants' lives is regular paradises—
"Where ignerance and cetrer." But, oh lor! my dander rises
When he says our wages is too high, and reckons up our perkses.
A Screw, as ought to go and herd with Ottingtots or Turkses!

And then his nasty insults, SUE! Young Ladies in our stations
Don't feed on no red herrings when we "pigs with our relations"—
O drat his imperence!—which, SUE, it well to you beknown is,
My folks would rather starve than stoop a step below polonies!

"Trampling too hard on Mississes"? I wish he 'd got a sample
Of Stuckup Naggers at his heels. I guess he 'd want to trample!
Which if us Servants didn't show a sperrit, lawkamussy,
Tain't us would play that little game, but rather wisey wussy!

And as to talk of cutting down our liberty and wages—
Well, there—it ain't no use, I s'pose, to fly into sech rages!
I 've spilt the ink, and Missis is that horridly pertikler!
But let who will knock under, SUE, I keeps my perpendikler.

He talks about a league among the Mississes. O drat it!
They 'd better try it on, they had! I'd like to see 'em at it!
I proudly hopes there 's none on us, from Brixton to Belgravy,
As wouldn't rally to the flag; no not the veriest slavey!

And as to them there Sempstresses he 'd shove into our cribses—
Walker! I says. The letter, SUE, 's all foolishness and fibses.
Just like that "Lady Helpses" dodge! Would READE, for all his bawling,
Relish two thousand Hammy Toors pitchforked into his calling?

He says we holds our heads too high. I guess we 'll hold 'em higher.
It 's time we pulled together, SUE. But there! that 's MISS MARIAR
A pulling of her bell like mad, as is her usual manner—
And so no more at present from your much-riled

MARY-ANNER.

The Sweets of Savage Life.

PLINY tells us that, among the ancient cannibals of Ethiopia, black pudding was a favourite dish at all state dinners. In default of other sweets, they beat their wives into a jelly, or made mince-meat of their enemies. As regards one dish of this appetising menu ancient Ethiopia may boast a rival in our modern Black Country.

Digitized by Google

HER BEST TITLE—"QUEEN OF THE EAST."

"MY DARLING, I HOPE YOU WILL BE BETTER NOW!"

[The New Wing of the London Hospital, given by the Grocers' Company, was opened by Her Majesty in person, March 7th, 1876.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

MERE METAPHOR.

Dialogue on a Debate.

SOME writers say that an English public ship, wherever she goes, is part of the English soil. . . . I must beg leave to doubt the accuracy of that proposition. I believe it to be a metaphor, and a metaphor eminently calculated to mislead." — LORD CAIRNS on the Slave Circular.

"There is no such thing as a Slave by the law of England." — LORD HOLT, as quoted by LORD COLERIDGE.

Jack (looking up from his Newspaper).
What 's a "metafore," Mate?
Bill (scratching his head). Well, I can't rightly say;
But it 's poetry-lingo for somethin' or other;
A sort of a figger o' speech, anyway,
As seems to say one thing and means quite another.
Jack. Hang sich figgers o' speech then! A false figger-head
To a sneaking piratical craft isn't wuss!
Bill. Don't know as you 're werry far out when all 's said;
But if land coves will use 'em, 'taint nothin' to us.
Jack. Ain't so sure about that! Here 's a Parlyment chap—
Their top-sawyer Lawyer, I take it—as says
That we Jacks has been sniffin' this "Metafore" trap,
And is like to be caught in it one o' these days.
Bill. How 's that, JACK?
Jack. D'ye see, we have had an idee
As our deck is a bit like o' free British soil.
But this chap says, says he, that 's pure fiddledeedee—
Mere misleadin' "metafore"!
Bill. Pity to spoil
A straightforrard rule with such stuff, JACK, say I.
Which, wot with their Cirkylers, chatter and patter,
We 're more in a fog than the Wanguard—'cos wy,
We 've got no chart to steer by—and that 's what 's the matter!
Jack (ruminating).
A "metafore," eh BILL! That sticks in my gizzard,
Which how many more such false signals is flying
Who knows? An A B ain't exactly a-wizard;
I can't see my way, BILL, it 's no use a trying.
All that 'bout BRITANYER a rulin' the waves,
"Hearts of Oak," and the "Cherub as sits up aloft,"
With the Union Jack as can't cover no slaves,
Is metafore, p'raps!
Bill (who has been taking a spell at the Paper).
Avast jawing, JACK! Soft!
Here 's another bigwig—and a Lawyer, by Jingo!—
Says there ain't no such thing as a Slave, by the law Of Old England!
Jack. Ay, ay! that 's the right sort o' lingo.
Let 'em stick to that there, and what need o' much jaw?
What call for to reckernise any sich sham
As the "rights" of a rogue in the thing he has stole?—
For to talk about buying, BILL, 's only a flam,
When the article 's contryband,—sich as a Soul!
Bill. Jest so, JACK. My eyes! if we 've got for to play
The part o' Perlice to 'scaped Niggers and such,
Why, don't let us have no more "metafores," pray,
'Cos they only means bounce when they 're put to the touch.
Jack (pointing to Paper). Here 's lots o' palaver: I don't rightly see
What the plague they are driving at. When they have done,
I hope that plain fellows, like you, BILL, and me,
May be able to spell out our duty. For one
I goes for the faith of the true-blue old school,
That a man-o'-war's deck 's like a bit o' free land;
But if that 's only Metafore—let 's have the rule
Put in plain English speech as we 'll all understand.

THE ANGEL IN THE HOUSE.

(An Apostrophe to DR. JOHNSON.)

MARRIED life is indeed a sad affair when all the conversation between the partners is "whether the mutton shall be boiled or roast, and probably a dispute about that." But in so saying, DR. JOHNSON, you did not mean to countenance a foolish disesteem of eating, and to censure culinary discussion. No, Sir—not you. A conference—no altercation—between husband and wife as to what shall be done with the mutton or the beef—question not confined to the alternative of boiling or roasting, but extending to the possibility of frying, stewing, mincing, hashing, making a vol-au-vent of it, or a curry, or bubble-and-squeak—this, Sir, surely you would consider an intellectual talk on a practical branch of the most useful knowledge. You were never the man to disparage gastronomy, or gastrology either; you, Sir, who declared that "the man who would not take care of his belly would hardly take care of anything else."

Sir, an interesting letter in the Hour—a Tory, or, as we now say, a Conservative paper, mind—on "Teachers of Local Cookery Schools," signed "SPES," announces that at Darlington, Stockport, Middlesborough, and other places in the North, some sensible persons are actively endeavouring to institute local schools of Cookery. You will doubtless approve the suggestion of "SPES" that it is not only girls in elementary schools, but girls in "middle schools"—that is to say, School-board schools for general teaching—who require instruction in the art of preparing food:—

"A local school should provide for teaching both classes; and MR. BUCKMASTER, at one of the meetings to which we have referred, says:—'A local school should not exist for the instruction of children of the working classes only, but the daughters of the middle and upper classes, and, indeed, any class wishing for the instruction. It is the want of this knowledge which makes mistresses dependent on their servants.'"

Why, Sir, might you not have said all this yourself? and did you not, in fact, very often say the like in the course of your valuable life? You know the concise Alderman who, being a man of more wisdom than eloquence, exclaimed on an occasion, "I say 'ditto' to MR. BURKE!" Sir, you are eloquent, otherwise you likewise might simply say "ditto" to what follows:—

"The school must be taught by a person who had not only passed the technical and practical examinations at South Kensington, but who was able to impart her knowledge to others in a pleasing and interesting manner. Such a teacher should be received and treated as a Lady, supposing her to be, as she ought to be, a person of education and refinement, with whom no Lady ought to be ashamed to associate. You can never elevate or improve the Art of Cookery by despising the persons engaged in teaching it."

Them, Sir—pardon the vernacularism—them 's your sentiments. That is, if BOZZY has enabled us to divine them. You must know that the MR. BUCKMASTER referred to by "SPES," is a propagandist of practical gastronomy, an expert and able philosopher, who goes about doing good by lecturing on culinary science and art. You perceive that a principal object of BUCKMASTER's labours is to train ladies to be, so to speak, Buckmistresses—and what better right-hand, I ask you, for a Materfamilias? Mistress-cooks are rare. A chef is ex vi termini, always a man. Master minds in cookery, as in poetry, painting, and music, are specifically—genderically may we say—masculine. Is cookery, then, one of the High Arts? Perhaps; but until Ladies are taught that art as well as those others, we cannot know that its highest range is above their powers. Masculine ideas may be necessary for composing a symphony, but do you not think due precept and practice should suffice to enable any thinking woman to compose a salmi? Many women have an aptitude for inventive cookery, as in the case of a Lady who did herself the injustice of saying that she had made some mock-turtle out of her own head. Surely, Sir, this aptitude has only to be duly cultivated to qualify any Lady endowed with it for appointments at Clubs and Hotels now entirely engrossed by the male sex, or to preside over the kitchen as well as at the table of a rational husband, one who, having known how to appreciate a real treasure, has insured himself an antepast of your Elysian and ambrosial beatitude, Sir, in the good things provided for him at home, by the truly placens uxor, an educated woman whose education has rendered her, as a thorough Cook, indeed an "Angel in the House."

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.—MR. WESTON, who has walked, and was still walking when we last heard of him, so hard against Time, declares he is not in the least sensible to the shock of the collision. Will he never stop? It really looks like it.

Digitized by Google

'RINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES—"

Digitized by Google

SWEET SIMPLICITY.

Visitor. "JANE, HAS YOUR MISTRESS GOT A BOOT-JACK?"
Maid-of-all-Work. "NO, SIR; PLEASE, SIR, I CLEAN ALL THE BOOTS, SIR!"

THE ANTI-VIVISECTION MOVEMENT.

A MEETING of lower Animals to claim participation in any measure which may be framed to regulate the practice of Vivisection, was held last evening at the Æsopian Hall. A Pig was unanimously voted into the Chair.

The Pig complained that Pigs were subjected to death by most unpleasant Vivisection. An incision was made through the Pig's neck into a large vein, and he was bled to death. He demanded that porcine Vivisection should be performed under chloroform. Then he should not mind. A Pig must die somehow; and if under an anæsthetic, after a good meal, he would as soon die as sleep.

The Eel wanted to know how much longer he was going to be skinned alive. He wished to give the most decided contradiction to the statement that Eels were used to it. He spoke on behalf of Fishes in general. It was as bad as any Vivisection to be hooked on to a night-line, and remain so for hours.

The Earthworm had something to say to that. His own lot was still worse; and the Eel might remember that he owed all he got to biting at worms.

The Eel replied that, as for that, it was only putting worms out of their misery.

The Earthworm would submit that fishing with ground-bait should be forbidden, and gardeners obliged to be careful in digging not to cut worms in two.

The Lobster wanted to know if the proposed Vivisection Bill would contain any provision to protect him from liability to be boiled alive.

The Domestic Pigeon contended that being torn with shot which did not at once kill a bird, amounted to Vivisection of the very worst kind, for it had not the excuse of shooting wild creatures for food, nor that of any scientific or other useful object whatever.

The Sheep concurred with all that had fallen from the President the Pig. He wished to know if mutton would be any the worse for being made under laughing-gas?

The Calf desired to extend the observations of the last speaker to veal. It was cruel stinginess of butchers to grudge a poor animal a little nitrous oxide.

The Frog had been represented by some physiologists as a creature of what they called "low organisation." They tried to make out that Vivisection did not hurt him. He knew best, and he begged to differ from them.

The Beetle said he had SHAKSPEARE'S authority for the fact that when trodden to death he suffered as much as Gog or Magog would. People should mind how they walked; and he had quite as much right to protection as the Frog.

The Flea also argued that no relation whatever existed between size and suffering. He was liable to be cracked without the slightest compunction. If cracked at all, why not under chloroform? He claimed the same consideration as his biggers.

Several Animals here rose at once, and said that Legislation must draw the line somewhere. An uproar of inarticulate noises ensued, and the Meeting broke up in confusion.

THE WRONGS OF OUR NATIVES.

(A Moan from the Molluscs of Milton.)

"NATURALISATION OF ALIENS.—Some revelations which are calculated to surprise the oyster-eating community were made yesterday in a case which came before MR. RECORDER WEST at the Manchester Quarter Sessions, involving a charge of theft against one CHARLES SMITH, employed as oysterman at 'The Manchester (Limited)' restaurant below the Royal Exchange. On the 18th of January he got £4 from the cashier to buy oysters, but absconded with the money. On his apprehension a month later at Harrogate he denied the theft, and said he had left the place because he was disgusted at having to supply Dutch oysters as natives. The cashier and the manager of the restaurant admitted, under cross-examination by the prisoner's counsel, MR. COTTINGHAM, that it was the practice to put Dutch oysters into native shells, and sell them under the pretence that they were native oysters. The manager stated he was the responsible person, and 'kept it quiet.' It was done at the suggestion of the prisoner. The prisoner was found guilty, and was sent to gaol for six months.'"

DEAR PUNCH,
We gape with indignation
At this appalling revelation!
Crossing in love we hold a trifle,
But this stirs wrath too strong to stifle.
We 've seen our race, by lovers' treason,
O'erdredged, and swallowed out of season;
We 've borne the sauce of vulgar rivals,
Though—thank our strength—we 're still survivals—
But, by our beards, this is too much—
To be translated to Low Dutch!
What 's six months for this worst of "sells,"
That serves up Dutch in Natives' shells?
How could they hope to "keep it quiet,"
While England, like Worms, has a diet?
Manchester of its taste cracks much;
But fancy DANDO done by Dutch!
What is electoral personation
To this blow at our reputation?
Aliens pretend to Native worth!
Then what is name or fame on earth?
Much it concerns the whole community
Such a crime pass not with impunity.
Dear we may be, but we 're delicious;
And less we 'd fetch if less you 'd fish us.
Seasons too should share blame for that!
How can we help short falls of "spat"?
But Natives' character should stand—
Above all, in their native land—
At whate'er cost they show your dish on,
Like CÆSAR'S wife, above suspicion!
Sure this worst form of personation
Asks the strong hand of legislation.
If they who personate electors
Have statutes, sentences, detectors,
What Act would be too bad for such men
As dare for Natives pass off Dutchmen?
And though I thank RECORDER WEST,
The muse of MILTON in my breast
Swells into protest at the thought
That such crime, to conviction brought,
But dooms the wretch to six months' prison
Who gives the Dutchman what 's not his'n,
But mine, the advantage of the favour
I owe to my unrivalled flavour!
Then lay, O Punch, thy potent lash
On him that, for vile greed of cash,
The worse for better oyster sells,
And plants intruders in our shells—
What doom 's too bad for the low caitiffs
Who pass off Dutch for
Your own,
NATIVES!

Digitized by Google

EASIER SAID THAN DONE.

Draper's Shopman (Melbourne, Victoria). "WHAT DO YOU WANT, MY MAN?"

Successful Gold-Digger (who has been admiring the Customer seated near him). "JIST YOU RIG OUT MY MISSUS LIKE THAT 'ERE YOUNG 'OOMAN!!"

THE SLEEPY HOLLOW OF SCIENCE.

A LECTURE on "The Paraffins and their Alcohols" was given the other Friday evening by PROFESSOR ODLING, in the Theatre of the Royal Institution.

A lecture by a clever man on combustible matters, illustrated by experiments, is peculiarly interesting to a popular audience. The remark, therefore, below quoted from a report of PROFESSOR ODLING's discourse, may to some minds appear unaccountable, if not a joke at the Professor's expense. Of paraffins the Lecturer had said:—

"The lightest and most volatile varieties constitute benzoline, a liquid of many uses in the arts, but exceedingly dangerous for lamps."

His reporter continues:—

"PROFESSOR ODLING placed a minute quantity on some cotton wool in a jar of oxygen, allowed a few seconds for it to diffuse itself, and then applied a match. A sharp, short, and very loud report resulted, the effect of which was peculiarly observable on those of the audience who were unable to struggle against the demand for an after-dinner doze."

Nobody, however, who has ever experienced a crowded theatre of an evening at the Royal Institution will make the mistake of supposing that PROFESSOR ODLING's observations on paraffin had sent a good many of his hearers to sleep. The demand for an after-dinner doze on their parts was created not by scientific information, but by carbonic acid gas, with which the atmosphere in the Theatre of the Royal Institution is always loaded when full of people whose lungs, by a law of nature, exhale that narcotic. What we learn from their somnolence is not that PROFESSOR ODLING lectured in a somniferous style, but that the Royal Institution remains unventilated, although its Managers have had pointed out to them, what it is strange they should need to be told, that their Theatre, a Theatre of Science in general, and Physiology and Chemistry in particular, whenever crammed, is crammed, literally, to suffocation.

MY ONLY "CROSSED CHECKS."—My own Shepherd's-plaid Trousers.

GAMGEE TO CELIA.

(See the Accounts of the Professor's Wonderful "Glaciarium," or Real-Ice-Rink.)

RINK with me upon Nature's ice,
And I'll match hers with mine:
Out of your asphaltes, so cracked up,
'Tis I will take the shine!
I make an ice that's more than nice—
Ethereal, divine!
And they in Rinks that would invest,
Had best buy into mine!

The Great Divide.

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN has chosen a subject for his new book which will deeply interest all British matrons. Of course the object of The Great Divide is to teach economy in the use of coals and firewood. His Lordship would, however, do well to attend a Spelling Bee, and he will then be able to announce his next edition under its correct heading, with the "e" in the right place, and an explanatory second title, i.e., The Grate Divide; or, How to Save Half your Fuel. A Narrative of Mi-grating into the Hearthstone Country during the Last Three Winters. But perhaps this would be more suitable to Lord Dundreary than LORD DUNRAVEN. Or, why not collaborate?

Baring and Over-bearing.

THAT FLOWER'S crusade has not been vain,
By a late change is shown:
Ere he'll brook SALISBURY'S bearing-rein,
NORTHBROOK gives up his own!

A DISH RE-CHRISTENED.—For Cabinet Pudding, read Sues Dumpling.

Digitized by Google

SACRILEGE.

Parish-Clerk's Wife. "LET YOU INTO THE CHURCH, TO DRAW A INTERIOR! I DU'STN'T DO IT, MISS. THERE WAS A PARTY THERE LAST YEAR, AND DO YOU KNOW THEY LEFT A 'ORRID DISSENTIN' TRAC' IN THE RECTOR'S PEW! EVER SINCE THAT IT'S AGAINST ORDERS!"

OUR COUPLE OF CRAZES.

THE thoughtful Sage, who notes each "rage"
Prevailing 'mongst his kind,
Regards with amaze the present craze
Of what 's called the public mind,
On a single fad the world run mad
'Tis no new thing to see;
But now 'tis insane upon fancies twain—
The Rink and the Spelling Bee.

Like droves and herds, and flocks of birds,
Like oxen, sheep, and swine,
And rooks and daws, whom an instinct draws
Together, how folks combine,
With one consent on a purpose bent,
For no reason the wise can see,
With a common crush as in crowds they rush
To the Rink and the Spelling Bee!

The human swarm will sometimes form
Intent on perilous ends;
But if spelling and skates have turned your pates,
That is all the harm, dear friends.
You indulge no vice on the mimic ice,
Or in mild orthographiè,
And no naughtiness shames the popular games
Of the Rink and the Spelling Bee.

Our William's Last.

FANCY what the Farmers will say to MR. GLADSTONE'S late declaration that he derived more lively and unmixed satisfaction "from the increase of the agricultural labourer's wages" than from "any of the economical changes he had lived to witness!" "Increase o' labourer's wiges! Yah! Call that there a economical change? Purty economy for we Farmers! There be'n't many as 'ood practus the 'conomy o' spendun moor money nor they could help. What's the differ'nce, at that rate, 'tween economy and ixtravagance?" In these, or similar observations, it may be feared that too many agricultural gentlemen will criticise the epithet applied in its philosophical sense by WILLIAM to increase of wages.

ADVICE TO ASPIRANTS.—If you go in for a Spelling Bee, and are brought down at the first shot, mind not to be waspish.

CLUBS ARE TRUMPS.

NEW Clubs are rising almost as rapidly as Rinks and faster than mushrooms. An unsophisticated provincial may perhaps wonder what denomination of mankind remains to be catered for. Mr. Punch can answer his mute amazement with the following list of proposed Clubs:—

"The Janus." Political. For unsuccessful Candidates in Parliamentary Elections, who are not quite decided as to what line they may adopt when they next offer themselves to the Nation.

"The Brillantine." Social. For the younger members of the highest Society, who find their partings not accurately defined at TRUEFITT'S or DOUGLAS'S. A staff of German shavers and French hairdressers are engaged.

"The Wag and Lavish." Military. For those Gentlemen who, having strong military tastes, are, from failure in obtaining commissions in the Army, ineligible for election at the Army and Navy, Junior ditto, United Service, Junior idem, Naval and Military, Horse and Foot, Star and Garter, and other Clubs. No Servant of this Club will address any Member otherwise than "Captain."

"The Tarbrush." Consolation. For Gentlemen who have been blackballed at all other Clubs. Five blackballs insure admittance.

"The Ham-and-Eggs." Festive. Many Gentlemen having complained that in no London Club can they get a decent early breakfast after leaving the Hyde Green whist-table at six o'clock in the morning, this Club will be considered positively a sine quâ non for men about Town, and breakfasts, at a moment's notice, may be obtained here between 5 and 10 A.M. during the Season.

"The Worms." Ditto. A Club which has long been wanted. Where early birds, turned out of other Clubs by their absurd rules and regulations, may find a snack and a pack of cards after 4 A.M.

"The Pavement." Good intentional. Only Gentlemen are eligible who have sworn off plunging, whist, and écarté, and have made vows to drink nothing stronger than gingerbeer. Spillikins the only game allowed in the Club. Tea at any hour up till twelve at night.

"The Alexandrine." Literary. It has long been a subject of astonishment in literary circles that no Club has been started to meet the requirements of Poets—a class now increasing every day. This Club is opened to benefit the numerous disciples of Parnassus who may not find their æsthetical tastes appreciated by Club men of other denominations. A Listener of long standing and great judgment will be kept on the establishment. Members may introduce Publishers as visitors at all hours. Hair-brushes not allowed.

"The Sable Stockings." Exclusive. Got up by Gentlemen who have found it expedient to retire from the Hyde Green, Bézique, Brag, and other card-playing réunions. Members are allowed to bring their own packs, bones, and boxes.

Other Clubhouses too numerous to mention are in course of con- and obstruction, with power to add to their number.

Two Birds with One Stone.

MR. PUNCH,

SIR,—I'd like to know why we're having all this botheration about the addition to the Royal Title? Sure HER MAJESTY (long life to her!) can do what she plases. It is not as if there wasn't a new style convenient, and one that would flatther more than the Indies.

See here, Sir. Don't we all know the Emerald Isle is the finest jool in the British Crown, and why wouldn't the QUEEN be ownin' it? Sure, thin, isn't here an iligant title which would be aiqually nate and appropriate for Ireland as for India—and that's the Paddy Shah?

Should the Royal Titles Bill pass its Third Reading in the Commons, LORD BROWNE AND ORANMORE might take the matter in hand, when the Act reaches the Upper House.

Allow me, Sir, to sign myself

A PAT AND A PATRIOT.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

E may take comfort from LORD CARNARVON'S assurance (Lords, Monday, March 13) that, if the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, when Colonial Secretary, did despotically abrogate the Constitution of Heligoland, Heligoland has since got on ever so much better for the loss of her Constitution. She no longer shares the discredit of Monaco, the Governor having done what her Constitutional Council would not—put down her gaming-tables. A desultory talk on Iron-clads, led off by LORD DUNSANY. Why is it that on Naval Construction everybody thinks himself able to advise the Government? What with Naval Lords, Naval Construction Board, Professional Advisers, Amateur Critics of the Royal Navy, the Merchant Service, and all the Yacht Clubs, the Admiralty ought surely to be able to command the best advice. Punch never reads a Parliamentary discussion on the subject of ships and ship-building, and what the Admiralty ought to be and to do, but the moral of ÆSOP'S Old Man and his Ass is borne in strong on his mind.

(Commons.)—Nor was the thought of that pregnant apologue ever more present than to-night, when, after MR. BENTINCK'S Resolution (that the First Lord of the Admiralty should be a Naval Officer) had been curtly, and with general consent, disposed of by 261 to 18, MR. DISRAELI having first elaborately smothered Big Ben under Blue Books, MR. REED applied his private and peculiar measuring rod to our iron-clad sea-going Navy, and by excluding first one class of ships as too long, and another as too short, and a third as too fast, and a fourth as too slow, or for some equally sufficient reason, brought down our fighting fleet to a poor dozen, and hence concluded, to his own satisfaction, at least, that France, joined with either Germany, Russia, Austria, Turkey, or Italy would be more than a match for Great Britain. Even Germany, Russia, and Austria—land-lubbers our JACKS have been accustomed to think the smallest beer of—together were stronger on the Ocean than poor BRITANNIA, ex-Queen of the Sea! Our rule of the waves, in fact, according to REED, is a lapsed legacy of the past, and an idle dream of the future, unless we lean on our REED as we ought, and go on as he would have us, building more, and still more, Iron-clads of the kind he fancies. "Vous êtes orfèvre, Maître Josse!" You are an iron-clad-ship-constructor, MR. REED. Not only do you believe in nothing but Iron-clads; but your faith in Iron-clads is apparently confined to those of MR. REED'S building. Verbum sap.

Till somebody will satisfy Mr. Punch that there is a vital distinction between land-fighting and sea-fighting, he must continue to ask why the experience of armour on shore is so utterly inapplicable to the future of armour at sea? Why, if the Knight's steel-coat was thickened and complicated till it fairly swamped the man inside, growing, at last, too heavy for any horse to carry, and too cumbrous for any strength to wear, and wield weapons in, should not a similar danger be apprehended from thickening the armour-plates of our men-of-war? So far from feeling with REED, Punch must own to deriving comfort from MR. WARD HUNT'S assurance that for the present he means to confine the new ship-building work of the year to *un*armoured vessels. We want eighty-four of these, it seems, for the regular reliefs, and have only eighty forthcoming; so MR. HUNT has already made contracts for six gunboats and two sloops, without waiting for leave of Parliament, and proposes to contract for twelve more gunboats, six corvettes, three sloops, and four torpedo-vessels—in all 4,000 tons of new unarmoured craft to 5,200 of armoured ships now building under contracts of former years. Altogether, if MR. HUNT asks for £11,400,000 of Navy Estimates, he shows us value received for it. And, as earnest of his performance in the year to come, he informs us he has built up to within 450 tons of his programme in the year gone by. If Punch could only, like the Iron Duke, sink the Vanguard, he would say, "Well done, WARD HUNT!" He not only spoke to the point, if clumsily, on Monday, but showed a good tale of work done in the last twelve months. Altogether, spite of the Vanguard, &c., &c., &c., Punch feels more like trusting WARD HUNT than leaning on E. J. REED. "Nothing like leather!" may be a natural cry for

Digitized by Google

ON HER DIGNITY.

Cook (at the Registry Office). "'AVIN' NEVER LIVED WITH ANY BUT 'IGH FAM'LIES, 'SHOULD WISH TO KNOW IF THE PARTY KEEPS THEIR CARRIAGE,—MEN-SUVVANTS IN THE 'OUSE,—MOVES IN GOOD SOCIETY——"

Mistress of the Office (shortly). "THE LADY HAS BEEN PRESENTED AT COURT, IF THAT WILL SUIT YOU!"

Cook (condescendingly). "THANKS. THEN I THINK I'LL CALL UPON HER!!"

dealers in skins, but it does not beget confidence in the article; and "Nothing like armour-plates!" works the same way. Punch can't, for the life of him, help putting more trust in hearts of oak than in plates of iron, and in big guns than big ships.

Tuesday (Lords).—"Quis tulerit Gracchos de seditione querentes?" Fancy LORD HALIFAX and the DUKE OF ARGYLL—two of the most aggravatingest Indian Secretaries that ever nagged a Governor-General and his Supreme Council to tearing of hair and gnashing of teeth—united to wig the MARQUIS OF SALISBURY for dictation to LORD NORTHBROOK, because he preferred other tariff reforms to the remission of the 5 per cent. import duty on cotton goods! That the Secretary of State for India must have some say in Indian Government, is admitted. It needed no J. S. MILL to come from the grave to tell us THAT. That, with the telegraph at his elbow to say his say through, the Secretary of State is likely to say it more promptly and peremptorily than always pleases a Governor-General, is not surprising. Perhaps, in the instance specially complained of by LORD HALIFAX, LORD NORTHBROOK may have been right, and the MARQUIS OF SALISBURY wrong. Doctors differ. But surely it is rather unreasonable to complain of a Secretary of State suggesting that it might be more convenient if important acts of Indian legislation were submitted to him, as a rule, for approval, before they are passed in Council, rather than for veto after passing. Altogether, in the night's debate LORD SALISBURY seemed to Mr. Punch to have decidedly the best of it—whatever he may have had in his difference with LORD NORTHBROOK.

(Commons.)—MR. CLARE READE enjoyed that pleasantest and proudest of all positions—that of the martyr who can point to the conversion of his persecutors to the faith he has suffered for. He resigned Office because the Privy Council would not enforce uniform regulations for the slaughter of diseased cattle in Ireland and England, and lo the Privy Council have agreed, as LORD SANDON now announces to the House, to uniformity of regulation in the two countries!

As MR. READE'S case was unanswerable, his triumph is complete; and he has fairly earned the handsome testimonial which his friends the tenant-farmers have subscribed to present him with.

He remarked significantly, in closing the debate, that all the changes made by the Privy Council had been made since his resignation in November. He has earned his little crow.

The Government has lost more in MR. READE than MR. READE in his berth under the Government.

Wednesday.—A wonder!—the Scotch Members divided among themselves, over MR. M'CLAREN'S Bill for the Abolition of Church-rates in Scotland. As the organs of Scotland's collective wisdom always manage to agree among themselves when the object in view is clearly and demonstrably good, we conclude that MR. M'CLAREN'S Bill was not of this kind; and that it was rejected by 210 to 155 for good and sufficient reasons.

MR. EGERTON'S Bill for putting parishes into "mission" whose parochial "black shepherds" neglect their pastoral charge, was talked out.

Punch is rather at a loss whether to condole with MR. EGERTON, or to rejoice for JOHN BULL that another Clerical bone of contention is not to be added to the heap already collected; but he is disposed to think that the measure might have done good in some cases, and that some of the black shepherds it aimed at might be the better for its rod being hung up over their irreverend heads.

Thursday (Lords).—The LORD CHANCELLOR'S Bill for lopping the too luxuriant branches of the Irish Judicature. The twenty-three judges are to be cut down to twenty.

Et tu, Brute! Then die, Irish Conservatism!

The changes suggested seem called for. But let us hear what Ireland—above all, the Irish Bar—may have to say to them, and then cut away, CAIRNS!

(Commons.)—Second Reading of the Royal Titles Bill. The Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition gave voice to the general feeling in his Amendment that "it is inexpedient to impair the ancient and Royal dignity of the Crown by the assumption of the style and title of 'Empress.'" But MR. DISRAELI persevered, in spite of argument in the House and feeling out-of-doors; and his followers stood staunchly to him, and gave him a majority of 105—in a full house—305 to 200.

Digitized by Google

Is the objection really a party move, or a gross figment? Is Punch right in thinking that—party apart—the more JOHN BULL thinks over the proposed title, the less he likes it? And that whereas, at first, J. B., like Mr. P. himself, though on the whole rather for Queen than Empress, had no very strong feeling in the matter, he now very decidedly would rather the QUEEN did not weight the ancient and royal style, under which we love and honour her, with a new and unfamiliar title, of doubtful antecedents and objectionable associations. So far as Mr. P. can feel JOHN BULL's pulse, that is the tune it beats to. For his own part, he must admit that of the two D. G.'s he prefers the old one—"Victoria Dei Gratiâ Angliæ Regina," to "Victoria Disraeli Gratiâ Indiæ Imperatrix."

Friday (Lords).—Crossed Cheques Bill passed. May all who have had crosses and checks in life henceforth find them coupled in the pleasant guise of crossed cheques.

Bill authorising Pensions to three Members of the Council of India. LORD SALISBURY admits that, if he had his way, he would have Members of the Council appointed for life, leaving it to themselves to retire and draw their pensions when they felt no longer fit for service. That would be the handsomest arrangement in the case of such men as deserve to fill seats in the Council, and so give the last of their lives to the public service. But what would MR. RYLANDS say to it?

(Commons).—Sharp attack on MR. SCUDAMORE. All his figures, in connection with the purchase of the Telegraphs, called over the coals—his estimates of cost contrasted with actual payments—those of revenue with actual returns, and general cawing of the croakers over what they are delighted to call the failure of a great experiment. They crow best who crow last. MR. SCUDAMORE, and the Purchase of the Telegraphs—can both wait for time to justify them. En attendant, LORD JOHN MANNERS said what he could in anticipation of time. So Manners, ye cavillers, and croakers! Be of good cheer, SCUDAMORE!

MR. MELDON on the insufficient salaries of Irish National School Teachers. On this one point, and only this, all who wish well to Ireland are of one mind. Whether out of voluntary or compulsory rates, imperial taxes, or school pence, the salaries of Irish National School Teachers have got to be raised. The Government seems to feel it; so Punch hopes he may live to see it.

"LINKS WITH THE PAST."

To the Editor of Punch.

SIR,

I BELONG to a singularly long-lived race. My great grandfather lived to be ninety-seven, my grandfather was an unquestioned centenarian, my father would have been able to claim the same distinction if gout had not carried him off somewhat prematurely, and I myself am now in my ninety-second year—writing, as I think you will admit, an extraordinary hand for one so far advanced in life. I cannot remember my great-grandfather, but the family tradition has never wavered that he was an eye-witness to SIR WALTER RALEIGH laying down his cloak in the mud for QUEEN ELIZABETH to step upon. My grandfather, whom I am said strongly to resemble, distinctly recollected the wart on OLIVER CROMWELL's face, and had often escaped from his nurse's charge to see CHARLES THE SECOND feeding the ducks in St. James's Park. I think the event which had left the deepest impression on my father's mind was his being hoisted on the shoulders of "BEN," the old family coachman, to admire the illuminations for the Battle of Blenheim.

Here, then, you have only four generations from ELIZABETH to VICTORIA. I imagine it would be difficult, if not absolutely impossible, to find any other living person who can boast of such extraordinary links with the past as these.

Your obedient Servant, NESTOR.

MY DEAR MR. PUNCH,

I WOULD rather not mention my age, but will leave you to conjecture the year in which I was inoculated, when I tell you that I have a perfect recollection of GEORGE THE THIRD applauding MRS. SIDDONS, at Drury Lane Theatre, in the character of Lady Teazle, and saying, in a loud voice, "Very good, very good, very good!"

But I am not writing to you to gossip about my own reminiscences, but rather to inform you that my mother's sisters (AUNT GRISELDA and AUNT JANET) danced with the young Chevalier, and a Gentleman, who, from their description, I think must have been Mr. Waverley, at the ball given at Holyrood, in the eventful '45. We have still in our possession a few grains of snuff, which fell from the Prince's Vernis Martin tabatière on that memorable occasion. I would enclose some for your inspection, but the precious powder (an heirloom) is in the muniment-room, at our family seat in Mid-Lothian; and I write this hasty note from Torquay, where I am wintering.

Ever yours, my dear Mr. Punch,

FLORA MAC JARVIE.

I enclose my photograph, untouched.

MR. PUNCH,

I AM eighty-four, and can still play the flute. My foster-brother is eighty-two, and able to read the smallest print without glasses. My mother-in-law, who was ninety when she died (after living with us for more than half a century), rode to market on a pillion in the last year of her life. One of my sponsors attained the extraordinary age of ninety-nine, and never took a dose of medicine or wore a great coat. The husband of my eldest sister, now in his seventy-ninth year, gets up at six winter and summer, and practises for an hour with the dumb-bells. Not to weary you with too many details, my step-father, when he was considerably over four-score, walked from Putney to Mortlake and back on the day of the great boat-race, and afterwards dined at the "Star and Garter" at Richmond, and played three rubbers in the evening.

If there is any other family which can pretend to so much longevity and vigour in its different members, I shall be surprised, and not altogether pleased.

Yours faithfully, SENEX.

PUNCH,

I HAVE seen the last link-boy and the first gas-lamp, the last watchman and the first policeman, the last mail-coach from London to Dover, and the first tram-car from Westminster to Brixton, the last pig-tail and the first wide-awake, the last Bishop who looked awful in a wig, and the first servant girl who made herself ridiculous with a chignon.

I have handled snuffers, lit my pipe with a tinder-box, been carried in a sedan-chair, worn powder and a night-cap, slept in a bed warmed with a warming-pan, carried my watch in my fob, pulled a bell-rope down, fastened letters with wafers and dried them with pounce, eaten my dinner off a pewter plate, pursued peas with a two-pronged fork, and for many years taken a bottle of port after dinner without experiencing any inconvenience.

I have seen the first envelope, the first postage-stamp, the first match striking exclusively on its own box, the first photograph, the first perambulator, the first breechloader, the first Great Exhibition, the first croquet match, the first "Ulster," and the first Number of Punch.

I think you will agree with me that my Links both with the Past and the Present are sufficiently striking to be noticed in your columns. What will they be with the Future? Even your prescient eye may here acknowledge some indistinctness of vision. But is it very venturesome to connect with the coming time submarine tunnels, and sea voyages smooth and agreeable as a summer's evening excursion on the Thames, and reasonable hotels, and comfortable hats, and clean swept streets, and the final extinction of parochial misgovernment in the Metropolis?

Yours, P. P. F.

P.S.—My father has often told me that, when he was a boy, he used to go bird-nesting with another boy whose father, when he was a boy, bird-nested with a young companion of his own age, whose grandfather was the first person to cultivate potatoes in his own garden. Few "Links with the Past" can, I think, compete with this in interest.

NEW TITLES.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL—HOLKAR of Indore.
Solicitor-General—GIFFORD of Out-door.

Digitized by Google

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

"Unreasoning Panic" in Plain English.

"SOME may ask, What's in a Name? In these things everything's in a name. Association and sympathy gather round these ancient names, and it is these things which constitute the national spirit and the continuity of national life. Patriotism and loyalty—sentiments the strongest in our nature—are made of these ancient associations. It is for these things that great men have been proud to live, and good men have dared to die."

SIR W. HARCOURT on the Royal Titles Bill.

JOHN BULL (loquitur)—

DON'T like it, that's a fact! They wonder why.
SIR STAFFORD says it's all unreasoning panic.
Perhaps. Yet stick to the old "Queen" say I.
No mixture of the Imperial or Sultanic
Should taint that ancient title. I would drink
Still to the good old toast—"The QUEEN! God bless her!"
But "Empress"—'tis a word from which I shrink—
A name by which I'd rather not address her.

"What's in a name?" Well I suspect there's much,
Far more than is accounted for by reason;
But there are things 'twere hardly well to touch
With Logic's fingers. Fellows who spout treason
Might say that Loyalty is but a name
For something rather baffling definition—
Mere sentiment. It rules us all the same,
Spite of the sumphs who dub it Superstition.

"What's in a name?" Well, there's association
Still counts for something. Did it not, confound it
Society were pure chaos. Should the nation
Snap the old well-loved links that long have bound it
In ordered freedom, loyal ranks well ranged,
Before they find the bond to be a fetter?
Not so! Nor should the Royal badge be changed
Until we're very sure we've found a better.

"No change—addition only"? Well, I'm bad
At logic-chopping, but that statement strikes me
As much like quibble. I'd be vastly glad
To please HER MAJESTY; but this mislikes me,
I must confess. An Orient alias
Tagged to her grand home-title's not precisely
The sort of compliment I'd choose to pass
On one I love so well, and—I hope—wisely.

"India craves it?" Well, I have my doubts
If those who say so can read India rightly.
I thank her for her loyal shows and shouts,
But yet would wish to intimate—politely—
That, though her wants and wishes have all claim
Upon my thought and care, 'tis my opinion
The British Empire's Mistress bears a name
Grand enough e'en for the Mogul's dominion.

I'm for the QUEEN! Two titles might get mixed
In course of time, and—well, with names, the bigger
Mostly gets foremost. BEN, your aim seems fixed,
But pause a moment ere you pull the trigger.
You may bring down much more than you intend;
The QUEEN, as England's Queen, rules England's realm:
For guide and guard her empire to defend,
Loyalty at its heart, Law at its helm!

A NEW SONG.

"LET me Flog him for his Father." Dedicated to MR. WILBERFORCE, J. P., by the Author of "Let me Kiss him for his Mother."

"SPEAKING OUT."

(THE following advertisement, and comment, are to be found in our number for March 11:—

"'WANTED, a General Servant, one who can neither Read nor Write preferred. She must be clean, obliging, willing, and honest. Good wages given.—Apply personally, to M., Post Office, &c.'

"Would cleanness, obligingness, willingness, and honesty be any the worse with reading and writing? Let us hope that, if the former qualifications were found in the applicant to 'M.,' the reading and writing would not be fatal—disqualifications!"

They have elicited this plain-spoken letter:)

SIR,

IN answer to your query, allow me to state, briefly, that after twelve years' experience as the Mistress of a Household, numbering from five to eight domestics, I unhesitatingly affirm that those who have been innocent of the three R's, were invariably the most industrious, and the most honest. Instead of reading my letters, and rewriting their own—of the Cook basting her joint with one hand, and her eyes on a greasy cheap pamphlet held in the other (a fact), of the Housemaid carelessly dusting my drawing-room with a feather-brush, and then spending the hour she had gained in my rocking-chair reading some mawkish novel, pregnant with evil results, my ignorant servants have been faithful to their duties, respectful, and respectable; and this, I think, is the experience of thousands.

With every wish of good Mistresses to be considerate to their servants, their homes are hives for labour, not houses for idlers to lounge in; and with every deference to the great and good in our land, who have endeavoured to ameliorate the condition of the poorer classes, my experience tells me, and my ordinary sense shows me, that with regard to female servants, their efforts are monstrous failures.

My sympathies are entirely with the Advertiser "M," whom you hold up to scorn;* and I think I should find an ally in Mrs. Judy.

Yours,
A CONSTANT READER.

* Not scorn, but question.

PATINAGE.

WHAT would have become of French Comic Opera but for the resource of drinking choruses? One cannot help thinking, as one listens to the singers clinking their glasses together to the same eternal refrains, that a little variety would be a boon sometimes. We would suggest something like the following, by way of a change, to the Manager of the Opéra Comique. The verbs "rinquer" and "flirter" being as familiar in French as "rink" and "flirt" in English, there can be no objection to their introduction.

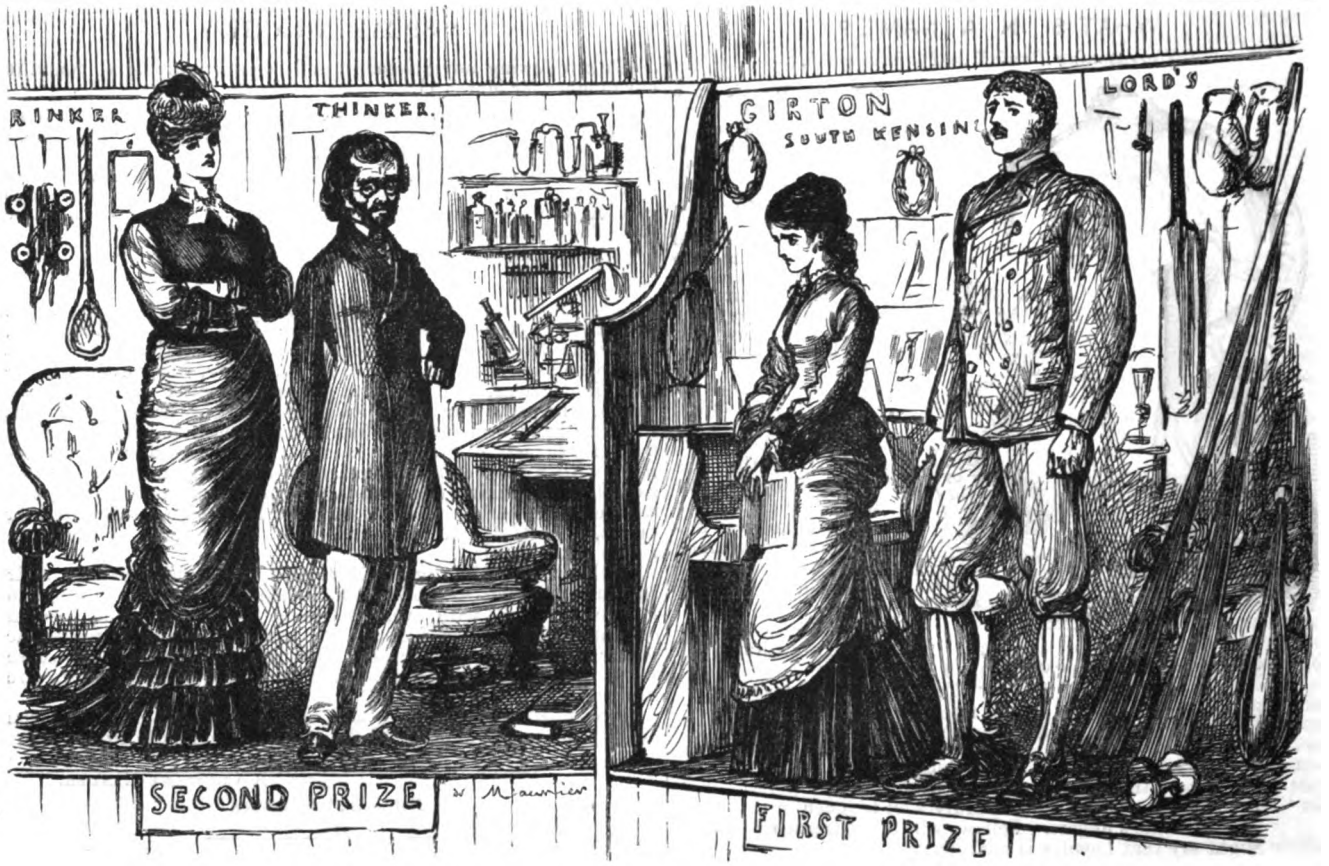
Chorus of Village Rinkers.

Rinquons!
Versons,
Garçons et filettes!
Aimons,
Courons,
Tous sur les roulettes!
Flirtons,
Faisons
Jamais des boulettes!
Et rinq', rinq', rinque!
Choquons nos patins!
Rinque, rinque, rinque,
Du soir au matin!

Woman to the Rescue!

March 12, 1876.

SIR,



MR. HARDY seems to want Surgeons for the Army, and to be unable to get them. I propose a remedy. Let him throw open the Service to Medical Women! They would come forward in shoals, and the British Soldier—our noble defender, Sir!—would no longer be left to the tender (?) mercies of ignorant men.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
MINERVA SHEDRAGON, M.D.

Brahmin to Benjamin.

EMPRESS OF INDIA, and of England QUEEN!
DISRAELI, what does that distinction mean?
For me an Empress, but a Queen for you!
No, your Queen, Sahib, please, and my Queen too.

Digitized by Google

PAIRING AND REPAIRING.

THE reasons inducing two young people to enter the holy bonds of Matrimony have hitherto, as a rule, been love, interest, intellectual sympathy, compatibility of temper, parity of social rank, and so forth. Now, Mr. Punch (who is an inveterate match-maker) thinks it high time these selfish and old-fashioned notions as to what constitute mutual fitness for the married state should be improved away, in the interests of the Anglo-Saxon race. He begs to present his readers with a sketch of two prize couples, exhibited by him (in imagination) at a "Married Couple Show" (evolved from his own inner consciousness), and earnestly commends the same to the thoughtful study of the youth of England. And oh! should one single misguided pair of gifted but dyspeptic enthusiasts be induced hereby to forego their intention of taking each other for better for worse—should one single splendid champion of the river and the cricket-field, on contemplating the above, transfer his affections from some simple-minded and congenial rinker to some such inspired little being as that who divides the first prize in the picture—Mr. Punch will not have thought and wrought in vain. Verbum sap.

"THE MORE HASTE THE WORSE SPEED."

SCENE—The Charing Cross Station of the District Railway.

Country Cousin bound for Bayswater, to Ticket Clerk, with scrupulous politeness. If you please, I want a first-class ticket to Bayswater.

Ticket Clerk (abruptly). No first-class here. Go to the next booking-place.

[Country Cousin retires rebuffed, and finds his way to next booking-place.

Country Cousin. If you please, I want a first-class ticket to Bayswater.

Ticket Clerk (explosively). Single or return? Look sharp! You're not the only person in London!

Country Cousin (humbly). Single, please.

[The ticket and change are slapped down unceremoniously, and Country Cousin is shoved on from behind by an impatient City man. Rushes precipitately down brass-bound steps, and presents his ticket to be snipped.

Snipper (inspecting ticket). Queen's Road, Bayswater? Wrong side! Go up the stairs, and turn to the right. Look sharp! There's a train just coming in!

[Country Cousin, with a deepened sense of humiliation and bewilderment, hurries up-stairs, turns to the right, and reaches entrance to platform just in time to have gate slammed in his face. The train being gone, gate is re-opened, and the necessary snipping performed on his ticket.

Country Cousin (to Snipper, politely). If you please, will the next train take me to Queen's Road, Bayswater?

Saturnine Official. Can't tell you till the train comes.

[Country Cousin paces the platform in moody silence, and wishes he had taken a cab.

Enter Train, rushing madly along.

Stentorian Voice (without stops). Earl's Court North End and Hammersmith Train first and second-class forward third behind!

[Country Cousin makes his way towards a carriage, but finds it full. Tries another with the same result, and is frantically endeavouring to open the door of a third-class compartment in which there is one vacant seat next a fat woman with a baby, when train moves on.

Indignant Official. Stand away there! Stand away, will you! (Drags back Country Cousin.) That ain't your train! What do you want a-trying to get in there for?

[Country Cousin, in deeper humiliation, re-arranges dress, disturbed by recent struggle, and resumes his agitated march.

Enter another Train more madly than the first.

Stentorian Voice. High Street Kensington Notting Hill Gate and Bayswater train Main Line train!

Country Cousin (to Haughty Official, in an agony of entreaty). Is this train for Queen's Road, Bayswater?

Haughty Official. Yes, Queen's Road. Look sharp! She'll be off in a minute.

[Country Cousin scrambles through the crowd to a carriage; drops his umbrella; stoops to pick it up, and on rising finds train three parts through the tunnel. Exit Country Cousin in a rage, to get a cab, having lost twenty minutes, the price of his unused ticket, his self-respect, and that of everybody he has come in contact with in the Metropolitan District Railway Station.

Digitized by Google

THE NEW TENANT.

LA FRANCE. "THAT MADAME LA RÉPUBLIQUE! BUT, MON DIEU, SHE LOOKS QUITE RESPECTABLE!!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

GONE WRONG!

A NEW NOVEL. BY MISS RHODY DENDRON,

Authoress of "Cometh Down like a Shower," "Red in the Nose is She," "Good! Buy Sweet Tart!" "Not Slily, But don't Tell."

CHAPTER I.—What Jenny says.

OH the Sea! the Sea! the open, the unpalling, the unfriendly, the unequal, the billowous, unsmooth, the unfailing, the unsteady, the unboundless, the fishful yet porpoiseless, the unshrimping, the unawhaling Sea!

Grand weather for poor little despised Wollum, on the low coast of the Fullum Roads, within full view of the far-stretching Shell Sea. Poor little Wollum! Few people know it, fewer still love it. Pierless Wollum! with its swarms of flies drawn to the place by one horse, and its neat little wheel Bruffum machines, at so much an hour not including the driver. Fresh, sparkling Wollum! with its leafy glades, where the loving trees twine their lissom arms above the low-voiced 'busman's head, and kiss one another in the shady twilight.

And so on the Green—the Green of Wollum—old, froggy-blooded people tottered, and basked, and the marine-coated policeman cracked a nut or two for sheer wantonness, shading his eyes from the fierce darts of the great sun-god, and peered in the direction of the old Knight's Bridge on the one side, the Reach of Putterney on the other, or out on to the horizon-bound Shell Sea.

The small first-floor of a small Wollum Green House; its temperature up to one hundred in the shade; a temple dedicated to rich odours and brave tints; and, in this room, we two sisters, the two MISSES ST. JOHN VILLARS.

JENNY—I am JENNY—is engaged in the interminable work of knitting sand-ropes whereon to string the highly-scented, nature-favoured apple-beads of Shalotte. JENNY is the elder of the two. She is a young old maid, and likely to remain so, as her figure has long since passed the turning-point, the embonpoint, of comeliness; and young men with short crisp hair, grand broad chests, clean-shaped limbs, muscles of iron, and no sinews of tin in their composition with their creditors, are not likely to be enticed by the matrimonial advertisements of a poor, but respectable, family inviting them to "Try our Stout JANE!"

Let us go to the other—as men always did—BELLA ST. JOHN VILLARS. BELLA is our youngest born, and the show one of the family. She is not in a particularly graceful attitude just now, and yet there is a certain charm in it, which would make male passers-by look twice—three times—perhaps even four times, at the two round greyish-green eyes deep set and as full of sweetness as un-shelled peas; and a fifth time would men of maturer age glance at the plump white arms, hanging lazily out of the window, playing with her tresses of bright hair, which she is swinging, to and fro, in the softly-caressing breeze. Neither wholly red, nor purely golden, are her electro-plaited locks, which gleam with all the brilliancy of an autumn walnut in a dank wood. She is just settling in her mind which colour it is to be, and has done her sister the honour of consulting her. She makes a soft pillow for her little glossy head on the window-sill. Thought made her head ache.

"I do not want to dye yet!" she murmured plaintively.

"There is no necessity for it," I say. I always say whatever BELLA wishes—it is my rôle in life, and I take a good look at her as she twines her shapely fingers in among her sunset tresses. She has big grey eyes, in which, at first sight, there appears to be a considerable amount of green. She has the small upward turned nose of a person who is passing through Cologne, or through a back street of the Seven Dials in the hottest summer time, with two little heart-shaped, dimpled nostrils, that are very extinguishers for men's souls. Her laughing full-blown lips form an elastic framework to a gorgeous mouth, which could scarcely be measured with the breadth, or length, of two table spoons, and enough to make a selfish man of large appetite (and most men have both qualifications) pause before inviting her to dine with him on the remains of yesterday's meal tête-à-tête in his luxurious bachelor lodgings.

All men who looked once at BELLA's mouth, thought twice. It seemed to expect life to be one long pleasant dinner of ever-varying dishes, with luscious fruits for the dessert, and then the whole movement da capo from the potage à la Reine.

There is a lurking gravity in her low forehead which most men have wondered at; and her full, unblushing cheek, men admire still more, but wonder at less. This face is nicely set on a warm round throat, not too white, nor like unliving marble, but like a large, well-turned, soft, consistent roley-poley pudding, with the veins of raspberry jam within, indicated on its warm, soft surface.

As for BELLA's figure,—well, she has told me, her Sister JENNY, that five thousand a year would be about her figure, if the parti were in other ways suitable. But there is no depending upon the whims and fancies of this soft, undulating, plump, dumpling-like girl, who is fascinating all round, and whose whole contour, whatever our family lineage may be, would never induce an antiquarian to believe in her having been descended from the Angles, though indeed, some observant naturalists, or logical theologians, holding severally the theories of evolution or development, might have arrived at a somewhat different opinion. But all this is too high for me, who am only Sister JENNY, and, physically speaking, a failure.

BELLA wears a pretty little dress of Japanese silk; of so simple a pattern as to consist of only three figures crossing a bridge, two people in a boat, a quaint tree with large blue apples, a sort of pagoda, two brilliantly plumaged birds fighting in the air, and that is all. It is too plain and quiet to suit most people; it becomes her marvellously, and, being drawn in slightly at the girdle, gives a truer expression to her healthily firm and shapely shoulders, than many a grander garment would have done.

There she sits, lazy, happy, passive; a pretty dollop of colour on the grey stone window-sill of our first-floor front.

"I wish I had something to eat!" she exclaims, wearily. "This air gives me an appetite, especially out here——" (As I have intimated, she is on the window-sill, and throwing these remarks into the room to me.) "I sent TOMMY out to buy some jelly and a pickled cabbage. Where is he?"

"Good Heavens!" I exclaim—I generally exclaim 'Good Heavens!'—"you don't suppose the unhappy imbecile is so infatuated as to run about Wollum with pickled cabbages and jellies in his pocket?"

"Yes, I do," she returns triumphantly, "and ices too, and sponge-cakes, and buns, and nuts. What's he made for, if not to be useful?"

I am about to attempt an answer to this problem, when the sound of a concertina strikes our ears.

BELLA starts up, and holds on by the window-sash, craning her neck out to look round the corner of the next balcony, and down the street, a few yards distant.

"Here he is!" she cries. "He is always playing the same tune, that is, as much as he knows of it." (It is "Pretty Jemima, don't say 'No!'" and we both recognise it.) "And—oh!" she cries, almost bounding off her perch, "he's got some one with him! A Man! such a Man! Oh, I do hope he is going to bring him up here!"

I look out of window, and see TOMMY—that is, our friend, the REV. THOMAS HASSOCK, who is taking care of us at the seaside—in his long clerical coat, high waistcoat, large white tie, and big, soft, pulpy, slouched hat, dancing about in the middle of the road, playing the concertina; his little pink eyes thrown up, beseechingly, through his pale green spectacles, towards the object of his loving worship, eager for one smile—for one slight glance of approval, or even of recognition, of his attempts to please and amuse her.

But BELLA's eyes are turned in another direction. For a time she is apparently utterly ignorant of the very existence of the REV. THOMAS HASSOCK, and as deaf to the voluptuous harmony of his concertina, as she had been, for months past, to the theme of his pitiful entreaties. It is a Man who has attracted her attention; and even I, with all my old-maidish contempt for the sex, am forced to admit that BELLA is a connoisseur of this portion of the creation, and that she is right in refusing this title to poor fluffy-headed, green-spectacled, whimpering Reverend little TOMMY, who would play and dance himself to death in the broiling sun on the Wollum Green, if thereby he could hope to win from her one word of love.

"Come in!" She beckons imperiously to the infatuated dancing Clergyman, with a whisk of her dimpled, white, plump finger cutting his capers short.

TOMMY obeyed instantly.

In another second he is in our room.

"Where's your friend?" BELLA asks.

"Outside," answers TOMMY, blushing, and smoothing his curly straw-coloured hair with the corner of his concertina.

"Why didn't you bring him up?" BELLA inquires.

"He is old enough to have brought me up," replies TOMMY, turning all manner of colours, and pulling out a chord from his instrument.

"You are such a donkey, TOMMY!" says BELLA, throwing at his head a thick cushion on which she has been sitting. The cushion caught the REV. MR. HASSOCK on his right ear, and brought him suddenly to the ground.

"Never mind," I say, trying to soften matters—it is my mission in life to soften matters—"she does not mean it."

"You know, MISS JENNY," the poor creature says to me, "I would do anything for BELLA. If she told me to stand on my head I would do it."

"Don't call me BELLA," says the young lady, sharply. "And do it."

"Stand on my head?"

"Yes."

He requires no further pressure. He is on his head, with an agility which shows he has prepared for this occasion, and is turning slowly round and round, following with his spectacles BELLA into whatever part of the room her sudden impulsive walk may take her.

Digitized by Google

EN PASSANT.

"RATHER REMARKABLE, AIN'T IT, SIR? BUT 'AVE YOU HEVER NOTICED AS MOSTLY ALL THE PLACES ON THIS LINE BEGINS WITH A 'H'?"

"AW—'BEG YOUR PARDON?"

"LOOK AT 'EM! — 'AMPSTEAD, 'IGHGATE, 'ACKNEY, 'OMERTON, 'ENDON, 'ARROW, 'OLLOWAY, AND 'ORNSEY!"

THE DUTCHMEN'S PROTEST.

(See "Wrongs of Our Natives."—Punch, March 18.)

DEAR PUNCH,

WE hope, in this Metropolis,
They play no tricks of Calicopolis:
But we, plain Dutchmen dare to say
We are of real use to-day;
Nor to you only Mr. Punch,
Who, having had your oyster-lunch,
Resolve it into purest pearls
For thoughtful men and laughing girls.
We cry, "Come; eat us! Let the best,
Who boast the Natives' choicest zest,
Awhile beneath the ocean rest.
To them we claim not to be equal,
Yet eat us, and await the sequel."
Once, if we credit Roman stories,
Ceteris ostriosior oris
Was the far-famed Rutupian marge
Where Latian epicures at large
Enjoyed a British oyster-supper,
When HORACE reigned instead of TUPPER.
But oh the oysters night and day
Eaten, since CÆSAR came this way!
Since Roman gourmands, growing boisterous,
Swore that Olympus was an oyster-house,
That Hermes opened bivalves well,
And always in the concave shell;
That Zeus, almighty self-refector,
When eating them abjured his nectar,
Thought Ganymede a clumsy lout,
And wisely called for London stout.
Natives no longer are abundant;
We, by comparison, redundant,
Not caring, though with scorn you treat us,
"Come, ope," we cry, "come, ope, and eat us."
Trust not the men who, fond of "sells,"
Translate us into Native shells;
But gulp us in an honest way,
And, having done it, you will say,
"'Twere wiser to grant breathing time,
For Natives to regain their prime,
Nor, while we spare them, scorn too much
The plump and modest Anglo-Dutch."
The doings of Mancestrian folk
Are, we admit, beyond a joke,
But we are not in league with such men:
We're honest, unpretending

DUTCHMEN.

WHAT OXFORD QUESTIONS. — Whether the way to supply sins of omission be by sins of Commission?

Then she stops, and speaks, before releasing him.

"You'd better stay as you are. For months you have been 'off your head.' Your parishioners will be glad to hear you are on it again. Tell me what's your friend's name?"

TOMMY, having righted himself once more, produces from his pockets a pickled cabbage, some ices in brown paper, a bottle of ginger-beer, two jam tarts, and a sausage-roll. These he offers to BELLA.

"I thought," stammers the timorous little man, "I once heard you say you liked them."

She puts them aside, and repeats her question—"Tell me his name?"

He answers, "DUSOVER BELJAMBE."

"What is he?"

"A Captain."

"A Captain! I shall go out for a drive with him."

"Good Heavens!" I exclaim.

"My dear MISS BELLA," says TOMMY, nervously, drawing out one long expostulatory note on his concertina, and twisting round slowly on one leg, as he sings, in a high, but not positively unmusical voice, "What will Mamma say? What will Papa say? Oh my, fie for shame! What will Mam——"

But a mischievous, tormenting look flashes into BELLA'S grey eyes.

"Take off your coat and hat!" says the wilful girl, in a calm, determined tone, to TOMMY, who stands aghast—"Take off your coat, hat, waistcoat, and white tie! I am going for a drive with CAPTAIN DUSOVER BELJAMBE!"

(To be continued.)

WHAT IT SEEMS LIKELY TO COME TO.

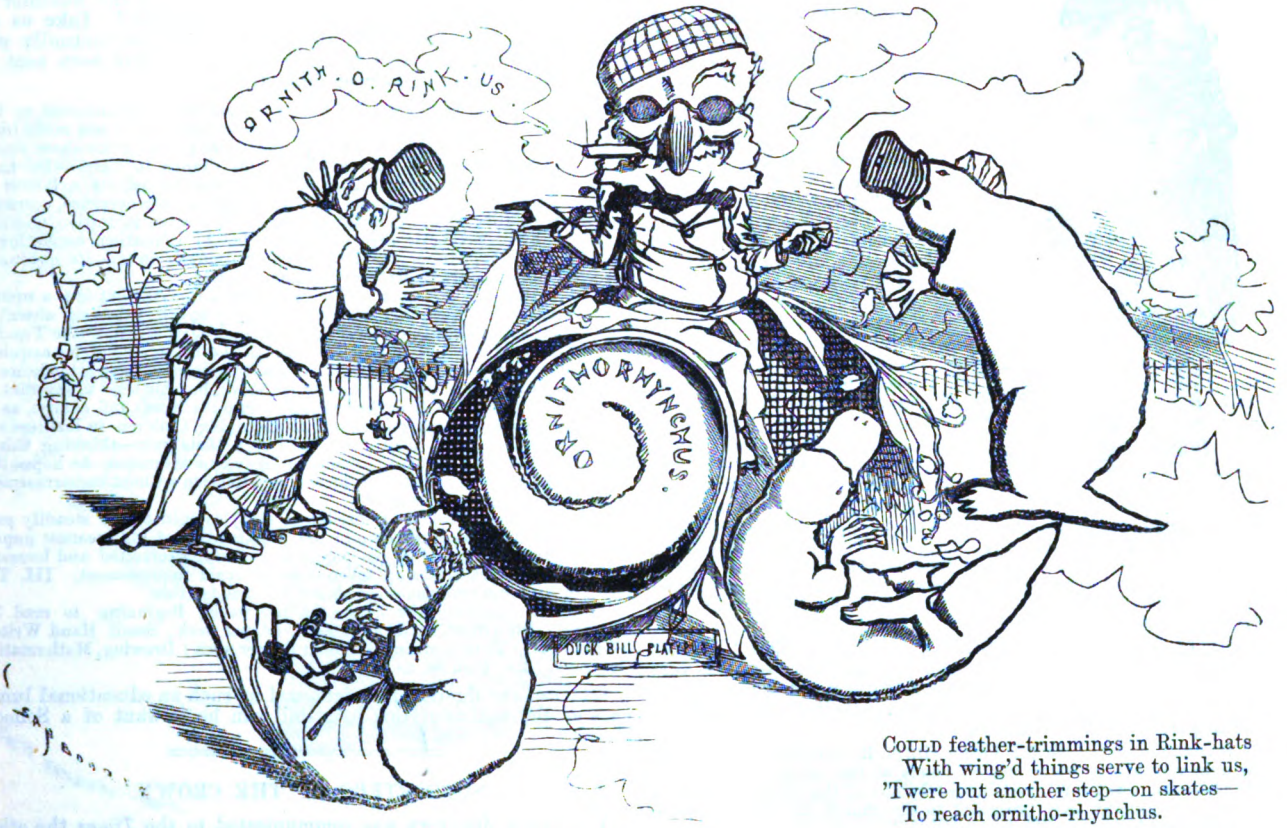
THE Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury contemplate the opening of Westminster Hall as a Skating Rink, for the use of Members of both Houses, the Bench, and the Bar.

The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's hope shortly to be able to announce the opening of their new Skating Rink, in the Cathedral crypt, for the use of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons.

Loggia and box-holders at the Albert Hall, who have converted their property into private Rinks, are requested to abstain from skating during the few remaining Concerts which will take place before a Bill is applied for to authorise the adaptation of the Hall as a Metropolitan Rink for the use of the British Public.

The President and Members of the Royal Academy of Arts beg to inform Exhibitors that their entrance cards will admit them to the new Art Rink, to be constructed in the courtyard of Burlington House previous to the opening of the Exhibition.

The Zoological Society is about to turn the Fish House into a Skating Rink. Lessons will be given by the Polar Bears.



Conservative Notions.

IT is understood that, should the sanction of Parliament be given to the Ministerial proposal of adding the new and foreign denomination of Empress to HER MAJESTY'S old English title of Queen, MR. DISRAELI will shortly ask the House of Commons to vote a sum of money for the purpose of whitewashing Westminster Abbey.

Digitized by Google

DUCK-BILLS DEVELOPED.

(On the Rink.)

That strange Australian animal,
Half-bird, half-beast, whole puzzle,
Needs little humouring, after all,
Of paws and duck-billed muzzle,

To turn into a dowager,
Upon her "Spillers" balanced,
With hands outstretched to steady her,
And rink-hat feather-valanced.

Could feather-trimmings in Rink-hats
With wing'd things serve to link us,
'Twere but another step—on skates—
To reach ornitho-rhynchus.

"Ornis-ornithos—Greek for bird."
Quoth Punch behind his blinkers,
"Old rinkers in plumed hats—absurd—
Call 'em, ornitho-rinkers!"

APPREHENDED OUTRAGE AT HAMMERSMITH.

According to a Correspondent of the Times, some wretch connected with Hammersmith proposes to cut down the noble trees by the River side at the end of the Mall, two hundred years old, and said to have been planted by the Queen of Charles the Second. If so, and the caitiff is only quick enough about his work, he will be in time to cause regret and annoyance to numerous spectators who will miss those picturesque objects at the University Boat-Race. Let us, therefore, be informed, as soon as possible, who this fellow is, in order that, whilst all the Philistines, and snobs that rejoice in Vandalism, and revel in the destruction of ancient memorials, will unite in applauding his design, every possible opposition may be offered to it by every sensible person who can make any.

An Enigma.

(Apropos of the Oxford Professor on Political Economy, Bonamy Price, Esq., M.A.)

All questions of Exchange
Are settled in a trice
At Oxford University
By reference to Price.
Still it is understood
Political Economy
Has never yet held good
With what proceeds from Bonhomie.

Inhabited House Duty—The Servants'. And I wish they'd do it.—Yours, Paterfamilias.

Slippery Ground.

The following note occurs in a column of Southampton news:—

"Charles Edwards is announced to give Gospel addresses in the new Skating Rink to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon and evening."

To serve the purpose of Mr. Edwards, a Skating Rink seems about as fit as a Circus; but authority for preaching both in season and out of season may equally warrant preaching whether in or out of place. However, perhaps a sermon would not be quite out of place in a Skating Rink, where it might touch backsliders.

Elementary Education.

The Elements of late have been unusually unruly. Meetings to promote Elementary Education have had not the slightest effect in restraining their violence, so as to keep them from tearing telegraphic wires, and throwing tiles and chimney-pots. There are Elements which nobody as yet has been able to master; hence the late tempestuous weather. Better luck to the efforts of philanthropists to educate the people.

Proposal to Parliament.

In order to the more effectual exclusion of private jobbery from Parliamentary proceedings, suppose you resolve that any Honourable Member accepting office as a Railway Chairman or Director, shall by the fact of so doing, like the receiver of a Ministerial appointment, vacate his seat, and ere he is permitted to resume it, have to offer himself for re-election.

Digitized by Google

PERFORMANCES IN LENT.

THE Hampshire Independent, under heading of "Lenten Missions at Southampton," reports the particulars of certain proceedings lately conducted at various churches in that town and its neighbourhood by certain "mission preachers," invited by some thirty Clergymen, who, "headed by the Rural Dean, the REV. DR. CARY, approached the LORD BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, and obtained his sanction and warm approval of a series of Services to be held during the first eight or ten days of the present Lent." Some of these proceedings would once have been deemed prodigious, and not merely extraordinary; but in these days we are accustomed to notices of Theatres Clerical, such as the following account of a performance at—

"ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH.—Those who, knowing the Ritualistic tendencies at this church (REV. F. M. GREGORY'S), expected that the Mission would be accompanied by extravagances, were not disappointed. The notices, announcing the Services stated the Mission Priests will be ready to hear confessions, or to give spiritual direction after any of the Services, with the Service for the renewal of baptismal vows."

The acting at the REV. F. M. GREGORY'S Church, where "Mission Priests" attended to hear confessions, if truly described, was very close to the real thing indeed. MR. GREGORY appears to have played the part of a provincial POPE GREGORY in capital style. This is further apparent from what follows:—

"On Saturday evening the Missioners (REVS. R. LINKLATER and L. N. JONES) were met by the Vicar and choristers at the old parsonage house, where a procession was formed, and headed by one of the choristers bearing aloft a jewelled crucifix, they proceeded to the church, singing, 'Onward, Christian soldiers!'"

These soldiers, however, seem unaware that they are troops with whom the genuine Pope's Own would not march through Coventry, nor would have marched through Southampton.

A "service," we are told, was next "conducted" by MR. GREGORY—playing Anti-Pope, perhaps, rather than POPE GREGORY, as the Ritualists disobey PIUS. It was "taken from the Book of the Mission":—

"In this book the advantages of coming to confession are set forth, with directions 'how to make a good confession,' in which an admonition is given 'not to keep back anything,' to 'take care to be plain and simple, and if you find it difficult, to ask the priest to help you;' 'if you doubt whether anything you have done was sinful, ask the priest;' 'keep to the point, and remember you have to confess your own sins, not the sins of other people;' 'make your confession as if it were your last, and you were going to die to-night.' Then is given the following form of confession."

This was simply the Roman preamble to auricular confession slightly garbled to suit the Ritualistic stage. It is followed by the direction, "Then tell the priest your sins," and, that done, finally, to pray "you, my father, to give me penance, counsel, and absolution."

Might not the penitent, told not to confess the sins of other people, as well consider how far he is sure that his own will not be divulged by his mimic "Father Confessor"? There is nothing to prevent a Ritualist from being a hypocrite; nor are there in the laws of the Church by Law Established any provisions to regulate the practice of "Confession," which, as a practice, that Church ignores. No such provisions are likely to be made by Act of Parliament, and even if the Bishops could be prevailed to frame any, what Ritualist—each his own Pope—could be trusted to obey his Bishop? Let boobies, therefore, beware how they play at auricular confession.

The thirty odd Hampshire parsons have "approached" the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER to such purpose that next, instead of warily "approaching" him—getting at him in a gradual and tentative manner—they will perhaps at once peremptorily request him to patronise their sacerdotal performances. If the REV. MR. GREGORY, of Southampton, for instance, has the courage of his opinions, will he hesitate to apply to his Diocesan for a faculty to erect a Confessional in St. Michael's Church? For that purpose, however, the mere faculty of imitation will not do.

AN EDUCATIONAL NORTHERN LIGHT.

IN these days, when the Schoolmaster is so much abroad, what a comfort to know that even where School Boards are not spread, the banquet of instruction is ready for the children of the humbler as well as the highest orders. And what instruction! Take as an example the following bonâ fide educational menu—actually put forth by a North Country Schoolmaster—which has been sent to Mr. Punch, and which he reproduces textually.

"MR. —— now ventures to commend his scholastic attainments to the inhabitants of the neighbourhood of ——, feeling confident he has made himself master of a good sound English education, after pursuing the above object many years—nevertheless returns his sincere thanks to those who have favoured him with their patronage and yet earnestly solicits a favour of greater patronage feeling assured that by strictness, perseverance, economy and wonted ability he will give satisfaction to both sexes in tuition and also to parents by imparting to their Children a liberal Education, consisting of Reading, Writing, Grammar, Geography, Arithmetic in all its extensive branches and powers, also Mathematics and Drawing.

"N.B.—MR. —— deems it highly necessary to remark that it is a matter of great materiality regarding the progress in any boy or girl being absent at school, as their progress entirely depends on their attendance, if the Teacher do his duty, and it is an undeniable fact that Learning cannot be acquired unless attention be paid, hence MR. —— only wishes to have attendance of boys and girls, to prove what he has stated above, but he begs to say that he wishes parents would deliver their Children into his hands and charge, as he has already proved in several cases that indulging Children in laziness and not making them obey their duty have been their ruin—thinking this a sufficient remark yet without verbosity or any vague assurance—he hopes this will be conclusive and worthy of the readers attention without embarrassment of un-accomplished achievements.

"METHOD.—I. A course of intelligent study is initiated & steadily pursued having immediate reference to the requirements of his meanest pupils. II. The exercises worked by his pupils are carefully corrected and honestly criticised and every means are taken to secure rapid improvement. III. The result of six years experience are offered for consideration.

"TERMS.—Learning the letters 2*d.* per week; Beginning to read 3*d.* per week; Ditto Writing & Arithmetic 4*d.* per week; Small Hand Writers 5*d.* per week; Those learning Grammar 6*d.* per week; Drawing, Mathematics, Geography, &c., from 9*d.* to 1*s.* 6*d.*"

Who can say the region enlightened by such an educational luminary as the author of this hand-bill can be in want of a School-Board?

SUPPORTERS OF THE CROWN.

A NOTABLE discovery was communicated to the Times the other day by MR. HENRY WALKER, the Honorary Secretary of the West London Scientific Association. On the preceding Saturday afternoon, in the brick earth pit of the old Thames bed at Crayford in Kent, a gentleman belonging to the learned body abovenamed found an unquestionable relic of a noble animal too commonly, of late years, accounted a myth:—

"One of the members of this Association, MR. R. W. CHEADLE, of Christ's Hospital, was successful in excavating a bone which was identified by PROFESSOR MORRIS as the thighbone of a British species of lion."

Thus the British Lion, whose very name is sneered at by subversive scoffers as all humbug, is now demonstrated to be a genuine reality, at least to have been a real quadruped once; a live lion in his day, the most ancient of the good old days,—

"When wild in woods the noble savage ran."

Said "noble savage" being the aboriginal Briton, bedaubed with woad. That is if in Britain at that prehistoric period there existed any aborigines on two legs and featherless, and if woad was comprised in the British flora at an epoch when the British fauna included lions. But, most strange to say, the discovery of the British Lion is not the only one made by MR. CHEADLE. A more remarkable case of "curious coincidence" has perhaps never been announced in any journal than that which remains to be pointed out:—

"MR. CHEADLE found at the same time several teeth of rhinoceros in this cemetery of ancient life among the hop-gardens of Kent."

It is indeed wonderful that the remains of a creature associated in heraldry with the British Lion should have been discovered near those of its companion on the Royal Arms, and that the same fortunate explorer should have had the honour of discovering not only the Lion of our British escutcheon, but the Unicorn as well.

ITALY ON FRANCE.

"LA Republica non aveva che una Gambetta;
Adesso ha due gambe, e sta ferma!"

CHANGE OF NAME.—Notice.—The REV. ORBY SHIPLEY to be called the REV. URBI ET ORBI SHIPLEY.

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S PICTORIAL PATENTS.

Patent Front-and-Back-Fall Buffer (for Beginners).

PRESIDENT CINCINNATUS.

"The Senate have passed a resolution reducing the President's allowance from 50,000 to 25,000 dollars."

Our Transatlantic cousins trying
To meet the last cry from the Gallery,
Go in an honest head for buying
At half the present scale of salary.
Almighty Dollar's slaves essay—
The notion strikes us here as comic—
To halve their President's poor pay,
And so prove clean hands economic.

Alas! there will be no more fun—
Hops, Germans, champagne lunches, dinners—
At the White House in Washington
For hungry saints or thirsty sinners.
Your public life alas! breeds dirt,
Your public organs throw it gaily;
And now the Presidential shirt
Will hardly pay for washing daily.

What is five thousand pounds a year?
'Tis just an English Bishop's income.
While, in the President's starved ear,
The dollars melt from hands that clink 'em!
Roumanian Boyar, Russian Prince,
Outspent in rear of Shoddy tarries:
And English Dukes with envy wince
While Shoddy pays them down in Paris.

Emperors and Kings are much too dear:
A President may well come cheaper:
But why give anything a year
To your exalted office-keeper?
Put up the place to auction, friends,
Choose who bids highest—when you 've made him,
Wait till his term of office ends,
And, guess, you 'll find, somehow, it 's paid him.

A Fruitless Visit.

Mrs. Malaprop has suffered a great disappointment. Hearing of "the fall in the price of silver," she thought it was a favourable opportunity to buy what she had long wanted—a few additional forks and spoons. Her expectations of a great bargain were rudely dashed to the ground when she reached the silversmith's shop.

AN OXFORD MIXTURE.

The following letters have been received at 85, Fleet Street, during the past week, on the subject of the Oxford University Bill, now before the House of Lords. In these days, when public opinion is so powerful, all useful hints should be of service to Commissioners, both of the present and the future. This being the case, Mr. Punch has no hesitation in publishing the communications of his correspondents for that unknown quantity—what they are worth:—

(Letter I. Postmark, "London, W.")

Dearest Mr. Punch,

You have always been the best friend of the Ladies—always—and I do so want you to help us now. You are so good and so clever and so amiable that I am sure you will if you can, and you know—you satirical, nice important creature—you know you can do anything if you please. A single line in your truly amusing paper will have (as Papa calls it) "the desired effect." You know it will, now don't you?

After reading the first column of the Times the other morning, I turned to the other pages (as I always do, to see if there is any news of the dear Prince), and, quite by accident, I came upon a long account of a meeting of a Convocation at Oxford, headed "Lord Salisbury's Bill." As my brother John is at Oxford, of course I devoured the article with the most awful relish. I couldn't quite understand it, but Papa tells me that it is proposed to alter the way of spending the money belonging to the Colleges—the endowments or something—you know what I mean. I hope you won't consider me a very silly goose if I suggest something en passant. I suppose the old Gentlemen have been too extravagant in their tailor's bills—I know at Commemoration some of the gowns were quite too gorgeous! Now for my suggestion.

Don't you remember there was a great fuss a short time ago about the expenses of Commemoration. I recollect a lot of letters in the papers saying that the young men could not really afford (poor fellows) to entertain their sisters and cousins in proper style. One wretch wanted Commemoration to be abolished! Now this would be simply too awfully miserable; it would be really wicked! Commemoration is too nice, it is indeed.

Why shouldn't some of the funds, dearest Mr. Punch, be devoted to paying for the Balls, Pic-nics, Garden Parties, and Flower Shows? If the Heads of Colleges (is that the right name for them?) objected, they might be wheedled into saying "Yes," by receiving a lot of cards of invitation to everything—of course on condition that they only asked nice young Men and unmarried Ladies at least over forty.

Do, do get this done for us, dearest Mr. Punch, and merit the eternal gratitude of yours most sincerely,

A Little Girl.

P.S.—I must introduce you to Jack. I am sure he would be delighted to put you up for the week, and his breakfasts are really quite too lovely.

(Letter II. Postmark, "City Road.")

Mr. Punch,

Sir,—I am not a Member of Oxford College, but I have written ten five-act pieces that a jealous clique of theatrical Managers (in London and the provinces) have kept off the boards once trod by that far-famed gentleman sometimes called the famous "Swan of Avon."

Sir, "if there is any justice in the land of the brave and the free; if there is still a sun keeping watch over the busy world by day as the silvery moon does by night, like a hawk searching for his first meal—the early worm of daybreak" (pardon me for quoting from my own works), let some of the bloated funds of the luxurious College of Oxford be expended in assisting

Your obedient Servant,

A Genius not yet Recognised.

(Letter III. Postmark, "Aldershot.")

Sir,—After careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that an Oxford education is scarcely the sort of thing to suit a man intending to enter the Army. My present duties are confined to company drill, the internal economy of a regiment (inspecting raw meat and tasting weak tea), and occasionally assisting at the deliberations of our Mess Committee.

Digitized by Google

Why should not some of the University Funds be devoted to purchasing parade-grounds and the endowment of a Chair of Military Science? I may say the exercises would be of local as well as of general importance. As a soldier it is my opinion that even the Heads of Colleges would be benefited by a course of "setting-up drill," and as for "the coaches" a month of "par-buckling" and a fortnight of "trench digging" would do them all the good in the world—it would make men of them, Sir.

For the sake of the Service you will be glad to hear that what I learned at Oxford I completely forgot at Sandhurst.

Yours faithfully,

B. A. (Oxford), Lieutenant —th Foot.

(LETTER IV. Postmark, "Putney.")

MR. EDITOR,

FAR be it from me to suggest that a good oar must necessarily be a bad scholar (on the contrary, many of our best Blues have been the prides of their respective Colleges); but surely field and water sports might now take rank with cramming.

The London Public, Sir, fully appreciate the Oxford and Cambridge Boat Race, and the University Cricket Match; but those two great contests have never been properly recognised on the banks of the Cam and the Isis. I see a good opportunity for some reparation in the proposed redistribution of the Oxford funds. Two chairs (one for Cricket, the other for Boating) might be advantageously established; and perhaps a small fund might be reserved for the entertainment of ex-Lord Mayors by victorious Eights, or conquering Elevens.

Let this be done, and I say that Athletic Oxford will be more than satisfied.

Yours most truly,

AN OLD BLUE.

(LETTER V. Postmark, "Little Peddlington.")

MR. EDITOR,

SIR,—You will see by my signature that I am the celebrated Tragedian. Sir, in that character I have a right to be heard.

Sir, what do our young men know about elocution? Nothing—absolutely nothing. Don't talk to me, Sir, about a Public Orator. Pshaw, Sir!—his office is a sinecure, a farce, a sham! Sir, I hear that Oxford proposes to spend her money after a new fashion. By all means let her do so.

I am given to understand, Sir, that the University boasts a Theatre of its own (I have my own doubts upon the subject, Sir; for I cannot find it mentioned in the Era: but no matter). Then let that Theatre (if it exists) be worthily filled.

Sir—mark me well—let the University make it worth my while, and I will allow our youth to see me nightly in a round of my most famous Shakspearian parts.

As you know, Sir, I am the Hamlet, Macbeth, Romeo, Apothecary (as played by me at the Theatre Royal Sadler's Wells for more than three consecutive nights), Othello and Falstaff of the epoch. Need I say more?

Sir, your obedient Servant,

GARRICK KEMBLE JONES,

Late of the Theatre Royal Sadler's Wells.

P.S. Should my offer be refused, I shall be at liberty at Easter for Tragedy, Eccentric Comedy, and Utility. I understand the time—eight.

(LETTER VI. Postmark, "London, E.")

MY DEAR MR. PUNCH,

DOUBTLESS there will be many excellent suggestions made for the redistribution of the Funds of Oxford University. Accordingly, I am a little shy of advancing the claims of the class to which I myself belong, and yet if something could be done for us, it would indeed be a blessing. Indirectly, many an Oxford man working either in the slums of London or in the heathen lands of the country might be benefited. But the will must be precursor of the way.

Sick calls, Lenten duties, and my ordinary parochial work prevent me from writing more.

Your faithful Servant,

A POOR CURATE.

QUESTIONS FOR ANY NUMBER OF BEES.

1. Spell LJUBIBRATICS.
2. Pronounce LJUBIBRATICS.
3. Who is LJUBIBRATICS?

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

GOOD joke (Lords, Monday, March 20th) of LORD STANLEY of ALDERLEY'S — Will Government issue a Fugitive-Coolie Circular — the Fugitive Slave Circular having proved such a success? LORD DERBY, with perfect seriousness, disclaimed any such intention.

(Commons).—In Committee on Royal Titles Bill, MR. DISRAELI tried to take the sting out of the Bill by explaining that the QUEEN would, under no circumstances, assume the style of Empress in England. VICTORIA in fact, is to be Empress, "Limited"—to India—and her children, further West, are still to be Royal—not Royal and Imperial—Highnesses. LORD HARTINGTON was sorry this re-assuring pledge had not been given before Second Reading of the Bill. Still he foresaw awkward complications. Think of the difficulty of keeping the Snobocracy—Social and Municipal—to the old title. There would be something so irresistibly tempting to JENKINS in a new and lower form of Kotow!

SERJEANT SIMON wanted to include a reference to the Colonies in the Royal Style. Our Warwick—Empress-maker as he is—really didn't just now see how that was to be managed, but did not despair that some day a happy device might be hit upon!

Now it has come to tinkering the Royal Title, Punch can't for the life of him see the difficulty of turning out a serviceable and comprehensive article. What is the objection to "VICTORIA by the Grace of GOD, of Great Britain, Ireland, India, and the British Colonies and Dependencies, Queen?" Or—better still, because briefer,—why not, "VICTORIA of the British Dominions Queen?" Mr. P. will be happy to meet the RIGHT HON. B. D., the RIGHT HON. W. E. G., the RIGHT HON. SIR S. N. BART, and the RIGHT HON. LORD HARTINGTON, and will back himself to help those four lame dogs over the Royal Style in the course of an hour's confab, with the aid of a sedative cigar.

After some boggling, and with many wry faces from the Opposition, and no great appearance of relish on the part of the Majority, the Bill was got through Committee without a division.

Then the House, having shaken off its nomenclative nightmare, went joyously into Committee of Supply, and knocked off a good batch of "excess votes" in Army and Navy Estimates.

Tuesday (Lords).—LORD SALISBURY has ventured—RYLANDS notwithstanding—to make the post of Indian Councillor tenable during good behaviour. Their Lordships are to have the comments of the Hebdomadal Council and Convocation on the Oxford Bill, before going into Committee. That is only fair.

(Commons).—Thank you, MR. RITCHIE, for a very useful exposé of the constitution, efficiency, expense, and pay of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, in support of demand for a Select Committee. Would that all Committees asked and granted had as good a ground laid for them or the chance of being as useful.

SHAW the Life Guardsman used to be a popular hero in the days when the Battle of Waterloo came off annually at Astley's. Our SHAW—the Life and Property Guardsman—has a more solid claim on London's recognition, for he does a large work with small means, and spends himself and his men freely for very inadequate reward. If all our big Babylon's municipal services were as well administered, manned and worked as her Fire Brigade, we should have less need for reform of our Local Government.

DR. CAMERON—with Scotch shrewdness and Highland pluck—brought forward the grievances of the Talisman's crew; the men, imprisoned without trial, for more than a year, in a filthy dungeon at Callao, then released without compensation, after being forced to serve the Peruvian Government for a cruise aboard their own ship; the officers still untried prisoners after fifteen months' suffering, and one of them murdered en attendant by one of the native ruffians shut up in the same foul hole.

MR. BOURKE told at great length the story of the Talisman—seized

Digitized by Google

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Publican. "YOUR DOG'S VERY FAT, SIR. PRAY WHAT DO YOU FEED HIM ON?"

Traveller. "WELL, HE HAS NO REGULAR MEALS; BUT WHENEVER I TAKE A GLASS OF ALE, I GIVE HIM A BISCUIT, YOU KNOW!!"

fairly enough by the Peruvian Government as having been chartered and loaded here by agents of conspirators against the Government, and used for the purposes of a rebellion in the country—but shirked DR. CAMERON'S point, which was that our Government had been slack in acting on behalf of the crew. We are glad to hear from MR. BOURKE that LORD DERBY has, at last, sent out a peremptory demand for the immediate trial or release of the officers. Better late than never. Unfortunately, the demand comes too late for the mate, SIBLEY. The ruffian's knife has already picked the dungeon-lock for him, poor fellow!

LORD DERBY should be made to feel that there are occasions on which it is the duty of a Foreign Secretary's blood to boil. Peru may be as weak among powers, as she is lawless in her prisons, and rascally in her finance. But that is no reason why she should be allowed to imprison and ill use English sailors with impunity. Weakness has its privileges; but this is pushing them too far. Let us hope that DR. CAMERON'S creditably cool and clear exposition of the case will from this time secure his clients against the cooling influences of Foreign Office snow-broth. Even MR. GLADSTONE admitted that LORD DERBY might have shown more spirit, without infringing his over-cherished rule of discretion.

(Wednesday.)—An Irish afternoon as usual. DR. WARD busy proving that the Irish Fisheries had been knocked on the head by the treacherous jealousy of the Saxon, and starved, when the Scotch Fisheries were fed fat on grants and bounties. He only asks for an Irish Board of Commissioners, like the Scotch—a branding system, like the Scotch—and a modest annual grant of £20,000, to be spent in the repairs of piers and harbours, and loans to fishermen, &c. &c.

DR. WARD, backed by MR. BUTT, LORD HAMILTON, and MR. BRUEN, and a strong muster of Irish Members, made out a good case, in the teeth of BAXTER and the Economists; and SIR M. H. BEACH was driven to the candid admission that so long as the Scotch system was maintained, if it could be shown that the Irish Fisheries suffered for want of it, it ought to be extended to them. He promised inquiry. As to the grant, there were various loans out of the Reproductive Loan Fund under the Act of 1874. Let us see how the repayments under that came in, and then it would be time to talk about an extension of the system. Sly SIR MICHAEL! On the whole, he must oppose the Bill. So it was negatived by 215 to 131. But DR. WARD can't say he has taken nothing by his motion.

Thursday (Lords).—LORD SALISBURY promised the Cambridge University Bill after Easter. Why are the Dark Blues to have precedence?

(Commons).—"Que diable allait-il faire dans cette Galère?" A startler for Egyptian Bulls. When DISRAELI promised CAVE'S Report he had not read it. Having read it he thought KHEDIVE mightn't like it. KHEDIVE being asked, said he didn't like it, and the voice of the CAVE is not to be heard in the City. So the Report is burked, and the Bears are loose with a vengeance! DISRAELI may boast to have repeated the feat of his forefathers. He has spoiled the Egyptians!

MILTON'S hymn comes to mind—with a difference:—

The Oracle is dumb!
From forth the Cave no hum
Skaketh the market, up or downward heaving.
The KHEDIVE doth opine
That light might raise a shine.
So Cabinet seals CAVE—Egyptian darkness leaving!

Another contribution—perhaps the largest of the year, and they have been both large and many—to BENJAMIN'S mess.

But he crowned even this to-night, by his amazing speech on the Royal Titles Bill—in which he ran playfully down a whole gamut of "authorities," from SPENCER'S Fairy Queen and CAMDEN'S Britannia to Whitaker's Almanac, and the letter of a nursery correspondent—a dear good girl of twelve—who finds the QUEEN called Empress in her school-geography, a work with the high authority of an eighty-ninth edition.

But the Sphinx's most mysterious riddle was left for the last. Have not the bazaars and the ryots heard of an "Emperor"—an irresistible conqueror—who is slowly, but surely, absorbing Asia, from the North downwards? Henceforth India shall have her "Empress" to throw in the "Emperor's" teeth!

Marvellous medicine of a word! Mighty mystery of the Asian mind! Soundless depths of the Disraelitish incomprehensible!

Here be reasons, O BULL! plentiful as black-berries, and big as it is easy to make wind-bags. So Third Reading of the Bill was carried by 209 to 134, under protest of the Opposition, well and weightily uttered by the accredited mouths of GLADSTONE and LOWE; and with the freshness and force of a new voice, besides—that of COWEN, a dark diamond from coaly Tyne. So passes the Bill to the Lords. Q. b. f. f. que siet, prays Punch, but doubtingly, for he loves not to see high things lightly handled—and is for holding to the old ways nowhere so reverently as in the region round the Throne.

On Merchant Shipping Bill. There is a chance of getting the pressure of Poor JACK'S collar lightened in one place. MR. GORST enforced from recalcitrant ADDERLEY promise of a Clause to confine imprisonment for breach of sailor's contract to cases involving danger to life or ship.

Friday.—Nothing so remarkable as SERJEANT SHERLOCK'S gallant proposal to uncage the Ladies! Many Members—HOPE and MANNERS included—maintained that the Ladies preferred their present den "behind the grille, behind the grille!"—to parody the Laureate.

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor brazen bars a cage;
Ladies, the House who visit, take
These for a privilege!

NOTE ON NAVAL ESTIMATES.

ONE Gun that will sink an Iron-clad is as good as a broadside. A gunboat, whilst hitting hard enough to sink a Minotaur, is hard for the Minotaur to hit. The smaller the vessel and fewer her crew, the smaller and cheaper the calamity of her going to the bottom. A Little Ship with a Great Gun might do wonders. We want a lot of those Little Ships, my Lords.

AN APROPOS TITLE.

MONARCH OF MONARCHS,

COULD you not suggest to the mighty Mystery-Man that he should style his Royal Mistress Suzerain (Suez-reine) of Hindostan? The title would commemorate at once his two grand coups at Canal-buying and Sovereign-coining. Yours, abjectly, AGAG.

Digitized by Google

PROPRIETY IN A FIX.

Mrs. Quiverful has three Daughters just engaged, and the pleasing Duty devolves upon her of chaperoning them when they take their Walks abroad with their respective Lovers. Unfortunately, the young Couples will go their own divergent Ways!

OUT AT LAST; OR, DIZZY'S ODD TRICK.

The Fox in the fable had tricks ten times ten
To get back to his den in the day of disaster;
But what was that Fox to High-Policy Ben,
Of phrase and finesse the redoubtable master?
Dealt out one by one tricks make excellent fun—
For the dealer at least. But the last was mysterious,
A very "dark horse" of a dodge. If hard run
Ben would have to try that; the result might be serious.
High Policy! Mum! So the chase seemed to flag,
When—out pops that identical trick from the bag!

"Why Empress?" quoth John. With Sphinx finger to nose,
The Great Wizard replies, "There are various reasons.
You don't want them all in a lump, I suppose,
But I'll dribble them out—at convenient seasons.
Dear India desires it. She treated your boy
So remarkably well that she merits your gratitude.
Shown thus she will hail it with genuine joy.
See how eager her eyes, how expectant her attitude!
You don't quite perceive it? That's very absurd.
But no matter, I do; so you 'll please take my word.

"Objections? Pooh! pooh! All this silly to-do
Is mere party device and unreasoning panic;
There are plenty of answers, good precedents too,
Let me draw your attention to regions Germanic.
It means very little—it means a great deal.
My plan's purely local—no change, mere addition.
'Twill strengthen your rule. If the Colonies feel
Just a little bit sore, why some new definition
May fix their relation and plaster their sore.
'Tis but tinkering the title a little bit more!

"'New-fangled!' O dear, not at all! An old term.
I have heaps of Authorities—Camden and Spenser,
And Pinnock, and Whitaker. So I affirm
That Victoria Imperatrix Fidei Defensor
Is no innovation. And should you suppose
My research on the point has been careless or cursory,
I make my appeal, the whole matter to close,
To the highest of courts, which, of course, is the Nursery.
I won't mention names, but you've only to look
In my infant Egeria's Geography Book!

"Not satisfied yet? Well, then, listen. Prepare
For a startler—the heart of this new Asian mystery—
'Tis a hint for the ear of the Great Russian Bear!
(Prince—Suez—new title!—three steps in one history)
He has munched up the Tartars! A rival? O no!
But we 'll borrow his title to make matters equal.
Sometimes a big word is as good as a blow:
Will he funk it, or grin? We shall see in the sequel.
He fights, and intrigues, and creeps nearer apace;
I, by way of reply,—fling a name in his face'"

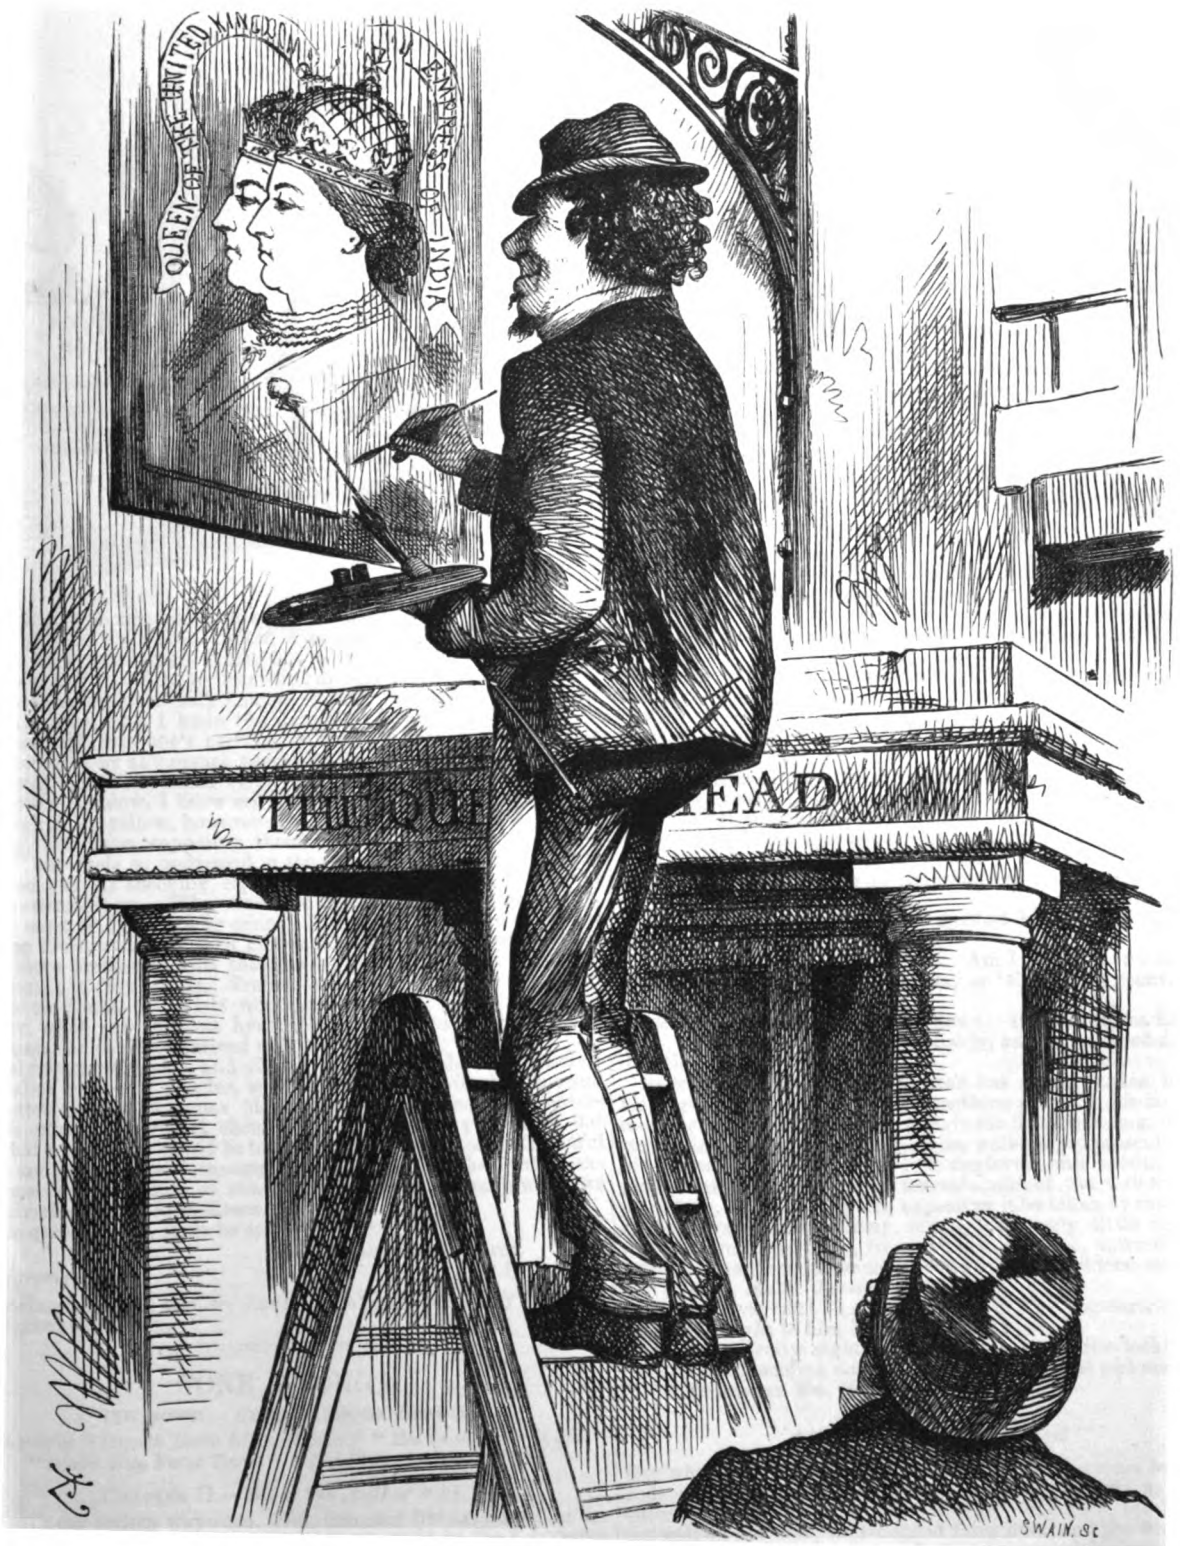
Writ de Rheumatico, &c.

Dear Punch,

There is a young Lady for whom I have a great—though, since the late winter set in again, it has been a neuralgic—affection. One day last week she suddenly stopped sneezing, and asked me to write some lines in her album. To blow my nose, and produce the following was the work of a moment:—



Come where the aspens quiver,
There we 'll indulge in a shiver:
Bring your catarrh
To my sciatica,
And we 'll sing of lumbago and love!

I really didn't know I had it in me.

Yours, North-Easterly,

Snow Hill, March 29. M. Archwynd.

Digitized by Google

"THE QUEEN WITH TWO HEADS."

MR. BULL. "NO, NO, BENJAMIN, IT WILL NEVER DO! YOU CAN'T IMPROVE ON THE OLD 'QUEEN'S HEAD!'"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

DRAWING-ROOM DRESSES.

You Dear Creature,

I know you receive letters from Ladies sometimes—very often, perhaps,—but, anyhow, you published a week or two ago one from an awfully jolly girl, I should think (though I really forget what it was about). But what I want to say is à propos of these Drawing-Rooms Her Majesty (I suppose I ought to say Her Imperial Majesty?) has announced—that is, of course it is the Lord Chamberlain, not the Queen, who announces them—for May next

I am sure no girl in the United Kingdom, India, or the Colonies, can be more loyal than I am, but why on earth we should be victimised and forced to go in evening dresses to a morning performance goodness gracious only knows. I have been to more than one Drawing-Room, and I know the delights of running out, even in May mornings, into one's carriage in low body and a train; sitting to be stared at by any casual passer-by in St. James's Street—and, whether it be Lord Ogleby or the crossing-sweeper who looks into the carriage window, I know my shoulders in broad daylight must look frightfully yellow, however much poudre de riz I put on before starting, and even supposing them couleur de rose or "cherub-tinted," one feels so undressed in the day-time that it really seems quite too awfully shocking, especially as a girl does not take a fan to a Drawing-Room. Why are these fêtes not held at night? Or, if they must be by day, why cannot Ladies be received in a special morning dress, which, Worth knows, may be quite as expensive and much more becoming, with those loves of Bébé bonnets which are just coming in from Paris. Trains, of course, would be discarded, though no doubt the skirts would be quite as long. But what anxiety, what nerves, what hysterics would be avoided if such a consummation could be arrived at!

Surely feathers, trains, and all the rest of it should be as obsolete as cavalier boots and powder, or, at any rate, as tail uniforms and epaulettes. Some Mammas (don't print this), whose daughters possess exceptionally good shoulders, might object, you know, but oh! what a blessing it would be to most of us, who now catch frightful colds, and in some cases consumption, merely to give the Gentlemen-at-Arms an opportunity of studying æsthetical anatomy while we are shivering in the Ante-Room.

I am quite serious, so do be so for once, and help

Your devoted admirer,

Belgravia. Bertha.

I enclose my card, and we have five o'clock tea every Tuesday throughout the season.

GONE WRONG!

A NEW NOVEL. BY MISS RHODY DENDRON,

Authoress of "Cometh Down like a Shower," "Red in the Nose is She," "Good! Buy Sweet Tart!" "Not Slily, But don't Tell."

Chapter II.—What the Author says.

While our erring, wayward, wild, innocent Bella, despising the shackles of conventionality, is disguising herself in the Reverend Tommy Hassock's clerical costume, and making that soft, dumpling-headed clergyman turn quite pink with exasperation at being locked into the jam-cupboard during the process of masquerading which is going on in our front apartment,—Jenny takes a good long look at the innocent cause of all this excitement, who is standing in front of the one hotel at Wollum. He is engaged in swallowing a basin of soup, while, with his eyes, he is devouring the bill of fare which the waiter is holding up for his inspection. Not a very romantic situation for a hero, truly; yet Bella,—pausing to settle her white tie, and adjust the Reverend Tommy's pale green spectacles to her great unusual-looking eyes, which shine brightly under their white lids,—catching the movement of his deep, poppy-hued lips,—half hidden under a Niagara of tawny hair,—as they pronounced the words, "Real Turtle," felt, that, within her soul, there was suddenly revealed to her a bottomless depth—a wild, mad, reckless fervour of passion, to which all her past girlish pleasure in ices, jam-tarts, rolls, and cauliflowers, were but as a drop of summer dew to the tempestuous upheavings of old ocean's stormy bosom. She had seen his lips move; she had caught the masterful words, "Real Turtle!"

And what sort of man was he, who, this day, had been so freely inspired with the secret word, the talisman, the key to this priceless treasure of new-born uncalculating passion? This is he:—A big, powerful figure, deep-chested, clean-limbed, thin-flanked. Arms long and sinewy, with muscle rising in knotted cords upon them. His head,—towering stately over the heads of other men, being, as anatomists technically express it, "screwed on the right way,"—was so firmly set on his long, massive, columnar neck, as—his rich tawny, deep-brown hair, being cut short, and brushed straight up, artichoke fashion—to find a perfect resemblance in the sun-lit pine-apple that crowns the summit of Old London's fiery Monument.

He has harsh, swart features,—swarter than most swart features,—and a great, soft, black-brown moustache, silkier than the silkiest floss, drooping over his ample, gleaming, mouth. Penthouse brows, and dwelling under them, in their shadow, luminous dark eyes that loved to feast royally on Nature's bounteous gifts to women, with long, unshackled looks. A magnificent ugly man. Such was Captain Ivar Dusover Beljambe.

So much for his outside. For his inside, it requires a more intimate acquaintance with the menu he is considering than we as yet possess, ere we can weigh and measure this momentous question, and pronounce according to any fixed constitutional standard. He was not more conceited, more dissipated, more self-indulgent, or secretlier fonder of nuts, preserved fruits, and sweet things at dessert after the ladies have gone, than most men are. His voice was soft, and low as the tone of a muffled fog-horn sounding o'er the summer sea through the mists of evening-tide. Dreadfully soft could that voice be when it chose, suiting itself to the quality of the willing listener.

An ostler is waiting with a dog-cart for Captain Beljambe. Seeing this, he finishes his soup, and stretching out lazily one of his long, big, strong, shapely legs, he gave free play to his muscles, and with an abrupt intimation of his iron, inflexible, foot, dismisses the waiter, who, borne upward, and onward, by the giant impulse, floats away to where the sun is already sloping westwards, and disappearing in the first sprinkling on the water of the holy moonshine, is, so, gradually lost to view.

During the above, Bella has finished her toilette, has turned to her sister, and asked,

"There, Jenny, am I a waiter? Am I a waiter or a clergyman? Am I to say 'My Christian friends,' or 'C'mingsir, yessir, d'reckly-sir'—which is it to be?"

"Good Heavens!" exclaims Jenny. But before she has time for more, Bella has shut the door briskly, and has rushed down-stairs into the street.

Captain Ivar Dusover Beljambe has already taken his seat in his dog-cart, is giving the last smoothing caress to his lion-coloured moustache, before taking the reins in the firm-enclosing, unrelenting strong, iron, grasp of the long, clean, well-shaped muscular fingers of his sinuous right hand. His left, ungloved, still retains the soup-plate, which, in momentary forgetfulness of the waiter's enforced departure, he is holding out, expecting it be taken by the attendant. And so it is. White, plump, round, soft, ready little fingers seize it, as a tremulous voice, from a pleading face, upward turned towards his hairy countenance and herculean shoulders, says

"Sherry, Sir? Yessir, d'recklysir."

Happy Dusover! Lucky Moslem in the dog-cart, to have his sherbet brought to him by such a houri!

It was a pretty sight: the big, gentlemanlike-looking man in light clothes, bending down towards the beautiful girl masquerading in the Reverend Mr. Hassock's clerical attire—

"Half light, half shade,
A silent waiter, or a gleeful maid?"

Her white tie, tumbled and creased in her endeavours to make both ends meet, seemed but a poor muddy yellow strip, as it lovingly encircled her soft, white, warm throat. Her high, black, waistcoat sat well on her bold, well-defined fairy bust, and the sun kissed her hair and her hands, as though he were some rod-loving schoolmaster who could never be sated with tanning her. Her cheeks, rosier than rosy red, are glowing hotlier and hotlier with the unwonted excitement, and her eyes sparkle and glitter like beautiful great sapphires.

The grey mare is growing restive.

"Come up!" says the deep tone of Dusover Beljambe's bell-like voice; so deep, so bell-like, that, at its sound, the good people

Digitized by Google

FORBEARANCE.

Member of Hunt (to Farmer). "I WOULDN'T RIDE OVER THOSE SEEDS IF I WERE YOU. THEY BELONG TO A DISAGREEABLE SORT OF FELLOW, WHO MIGHT MAKE A FUSS ABOUT IT."

Farmer. "WELL, SIR, AS HIM'S ME, HE WON'T SAY NOTHING ABOUT IT TO-DAY."

of Wollum took up their prayer-books, and were for trudging off to church; while some few of the smaller tradesmen came out to put up their shutters, under the impression that the knell of the Lord of the Manor, or at least of the old Squire, was being rung.

"Come up, will you?" he says once more to the restive mare.

BELLA VILLARS hears, looks up at him hardily, growing crimson, but with a dare-devil light in her eyes, and repeats,

"'Come up, will you?' I will."

"I don't care about mixed society," returns CAPTAIN BELJAMBE, rudely; "and you seem to be neither one thing nor the other."

"If I am not allowed to do what I like, I scream," answered the girl, gravely. "I am coming for a drive with you, and intend to upset your cart. Do you give me carte blanche?"

"This is my carte de visite," replied CAPTAIN DUSOVER BELJAMBE, carelessly, "and I am going to make a round of calls."

"So am I!" cries BELLA. "TOMMY, make room for your uncle!" she adds, as, at one bold jump, she springs up lightly into the vehicle, and seats herself by his side, not more than three inches distant from his great shoulder.

"Now then! Wake up! Off we go!" she exclaims, as, in a sudden ecstasy of breathless enjoyment, she reaches over the splash-board and flogs the mare with poor MR. HASSOCK's crumpled hat.

CAPTAIN DUSOVER looks at her full womanly figure, at the round white throat, like a column of Devonshire cream, and then, with one short stirring cry, and a sharp click of the whip, he gives his mare the reins, and away they are carried at the rate of thirty miles an hour, while her sister JENNY from the balcony is shouting out, "Come back! Come back!" and the REVEREND MR. HASSOCK, pink with vexation, and dressed in BELLA's cast-off gown, which the emergency has compelled him to adopt, is waving his blue umbrella from an upper window.

"She is a dear good girl," he is saying to himself, "and really fond of parish work."

He waves his umbrella once more, and for the last time—BELLA is out of hearing, out of seeing, now: she is galloping down the shady green lanes by the sea, looking up into the searching flame of DUSOVER BELJAMBE's gaze, sipping draughts of poison, thinking to herself "All this is very wrong, highly improper, but what of that? It is utterly unimagined bliss!"

So they sped on, swiftly, these two, down the still road.

(To be continued.)

Foot-Note (Private Correspondence):—

What the Editor says.—"I say, isn't this a trifle too strong? Where's the moral?"—ED.

What the Authoress says.—"Too strong! Not a bit! Graphic, descriptive. I'm giving you the pith and marrow of all my other works. Not for wishy-washy milksops. Moral's coming."—R. D.

A BRIGHT SUGGESTION.

ATTENTION, Metropolitan Board of Works, to a request which you should comply with. "J. E. S.," writing to a contemporary, sets forth the difficulty he and thousands of others, occasional visitors in London, experience in finding their way about, especially at night, owing to the multitude of streets with no names visible at all, and even in the principal thoroughfares none to be seen for half a mile. You need not be told how to remedy this state of things in respect of daylight; but as to darkness perhaps are not so ingenious as not to require being enlightened by "J. E. S." as follows:—

"What I wish to propose, or rather suggest, is this: that the names of the streets be put on the lamp-glasses, as you now see at many of the Railway Stations. The cost would be trifling, and the boon immense."

A clever idea, isn't it? and one which, if realised, would be a great improvement, and an immense boon indeed to many, especially country cousins, now that education has taught even bumpkins to read. Be so good as to execute it without delay.

HIBERNIAN TOAST AND SENTIMENT.—Home Rule and Imperial assistance.

Digitized by Google

A NEW TEST.

Aunt (in alarm). "SURELY YOU 'VE EATEN ENOUGH, HAVEN'T YOU, TOMMY?"
Tommy (in doubt). "F-F-F-FEEL ME!"

SOMETHING NEW.

Oh, who will show us something new!
Too common Rinks are growing,
And Spelling Bees are, entre nous,
Too solemn and slow-going.
Against monotony rebellers,
We 're sick of Spillers and of spellers.

What is a Rink?—A giddy whirl
That makes a poor girl dizzy:
No time to question, as you twirl,
Who, what, or how much is he?
And if one has an awkward tumble,
It 's hard to smile, instead of grumble.

Lubbock proves Bees a stupid race,
Good but to buzz and guttle,
Our Spelling Bees thrust in one's face
Sharp stings of queries subtle:
Interrogators poor girls tasking
With questions—all but the one worth asking.

Dear Mr. Punch, do pray invent
Some new game—you 're so clever:
Of course one must be dull in Lent—
But Lent won't last for ever.
Then Lent means fast—'gainst slowness make head;
Costume, décolleté—not too naked.

Punch replyeth.

Old pleasures tire, young fancies fire,
But Punch has outlived passion:
Ladies invent, and men admire—
'Tis yours to set the fashion.
But why seek novelty? Behold
Flirting, still new, however old!

For dress, the thin disguise let fall;
With tight skirts form-revealing,
You 've reached the art of showing all
Dress makes show of concealing.
To help you dress why Punch be pressing?
The Modistes' art is now un-dressing.

A FEAR FROM THE INDIAN TREASURY.

May not the new coinage of our Indian Crown still further bring down the price of the Rupee?

MORAL SUASION FOR SOTS.

(An Appeal to the United Kingdom Alliance.)

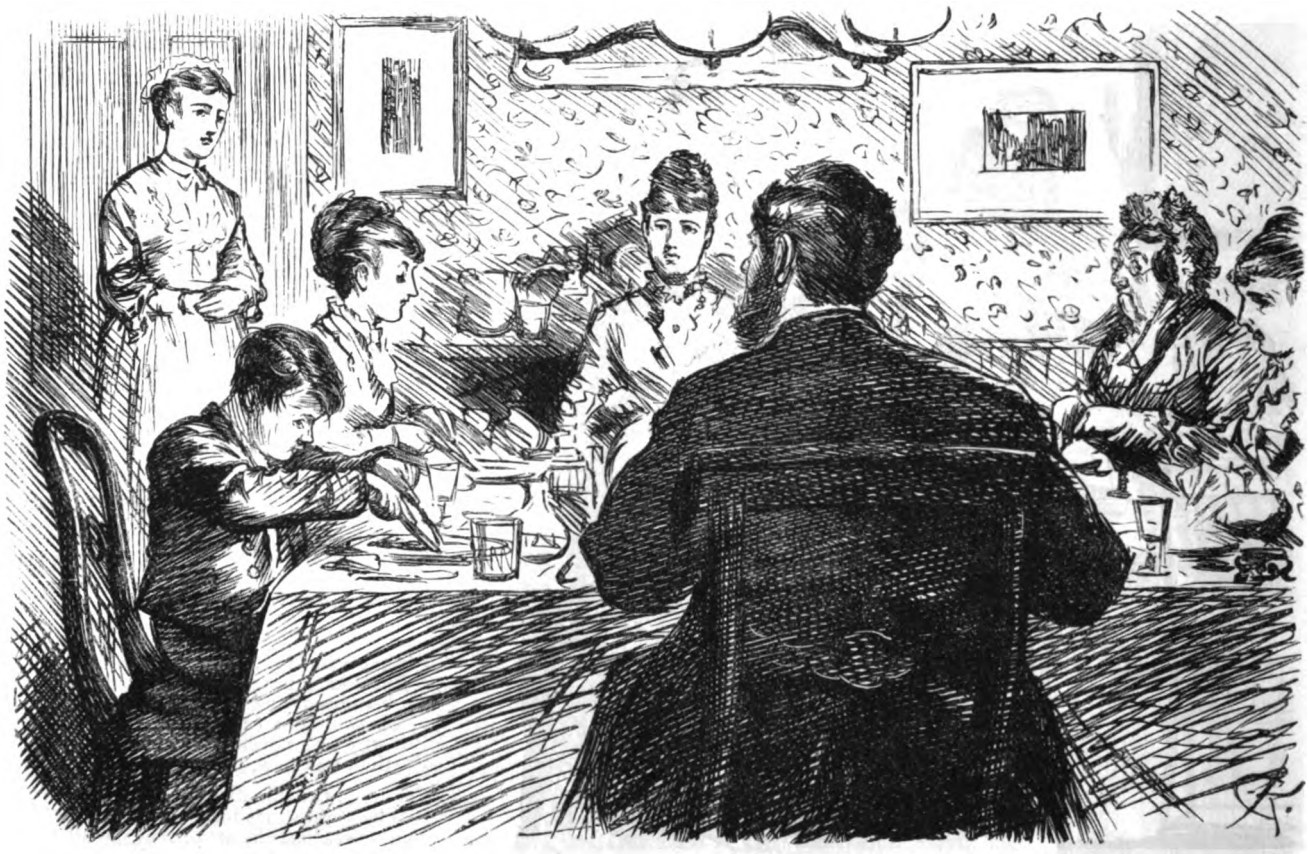
Why cry for vexatious laws to curtail the freedom of the Briton, destroy the Liquor-merchant's livelihood, rob the poor man of his beer, and in consistency the rich man of his burgundy, when you could make people sober without any restrictive Act of Parliament? The way thereto has long been an open secret for any one with eyes in his (mind's) head. Now every fool who runs may read it in a paper just issued by the Howard Association on the "Means of Diminishing Intemperance."

For this purpose, instead of trying to go the whole hog like tee-total fanatics, the Howard Association proposes to proceed on old "Hesiod's maxim that "the half is more than the whole;" to do as much as will suffice, and not to fail by over-doing. Having suggested certain modifications of the present licensing system, they observe, for the instruction of Good Templars and Permissive Prohibitory Allies:—



"But when all has been done that intelligent public opinion is ever likely to sanction in the way of legal restrictions and licensing conditions, the principal work will still be to influence the personal convictions and habits of the people themselves as voluntary agents. And this can only be effected, as hitherto, by Moral and Religious Operations concurrently (it is important to remark) with an increase of such necessary facilities of sobriety, as Healthy Dwellings, Provident Habits, Innocent Recreations, Workmen's Clubs, Educational Elevation, and a cheap and ever-ready supply of Harmless Beverages."

Why, is not all this the revelation of a secret which everybody must now see to be as plain as the nose on his face—how plain soever? Who are the sober classes pray, Sir Wilfrid Lawson? Just exactly those who enjoy the abovenamed advantages, all, except Workmen's Clubs, because you Swells have Clubs of your own—the Carlton, Reform, Conservative, and such. You are the sober classes, you, the superior classes—not always classes as sober as they were superior. You, the comfortable and luxurious classes, blessed especially with healthy homes, and with a cheap and ever-ready supply of harmless beverages—champagne, claret, and numerous other wholesome wines; beverages dog-cheap to you who can well afford them, and not only harmless but beneficial to you who know better than to abuse them, and have no temptation. When the superior classes drank port and sherry and brandy-and-water, a sot, drunk and incapable, used to be proverbially said to be "as drunk as a lord." Do you ever see a nobleman in the gutter now? With good hot coffee, as sold in the streets of Birmingham at a halfpenny per cup (and a profit of from 12 to 15 per cent.), good ginger-beer no dearer than bad ale, try if you cannot wean the drunken classes from intoxicating liquors, as their betters—so called—were weaned on light wines before them. Legislate for the drainage and ventilation of those dwellings, from whose filth and squalor they fly to the public-house. Give them—the Howard Association particularly urges—religious training: that is to say, Christianity, not Mahometanism. The Turks are patterns of temperance, but of what other virtue? Suppose, whilst you, the United Kingdom Alliance, go on agitating for coercive liquor laws, the preventives of Intemperance recommended by the Howard Association are effectually tried. Suppose by-and-by you find drunkenness, your raison d'être, abolished, your platform cut from under your legs, and your occupation gone. How glad, no doubt, you will all of you be; how rejoiced at beholding national sobriety effected without the enforcement of unwilling abstinence!

A Change of Name for Weston the Walker.—For "Payson" read "Pace-on."

Fast Flowers.—"Mad-cap" Violets.

Digitized by Google

GASTRONOMY.

Young Hopeful. "PA', WHY DOESN'T THE QUEEN GIVE DINING-ROOMS 'STEAD OF DRAWIN'-ROOMS. I KNOW" (with his mouth full) "I WOULD!!" [Is helped last to pudding!

RANDOM REFLECTIONS.

(From the Note-Book of a Tourist.)

HE is a wise man who knows his own luggage, when he travels with a wife and her twenty-seven packages.

For want of a whistle the cab was lost, and for want of a cab the train was lost.

£ s. d. are your real letters of credit.

France prides itself on being the most civilised of nations; yet you may travel from one end of the country to the other, and never see a saltspoon.

Looking-glasses certainly are entitled to be classed among the many foreign things that will not bear reflection.

Except that the briefer the tomfoolery the better, there is not much to choose between a Lord Mayor's Show and a Carnival.

A collie dog is doubtless useful in its way, but how very much more useful would be a colis dog to look after one's luggage.

An Englishman will never cease to grumble on the Continent until he finds soap in his bed-room, and is not charged a franc for a farthing's-worth of bed-candle.

En revanche, how a foreigner, when travelling in England, must be driven to despair by our cookery and coffee!

May it be accepted as a proof of the military spirit of the French, that, at their tables d'hôte especially, in every dish of fowl there is a prevalence of drumsticks?

The man who stares about a church, while the poor people are at prayer, is a cad who would cut the name of SMITH upon the Parthenon.

La Manche, with all thy faults, I love thee still.

The only circulars worth reception by a tourist are circular notes.

The Tallest Style.

WITH talk pro and con. Queen and Empress we're dinned.
One crown either title 's sufficient to cover in:
But Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, Ind,
Supply just the four crowns that make up a Sovereign.

THE WILLIAM ON THE BILL.

WILLIAM again, and to the point, as usual—"Titles BILL" we may surely call him after reading this from King John, Act. iv. sc. 2:—

"King. Here once again we sit, once again crowned,
And looked upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.
Pembroke. This 'once again,' but that your highness pleased,
Was once superfluous: you were crowned before,
And that high royalty was ne'er plucked off;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land
With any longed-for change, or better state.
Salisbury. Therefore, to be possessed with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refinèd gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.
Pembroke. But that your royal pleasure must be done.
This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And, in the last repeating, troublesome.
Salisbury. In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigurèd;
And like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about:
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected
For putting on so new a fashioned robe."

Neatly Turned.

MR. PUNCH congratulates MR. EDMUND HAY CURRIE, Chairman of the House Committee of the London Hospital, on the knighthood (couldn't they have made it a night-nurse-hood?) with which HER MAJESTY has condescended to invest him—more especially as the determination to favour CURRIE is not the result of any undue attempt on his part to curry favour.

LEGEND FOR THE LORDS.—Nolumus nomen Reginæ mutari

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

Salad-mixing is suggested by the composition of the Oxford Commission (Lords, Monday, March 27th). There is Lord Selborne for the lettuce, Mr. Matthew White Ridley for the oil, Sir Henry Maine for the salt, Dr. Montague Bernard for the pepper, Mr. Justice Grove for the tarragon, Dean Burgon for the vinegar, and Lord Redesdale for the mustard. The Commission is to be for four, not seven years. A good deal may be done in four years. But will this Commission do much? Burgon and Redesdale forbid!

The Duke of Richmond promises the Duke of Northumberland a Royal Commission to inquire into noxious vapours — the breath of Vested Right in its most unsavoury forms of candle, soap, and manure manufacturing, bone-boiling, alkali-making, copper-smelting, and so forth—but does not think the Commission should recommend what legislative measures are required to deal with these rank offences, which smell to heaven at least as strongly as Claudius's fratricide. Parliament as well as the public would have reason to thank the Royal Commission that could suggest any legal remedy for such nuisances that would work. Otherwise, we hardly see the good of the inquiry. The nuisances are admitted, and we have plenty of legal remedies that won't work, already.

Lord Cairns doesn't see his way for the present to a Marriage Act to harmonise the law of connubial coupling for England, Scotland, and Ireland. More shame for John, Sandy, and Pat, who are content to leave it a puzzle for legal heads to solve when one and one make one, and when they make two, by the law of the three countries.

(Commons.)—Samuel's son trying to undo the work of Benjamin. The Chancellor of the Exchequer did his best, but to little purpose, to temper the wind to the shorn bulls, by explaining away the non-publication of Cave's Report. It won't do. Everything is presumed against our unfortunate client, the Khedive. Benjamin has smitten the Egyptians hip and thigh; and Poor Ismail brought to his marrow-bones by a fall of ten per cent. in less than ten days, may well pray, "Save me from my friends!"

The Leader of the Government promises the Leader of the Opposition an opening for a set-to, on the vote for the cost of Mr. Cave's mission. Somebody ought to catch it, hot and heavy.

In Committee on Merchant Shipping Bill, Mr. Plimsoll temperately, and therefore powerfully, pleaded for his Amendment enforcing a survey of all unclassed ships, in preference to the Government plan of punishing the Owner who sends an unseaworthy ship to sea. The Country's feeling goes with Plimsoll; and Punch is not by any means inclined to bow down to the authority, as pleaded by Mr. Shaw Lefevre, of nearly every President of the Board of Trade and all the permanent officials in favour of penalties and against the protective operation of survey.

After a long discussion—in which Mr. Forster's adherence to Mr. Plimsoll is worth noting—the Chancellor of the Exchequer threw his weight into the scale against Plimsoll, declaring that the Government, after much balancing of the two plans, had deliberately preferred punishment to enforced survey, as a preventive of unseaworthiness. The fear is that the State Surveying Board would finally swallow up all the private surveying bodies like Lloyd's, and that this would create a false security, and exonerate shipowners from responsibility. So pleads Mr. Norwood. We don't feel quite disposed to take the word of the wolves on the efficacy of competing systems of sheep-watching. But the end was —after a debate, in which Mr. Plimsoll put his case very effectively, and the Board of Trade (till the Chancellor of the Exchequer came to the President's aid) very weakly—the defeat of the Amendment by 247 to 110. So be it. Let us see how penalty works. We may yet come to prevention.

Tuesday (Lords).—The Duke of Buccleuch indignantly disclaims the intention of seconding Lord Shaftesbury when he asks the Peers respectfully to pray Her Majesty not to flaunt Imperial Purple in her Bull's face. We are only sorry the Duke is not going to do about the most sensible thing a Conservative Peer could do in this unlucky business. As Government did not concert with Opposition before bringing in the Bill, their best course would be so to concert before passing it. But they won't—the more 's the pity.

(Commons.)—Mr. Disraeli fenced and dodged about a question of Mr. Anderson's as to the precedents for the Queen's going abroad during the sitting of Parliament. Mr. Disraeli is not happy in this kind of performance, which is always a dangerous one. Even so popular and skilled a performer as Palmerston damaged himself seriously at it. The House is glad to laugh at a smart answer to an awkward question, but, in the long run, resents being poked fun at.

Government had the narrowest escape from a very damaging defeat on Mr. Meldon's Motion for assimilating the English and Irish Borough Franchise—in other words, for giving household suffrage in Irish boroughs.

To be sure, household suffrage in England corresponds to mud-cabinhold suffrage in Ireland. We should have thought this a weightier distinction than it appears to John Bright, who came out quite in his old form, so that the Home-Rulers found themselves in a minority—would it be more Irish to say a large, or a small one?—of 166 to 179, and nearly shouted themselves into hysterics. Punch, from his invisible seat in the gallery, turned his eyes tenderly away from the Major, out of respect for his feelings.

The Irish Reform Bill stops the way! Reform Bill coming down!

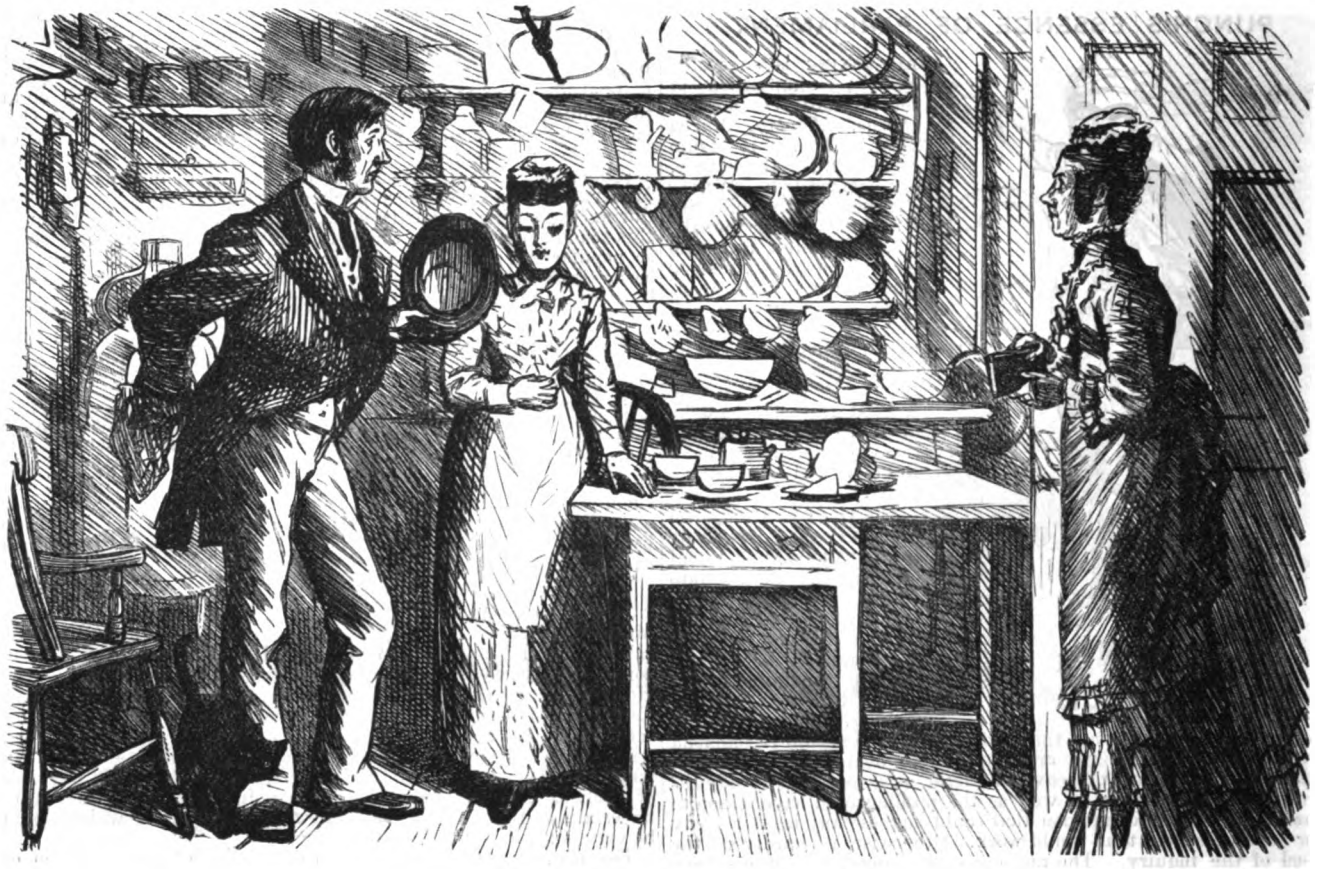
Wednesday.—An Irish afternoon, in the coolest sense of the word. Mr. Butt, with inimitable assurance, brought forward what he called a Land Tenure—but which Mr. Herbert of Muckross more correctly described as a Land Transfer—Bill for Ireland. The Honourable and Learned Member for Limerick proposes to deprive Landlords of the power of Eviction, except for non-payment of rents, to be settled by the award of a Court of Arbitration. This, with a variety of other limitations and conditions, would result in what Mr. Herbert not unfairly described as a transfer of the land of Ireland to the Tenant-Farmers, reducing the Landlords to uncertain annuitants on rent-charges, the amount of which would be very much at their Tenants' mercy.

The House wasted the afternoon on this wonderful specimen of Home-Rule Legislation, and finally paid it the ill-deserved compliment of an adjournment till Monday. Lord Hartington was somehow crowded out, or he ought to have stood by Sir M. H. Beach in putting down his foot on this audacious attempt at confiscation. Irish Landlords may be bad enough—some of them —but does what we know of Irish Tenants warrant any hope for Ireland from putting them in their Landlords' shoes? There is "property" in the serious, and "property" in the theatrical sense. We may help Mr. Butt's Irish mob to treat the one as if it were the other. But the House of Commons should not be the place to let the distinction be disregarded, even for a Wednesday afternoon.

Thursday (Lords).—The Royal Titles Bill read a Second Time, without a division—except of opinion. But that division found as full and potent voice as if their Lordships had been voting "Aye" and "No." The Duke of Somerset spoke his protest; and when the straightforwardness of Lord Grey—christen it "crotchetiness" if you please, you can't deny the intelligence and independence that are worked into its warp and woof—the plain-spoken sense of Lord Lawrence, the experience of Lord Wavenet, the whimsical keenness of Lord Stanley of Alderley, the polished humour of Lord Granville, were pitted against the perfunctory pleading of the Duke of Richmond and the trenchant audacity of the Marquis of Salisbury, can we wonder if filigree "Empress" kicked the beam against weighty "Queen"?

What we do wonder at is, that the President of the Council and the Indian Secretary should dare maintain that the dislike to the title is a figment of faction, and the public meetings and petitions against it a "got-up" thing! Your motto, my Lords, your motto — (see your Punch of last week) — "Nolumus nomen Reginæ mutari:" Speak it out—the voice of England is ready to echo you.

(Commons.)—Mr. Cross announced Tyler's fiat, closing Hammersmith Bridge on Boat-Race day.



More Merchant Shipping.

Friday (Lords).—A gallant attempt by Lord Granville to turn Lord Salisbury's flank. Instead of doing away with the "Idle Fellowships"—falsely so called—Lord Granville proposed to open the Clerical ones! Audacious! But strange to say 40 to 57 went along with this audacious innovator.

The Unattached Students may thank the Archbishop of Canterbury for empowering the Commissioners to employ surplus funds in founding scholarships tenable by these well-deserving waifs—these diligent dogs who eat of the crumbs from the rich men's tables.

(Commons.)—Chambers and Newdegate, like Knight-Templars,

Digitized by Google

AWFUL ALTERNATIVE.

Mistress (Low Church) to Follower discovered in the Kitchen on a Sunday. "NOW IT IS GETTING LATE, SIR, AND YOU MUST LEAVE THE HOUSE AT ONCE, UNLESS YOU'D BOTH LIKE TO COME UP-STAIRS WITH ME, AND I'LL READ YOU A SERMON!!"

two on one hobby, running a-tilt at Monks and Nuns. The House declined to follow them.

KHEDIVE consents to publication of CAVE's report! After the Bears have worked their wicked will on his stock for more than a week! Poor impecunious, impetuous, impracticable KHEDIVE! Again we hear his prayer, "Save me from my friends!'

THE APOTHEOSIS OF ENGINEERING.

"I think it is not too much to say that if the school of ARCHIMEDES had triumphed over the school of PLATO, the frightful catastrophe which overthrew the Roman Empire, and condemned mankind to a thousand years of barbarism and misery, would have been averted. . . . And when I remember how many men have spent their lives in small grammatical researches, in reading or writing bad poetry or execrable histories and biographies—all this rubbish to be read by the few, and thrown aside by the many—it is a gratifying reflection that we are this day met to celebrate the triumphs of a profession which has not only benefited its members by the riches they have derived from its pursuit, but has been the means of securing the world against the most awful calamity that could befall it—after a far advance into civilisation—a relapse into barbarism."—MR. LOWE to the Engineers.

HIDE, PLATO, thy diminished head, and pass
Into Philosophy's inferior class,
Since but for thee, vile sophist, but for thee,
There had not been the sad catastrophe,
When the barbaric tide was onward hurled,
And Rome no longer ruled a happy world.
Yes, metaphysic prater, but for thee,
Rome would be mistress still, o'er land and sea,
Gallia and Britain, humbly crouching down,
Would send their tribute to the Imperial town;
And subject provinces would lick the dust
Before our Emperor, peerless and august.

Thus MR. LOWE, who always greatly dares:
And next, he kicks the literate world down-stairs,
Sneers at the small grammarians, although he
Has lately stooped to grace a Spelling Bee;
Lays heavily his strenuous lingual lash
On poets' rubbish and historians' trash,
And fails to see that, if poetic thought
And great historic records go for nought,
If life is sunk to mere material sense,
No State existing would be worth defence.

'Tis very well to praise the Engineers—
A useful army—but they have their peers:
It is the solitary thinker's brain
That gives us lightning-wire and railway-train.
Apollo bids the radiant arrows fly:
Let Vulcan forge the sun-god's panoply.
As to the Roman Rule, it may be sad
That it was crushed by the barbarian cad,
And all through PLATO—sad to think that we
Are Englishmen, and tolerably free,
Instead of working hard at Roman roads,
And bringing to the CÆSAR birthday odes.
But in that higher state, we want to know
What special corner would belong to LOWE.
Would he not vanish, Orator of whim?
And would there be a Punch to laugh at him?

Piping Times

THIS must be a pleasant and easy-going employer, who advertises in the West Sussex Gazette:—

WANTED, a CARTER. Will be allowed to do anything he likes except smoke in the drawing-room. Liberal wages given.—Apply, &c.

Carters seem to inspire facetiousness in advertisers. This is from a Bolton paper:—

WANTED, immediately, an idle, drunken CARTER. The Advertiser has had so many Sober Carters that he wants a change, but a moderately sober one would not be objected to.—Inquire, &c.

Digitized by Google

"TRAIN UP A CHILD IN THE WAY HE SHOULD GO."

Tommy (to Mamma, encouragingly). "NOW THEN, MA', HARDEN YOUR HEART, SIT WELL DOWN, AND NEVER SAY DIE!"

SANITARY SANGRADOISM.

REALLY, the Doctors are determined to frighten us out of our wits. Every day we are warned to take care of our nerves, not to touch alcohol, not to walk too far, not to play a game of cricket, or row on the river with AMANDA—

> Where on the ait all emerald is the osier,
> Where the white swan-fleets indolently sway,
> When, in the sunset, Beauty, growing rosier,
> Murmurs, "How happy we have been to-day!"—

not to sit up late o' nights, whether to hear the chimes at midnight or unsphere the spirit of PLATO; not to do anything which our strong forefathers did freely, yet lived to a good old age with clear brains to the last, in spite of gout and insanitary surroundings.

Such Sages as CLEOBULUS and PITTACUS were all very well with their "Measure is best" and "Nothing in excess": but nowadays we are vexed with an immoderate moderation, an intemperate intemperance. Here is DR. RICHARDSON, who tells us that alcohol produces "Nothing but disease and death—mental disease, mental death; physical disease, physical death." Silence the profane rhymer, who sings—

> Hear, oh hear!
> DIONYSUS and DEMETER—
> Give, oh give
> Wine and corn, that the Poet may live.
> All Olympus I disdain,
> Blest with aid of that glorious twain.

And don't for a moment suppose that one drink is worse than another. "To say this man only drinks ale, that man only drinks wine, while a third drinks spirits, is merely to say, when the apology is unclothed, that all drink the same danger." Mr. Punch has never unclothed an apology; but he holds that there is less danger in a pint of sound ale or wine than in a much smaller dose of brandy or whiskey.

The same medical luminary objects to exercise, except of a languid sort. He thinks the tortoise wiser than the eagle. Perhaps he is, if length of life is the only desideratum. "Centuries of life in the aggregate," says a Times Critic, as humorously as if he were writing for this lighter page, "may have been sacrificed by the single invention of the staircase." If so, what has the railway to answer for, shattering every fibre of brain and body through miles of travel? Let us all be lotos-eaters. Let us swing in hammocks, and read feuilletons, and smoke latakia. A pleasant idea, doubtless; but the world will move, and its inhabitants must move with it. Besides, what says SIR WALTER?—

> "Sound, sound the clarion, fill the fife!
> To all the sensual world proclaim,
> One crowded hour of glorious life
> Is worth an age without a name."

The heroes eat no lotos. Ulysses and Mr. Punch alike decline torpidity. The universe wants the mind of man to keep it going. Fancy the result if everybody were to give up hard work and midnight fun, to stay at home and nurse his nerves, and go to bed early after a moderate supper of water-gruel! Faith, it would be high time for the Ladies to take the reins—and they would do it too, and make the "mildeyed melancholy lotos-eaters" break into a sharp trot.

> There are doctors of nerves, whom it pleases
> To write about modern diseases:
> Who believes in their books
> Will feel "off the hooks"
> If he suddenly shivers or sneezes.
>
> Appalling the tiniest swerve is
> To any who knows not what nerve is—
> But the string of the bow
> Whence brain-arrows flow,
> Oft must tremble to do the State service.
>
> O reader, who wisdom discernest,
> Take life at its gayest or sternest:
> The doctors may prate,
> They are welcome to wait.
> Eat and drink, work and play, in good earnest.

Digitized by Google

TEMPERANCE TAVERNS.

OUT of the columns of a contemporary Mr. Punch transcribes, with high delight, an interesting paragraph respecting—

"PUBLIC-HOUSES FOR WORKING MEN.—We have been requested to draw attention to an effort to establish another 'Public-house,' without the drink, in the East End of London. The success already attending the movement has induced the REV. G. P. KEOGH, Vicar of St. Paul's, Stratford, to start another in that populous neighbourhood. The district contains some ten thousand inhabitants, chiefly working men. MR. KEOGH has raised one hundred pounds but wants the balance of one thousand pounds to enable him to complete the good work."

"Without the drink," at a public-house of the kind above-mentioned, means, not the negation of any drink at all, but only the absence of those particular beverages which, in excess, occasion inarticulate utterance, bad language, metaphysical argument, devious gait, prostration and incapability, or disorderly conduct, violent assaults inflicted on pot-companions, passers-by, or policemen, and the commission of furious outrages, such as savage beating or kicking upon wives. Of course, public-houses for working men supply them with the means of purely quenching their thirst, and are furnished with bars if not taps; but the bars, and the taps if there be any, are temperance taps and bars. From the foregoing statement it appears that the "movement" of co-operation in establishing such public-houses is a success. It is therefore one in which the benevolent may invest money with the reasonable hope of high returns, not to say dividends, in the shape of the improvement and welfare of their kind. Certain Teetotal Societies are in the receipt of subscriptions for which, perhaps, though there are many tracts and much talk to show, there is little temperance. The quantity of this at present inadequate result would be greatly increased if they would rather expend enough of their income on the institution of these public-houses to promote sobriety; and in particular contribute a sufficiency to make up the balance required by the REV. MR. KEOGH for the completion of the truly good work to which he has devoted himself in Oriental London. Success to that Reverend philanthropist's endeavours to provide carpenters, bricklayers, plumbers-and-glaziers, and other workmen, with houses of call which are not pot-houses; public-houses without barrel or bung.

GONE WRONG!

A NEW NOVEL. BY MISS RHODY DENDRON,

Authoress of "Cometh Down like a Shower," "Red in the Nose is She," "Good! Buy Sweet Tart!" "Not Slily, But don't Tell."

CHAPTER III.—What Jenny says.

"GOOD Heavens!" I exclaim. This is my favourite ejaculation, and being recognised only as "BELLA'S Elder Sister," it is as good as any other, nobody seeming to pay any attention to my observations, which are invariably distinguished by excellent common sense.

We—that is the REVEREND MR. THOMAS HASSOCK and myself—are tramping across the fields within view of the Wollum high road, and the grey, monotonous, motionless sea-shore. I am carrying BELLA'S dress, which she has left behind her in our room, and poor, hapless, hopeful TOMMY is holding his green umbrella over my head with one hand, while with the other he is disconsolately playing "The Glorious Flag of Old England!" on the concertina. In this world one must love something—even though it be a donkey "averse to speed"—and yet I neither love, nor am beloved. I have set up no idol, to be adored with frenzy and knife-gashings. No; I do not get beyond homely intercourse with a "friend," and a friend is a sexless thing, I shall never have a lover: I had better become at once a member of the "Society of Friends," where, perhaps, I shall meet with nothing more grand, manly, or fondly devoted, as far as I am concerned, than is, at this present moment, the REVEREND THOMAS, who is secretly worshipping his Ideal, while his little pink eyes are peering through his blue spectacles, and a small pocket telescope of unusual power, into the mist beneath the dull yellow moonlight. Then he hands me the telescope, and by its aid I see what makes me exclaim, for the second time, "Good Heavens!"

BELLA is seated in the trap close to DUSOVER BELJAMBE'S great, broad shoulder. Her small head is bent down towards the grey mare's tail, which is heavily laden with great twists of crisp, silky, furzy hair tied with a blue bow; and, as the restless wavering moonbeams fall under BELLA'S soft hat, and light up the deep emerald eyes of that small downy face, he could not fail to notice how downy this beautiful creature looked,—

"So downy she,
As none like her could snare the wingèd songster,
With bait saline upon its hindmost feather:
So downy she—that, not in all creation,
Could aught, except a hammer, be proclaimed
Her peer in downiness."

TOMMY'S telescope brings them so near to us that we are able to catch their words.

"I hated my father," says BELLA presently, dangling her white, plump hand over the wheel, and playing with the mud, as it spirts up in little silver jets over the folds of her long dark robe—whereat MR. HASSOCK groans audibly—for it is his clerical coat that my wayward sister is still wearing.

"And your mother?" asks DUSOVER, bending his head so as to stare right under her hat into her grand opal eyes.

BELLA drew up her long white throat, and tossed her head in the air. CAPTAIN BELJAMBE eyed this feat with curiosity, but with no apparent admiration. It occurred to him that a girl, who could do so much, might throw herself away. In all his past experience of women, this one was something new, relishing, appetising to his jaded palate.

Then BELLA folded her round, plump, dimpled hands in her lap, and put them carefully away in her pocket, while delicious ripples of laughter played about her rosebud lips and warm southern cheeks, on which still remained the blush-dye of the fiery sun-god's kiss.*

"My mother," answers BELLA, "was a good, dowdy old soul, always in tears and revoking at whist." And BELLA disdainfully thrusts out her red under-lip, and looks up into DUSOVER'S hirsute countenance with contemptuous pink face, as she recites,—

"'Who was it slapped me when I fell,
Who whipt, and bade me not to tell,
Who kicked the place to make it swell?
My Mother!'"

"Shall I sing to you?" she asks, suddenly.

CAPTAIN DUSOVER, who is leaning his arms on the splash-board, and craning his sinewy brown neck out beyond the grey mare's blinkers, to ascertain the clearness of the coast towards the direction in which they are rapidly going, replies, carelessly,

"If you can sing, chantez!"

"Chantez!" she repeats, drily: then adds, pettishly, "Shan't-y."

"Do you mean that for a pun?"

"If you like."

"I don't care."

"No more do I."

"Sing!"

"Shall I? In this dress?"

She points down at the long clerical skirt which is wafted against his knees. TOMMY HASSOCK, seeing this from afar off, sinks on his knees, while tears well up into his little pink eyes, and suffuse his blue spectacles.

"I think I might mould her!" he sighs, clasping his moist, limp hands.

"Mould your grandmother!" is my rather vixenish reply. It is enough for him, and he says no more.

Why on earth cannot this manling propose to me? I am his senior by twenty-five years, and should know what was good for him. I should like to see him try to "mould" me. I would "mould" him first, with a heavy tombstone over him in his own churchyard, before he should try such nonsense with me. But he has not yet offered. Perhaps he may. I take to my telescope again, and see what I can see by the assistance of an extra strong glass.

BELLA is leaning her round, white elbow on her lap for a moment, until her pensive look fades out of her face, and a dare-devil smile flashes over it.

"Are you a Rollicking Ram?" she asks, abruptly.

"Not now," he answers. "Why?"

"You cannot take my song personally, that is all. Listen!"

* What the Editor says.—"Does this mean that she was sunburnt? We only ask for information."—ED. to MISS R. D.

What the Authoress says.—"Why, of course. Any milksop could have written 'sunburnt cheek.' Where's your fine poetic enthusiasm?"—MISS R. D. to ED.

Digitized by Google

This is BELLA's song, as it rings gaily out over the silent shore. Most of you, my friends, know it well enough.

"Come along, come along, come along!
For I am a Member of the Rollicking Rams!
Come and be a Member of the Rollicking Rams,
Out all night till broad daylight,
And never go home till morning!"*

"Do you like it?" she asks.

"Immensely," he replies, and there are tears in his shaken voice.

"You are crying. Are you never merry when you hear sweet music?" she asks, harshly; for to her, as to most of us, in a man's hairy, blubbered face, there is always less of the sentimental, than of the justly irritating.

The REVEREND TOMMY, still at my side, runs his feeble, dumpy fingers through his dry straw-coloured hair, and begins to whimper helplessly.

"Can I do nothing for you?" I ask, staring at him uncomfortably.

He brightens a little.

"I should like to have my hair nicely combed," he says, simply.

From my pocket, where I generally keep a number of useful articles, I produce a small three-legged stool, and comply with his request. When I desist, exhausted, TOMMY sits down in a stooped, shapeless attitude, of utter despondency.

Again I take up the telescope, and exclaim "Good Heavens!"

This is what I see, and hear.

The horse stops suddenly—brought up in the way he should not go, shortly and sharply, by a heavily barred gate, apparently belonging to a toll-house on the cliff.

The old deaf toll-keeper is the only one awake within the cottage. He is playing the fiddle dreamily, and his sole audience is his soft, sleek cat, purring an accompaniment before the fire. All else are asleep.

Silence for a few moments. No sound but the "swish" of the whip on the mare's light grey, moon-lit hide, and the cool plash of the beady puddles kicked up by the animal's strong hind legs against the dark splashboard of the dog-cart.

"Can you take a leap with me to-night, BELLA," DUSOVER asks, looking down into those dewy green wells—his darling's eyes.

"Shall we look before we leap?" replies BELLA, with a startled, shrinking look. "Or," she says, stopping a rising sob, and trying to realise the great plunge she was about to make, "Shall we clear the gate without a ticket? Who's afraid? Are you?"

CAPTAIN DUSOVER whistles softly, and looks rather too proudly conscious of the sixteen centuries of Norman blood in his strong fibrous veins.

Suddenly, before BELLA can utter another word, a white cow, that has been lying by the roadside, rises slowly, majestically, ghostly as a spectre of remorse from a grave of past memories! The grey mare starts, pricks up her ears, then forces them back, so that they incline towards her mane, as the ripe ears of corn are bowed down beneath the fierceness of the hurricane—then, drooping her long beautiful head, with her wild lustrous eyes riveted on the dread apparition, she sniffs the earth with pink, dilated nostrils, and, heaving her gracefully curved shoulders, begins to sob hysterically, as the autumn wind wafts one lock of her long, grey, silky tail against DUSOVER's swart, earnest face. In another moment, her fore feet are rooted immovably to the soil, her hinder steel-clad hoofs glitter in the calm, clear moonlight,—a tremendous bound—a cry—a scream—a groan—a deep-toned "moo" from the ghastly cow—a whirlwind of dust, a volcano-like eruption of mud, stones, and slush,—and CAPTAIN DUSOVER and BELLA are flying in the air;—the dog-cart, shivered into ten million splinters, lies a mere wreck on the white coast; while the cow, mad—delirious—amidst the havoc she has caused, bursts the one tether that yet holds her to earth, and yielding to an uncontrollable, curbless frenzy of passion, with one great giant bound, springs from the edge of the cliff, and disappears over the moon!

Within the cottage the deaf toll-keeper is still fiddling away to his cat—full, sleek-coated, and sleepy-eyed—seated by the hob, while his good wife and family are soundly eking out their well-earned repose. A dish—it is the soup-plate which CAPTAIN DUSOVER had placed under the seat of the dog-cart before starting from Wollum—is rolling down the road with a bright, metal spoon, firmly wedged into its shiny, round sides. A small, lazy, lolling, blear-eyed pug-dog, the sole witness—save ourselves—of the abrupt catastrophe, awakes from slumber, in the cottage garden, to bay the moon, with canine cynicism ridiculing the vain efforts of human bipeds—his masters, forsooth!—to oppose their puny barriers to the onward pitiless march of what nomad philosophers call "Our Destiny."

As DUSOVER rises in the air, the rarefied atmosphere of the upward road to Heaven clears his brain. The plump, supple form is no longer by his side; the white, warm, round arms have disappeared.

"Where is she?" he cries hoarsely, while big, heavy tears temper the blaze of his agonised eyes.

A deep groan from below the cliff falls on his ear, and stabs him to the very heart. Is she lost to him—for ever?

(To be continued.)

* What the Editor says.—"Never even heard of it. We do not now understand its meaning. Are the words an attempt (we speak under correction, as they might be MR. TENNYSON'S or MR. BROWNING'S—only we don't remember to have come across them in our reading, which, we admit, may have been as limited as a modern Company's liability) at turning some deeply expressive compound word in some German poem into English? We should be really glad of instruction."

What the Authoress says.—"Is 'Bosch' German? Je suis une paysanne—'I'm a young girl from the country, but—' mais—comprenez-vous? C'est bien. Je vous aime."—MISS R. D. to the ED.

What the Editor says.—"The suggestion may be feeble, and if so you will forgive it; but haven't we read something like the events of this chapter in an old Nursery book of Rhymes, commencing 'Hi diddle diddle, the cat and the fiddle' (which are realised in your old toll-keeper amusing himself indoors), 'The Cow jumped over the moon' (which you make her do), 'The little Dog laughed' (you mention the pug-dog baying the moon—it is a curious coincidence) 'to see such fun'—well, everyone has their own idea of fun—and, to conclude, 'The dish ran away with the spoon' (which actually happens to a soup-plate in your novel). We of course see that it might have been a pure accident, and accidents will happen in the best-regulated novels. Don't forget the moral."—ED.

What the Authoress says.—"What are you talking about? Nursery rhyme! Nonsense. I never was in the Nursery, and don't suppose I ever read it. Why don't you felicitate me on the 'go-bang' of the whole thing? Unexceptionable Moral coming."—R. D.

TALES OF MY LANDLORD.

THAT the House I think of taking is a model and a marvel of domestic modern architecture, and has been built and fitted up under his own personal and experienced inspection, and with a complete regardlessness of cost.

That, to his certain knowledge, none but the very best materials have been used, and the best workmanship employed in the construction of the dwelling, and that wellnigh every penny expended on the premises has been spent with an eye to durability, convenience and comfort, and not for tricky showiness or deceptive display.

That, although my Lease may bind me to pay for all repairs, none can possibly be needed for fourteen years at least; so a moderate calculation of the money saved in this way really should in fairness be added to the rent.

That in all the neighbourhood the soil is nowhere so salubrious as is the exact spot whereon the house is built.

That all the gas and water-pipes have thoroughly been tested, and the drainage has received the most especial care.

That the fittings, to be taken at a valuation, are likely to be mine at less than their prime cost.

That the fires have all been lighted in all manner of wind and weather, and it has been fully ascertained that not one single chimney smokes.

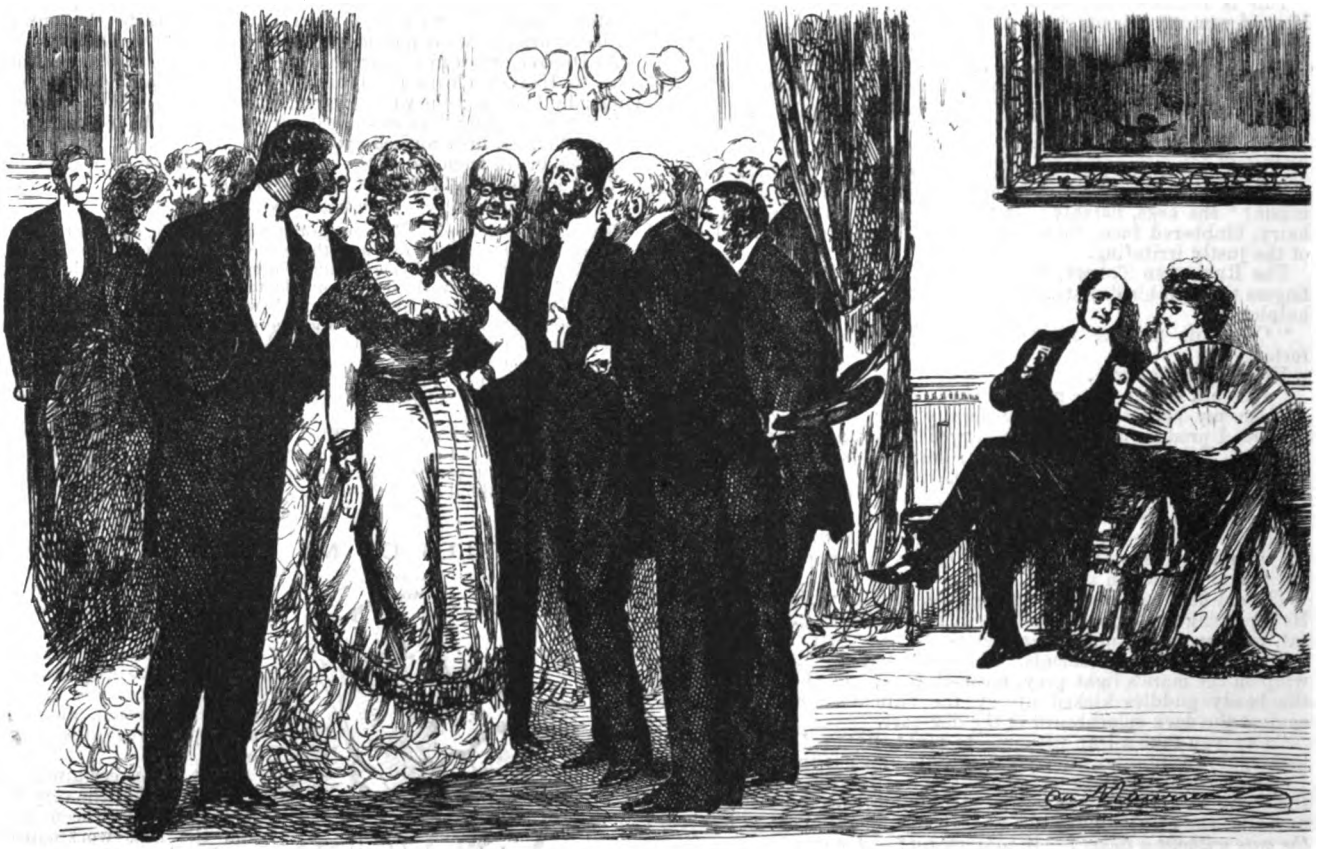
That, although there is a "slight odour" of paint (his language and his sense of smell are not so strong as mine) about the passages, it cannot penetrate the sitting-rooms, and will pass off in a week.

That the Vestry is one of the most honest and enlightened in the Kingdom, and the district is renowned for the lowness of the rates.

That the bells are all well hung with the best of cranks and wire, and there is not the slightest danger of their getting out of gear.

That, owing to some secret meteoric influence, high winds are comparatively unknown in the neighbourhood; and the house is therefore, so to say, insured against the elsewhere common and expensive accidents of a falling chimney-pot or a loosened slate.

That all the window-fasteners, and locks, and knobs, and handles are of the most durable description; and the stoves and kitchen-range the very best that can be bought.



That the neighbourhood is free from all the usual street noises, and that organ-grinders never venture to intrude.

That all the doors and window-frames are made of seasoned wood, and there is no fear of their warping or admitting any draughts.

That the rent asked is far less than the house is really worth.

And, as a final clencher, that only his anxiety to have me for a tenant (owing to his knowledge of my character or family) prevents his now accepting higher offers for a lease.

Digitized by Google

"NOBLESSE OBLIGE."

Interlocutor. "WHO'S THAT SHOWY WOMAN WHO TALKS AND LAUGHS SO LOUD, AND DIGS PEOPLE IN THE RIBS?"

Interlocutrix. "OH, THAT'S THE DUCHESS OF BAYSWATER. SHE WAS A LADY GWENDOLEN BEAUMANOIR, YOU KNOW!"

Interlocutor (with warmth). "AH! TO BE SURE! THAT ACCOUNTS FOR HER HIGH-BRED EASE, HER ARISTOCRATIC SIMPLICITY OF MANNER, HER NATURAL AND STRAIGHTFORWARD——"

Interlocutrix (putting up her eye-glass). "BY THE BYE, PARDON ME! I HAVE UNINTENTIONALLY MISINFORMED YOU; IT'S MRS. JUDKINS. SHE'S THE WIDOW OF AN ALDERMAN, AND HER FATHER WAS A CHEESEMONGER IN THE NEW CUT!"

Interlocutor. "DEAR ME!—AH!—HUM!—ER—HUM!—HA! THAT QUITE ALTERS THE CASE! SHE IS VERY VULGAR, I MUST SAY—AWFUL!" [N.B.—It was the Duchess, after all.

MR. PUNCH'S "OWN MAN" AT THE BOAT-RACE.

AM I premature? Will anyone say that it is dishonest to describe that grandest of contests, that noblest of sights, that magnificent exhibition of British pluck, the University Boat-Race, days before it (as they have it on the river) "comes off"? I pity the man who thinks so. Yes, indeed I am sorry for the creature whose heart is so dead to every noble impulse that he cannot appreciate an account of the "Blue Riband of the River" simply because time is anticipated, and dates are hurled into space. I have nothing to do with him—he is not of my class; we (so to speak, and as they say at Putney) do not "row in the same boat." It is to the true sportsman, the honest young Englishman with rosy cheeks and curly hair, the representative of all that is good and grand in the national character—it is to him that I address myself. He will understand me, he will appreciate my wonderful word-painting, he will recognise the profound knowledge I possess of matters aquatic, his heart will beat with mine—in a word, he will pull bow to my stroke. The University Boat-Race has often been described before; it is described again. Once more, should it appear to some of the more thick-headed of the public that the description (under the special circumstances of the case) is a little premature, let it be remembered that Mr. Punch is no ordinary man, that his wealth is boundless, and that wealth can purchase everything. Mr. Punch commissioned his "Own Man" to write an account of the Boat-Race, and an account of the Boat-Race has been written. Transactions of a similar character to ours between editors and contributors have taken place before. Men have described battles on the Continent without leaving London; they have hunted the tiger in far Bengal, and yet during the chase have still contrived to sleep nightly in their apartments at Lower Tooting. Let it be remembered by the thoughtless that one Boat-Race is the counterpart of the others, and then "good luck to us all." Ring the bell, take off your hats in front, and clear the course!

THE ROAD.

"What sort of day is it?" was the popular question in the early morning of April 8th. Dukes reclining on couches set with jewels and curtained with cloth of silver and gold, put the question to their countless domestics; and costermongers, taking their fevered heads out of the coal-skuttles in which they had deposited them the night before, made the same inquiry of their "old women." And what was the weather? Well, to some people it would have appeared a bright, sunny spring day. Others might have declared that it rained heavily, and was bitterly cold. Nay, some might have said it snowed. After all, the weather is a mere matter of opinion; and such was the weather on the 8th of April, 1876.

From an early hour the roads leading to the scene of the contest were thronged with pedestrians and vehicles. Who does not know the scene? Who does not remember the hansoms, four-wheelers, stanhopes, broughams, and family coaches? Why, it is a twice-told tale, as stale as the news of the decease of Her Majesty QUEEN ANNE. Shall I tell this tale thrice? Shall I, who have seen the most glorious sights in the world—the mighty Niagara, the frowning Rock of Gibraltar, the twinkling lights of the Rue de Rivoli—shall I descend to such homely stuff as this? Never! I will content myself with one or two sketches.

First, a roomy carriage filled with a bevy of pretty girls all dressed exactly alike. Their beauty was the same—hazel eyes lan-

Digitized by Google

A TIGHT FIT.

TAILOR. "I THINK, SIR, WE SHALL JUST MANAGE TO MAKE BOTH ENDS MEET!"

MR. BULL. "WELL, IF YOU CAN'T, NORTHCOTE, THE FAULT MUST BE IN YOUR MEASURES—NOT MY WAIST!"

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

guid and yet sparkling; clear olive complexions, suggestive of the most luscious Devonshire cream; rosy cheeks, and dark reddish-black hair. How happy they looked as they gaily passed the champagne! And why did they look so happy? Because the man they loved, the man any one of them would have willingly taken for a husband, was with them. A gay young bishop was the lucky fellow. "It was too bad of you, my Lord, to ask Mamma to get out while we ascended that last hill, and then to leave her behind! I am sure we shall never find her again!"—I heard one of the fair creatures say to the young ecclesiastic. The Bishop's cheery laugh was heard for yards round, and once more he began to amuse them. Well, and why should not a Bishop put on a false nose if Beauty smiles? I envied them their beauty, and him his luck, and passed on.

An open window. I nodded right and left, for this was a tableau of celebrities. There was an eminent Comedian, talking to a not less eminent Statesman; and the Editor of a Newspaper was explaining to a great General the theory of war; a celebrated Dissenting Minister (who had come to see his University win) was smiling at the sallies of wit of a famous writer of opéra-bouffe books. And what a background of loveliness! I had to shade my eyes with my hand as I noticed that the female portion of the Chorus at the Opera had apparently come to see the Race en masse. Later in the day, I found that the celebrities of the day had, so to speak, thawed, and were gaily dancing quadrilles with their fair companions. Ah! beauty and genius! It is good to be wise, but better still to be young and lovely!

And the crowd. Officers in the Guards, in State uniform, rubbing shoulders with Barristers, who had run out of Chancery Lane just to see the Race; Conjurors; Brass-bands; Punch Shows; Circus Processions (greatly impeding, by the way, circulation on the towing-path); and hearses. Here was a Bridegroom who had, on the way home from church, taken his blushing Bride to see "the finish;" there a Company of Mourners, who had stayed awhile to hail the victory of the Winning Blue. Oh! it was a grand sight! Once seen, never forgotten—and, never forgotten, always described!

The River.

It is not every wiseacre who can say whether the River is smooth or rough. Sometimes there may be waves that look to the short-sighted like ripples. Then why describe the state of the River on the ever-memorable 8th of April? To the learned it would be an insult, to the unlearned it would be an injury! So the state of the River shall not be described.

Plenty of boats, barges, steam-launches, and outriggers! Here was an elderly man in a tub, pulling as if for dear life, and yet smiling with a glee scarcely befitting his grey hairs. Who was he? By the respectful manner in which the River-Police saluted him, evidently some one of consequence. Was he the Lord Chief Justice, or Cardinal Manning, or Mr. Gladstone? Who can say, on a day like this? and so he passes on. The steamers soon give him their wash, and the tub disappears.

And now it is time for the Race. The bunting either flies gaily in the crisp sunshine, or hangs heavily in the wet. There is a shout—and a mighty one. "They are off!" It has been said before, and it will be said again.

The Race.

The boats left Putney together. One of the Blues was on the Middlesex side, the other hugged Surrey. And so they started, pulling a stroke which had eight oars to give it the necessary impetus.

The Water-Works were neared and passed; the Gravel Pits followed the same fate. Off Chiswick it was anybody's race! "Go it, Oxford!" "Cambridge wins!" were the rival cries as the two boats steadily pursued their way. Every sinew cracked, every muscle was stretched to the utmost.

And oh! what a shout there was at Hammersmith as the rival crews came in sight! And how the people cheered at Barnes and Mortlake! Hark to the gun! 'Tis over. The expectant enthusiasm of the year is concentrated into the madness of a thrilling quart d'heure! Oh, it was a noble race nobly won. Both victors and vanquished deserved well of their respective "Varsities," (as the Universities are called by members of the less important Colleges at Oxford and Cambridge), and no one was surprised at

The Result.

The Oxford and Cambridge Boat-Race of 1876 was won on Saturday, April 8th, by the Light Dark Blue. The time (as taken by Benson's chronometer) was about twenty minutes—a minute or so more or less either way.

And thus it will be seen that (as usual) the best men were the victors! Long may it be so; and long may we be there to see it, and to tell the tale!

Sentiment to accompany the Toast of "The Queen and the Royal Family."—"Though absent, ever dear!"

THE IRISH £4-HOUSEHOLDER TO JOHN BRIGHT.

"The value of the house is not of so much importance as you fancy. Every man who is admitted under household franchise is the head of a family; he has his wife and his children, with all those calls to industry and fair conduct in life which those have who live in better houses, and you may therefore throw out of view the bricks and roof by which he and his family are sheltered."—Mr. Bright on the Irish Borough Franchise Bill.

More power t'ye, John Bright, 'tis yourself that is right
Whin you say, wid the hoighth of urbanity,
'Tis not morthar and bricks, and a man's bits o' sticks,
Fix his pull in the scale av humanity.
Boys in the Green Isle may be out-an'-out loy'l,
And show clargy and ould blood a steady phiz,
Though they don't kneel for mass in the light o' plate-glass,
And reside in a humble mud-edifice.

Cowld Protestant folk on poor Pat crack their joke—
But don't think that thim Saxons so glib are right;
A bould pisant in frize is a man in your eyes,
Though he 's not fed nor lodged like a Sybarite.
If each other we bate while for Home-Rule we wait,
Still we 're cute boys, both pisants and artisans,
And just see won't we fight for your broad-brim, John Bright—
'Tis the kind sowl that turns Pats to partisans.

Palace Green never heard thruer manlier word*
Than yours, though you 're Saxon and stranger;
There 's a heart in poor Pat, and 'tis you gits at that,
When you prache that fair-play is no danger.
And if Pat's voice could rache up as high as yon Bache,
'Twould tell Saxons to alther their attitude;
On'y give us fair-play, and you 'll find, some foine day,
There 's Celts can bate† Saxons for gratitude.

* "It remains true—although all the officials in the world think it worth their while to call it in question—that justice done by the Government and Parliament to any portion of the population, be it the most remote, or be it the most abject, is never lost; it is compensated to the power which gives it, be that power Monarch or Parliament, by greater affection and more firm allegiance to the law, and by the growth of all those qualities and virtues by which a great and durable nation is distinguished."—Mr. Bright's Speech on Irish Borough Franchise.

† Punch never doubted it—but query the sort of "bating."

The Little (too) Busy Bee.

The Rev. Mr. D'Orsey writes to the papers defending his spelling, or mis-spelling, of "peas." Mr. D'Orsey still contends for "pease." It would, perhaps, be as well if, on the occasion of the next etymological encounter at St. James's Hall, he would urge something with effect in favour of "Peace."

Punch to B. D.

If Seventy-Six be dispensatrix
Of the title Imperatrix,
Is not the title like to stick, Sir,
Of "Benjamin, Imperatrickster"?

Digitized by Google

CONFUSION OF COURTS.

(See "Punch," ante, p. 109.)

Cook (scornfully). "Which it were the County 'Court' as the Lady were Persented at! 'cause she Refused to pay her Cook's Salary along o' her claimin' her Perkisits!!!"

GAMP VERSUS PECKSNIFF.

Sairey on the Rampage again.

"This political Pecksniff, who preaches of conscience and honesty . . . . shall he come down and harangue the Tory party on its want of conscientiousness, whose only service to that virtue has been the warning example he has offered of the opposite vice? . . . His premature and sinister resumption of the post which he had formally resigned, and his perverse and poisonous invectives where it was certain that opposition could only aggravate the mischief, if mischief there was, in the measure introduced by Government, will be found, we think, to have indefinitely retarded the recovery of his former hold on the respect and confidence of the people."—Standard, on Mr. Gladstone.

Gr-r-r! Drat him! He 's at it agen; and I hoped he were settled at last,
That wexing and worritting William, as plagued me so much in the past.
Which my Ben giv him one in the wind, and he seemed out of time fairly knocked—
Here he comes up a-smiling once more—drat his cheek!—wich I really feel shocked.

He wenture to talk about wirtue, prerogative, conscience, and such?
He twit us with blind Party Sperrit? O lor! that 's a little too much!
Though Benjamin roasted him rarely, I must have a go at him too,
As what Benjy's p'int mayn't be good for my cotton umbrella may do.

For a bounceable party like William a thump is as good as a thrust,
And it 's more in my line; which my gingham I'd ply till the ribs of it bust,
If so be it might beat rub-a-dub on his ribs, as it often has done;
Though, drat him! he don't seem to care, which, you know, rayther takes off the fun.

Party Sperrit, says Burke, has its use. I says ditto to dear Mr. Burke;
But it ain't that 'ere sperrit one sees on the Liberal Benches at work.
That 's Fackshus Obstruction—a wiper as Tories was ne'er known to nuss:
There 's nothink I so much despiges, or daily drops down upon wuss.

But for this 'ere Political Pecksniff, whose buzzum's a bed of sech snakes,
To fie-fie each nice little move as my own blessed Benjamin makes,
Is just the most bragian bunkum. A nasty, mean, wenomous pest!
If there 's one thing as I says my prayers for—it is that that man may be—blest!

Which I did think he 'd guv up the reins, and did hope we had done with him quite,
This Jehu, whose desperit driving so long filled poor Sairey with fright.
And what does he want sneaking round with the whip in his hand as of old,
Which its werry first well-beknown crack makes my blood to run creepy and cold.

He a hermit indeed! Well a Hermit once won the "blue riband," so please Hold tight, my boy Ben, and look sharp 'ow you drive, or the ribands he 'll seize.—
(As this 'ere 's an aside, to the world I proclaim he ain't got half a chance,
For all his great gift of the gab and his fine hanky-panky finance!)
He has spiled his last chance—(so I swears, and I wish, how I wish, it was true!)—
A insulting his Hempress! Just like him—and, Benjie, how little like you!
As I fearlessly arsts what concern is Her Majesty's Title of his'n?
A bragian and bounceable traitor, as ought to be popped into prison!

Digitized by Google

OH! HORROR!

Tommy (suddenly—on his way home from Church). "WHAT DID YOU TAKE OUT OF THE BAG, MAMMA! I ONLY GOT SIXPENCE! LOOK HERE!"

SMALLPOX AND SEE-SAW.

THE Guardians who the Workhouse sway,
In Dover's famous town,
Pulled, for repairs, the other day,
Their Mortuary down.

About a yard adjacent flung
Its mouldy relics lay,
Wherein the dull-eyed Workhouse young
Pursued their dreary play.

Rejoicing in the wreck around,
As e'en young Paupers would,
Some ancient trestle-frames they found
Of black and battered wood,

Which means for the unwonted pranks
Of these poor brats supplied,
As gallows, whereon balanced planks
For see-saw swayed astride.

But soon to grievous ending came
Those little Paupers' fun.
Smallpox broke out and stopped their game—
Attacking every one.

Those black frames which, devoid of fears,
For see-saw they had ta'en,
Were trestles that had borne the biers
Of Paupers Smallpox-slain!

Four years ago—grim workhouse guest—
Had that complaint been rife:
And now the dormant germs of pest
Awoke to active life!

But not too drear a tale to tell,
With agony high-piled,
Those Workhouse Children all did well,
Having their Smallpox mild.

They had been vaccinated all:—
Hear that, ye blatant band,
'Gainst JENNER'S blessèd boon who bawl
Your folly through the land.

Remember, for your Pauper brood,
Ye Guardians of their fates,—
That coffin-trestles pest-imbued
Are playthings that raise rates.

No; let him go back to his crockery, classiks, wood-chopping, and such,
Pitch into the POPE, if he pleases: they can't maul each other too much.
Which SAIREY puts up one more prayer, most frequent and fervent, and that 's
May they fight till no more on 'em's left than was left of the Kilkenny Cats!

Make your Game!

A RECENT telegram from Paris, announcing the marriage, at the Church of St. Roch, before a great crowd, of the PRINCE RADZYVILL to MLLE. BLANC, daughter of the potent ex-King of the tables at Homburg, and reigning Sovereign of those at Monaco, mentions that "the bride's dot, or marriage portion, is said to be 5,000,000 francs." Such a dot may well brighten a bride's eyes in those of her husband. But what a triumph of modern financial enlightenment over the darkness of old aristocratic prejudice is such a marriage! May we not henceforth say to exclusiveness, Le jeu est fait—"the game is up"? And when a proud Prussian junker can thus move with the times, should we not exclaim, Rien qui ne va, rather than rien ne va plus?

Sors Miltoniana.

"To whom the wily Adder, blithe and glad—
'Empress, the way is ready and not long.
* * * * *
If thou accept
My conduct, I can bring thee thither soon.'
'Lead then,' said EVE."

Paradise Lost, Book ix., l. 625.

A QUESTION TO BE ASKED.

New Carnivora House, Regent's Park, April 1, 1876.

DEAR MR. PUNCH,

ON the authority of MR. DISRAELI, we are informed that the "Royal Titles Bill" is to have a strictly local operation. I wish, therefore, to know whether the tigers residing in our Indian possessions will be affected by its operation.

Will it be correct in future to speak of a Royal Bengal Tiger? Here, in the Zoo, I suppose this designation will still hold. But in India itself must not "Royal" be exalted to "Imperial"?

If so, I hope the tigers will feel a proper sense of their dignity, and improve accordingly in their manners, tastes, and tempers, particularly now that they, like the other native rulers, have had the advantage of becoming more nearly acquainted with that model of urbanity and good-temper, H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

MR. DISRAELI, though unsuccessful with LOWE forms of human nature, may, perhaps, like Orpheus with his lute, be able with his Act to tame that of the savage brute—

"Dictus ob hoc lenire tigres."

I remain, dear Mr. Punch, yours,
A WOULD-BE IMPERIALIST.

Colourable Reasons.

As Red rouses Bull, DIZZY 's ready to swear
That Imperial Purple will terrify Bear.
But query, as Bear we 've seen run from red wool,*
If Imperial Purple mayn't aggravate BULL.

* At Alma, Inkermann, &c.

Digitized by Google

ELIGIBLE TENEMENTS.

Some few days ago there occurred on a railway an uncommon kind of accident—uncommon in that the Directors were not to blame for it. The carcases of a pair of houses that were being built in the Earl's-Court Road, adjoining the Earl's-Court Station, suddenly tumbled down upon the line with a crash in a heap of ruins which blocked it for three hours. This catastrophe occurred about midday, just as the carpenters inside the newly-raised edifice, finishing off the flooring, were about to leave work for refreshment—the beverage "brother chips" and other workmen term their "twelveses." Several of these poor fellows were badly hurt, and one is reported to have died. The fall of the houses immediately followed the passing of a London and North-Western train, of which the last carriage had a narrow escape. It is supposed that the vibration caused by the transit of the train shook them down. These structures, while standing, were evidently specimens of an order of domestic architecture, examples of model suburban dwelling-houses for the middle classes. It is comparatively fortunate that they fell to pieces when they did, instead of remaining to be completed, and soon after that to topple upon their tenants, overwhelming perhaps a diligent clerk of an establishment in the City, together with the wife of his bosom, a child or a lot of children, a baby in arms, and a maid-of-all-work. In re-erecting those typical eligible tenements, perhaps some care will be taken that their construction shall not be so shamefully scamped as to render a tragical occurrence of that description too highly probable.

OUR CORRESPONDENCE.

Downing Street, April 1, 1876.

My Dear Mr. Punch,

I crave the publicity of your columns to dissipate some of the fears which are abroad in connection with the Royal Titles Bill.

The Royal Arms will not be altered in this country. But in India, yielding to a wish which has long been felt and at last openly expressed in the Bazaars and Zenanas, Her Majesty's Government have advised that the Lion and Unicorn should be replaced by the Tiger and Elephant, as creatures more imposing to the Oriental imagination.

Not a bar of our glorious National Anthem will be touched. In the words some changes, to be strictly localised and confined to India, must of necessity be made. The few leisure moments I can command I am employing in recasting the Anthem in English, Hindustani, and Tamil; and I hope in the course of to-day to send you a rough draft, that I may have the benefit of your sagacious and good-natured criticism, before submitting my new version to Parliament.

Her Majesty's Government would view with horror and amazement any attempt to interfere—certainly in Great Britain and Ireland—with those familiar and time-honoured letters V. R., which have sent a thrill through so many loyal hearts, and can never be read without emotion on our mail-carts and pillar-boxes, and on the lead pencils which are daily and hourly wielded by the Civil Servants of the Crown.

I trust that these explanations will calm the public mind and restore tranquillity to the national pulse.

I am, my dear Mr. Punch,

Yours very faithfully, B. D——i.

Dear Punch,

I can guess your thoughts at the present hour when the excitement is growing every moment deeper and more intense. They are not fixed on the Budget, or the Royal Title, or the University of Oxford Bill, but on the Oxford and Cambridge Boat-Race; and you are yearning to know which University will be victorious on the 8th. I can tell you, for I have seen every race for the last twenty years. I have watched every movement of the two crews since they were at the two Universities. I am on the river-bank all day long, and sleep alternately at Putney and Mortlake. Don't be guided by Lord Salisbury, or either of the Vice-Chancellors, or even the most knowing of the Heads of Houses, but pin your faith on me, and then you will wear the winning colours next Saturday. Take time by the row-lock, and meet me at once opposite the Soap-Works. I wear a white hat, with a blue ribbon.

Yours, Corney Reach.

Putney, Saturday.

Mr. Punch,

Come and witness my great and unprecedented feat of walking 10,000 miles in 10,000 hours. In the outer Circle, Regent's Park, roped in and kept clear by the Mounted Police, illuminated after dusk, military bands playing all day and night long, fireworks at the expiration of every mile, vocal and instrumental concert at the end of each week. Referees from every nation in the world, umpires in all languages, judges from all the Courts of Law in Europe and America. Admission, One shilling; season-tickets, a Pound.

Hare and Tortoise, N. W., 1 April. Felix Footit.

Dear Mr. Punch,

It will give us much pleasure if you can act as Interrogator at a grand Spelling Bee which we propose to hold in the Royal Albert Hall in Easter week. There is no one in whom the Committee would feel such absolute confidence. We have engaged six military bands, and the choruses of the two Opera Houses, and we hope to induce the Moore and Burgess Minstrels to give us their invaluable assistance. Our Bee will take a wide range, and settle on many branches of knowledge. Spelling, and Definitions, and Proper Names, will, of course, be included, but, besides, we propose that you should test Candidates in Modern Languages, Chronology, Cookery, Domestic and Political Economy, Physical Geography, Moral Philosophy, and the Higher Mathematics.

Our prizes will be worth the struggle. They will include a furnished house, a carefully selected and handsomely bound library, a complete trousseau, and a fine organ—built expressly for the competition by those eminent makers, Messrs. Bellows and Blow.

Signed, on behalf of the Committee,

Knightsbridge and Brompton, Chairman.

Committee Room, April 1, 1876.

Punch, old man, why did you not come on Monday? I particularly wanted you to see, before I sent it in a special van to the Academy, what I fearlessly assert to be the greatest picture of the year. What do you say to a canvas 32 feet by 18? Well filled, too—not an inch of space "to let." You know the subject. One of the grandest events in the annals of modern civilisation—one of those critical turning-points in the history of peoples and dynasties: "His Highness the Khedive of Egypt in the act of affixing his signature and seal to the transfer of his shares in the Suez Canal to the British Government." Painted for the new Town-hall at Cairo.

How often have we discussed the treatment! I have made one or two slight changes since our last conversation on the subject. Now the Khedive is surrounded by his Ministers, Grand Muftis, Dragomans, Bashi-Bazouks, Pachas, Effendis, Camels, and Foreign Advisers: he is in the act of dipping his pen in a splendid gold standish, and looking, a little anxiously, at the Sphinx. The Pyramids, irradiated by the setting sun, form the background; the Nile, guarded by the Sphinx and Memnon, is in the middle distance; and the Canal itself fills up the foreground. All the figures are life-size; and the buildings, palm-trees, dates, dahabeeahs, &c., are done to scale. I hope to see you at the Private View, and show you my picture myself. So I will not dwell upon details, except just to mention that, exercising a pictorial licence, I have introduced one of the zinc cases in which the Share Certificates were transported to this country. I think you will say that the painting of this interesting accessory is life-like.

Ever yours,

Kensington, Saturday. Sebastian Andrew Dawbney.

[There is one singular circumstance about this Correspondence which we cannot quite fathom. All the letters have the same date, and were received on the same day—Saturday the First.—Ed.]

Just What's Wanted.—Sir Charles Adderley, in the Parliamentary report of Friday's Times, alludes to Shipowners as "Responsible undertakers." If we could only make them responsible!

Digitized by Google

PUNCH'S ESSENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

IN the Royal Titles Bill (Lords, Monday, April 3), LORD SHAFTESBURY moved his Resolution praying the Queen to take a Title more in accordance with history and JOHN BULL'S feelings than that of Empress—which may fairly be said to have been received by the Nation with the reverse of Empressement. In vain LORD SHAFTESBURY—who for party has not given up what was meant for mankind—reurged all that has been urged already against this ill-starred move in a wrong direction. In vain LORDS SELBORNE, SANDHURST, ROSEBERY, HOUGHTON, pressed the reasons against

"That word of fear, Unpleasing in an English ear,"

that most commend themselves to the legal, lay, military, and literary minds. Ministers have hardened their hearts, and stand upon their majority, such as it is. In the Lords, 137 to 91 is not a very commending division, with 200 Peers standing aloof too. LORD CAIRNS and LORD CARNARVON tried to argue that the dislike to "Empress" is factious and factitious. They know it is neither. The CHANCELLOR thinks the title can be localised. He reckons without his JENKINS.

In the meantime let official Conservatism take note that it is unofficial Conservatism which utters protests, "not loud, but deep," against this bartering of a new Crown for an old one, which the soundest sense of England feels is likely to bring no more blessing to QUEEN VICTORIA than yielding to the analogous temptation of "new lamps for old ones" did to QUEEN BADROOL-BADOOR. Will no QUEEN'S friend show HER MAJESTY Mr. Punch's Cartoon? To ALFONSO THE WISE'S famous triad of old things that are the best things—"Old Wine, Old Books, Old Friends"—let Punch, ALFONSO'S successor in wisdom, add "Old Titles." On our Crowned Head rested the oldest, most honoured, and most honourable Title in Europe. Ill-advisers have marred it by an "addition," which should be called a subtraction. No wonder Republicanism at home sneers, and Republicanism abroad chuckles, over this lowering of the Royal Style.

All this is on the supposition that the QUEEN wishes for, and means to assume, the Empress. But query, does she? What Royal act or word from the beginning of her reign till now, has showed her unable, or unwilling, to read the signs of the times—to recognise and respect the genuine will of her people? Punch has already told her, in his own way, that "the Queen with Two Heads" is not one of the signs of the time; whereas the old "Queen's Head" is a sign for times past, present, and to come; and he can't, for the life of him, believe that QUEEN VICTORIA is not just as well aware of the fact as her most faithful Public and Privy Councillor Punch.

(Commons.)—Make way for the Budget! MR. BULL'S Bills for the year, "foot up," the imposing total of rather more than £78,000,000! To meet this extremely handsome outlay, the House Steward hopes to be able to lay his hands on £77,250,000, leaving him nearly £800,000 short. So there is nothing for it but putting his hand into master's pocket for another penny in the pound on the poor old Gentleman's—we beg his pardon—the wealthy, old Gentleman's income, and this will give House Steward NORTHCOTE, some £364,000 more than he wants to make both ends meet! Such is the Budget in brief.

My dear BULL, you must pay for your blessings; and a Conservative Government is not one that can be had for nothing. True, when MR. GLADSTONE, once, in a moment of rash anticipation, promised to get rid of Income-tax altogether, DISRAELI met him by the assertion, that abolition of Income-tax was peculiarly Conservative policy. But SIR STAFFORD explains that only meant if and when the Government could do without it. So far from being able to do without it just now, they want an extra penny. But they will do their best to make the rise easy to the middle-class elector, by raising the limit of exemption from £100 to £150, the amount of deduction from £80 to £120; all incomes up to £400 to have the advantage of the deduction.

In this way the rise will be felt only by those who are too comfortable to complain, or too well-off for their complaints to find sympathy from the masses. All with less than £400 a-year will be better off under the new tariff than under the old one. If this is questionable political economy, it is like enough to be popular policy, and will secure the Government against the opposition of those who turn the scale at Elections.

Tuesday (Lords).—LORD INCHIQUIN moved the Second Reading of his Bill to limit the further creation of a very useless and unhappy order of beings—Irish Peers, who, where real Lords come, may be best described as neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring—the Irish Bulls of the Peerage. But while prohibiting any further creation of these objectionable abortions of aristocracy, he proposed to add four to their representatives in the House of Lords, to make up for as many Irish Spiritual Peers improved off the face of the Green Isle. Punch doesn't quite see the logic of this. LORD INCHIQUIN would also open Irish boroughs to Irish Peers, who may now represent English but not Irish constituencies. Anything to give these poor creatures an enlarged field of usefulness. If an Irish Peer can find an eccentric English borough to elect him, why should we not have that chance, and the borough that pleasure? It seems odd to make any position in the Peerage, however humble, an absolute disqualification for contributing anything, however little, to the Collective Wisdom.

(Commons).—A good deal of bother in arranging for a night for PROFESSOR FAWCETT'S Farewell to the Royal Titles Bill. After much pro and con. it seems the House is not to have this treat till after Easter.

The Whiskey War!—

"Irish spirits and Scotch,
In the hot mêlée
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
Ye that mingle may!"

A spirited debate—as was to be expected. The O'SULLIVAN opened, denouncing, in the name of the public health, the pernicious practice, now sanctioned by law, of adulterating Irish Whiskey in Bond with inferior Scotch spirit, under the specious name of "blending," and calling on the Government to become bonded warehousemen on the largest scale, by keeping all spirits and whiskey in bond till it was twelve years' old—had sown its wild oats in the shape of fusel oil, and mellowed to a drink equally wholesome and delicious.

Then ANDERSON arose and raised the slogan of the Scottish Still—that "Still" whence Silent Spirit flows!—the Silent Spirit which does not seem to be the ruling spirit of the House of Commons. He declared "blending" was not adulteration but improvement; that Irish whiskey unmixed was an unmixed evil, "full of headaches to the brim," only to be drunk with impunity by natives—as snake-charmers are said to swallow cobra-poison—but to the world at large only to be made tolerable by a liberal infusion of "Scotch," that pure and healthful blood of JOHN BARLEYCORN, which neither is an enemy in men's mouths, nor a stealer away of their brains, but circulates in the shape of health, and utters itself in words of wisdom!

Then SIR W. LAWSON arose and chaffed impartially both champions, of Scotch and Irish—

"Tros Tyriusque illi nullo discrimine agendus."

The better the whiskey the worse—in SIR WILFRID'S eyes—because the more tempting. "More blame was laid on fusel oil than it ought to bear." To SIR WILFRID the "fusel oil" is as the salmon that bears the burden of Greenwich compotations—an innocent and much-wronged creature.

MR. SULLIVAN said something like ditto to SIR WILFRID.

SIR W. CUNNINGHAM contributed one wise and weighty saying to the debate:—

"If bad Scotch spirits were prevented from going to Ireland, there would be plenty of bad Irish spirits to take their place."

Digitized by Google

FAT AND LEAN KINE.

Fat Man. "FIVE-AND-TWENTY MINUTES WITHOUT A CHECK! YOU MUST HAVE FOUND YOUR WATERPROOF VERY WARM, MR. WIGGLES!"

Mr. Wiggles. "MY DEAR SIR, THERE IS NOTHING OF ME TO BE WARM!"

In the long run the Government, recognising that it is a very pretty quarrel as it stands, declined to interfere, by 145 to 69; and the imprisoned spirits remain as they are—in bond—but open to blending!

Desultory and ineffectual talk about the Slave Trade and the Peace Preservation Act in Ireland. Even MR. BUTT seemed ashamed to press for relaxation of the Act, in face of such an agrarian outrage as the attack by an armed and ambushed band on MR. BRIDGES near Mitchelstown.

Wednesday.—A premature, and, we need hardly add ineffectual attempt of MR. DIXON, to make Board Schools, and compulsory attendance at them, universal throughout England—as the Scotch have made both throughout Scotland. When the English are as ripe for such a move as the Scotch, MR. DIXON will not have to urge his views in vain upon a large and variously recruited Majority.

Thursday (Lords).—The LORD CHANCELLOR will not give the House of Commons an opening for new discussion of the Royal Titles Bill. He thinks "Localisation" may be secured by proclamation, without amendment of the Bill.

(Commons.)—In answer to LORD HARTINGTON, SIR STAFFORD does not consider it the duty of Her Majesty's Ministers to initiate a financial policy for the KHEDIVE. They have done quite enough in bringing down his Stocks some twenty per cent. in as many days.

MR. HUBBARD on his favourite old hobby—Income-tax—with the usual result—nil.

Some progress with Merchant Shipping Bill.

Friday (Lords).—Royal Titles Bill again. LORD SELBORNE doubts whether,— "Localisation by Proclamation

In Law may not be bad,"

and JOHN BULL may finish the adaptation,—

"A Queen with Two Heads bothers me,
And 'Empress' drives me mad."

CAIRNS tried to pooh-pooh SELBORNE. But when such Doctors differ, Punch will still hope, with LORD DENMAN, that the QUEEN will still go by the old style, seeing that her subjects can't get over the new one.

(Commons).—Some wretch, not having the fear of the Sergeant-at-Arms before his eyes, has been signing the highly respectable name of NEWDEGATE to some indecorous petitions, insinuating nasty things of convents, and their rules, practices, and inmates.

MR. CALLAN moved the offensive petitions off the table. As their proper destination clearly was the dust-hole, MR. NEWDEGATE was ill-advised in resisting the motion for a moment, though the petition was one against his pet bugbear.

MR. SPEAKER submits to the House a curious question, "Shall a petition from Boulogne (signed by French, as well as English inhabitants, of that hybrid sea-port), that their Consul may not sink to Vice, be received by the House?"

MR. DISRAELI is for receiving it; MR. GLADSTONE, on the whole, for declining to receive. It is not desirable (he thinks) to encourage petitions against what might be a proper use of the Treasury cheese-parers. Besides, to lend an ear to such a prayer, might stimulate Consuls to get up an agitation against their degradation to Vices, or set Vices trying to raise themselves to Consuls. Much as this might seem to tend to morality, a good deal was said, and evidently more remains to be said, on both sides. The point is to be referred to a Committee, as it ought to be.

MR. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN aired a matter which much interests the Upper Ten—the grievances of Assistant Public School Masters. BROWNING'S case was lengthily discussed.

MR. CROSS interposed his mitis sapientia as usual, and doubted if such public washing of their dirty linen benefited either Schools or Masters, parents or pupils. Punch shares the doubt. The House did well—he thinks—to decline granting a Select Committee. Oh, for an hour of old KRATE! Fancy the House of Commons offering to interfere with him!

The removal of Woolwich Arsenal and the punching of MR. PALMER'S head were then discussed with much emphasis, though to uncommonly small audiences, and the varied evening's entertainment wound up with the favourite farce of "Votes in Supply"!

Digitized by Google

UNENCUMBERED.

Policeman. "Where d' yer live?" Lost Child. "Boo-oo! 'Don't know!"
Policeman. "Who's yer Father and Mother?"
Lost Child. "Ain't got none."
Policeman (perplexed). "Are yer Married?" Lost Child. "No."
Policeman (relieved). "Ah, shure, thin ye're all right! Away you go!"
[Crowd disperses.

STORES FOR THIRSTY THOUSANDS.

Two drays, three horses to each dray,
Besides one horse-and-cart, around,
Some sixteen goodly barrels lay,
"X" chalked on each, about the ground.
Nigh which a cellar's open door,
Had just admitted many more;

The cellar of a House of Call
At Barnes, upon the River side,
Whereat the Public, great and small,
With cheering liquors are supplied.
And all those barrels lying near,
Were full of Wandsworth's noted beer.

Another House upon the brink
Of Thames, a little farther on,
Was choked with hampers holding drink,
Designed to be consumed anon.
The drink, a wayfarer found out,
Was bottled-ale and bottled-stout;

And not one quarter of the stock
Procured, expressly to allay
Enormous thirst of human flock,
The eve but one before the day
Of the great Boat-race 'twixt the Blues—
The Oxford and the Cambridge crews.

And those two taverns were but twain
Of many hundred hostels more,
Which, to supply the looked-for drain,
Provided as abundant store
Of every kind of beer and ale,
And wine and spirits, too, for sale!

Beneath teetotal tyrant rule
What preparation should we see,
The million's heated throats to cool?
Cases of coffee, chests of tea?
And lemonade disposed in pipes,
And tuns of ginger-beer for swipes?

Nemesis of History.

The Children of Israel, under a Pharaoh, were oppressed with Egyptian Bondage. Now it seems they are in a position to ask the Khedive twenty-two per cent. on Egyptian Bonds. "Thus the whirligig of Time brings about its revenges."

A NEW BACONIAN ESSAY.

Much excitement has been caused by the announcement of an article in a Contemporary, with the startling title, The Latest Theories about Bacon. Since the advertisement appeared, the trade in a very favourite and useful article of food has been almost at a standstill, buyers and sellers being equally unwilling to engage in any extensive transactions until they knew whether revelations were likely to be made affecting the character of a commodity of large consumption, and representing a great pecuniary value. Bacon has hitherto, on the whole, stood high in public estimation, although some descriptions have been more fancied than others; but if "Theories" are to be started and publicly discussed, perhaps to its detriment and disparagement, an injury may be inflicted on a most estimable item of domestic consumption, welcome both at the breakfast and dinner-table, and equally relished in the castle of the peer and the cottage of the peasant, from which it may never again be able to rally.

If Sausages had been made the subject of comment and speculation, but scant surprise would have been felt, and the market would probably have shown little or no sympathy with the attack; but to do anything which may shake the credit of Bacon is a very serious proceeding, and one the consequences of which may be felt for years to come, alike by the wealthy Wiltshire farmer and the humblest cotter in the remotest county of Ireland. Since the publication of the Essay on Irish Bulls, we can recall no occurrence which has produced a similar sensation. The writers of articles in Reviews and Magazines should be careful what titles they prefix to their lucubrations. In the present instance, a rasher one could hardly have been devised.

The New "Imperial Measure."—The Royal Titles Bill.

POETRY AND PRONUNCIATION.

Under the title of "Purple versus Grey" the Post publishes a piece of poetry, advocating the cause of "Purple," and signed "Winchilsea." This flight of genius extends to nine verses. Here is the first of them:—

"Good People of England, attend to my lay,
Which treats of the Purple compared with the Grey
And plainly declares that all facts are a farce
When view'd through the light of a strong party glass."

Thus commences a real, genuine, and original "Song by a Person of Quality." Its originality appears especially remarkable in the notion of consonance exhibited in making "glass" rhyme with "farce." The next time our noble Bard tries his pen at versification he will perhaps remember that "glass" is commonly considered to rhyme with "ass."

Astronomy Royal.

A Correspondent of Galignani, having enumerated the illustrious personages, the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Louis and Princess Alice of Hesse, and the Emperor William, expected to be shortly present with the Queen at her Continental abode, informs us that—

"There is also a rumour that the Empress of Austria, on her return from England about the same time, may join this galaxy, if but for a day."

He seems to forget that a galaxy, however brilliant, can be visible only at night. Also that the Milky Way is supposed to consist of innumerable myriads of stars, not merely of some half-dozen. Perhaps, when he called six or seven Royal luminaries a galaxy, what he meant to say was a constellation.

Digitized by Google

GONE WRONG!

A NEW NOVEL. BY MISS RHODY DENDRON,

Authoress of "Cometh Down like a Shower," "Red in the Nose is She," "Good! Buy Sweet Tart!" "Not Slily, But don't Tell."

CHAPTER IV.—What the Author says.

HI! she has fallen below the sheer cliff, where the merry gulls sing their sweet pæans to the wind-blown, unpunctual, irregular, disappointing, unapologetic sea, and lies, her beautiful head buried kit-cat length downwards, in the muddy sand, her gleaming balmorals appealing for aid with a mighty imploring clicking of the high heels aloft, while with her lavender kid gloves she is clutching at unhappy molluscs and killing innumerable shrimps and sand-eels in her struggle for life.

DUSOVER at one glance saw the balmorals — they were, alas! the only morals that interested him—and, exclaiming to himself, "By Jove! sand-eels—I mean sand heels," he took the plunge, and was at her side in an instant, raising her gently, and placing her on a bank of sweet, fragrant-scented, long-dry seaweed.

